This design is especially commendable for its correctness of style. The decorative theme of this pattern was executed from a similar design known as a souvenir of Empress Josephine. are guaranteed to be the best goods, for the money, in the world. Similar goods are made from skins that come off from the same animals, but all skins used by The Bishop Company are Indian tanned or dressed by a process similar to the old Buffalo dressing and used only by The Bishop Company.

All our dyed skins are dyed by a process known only to ourselves, which absolutely does no injury to the fur or leather. The natural color and dyed skins used by The Bishop Company in manufacturing robes and coats will retain their strength, softness and pliability for a lifetime, and will be just as good at the end of twenty-five years as they are when first prepared. The fur, in time, with hard usage, may wear off, but the leather will last, practically, forever.

There are no robes or coats in the world made from these skins which have these advantages, except those manufactured by The Bishop Company. If you want the best article for the money that can be found in this or any other country, buy only The Bishop goods and be sure their name on silk label is found on the article you purchase, whether robe or coat.

Cotton Italians and Linings.

The Superiority of Goods finished by this method is in

- 2nd.—A brilliance and silkiness never before attained on Cotton Italians and Linings.
- 3rd.—Altogether exceptional strength and durability.
- 4th.—No deterioration in appearance however long the Goods may be kept in Stock, thus making them peculiarly adapted for shipment to far distant places.
- 5th.—The fastness, depth, and richness of colour in the Aniline Blacks, which is guaranteed unalterable.
- 6th.—The fastness of the finish, which will not go off under the Tailor's iron.

JANUARY, 1900.

THE SPAN OF A CENTURY 1800—1900.

THE year 1900 sees Canadian commerce at so high a level that the mind is naturally carried back to 1800, when British America was in its infancy and its trade but a small affair.

The hundred years that have passed between 1800 and 1900 have completely transformed this part of the continent.

The progress is marvelous if one considers the actual state of affairs in 1800. The condition of the Provinces at the close of the last century has yet to be fully described. It must be reconstructed by some future historian from old documents, letters, newspapers, and official despatches. The future chronicler will probably devote most of his time to the political conditions prevailing in 1800. In this short paper I propose to deal briefly with the commercial aspect of affairs in the Provinces, or colonies, now composing the Dominion of Canada. Recollect that in 1800 the Maritime Provinces were quite separated, both geographically and commercially, from Upper and Lower Canada. The commercial development of these two sections of the modern Dominion was taking place separately. Then the West—but what was the West? Upper Canada, now Ontario, was just being peopled by the Loyalists. This had been going on for ten years or more, but the people were hewing out homes for themselves in the woods, rather than trading. The West might be described as all the land west of Montreal, and the real commerce of that region was the fur trade. The big fur-exporting companies imported quantities of goods during the Summer season from Great Britain, and exchanged them for furs with the Indians. This trade, as far as it affected Quebec and Montreal, was done in the Territories north of the great lakes and in the country of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers. In 1800 it must have amounted, in annual export value, to $1,000,000. The Hudson's Bay Company did its great business to the far north and its ships traded into Hudson Bay.

Trade Between the Provinces.

But to get a clear idea of what may be called wholesale and retail trade, in such centres of population as existed in 1800, one must bear in mind the sparseness of population, and the difficulties of communication. The merchants of that day were not wanting in energy and courage. The city of Quebec did all the importing for Upper and Lower Canada. In both Montreal and Quebec there were many important firms. Such names as Forsyth, Richardson & Co., James and Andrew McGill, Auldjo, Maitland & Co., McTavish, Frobisher & Co., Leith, Jameson & Co., Adam Shaver & Co., James Robertson & Co., and others were flourishing in 1800. These and other firms were the pioneers of what is now an immense business. The goods for Upper Canada were reshipped from Quebec up the St. Lawrence to York, Newark and other points. They all passed Coteau du Lac, at the foot of Lake St. Francis, where the boundary between the two Provinces ran, and, being inspected there by an official, the amount of Customs duties on them paid at Quebec, were refunded in a lump sum at the end of the season by Lower Canada to Upper Canada. The official stationed at Coteau du Lac in 1800 bore the Scotch name of William Fraser. He also kept an eye on goods going down the river, so as to prevent smuggling into Lower Canada. But his task in 1800 was light, for none went down! The upward freights that year involved a refund of duties to Upper Canada of about $5,000. Upper Canada charged duty on tobacco, wine, whiskey, rum, sugar, salt, coffee, and playing cards. The Legislature, like that at Quebec, discussed the proposed cultivation of hemp and expected great things from the industry.

Montreal Declines A Custom House.

The Province of Lower Canada was, of course, the more important, commercially, in 1800. The headquarters of the large importing firms were there. The rival fur-trading companies centred in Montreal. Quebec was the port of entry. In fact, Montreal didn't want to be a port of entry, and the merchants agitated against the establishment of a Custom house! One of the curious relics of the past is a petition that was before the governing authorities in 1800, signed by the leading Montreal merchants, and bearing the date October 21, 1799, declaring that "a separate and independent Custom house may introduce intricacies, difficulties, delays and expense beyond what at present exists or can be foreseen, and, if so, render the means of redress extremely tedious, not to say impracticable." The merchants who signed this memorial were: Isaac Todd; Forsyth, Richardson & Co.; Auldjo, Maitland & Co.; Leith, Jameson & Co.; John Gray; Samuel David; James & Andrew McGill; David David; McTavish, Frobisher & Co.; J. Laing; Parker, Gerrard & Ogilvie; Richard Dobie. The authorities lent ear to the request, and did not force a Custom house upon Montreal. The idea of cultivating hemp took hold of the people, and some was actually grown (and prizes given for it in England) on farms near Montreal and York.

An Export Of Wheat.

Now, Lower Canada in 1800 considered itself no unimportant place. Its population was over 100,000, and the public revenue amounted to $125,000. The "King's Posts" were leased at £400 currency per year, and a regular fortnightly mail (in Summer) with Upper Canada was hinted at. The roads were not very good, it is true, but, if you didn't mind mere distance and being ferried over the rivers, you could go all the way to Amherstburg by road. Nor were the people unmindful of export trade, and as they had nothing much to export, and as the wheat yield was bountiful in 1800, the grainmen solicited permission to send their surplus wheat to Newfoundland, the West Indies and other neighboring colonies. They had to seek permission, because, in those days, the country was under the "Colonial System," and was confined to Great Britain as an export market. The Imperial authorities consented. They did more, because—since the high seas were dangerous, owing to the French War—they sent frigates of war to convoy the grain ships from Quebec. It is recorded that the export of wheat amounted to 130,000 bushels, and the departure of this vast quantity caused great uneasiness in the minds of the authorities in Quebec. For, argued they, next year the crop will be short, and where will the people find their food? But trade, on the whole, flourished in 1800, and the outlook was good.

Slow Communication In 1800.

The distances and the absence of all modern means of conveyance (there being no steamboats, railways or fast coaches) greatly impeded commercial intercourse. It took a month to go from Halifax to Quebec. The time consumed by a journey from Quebec to England was two months. The mails usually went to New York and thence by packet boat to the Old Country. Just before 1800, if you wanted to catch the January packet boat from New York you had to post your letter in Quebec on December 5 previous. The news from Philadelphia (until 1800 the seat of Federal Government in the United States) took a month to reach Quebec. But a weekly conveyance by post was now set up with the United States, so that by March 8 the New York papers of February 16 were available in Quebec, and these contained European news as late as December 15. It was three days' journey between Montreal and Quebec. During the Winter, it appears there was just one express for letters between Montreal and Niagara, communication, therefore, being practically suspended during the season of ice and snow.

Retail Trade 100 Years ago.

The general store was the typical shop of the time. There you could buy almost everything. In 1800, James McKenzie kept one of these stores in Three Rivers. It is instructive to read his announcement to the public. Mr. McKenzie declared that he possessed: "A general and well laid in assortment of dry goods and liquors, consisting in linen drapery, haberdashery, and woollen drapery, men and women's shoes, youth's ditto, hardware and cutlery, glass and earthenware, Jamaica rum and spirits, country distilled ditto, etc., etc.;" and he assured his customers that he was willing to sell these either wholesale or retail, "on a low advance for cash or short credit." In 1800, Mr. Benaiah Gibb had bought a piece of land on St. James street, Montreal, whereon he erected a building and began that famous tailoring business which is now almost historic in its antiquity. Then, in York (Toronto), Mr. Abner Miles was another merchant who accommodated the public in a variety of ways. He kept a store, his clerks dealt out liquors by the bottle or the glass as your thirst determined, he kept a "house of call" or inn, he sold meats by the pound and gave you credit if you looked worthy of it, and he sold passages by the boat to Niagara. The price of a passage over the lake to Niagara in 1800 was 8 shillings. Mr. Miles carried on a most extensive and respectable business, and I have been privileged to examine a copy of his day book, now brown with age (the date is 1797) and in which he entered the charges against people who bought from him—and credit seems to have been very common in those days. One day it is a sale of 2 yards of "checked linen" at 5 shillings the yard. Another entry is for 4 yards of "diaper" costing £1. Then, a well-known citizen would enter the inn bar and take "brandy in company," that is, he would treat his friends, and the charge was 6 shillings. Thus, a pioneer merchant required to have good business ability and to control many different lines of trade if he wanted to make money.

But, what goods, you may ask, were sent up from the towns of 1800 into the far north and west for the purpose of trading with the Indians? This, too, can be answered, for a learned custodian of ancient Canadian documents has entrusted to me for examination several statements, whereof the ink is now faded, but which reveal the names of articles dealt in. It was customary to ship goods by way of the "Grand Portage," near the present Port Arthur, on Lake Superior, to the trading-post on English river. One list shows a shipment of coats, capots, robes, "leggings," pairs of "sleeves," looking-glasses, ivory combs and silk handkerchiefs. Another list contained soaps, medicines, cotton wick and the following, which I quote as they appear: 582 pairs of calico trousers, 87 pairs of Russia sheeting trousers, 472 pairs of cotton trousers, 121 pairs of beef shoes.

The Maritime Provinces.

But commerce in 1800 was not confined to Canada, by any means. The Maritime Provinces were then what they are now, a region peopled by able vigorous men, who could make money in trade and develop their resources. By 1800, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island were separate Provinces, with a trade of their own. The city of St. John and Miramichi were important trade centres. Halifax was a thriving city. Its merchants were opulent, and the historian relates, as an evidence of how rich the merchants of that day were reputed to be, that a Haligonian of 1800, having amassed a fortune in trade, had returned to end his days in dignified retirement in the Old Land. Agriculture was prosperous and the fish trade was extensive. If we wanted any proof of the extent of Halifax wealth in 1800, it could be furnished in the fact that a proposal to found a bank was started. In a few hours, Halifax merchants subscribed £50,000 capital for it, but permission to go on with the enterprise was refused (because a monopoly was asked for), and Halifax had no bank until 1825. It may be said here that no incorporated banks were in existence in any of the Provinces in 1800. Nova Scotia was prosperous—a condition reflected in the price of labor, which was considered high, wages being $1 to 6s. per day. The modern trade in apples finds a curious origin in the fact, mentioned in the records, that the Governor sent home a present of apples to some friends. Prices in the Halifax market in 1800 give us an idea of the value of products: Beef, 4 to 5d.; pork, 6d.; mutton, 7 to 8d.; veal, 8 to 9d.; fowls, 3 to 4s. per pair; oats, 2s. 6d. to 3s. per bush.; butter, 1s. 3d. to 1s. 6d.

A hundred years has brought us to 1900 with its foreign trade of over $300,000,000; with its interprovincial dealings of probably $125,000,000; with its population of 5,500,000; with its marked development of natural riches in the mines, forests, fisheries and other departments. In fact, Canada is only beginning to expand, but the basis of expansion is very real and secure. No wise community despises the day of small things, and if 1800 was not conspicuous for the extent of commercial enterprise let us remember how mercantile efforts were handicapped then. If we, in 1900, with all our appliances and conveniences, can utilize them as strenuously as the men of 1800 employed their slender resources we shall do well. C.

In visiting Midland, Ont., the general store of H. Horrell impresses one. The business has steadily grown from small beginnings, and Mr. Horrell understands every department of it and manages it with energy. He is very popular with his customers, and has a pleasant word for all.

FLOWER POT ROCK, GEORGIAN BAY.

THE BRITISH TEXTILE AND DRY GOODS TRADE IN CANADA.

PERHAPS in no department of trade, except iron and steel, might we have anticipated a more marked decline in the imports of British goods by Canada than in textiles, or what are known here by the generic term, "dry goods." Yet, as a matter of fact, this trade has not declined. Values have fallen a little when the figures are bulked together, but quantities have increased. Notwithstanding the expansion in Canadian-made textiles, the severe competition of France, Germany and the United States with British goods, and the fact that no special efforts have been made until quite lately by British manufacturers to cultivate this market, the trade has held its own.

The truth seems to be that, with ordinary enterprise, Canada can be made a profitable market, considering its size, for British goods. There is a preference for them in popular opinion, and this has now been embodied in the tariff. At the date of writing (December, 1899), the figures for our last fiscal year have not been published in detail, and the full operation of the new tariff cannot be accurately stated. It is probably very favorable to British goods. But, even an examination of the old conditions show a surprising vigor in the trade in dry goods. The prices of the principal textiles had fallen greatly in Europe previous to 1898, so that a fall in the bulk-value of any line of imports does not necessarily mean a decline in trade. As already stated, there is a strong preference for British goods. The merchant can get a better price for them, as a rule. This is an important factor with him, and he makes the most of it. Then, the largest importers in Canada conduct their business on a great scale. Their travelers cover the country from end to end, and shipping facilities in Winter, as in Summer, have much increased. With ample capital, the late depression having weeded out weak concerns, the Canadian wholesale houses are in a position to encourage the trade in British goods, and their importations this season show it.

The tendency among certain British manufacturers to neglect the Canadian market up to a late period was scarcely wise, although hardly to be wondered at. In 1879, the Canadian tariff on all importations was made considerably higher. A feeling of impatience was entertained by some British manufacturers, and deputations of British merchants even protested to the Imperial authorities. But nothing could be done with a self governing colony exercising its rights in framing its own tariff. However, there was a disposition to turn away from Canada and to push in other directions. Canada, they argued, was only a market of 5,000,000, and loss of trade could easily be made up in other directions, notably, in "America," as many British traders are disposed to call the United States, reviving the phrase of the last century, when "America" meant the English possessions on this continent. But the United States has not proved a source of unalloyed profit and satisfaction to the British exporter. Its tariff has grown higher. There is reason to fear that high protection is too firmly embedded in its policy to be dislodged. Recognizing this, some British manufacturers have erected factories in the United States. They found, despite the free trade theory, which is sound enough on general theoretical grounds, that the consumer does not pay all the duty. The foreign manufacturer, anxious to get into a protected market, puts his profit down, sometimes to the vanishing point. This has proved, in some lines, under the present United States tariff, disastrous to the British exporter.

Here was Canada's opportunity and it is satisfactory that she has seen it. The tendency is toward lower, not higher duties. The British preference has been in force for a year and as time goes on will work favorably, and, if this hope proves fallacious, the intention is to alter it so as to effect that result. It is, of course, a work of time, because you cannot repair the results of 15 years in one or two. Revenue requirements are very great in Canada, and to collect direct taxation over a wide area, thinly peopled in many districts, is too expensive. A Customs tariff of some sort will continue.

But, even under the old conditions, with no special effort by British exporters to cultivate the Canadian market, the trade has held its own. To illustrate this we append a short table of

An analysis of these figures shows that :

1. In 1880, before the new protective tariff had had time to operate, the imports were about £3,000,000.
2. In 1895, 15 years later, with protection in full operation, the imports had not fallen off, but, allowing for lower values, rather increased.
3. In 1898, when (by reason of the British treaties) the Canadian tariff preference was enjoyed by German, French and other goods, which were rushed into Canada in expectation of the higher rate, the British imports continued to be about £3,000,000.

While the conditions, therefore, are not on the face of things unfavorable to British exporters, they embody certain facts the British manufacturer might keep in view. In the first place, the increased imports into Canada of dry goods bought in France, Germany and the United States should be borne in mind. The manufacturers of those countries are very alert to increase their Canadian trade. No market is too small for them to despise. Germany is especially active. The knitted goods, dress fabrics, cloaks, etc., of Germany, are well pushed in Canada. The French dress materials compete hard with Bradford, and, in laces, silks, and millinery supplies generally, the tendency toward increase of purchases is marked. The United States manufacturer, although his share of the staple trade captured from Great Britain has not been at all proportional in dry goods to his success in the iron trade, is not to be overlooked. In what may be called novelties, in printed cottons of various styles, in carpets, in curtains, and in other lines, his efforts are unceasing to sell in Canada.

It will be seen, from the figures quoted, that imports of English cottons have not so greatly fallen, notwithstanding the establishment of a completely equipped industry in Canada since 1879. It will not be surprising if British trade in this department, in such lines as prints, made-up cotton articles, etc., increases very much in the next few years. As to woollens, despite the Canadian tariff, they steadily grow in favor, and the British manufacturer of new dress fabrics, of new tweeds, both for men's and women's wear, and of woollen goods generally, has good reason to anticipate an increased export. In silks, a direct trade is now being done with Japan, and this cuts a little into the preponderance of trade done in these lines with continental manufacturers. In hats and caps, especially men's wear, the United States makers have considerably increased their sales in Canada, while it would be difficult to name an English maker, besides Christy, who pushes the Canadian trade as it might be done. A large slice of the button trade has gone to Germany, while the same is true of knitted underwear.

During the next few years, the expansion of Canada and the larger demand for a better class of goods point to conditions very favorable for British trade if advantage is taken of the opening. But Canadian buyers no longer content themselves with the English, Scotch and Irish markets. They go to all the continental centres, and their placing orders, no matter how small, are accepted with satisfaction as the beginning of a large business. The foreign exporter is thus becoming more aggressive, being induced to do so by what he supposes is apathy on the part of his British rival. The British exporter is not, as some people weakly conclude, at a disadvantage in catering to new ideas. British goods continue to show the care, style and finish that have carried them all over the world, and all the processes of manufacture seem to be fully abreast of the times. In Canada, they certainly enjoy the best reputation among consumers. But in these days of keen competition it is a truism that orders go to the most strenuous, and the Canadian market, if it is to be won, must be cultivated.

An old industry in New Orleans is the manufacture of moss and vegetable hair for upholstery purposes. The natural moss, which forms so picturesque a drapery on the ancient cypress trees of the lake region, is collected by a small army of country people, who find it a convenient way of earning a little ready money. In its original condition the growth is full of spores and impurities, which would cause decay in the fibre. All these are carefully removed by successive washings, and the moss is finally passed through a special form of gin. It emerges clean, sweet-smelling, and elastic, and is admirably adapted for most of the purposes to which curled hair is applied. There is a great deal of competition, and of late prices have been reduced to such an extent as to leave a very narrow margin of profit. Nevertheless, the industry is in a flourishing condition. The product finds a ready sale in the United States and Canada, and an export trade with France, Germany and England is being steadily built up. Thus far the sales have been limited only by the capacity of the manufactories.—Textile Mercury.

HOW A BIG PARIS STORE WAS CREATED.

THE idea of creating the Louvre, a Paris department store, originated with M. Chauchard. It is a question, however, whether in his wildest dreams he ever hoped to attain such marvelous results, says an exchange. M. Chauchard entered business upon graduating from Henry IV. College. At that time the great shops were La Belle Fernuere, La Villa de Paris, La Coin de Rue, La Chaussee d'Antine and Le Pauvre Diable. He entered the last. It was a model debut. The young shopman did not start even. It cost him $200 to be initiated into the mysteries of the trade. At the end of his apprenticeship the graduate of Henry IV. College was deemed worthy to earn his $5 a month. Every year his salary was raised $20. He went through the routine, became an assistant shelf clerk, then chief shelf clerk, or buyer, at $40 a month.

There was nothing more for him to hope for in the shop. In such a situation, two courses were open to the bold and enterprising, either to marry the daughter of his employer, continue the traditions of the place, and step into his shoes, or to strike out for himself with his own money or with the money of other men. M. Chauchard chose the latter course. At that moment Paris had begun to transform herself. The "Haussmannizing" had begun. Between the dwelling-place of the ancient kings and the gallant memories of the last century rose the Hotel du Louvre, squaring itself proudly in the Place du Palais-Royal, the Rue de Rivoli, the Rue de Marengo, and the Rue St. Honore. Without ceasing the workmen were laboring upon it. The clerk without a counter stopped like everyone else before the new building that was striking a modern note in the very centre of the capital. He said to himself that a grand shop in one corner of the structure would not be badly located, and that the owners ought to take kindly to the idea. He learned that the rising palace belonged to the real estate corporation of which M. Emile Pereire was president. Mme. Lepsic, a friend of the young man's mother, obtained him a letter of introduction. Full of confidence, the young man called upon M. Pereire, and managed to convince him that his plan was good. He obtained the lease of a small part of the building, measuring 100 metres, in the Rue St. Honore, 44 metres in the Rue de Marengo, and 20 metres in the Rue de Rivoli, the ground floor and the mezzanine. He required funds for the purchase of stock, and obtained them from a dealer. He also needed a partner, and his barber, to whom he confided the need, introduced him to the chief of the silk department in the Ville de Paris, M. Heriot, who was tired of his position and looking for something.

The work of fitting up the store was delayed so that it opened at an unfavorable time, on July 9, 1855. Though the first results were not favorable, a short time afterward the Louvre Store Co. was formed with a capital of $220,000, and with two responsible managers, MM. Chauchard and Heriot. The shop, which at that time did the largest business, was the Ville de Paris, with a business of $1,500,000 a year. Four years after its foundation the Louvre reached this figure. In 1866 it rose to $2,600,000, and in 1869 to $5,000,000. The war of 1870-1871 caused the receipts to fall to $1,000,000, but in 1873 they had risen to $6,500,000. M. Heriot died in 1879, leaving an estate of $15,000,000. Two years later M. Chauchard pushed the receipts above $20,000,000. M. Chauchard's activity was immense. He received all comers in his great store, talking with each, choosing his goods, issuing orders and discussing new ideas. To stimulate his employes he adopted various ways to interest and reward them.

M. Chauchard remained 30 years at the head of his store and retired with a fortune of $600,000 a year.

The Development of the Dry Goods Trade in Montreal.

MARINERS, military men and missionaries early perceived the advantages for trade possessed by Montreal, and their expectations with regard to the importance which such a situation should command, have been borne out by the testimony of succeeding years. It appeared to the pioneers who settled the country, that the Lachine Rapids presented an insurmountable barrier to further navigation, and that Montreal must continue to be the shipping port for Upper Canada. Indeed, in 1832 an agitation was promoted and a petition drawn up by leading merchants, begging the Government to allow the city to be included in the Upper Province, and urging as one of their reasons the fact that Montreal was almost entirely dependent upon Upper Canada for her trade, inasmuch as that Province imported goods from the Old Country, while the French, who formed the great bulk of population in Lower Canada, manufactured for themselves.

The earliest trade, as might naturally be expected, was in peltries. In the month of June the dusky natives of the west began their voyage eastward, their canoes laden down with the spoils of the Winter's chase. Every year spread the news of the fair in the great village of the white men farther and farther, as the warriors returned to tell their more remote neighbors of the fine things to be purchased for their skins, and every season brought a larger number of Indians to the trading post. Such were the beginnings of the present day commerce of Canada's metropolis.

The origin of the shawl trade is also of interest. Mr. Dougall, the founder of the name in Montreal, brought out with him a valise full of Paisley shawls. He found them so eagerly sought that he soon established quite a business in that line. A constant visitor at the store was a young lady possessed of excellent taste in the matter of patterns, whose advice in the selection of new designs was of the utmost value to the merchant, until he found out that her taste for the shawls was so great that she had at one time and another appropriated a large number for herself. He did not prosecute her, but kept her ideas about patterns.

Prior to 1825, when the Lachine Canal was built, forwarding was a business of much importance, as it was necessary that everything should be carted to Lachine, and taken thence in canoes and batteaux. This, of course, meant great delay and considerable loss. A feature of the transportation at this time was the "Durham" boats. These were drawn up the stream by oxen with ropes, and when the current was specially strong the passengers were accustomed to lend their aid from the shore. The distance to Belleville was computed, not by days, but by weeks.

The early part of the century was marked by the influx of New Englanders, who came with all their Puritan thrift, instinctive sharpness and Yankee business capacity to swell the tide of commerce and place trade upon more comprehensive lines. In 1840, the population had risen to some 40,000; a mayor and city corporation were appointed, and fire and police departments organized. This seems to bring us quite into touch with more modern days, and it might be thought that the changes since that time would be comparatively insignificant. But the probability is that the contrast between our trading life of to-day and that of the thirties and forties is of a more marked character than that with former years.

The grandfathers of the present generation carried on their business under a regime so unlike ours in many respects that it seems as of another world, and indeed it was. What stories the veterans of the trade have to tell of the long Winters, when the busy warehouse was exchanged for the comfortable old log fire, and the merchant enjoyed himself with his family at ease! Business practically ceased after Christmas, the cellar and top storey of the warehouse were closed, and nothing took place there but a little sorting over of goods—that is to say, if any were left to sort. Stocks in those days were small, and the whole amount of goods kept through the Winter by a firm such as J. G. McKenzie's or Greenshields', could be put in a room 12 x 14 feet. Indeed, an old-timer told the writer that he could remember when one piece of print constituted the entire stock of Jas. Johnston & Co. Wholesalers used to sell off as much as possible in private sales, and then hold an auction at the close of the season.

At this time there were no railways, except a small one from LaPrairie to St. Johns, which only ran in the Summer, and the Winter months were utilized for traveling through the country taking orders and collecting outstanding debts. The merchant took his own sleigh as being a quicker method of travel than the proverbial stage, and one which allowed more freedom in the way of stopping over on the route. Away he drove through the different towns and villages, and did not think anything of traveling as far as London and Sandwich, for he was sure then of a steady Winter and good sleighing, though all this is now changed.

Those were the days, too, when debts had to be paid, and paid with interest.

Many of the drygoodsmen living to-day can look back and recall the time when it was customary to grant a month's holidays to their employes during the Winter, because there was nothing for them to do. Some of them recount stories of how they used to spend their days playing checkers, and just fancy the important head of one of our wholesale firms playing leap-frog with his men to pass the weary Winter hours! People do say that Montreal business men are particularly approachable, and the foregoing looks as if such had always been the case. At all events leap frog is rather inconsistent with all the red tape of managers, secretaries, and the host of modern barriers to the private office.

All this had, however, to be paid for when the rush came. Then it was a question of all night and all day, sometimes with a lapse of three days when the workers did not sleep. The principal business of the year was done in two seasons, in the Spring and in the Fall. Down came the country store-keepers from Niagara and the west to buy at the auction sales, and everything was bustle and confusion. Goods were shipped from England early in March or April, and again about August 1. The voyage took about six weeks, and the vessels arrived in the beginning of May and September. All the work of loading and unloading had to be done by hand instead of by steam. The left of the Spring trade was over in about a month or so, after which the merchants went home to the Old Country to buy for the Fall. Those who were able to do so were comparatively few in number, as expenses were tremendous. The usual route was by the Cunard Line from Boston to Liverpool, and the cost of a ticket was 40 guineas. The Fall trade ended with the closing of the canals, and all were anxious to buy ere navigation ceased for the Winter.

Commercial travelers were a class unknown. If traveling was done, it was by the merchant himself. Consequently, instead of going to Europe to buy for the Spring in July and August, as they do now, and coming back with samples in September and October, none left here till after Christmas; and, likewise, for the Fall trade, the Summer months were utilized. Seeing that goods were only bought twice a year, the importations were larger in proportion than they are to day. The merchant counted upon immediate sales, and his profits were large. He was not bothered then by daily changes in value, but practically set his own price and held to it. Many of the large firms, such as Gillespie, Moffat & Co., were not confined to dry goods, but were general stores, where the country people bought everything they needed. Duties were small, being about 2½ per cent., as compared with 20 and 30 per cent. to day.

The whole aspect of Montreal has been completely changed since those times. It is only yesterday that the streets were opened to their present width from that of the time when the city was enclosed within a wall. Half a century ago the chief residential streets were Notre Dame and St. Paul, where the proprietors lived over their stores and warehouses. Curious, indeed, would now be the sight so familiar then, of the hundreds of New England sleighs loaded up with grain and pork, which had been brought to barter for tea, sugar and other articles of like kind. These sleighs might be seen at any time throughout the Winter on St. Paul street, and before the taverns on McGill street. The pork inspector, who, by the way, was a worthy deacon, had his place of business in the basement of the American Church. Victoria Square used to be the hay market. The large block on Notre Dame street down to St. Jean Baptiste street used to be the Black Nunnery. Where Sir John A. Macdonald's monument now stands was formerly the Catholic burying ground.

Hundreds of wooden vessels came out every season bringing emigrants, and returning with lumber, which was, as a rule, loaded at Quebec to avoid expense. The ship accommodation was not too good, and frequently epidemics of disease were spread through Montreal on the landing of the emigrant passengers. The writer has been told, by persons who were here then, of the terrible ravages of the cholera in 1832 and 1834, and again a third time; also of the ship fevers of 1847 and 1849, when people dropped dead on the street.

Another danger to which the city was subjected—and is still, to a very much less extent—was the ice jam in the Spring. On one occasion, the jam took St. Helen's Island, and rushed across on the town, extending all the way from St. Sulpice street to Allan's office. There was a large distillery near the water front where a man and his wife were sitting at dinner, when the ice came thundering on them, crashing the building down and killing them before they were aware of what was happening. To this day, initials are to be seen which were cut on the fourth storey of buildings, where the ice was piled up. August came before the last blocks were melted, and the sailors had ice for their grog all Summer.

There was always a large military garrison, which contributed quite an important item of trade. At one time, as many as six regiments were stationed in the town, cavalry and artillery being located all the way from Halifax to Goderich. Things were never entirely dull so long as these fellows were about; but they used to desert, in spite of all that could prevent, just as they do to day.

The fact that practically perfect store lighting is now within the reach of every merchant, no matter where located or what the size of his store is, leaves little excuse for poorly-lighted stores. It should induce every merchant to light his store to the best advantage, making it brilliant and bright. The substantial results that will surely follow will demonstrate the wisdom of the change.—Chicago Reporter.

STRIKE WHILE THE IRON IS HOT.

THE general-manager of one of our Canadian banks informed THE DRY GOODS REVIEW recently that at the present time there were in the hands of the people of Canada bank bills to the amount of $50,000,000. This is an unprecedented condition of prosperity, and merchants should not be content to sit down in satisfaction and enjoy the good prospects. Much of this ready cash is in the hands of the farmers, but everyone in the Dominion has money just now, and now is the time for the trade to seize their golden opportunities. Work hard on collections. Keep at it, and you are bound to get your money.

Specific methods of doing business in any department must always be more or less adaptable to circumstances, and to the individual with whom one has to deal. What works beautifully in the case of one customer might not affect his neighbor in the slightest, or might even drive him away. This is most assuredly true of collecting. Fine judgment needs to be exercised in the various methods pursued. Business men of experience invariably keep very careful track of those with whom they become associated in a selling capacity. This must certainly be made the foundation of the merchants' system if success is to be attained. When once a man has failed you, never sell to him again. For many reasons such a policy is far ahead of the one which advocates selling to all and sundry, with the consequent forced recourse to lawyers' methods for collections. Suing is admittedly advisable and necessary in some instances, but should only be resorted to as a last means, where all others have been found ineffective. The merchant who gets the name of always issuing lawyer's letters immediately an account is a little overdue, gains an unenviable reputation, and hurts himself not a little. The sympathy of the general public is very apt to run with the man who is prosecuted, especially if it is a matter of common occurrence for the dealer in question to have suits of a similar kind. Besides, there are frequently cases where a reasonable excuse can be adduced by an honest customer why he cannot pay up at the time, and there is neither justice nor expediency in applying an iron rule to widely differing conditions. The individual must always form the chief consideration. Know with whom you have to do, and serious results are extremely improbable.

Many wholesale firms only send out their bills once in three months. A monthly statement is, however, much to be preferred, and is found to work better by some of the leading houses. Here, again, judgment is to be used. Letters to men of uncertain credit may well be followed in a short time by reminders, whereas it is verging on insult to unnecessarily dun a customer of good standing, whose affairs may prevent at the moment the payment of all dues. Now is the time, however, both for retailers and wholesalers to catch the tide while it is at the full, and give their customers a nudge just in case they forget that they are in a position to settle their accounts. Any man of standing can hardly afford to be sued when times are so good; it would be disgraceful in the extreme. Let the retailers, therefore, use their utmost exertion to collect what is owed to them, and the wholesaler will benefit in his turn by prompt action on the part of the dealers throughout the country.

The larger business concerns of our cities, and many small storekeepers as well, find it of advantage to use the special agencies which exist for the purpose of collecting bad debts. These are able sometimes to bring influences to bear upon backward people which are of more avail than the merchant's expostulations. But it should not be necessary to use such means in the same quarter more than once. If a man has to be solicited in that manner, it is proof that he is better off the list of those who buy from the firm. Some may think that such a course is impossible or that they cannot afford to be so stiff; but united action on the part of business men makes impossibilities possible. The main point, then, is not to seek the most approved method of collecting from bad customers, but to be prompt in sending out bills, and to have thorough knowledge of the parties concerned, exercising right judgment accordingly.

A DEPARTMENTAL DREAM.

Written for THE DRY GOODS REVIEW.

MRS. JUDGE DALRYMPLE, who is a social leader in a northern county town, had been seriously annoyed by other society ladies appearing in public with dresses like hers. Last Spring, she sent to the departmental store for a costume. It was "swell," a work of art, "a dressy dream of loveliness." There was nothing like it in the town. So Mrs. Dalrymple felt she had a "cinch" on "sassiety." Though she toiled not neither did she spin, yet Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like Mrs. Dalrymple in her gay departmental outfit.

Amongst others who admired the gay attire was old Louisa Lillywhite, a colored lady weighing about 275 avoirdupois, better known as "Old Aunty Lil." Aunty got hold of a sample, which was a handsome printed sateen of large, loud, striking pattern.

A week or so afterwards, Mrs. Dalrymple met old Aunty on the street, arrayed like a lily-of-the-valley. Aunty carried a big market-basket on her left arm, a laundry-bag on her right, and over her 36 inch corset she gaily wore a dress like Mrs. Dalrymple. The judge's cook was offered Mrs. Dalrymple's "dream," but declined with thanks when she saw Aunty Lil trotting around town, "monarch of all she surveyed."

Mrs. Dalrymple again deals with the local dry goods people, and her cook sleeps beneath a comforter that, last Spring, was the glory and envy of all beholders, while Aunty marches in the Salvation Army, sings like a blackbird, dresses like a queen, happy as a lark.

The J. F. Brownscombe Co., Limited's business at Uxbridge, Ont., has been enlarged to double its former capacity. A feature of it is the quality of goods carried. The country merchant can keep business going past his door to the city stores by keeping the qualities and styles required. Recognizing this, Mr. Brownscombe has an establishment that would reflect credit upon any city, and thus secures the trade. He is a patron of trade papers, including THE DRY GOODS REVIEW, and speaks well of them.

Good Advertising

For Wide Awake Retailers

By F. James Gibson.

Our "Good Advertising" department is to help our subscribers to do better advertising. The gentleman whom we have selected as its conductor is well-known as one of the foremost advertising specialists of the day. Any of our readers who desire the benefit of Mr. Gibson's criticisms on advertisements or advertising methods, or his advice on any advertising subject, can have it or both entirely free of charge by writing to him in care of this journal.

If correspondents so desire, fictitious names or initials may be used for publication. But all requests should be accompanied by the subscriber's name.

ORDINARILY, January is a dull month, but the wide-awake retailer, who knows what advertising can do for him, does not, as a rule, find it a dull month. This is one of the months when a "sale," or a series of sales, comes to the rescue. Stock taking, of course, looms just ahead, and no wise merchant nowadays carries any goods over from one season to another. I well remember the days when a very few dry goods retailers made any serious attempt to "clean up" the season's goods. Such goods as did not sell in the usual happy go-lucky manner were kept for another season. New goods were added each season, and, in most instances, the new arrivals went out first, or most of the new arrivals did. Each season's "left-overs" keep piling up. Almost every store of any age had a fine collection of out-of-date stuff. This pernicious custom busted many and many a retailer in those days; indeed, many of the failures of the present time find their cause in the same custom. The modern way is different. The real live, right-up-to-the-minute merchant looks over his stock at regular and frequent intervals, and all lines of goods are kept on the run. If such a merchant overbuys in certain lines of goods, or if he finds he has paid too much for them, he doesn't sit down and cry over spilt milk, but "hustles" around and gets the goods out at any price they will fetch, and then uses the money for purchasing new goods—a nimble shilling is better than a slow sixpence.

Go over your stocks, Mr. Retailer, and take nothing into your inventory that ought to have been sold. Get up a sale and run the goods out.

Toronto. To still further strengthen their contention as to prices, they say that goods will be sold at wholesale prices as far as possible. It occurred to me that it was somewhat curious to find a firm professing to do business on Eaton principles and yet not quoting any prices in their advertisements, so I picked up a later copy of the same newspaper and found the same advertisement without the change of a word. No prices! no change of copy! and yet Moran & Co. say they are following in Eaton's footsteps! I don't believe that Eaton ever ran a standing newspaper advertisement in his life. I have known his store for many years, and such a thing as an advertisement without prices is very rare for him. If Moran's have got such low prices to offer, why in the name of all that's sensible don't they say what they are? All these glittering generalities about prices being so low don't cut much of a figure when compared with actual figures. After reading the Moran advertisement, I turned to one of Eaton's. A portion of this advertisement referred to an August sale of furniture. Here it is. Note the difference between the Moran way and the Eaton way:

C. W. Hendershot, of Kingsville, Ont., is one of the best dry goods advertisers in Canada. I have, in this department, referred to his advertisements before. I herewith reproduce a part of one of Mr. Hendershot's recent productions. The one real fault with the advertisement is in the hosiery cut: it ought to have been in outline, same as the other. I note that Mr. Hendershot has a bargain day every Wednesday. This is a good plan. It prevents the congestion of business on either Monday or Saturday. In country towns, where there is a big Saturday market day, this congestion is usually on Saturday. In large cities, where there are daily papers, the congestion is usually on Monday. It is a good idea for the merchants of a locality to combine on what has hitherto been a dull day and make a bargain day of it—say bargain Friday, such as they have in Toronto, or bargain Wednesday, such as they appear to have in Kingsville:

Wide-Awake One of the best things we can say of this business is that it's quick as a flash to see opportunities and avail itself of them. We constantly enlarge our efforts in the direction of economy, which has as much to do with buying goods as with selling them. There is no possible chance of any store within your reach doing better. This business is very wide-awake in every department, and Wednesday is an excellent day to test how wide-awake we are to shoppers' interests.

dently a wideawake man. The booklet which he sends us is a very creditable example of advertising. That Mr. Cressman knows a great deal about printers' ink will be evident to any one who reads the subjoined specimen page from his booklet. It will be noted that the typographical display is remarkably good, that the reading matter is plain and businesslike, yet pleasing, and that there are plenty of details as to descriptions of goods and prices. My opinion is that this little book brought Mr. Cressman considerable business.

It has often occurred to me that the Canadian dry goods trade would benefit greatly if they would exchange ideas and experiences regarding advertising more freely than they do. It has come to be generally recognized that advertising is the greatest aid imaginable to a business. Many merchants, like Hendershot, of Kingsville, are using printers' ink with great success. It seems to me that many such dealers must have acquired valuable knowledge by actual practice of different methods of securing publicity. Why do not such dealers give the benefit of their knowledge to others? This is one of the ways in which retailers can fight against what is termed "the department store evil." THE DRY GOODS REVIEW is alive to the importance of the advertising question. For this reason their "Good Advertising" department was inaugurated. This department always has been, since it was started, and is now, quite at the service of the dry goods trade of the Dominion, to the advancement of the cause of advertising. It aims to be a sort of clearing-house for dry goods advertising. If you found a certain kind or style of advertising a good "puller," why not give your brother merchants the benefit of your experience. If you have evolved a bright advertising idea, send it along to the "Good Advertising" department; you can depend on it being brought to the attention of the trade. We will also be glad, as heretofore, to have specimen advertisements for criticism. The big department stores each have their own advertising manager, who has usually nothing to do but think up advertising plans and to work for the improvement of his "copy." This man usually reads all the principal advertising journals, and, if he be fit for his position, nothing of any importance in the advertising world escapes his notice. The average retailer, distracted by a multitude of duties, usually neglects his advertising, and the result is that, as a rule, it is not up to what it ought to be. But, every retailer, no matter how multitudinous his duties, occasionally comes across a bright idea. The proper thing to do with the idea, after using it, is to send it along to this department for dissemination to the trade. Don't be afraid that the big department-store advertising man will also get the benefit. He probably has a number of ideas just as good, and perhaps better. In any event, 1,000 drygoodsmen with a bright advertising idea are better able to fight the common enemy than is one alone. Cooperation is the thing. Let us hear from you, gentlemen!

Writing to his Government at Washington, the United States consul in the Klondike says that last Summer a better class of buildings have been erected in Dawson. Several new hotels have been built, with electric lights and other modern conveniences, the rooms renting on an average at $100 per month. Restaurants adhere to the prices of a year ago, but good board can be obtained at the clubs and messes for $75 per month. The new buildings are from two to three storeys high, the lower parts being occupied by saloons and stores, while the upper floors are devoted to offices and lodging-rooms.

THE CANADIAN RUBBER CLOTHING TRADE.

GREAT has been the change in conditions with regard to the waterproof clothing trade in the past decade. Prior to 1889 there was practically no business done in Canada in the manufacture of mackintosh and kindred goods. It was in that year that Mr. E. L. Rosenthal, the present manager of The Beaver Rubber Clothing Co., started the making of rubber coats on a small scale. He found the task of initiating the trade here a herculean one, and the difficulties which he was forced to overcome seemed at times almost insurmountable. Though he had been apprenticed for seven years to one of the leading Old Country houses, people in this country laughed at the idea of it being possible to compete with English manufacture. The pioneer had to reason with them by actual demonstration that as good an article could be produced here as in Britain.

As a result of enterprise and perseverance, there are now three additional firms manufacturing rubber clothing, and every one of them is doing a rushing business. It is a fact that comparatively little importing is done from Great Britain or elsewhere, with the exception of some very cheap lines from the United States. In 1890, the importations for the year amounted to $556,000; to-day, they are only in the neighborhood of $100,000.

The saving to the consumer consequent upon such changes has been marked. The same coat which, 10 years ago, cost $15 is now bought for $7.50, and, whereas the merchant used formerly to suffer considerable loss on account of the waterproofs becoming hard and undone, now no such complaints are heard. Everyone knows how some rubber coats get so stiff that they will stand of their own accord. This is due to imperfections in the mode of sulphurizing, and has been remedied by the improved method of treatment adopted by our Canadian manufacturers. Goods also are now stitched, as well as being cemented, so that there is no danger of the coat coming to pieces.

When the business first started, 1,000 coats per year was the extent of the sales, though not of the manufacture. Now, it is an easy matter to sell 12,000 to 15,000 annually.

One great reason for the transference of so much trade to Canada is that, instead of being under the necessity of ordering only twice a year, and in immense quantities, merchants can, and do, order goods only as they require them. Often orders are sent for half-a-dozen coats.

There is nominally some protection in duties to the industry, but the manufacturers claim that this is counterbalanced by other circumstances. There is a 15 per cent. on raw material, and a 35 per cent. duty paid on the manufactured article by merchants, leaving an apparent protection of 20 per cent. But, when we take into consideration the increased cost of selling, of manufacture, of heating, lighting, etc., here, our advantages over British houses are small, indeed. Canada, with its 5,000,000 of people, presents but a limited field, and in this field are working four Canadian companies, as well as British and American. No exporting is done in the rubber clothing line, because of the obstacles which foreign duties oppose. It is not worth while for our firms to compete with Britain and the United States in this line—as it is in rubber boots, for example.

HUTCHISON, NISBET & AULD.

It can safely be stated that no line of business has been benefited to a greater extent from the great trade revival of the past year or two than the wholesale dealers in the better classes of woollens and tailors' trimmings. One of the leading Toronto jobbers in these goods, Hutchison, Nisbet & Auld, state that, while every year has brought increase to the volume of their business, no year showed such development as last year, which showed an increase of $33\frac{1}{3}$ per cent. over the preceding one. This has been done by increasing their assortment of stock and facilities for doing business in keeping with the growing demand. They have made most extensive preparations for the coming season, and the results already attained justify expectations of even greater increase than last season showed. The orders already placed for Spring are four times greater in volume than those given in any previous season.

In tailors' trimmings this house has established two brands of Italians on this market, which are now generally known to the trade, and accepted as unexcelled. The "Premier" brand of mercerized was introduced with the advent of this new finish. Their complete stock of blacks and colors in plain and twilled, in 32 and 54-inch, enable them to meet any demand from the dry goods and tailoring trades. Their "Humbert" brand of wool Italian is not, they claim, surpassed by any cloths in the market, being made of Botany yarns, with Egyptian warp, and all Kirk's finish. These cloths are exclusively handled in Canada by this house.

With prosperity has come a demand for a better class of goods, so the sales of silk linings are steadily growing. Hutchison, Nisbet & Auld have made important additions to this part of their stock, and the Spring trade will find them well prepared with a complete assortment of 22, 27, 30, and 54-inch black and colored veloutines, serges, and satin de chine. In this department every requisite in tailors' trimmings can be had.

In their men's woollens department this house have surpassed themselves and have now the most comprehensive assortment they have ever shown. The styles and colorings are varied, attractive, and correct. Many of their exclusive designs in foreign and domestic goods are remarkable examples of the weavers' art. Many manufacturers of English and Canadian woollens have their entire product sold up for the season; others have advanced their prices considerably. As this is likely to result in desirable styles being sold up, it would be well for the trade to anticipate their wants early this season.

THE WYLD, GRASETT, DARLING CO., LIMITED.

In all departments of their business, the Wyld, Grasett, Darling Co., Limited, report a strong, healthy tone. Orders are being placed early, and show that high-class goods are in steadily increasing demand. They are in an excellent position to meet all trade offering.

The staple department of this company is well equipped for the Spring business. Fine ranges of British and Canadian prints and sateens, English and German flannelettes, and a very large assortment of all leading Canadian mills' products are stocked. Their prices will be found to meet all competition.

In their dress goods department, they are showing some choice selections in black crepons, black-figured fancies and black silk and wool effects. They also show a new range of homespuns and tweeds, as well as extra values in faced ladies' cloths in the new Spring colorings.

In their woollen department, they call especial attention to their serges in navy blue and black, and to a special line of black and blue twill worsted, made of Botany wool, which is offered at extra good terms.

In the linen department, they are showing the finest range of imported and Canadian quilts which they have ever offered to the trade. In towels, they have a very attractive range of knitted, fringe and H. S. towels, which can be retailed at a very popular price. This house make a specialty of fancy designs in linen pillow shams, 5 o'clock table covers, sideboard scarves, bureau covers, carving-tray cloths, etc. They report having to hand repeat orders which complete their stocks in Swiss embroidered, as well as cambric, lawn and linen handkerchiefs. In table linens, they are offering not only exceptional value, but exclusive and very attractive designs.

In their smallwares department they have a fine assortment of ribbons in double faced satin and silk, a complete range of colorings in baby ribbons in silk, satin and moire. In velvet ribbons, in satin and cotton back, their assortment will be found very complete.

This firm claim to be in a particularly good position to fill all orders for both cashmere and cotton hosiery for Spring, having anticipated the advance in prices and contracted for heavy quantities at the old prices, and are still in a position to accept orders for their favorite lines of children's ribbed cashmere hose, with double knees, known to the trade as Nos. S35, 37 and 72, and in plain goods Nos. A1, "Leader," "Extra," and 25. In cotton hose they are showing special lines of full-fashioned Hermsdorf dye goods to retail at from $12\frac{1}{2}$ to 35c. per pair. They are also well stocked with cotton underwear, as well as taffeta and silk gloves,

This company are showing the largest and best selected range of embroideries they ever offered, including schiffli, ham-burg and fine cambric edgings, insertions and all-overs.

PLAIDS AND PLAIN HOMESPUNS.

Boulter & Stewart state that the popular demand to-day in ready-made costumes and skirts is almost entirely for plain homespuns in colors of light grey, fawn and Oxford grey.

Plaids of all colors and sizes, for skirts, are likely to be good stock during the shirt waist season.

They are showing a special homespun suit, lined, and in all the new cuts, at $7.50, and another special in a homespun skirt at $3, finished in good style, made in box pleat, single seam or any of the new cuts. These make good leaders for early Spring, and, when present stock is closed, prices will advance considerably. They, having secured 4,000 yards before the advance, are able to make this offering for a few weeks only.

FRINGES.

Brophy, Cairns & Co. say that black and colored knotted silk fringe, as shown on figure in their advertisement, is the fashionable trimming.

There is no question that the silk fringe which was introduced this Fall will be further used, and that innumerable silk fringes, both on the edges of scarves, draperies, flounces and small shoulder affairs will have a most broad use. These fringes will vary from the merest suggestion of a quarter of an inch on the ribbons through the various widths and processes of manufacture—simple, twisted, knotted and tinsel—to the very widest depths, which will be used as fronts and to finish the bottoms of tabliers.

PROGRESSIVE STOREKEEPING.

A Monthly Article on the Proper Management, System, etc., of an Up-to-Date Retail Business.

BY CHAS. F. JONES, NEW YORK.

Specially written for THE DRY GOODS REVIEW.

For Firms Giving Credit.

A store that does a credit business has to be very particular how they handle the persons who apply for time on their purchases.

In the first place, the most important thing is to be sure that you are not injuring yourself by giving credit to persons who do not deserve it. Again, sometimes it is almost as important that when you refuse to give credit, you do it in such a way that your refusal does not offend the person asking for it.

Many persons apply for credit to whom you may not feel disposed to give it, and yet who are perfectly honest and may really deserve the accommodation. Your judgment may be a very accurate one, but we all make mistakes sometimes. This is shown by the fact that you probably have a great many debts on your books which are difficult or impossible to collect. If your judgment can err in giving credit to the wrong persons, it is just as likely that it may sometimes make a mistake in refusing credit to the wrong person.

Therefore, it is a very particular thing how you refuse those applying to you for time.

Again, even if those who apply for credit are not worthy of it, still their cash trade may be worth a great deal to you, and, if possible, you should refuse them in such a way that they will have no reason to take offence.

A very bad practice is customary in many stores, of allowing the salespeople to inform customers that credit has been refused. Very many persons who may apply for credit are not posted on the exact manner in which they should make their applications, and, therefore, when they wish to buy goods they will simply say to the clerk, "I should like to have this charged." The clerk usually reports the matter to the office and receives the answer as to whether the goods may be charged or not.

The proper way to tell the people that their credit is refused, is to have them appear personally at the office and have the credit manager tell them privately and as courteously as possible that just at present the credit will not be agreeable. If this is done and the person is a reasonable one, nine times out of ten this will not give offence.

But the method of simply having clerks go back to the customers and tell them in the presence of other clerks, or possibly customers, that credit is refused, is one which will nearly always cause discontent and mortify the purchasers so much that they will feel a hesitancy in returning to the store to buy again, even for cash.

When a customer asks for credit it is always well to have the clerk state to her that she must make application to some person in authority, who will investigate the matter and give a decision. This person in authority, as I have stated before, after having made any investigation necessary, should either inform the person desiring credit, by letter or privately in person, with regard to the refusal.

It is also well for the credit manager to personally inform parties to whom he is willing to extend credit, because he can then give them some ideas as to just what extent he would like them to make charge purchases.

There are some persons to whom he might say that the store is always ready and willing to charge anything they may wish to buy, no matter to what amount the purchase might run. There are again others to whom you would be willing to extend a limited line of credit, but you would not care to have them make it very large. And there are again others whom it would be well to give to understand that, while the account is agreeable, you still expect them to see that it is settled promptly every month.

By your tone of voice and by the careful selection of your words, you can in all such cases impart the proper information to the prospective customer and cause her to fully understand your position, without giving offence, whereas, if written to, or word is sent by someone else, the information could not be imparted as pleasantly or effectively.

Telling Lies In Trade.

I quote the following commonsense talk from another trade journal; "Goods sold to stay sold and afford satisfaction to such an extent that the customer is quite certain to return to the same house for more," should be the ambition and motto of every salesman or saleswoman. One who always tells the truth will never be caught lying, but a customer who catches a salesman in one lie has a right to expect another, and always treats all commendatory arguments, on the goods he or she attempts to sell, with suspicion.

Business lies, some salesmen claim, are not to be answered by them; they excuse the practice by charging it to the firm, which is quite willing to make sales on the strength of overdrawn statements. It matters not what one's religion may be—that is controlled by dictation of conscience. It is not the religious end of man's life, but the business end, that is to be debated in this article.

Does it pay to tell "business lies?" That's the question. If content to serve a customer but once, prevarication might clinch the deal, but if expected to return again the next time he or she goes shopping, past experiences, must have proven profitable and satisfactory if the same house secures their patronage.

Very few people allow a dog to bite them twice in the same spot. Merchants and salespeople should not forget this fact. A business supported exclusively by transient customers is an expensive one to keep running. It has to be bought entirely at the price of printer's ink (which has become expensive) and fake schemes. To-day you see them, to-morrow you don't see them. Owning business is the result of pleasing customers; pleasing customers is earning their confidence. Confidence advertises: The public never forget the firm or salespersons who are abreast of the times and can be relied upon.

There is no necessity for the salesman who misrepresents making more sales than the one who calls cotton, cotton. A salesman must first labor to gain the confidence of the customer. Answer promptly and candidly all questions asked, if you know, if not, say so, but strive to know; give the benefit of your knowledge and experience if the customer

THOS BROPHY,
FRED L CAINS
A W D HOWELL

23 St. Helen Street,

Montreal, December, 1899.

DEAR SIR,—

We were among the earliest and heaviest buyers in the Canadian, American, English and French markets for Spring 1900.

A great many of our friends have already placed their Spring orders with us for Staples, such as Grey Cottons, White Cottons, Sheetings, Pillow Cottons, Tickings, Denims, Prints, Linings, Flannelettes, Fancy Duck and Piques; also for Men's, Women's and Children's Underwear, Hosiery, Gloves, Laces, Curtains, Umbrellas and Sunshades.

It has given us pleasure to be able to protect our friends in the face of rapidly advancing prices. We will continue to do so as far as possible.

We thank you for our pleasant business relations in the past, and for the orders placed with us for next Spring.

In addition to what you have already bought, we want your valued order, please, for Dress Goods, Silks, Satins, Velvets, Velveteens, Costume Cloths, Costume Tweeds, Trimmings, etc.

There is no perceptible advance in our Black, Fancy Black or Coloured Dress Goods. We placed "bulk orders" very early in the season, before the heavy advances in price took place.

We believe the collection of Novelties and "Every Day" Goods we have ranks first among the many handsome ranges we have shown from year to year.

Our representative will be with you in good time. Your commands will have our best attention.

Accept our sincere and best wishes for 1900. May it be a Happy and Prosperous Year with you.

Yours very truly,

BROPHY, CAINS & CO.

Facts teach this. If a customer is inclined to purchase a size too small or too large, carefully remark that you believe she has selected the wrong size, at the same time letting a side remark drop that it is not your purpose to dictate. Never make a size to suit if you haven't the size the customer desires. If goods have a damaged spot of imperfection, point it out to them. Nine times out of ten they will buy it at a small reduction and cherish it as a special bargain, when otherwise they would have returned it with an expression well seated in their minds that they had been victimized.

Can't Fool the Public.

Don't delude yourself by thinking that the public don't know what they are about.

They read your testimony in advertising columns, they try you by making a purchase, the verdict is, "go again" if satisfactory, "stay away" if misled.

It's an old axiom, "the public like to be humbugged," That was quite true in Barnum's business, but he did not attempt to do a dry goods business.

People want what they pay for, and if deprived of it by misrepresentation, the most natural thing for them to do is to withdraw their patronage from the firm or salesmen who practise it.

The largest houses in our great cities have earned the reputation which has made the magnitude of their business by keeping faith with the public. A behind-the-counter salesperson's capital is ambition and honor; the public reward the latter while he exercises the former.

True and False Economy.

There is an old saying to the effect that if you watch the little things, the large ones will take care of themselves. This is true, in a certain sense, and the most successful merchants are those who watch all the little points of business and take care that there are no mistakes made in those little points which are so easily overlooked. Still, there is such a thing as being very particular about the little points and overlooking others that are much more important. For instance, a firm may be very economical in the matter of light, and it pays to watch this expense, as a great deal of money is burned up unnecessarily; but do not be so economical with your light as to make your store gloomy and uninviting. And the same way with your stationery: Do not be so economical with its quality as to give your house a poor appearance and to form a poor opinion of it in the minds of any persons who may have any correspondence or written dealings with you.

Use of a Private Office.

The head of every business house ought to have a private office. I know a great many business men who have no private place where they can talk on private subjects either to their employes or to those outside with whom they may have business dealings.

There are very often a great many things which come up in business which you will wish to discuss in private, and then you will feel that it would pay you to have a private place where you could talk of the business in a business way, without being subject to interruptions.

The larger and more progressive houses have nearly all recognized this, and provide their managers and head businessmen with places for transacting private business. Even a small store can afford to have a desk somewhere in a private corner, where the manager can discuss business matters with those who may call upon him. If you have business with customers which you wish to keep confidential between you and them, it is not very pleasant to have to ask them to stand up, in the aisle or somewhere, and communicate their affairs where they are liable to be overheard by some of the employes.

Put Vigor Into Weakness.

Every business man should be on the watch for the neglected departments in his store.

Those departments which are doing well, of course, should be watched also, but it is money in the dry-goodsman's pocket to take particular interest in finding out the departments which are running behind, or which need stirring up and going at them with vim. You can afford to let the good departments which are pushing themselves do without your services for a short time, in order that you may give particular attention to the departments that are lacking vigor.

Being Up-to-Date.

Do not let any competitor get ahead of you in the matter of merchandise and styles, provided they are at all useful or likely to sell well. Let your store be the first in the town to have the new season's goods on display; be just a day or two ahead of your competitor in displaying early Spring goods or early Fall goods. It will not hurt you to carry a small quantity of early goods a little while before you need them, but it will be a big advertisement for people to know that you are first in the field with everything.

Don't wait until your competitors have tried all the new-style goods, or the new fashions that may come out, before you take hold of them. If there is any merit in novelties, be one of the first to handle them; then, you get the profit and the reputation which is due to an enterprising merchant. If you wait until all the other stores have tried the goods and found them to be a success, then very likely their usefulness is worn out, and you will be the one who has to hold the stock when the goods go out of style and something else which is new takes their place. Thus, you will always be behind your competitors, when it is much more profitable to be in the lead.

VEILINGS.

Brophy, Cains & Co. say that during the past few weeks there has been a decided improvement in the demand for veilings. Fancy-meshed tuxedos, with closely-spaced chenille dots, also light-weight alencon nets, have been prominent among the good sellers. Spider-web effects and velvet-spotted designs are also being shown in an attractive range of patterns. Plain and spotted chiffon veilings have been very prominent during the past month. The range shown comprises all the newest and best lines. Many of the veilings which are now so popular are decorated with large velvet spots, widely separated. The use of the two veils continues to be popular. For such purposes, chiffon is most desirable, one filmy veil being of a high color, while the other is white. The effect is remarkably soft and fetching.

The store of Wins & Co., at Campbellford, Ont., is as prettily and nicely kept an establishment as one sees anywhere. A purchaser would be attracted by the look of the goods and the care and taste with which they are arranged. Mr. Wins has made a success of the cash system, which he adopted two years ago.

THE LIFE AND BUSINESS CAREER OF MR.
JOSEPH CHAMBERLAIN.

WE have grown so accustomed to connecting Mr. Chamberlain with Birmingham, and Birmingham with Mr. Chamberlain, that it is rather surprising to find that Mr. Chamberlain does not come from the Midlands at all, but that he is in reality only a few hundred yards removed from a Cockney. When, not long ago, it was urged against a London Bill that Londoners should decide for themselves how they were to be governed, Mr. Chamberlain was able to enlighten a good many people as to his nativity. "I am a Camberwell man," he exclaimed, with the natural pride of a man who claims relationship with an audience which is cheering him to the echo; and the next day Camberwell was besieged by paragrphists in search of a new political shrine.

It was at 3 Grove Hill Terrace, Camberwell, almost within sound of Bow Bells, that Mr. Chamberlain first saw the light, on July 8, 1836. He came of an ancestry of which he was proud to boast in his Radical days. "I boast a descent of which I am as proud as any baron may be of the title which he owes to the smile of a king," he exclaimed in a famous speech at Denbigh, "for I can claim descent from one of the 2,000 ejected ministers who, in the time of the Stuarts, left home and work and profit rather than accept the State-made creed which it was sought to force upon them." The worthy ancestor whose memory Mr. Chamberlain thus honored was a fellow-worker with Richard Baxter—Richard Sergeant by name, who began a faithful ministry at or near Kidderminster two years after the battle of Naseby. Mr. Chamberlain, however, was not born into the Church. His father conducted a shoe business in the city, which had been carried on under the same name and on the same spot for over 100 years. His mother was the daughter of a provision merchant, and Joseph was her firstborn, the eldest of a family of nine.

Camberwell was the scene of the boy's early schooldays, which were spent under the guidance of a Miss Pace, who lived at 122 Camberwell Grove, where she made a comfortable livelihood by teaching a few children the three R's. From the terrace to the Grove was only a step, and the boy whose future was to be greater and grander than anybody dreamed walked to the school regularly each morning and took his place on the forms with the other boys. What has become of them now? And what did the boy Chamberlain talk about when good Miss Pace's back was turned? These are questions we would give much to have answered, but our curiosity can never be satisfied. For Joseph Chamberlain left Camberwell when he was nine, after he had been at the school in the Grove just one year. His parents crossed over to Islington, where the boy went to another private school in Canonbury Square, kept by the Rev. Arthur Johnson, whose widow the Colonial Secretary recently visited. On leaving Mr. Johnson, young Chamberlain was sent to the London University School, which has the names of Mr. John Morley and the Speaker on its roll. He was at this school until he reached 16, when his education ceased. Mr. Chamberlain is one of the few great men of to-day who were never at a university, and his career is a striking rebuke to those who hold that genius is the monopoly of the universities. Mr. Chamberlain was only 18 when he began, as we should say if he had been a poor boy, to "earn his own living." He entered his father's shoe business, in which he worked for two years. Then he went to Birmingham, and his real life commenced.

If Mr. Chamberlain is not a Birmingham man by birth, he belongs to the city in a much more real sense than if he had merely been born there. It is impossible to think of Birmingham without thinking at the same time of Mr. Chamberlain, who has completely reversed a familiar maxim about prophets and their own country. No man was ever more idolized in his own country than Mr. Chamberlain—unless, perhaps, it was Mr. Gladstone. Mr. Chamberlain might be Mayor of Birmingham for life—might almost hand the Mayoralty down to his children's children—if he chose.

But we are leaping ahead—Mr. Chamberlain's present is so fascinating that one is apt, in spite of oneself, to forget his past. If Mr. Chamberlain is the hero of Birmingham now, he was only one of thousands of unknown youths when he first set foot in the town in 1854. Leaving Islington and the shoe trade, he went to Birmingham to make screws. So remarkable was his grasp of business after two years with his father, that he was entrusted with the sole care of his father's interests in a Birmingham firm of screwmakers. For 20 years he worked hard in his way, and the reader will probably expect to be told that they were the dullest 20 years of his life. Any remark suggesting that would be totally misleading. In these 20 years Mr. Chamberlain made his fortune, screwed it down fast with his own screws, and before he retired from the business, on his father's death, his name was as well known in the screw world as it is in the political world to-day.

The business was not prospering when the young man from London took it up on behalf of his father. It had been going the wrong way for several years. Mr. Chamberlain turned it around, and made the screw trade a royal road to fortune—for Nettlefold and Chamberlain. Stories have been told of this period which it is difficult to accept. In their efforts to make the business a success, it was said, the firm of which Mr. Chamberlain was the guiding spirit made use of methods which are more familiar to American than English commerce. It was stated that the small screw traders were deliberately ruined, and that they received threatening circulars. But there seems to have been no ground for such assertions. What is true is that under the new regime the screw-making firm at Birmingham secured a monopoly of the screw trade of the country. Securing the patents of certain screw-making machines, they were able to make screws much better and cheaper than their rivals; and so it came about that the small traders disappeared, and the great firm grew rich. Mr. Chamberlain made a huge fortune; and when his father died, in 1874, he was able to give up business altogether and devote himself to the welfare of the city in which he had made his wealth. "In 1874," he says, "I made up my mind that I must retire from business. Municipal life completely swallowed up my commercial life."

At that time Mr. Chamberlain had been a figure in local politics for five years. Though he had devoted himself with such zeal to business, he had not allowed commerce to swallow up his interest in the public affairs of Birmingham. He had become familiar with many departments of local life. At the Church of the Messiah he was a teacher in the Sunday-school, with four of his brothers; he taught for a time in the night school, and took part in the "Penny Reading" entertainments. He was president, too, of the Mutual Improvement Society in connection with his Sunday-school, and was altogether an active worker in many local causes of a religious and social character. Years before, he had begun his political career in a local debating society at Edgbaston, where he soon became a somewhat prominent figure. Not that he was a born orator—he is not the most eloquent of orators even now. As a youth, he would commit his speeches to memory or write them down. But it was inevitable that, in spite of this, Mr. Chamberlain should come to the front in such a gathering as that which met regularly at Edgbaston to settle the questions which were vexing statesmen. He was so obviously in earnest that his lack of style was forgotten, and he mastered his subject so thoroughly that by-and-bye he was able to throw aside his notes and trust entirely to the splendid fund of facts with which he had packed his brain. Young Mr. Chamberlain was frequently referred to in the paragraphs which appeared in the local newspapers in reference to the meetings of the debating society, and it is curious to note that at that time his political views leaned towards Toryism. It is not easy to believe, however, that Mr. Chamberlain was a Tory at 20, and it may be that, having been nursed in Toryism, the speeches at Edgbaston were made while the speaker was in the transition stage between the antiquated Toryism of that day and the Socialistic Radicalism which made him one of the most talked-of men in England a few years later. At any rate, Mr. Chamberlain was not too modest at 22 to pull Mr. Bright to pieces. A newspaper paragraph in December, 1858, tells us that "Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, in a lively clever speech, pointed out various inaccuracies in Mr. Bright's speeches"; and again, we are told that Mr. Chamberlain avowed in a vigorous speech that "so far from the aristocracy being responsible for all the wars, as Mr. Bright had asserted, every war since 1688 had been demanded by the people; he quoted Bacon, Cromwell, and Kossuth as to the necessity of always being prepared for war, as the world was a gigantic New Inkleys"—"New Inkleys" being a Birmingham slum where bludgeons and anti-garrotters were very much required.

But, if there was any suggestion of Toryism in Mr. Chamberlain's politics at that time, it quickly disappeared—from the surface at any rate. The pendulum swung full length the other way. At 30 he was an out-and-out Republican. It was in 1869, when he was 33 years of age, that Mr. Chamberlain entered public life as a candidate for the Town Council. His genius was not yet fully recognized, for we read that he was adopted with considerable hesitation; but he was elected for St. Paul's Ward by a big majority, and from that moment his star was in the ascendant. He rose in public favor both on the council and off, and in 1873, four years after he had been hesitatingly adopted as a candidate, he was elected Mayor of Birmingham. So popular was he as Mayor that he was elected again and again, filling the chair for three successive years, and then only quitting it to take a still higher honor from the people.

It was in his first year of office that Mr. Chamberlain became for a time, perhaps, the most talked-of man in the provinces. He had already won a more than local fame by his action on the education question, which was at that time prominently before the nation, and he was chairman of the first Liberal School Board for Birmingham. But, it was as an avowed Republican that Mr. Chamberlain came to the front in 1874. The Prince and Princess of Wales were to visit the town, and everybody was asking what the Mayor would do. It was generally felt that "something would happen," and the possibility of "something" happening was contemplated not only locally, but in the press throughout the country. But Mr. Chamberlain accepted the principle that discretion was the better part of valor. In 1870, at a meeting called to sympathize with the new French Republic, he had declared that a republic was bound to come to England, and two years later he had represented the Birmingham Republican Club at a conference in St. James' Hall, London. It was natural, therefore, that a good deal of curiosity should be evinced as to what he would do and say when the Prince came to Birmingham. "I shall be ashamed of myself and the whole business," he wrote, in a private letter, and he added that the Prince would be "as popular as the Tichborne Claimant"! But Mr. Chamberlain must have disguised his feelings very well, for The Times the next day declared that it did not remember any speech made before Royalty which was couched in such a tone at once of courteous homage, manly independence, and gentlemanly feeling"; and Punch, rising to the occasion, wrote:

Like a gentleman he has comported himself in this glare of the princely sun,

Has just said what he ought to have said, and done what he ought to have done;

Has put his red cap in his pocket and sat on his Fortnightly article, And of Red Republican claws or teeth displayed not so much as a particle.

Punch's cartoon represented "Our Brummagem Lion" kneeling at the feet of the Princess of Wales.

The story of Mr. Chamberlain's career as a town councillor is practically the modern history of Birmingham. In six years—practically in three—he raised Birmingham from the position of a badly governed third-rate town to the position of one of the first towns in the kingdom. He was, to use an expressive phrase of the time, "not only Mayor, but town council too." The Birmingham of his town council days had a population of 180,000, and a rateable value of less than one-third what it is to-day. There were, to quote from one of Mr. Chamberlain's own speeches, no parks, no free libraries, no baths, no art gallery or art museum, no board schools, no school of art, no Midland Institute, no Mason College, no Corporation street. The streets were badly paved, imperfectly lighted, and only partially drained. The footwalks were worse than the streets. You had to proceed either in several inches of mud, or in favored localities you might go upon cobblestones on which it was a penance to walk. The gas and water belonged to private monopolies. Gas was about 5s. per 1,000 cubic feet; water was supplied on three days a week. On other days carts went around supplying water at 10s. the 1,000 gallons. The death rate was 30 in the 1,000. There were whole streets from which fever was never absent. Thousands of courts were not paved or drained, and were covered with pools of stagnant filth.

It was thus Mr. Chamberlain found Birmingham; he left it as we all know it to-day—one of the best governed towns in the world. In the three years in which he was Mayor, Mr. Chamberlain achieved four great reforms. The town bought up the gas-works, representing a capital of £2,200,000, and yielding the people £30,000 a year. The town purchased the waterworks, estimated now to be worth over £2,000,000, and reduced the water-rents by £25,000 a year. A draining union with surrounding towns was established, and a model sewage farm laid out at a cost of £400,000, which it costs £1,000 a week to work. And the council bought up the slums in the centre of the town, built Corporation street upon the site, and let it out in leases of 75 years. The improvement cost nearly £2,000,000; but, when the leases expire, in 50 years, Birmingham will be the richest borough in the world. It is a record of which any man might be proud. When, a few years after, Mr. Chamberlain was sneeringly described as a town councillor, he was able to say triumphantly to the people of Birmingham, "I will confess to you that I am so parochially-minded that I look with greater satisfaction to our annexation of the gas and of the water, to our scientific frontier in the improvement area, than I do to the results of that Imperial policy which has given us Cyprus and the Transvaal."

In 1876 Mr. Chamberlain left Birmingham to play his part in a wider sphere. The London papers already knew him as the Republican Mayor, and Mr. John Morley had gone down to Birmingham three years before to make his acquaintance; but there was much curiosity to hear him in the House of Commons. He made his maiden speech on August 4, 1876. It was upon Lord Sandon's Education Bill, a subject with which the new member was quite at home, and the speech was so well received that it formed the pivot of a leading article in the next morning's Times. Mr. Chamberlain's first motion in Parliament was in favor of the municipalization of the liquor traffic. He has made many motions since then, but it is unnecessary here to dwell on the rest of Mr. Chamberlain's life. It would, on the one hand, be too controversial for a paper which knows no politics, and, on the other hand, it could hardly be done without disturbing the pleasing impression of Mr. Chamberlain which this article has been written to create.

A DEFENCE OF DEPARTMENTAL STORES.

FROM A WOMAN'S STANDPOINT.

[We give space to this communication, not because we agree with it, but because it may contain hints for merchants who have to meet the competition of these stores and who will find it useful to know what lady shoppers want.—
ED. DRY GOODS REVIEW.]

NE hears so many disparaging things said about the departmental stores. Usually, these remarks are made by people whose interest it is to run down everything that is at all likely to interfere with their way of doing business; or from the prejudiced few; or the many who talk for talking's sake, airing opinions at random.

But, ask the thrifty housewife who goes to shop to supply her household needs, not to kill time turning over counters of merchandise. She will tell you she prefers the well-conducted family objects to some article—its color, size, or shape. She sends or takes it back, and explains that it does not suit. It can be exchanged for anything from roof to cellar, or the money refunded. It may be a paper of tacks, a pound of tea, or a silk gown. It does not signify. She is not satisfied. There is no fuss made. She gets civility. The article is exchanged, or the amount returned. She may belong to one of the wealthiest families or the humblest. She will receive the same fair treatment.

I want material for a dress, a suit, or covering for furniture. I go to the ordinary dry goods shop or the general store. I ask for samples. I am informed they don't give samples nor send them to city customers. I explain that they are for a member of my family, who, through illness, is unable to go out and select for herself. After losing valuable time interviewing heads of departments and one of the firm, I succeed in getting as a favor one, or, perhaps, two small samples. Then, I ask to have something sent on approval. Have I an account? No; I always pay cash. Then the goods can't go out on approbation. A friend who is with me mentions she is having her purchases charged, and to have what I want on approval sent in her name. And in this unbusinesslike manner two large webs of goods are sent to my house.

On another occasion I want samples. I go to the depart-

departmental store, whose business is run on a strictly cash basis. We will suppose she comes into the city from a suburb or an adjoining town or village. She has a long list of wants. She pays cash. Her time is limited. She goes to one of these maligned departmental stores. Under one roof she finds everything in quantities and qualities, of all grades, to select from. If she is an experienced buyer, she knows the value of what she buys. With a transfer card she goes to the different counters, and with each purchase receives a check in acknowledgment. When she has supplied her wants, she goes to the office and hands in her transfer card, pays for what she has bought, and is given a receipt. She can take her parcel, or it will be sent to whatever address she gives. Under this system a mistake is almost impossible. On opening her parcels, some purchase is not satisfactory, or a member of her departmental store, without having to explain family ailments, whether I live in the city or out of it. I am directed where to apply, and am given a large envelope of patterns in every conceivable color, texture, and quality of what I have asked for. I may want these samples to compare with goods elsewhere. Although competition is keen, the departmental store is not afraid of comparison. I also ask to have some dress goods sent on approval. This is refused, but I can pay for as few or many yards as I like, return it, and receive back the money.

I want my last Winter's hat retrimmed. I take it to the millinery-room of a dry goods shop. I am told more velvet will be necessary, but mine is a black which can't be matched. They will make me a new hat, using my feathers, ornaments, etc. I go away sighing, to return the following

Dear Sirs.—I have had your new machine set up now for about one month. It is giving me first-class satisfaction in every respect, giving me regular service, and a clear, nice light. I am now lighting with my 25-light Machine: Clothing Store, Grocery Store, and Doctor's office over clothing store, and with only ordinary attention we get excellent service.
I might say further that as long as I can get Acety-

Dear Sirs.—After experimenting with several makes of

Messrs. Guelph Acetylene Gas Generator Co.,

Gentlemen—The 300-light Machine purchased from you for our factory is giving entire satisfaction, and is proving very economical, as every particle of carbide is dissolved, there is no waste whatever. It is easily handled and clean, and is a great improvement on anything we have ever seen. It gives a steady, soft light.
Our men say that it is 50 per cent. better than the old gasoline gas that we formerly used, and there is no smell from the burning of it, as there was from the old gas.

Dear Sirs.—I have pleasure in stating that the Generator you put in for me early this year has proved to be very satisfactory. The system adopted in the "Happy Thought," of allowing a small quantity of carbide to come in contact with a large body of water, instead of vice versa, as under the old method, is a decided improvement; the automatic feed arrangement and double cylinder reduces the element of danger, with anything like ordinary care, below that of coal oil lamps.

Yours truly,

Gents.—I feel satisfied that the improved Generator you supplied me with for my gas plant, is the most complete automatic arrangement on the market. I fill my carbide holders and put them in position as directed in the instructions, and go about my business, knowing that the machine will do the rest. The machine you now send day and try on this work of art. Horrors! I dare not face my critical family in such wild headgear, and can't induce the not too polite saleswoman to make me another hat, a small tamer edition. I refuse to take this hat, and am handed back my feathers, four (I had given five), ornaments, now broken.

I mention these two facts, but the matter was considered too trifling to have it inquired into. Taking my now dilapidated hat and trimmings, I wend my weary way to the departmental store. Here my battered crown and brim are straightened.
No suggestion of a new hat. A little additional velvet is required; yes, they can match it. I am given a check of acknowledgement. Each article is valued.

At a departmental store once I bought silk for a waist and gave a small parcel of lace to be sent with it. When the parcel was delivered the material was cambric and no lace,
I returned it, and was given an order for the same quantity of silk and 70c., the amount I had paid elsewhere for the lace.

A friend gave a parcel to be done up with some things she was buying in a fancy store. The parcel was never enclosed, and, on making inquiry, she was politely told they knew nothing about it. A lady, whose young nephew came to live with her, bought a small bed for him at a departmental store.
The following day the child's own bed arrived from home by express. She went and told this at the store, and they took back their bed and returned the money.

No one was more prejudiced against departmental stores than I once was. I designated them junk shops, but experience has taught me differently. The people who don't pay cash can't patronize the departmental stores I have reference to, consequently they abuse them. And those who eagerly rush where-ever they see or hear the word bargain so often injure the trade of any respectable firm. They buy trash and pay for trash. Further up the same counter is the genuine article at a good value price, but the gaudy shoddy suits the bargain worshipper, who later on exhibits her rubbish as a cheat she got at such and such a departmental store, and her neighbor agrees with her in condemning the trash and the place it was bought at. One is not more liable to be cheated at a departmental store than anywhere else. There are goods with the manufacturer's name on them—patent medicines, canned goods of the different brands. On all these things I can save from 10 to 25 per cent., and am not above doing so.

The bookseller is indignant because a customer gets for 90c. at the departmental store the identical publication he is asking $1.20 for. If this is because the departmental store is cash and the bookseller is credit, then I prefer to patronize the former instead of assisting to pay the bad debts of my spendthrift neighbor. And when I can get satisfaction in a departmental store, why waste time and strength walking the streets from one shop to another?

LOOSE METHODS IN BUYING AND HOW TO AVOID THEM.

THE want of attention by buyers to the reception of their purchases has often been, in the mind of the writer, one of the extraordinary mistakes made in the trade.

Probably 90 per cent. of sales made by travelers is recorded by a copy of the order being left with the buyer. Of this, again, perhaps another 90 per cent. is pigeonholed or put away in a drawer, until, that getting too full, its contents are gone over, perhaps sorted, and the largest part thrown into the waste-basket. In the meantime, the goods have arrived, been marked off and put into stock, so the copy of the order goes with the lot into the waste-basket.

Smart buyers will keep the copies of orders before them, will add up approximately their purchase, and, when the invoice comes in, will carefully compare with the copy of order.

A buyer spends valuable time in the sample-room, valuable to both buyer and seller (and here, in parenthesis, it may be permitted to state to the majority of the buyers in this value of the fabric as per invoice was entirely astray, one merchant receiving a low quality at a high price, the other the reverse.

Comparison of the invoice with the copy of order would have saved a lot of annoyance, assisted in straightening the mistake in time and saved money to the shipper.

Another merchant, in the Ottawa Valley, received two pieces of goods of different qualities; the shipping clerk in the invoice transposed the pieces by mistake. The merchant actually marked them as they were invoiced, and did not discover his mistake until the traveler, happening to see the selling price on the tickets, pointed it out.

A very important point well worth a merchant's care, is not to buy too heavily. By careful attention to the copy of his order he can see from day to day the amount of his buying and can stop when he has bought enough. This will be much more satisfactory to him and others, and does not necessitate him asking any firm to take back part of the shipment as he has too much, which is not only annoying, but making expense. Sometimes, a firm may refuse to have the goods returned, the result being that the buyer has an overstock, he is dissatisfied with the firm from whom he bought, and the task of the traveler is made difficult the next time he calls.

So keep your copies of orders near your hand; see that the invoice compares with the copy of order. A. B. C.

country that they do not appreciate how valuable a traveler's time is, or they would be more prompt in their appointments; does this cap fit you?). He carefully makes his selection, but must have only a visionary idea of what he selected by the time the invoice arrives. He has seen so much that he must forget part. If his memory could grasp everything, he could save the cost of books in his office. The copy of his order insures to him the goods he bought—no substitutes, no extra lengths, no stuffing.

Recently a firm inadvertently made a mistake in two pieces of goods, one piece of value was sent to a merchant who bought a low-priced quality, and the low quality was sent to the buyer of the best. Both these merchants, one in Eastern Ontario, the other in Western Ontario, put the selling price on the invoices handed them to a boy to mark off the goods, and afterwards sold from the pieces themselves, not recognizing that they had not received what they bought, nor that the

A BEAUTIFUL INGRAIN FRIEZE.

The accompanying cut represents the leading frieze on the market this season both in point of beauty and popularity. It is manufactured by The Watson, Foster Co., Limited, and is called the "Glory of Dijon Roses." Gracefulness and richness of forms, elegance and originality of drawing, are among its chief qualities. These are the only features that can be illustrated in a cut, but the rich and cheerful colorings used in producing this frieze, and perfect accuracy of printing combine to make it a gem of art and one of the best specimens in natural floral effects that has ever been attempted in America.

Ingrain paper is now used very largely, and, with the beautiful combinations made to match the different shades, some very rich and warm decorating is obtained.

The Watson, Foster Co., Limited, report a very large increase in the sales of all their ingrains this season—they have a particularly strong choice of colorings and really artistic friezes and ceilings to match.

THE HUMORS OF STOREKEEPING.

An Idle Young Man's Experience on a Saturday in a Far Western Store.

I WAS in the Northwest for the good of my health, and for the good of my health I used to spend a large part of the day sitting on the counter in the store eating candies and lemon peel. I say the store, because, although there was, as a matter of fact, another, it had only been started out of ill-natured opposition, and no person dealt there except when a little threatening was deemed expedient. As a rule, there was no objection to my keeping the counter from getting dusty; but, on Saturday, as the head clerk put it, he did not like "any unnecessary obstruction to his ocular vision." That day saw the transaction of more business than all the rest of the week put together.

Storekeeping there is much the same as in any other country district, only as Pat would say, it is more so. There are the various phases of the occupation familiar to every merchant, together with certain elements characteristic peculiarly of the West. The store is the centre of social life, and the headquarters for all the gossip of the neighborhood. The proprietor and his clerks have splendid opportunities to learn what one customer has to say of another, and, if they pass it on immediately to the individual in question, their premises sometimes become the stage for rather fiery enactments. Every "hoe down" is discussed at length, both before and after the event; and an incipient "match!"—well, suffice it to say that the women out there are not a whit behind their city sisters in making the most of the very farthest fetched suggestion of this most interesting piece of other people's business. The latest and most astonishing news of oneself and friends is always to be had at the store. The merchant being a prominent citizen is apt to combine in himself the offices of postmaster, school trustee, license commissioner, justice of the peace, and pillar of the church, and his establishment forms a convenient centre for carrying on business connected with these different duties. Probably 90 per cent. of the trade is done on credit, and the billheads may have a note to the effect that "interest is at 12 per cent. after three months." Cash is a very scarce quantity, and a man's limit is determined by the size and number of his wheat stacks.

At the place to which I have reference, store and post office were combined, and, as the mail came in on Saturday, that was a busy day. Though the train did not arrive until late in the evening, the store assumed an aspect of expectant bustle early in the day. During the forenoon, the teachers from the school districts within a radius of about 15 miles would drop in and compare notes on the doings and difficulties of the week. The student missionary, also, was likely to appear, in very unclerical garb, but with the air of one who was about to undertake very grave responsibilities on the morrow. "Well," someone would say to a half-grown-up girl, quite within hearing of the teacher, "how, do you like the teacher?" "Oh, fine!" with a simpering giggle, and a glance in his direction, "but, my! he has the cross eye in his head!"

Window dressing or any other kind of dressing doesn't count for much in that country. Clerk and customer alike are in their shirt sleeves, except when it is too cold. The store is necessarily too full of every variety of goods to afford much chance for artistic display. Every available inch of room is utilized. No such waste as wide passages. Notices of all kinds—postal instructions, descriptions of stray animals, samples of noxious weeds, bills of coming entertainments, church notices, home-made (very home-made) advertisements of animals, fence poles or land "for sale"—hang amidst whips, millinery, boots, shawls and tinware in endless array.

The full force of the staff consisted of the proprietor and two assistants. The merchant himself was a tall, lanky individual, who always stopped between waiting on different customers to use the tobacco cutter and refill his pipe. He got through a lot of work, though he made haste slowly. His length of arm saved many a step. He just reached over the counter, and set the parcels of sugar and tea in the baskets on the floor. The next in command was a smart one, he was!—one of those fellows from the East you know that never walk when they can run. You always seemed to be standing or sitting exactly where he wished to get something. He never managed to get around you without excusing himself, and saying that it was fine growing weather, or inquiring after the well-being of that mysterious commodity "tricks." A very impressive habit of his was to slap things down hard on the counter: it was a kind of guarantee, as it were, that the article was good stuff. The young lad had but recently come to the store, and was undergoing the tribulation of first attempts at making up parcels. When requested to change a dollar, he always endeavored to be up to the mark, and asked whether the other would have silver. I don't know precisely what his idea was, seeing that coppers are not used in the West; and even if they were, I would fancy 100 of them would be rather an inconvenience than otherwise. He had a great admiration for the senior clerk, and strove to imitate his example in all ways possible. Consequently, he used to remark during the drought that "it was great growin'," and was apt to do some damage while performing, in worthy style, the flourishing feat of snapping the string with which goods were tied.

Old Mrs. S— was usually one of the first visitors in the morning. She was a well-known character, and, though she could neither read nor write, she prided herself very much upon her sagaciousness in business dealings. She was a Highland woman of considerable proportions—one of those people you would say was not lightly to be set aside. So her husband thought, anyway.

"And how much for my butter this morning?"

"A dollar forty, Mrs. S—."

"What's that you say? What are you paying these times, anyway?"

"Ten cents is our price at present."

"Ten cents! Do you think I am going to use good elbow-grease making butter for ten cents? I can get eleven across the road. Where's the boss?"

With this the proprietor is appealed to, but he is inexorable, says he is losing money on every pound of butter he buys. Really can't do better.

"'Deed, yes! It would be terrible pity for you to lose your money. Just put my butter back in my wagon. We will see if Mr. McA— will lose some money."

Rather than lose a good customer, concession is made.

"Well, seeing it's you, Mrs. S——, we'll let it go at eleven; but, remember now, this is on the quiet. Nobody else gets that price."

"Oh, you men, you're a bad lot. What do you think? John Cummings offered three thousand dollars for my husband's farm. Likely, says I, likely; why, he refused fifteen hundred!"

Nevertheless, things are arranged on a satisfactory basis, and she spends the greater part of the morning buying for a large family.

About noon, in saunters a large, rather slovenly, but good-looking young fellow, habited in riding costume. He has had an early breakfast (for him), and has come in to see what is going on "in town." He is a "remittance man." Now, these remittance men are not always very good farmers, but they are exceedingly good customers. They buy a line of forthcoming, he goes on: "Nothing but work all the time, and never a thing to show for it." Still no interruption is offered. "By jove, I wish we could have an almighty big civil war. That would kill off a lot of useless tools, and leave room for the rest of us." This is too much for Mrs. S——. "May be it would be the useless tools that would be left," she says, and, with this withering remark, she picks up the last of her goods and departs. Thus the conversation keeps dribbling along most of the afternoon between the remittance man and those who casually enter the store, with the merchant and his clerks for a kind of standing audience, who can keep the thread of argument as the theme is taken up by one new comer after another. At last he rises to go. "Oh! by the way, I have a letter to post; and, er — I want enough good carpet to cover that floor of mine."

"How much do you want?" inquires the clerk.

"How the deuce do I know? Give me the whole piece, it goods which no one else in the country ever thinks of buying. Canned vegetables and preserves, honey, everything and anything up to hanging lamps, lace curtains and pianos. And these are for log shacks, sometimes most incongruously dirty. Such facts explain a leniency and obligingness on the part of the store, which might strike a stranger as curious. Apparently he has not come on business. In he walks behind the counter with the air of one who might be the sleeping partner in the firm, helps himself, with a nod to the proprietor, to a couple of packages of tobacco, asks for a match, and then takes possession of one of the chairs and proceeds to puff at his pipe. After five minutes or so he suddenly becomes seized of an idea, and ejaculates: "My word, but this is the damndest country!" He seems to expect an answer, but as none is will do for the upstairs to my chicken-house when I get married. Got a stamp?"

He receives 5c. worth of stamps, and promptly sticks them all on a 2c. letter to England. "Infernal nuisance, this carrying around stamps."

After ordering, in an off-hand manner, a few other things to the value of about $30, and helping himself to a handful of candies, he betakes him to the blacksmith's shop, there to spend the remainder of the afternoon. He is not really a bad fellow, and, after he has discovered that wheat doesn't grow of itself in the Northwest any more than anywhere else, he will get down to hard pan and make something of himself and his farm.

Towards evening, the store begins to fill up. The young men have gulped down an early tea so as to be in time for football, and their sisters have come too, in quest of certain nicknacks ; but chiefly to see and be seen, and to carry on a little flirtation with the store clerks and other young bloods about town. Girls are at a premium in Western towns, and can always count on a good deal of attention. By 8 o'clock the place is jammed. In vain do the three members of the staff try to make themselves ubiquitous. The head of the firm has now a half-burned cigar in his mouth. No time to cut tobacco. The busy head clerk is rushing about at such a pace that it is a wonder he does not heat an axle. He leaps over counters, and waves boxes, baskets and butter tubs above people's heads until one would think he was in a machinery hall. However, nobody is hurt. The young hopeful steps on corns and apologizes. He is not devoid of gallantry, and when a pretty girl, whom he is especially desirous of pleasing, makes a small purchase, he follows Joseph's example, and slips the coin back into the parcel. When the merchant comes and turns out the contents on suspicion of the truth, the lad feels more like another Old Testament character upon an occasion—decidedly down in the mouth.

In the front of the store, while the women mostly are doing the buying, the men are gathered into two or three knots where the two or three leading wits and argumentarians keep affairs from lagging. Everyone is smoking and the two lamps are but feeble purveyors of light. On the outskirts of each crowd a few Indians maintain a stolid and dignified silence, but evince a keen interest in all that is going on. Though they know no English, any reference to themselves is very quickly taken up, and, if they think they are forming the subject of conversation or remark, they shuffle off. Here Jim McCurdy is holding forth on the tariff question and freight rates, and dealing—in somewhat excited periods—trenchant blows of scathing scorn upon the existing duty on barbed wire, overcoming all opposition by the most conclusive argument of a stentorian voice and a complete obliviousness to all rules against reasoning in a circle. Here Charlie Fletcher is telling how his three horses had been struck by lightning while standing with their noses over the fence, and there they were in the morning, exactly in the same position, dead. Talking about lightning reminds one of his hearers how, in the early days, when the Winters were cold, the flame of the lamp used to freeze, and they had to break it off or pour hot water on it. In those days the cow gave ice cream. Such frivolous stories cause righteous indignation on the part of Charlie, who sees in them an insinuation against his veracity. For a few moments the barometer stands at very dry.

At the back of the store clothing, boots, and hats are being tried on, the only requisite for the latter being that they should stay on one's head.

The Indian women always prefer to do their shopping apart from the crowd, if possible, and will wait hour after hour, rather than elbow their way to the counter. For them the most startling and impossible array of goods is set forth. Plaids that would be an inspiration to a Highlander, and flower gardens to astonish a botanist bring smiles of complacency to the swarthy faces. An indispensable adjunct to their purchases is some small present in the shape of a handful of tobacco, of some unsalable raisins, dried apples, or the like.

The standing joke after 10 o'clock used to be an imitation outside the door of the train whistle. This never failed to make a stir, as everyone was anxiously awaiting the mail.

After half a dozen rouges of this kind, the welcome sound of the engine bell would be heard, and presently in came the officious tinsmith, who had a salary of 25c. a week, for carrying the bags. Nobody minded his knocking everything about him, as he tried to drag about 14 bags of mail after him, their only thought being to get their letters and hie away home. A little after midnight the shutters are put up for Sunday, things are set to rights and, after the hotelkeeper's wife, who has run in for a pound of tea and a can of salmon, has been waited upon, the store door is locked, and a good day's work is ended.

CRAVENETTE FOR MEN'S WEAR.

To be modish nowadays, says a New York fashion authority, it is absolutely essential that you possess a rain coat. It may be fashioned for riding, driving, wheeling, golfing, walking, and everyday use, and all the women of fashion—indeed, all the world, both men and women—are ordering rain coats or capes at their tailors. It is not a mackintosh to which I refer, but a garment fashioned of that delightful West of England cloth called cravenette, which is rainproof and dustproof. There is no rubber used in its manufacture, consequently there is no disagreeable odor, and it allows free circulation of air. One of the chief beauties of garments fashioned of cravenette is that there is nothing in their appearance to indicate that they are rainproof. They resemble unproofed cloths, and are quite as suitable for smart street wraps, and gowns and overcoats as for rainy-day wear ; indeed, they can be worn on all occasions and in all climates, and come in colors as well as in black. For riding habits, or a "sporty" raglan, to wear to and from the mount, the material seems to be quite the fad at present. Women have been using cravenettes for several years, but it is only recently that the cloth has been made in heavy weights for men's wear. I am certain that any man to whom this may happen to be news will thank me for the hint. He can be assured that he is going to see plenty of overcoats, or "rain coats," to use the smart term ; and they are quite as stylish and handsome for everyday wear, which I have mentioned before, as they are serviceable in stormy weather. For a driving or a paddock coat, they are the garment, par excellence, giving warmth without overheating.

THE FAMILY TARTAN OF LORD MINTO.

Attention is called by Hutchison, Nisbet & Auld to their advertisement in this month's issue. The design is an exact reproduction of the Elliott plaid, the family tartan of Lord Minto. This design was made especially for their ladies' cloth department, and is one of many handsome tartans forming part of their stock. Oxford homespuns, so justly popular this season, are bound to find great favor during the coming season, and this firm, as selling agents for these goods, will carry a full stock. The universal popularity of tweeds for ladies' wear is the result of the desire for serviceable as well as fashionable goods, and Hutchison Nisbet & Auld claim a preeminence in these lines, which they purpose to maintain. Their arrangements for Spring include a variety of styles from the great fashion centres of the world, as well as exclusive novelties from the best designers who make a special study of correct color effects. The plain cloth section of this house is already well known for completeness in color and quality, and needs no further comment.

September 27th we commenced business in the City of Toronto. Since then there have been many changes in the trade—monopolies suggested, combinations made, corporations formed, limited liability companies entered into, failures many and successes few. Success is the only one of the six that we have allowed to enter into our business, and, as “nothing succeeds like success,” we have decided for the next fifty years to continue succeeding. This we can only do by the liberal confidence and support of the trade, which we hope will be continued. Nothing that we can do will be left undone to merit a share of commercial prosperity. Square transactions, right values, liberal terms, courteous and prompt attention to customers and correspondence.

New Customers.

No longer middlemen, as we now have goods manufactured under our own brands. The advantage this is to our customers will at once be seen. The old way of buying is to buy what manufacturers have to sell. The new way is our way. It secures better value, and our customers are assured that goods bought from us, with registered brands, cannot be bought elsewhere.

Old goods have no place in our warehouses. Lines that show any slowness are made to move quickly; thus ever keeping our stocks new, fresh and clean.

We are constantly adding to our many customers throughout every Province new ones, and we hope as the years roll by their business will increase as the business of our older ones is increasing.

CANADIAN BUYERS IN GREAT BRITAIN.

Canadian buyers and subscribers may have their letters addressed to the London office of THE CANADIAN DRY GOODS REVIEW, 109 Fleet Street, E.C., London. Letters so directed will be kept or forwarded according to instructions.

MONTREAL AND TORONTO, JANUARY, 1900.

THE SPRING NUMBER.

TO the readers of THE DRY GOODS REVIEW, at the beginning of another year, we extend our good wishes and felicitations. The present issue, the Spring Number, contains a number of special articles written on purpose for this publication, and also a great deal of business information of direct concern to the trade.

It is intended, during 1900, to increase the value of the paper to its readers in various ways. The departments devoted to special branches of the dry goods trade will be enlarged and improved; the subject of window dressing will receive even greater attention than it has in the past; a series of articles on office management and the finances of a retail business is projected, and the aim will be to give the latest and most trustworthy information regarding prices and styles in dry goods suited to the Canadian market.

Suggestions and queries from readers will always be welcomed, and, if any retailer thinks there are particulars in which he would like to see the paper improved, the editor will be glad to hear from him. Neither in business nor in trade-journal publishing does one man know it all.

THE CASH SYSTEM.

From many quarters come reports that the cash system is working well. A period of good times is convenient for starting the cash system. When times are hard, and the merchant's best customers are short of ready cash, it is difficult to enforce the system. But, during a season of good trade, sales for cash ought to be easy. A big wholesale house informed us lately that one half their customers took their cash discounts. This lessens the profit to the wholesalers, and compels them to buy for cash themselves, and often to order large quantities in advance. This may be hard on the wholesaler, but it is in the interest of the retailer. We see, therefore, no reason to regret the extension of the cash system in the retail trade. It is the safest and best way of conducting a retail business.

REPORTS OF MANUFACTURING COMBINATIONS.

THE reports of combinations in the Canadian woollen trade differ from similar combinations in other countries in this respect: that there is no chance of their advancing prices too much at the expense of the public or the retail merchant. The reported amalgamation under one management of the knitted goods mills would, if carried out, doubtless be directed to making all the mills pay and to abolishing some of the absurd competition which has been going on for some time. We make very fine knitted goods in Canada, and we are not getting the profit on them we ought to get.

Then, the report that some of the leading Ontario woollen mills will also be united under one management is another evidence that manufacturers are growing tired of manufacturing at a very narrow margin of profit. There is an enormous amount of woollen machinery in this country, and prices can never be on a steady basis while the excessive competition prevails.

No doubt, these combinations would tend to lessen expense and give the mills concerned a better chance. But that the market could be worked unduly by this combination is, of course, too absurd to consider seriously.

We have never heard complaint that prices of domestic woollens were too high, and that the tariff was used to advance prices unduly. The complaint has always been the other way; that Canadian woollens were very cheap, and that a natural rise in the market was seldom taken advantage of.

THE TRADE PAPER.

IT is not always necessary, in crossing a river, to use the ferry or the bridge: you can swim over. But is it worth while?

In arguing with a man, you can vanquish him by other means than greater skill and truth in argument: he can be knocked down with the fist. But is it the wisest way?

So, in conducting a business, a merchant can get along without a trade paper. But he will lose or miss the cost of that paper a dozen times during the year. The trade paper, like the fast boat, the railway express train, the telephone, the electric car, is a modern expedient for rendering easier what you have to do. No wise merchant dreams of walking or driving 60 miles on business if he can take a train. So, our experience is that the trade paper goes to the most wideawake merchants, and that they appreciate it.

DIFFICULTIES OF A RISING MARKET.

WE learn from the agents of woollen mills in the United States that these mills will not show new heavy cotton fancies, nor will they name prices until the first week in January. This is unprecedented, and is owing to the extraordinary state of the wool advances. Some domestic buyers think that only all-wool goods should be subject to these conditions. In this they overlook the fact that, even if goods are all shoddy or cotton, the advance is still very heavy, all shoddies being up 25 to 30 per cent., and the cotton the same. As an example, Peruvian cotton which was a few months ago at 11½c. is now 14 to 15c.

Soap, oil, tallow, starch; in fact, everything entering into the composition of goods is up—this is with the exception of alizarine and aniline dyes. Even the boards upon which goods are wrapped are not exempt from the rise in prices, but are up 60 per cent. The boxes in which stuff is packed, owing to advances in lumber, are also up some 20 to 25 per cent.

There seems to be no word of anything else but rises, rises, in every direction. Advices from Egypt say that the Government have ordered the planters there only to plant two thirds acreage in Egyptian cotton this season, on account of the want of water for irrigation purposes. The Nile seems to be on strike, and it is even less amenable to reason than human organizations. As the market for English yarn in England has already advanced 25 to 35 per cent., it is hard to estimate what the price may be in three months. The manufacturing interests contend that the retail trade have hitherto paid very little advance on cotton goods made from fine yarn, but that they may have to before long.

Agents for British and Continental houses are experiencing difficulty in filling orders. Ordinarily, three or four days, at least, can be counted on for a stable price, but instances are occurring where the order has been cabled and the answer returned is to the effect that the said goods are advanced since last notification. Such a condition of affairs puts the agents in an awkward position. They have to go to the trade, and, when taking an order and being asked what their price is, have to reply that they don't know. It is not to be wondered at that the answer is unsatisfactory to the buyer; but there is, for the moment, no way out of the difficulty, and it is really the plainest manner of stating the case. The only other alternative is for the customer to buy at a stipulated price, with the liability of having to pay an advance. In cases where merchants are far from the centre, and the telegraph has to be called into requisition, some delay is often the cause of having to pay a higher price than expected. Merchants cannot, of course, always place their entire order at the beginning, but there is a tendency in some quarters to do buying by very small detachments, as it were, and one instance is to hand in which a loss of nearly $4,000 was the result: In August, the agent solicited an order, and the customer put in one for about one-quarter of the amount he said he would want. After a month or so, he said he thought he would get some more, and had to pay an advance on the same. Subsequently, he bought two more orders, with the result above mentioned.

THE LIMITS OF COMBINATION.

M. R. PAUL GALIBERT, glove manufacturer, Montreal, had been suffering for several months past from the desertion of his apprentices, when he secured information to the effect that a man named Adrien Chasselet, who had been formerly a foreman in his employ, was the cause of this wholesale desertion. He took three actions against him for instigating apprentices to desert the service, and the accused, upon evidence, was found guilty and sentenced to a fine of $10 and costs or two months' imprisonment.

There is a satisfaction in seeing justice dealt out in such cases. As has been said: "Labor unions are in harmony with evolution, and are potentially good for the business community. It is of decided advantage to an employer to know that his competitor cannot hire help for less money or for longer hours than he can himself, and the mutually helpful cooperation of the union men is an evidence of higher civilization. But, when unions step outside their province and attempt to take into their own hands all the management of employers' business, except raising the money to pay the wages, then they have got to be shoved back into their own bounds for their own good, as well as for the protection of the community." Trusts and combines which tend to stifle competition, limit production and determine the prices of products used and consumed by the people are certainly great evils, but they are no greater than the tyranny of a class whose ignorance gives no guarantee for the keeping of any sort of reasonable bounds. Their newly-acquired power leads them to excesses which, in threatening the public welfare, serve to alienate sentiment and sympathy which would otherwise be on their side.

ADVANCES IN SMALLWARES.

Smallwares are showing about as great an upward tendency as anything else in the dry goods business. Ribbons, which advanced 5 per cent. about three months ago, show an advance this month of 7½ per cent. Cashmere hose have advanced fully 25 per cent. in the last three months, owing to the difficulty manufacturers have experienced in getting yarn to fill their orders. These manufacturers have withdrawn their quotations, and now orders are subject to the ruling price in England at the time the order is received in that country. In German cotton hosiery, an advance of 15 per cent. has been made on all lines, with deliveries away on in the future. The Canadian mills have also put up their prices 10 per cent. on all cotton hosiery and knitted underwear. Pins are 10 per cent. higher than a year ago. Curling irons have advanced 20 per cent. Spool cotton has risen from $4.20 to $4.50. Linen thread is 7½ per cent. dearer. Silk gloves are 15 to 25 per cent. higher. Elastics have gone up 12½ per cent. Hooks and eyes, thimbles, safety-pins, crochet and knitting needles, pearl buttons and many other articles included as smallwares have shown advances, more or less, this Fall.

ARE WE OVER-IMPORTING ?

THOSE who are curious to observe the present tendencies in the importing of dry goods will be able to examine approximately the results of the last three months. The table which we append has been made up, with some care, from the official returns, and indicates the state of trade during the last three months of 1899 compared with the last three months of the year before. Taking dry goods alone, therefore (because we are not concerned with other classes of goods), we find that the total imports during the three months have been over $500,000 more than during the same period in 1898.

It will be observed that the increase is chiefly in cottons, linens, furs, hats and caps, and silks. The woollen imports do not show quite so marked an increase, excepting in one item. Evidently the Canadian demand for goods must be considerably greater when so marked an increase in imports as this takes place. There is, evidently, also lots of demand for imported goods, and, as we know our Canadian factories are as busy as they can be, it will be seen how much expansion has taken place in the home trade. It may be thought by some that we are over-importing ; but, from the increase in population and the general disposition to buy more freely, we do not think, so far, any danger has been incurred. We hear that importing firms have purchased very largely for Spring, owing to the rising markets, and that, soon after January 1, the imports will show great increases. The following are the figures :

CONTINGENT CLOTHING CONTRACTS.

Government contracts are proverbial sources of dissatisfaction, and the contracts for the manufacture of the clothing for the Canadian contingents, first and second, are no exceptions to the rule. In all fairness to the Government, it must be said that some of their contracts were given to men who are, openly and actively, opponents. Nevertheless, it is peculiar that one of the largest firms in the country should have been passed over in both instances.

It is stated that a Montreal house had tendered 49c. cheaper than the firm who received one of the contracts in the former instance. Yet, on the second occasion, they are given the go by, and the same firm again receive a large contract. The ostensible reason for the granting of the above contracts to such a firm in preference to some others is said to be a wish to prevent the sweating system by insuring that all the clothing shall be made under one roof. It is, however, denied that this result was accomplished. The material, to be made in such a short time, was of necessity distributed around, and the fact that a nominal rental was paid on some houses does not get around the question. There were others quite capable of filling contracts under similar circumstances.

Mr. R. C. Wilkins, Montreal, who made the shirts for the first contingent had not heard, at time of writing, anything about another contract, and was quite prepared to do without. The Government wrote to some of his confreres a while ago asking about the prices he had charged—if they were not too high, and received the reply that they were perfectly reasonable. Mr. Wilkins admitted himself that he scarcely understood how he had come to receive a contract at all. As he said : " When a man stumps the country 'agin,' the Government, he can hardly expect much to come his way."

FRINGES.

THE fashion in the Old Country, which will be followed to a more or less extent here, in dress goods of very light grounds covered with black in different designs, means good news for the makers of fringes. The wearing of fringes as dress trimmings has become quite general, and merchants are being asked on all hands for the various lines. There is nothing prettier than the long black fringe on a light ground. And another thing, it is much more satisfactory for the fringe man when black is in request rather than the colors. There is more difficulty in suiting customers in the latter department, as each person wishes to match their own goods, and this is not always practicable. The colored goods have had a large demand, however, in very short " Tom Thumb " fringes, as they are called. These are used very largely with fluted ribbons in irregular trimming of skirts and waists. Chenille is commanding, perhaps, the largest sales of any. The long fringes, up to 15 inches, are more for fashionable wear, and the sale of them is naturally more limited. Some of these lines are most exquisite, and the designs are in great variety. Pointed or scalloped fringes are selling very fast, and make splendid adornments for flounced skirts. Knotted goods are held in preference to plain fringes, and are, of course, much prettier. One fact which accounts for the expensiveness of the knotted goods and other kinds is that they are not machine-made, but hand-made. Machinery nowadays is being brought into requisition in almost every line of manufacture. But there is still room for skilled workmanship in the making of fringes, and skilled hand labor in this regard has become more perfect as the years pass. Fringes are no new thing, and yet, the hand-made article still holds the first place.

AN AUSTRALIAN MARKET FOR CANADIAN GOODS.

VOLUME OF EXPORTS AND IMPORTS IN 1899—INDIVIDUAL EFFORTS TO OPEN TRADE—ONE FIRM'S PRACTICAL EXPERIENCE—THE POSSIBILITIES OF THE FUTURE.

CANADA is naturally desirous of increasing her trade with the rich and thriving British colonies in Australasia. During the past five years this trade has expanded well. In 1894, it amounted to about $400,000. But, in that year, the Canadian Government appointed a commissioner, Mr. John S. Larke, who first interviewed producers and manufacturers at leading trade centres here, and then proceeded to Australia, where, by unceasing activity, by intelligent knowledge of business, and by sending back to Canada frequent practical reports, he has done much to stimulate the interchange of commodities. The present Government have continued this business policy with success, so that, in 1899, the Canadian-Australian trade had grown in value to over $2,000,000.

The trade is not altogether one-sided, either. In 1899, Australia sent us products to the value of $563,000, the chief articles being: Sugar, $427,965; fresh mutton, $23,453, and canned meats, $20,987. There is also a large trade in wool, but, as it nearly all comes via London, it does not figure in our official Trade Returns, which only deal with the direct trade. In fact, there is reason to think that our commerce with Australasia is greater than $2,000,000, as exports which go via New York are often not credited to Australia, but are lumped in with the general statement of exports to the United States.

Examining the figures for 1899 in some detail, one finds that, of the $1,500,000 worth of Canadian goods shipped to Australian and New Zealand ports last year, the following were the principal items:

Agricultural implements..	$589,802	Bicycles.....	$191,029
Cotton fabrics.....	81,554	Bicycle parts.....	15,375
Drugs and chemicals....	42,782	Planks and boards.....	169,592
Organs.....	23,814	Deals.....	52,359
Pianos.....	23,925	Flour.....	72,287

Every branch of trade is thus interested in the Australian markets. In dry goods, the export of over $80,000 worth of cotton fabrics indicates that Canadian cottonmen are not blind to the advantages of those markets, which are likely to absorb more and more of these goods. Mention was recently made in THE DRY GOODS REVIEW of the shipment of Canadian neckties to Australia, and also of the sales of Canadian umbrellas there. These and other manufacturers have gone to the expense of sending out special representatives, who have acquired a practical knowledge of how the business should be done. The Australians are keen and clever buyers. They are willing to trade with Canada on a business basis, not as a matter of sentiment, and this fact promises well for the expansion of a trade which has already, on its merits, touched $2,000,000.

There can be no doubt that, with the exercise of care and good sense in the shipping, many lines of Canadian goods would sell well in Australia, and that our exporters, having the Department of Trade and Commerce at Ottawa to consult, and the commercial agent, Mr. Larke, resident in Sydney, to obtain all requisite particulars from, will find it an increasingly profitable market. Those who do not wish to go to the cost of sending a direct representative will be able to do business through manufacturers' agents in Australia. These agents take orders from warehousemen, or wholesale importers, and large retail houses, send the orders to Canada, and get a commission for so doing, the shipment being at shipper's risk. With a capable and trustworthy agent, no doubt a good business can be opened up.

The experience of one Canadian concern, The North American Bent Chair Co., Limited, of Owen Sound, Ont., will interest those who think of taking up the Australian trade. The secretary of that company, Mr. H. B. Smith, has courteously given details of their experience to THE DRY GOODS REVIEW, and offers to post any intending exporter who may desire fuller information. This company observed that Austrian chair manufacturers were exporting to Australia, and, in 1893, decided to bid for a share of the business. The first plan adopted was to obtain names of Australian firms purchasing chairs and send them catalogues. This did not succeed. Then, by an announcement through the Australian papers, offers were received to handle the goods on consignment. A shipment was made in this way, and the goods sold readily, but payment was not satisfactory, so it was decided to send out a traveler. Fair sales were made under this system, but as the traveler carried other lines for other firms, and Australian dealers were loth to take these up, the trip was not, on the whole, a great success. The company then received offers from New York firms desiring to do the business for them, the trade being continued in this way for several years. But this was, one may suppose, not enough for an enterprising Canadian with a good article to sell.

"As the demand for our goods was steadily increasing, we decided in the summer of 1898 to establish a branch in Australia. We went to considerable expense in sending a representative out from here, and we opened a warehouse in Sydney, N.S.W. and stocked it with a vessel load of chairs. Our branch had hardly opened for business when orders for our chairs commenced coming in, and, from the reports we received from our representative, the demand kept constantly increasing.

"Soon after we established our branch we received communications from some of the largest Australian firms asking control of our chairs. In January, 1899, The Tye & Co. Proprietary, Limited, of Melbourne, sent their representative, Mr. Geo. Tye (who, by the way, is a Canadian), over here for the purpose of securing our agency. His trip resulted in an arrangement being made, whereby we agreed to give them our agency for a term of years. Our president, Mr. J. G. Hay, immediately started for Australia, and within two weeks of his arrival there he made a cash sale of all our stock.

"Upon his arrival in Sydney, Mr. Hay met Mr. J. S. Larke, the Canadian commissioner. Mr. Larke had been of great assistance to us, and we found him always ready to furnish us with such information as he might from time to time be in possession of. He made it very pleasant for Mr. Hay during his short visit, and we entertain a very friendly feeling towards Mr. Larke for the attention shown by him to our affairs. While in Sydney and Melbourne, our Mr. Hay visited most of the dealers in our line, and he was surprised to learn how little some of them knew of Canada. One gentleman called Mr. Hay a Yankee, and did not seem to know anything about the boundary line between the United States and Canada. The business people in Australia, as a class, are very much like the English, and, as a rule, they seem to be sceptical about taking hold of anything new. The places of business in Sydney and Melbourne are, as a whole, much larger than those in Montreal or Toronto, and appear to be very substantial. Mr. Hay was much taken with the different cities he visited in Australasia, and says they are clean and well kept, and up to-date in every respect."

This company add that they "know of no reason why other industries should not be able to introduce and sell their goods as well. All it requires is that pluck and enterprise which we believe most of our Canadian people are possessed of in no small degree."

When the tariff for the new Commonwealth is framed, it will be known exactly what conditions exporters from abroad will have to face. A period of two years is given in which to impose the new tariff. It will probably be a compromise between the free trade policy of New South Wales and the high protection of Victoria. It will interest Canadians, who often feel that tariff legislation would be better dealt with by business men rather than politicians, to know that the New South Wales Chamber of Commerce are considering the question of the future federal tariff, and will, it is said, actually appoint a committee to frame a measure in detail.

Hugh M. Fraser has been transferred from Calgary, N.W.T., to the charge of the dry goods department of the Hudson's Bay Co.'s large store at Vancouver.

THE FARTHING CHANGE IN LONDON.

Writes a London correspondent of THE DRY GOODS REVIEW: "I was passing along one of the streets with the cheaper class of shops the other day, when a little fancy article in one of the outside windows, and marked 10 $\frac{3}{4}$ d., caught my eye, and I went in to have one. Of course, one does not, as a rule, carry farthings around with him, and, after being pestered by the shop-walker and several female clerks to buy every article that was within seeing distance, all of which seemed to be marked at a certain price with a $\frac{3}{4}$ d. on it, I tendered a 2s. piece for my purchase. When the change came back, the maiden who condescended to attend to me, first handed me over one of these little round pocket mirrors, which are usually given away as advertisements, and then proceeded to put in my hand 1d. and 1s. It took me just a moment to see that this trashy mirror was part of my change, given in lieu of a farthing, but, when I grasped the situation, my generosity prompted me to hand it back with the suggestion that its value should be applied to the War Relief Fund. The dealers over here make a habit of this sort of thing. Not long ago I had a few dozen pins palmed off on me instead of a farthing piece. So, when a customer goes in to buy something marked with a very large 10 and a very small $\frac{3}{4}$ d., he generally pays 11d. for it. I thought the Canadian scheme of marking things 99c. was bad enough, but it is a trifle better than the system in vogue over here, for, as a rule, the Canadian is not cheated out of his 1c. change."

A GROWING NECESSITY.

Another ready-to-wear garment has become a necessity to every up-to-date business man. The rapid growth and demand for tailor-made suits and separate cloth skirts has enabled the retailer to cater for the better class trade, and to do this he must have up-to-date styles and newest cloths. By paying special attention to the rapid change in styles, Messrs. Boulter & Stewart have well deserved the popularity their goods have obtained. They have spared no pains in securing the best labor and the newest ideas. Their assortment of cloths contain all the latest, and, with the special facilities for securing the new designs from Paris, Berlin and Manchester, you can be assured of getting just what you need to make a success of your costume department. A call at their warehouse will repay you well, as it is necessary to keep posted these days of keen competition.

In blouse materials, it is the opinion of leading authorities that khaki corded silks, soft-finish Roman satin, and brocaded mercerized Italians, will command a large share of attention.

Owing to large shipments of Ontario wool abroad, Ontario mills have been drawing for supplies upon New Brunswick shippers. One shipper during one month has shipped over 200,000 lb. of Maritime Province wool to the west, although shipments are usually all absorbed by the British market.

A Fredericton, N.B., report says a company with from $1,000 to $2,000 capital is likely to start making underwear, ladies' skirts, men's shirts and similar goods. It is proposed to employ 35 to 50 hands, and to instal as many sewing machines, to be run by water motor. The promoters, who are residents of Fredericton are asking free water and tax exemption for 15 years.

MUSLIN UNDERWEAR AND BLOUSES.

JANUARY WHITE GOODS SALE.

THE old saying, "Competition is the life of trade," has undoubtedly proved true in connection with the manufacturing of ladies' cotton underwear in Canada, for, in proportion to the opportunities offered, no other industry has made as great progress in this country during the last decade. In 1886, there was only one factory in Canada manufacturing ladies' underwear, and its output for a whole year would not equal a week's output of one of our Canadian factories of to-day. There have been many ups and downs in the business during the past 14 years. Some of the Canadian manufacturers have been successful, but many of those who started during the last few years have not succeeded. Competition is keen, and a muslin underwear manufacturer, to be successful, must thoroughly understand all the details of his business, and be ready, at all times, to adopt the latest and most improved methods of manufacturing. He must understand what class of goods will sell, and know where, how, and when to buy his raw materials. He must be satisfied with small profits, aim for quick returns, large output, and frequent turnover of capital.

Some years ago, partly owing to the business depression in the United States and partly owing to the fact that Canadian factories were not as well equipped as those of our neighbors to the south, some of our merchants bought their cotton underwear in New York, and many more Canadian merchants did not sell ladies' underwear at all. But the past few years have altered all of this, and to-day every up-to-date dry goods store has an underwear department. Some of our Canadian factories are now better equipped than most of the American factories, and, as our successful manufacturers have studied the Canadian trade, and know the class of goods required in Canada, the Canadians now control their own market, and there is very little, if any, underwear imported.

The price of muslin underwear has been steadily decreasing during the last few years. This reduction has been possible owing to two causes: Prices of cottons and embroideries were steadily decreasing, and new and improved labor-saving machinery was being introduced into the muslin underwear factories, but, during the last six months, things have taken a turn. Cottons and embroideries have advanced 10 to 30 per cent. in price, and it is only a question of time when the underwear manufacturers will have to follow suit. The larger manufacturers six months ago, anticipating the advance in prices, bought heavily of both cottons and embroideries, and it is this fact that prevented an earlier advance in underwear prices. Stocks of raw material are now used up. Underwear manufacturers will be compelled to pay advanced prices for their raw material, and will, of course, have to advance their own prices in proportion. Merchants who placed their underwear orders early will receive their goods invoiced at old prices, but it is a question if they should not, when arranging their prices for their January white goods sale, take into consideration the advance that they will have to pay on repeat orders. There never was a better opportunity for the retailer to increase prices. Values in all classes of dry goods are advancing; the women of Canada are aware of this, and expect to pay more for their underwear than they paid last year. If you do not advance prices for your January white goods sale, you must advance later on when your repeat orders are invoiced. Merchants who placed their muslin underwear orders early this year can make more money than they did last year, provided they take advantage of their forethought in having placed their orders when prices were at the bottom notch.

January white goods sales are now a recognized factor in the dry goods business. Why muslin underwear should be sold in January is a question that THE REVIEW man is not prepared to answer, but, nevertheless, it is a fact that no up-to-date dry goods store, either in the United States or Canada, but now has a January white goods sale as well as a June white goods sale, and it is surprising the quantity of muslin underwear that is sold throughout the country. THE DRY GOODS REVIEW, recognizing the growing importance of "ready-to-wear" muslin underwear, will in future give this department an increasing share of its attention, and we hope each month, under the heading of "Ladies' Underwear and Blouses," to write something that will prove both interesting and profitable for our readers.

Since writing the above we learn that the manufacturers of muslin underwear have held a meeting for the purpose of considering what course they should take in connection with the heavy advance in price of their raw materials (cotton fabrics and embroideries). The matter was thoroughly discussed, and it was finally decided that, owing to the impossibility of manufacturers securing any further supply of cottons and embroideries at old prices, there was no way out of the difficulty but to advance prices of the made-up garments in proportion. The advance on muslin underwear prices will vary from 10 to 20 per cent., according to the class of goods and quantity of embroidery used on them. The new prices will take effect in January.

GOOD PLACE FOR SURPLUS STOCK.

A good place for merchants to send their surplus stocks is, provided in the firm of Benning & Barsalou, Montreal. This auction house is one of the oldest in Canada, having been established in 1830. Their sales, which are held semi-weekly, at the company's rooms on St. Peter street, are not restricted altogether to dry goods, but include boots and shoes and general merchandise. The company offer to make liberal advances on all kinds of merchandise consigned to their care. They invite correspondence, and would mention as references the Bank of Montreal and La Banque d'Hochelaga.

WINDOW AND STORE DECORATING.

Conducted for THE REVIEW by H. Hollingsworth, an Expert Window Artist.

TO DRY GOODS REVIEW READERS.—We shall be glad to receive photographs and descriptions of window displays that have attracted special attention in their own localities, and which would be considered helpful to trimmers generally. Any inquiries or questions on the subject of window dressing will be answered cheerfully, and any information given that may be desired by readers. Queries should be addressed: "Window Dressing Department."

JANUARY TRIMS.

NOW that the holiday displays are over, the trims for January are to be thought out. To my mind, it is the time when the window-trimmer can be of more service to his employers than at any other time of the year. Customers have to be almost coaxed to buy. They are not in a buying humor. The displays, then, should not be as elaborate as in the different stocks that can be sold at 10c., and so on, up to 50c. windows.

Some reader may possibly think that in displays of this kind the profits on these little articles at 5 and 10c. would not amount to more than a trifle, and would not repay the time spent in their arrangement. But, if he or she experiment on it and carefully watch results, as I have done, the suggestion will be found to work satisfactorily. Remember, it is not so much the little 5 or 10c. article we are trying to dispose of, but a means by which we can get a customer into the store to purchase, perhaps, a spool of silk and sell her a silk dress, or induce a gentleman to step in to purchase a 5c. pair of shoe-laces and sell him a pair of shoes, or a shirt, collar, tie, etc.

As an instance, about a month ago, I had one of my beforehand, but should be made "sales windows." By that, I mean displays where every article is placed and ticketed in the most appealing position. A good plan that I adopted last year during the slack months was, viz., "5 and 10c. windows." A search throughout the different departments brought together dozens of little articles, household and otherwise, which made up a display that, while not very elaborate, etc., was nevertheless a "trade-drawer," one large card reading: "Any article in the window, 5c."

Hundreds of useful and ornamental articles can be found largest windows filled with a nice, stocky show of tinware, every article ticketed. A gentleman was attracted to an article ticketed 4c., was induced to enter the store to purchase one of them, and, while waiting for it to be parcelled, asked the price of a range on display in the department. On being told the price, and on the salesman's explanation of the different parts of same, he was impressed that it was a bargain. He did not purchase it then, but, the next day, he came in and paid for it to be delivered to his address. In nine cases out of ten, that man would not have purchased that range, had not a little 4c.

ticket attracted his attention, and completed a sale of $50.04. This is only one instance out of many that came to my special notice. "Little drops of water, little grains of sand, make the mighty ocean," etc.

The cut on page 88 is a good one of men's collars and shirts, and the idea can be carried out in a window one-half the size with one-half the quantity of shirts and collars. A great idea for a stocky-looking display is to use empty boxes in piles, having one full box opened on the top. Save all the shirt, collar and cuff boxes. Keep them new and clean-looking, and use them in the window displays. While only being empty, they give the window a very stocky appearance where be made in just quarter of the time it would take otherwise. I use them in my displays for every line of goods, and can recommend them as being the cheapest and most satisfactory fixture on the market. They can be had at very reasonable prices from The Toronto Brass Manufacturing Co., Richmond Street. They make them up in all sizes and at prices to suit all styles of windows.

The other illustration is one of handkerchiefs, showing the different folds they can be made into, and from them pretty designs can be constructed.

ENGLISH WINDOW DRESSING.

A foreign critic, says Mr. Geo. R. Sims in London Referee, has given it as his opinion that the shop windows of London are dressed without taste and without discretion. We all want to be patriotic just now, and we are not inclined in the least to trouble ourselves about foreign opinion. But, strictly between ourselves, and in a whisper so that nobody can hear, don't you think that the art of window dressing might be more generally studied than it is? Have you ever arrived at an old-fashioned, small, provincial town on a gloomy Winter's evening, and wandering about the deserted streets been suddenly cheered by the local fruiterer's Christmas show of oranges and lemons? The two colors catch the eye at once and instantly gladden the heart. There have been Winter evenings when a prey to melancholia in a gloomy town I should have thrown myself into a pond or unstocky windows are required. While this may appear to some as being a deception to the public, I do not think a customer is being defrauded or is losing anything by it, and it is only one of the "tricks of the trade." I might call special attention to the price-cards in the illustration. Notice how well worded they are—straight to the point and prices prominent.

The shirts are arranged on fixtures supported by four uprights. These are the best fixtures I know of suitable for the arrangement of gents' furnishings, and can be used in displays of almost all lines of merchandise. They can be changed in several different styles, and, with them, creditable displays can der a railway train but for the cheerful orange and yellow of the greengrocer's shop at the corner. A local greengrocer has stumbled by accident on the art of window dressing. Instead of filling his shop window with a jungle of fruits and roots that jar and clash, he lets the oranges and lemons have the space to themselves, and the result is absolutely perfect. In London, where one would expect the best results to be obtained by the window-dressers, there is generally a desire to show too much. There are shops in Regent street, Piccadilly, and New Bond street which are dreams of delight, and in front of which a poet might bathe his soul in beauty. There are also in the same thoroughfares shops in

PHILLIPS' ILLUMINATED SILENT SALESMAN (A SUNBURST)

Some years ago, we placed on the market the Celebrated Silent Salesman Show Cases and they met with phenomenal success. A few months ago, we invented and patented a device for illuminating these superb cases, which adds fully 100 per cent. to their selling power, while the additional cost is nominal. The electric lamps are concealed in the top moulding, and the light, by means of a reflector, is thrown on the contents of the case, which makes selling easy.

When ordering the illuminated case, please state the voltage of your lighting plant to avoid delay in filling your order.

Further particulars will be furnished on application.

which the contents are displayed with about the same regard to artistic effect that you would find at a marine store dealer's in Clare-market. Next to the delight of going "shopping" is the delight of going to look at the shops. Hundreds of us who have neither the inclination nor the means to possess ourselves of the season's novelties derive a vast amount of innocent pleasure from gazing at them. But the pleasure is naturally increased when the novelties are artistically displayed—when the attention is concentrated on a few choice specimens instead of being diffused over a hundred mixed samples. With the means at the command of the great London retailers the streets of the west should be avenues in fairyland, bordered by palaces of perpetual delight.

MIRRORS IN SHOW WINDOWS.

Effective results in show windows are often produced by the aid of mirrors, doubling the exhibit, or even seeming indefinitely to extend it. A curious illustration of the effectiveness of mirrors in such use was shown in a window of a big toy store. Ranged in companies and battalions, following one another upon a foot-wide strip of glass raised above the floor of the window and extending along close to the window in front, and along the entire width of it, was a long column of toy soldiers, marching, or seeming to march, the figures being all in marching attitudes. At the side of the window was a mirror standing vertically, but running back from the front at an angle slightly acute. Seen from the sidewalk, and at a little distance from the window, the reflection in the mirror of the marching column of soldiers had the appearance of a continuation of it, the column turning at the mirror, at a slight angle from the course of its march along the glass, the effect being produced by the angle at which the mirror was set.—Exchange.

NOTHING BUT TRIMMED SKIRTS.

In wash skirts for the coming season every line shown by the largest makers are trimmed with braid, cording or insertions. And they certainly have very pretty effects. The enormous varieties shown, and at such popular prices, are sure to give very large sale when the blouse waist season opens. Boulter & Stewart, 13 Front street west, are showing over 100 different designs at prices to retail at $1 to $5. Remember their address for the coming openings.

The straw "Boater" is essentially an English hat, and the best shapes, as well as values, can be obtained from the English manufacturers. Tress & Co., London, Eng., are showing, through their Canadian agents (Wreyford & Co., Romain Building), the new styles for men, and also for ladies, in the same grade as they supplied so largely to the New York trade last season.

Fur Trade.

The Canadian Trade.

The month of January in the Canadian hat trade is principally remarkable for the arrivals of shipments of early orders for imported hats. The wholesale houses this year report that orders for Spring deliveries were larger than for some years, and as shipments come in they will doubtless be glad to send them out early to customers in order to make room. The importers declare that everything points to higher prices since not only have hat materials gone up, but freights are higher, and even the prices of wooden cases have advanced. Retail buyers who do not pay any higher price will probably not get as good a quality, and those who have, for some reason or another, been late in placing orders may expect to pay the higher rates.

The Canadian hats this year look very well, the only question being as to their identity. It is sometimes hard to tell a Canadian hat, because the brand is not national and is apt to convey the impression that the goods were made in the United States. The Canadian manufacturers continue to produce very excellent makes, but they are not anxious to let the world know of them. It is sometimes said that in variety of shape and shade the Canadian market is not so convenient to buy in, but those who know say that for the same class of hat we can produce values quite equal to those of United States manufacturers.

An English Order to Canada.

Some time ago a leading official of an English railway was in Canada, and his attention was caught by the caps worn on the heads of some railway employes. Inquiring where they were obtained, the answer was that the caps had been made in Canada. Finding that the manufacturers were Messrs. A. A. Allan & Co., Toronto, he wrote, on returning to England, for samples to be sent across the ocean. The request was complied with, and a few days ago the firm in question had the satisfaction of receiving back the samples with a substantial order for caps of the same model. One for Canada! It seems that we can not only manufacture excellent stiff hats, but can also design and make up society and other caps second to none.

English Crowns May Be Higher.

A radical change in the general condition of the straw hat trade, says the Luton correspondent of The English Hatters' Gazette, that has been effected in the last eight or ten years is the decadence of what is known as "the counter trade." In this branch of the business, a large number of people with limited means would make a number of hats, which were usually offered for sale at the various wholesale houses for the best prices they would fetch. The amounts received for such goods fluctuated considerably, according to the state of the market. Too frequently they were sold at a positive loss, when trade was dull, by those whose means were very limited.

Now, there is a remarkable diminution in this class of trade, and business is largely transacted by orders given on samples.

I think it is quite correct to say that the state of trade in Luton to-day is much more healthy than when the conditions above mentioned existed so generally.

As to the shapes of hats that will be in favor in the near future, there is a marked tendency in the direction of higher crowns. The pendulum of fashion is evidently swinging from the low crowns that ruled last season to those that are higher, more tapering, and with plenty of fit. The so-called "tam" crowns are rapidly passing out of date, much to the gratification of manufacturers and merchants, as the cost of transit will thereby be materially lessened.

The demand for men's "Monte Carlo" straw hats continued until quite late in the season—thanks to the sub-tropical weather with which we were visited. This is another branch of trade which has rapidly increased during the last three seasons, and will continue to do so, given the requisite climatic conditions. These hats require great care in the manufacture, and must be made exactly to the size of the head that may be needed by the various customers.

The Fur Market.

Canadian buyers of furs who go abroad to purchase will attend the London sales this month. Some of them went rather earlier than usual this season, as the exceptional condition of the market for skins makes the outlook interesting. Advices from London, received the latter part of December, stated that at the fur sales the North Pacific sealskins brought the highest price for many years, going at an average of 66 shillings, which is 40 per cent. higher than the price realized last December.

Wide Brims.

There has been some talk in the trade, and a number of retailers seem to be impressed with the belief, that wide-brim yachts will be rather popular during the coming season, but, as the result of inquiry in various sources, we are constrained to state that the time is not yet ripe for the sale of wide-brim yachts to any great extent. It is undoubtedly true that every Summer some of our young men who like to "cut a dash" wear wide-brim yachts at the seashore and the race tracks; but the style does not appeal to well-dressed men, and we, therefore, advise readers of The Review to buy such goods sparingly, if at all. —New York Hat Review.

Fashions set By the Prince.

The influence of the Prince of Wales on hat styles in Great Britain is often alluded to. Hats, says an English contemporary, are the only part of a man's costume in which fashion is tyrannical—tyrannical, and consequently capricious. The Inverness cape was introduced in the year 1861, and is worn now of just the same cut as obtained 38 years ago. But we have had 50 different kinds of hats in the interval, and it is impossible to predict how long a given fashion shall remain. The Prince certainly sets it. He has reduced the tyranny of the tall hat to a very minimum. It is possible even to go to church now in the country in a soft hat. The Prince has a kind of passion for buying hats, and giving them to his friends. He bought nine at Marienbad last Summer, and they are of a new pattern, and some of them of a new color. The color is green, and the material soft felt, and stuck into the back—as if the wearer, in his hurry, had put his hat on wrong—is a little tuft of capercaillie feathers. Most of them are capercaillie, but there is latitude for choice. Perhaps the motive is that the capercaillie should not be blotted out of existence, like the egret. And the hat must always have reference to sport. The head of a woodcock as a sort of centre for its own fine feathers, two teeth of a wolf with a tuft of wolf's bristle—teeth and bristles of a dog will do if the rarer articles are not obtainable—the curled tail feathers of a black cock; these are the chief varieties of ornament up to this.

The Fate Of Old Hats.

Nothing grows faster and with less notice than a collection of old shoes and hats in the family closet. The only way to treat the cast-offs is to give them away as fast as they are discarded. Many customers of the fashionable hatters have their old derbies sent home for rainy-day wear, but seldom use them. Others, despising the collection, leave them with the dealer. "What becomes of all the old hats?" I asked a leading hatter recently. I knew that most of the best shapes are saved and made over for a season two or three years ahead. The crowns and brims can be soaked, pressed and stiffened into fashionable shapes. But no hatter will admit this. "Our first customer in the morning and our last in the evening is the hat beggar," said the manager of Blank's. "We give away from 20 to 40 a day in a busy season, and I have here under the counter right now about a score that will be gone before to-morrow morning."—New York Press.

What are Panama Hats?

At one time Panama hats frequently cost $500, but these are no longer made, and cannot, therefore, be bought. Perhaps the most expensive hat of this sort which has been made for many years was one sold last year to a banker, who paid $110 for it. Hats as fine as these are commonly worn by the rich men in South America, but ordinary mortals have to be content with specimens which cost at the most only $10 or $15. Still, these are very fine, and are practically everlasting, for they can be cleaned again and again.

It is curious that they are called Panama hats, for they do not come from there. They derive their name from the fact that that city was at one time the greatest market for them. The finest are obtained at Payta, Peru and Guayaquil. They are made of the fibre of the pineapple plant, are as soft as silk, and so pliable that they can easily be folded up and carried in the pocket. Excellent specimens are also made by the natives of Cuba.—New York Hat Review.

United States Trade with Canada.

Among the American concerns that have come into Canada with nice goods which have helped to turn some of the trade southward is the Crofut and Knapp Co., of South Norwalk, Con., United States. This firm manufacture fine ur, stiff and soft, hats for men's wear. In addition they have a line of coach, police helmet, golf and ladies' hats. By taking great pains to turn out new, smart and bright styles that are good sellers, these manufacturers appeal to the alert, wide awake merchant everywhere. They simply ask the trade to investigate, and Canadian dealers who write the firm will, therefore, be afforded every information regarding either the regular hat trade or the special lines that are made in their factories.

Canadian Caps For Australia.

The Standard Cap Co., Toronto, whose advertisement appears on page 65 of this issue, have had such success in reaching for Canadian trade that they are now looking to the Australian market for further expansion. They state their willingness to send samples to any first-class house in the sister colony, and would like to open up correspondence with such houses. This firm make all kinds of caps. They make a specialty of novelties for women's and children's wear, while carrying at all times a full stock of men's caps of all descriptions; also the latest novelty in tweed fedoras, which are rapidly becoming popular in Canada.

A Canadian concern with experience and taste in making headgear for special purposes and climates is W. H. Coddington, Hamilton, Canada, who has gone into yachting novelties, uniform caps, etc., with great success. Mr. Coddington will gladly furnish catalogues, etc., to firms at home or abroad desiring to do business with him.

Trade Notes Here and There.

Reports of the English hat trade are that in December stock-taking was the policy with large concerns. The prospects for 1900 are most encouraging, and at present in fancy makes retailers are experiencing a demand for men's P. and O. caps, these taking the place of golf makes. Exports of English hats during the 10 months ending October, 1899, were 928,860 dozen, value £952,551, as against 911,196 dozen, value £890,174, for the same period in 1898.

A patent for a mourning band has been taken out in the United States. The hat band is provided at its meeting ends with a clamp composed of a single piece of metal bent longitudinally forming two jaws, one wider than the other, the said jaws clamping the respective ends of the band between them, and provided with projections adapted to secure the ends of the band between said jaws, and causing the clamp to lie flat against the band.

JAPANESE MATTINGS.

Japanese mattings are likely to be quite a factor in the Canadian carpet trade this year. These mattings are practically a new thing in this country, for, while ordinary bedroom mattings have been sold here for some time, it is only since the higher grades, for use in parlors, sitting-rooms, dining-rooms; in fact, in any room in a well-furnished house, were introduced by K. Ishikawa & Co., Toronto, that the trade in them extended materially. This firm have leased the large warehouse at 27 Wellington street west, which was occupied last Spring by Gowans, Kent & Co. This entire building, which contains five 30 x 130 ft. floors, will be devoted entirely to Japanese mattings, thus enabling the firm to display 10,000 rolls of these goods. The assortment of patterns and colors will be the largest that has ever been shown in this class of goods in Canada, and is bound to attract much attention from the trade.

SPRING OUTLOOK IN WESTERN CANADA.

PLACING ORDERS LARGE OWING TO RISING MARKETS—A GLIMPSE OF SPRING STYLES IN MILLINERY, DRESS GOODS, ETC.—THE NEW WHITLA WAREHOUSE.

From THE DRY GOODS REVIEW'S Special Correspondent.

WINNIPEG, December 16.

PERHAPS the hardest thing in the world is to get business men to talk news for a Spring number during the rush and bustle of the holiday season. You call and explain. Oh, yes, they say, that is all right, but it is too early to talk Spring number yet. Copy in Toronto before the end of December! Rubbish, that is far too early; well, if you must have it call so and so and we will have things ready. You call, but, alas, things are no more ready than they were a week before. You call once more and are politely shown around, with the inward conviction that your guide wishes you in Halifax or South Africa. Nor can you blame him. He is only trying to do three days' work in one and finds the effort exhausting.

The wholesale houses are simply crammed with beautiful things for Spring and Summer, and the full lines are by no means all here as yet.

Year by year the retail merchant looks more to his local houses to supply his needs at short notice, and nobly the wholesalers are responding to the appeal. The long distance from manufacturers and from the Coast necessitates very large capital, the most patient and observing attention to detail as well as a considerable amount of prophetic instinct, and, as Mr. Fred. Drewry so well pointed out in his retiring address to The Commercial Travelers' Association, these matters are so well arranged that a man in the remotest parts of the Northwest Territories buying his clothing from the travelers of up-to-date houses may wear the same in London or Paris without occasioning remark and without feeling old-fashioned or conspicuous.

Although, as already stated, it is too early for very definite news with regard to the volume of Spring trade, the orders already pouring in indicate the largest trade in the history of the country. The advance orders for Spring are even now far ahead of any previous year at the same date, and the travelers have not been out for a month. Two reasons are assigned for this—one, the increased demand owing to the prosperous condition of the country, and the other, the rapidly advancing prices in almost all lines—which urges the wisdom of placing orders in time to avoid still further advances. Most of the wholesale houses here bought large stocks sufficiently early to more nearly approximate last year's prices, but have warned all buyers that when these stocks are exhausted it will be impossible to replace them except at greatly increased prices. Never before have travelers received so many advices from their houses as to not selling lines at prices first quoted, because they cannot be repeated.

MILLINERY.

In regard to things to be worn, it is, perhaps, well to start with millinery, as samples in these lines were first to hand.

SHAPES.—In D. McCall & Co.'s rooms there is nothing startlingly new in shapes, though the general outlines are more graceful and less extreme than those of the last Spring season. Trimmed goods are, of course, not shown yet, but in ready-to-wears and untrimmed goods these lines are full and many of them very elegant. In ready-to-wears, tam crowns are much in evidence, and some of these shapes are very pretty. They are shown principally in fancy mixed braids with velvet bands. Some show tam crowns of white rice straw with brims green, black, brown, lavender and white. Rough-riders will be popular in fancy straws with the inevitable quill. The Dearborn is a dressy looking hat with large bow at side of front of colored ribbon edged with straw. The Vendome is a popular shape for young married women. The brim is rustic straw, with split straw crown and slight droop back and front. The Newburn is a modification of the tire brim done in rough straw. There is little change in the style and shape of sailors, but split straw seems the first favorite as to material. In shapes for trimming, turban effects are more in evidence than for several seasons.

TRIMMINGS.—Flowers are very strong, particularly large silk pansies and foliage, though all varieties are shown. The straw mounts so popular about 30 years ago, have been revived, and are shown in combinations of tuscan gauze, jewelled and sequined net. Botting silk mounts with rustic edges are also among the novelties. Ribbons—Taffetas, brilliant finish, with drawn work edges and pastel shades, are the latest. In piece trimmings, the most effective are the metallic gauzes, in silver, gold and color shades. Chiffons and brillanturs are all good.

The D. McCall Co. will have a fine opening early in the season. Whether any other house intend having a Spring opening, your correspondent could not learn.

CLOTHING.

W. J. Peck & Co. report Spring advance orders coming in rapidly.

Myron McBride & Co. have already found it necessary to repeat many of their lines in order to keep up with demand. In men's underwear, the line coming to the front just now is the mercerized goods of all kinds. They are quite as handsome and durable as silk, and more sanitary and less likely to be ruined in the washing. These goods are shown not only in woven lines, but in the outer satin shirts also. Linen shirts with silk fronts are popular this season also, and their range of regatta shirts is enormous. Some idea of their trade in this line may be gathered from the fact that in one line alone 125 dozen arrived here, and they had just mailed a repeat order.

Bicycle goods are strong for the coming season. Coats and vests of blue serge, with plaid or striped knickers, will be the popular style. Linen goods, particularly hats, are well to the front.

HOSIERY.—This house makes a specialty of ladies' hose, and the lines shown are very fine. Black and tan predominate, but they show a specially dainty line of lisle hose, in plaids and stripes. They find it a matter of regret that they have to buy knit goods from American markets, as Canadians have failed to supply the demand. Men's bicycle hose show legs in solid black, with colored tops. A heavy trade is done in overalls, which, owing to the scarcity of denim, have advanced 68 to 70c. per dozen. As far as possible, the house handle the union label goods, which give great satisfaction. Myron Stamped "INDIGO DYED" every three yards.

Everything we make is of wool—we use no cotton whatever.

We take this occasion to state that, although the prices of the better class of wools have advanced during the year fully 70 per cent., we are determined not to lower our standard by the introduction of cotton or adulterated materials in order to keep goods at old prices.

Prices as low as consistent with the increased cost of raw material and of manufacturing generally.

We are constantly designing new patterns and fabrics, and the ranges for the coming Spring will be found very attractive. Ask your wholesale supply house to see them.

We make to order and sell to the wholesale trade only.

DRESS GOODS.

Every year it seems as if the limit of beauty in color, pattern and texture had been reached, and yet there is always something still more beautiful produced the following season. This is especially true of the black crepon effects which still continue to be so popular. The latest patterns this season show more scattered design in general effect, but with more closely woven threads, so there is not so much danger of pulling. The spaces between the pattern are silky and almost as thin as grenadine. Two of the most popular patterns are basket-weave and true-lover's knot. Black and white in all lines of woollens are very popular, while in coverts, which are finer and lighter in texture, fawns, sage greens, bluettes and steel greys are the best shades. Tweeds in broken plaids are especially good for Spring, while French poplins in pastel shades will be very much worn later in the Summer.

In Summer and blouse silks the colors are all more or less pastel shades. One line of Oriental silks shows a silver crescent and star on backgrounds of the palest mauve, tuscan, green, pink, butter shade, and black.

Mercerized cottons, in all designs and shades, lead, while gingham, both Scotch and Canadian, the latter as fine as the former, are more silky than ever. Muslins are dreams of beauty, but perhaps the best shown is white organdy with satin stripe, up which run tiny blue morning glories. It made one catch one's breath and think of Summer mornings.

White piques, bedford cords, lappet and madras muslins, knotted piques are just a few of the designs in white goods that will be popular. These lines were all shown your correspondent by Mr. Wilson, of Hobart, Sons & Co.

THE NEW WHITLA WAREHOUSE.

Your correspondent had the pleasure, the other evening, of being shown through the magnificent new warehouse just erected by R. J. Whitla & Co., and it is certainly, both for capacity and convenience in doing business, one of the finest to be found in Canada. It is situated on the corner of McDermott avenue and Arthur street, and commands a full view of Main street. Its dimensions are 60 x 122 feet, and it contains six flats. The materials used are Indiana stone and brick, and this, with the handsome plate-glass windows, gives it a fine appearance. Metallic ceiling has been used throughout, and, this being painted in light colors, gives the whole warehouse a bright and cheerful appearance. The shipping facilities have had very special attention, and there is a covered platform running the entire width of the building, which is large enough to receive several carloads of goods at once. The entrance is on McDermott avenue, and is very massive, with finely designed solid oak doors. On the first flat, to which it leads, is situated the offices, and on this floor are to be found fancy colored cotton goods and domestic woollens of all kinds. The second floor is used for dress goods, silks, housefurnishings, carpets, linoleums, etc., and the third floor has a beautiful display of smallwares of every description, gloves, hosiery, laces, and also men's furnishing goods. The entry and packing-room is situated on the fourth floor, and is a fine room, 62 feet square, with splendid light and ventilation, and every facility for handling goods quickly. The basement, which is one of the best flats in the building, is filled with heavy staple goods, and looks as if large preparations had been made for the coming season.

The fifth flat has been left unfinished, as far as ceiling is concerned, for the present, and makes a good reserve room, to be used as soon as the increasing trade demands it. The large amount of space enables R. J. Whitla & Co. to create new departments and carry a larger line of goods, so that every requirement of the mercantile community can be supplied. The building is heated throughout by the single pipe steam system, and has been found already to be very warm and comfortable. It is protected against fire by being provided with stand-pipe, and sufficient hose on each floor to throw a stream of water at a moment's notice into any part of the building. No greater evidence of the prosperity and advancement of this firm can be given than in the erection of so fine a building for their rapidly increasing trade, and their enterprise in providing such accommodation for their business will, doubtless, lead to further success. Owing to their moving confusion, dress goods could not be seen, but Mr. Campbell very kindly took me over the smallwares and fancy goods, and their name is legion. This is a season of neck decoration for womankind. It would be difficult to imagine anything in neckwear that would be considered outre or extreme. Ties, fringed, with honiton ends, chiffon ends, chiffon ties, gauze ties, silk scarves a foot wide and 1 1/2 yards long; lace scarves, which may be worn for sashes around the waist, across on shoulders like a fichu; bow ties, with long ends of white or colored satin; four-in-hands, etc. The display made one's head spin. Then came the long list of fichu effects and yolk collars in wrought lace, honiton, satin ribbon, and what not. The effects are beautiful in the extreme. It would be difficult to imagine a more stylish costume for a pretty woman than a gown of French grey, with no decorations but a Priscilla fichu in butter lace and dead white satin ribbon.

LACE.

All-over laces for yolks and insertions are shown in great variety, while the newest style is a wavy guipure effect with colored spaces between. The laces are all pretty much along the Renaissance style, and are very greatly in demand.

The house carry an immense line in hosiery, and the French fancy for white hose for women has been taken note of here, but is not likely to be popular.

READY-MADE SKIRTS AND BLOUSES.—The blouse is as popular as ever, and the increased demand for ready-made skirts seems to warrant its continuance. In mercerized cottons and crashes these skirts are very good sellers.

I will close by wishing all the readers of THE DRY GOODS REVIEW a Happy New Year.

DRYGOODSMEN ELECT OFFICERS.

The annual meeting of the Wholesale Dry Goods Association, of Montreal, was held December 13. The president submitted a report of the business transacted during 1899, and the following officers were elected for 1900: President, Mr. James Rodger; vice-president, Mr. James Slessor; treasurer, Mr. George Sumner; directors, Messrs. Thomas Brophy, A. Racine, R. N. Smyth and Ben. Tooke.

Mr. R. W. McDougall, who has represented the association on the Council of the Board of Trade for the past year, was chosen for re-election. On the motion of Mr. E. B. Greenshields, seconded by Mr. James Slessor, a cordial vote of thanks was passed to the retiring president, who had occupied the chair for two years, and had taken great interest in the association.

Fancy striped and spotted chiffons and crepe de chenes, in evening shades, are much in demand, and are used both as trimmings, insertions, and dress fronts, with very beautiful effect.

Men's Furnishings

Practical wisdom and keen perception are necessary elements to success in any line of trade, and nowhere, perhaps, more especially than in the department of men's furnishings. In our larger cities particularly, there are several distinct classes of buyers, and each must be treated, not according to any definite rule of politeness and tact that can be laid down in black and white, but as the exigencies of the case demand. THE DRY GOODS REVIEW has always avoided, as far as possible, curtain lectures on the behaviour of clerks, and for two good reasons. Firstly, THE REVIEW'S experience, with few exceptions, has been of a pleasant nature in this regard; and, secondly, when ordinary good breeding is not inculcated before entering service in the store, the clerk is not apt to benefit much by the perusal of short homilies upon good conduct.

There are, however, certain points which a master in the selling art never allows to escape him, and one of these is to study as much as possible the character of the customer, or probable customer, with whom he has to deal. Mistakes are always liable to occur; but it is surprising how accurately an old hand can gauge the prospects, almost before the article has been asked for.

The natural division which at first sight suggests itself is that between the well-to-do and those of more slender means; but this is no criterion by which to determine the attitude of the prospective buyer. It requires no "second sight" to distinguish the well-dressed man from the poorly clad, and, as a matter of fact, these two classes don't usually frequent the same dealer's store. As to the latter class, the question of what they really want is an easy one to decide. They are seeking the very cheapest goods you can offer, and can only afford to purchase such. The difficulty is more with the first mentioned people. They may be subdivided roughly into three kinds: (1) There are those who wish to make the best possible show on the least possible outlay. (2) There are those who wish to dress well, but modestly and moderately; and (3) there are those who invariably demand the most costly article, apparently having no other guide to their judgment than the price.

Now, when a man enters the store and asks to be shown the best shirt you have, what are you going to do? Are you going to trot out the most expensive goods you have in stock, and state the price, assured of making a straight sale? In nine cases out of ten, no! Just consider. He may belong to any one of the above named classes; and the chances are that he does not belong to the last. It is by far the smallest class of the three. Here is where discretion and good judgment come into play. Why, then, does he ask for what he does not want? Well, it is a curious way some people have, and yet not so curious after all. His meaning in most cases simply is that he wants you to furnish him with a good reliable article. He is imbued with the idea, in some way or other, that unless he makes such a demand, you will not be properly seized of the necessity of producing this; and very often nothing is further from his thoughts than paying a fancy price.

Your object is to make sales, and to make them satisfactory to the buyer as well as to the house. Consequently, your aim must be to ascertain exactly what the inquirer really will be satisfied with, both as regards price and style. Some clerks have a way, when asked if they have not a higher line of goods than the one shown, of saying: "Yes, but it is very expensive." That would strike terror into the heart of the most daring spendthrift. If a good article has been inspected, there is little need for such warning. The customer who maintains a good moderate style, and is willing to pay a good price for the same, is the most satisfactory in the long run. He is the steadiest, and the least subject to whims and fads of one kind and another. He does not try to beat you down, neither is he continually asking for something you haven't got.

It must be added that among all ranks and conditions of men are to be found those who are entirely unreasonable; and with some of these it is truly hard to deal. A party will buy a shirt with cuffs and bosom for $1, and expect that shirt to give him as good wear as the shirt without either cuffs or bosom, when he pays perhaps 50c. for cuffs alone. Such foibles as these are common, and a little intelligent explanation on the part of the clerk would obviate difficulties. Most people would be convinced on a point like this if the matter were explained. Here is the advantage in a salesman being something more than a mere machine to measure out the amount of goods bought. An intimate knowledge of the subject is of particular importance.

A merchant the other day spoke of an instance of unreasonable demands. One of those people who are always looking for something they know they can't get asked for genuine French cambric nightshirts. It is safe to say there are not two dealers that carry such a line ; but, as luck would have it, this particular dealer is one who thinks during his leisure moments, and one day while he had his thinking cap on it occurred to him to have a few nightshirts made of this stuff. He was ready, and produced the article required. "Oh, all right, thank you. I don't want any just now, I merely wished to ascertain whether you kept them." This is an example of the putting on of airs, which is, happily, limited to a very few. Most people have not time for that sort of thing.

There is an evil which I have seen under the sun. Some clerks, when anxious to recommend the very nicest thing in ties, or the like, are accustomed to add, "In fact, I wear it myself." This, no doubt, seems to them the best guarantee of good taste and good quality ; but it is a dangerous statement, and a touchy customer may easily take umbrage.

Overdoing New Ideas.

The Americans are great people, great business people, that is to say ; and they are never satisfied unless they have something newer and better than anyone else. The quality of newness, however, seems to attract them rather than that of reliability. They are apt to run to fads. Anything at all to engage public interest and attention. There are always some novelties being brought to notice, which will be of untold and extraordinary benefit in every way. American dry goods and men's furnishing papers have been speaking of some novelties in the shirt line that were likely to have tremendous sales. Among these are the "Ventilated" shirt and the "Suspender" shirt. Both these ideas have been experimented upon before, and found wanting in practicability. The "Ventilated" shirt was tried some years ago, and did not take. The idea is that the circulation of air will prevent the catching of cold. The shirt is made of lightweight material, with plaited bosom, and underneath each plait is a netting which permits the air to circulate. As to the "Suspender" shirt, certainly there would be a convenience in the doing away of suspenders ; but a great many dealers are sceptical as to its utility. Speaking of these goods, a leading trade journal across the line, says: "The features are so new and so practical that there is no doubt but that all the buyers of men's furnishing goods who are anxious to introduce a quick-selling novelty will place orders on these shirts for the coming Spring." Whether the proposed articles can lay claim to either of these qualifications is a question. For all the talk of our taking our fashions from New York, it is a noteworthy fact that a large part of our city trade is done with American customers, which goes to show that we are not so very far behind as some would like to make out, and there is no reason why we should fail to be as far ahead as anyone.

Hints in Easter Neckwear.

General opinion seems to indicate that the fashion of loud stripes in neckwear, which has obtained to such a large extent recently, is on the wane, and that in its place will succeed that of set figures. Surah, repe, grenadine, and basket-weave grounds are gaining steadily in popularity, black, purple, national blue, and jack red being the principal ground colors. Tooke Bros., Limited, Montreal, are showing a large range of these new goods for Easter trade. While flowing ends are still in favor, there is considerable demand as the cold weather comes on for puff ties. They serve the purpose, to some extent, of a cold weather scarf. Tooke Bros.' "Methuen" has the effect of the "Imperial," and is something new for sorting. Lately, for Summer goods, cotton has been the material in preference to others. There is now a feeling that cotton goods in this department are dead. Those who have returned from New York state that such is the case in that city. Cotton goods are being replaced in the United States and Canada by silk flowing end ties, or handkerchief scarves.

Styles in neckties change very rapidly, and some dealers have felt in the past that, in order to be strictly up-to date, it was necessary to import from the New York market. This was very true, but it is now pretty much a thing of the past, and Canada is able to hold her own. It is said that those who imported during the past season gained practically nothing, and many merchants claim that they can keep equally as close with the times by making their selection from wideawake Canadian manufacturers, and get better value for their money. Tooke Bros., Limited, are giving this branch of their business special attention, and there is always to be found in their extensive range the latest styles. They claim that no dealer will be behindhand, who selects his shapes from the handiwork of their designer.

The "Tandem," or double end tie, introduced by Young & Rochester, London, Eng., is of the flowing end handkerchief style, but, coming in neater designs of stripes in various shades and widths, the "Tandem" can be tied with plain knot and stripe ends or stripe knot with plain ends. It has been a great success in England, and is selling well here. Best shades are black with white stripe and black with red stripe.

Trade Items in Men's Wear.

Toronto wholesalers express satisfaction with the outlook for Spring. Buyers are placing their orders early on account of the advancing market, and the better feeling is responsible for the turning of the demand towards goods of higher quality. The Wyld, Grasett & Darling Co., Limited, state that in underwear for Spring fancy striped goods are taking hold of the market well. In half-hose, black cotton hose with natural wool feet are gaining favor because of their hygienic qualities, though fancy stripes, checks, and spots are also in much favor. In shirts, moderate colors in stripes and checks are the prevailing styles. Negliges are being made this season with cuffs attached or detached, the latter being called for considerably of late. The collar to be worn with this shirt is the high stand-up, turn-down, lock-front, with round corners. This house is showing some very fine sweaters in heather mixtures, fancy stripes and checks, both for men and boys. They are also showing a big line of umbrellas for Spring in Congo, boxwood, and horn handles. Some of the lines shown have fine sterling mounts.

Blame!

I am going to give a personal experience as a basis for some remarks. I went into a really first-class furnishing store, and ordered a pair of trousers which I wanted for the evening. Before choosing I asked if they could be delivered before 7 o'clock, and was assured they could. After choosing and arranging for them being cut to suit me, I again inquired if they would be delivered in time, sure, and was promised that there would be no difficulty, that the trousers would be in my house in good time. I went away content, for the house is fully reliable. I had an engagement at 8 o'clock, but when the clock was within 10 minutes of that hour the trousers that I depended on were not there. I hadn't another pair that were entirely suitable for the occasion, but the engagement had to be filled, and I had to use the most suitable ones I could get. Next morning I went to the furnishing house, and asked the clerk where my trousers were. He opened wide his eyes, and exclaimed, "Why!—Where!—Didn't you get them?" A short hunt discovered the trousers by the cutting-room door. Pinned to them was a card: "By 6 o'clock to-day, sure." The explanation was that the clerk had left them in the regular place for the tailor to fix them, and trusted to this card to make their delivery certain.

That there is something wrong in such a system is self-evident. The clerk, I feel sure, meant that his promise should be kept. The tailor, I suppose, never saw the card marked "sure." But the mistake could easily have been avoided. In a business where it is possible, a clerk who sells any article under a promise should personally see that the promise is fulfilled. Justice to his own reputation as well as that of the house demands it. Where it is not possible for him to personally follow up the sale, the house should have some arrangement by which special requests should be looked after. At any rate, a clerk should never make a promise unless he is certain it can be kept.

Ingenuity in Suspenders.

I believe that more ingenuity and time have been spent on the construction of suspenders than on any other article of a man's outfit. New ideas have been worked out by cunning inventors, and the modern suspender is a combination of skill, craft and untiring industry. Take the case of the Manhattan "quick cast-off" buckle, the working of which is pretty well indicated by the accompanying illustrations. This device is a good example of the ingenuity to which I have referred in suspender-making. The inventor wanted to combine simplicity with strength and neat appearance, so he fashioned an article which would operate with a touch of the finger, be easily recoupled, while the harder the pull the closer the catch. The device is now being shown in Canada by the Dominion Suspenders Co., on the suspenders with the trade mark "D," and every pair is guaranteed. This company have the sole right to use the patent in this country.

The Dominion Suspenders Co.

The Outlook for Spring.

Messrs. Cookson, Louson & Co., Montreal, report that they have had an exceptionally good year in all their lines, but more particularly in neckwear. The fact that they have created, to a large extent, their own designs, and that these have proved taking ones, has led to a tremendous run. They claim that for Spring the same stripe effects that they have been showing will again rule, and the trade will be pleased to learn that they have reordered these stripe designs in various combinations for Spring trade. These new goods will be shown shortly after the new year.

The shapes most in demand are flowing ends, puffs, graduates and handkerchief scarves. There is no doubt, however, that in the Spring months the bow and string ties will come more into prominence, as these shapes show to advantage the regatta shirts which are always worn very generally. The next season will be a great one for ladies' neckwear, it is expected, in the different combinations and styles. Messrs. Cookson & Louson are showing novelties in this department for Spring.

Mr. Hutchins, who travels for Messrs. Cookson & Louson through Manitoba, the Northwest and British Columbia, was in Montreal for a few days about Christmas, before starting out again on his rounds. He expressed himself as well satisfied with the business done. By far the largest and best sales are those in British Columbia. It is well known that the people of that Province are well off and will have only the best goods. Even the miners, who wear rough enough clothes while at work are most particular when "on parade." Those who have returned from the Klondyke tell us that there on a Sunday the miners are to be seen arrayed in most stylish and approved costumes. The price of an article never bothers them. In fact, they won't buy cheap.

The Source of Style.

Apropos of the men's furnishing trade in the Northwest, it may be noted that Chicago has hitherto borne, and does still bear, somewhat the same relation to Winnipeg as New York does to the eastern cities. A great many Chicago travelers come every season to Winnipeg, and, of course, there is closer connection between the Prairie City and Chicago than between east and west. Notwithstanding that such is the case, circumstances show that Canadian houses are more than able to compete with their American neighbors. The large share of business falls to houses on this side. This may be partly accounted for by the fact that Chicago fashions are apt to be rather more daring than Canadians, as a rule, care to adopt; more so than New York fashions. Besides, as is pointed out elsewhere, it is quite possible that our own firms can ascertain and suit the taste of Canadians with their own ideas and designs fully as well, if not better, than by following strictly in the wake of American and English styles. Both of these sometimes need a little adaptation, and that is where there is opportunity for Canadian enterprise.

What Have Been Selling. Very little of novelty during the past month was to be seen in merchants' displays. That is to say, really new things. Of course, the Christmastide brought an extremely gay appearance to windows and stores, and the usual methods for attracting public attention have been followed. A noticeable feature has been the wide use made of price tickets, and the display of goods specially suited for Christmas presents. There is, perhaps, no article in the stock of a haberdasher that sells so well during the holidays as the umbrella, and merchants report tremendous demand for both ladies' and gentlemen's goods in this line. Everything in the windows has had a tendency to brightness. The neckwear exhibited has been particularly showy. Fancy vests, smoking jackets, all manner of toilet utensils, gloves, walking sticks, and (needless to say) neckwear have been prominent. Owing to the mild weather the sale of scarves has not been what it might have been had the temperature been lower. Indeed, the holiday trade has suffered considerably. For, although there have been a good many fine days, rain and cloudy dull weather has intermitted so constantly that a bad effect has been produced. Apart from the difficulty of coming in from suburban or country districts when roads are not in good condition, there seems to be a great deal simply in the "feel" of sharp, frosty air which urges the public to go shopping and spend money. The continued mild weather has also had an effect on under flannels, etc. When the cold weather starts in early there is always a heavy demand for these goods; but, when the season becomes far advanced before there is actual need for a change to heavier clothing, many prefer to patch up their last year's garments and make them last the remainder of the Winter. Wool men report a noticeable tendency in this direction. Some displays of underwear have been somewhat conspicuous by their absence. Dealers have gone in extensively for decorating their windows with Christmas specialties in the way of toys. Whether this is advisable or not is open to question. There is no doubt that the window attracts attention, but men's furnishing-ware is quite as popular about Christmas time as any other line, and it seems a needless step to take up entirely divergent lines. No display can be more taking than the haberdasher's, and the range gives scope for infinite resources and ingenuity in the effecting of novelty, variety and attractiveness. Among some things noticed were:

Mocha silk-lined gloves, $2.
Oxford mufflers for ladies' wear.
Silk suspenders, leather ends, $1.25.
Real Guyot's braces, 50c.
Bath towels, 25c. to $1.
Handkerchiefs—Men's hemstitched lawn, men's Irish linen, men's initial silk.
Seamless lined kid gloves, $1.40; also lined doeskin, $1.10.
Dent's fine Scotch knit gloves, 75c.; also fur-lined mitts, $1.25.

Styles and colors for the coming two months in men's neckties are no longer in doubt. The shape is the long bias-pointed end, flowing end cut on the bias. The color beyond all doubt is purple in its different shades and different combinations with black and white.

The patterns of silk are bold stripes and checks. For the popular demand, all other shades, patterns, and shapes are, for the moment, swept aside, and everything is focussed in the one direction, as above mentioned. While one may speak with almost absolute certainty regarding styles and colors up to April 1, from that on it is a blank, and all prophecy is purely guesswork.

It is generally thought that the kerchief ties and lightweight bordered goods will sell when the hot weather comes again. No doubt, this is right, but the styles, colors, etc., will undoubtedly be very different to what sold last season, and the retail furnisher would be well advised who waited to find out what was wanted before he bought, as buying on guesswork, in a fancy business like neckties, often ends disastrously for the retailer who has been overpersuaded.

Notes. The initial handkerchiefs have had a large sale. They are, of course, specially adapted for Christmas trade.

Men's furnishing houses are now taking stock, and preparing for reception of Spring goods.

The Berlin Suspender and Button Co., of Berlin, Ont., owing to increase of business, are putting up a new factory which will give them over 10,000 square feet of floor space more than they had before in their old premises.

Thomas Norman, representing the firm of Caulfeild, Henderson & Burns, wholesale men's furnishings, left Toronto the last of December for New York, and sailed by the Oceanic for the European markets, where he will buy for next Fall's trade.

The names of people and places that are becoming famous through the war are being inevitably employed for the uses of advertisement. The other day a London shop window contained "Methuen" hats, and a set of ties were displayed which, presumably, not content with being a la mode, took the comparative title of a la Modder.

A leading manufacturer and wholesaler, the other day, who wished to ascertain whether his advertising in THE DRY GOODS REVIEW was making the proper returns, inquired of his traveler: "Do you find THE DRY GOODS REVIEW of any aid to you in your work?" "Well, rather!" was the answer, "I find it in nearly every store I enter, and our ads. are always noticed." This was with reference particularly to the western country.

The Cloak Manufacturing Co., call the attention of the trade to the fact that they have registered a trade mark for their garments, as will be seen by their announcement elsewhere, and that they propose to advertise this brand, thus causing a demand for it among the customers of the retailers who handle it. Every individual garment is branded, so that there can be no mistake about it. The brand is "The Victoria, Tailor-Made."

There is every indication of a continued and increased demand for insertions in guipure, valenciennes, and guipure and val combinations. Black mercerised all-over lace, with insertions to match, are also a striking feature in lace novelties, and are very attractive trimmings.

WHY BRITISH MANUFACTURERS HOLD ALOOF.

THE question of duties chargeable on commissions is only a phase, and a comparatively unimportant one of the larger question of the tariff. This is a question which most vitally affects our whole trade relations. The DRY GOODS REVIEW has always taken a strictly non-party stand on Governmental issues, its aim being to advance the best interests of the business men irrespective of personal or political considerations. This, indeed, calls for no boast, as where no benefits are expected no clamps are put upon independence of speech. As a matter of fact, we do not seem to have in Canada two policies, especially with regard to commercial affairs. It is just one continuous hail of abuse, from whichever side happens to be in Opposition, rained upon the party in power—for what? forsooth, because they have stolen the others platform. What an exhibition of ignorant ill-temper! Imitation is the sincerest flattery, and it would be well if this were recognized. If nothing worse can be said of a Government than that they are doing what you proposed, better join with them in bringing matters to a successful conclusion than stand by and gibe.

Unfortunately, the one policy which has been pursued by one Parliament after another has been one of fickleness and uncertainty. Now, if there is anything which is detrimental to Canadian commercial interests it is such a policy. True, Canada has not gained quite such a reputation as the United States in this regard; but the British manufacturer is very doubtful, and has only too good reason to be, about the stability of our trading system. Conversation with representatives of large mercantile and manufacturing houses in Britain elicits the fact that it is not high tariff, low tariff or middle-sized tariff that forms the chief consideration, but an assurance of some basis upon which might be built up a satisfactory trade. "For goodness sake," it is said, "fix your tariff and then stick to it." The question asked in relation to the present favorable conditions is: "Do they represent the feeling of the country, or are they simply the result of a party move? In other words, have they a commercial basis or have they a political one? If the former, the opportunities for advancement are incalculable. If the latter, next year may see an entirely different state of things. The Britisher's complaint against the United States has always been that immediately he established some particular line of trade there, somebody is ready with a bill which is calculated to limit and destroy its interests. And the worst of it is that his opinion of Canada has been similarly affected. The proprietor of one of the largest advertising firms in England recently stated in this connection that in money outlay, even Egypt ranked higher than Canada. The cause of this was nothing else but fear lest some radical change in tariff arrangements might at any moment put a new face upon the situation.

Surely it is time that all excuse for such circumstances should cease, and it is to be hoped that we have arrived at a point where confidence may be placed in Canadian trade. We are, of course, a young country, and in a young and ever-changing and developing Dominion such as ours, one must not expect to find the same cut and dried and steadfast modes which obtain in older lands. The rapidly changing conditions do necessitate modifications; but let it be our aim to place ourselves in a position where British trade will not need to be invited, but will seek us of its own accord.

ADVANCING POPULAR-PRICED LINES.

ONE hears much of the higher prices from manufacturers and wholesalers, but what is the retailer doing about them? Is he taking the natural advantage that the state of the market should afford him?

Roughly speaking, wools have advanced from 25 to 75 per cent. since January, 1899, cotton has advanced, wages have gone up, and, in fact, everything has advanced. Now, the consumer knows perfectly well that he must pay more for his goods sooner or later, but he will naturally stave it off as long as he can find a merchant weak enough to stick to old prices.

In the case of such goods as hosiery, gloves, etc., the lines retailing at what are called popular prices can no longer be offered in the same values at the old prices. That is clear. What has been sold for 25c. must be 30 or 35c.; 50c. lines must advance to 60c. or more; 75c. lines must be $1, and $1 lines must fetch $1.20. If you offer old lines at old prices, it is doubtful if the customer will believe you. He or she—especially she—knows all about the advances, and, if she is any judge of materials and values, must also know that it is sheer impossibility to offer as good goods at as low figures.

There are, no doubt, difficulties in the way. Competition, for instance, which makes it difficult for one merchant in a town to raise prices when others don't. Or, there is the fact that 25, 50, 75c., etc., are convenient sums to pay out, while 30, 60 and 90c. are not. It may be necessary for some trade and in some lines to keep goods which can be offered at these figures. But they are necessarily inferior in quality, and the customer may as well know it at once.

JAPANESE SILKS IN DEMAND.

Like almost everything else in the dry goods trade, silks are away up this year. The raw material, which was $3.95 per lb. a year ago, has advanced steadily, until now it is $5.75 per lb. Silks are proportionately high. Yet, there is no diminution in the demand. K. Ishikawa & Co. state that corded Japanese and plain habutai silks are being heavily ordered for Spring.

On account of opinions gathered from travelers, and of the general state of trade, this firm are looking for a very big trade, and have made extensive preparations for March business.

Their goods are already commencing to come into their warehouse, so they will be ready in good time for the season's deliveries.

HAND AND POWER KNITTING MACHINES.

On page 92 of this issue of THE DRY GOODS REVIEW will be found the advertisement of an old and reliable firm, Creelman Bros., of Georgetown, Ont., Canada, who have enjoyed a long and successful career in the manufacture of power and family knitting machinery. Success means more than money making. This firm have been hard at it for over a quarter of a century, with highly satisfactory results. Their 27 years of experience must be very valuable to themselves as well as to their customers, who can rely on receiving first-class goods at reasonable prices. Long experience and first-class facilities make this practicable. The equipment of their factory with the most improved machinery, special tools, etc., enables them to make prices that draw trade from all parts of the world.

Seamless-hosiery power machines and family or general-purpose machines are their specialties. They, however, make many lines of special machines, such as shirt and drawer rib machines, rib-vest, jersey, sweaters, fancy-pattern machines, bicycle-hose machines, plain and fancy mitt and glove machines, etc.

The prices of their family machines range from $10, $15, $20, $25, $30 and upwards, according to style of machines. A good family machine will cost from $20 to $30. At this very reasonable price, no one need be without one. They are invaluable as a family machine, as the whole family can be clothed from head to foot with the very best lamb's wool underwear, seamless hosiery, etc. This should be a valuable agency to anyone taking up unrepresented territory, such as Australia, New Zealand and other foreign countries, for these valuable and reliable machines. Catalogues and full information can be obtained from the above firm on application.

NEW LACE EFFECTS FOR COMING TRADE.

Messrs. Kyle, Cheesbrough & Co. are introducing some exquisite lace effects in robes and all-overs. They promise to be a leading feature in the coming season's trade. These robes comprise the full quantity of material for the skirt, waist and sleeves, and are made in the latest shape and style. They are worn over a costume of plain material, in colors or black, and make a rich and handsome garment.

Lace fichus are also much in vogue in the leading Paris and London centres of fashion.

This firm also state that scarves made of chiffon, crepe de chene and silk with fringed ends will be much worn.

One of the newest and most effective trimmings for the Spring season will be a lace and fringe combination made in wave or Vandyke pattern. This makes a very suitable trimming for light fabrics, but can also be used on heavier materials as well, and produce a rich and handsome appearance on either.

Mr. J. Sproul Smith, agent for the Parks Cotton Co., has removed his Toronto office from 39½ Yonge street to 71 Front street west, opposite the Queen's Hotel.

Carpets, Curtains and Upholstery.

THE OUTLOOK IN CARPETS.

THERE are indications of a good business. This is the month when imports come in and reach retailers' hands, while the next two or three months retail dealers will place sorting orders as the state of trade warrants. The long-threatened rise in prices affecting imported goods is taking effect, in tapestry carpets the increase being 25 per cent. since October 1. All carpets have advanced about 5 per cent. since December 1, and it is reported that another advance on oilcloth (both Canadian and imported) will take place soon, owing to great advances in linseed oil. It is supposed that the higher freight rates will affect all imported goods, especially such bulky articles as carpets and flooroils.

The carpet designs this year show considerable taste. In colors, the green shades hold their own, and reds are stronger and better property in all qualities. There are some fine brussels carpets this season, and these have been directly copied in tapestries. There is quite a demand for small designs again. It is said, regarding imported goods, that orders will be late filling, as most mills now only promise April delivery, and that at a higher price.

TRADE REPORTS.

There is an expectation that Spring trade will be good. The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, have made extra preparations for an increased business. The range of carpets shown in their department includes the best known lines in tapestry, brussels, axminsters, velvets, besides an assorted range of union, wool and hems. There is a good demand in all these lines, and this firm are prepared to show their customers exceptional values during March, when so many buyers visit the market. In the same warehouse a complete range of the new things in Nottingham, Scotch and Swiss lace curtains, art muslins, cretonnes, etc., Japanese mattings, are very much in vogue, and the coming season will probably be more used than ever, as people are finding out that they are both a clean covering and are very sightly as well.

John Macdonald & Co. have opened up for Spring their range of curtains, curtainettes, scrims and a large part of their tapestry carpets and tablecovers.

The Dominion Brussels Carpet Co., Limited, have been forging ahead lately. Their new and commodious factory is thoroughly equipped, and work in all departments is being vigorously pushed forward. The company, in addition to weaving carpets, are making their own yarns. Since November 1 they have been working altogether on Spring orders, and these have been constantly on the increase.

A look through the extensive range of carpets and rugs, curtains, etc., which S. Greenshields, Son & Co. have in stock will satisfy the prospective buyer. THE DRY GOODS REVIEW representative was shown through the other day. Importations for Spring are being received every day just now, and the outlook is most promising for a large trade. Among the new arrivals are extra large shipments of Swiss curtains and sash goods for Spring. Exceptionally good value is to be had in Nottingham curtains, to retail from 75c. to $1.25. In carpets, attention is drawn to good values in velvet effects, medium qualities, and also fine axminsters. The ordinary brisk run is keeping up, and the great trouble is the want of room. They are eagerly looking forward to the time when their new warehouse will be ready for occupation. In answer to the remark that there would be lots of room for everybody there, the reply was, "Well, we will be able to fill it," and, from all appearances, they will.

The trade should be on guard against a carpet being offered as all wool which contains very little wool. One piece was submitted to an analytical chemist, who reports that it is composed of 5 to 10 per cent. wool, 25 per cent. cotton, and the remainder jute.

ADVANCE IN UPHOLSTERY GOODS.

In sympathy with the general advance in prices of all fabrics and other goods, manufacturers of upholstery goods have recently been obliged to make several advances to cover additional cost. Messrs. Geo. H. Hees, Son & Co. were fortunate in laying in a big stock of these goods at an early date, and will give the trade the benefit of their foresight. Their new showrooms and warehouse, 43 St. Sacramento street, Montreal, are becoming very popular with the trade of that city and vicinity.

CARPET TRADE IN THE WEST.

The carpet trade in British Columbia is in good hands. While in the majority of cases carpets form one department in a general dry goods store, there are some nice carpet stores, at some points, which carry stocks of good quality and are very creditable establishments. This was the impression THE REVIEW got after a chat with Mr. John Lindsay, representing John Macdonald & Co., who returned last month from a tour of the West in the interests of the firm's carpet department. Mr. Lindsay visited Victoria, Vancouver, New Westminster, Nelson, Greenwood, Grand Forks and other places, and reports the trade in good condition. The merchants out West, as a rule, ask for good goods and don't want cheap lines at any price. They find it easier to sell a $1 than a 25c. carpet. The commercial outlook for next Spring is satisfactory, as the Manitoba and Territories' crops proved excellent, while the British Columbian mining industry has been opening up more this year than in previous seasons. The newest district is the Boundary country in which are found such towns as Columbia, Grand Forks and Greenwood. There are mines all through this district. The new railway from Robson Junction to Midway has just been opened. Nelson is a place of great promise.

CANADA SUPPLYING CARPET DEALERS.

It must be gratifying to the carpet trade of Canada to know that so many of the requirements of their business can be had without having to send out of the country for them, thus saving much time, freight, duty, etc.

Take plain terries, for instance; being much sought for, The Toronto Carpet Mfg. Co. commenced their manufacture, and it evidently proved a desideratum to the trade, as this firm state that orders have been very numerous.

It might be stated here that many of the smaller carpet dealers should keep pace with the latest ideas and introduce them to their customers, thus showing that they can get in their own towns the latest furnishing ideas. Here is one of the advantages of having a trade paper and reading it. You are posted with the latest big store ideas in all branches of your general dry goods trade for 17c. per month.

You may not have space to carry a big stock of the large carpet-size rugs. They are being called for very much just now. The Toronto Carpet Mfg. Co. have several sizes, and you can get them quickly. In values, these heavy smyrnas surpass the thin, one-sided importations.

The attractive features of their "Acadia" axminsters are commanding great sales. Novelty and beauty of design, richness and strength of coloring and reasonable price are merits which will always find favor with appreciative buyers.

Then, their line of extra super ingrains have but to be seen. No buyer of standard carpets, full warps, clean honest yarns, extra weight, should neglect looking into their values—made in two and three-ply and in all-wool and unions.

There is no doubt but that The Toronto Carpet Mfg. Co. have revolutionized carpet manufacturing in Canada, and are thoroughly up to date.

A picture of their new premises at the top of their advertisement will give some idea of the extensive premises occupied by this enterprising firm.

A NEW IDEA IN FLOOR COVERING.

Emile Berliner, of Washington, D.C., the inventor of the telephone transmitter and the gramophone talking-machine, was granted a patent on what he calls tile matting. In experimenting with matting on his floors, Mr. Berliner discovered that dust occasionally filtered through, and that, if a break appeared, it was almost always necessary to recover the entire floor. He then conceived the idea of cutting matting into small squares or other designs, and covering his floors with these patterns.

By laying the patterns like parquet, he secured some excellent effects, no seams appearing and the natural streaks of the matting neutralizing each other. His method of producing the squares was simple. He took ordinary Chinese or Japanese matting and backed it up with linoleum paste, which has a tendency to strengthen the fibre and make it water and dust-proof. The squares are then pressed on heavy cardboard, laid on the floor and fastened down with a few tacks. The picturesqueness of the fabric is enhanced by a coat or two of varnish, which adds to the brilliancy of appearance, and also makes it easy to rub over them with a damp cloth and thus remove the dust. As squares at different points wear out, they are cut out and others substituted. Mr. Berliner claims that his new tile matting is a model floor-covering, and it is designed to cut a wide swath in the carpet business. A company is now in process of formation to go into the manufacture of the new goods and to place them on the market.—American Carpet and Upholstery Journal.

MAKES AND MAKING OF INDIA RUGS.

In a booklet recently issued by a Calcutta firm of exporters, it is asserted that "Indian carpets may be classified either according to the nature of the materials of which they are made or the manner in which they are woven. They are cotton, woollen, silk, goats' hair, yaks' hair, and pashm carpets, or mixed carpets of any two or more of these materials. The general conditions of Indian carpet weaving are distinctly more favorable to the production of the serviceable fabric than those which obtain in England. Pile carpets are made at a limited number of jails in each Presidency, and by private manufacturers. In an Indian carpet the whole fabric sinks together under the foot, and its wearing power is three or four times that of an English or European carpet. Many native gentlemen possess pile carpets 400 years old, which still retain their original brilliancy. The different sorts of cotton carpets are known as Farsh or Jazim, Darries, Satrang, Dosuti and Dalichas; they are seldom exported. Woollen are known by their centre of manufacture, such as Amritsar, Multan, Agra, Mirzapur, Hushiarpur."

CANADIAN WOOLLENS FOR MARKETS ABROAD.

The familiar name of the Oxford Manufacturing Co., Limited, of Oxford, Nova Scotia, is again brought before THE DRY GOODS REVIEW readers in their regular full page announcement relating to the famous "Oxford" costume cloths and tweeds, of which this firm are making such a success. A week or so ago, a member of a prominent firm of British woollen importers remarked, when looking through the new "Oxford" Spring patterns, that they were of such a swell character in both coloring and texture as to command a ready sale in the best London trade. His English office is to be furnished at once with samples.

The Oxford people have recently sent, at the suggestion of a military commander, samples of their grey homespuns home to England to be laid before the Secretary of the War Office.

The mills report an unprecedented increase in sales and find their products going into the very best trade. Australia should use these cloths to advantage.

Hutchison, Nisbet & Auld, of Toronto, represent The Oxford Manufacturing Co. in Toronto, and westward to the Pacific Ocean. They carry full ranges and make prompt deliveries.

THE MILLINERY TRADE.

THE COMING SEASON.

CANADIAN wholesale millinery buyers are now in Europe, and later on retail millinery buyers will come into the markets for the late styles. The openings will take place the end of next month—the last Monday of February is the 26th. What New York thinks of coming materials may be gathered from an Economist writer, who says :

A great many fancy braids will be used, but particularly the plain, unbreakable braids which are imported in the grey and are bleached and dyed in America. Whole hats, capotes, and combinations will be produced from these materials. Large Italian fancy braids, and plain lace braids, as well as the smoother Milans, are going to be much favored. Hats of satin and crepe de chine in folds, hats of tulle, maline and many-draped affairs of lace in which combinations of Italian braid and plain tulle form the foundation, will be seen among the earlier, lighter colored goods.

A variety of shadings hitherto not shown will be exhibited in these goods. It is expected that every one of the brilliant tints will sell easily and quickly. The favorites seem to be a range of colors called scarabeus (beetle shades), or rather of the June bug variety, shading from the soft, shimmering green to the dull, rosy tints.

Flowers will be of the typical pompadour style—that is to say, the old-fashioned small roses in clusters and some of the striking large varieties more open in style. Many violets, forget-me-nots, buttercups and other conventional styles of the Dresden order of decoration will be seen in conjunction with striking large effects as a contrast.

Shades will be natural, as a rule, with very little disposition to abandon nature's harmonies in any particular. Of course, nature has been improved on by art even in the natural flowers, so that imitations can be sufficiently striking without being contradictions to facts.

It is in the lace and embroidery ends that the styles will be most remarkable. All-overs of every description, from the real duchesse through the Orientals and Arabians, will be utilized in hat production.

Many large draped hats, many lace scarves with flowing ends, many ties, bows, plain and fringed, of silk, will also be used. Strings on large hats will become much favored as the season advances.

MILLINERY LISTS.

E. R. Rogers, Southbridge, Massachusetts, has got out two wholesale millinery directories which the Canadian milliner who wishes to know who are the leading wholesalers in the United States may wish to have. They will be mailed to any reader of this journal for 50c. each; one gives the importing and manufacturing trade (1,600 names), the other gives the millinery jobbing trade of the United States and Canada.

A REVIEW AND A FORECAST.

When THE REVIEW representative called on The John D. Ivey Co., Limited, he found that house busy taking stock and balancing books for the year. One of the directors seen stated that the actual result of the year's business had not been ascertained, but expressed no doubt that the secretary would have a most gratifying statement to lay before the directors at the annual meeting, as the sales for 1899 were far in excess of previous years. "And," continued he, "I am not aware that the company have been selling goods this year without legitimate profit.

"While a fair part of our increase is due to our paying more attention to Northwestern trade, we are glad to say that the larger portion comes from increased business with our old customers in Ontario.

"We have endeavored to keep our stocks so well-assorted that buyers wanting scarce lines could always depend on getting them from us. It is mainly due to this fact that our business is taking such large proportions. The trade throughout the Dominion know that if goods are right or in great demand they can depend on our having them, and feel that any letter orders they send us will be filled exactly as required.

"We are glad to report having a large number of orders booked for next season. We congratulate all buyers who have had the foresight to place early orders, as prices are materially advanced, and, therefore, goods cannot be duplicated to day for what they were selling at a month ago.

"For Spring we find a very strong feeling for black and white. We think that, while pastel shades may be popular, the leading colors for Spring will be black, white and cream. This is largely because of the fact that, owing to the present war, the popular taste will demand plain colors, the majority favoring black.

"In materials, we are selling a large quantity of chiffons, mousseline de soies, crepe de chine and gauzes. In ribbons, plain taffetas take the lead, while black satin also sell freely. Fancy ribbons are slow and not likely to be much wanted.

"In our hat department, we are selling large quantities of sailors, misses' and tourists' hats.

"Flowers are being sold in abundance, a great variety of colors and designs being shown. The Spring season will undoubtedly be a large flower season. Everything points that way at present."

COMPLETE PREPARATIONS FOR SPRING.

When the warerooms of The D. McCall Co., Limited, were visited by the representative of THE REVIEW, a remarkable change was manifested in every department since his last visit, when everything pertaining to Fall millinery could be seen in lavish supply. Now, the various floors are almost depleted of stock.

"This is the time of the year," explained Mr. McCall, "when we want our warerooms as empty as possible, so as to have sufficient room for large importations for the Spring season. Our warerooms, as you see, are capacious, but we will need all the room we can get, as, from orders already received, we have reason to expect a record-breaking season. The trade are receiving our selection for Spring even more favorably than in past seasons.

"In view of our increasing business, we have been obliged to secure the services of more travelers. This will enable us to cope with the increasing demands of the trade, as we now cover every corner of the Dominion from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Covering such a vast extent of ground necessitates early preparations, as, where distances are great, we feel it to our customers' advantage to have their goods in proper time. We make it a point to have these deliveries made sufficiently early to allow us to make complete preparations for the approaching openings, when we anticipate placing before the Canadian trade one of the largest, most varied and carefully selected stocks that will be exhibited anywhere.

"Although we are not yet prepared to state definitely at this early date what the styles for the coming season will be, we can assure our customers that we will leave no stone unturned to place before them every millinery requisite and novelty of Paris, London and New York production.

A CHAT ON STOCK-TAKING, COMING STYLES AND CANADIAN TRADE.

When our representative called at the large wholesale and manufacturing establishment of S. F. McKinnon & Co., Limited, with a view to having a short chat, particularly on the millinery situation, he was met by a director of the company, who, after wishing him all the compliments of the season and a prosperous new year for the DRY GOODS REVIEW, said: "We are busy taking stock, which we do at the end of each season, and, although quite an undertaking in a large place like this, we consider it a most important and necessary work. And we dare express a belief that, if semi annual stock-taking were the rule and not the exception throughout the trade, good results would flow therefrom—a thorough stock-taking—I say thorough, because unless done carefully and well, the ends which it is intended to serve are not met. Of course, the principal end in view on such occasions is to see whether you have lost or won, or, in other words, to see whether or not the season's business has been profitable. If it has, you are encouraged for the next season. If, on the other hand, the result is unsatisfactory and nothing has been made, or perhaps a loss sustained, then it is more than important, absolutely necessary, that the discovery should be made at once, so that a second season may not be entered upon with the prospects of the same results. If those interested cannot find a satisfactory reason for the discouraging state of affairs, a strict investigation should be made to discover, if possible, the weak spot before it is too late. One other good end is served in our case: as you can see all our goods are for the present piled up on the tables, every corner having been turned out, every piece of goods or article in the warehouse has been handled, first by the hands in charge of the different departments, then the whole stock comes before two others who are left with an intelligent idea, not only of the stock on hand, but also of its general character. Now, sir, I had no idea of running on the stock-taking line of thought, but it is a very important matter from our standpoint, and those who do not view it as we do cannot be hurt from what I have here said, and there may be some who have never attached the proper importance to it who may be led to give the question consideration.

"The season's millinery trade is over, so far as we are concerned, and even in the retail trade millinery sales are light after the first of January. In saying that our own turnover was the largest in our history, this fact, together with other information which we have been able to gather from time to time, leads us to think that a very satisfactory millinery trade has been done throughout the country. It is true that at no time during the season did it rise to an exciting pitch, but we believe a good steady trade was maintained throughout the season, both in wholesale and retail.

"One wholesome and noticeable feature of the millinery trade this season, particularly after the middle of October, was the great care and caution exercised in buying, little or no speculation having been indulged in; this knowledge leading us to the conclusion that after a little cleaning up and clearing out of odd lines through the month of January has been done, stocks will be very low, a condition favorable to our further belief that good results will be shown when balance sheets are made up, three or four weeks hence.

"You ask my opinion about the prospect for the first millinery season of 1900. Well, unless something unforeseen comes in the way, our prediction is that business all around will be good in Canada. Not only has there been a good Fall and Winter trade done, but we believe that there is a strong confidence and security existing in business circles throughout the Dominion, born of an increased prosperity. Also, goods of all kinds are advancing rapidly in price; that is just as sure as rent day, and not without its bright side, being often a precursor to better times.

"Speaking of the goods for the coming Spring: It is going to be a milliners' season, in which their ability will be well tested; but, as they are always equal to the occasion, we may expect to see millinery lofty in character and ladylike in style beyond the general expectation.

"I should weary you if I were to tell you all we know about materials, colors and styles. Therefore, suffice it for the present to say that materials light and gauzy in effect will be very prominent. Rich, soft, plain materials, in silk and satin, will be at the front. Plain ribbons, many wide and soft in finish, will be very popular. Flowers, which look as if they had been cut from the bush, so true are they to nature, show great Spring strength, and cannot take any but first place as a millinery garniture, a place which they have held against all rivals for several Summers.

"In days gone by, we always had good millinery seasons when ostrich feathers were in big demand. This ever-becoming and most ladylike of all hat adornments promises to be in greater favor than for some seasons—perhaps another sign of increasing prosperity. It is quite a distance off, and I hope we will meet again before our millinery opening date—somewhere about February 26—but, if you are present on that big occasion, I will promise to show you millinery in character beyond even what I have set forth here.

"Let us run up to the factory. You ask, why is everything so still with such surrounding evidences of a busy place? As we have previously said, stock-taking to us is a very important act, and must be done correctly, and so, we have shut down for the two closing working days of the year for that purpose. Like the other departments of our business, this one has closed a most satisfactory season, and attention is now wholly turned towards Spring. From their past record, McKinnon made garments have found much favor with the trade and established their fame throughout the Dominion.

"In connection with our large and convincing range of millinery and fancy dry goods, our representatives are at present showing an unresistable range of Spring jackets, capes, costumes, and skirts, as evidenced by the large orders being received.

"If ever we had a shadow of a doubt as to domestic-made jackets taking the first place in the trade of the country it is now dispelled, as we are convinced that the domestic-made goods are fast driving foreign-made goods out of this market."

..Year 1900..

WE owe, and here express, our thanks to the trade throughout the Dominion for their confidence and loyal support, which enables us to call the season just closed the record breaker in our history of many previous most successful and satisfactory ones.

The business man of to-day can profit from the experience of the past, but cannot afford to dwell on or live in it; and, although it holds for us a pleasant business experience, we must say adieu to 1899

On stepping into the year 1900 in our recognized position as leaders in all the lines we handle, we assure the trade that our high aim will be to continue to merit that distinction, and believe not only that we have the ability, power and force to maintain our present position in the trade as wholesale importers and manufacturers, but to become, if possible, even greater factors in promoting the business interests of the country.

Our field is from ocean to ocean, our sixteen representatives are making their way through the Dominion as quickly as possible with a range of Spring Samples, which, in extent, characters and value, support our position.

We are already making extensive preparations for our spring opening; when our friends from far and near can depend upon seeing a display of Millinery, Millinery Novelties, Fancy Dry Goods, Jackets, Capes, Costumes, and Skirts such as has never previously been exhibited under one roof in the Dominion.

NEW PRESIDENT OF DRY GOODS ASSOCIATION.

MR. JAMES RODGER, who has been chosen by the Montreal Dry Goods Association as president for the ensuing year, has been for many years connected with the firm of Gault Bros., in that city. As a young man he began business with Thomas May & Co., Montreal, wholesale milliners and fancy goods merchants. He spent about three years there before entering the Gault Bros.' house. Twenty-eight years ago he became connected with the latter firm, and has since devoted his energies to the advancement of its interests. Some six or seven years ago he was admitted to membership in the firm, and subsequently became a director. He is now the director of the financial part of the concern, and is well known among bankers and business men as a shrewd as well as a strictly upright financier.

Mr. Rodger is a man who has never courted popularity, and his disposition is decidedly reserved. Politics have never interested him much, and he has never taken part in them. He is a deeply religious man, and, outside of the demands which such a large business naturally makes on anyone, he has occupied himself in forwarding the work of the church to which he belongs, and in which he is an elder. A native of Montreal, but of Scotch parentage, Mr. Rodger represents a type not too frequently met with. His business has not eaten up his soul completely; and he has taken his fair share of duty to others. He has always been fond of sport, and is an enthusiastic curler. He is still under middle age, and shows no tokens of abating strength. The firm with which he is specially connected, and the trade at large, it is to be hoped, can count on the advantage of his business ability for years to come.

MR. JAMES RODGER.

A LETTER FROM LIEUT.-COL. OTTER.

Lieut.-Col. Otter, commanding the first Canadian contingent, has written in the kindest terms to Mr. Lockhart, of the Lockhart Bedding Co., Montreal, on the subject of a sleeping bag which this patriotic firm donated to him before his departure.

This is the same kind of bag as is used by sportsmen when camping out, and supersedes entirely the use of blankets.

A fac-simile of this sleeping bag is now on exhibition in Mr. Lockhart's bedding store, corner St. Catherine and Victoria streets.

NEW HAT FIRM.

A new hat firm, The Anderson & Macbeth Co., Limited, has just been organized for the wholesale hat, cap and straw goods business in Canada, and now occupy the warehouse at 58 Bay street, Toronto. This firm is composed of Mr. George Anderson, who has been for 22 years in the hat business in this country, and is well known to the trade, and Mr. Macbeth, who has had large experience in the hat business in the United States. The firm will handle English, American and Canadian goods, and believe that when their travelers go out January 1 for the Spring trade they will show the most attractive range of novelties ever shown in hats in this country. The buyer has just returned from New York with the latest Spring styles. A line of hats for young men, natty and attractive, is proving one of their special leaders.

JUDGMENT IN MR. CORISTINE'S FAVOR.

Judgment was rendered in the Court of Appeal in Montreal on December 21 in the celebrated case of Hawes vs. Coristine.

Action was taken by Elizabeth Hawes, widow of Thomas J. Coristine, for the recovery of $68,000 claimed by her as her late husband's share in the firm of James Coristine & Co., of which firm he was a partner up to the date of his death in 1897. The surviving partner, James Coristine, claims that his brother had no interest in the capital of the firm, having withdrawn his small share of the profits from time to time during his lifetime. Expert evidence was secured by both parties to the case, which was tried in the Superior Court in 1898. Judgment was given in favor of Elizabeth Hawes for $13,988. This judgment was appealed from, and in the Court of Appeal was reversed, the court holding that there was absolutely no grounds for the claim. Mr. James Coristine thus emerges victorious, with his honor and integrity completely vindicated.

It is interesting to note that the attorney of Elizabeth Hawes, who had absolute control of her estate, is now under arrest, being accused by her of having defrauded her of a very large amount. The case is now before the courts.

Mr. James Coristine is president of the well-known firm of James Coristine & Co., Limited, Montreal.

NEW SHIRT AND COLLAR MANUFACTORY.

Montreal has a new shirt and collar manufacturing firm. The Empire Manufacturing Co., Limited, have lately started operations on Craig street. The company's offices are commodious, and the prospects are that a very successful business will be carried on. They are manufacturers of shirts, collars, cuffs and boys' blouses, and make a specialty of high-grade lines. They invite the trade to inspect their samples before placing orders.

Mr. George A. Thorpe, of The G. A. Thorpe Manufacturing Co., is at present in New York selecting goods for Fall, 1900.

Glothing and Woollen Trade.

THE MARKET AT HOME AND ABROAD.

THOSE who have analyzed the wool situation in England declare that the higher prices now being paid for colonial wools show no signs of easing off. They assert that, but for the shortage in merinos and the large consumption, the prices for finer wools would subside. But, both these factors being in force, the outlook for lower prices is by no means assured. An English exchange gives the following table of the advances in wool since the movement began :

|                           |                    |
| During 1898.....          | 7½ to 10 per cent. |
| January series, 1899..... | 5 " 7½ "           |
| March " ".....            | 7½ " 10 "          |
| May " ".....              | 20 " 25 "          |
| July " ".....             | 5 " 7½ "           |
| September " ".....        | 10 " 15 "          |
| November " ".....         | 10 " 15 "          |
| Total rise.....           | 65 to 90 per cent. |

As a heavy shortage in merinos is again predicted for Australia, and Cape wools will be affected by the war, the outlook is not believed to be in the direction of lower prices.

In Canada, the higher prices paid for all imported woollen materials, especially worsteds, is generally acquiesced in. As to domestic goods, which are always slower to advance, the past month has put some backbone into the manufacturers. The selling agents of a large woollen concern issued a circular in December to this effect :

"In view of the recent very marked advance in the price of our raw material (wool, supplies, etc.), and the possibility of a still further advance in the future, we find it necessary to advise our customers as follows : All goods made by us are subject to an advance in price at any time, without notice. Orders not actually in our possession the day an advance may be made, will be filled only at the new price. Orders held by any house, waiting for one of our salesmen to call, or for any other reason, cannot be considered. Only such orders will be recognized as have been duly received and acknowledged by our firm. The above particulars are given not only for our own protection, but that our customers may not oversell any line of goods purchased from us, with the surety of being able to record repeats at the same price as their original orders."

Some of the mills, in showing samples for next Fall, have been embarrassed by the uncertainty as to prices, and some have not yet ventured to show fancies at all.

A. S. Campbell & Co., the semi-ready clothing manufacturers, of Montreal, are at present holding an extensive sale of overcoats, etc., at manufacturing prices. They had a contract with the Kennedy Co., semi-ready clothiers, and have terminated it, and Mr. Campbell intends to devote himself solely to the retail trade in future, in which department he has had 25 years' experience. He intends to pay particular attention to the making of the finer grades of clothing.

Among the many novelties in the juvenile clothing, says an English authority, which are being put on the market for the Spring trade, those having any connection with the war in South Africa are sure to attract a large amount of attention. By far the best I have seen as yet is a juvenile suit, an exceedingly natty suit, made up in khaki, the material so prominently brought before the eye of the public by the military off to the war. The coat is of the Norfolk style, with four pockets, each with a broad box pleat and a flap buttoned with brass buttons. Two brass buttons are on each sleeve and on the belt, and the buttons down the front are of the same metal. The jacket has a wonderfully smart appearance, and is capitally made up and finished. Quite apart from sentiment, the cloth is almost an ideal material for juvenile Summer wear. It is waterproof and light, healthy to wear, and washes well. The manufacturers of khaki claim for it, that washing the material not only is not detrimental to the cloth, but actually improves it. However this may be, it certainly will stand hard wear, and should, during the coming Summer, prove a most popular wear amongst all classes.

The range of woollens shown this season by importers for the tailoring trade contains some attractive goods. The buyer for The W. R. Brock Co. declares that in trouserings the patterns comprise small checks, narrow stripes and overchecks, and materials range from moderate-priced goods to the finest French worsteds. In suitings, there are some nice fancy worsteds, both domestic and imported goods, principally in small grey checks and overchecks, both in pure botany and crossbreds. For Spring overcoats, the latest novelties in coverts and whipcords are both plain and herringbone pattern, while cheviots in greys and blacks are also in favor. What fashion may decree between now and the incoming of actual Spring weather is doubtful. Black and blue serges will again be popular for young men's suits.

Thornton & Douglas, of Stratford, Ont., are not only enlarging their making-up department, but are opening a new branch in Chatham, Ont. It will be the corner store in the new Victoria block, and is being fitted up as one of the hand-somest and best equipped clothing stores in Western Ontario. Its size is 27 x 95 feet, and it is being fitted up inside with hardwood finish and all modern conveniences, including the latest designs of windows and vestibule doors. This will make the second branch store this firm have opened since they started in business in Stratford, in 1888. In 1893, they opened the Guelph store, and so successful has been their experience there that they have been encouraged to extend to Chatham.

The Sanford Manufacturing Co., of Hamilton, secured the contract for supplying 20,000 garments for the second Canadian contingent to South Africa.

The Rosamond Woollen Co., of Almonte, has received its new 460 horse power water wheel. There is also a large consignment of new worsted manufacturing machinery on the way from England. "Number one mill" is up-to-date in every respect.

The Stratford Clothing Co., will remove to Toronto this week, going out of the retail business and confining themselves to the manufacturing on a wholesale basis.

As handsome a circular as we have seen lately has been got out by Hutchison, Nisbet & Auld, Toronto. It is intended to direct attention to their stock of material for the ladies' tailoring trade. The cover is a fine fac-simile, printed, of a fashionable design in cloth.

A woollen factory is to be erected at Fredericton, N.B. Arrangements are about completed for the formation of a company of local men, of whom, it is understood, F. B. Edgcombe will be the chief stockholder, to establish and operate the factory, which will employ between 30 and 40 hands.

TO EXTEND THEIR BUSINESS.

JUST as certain chemicals fused together produce light or heat, so the fusion of ripe experience and fresh energy and enterprise is bound to produce increased power, and to extend even a large business.

The Crompton Corset Co., Limited, Toronto, have taken this method of extending their already great business. Mr. F. Crompton started this business about 25 years ago, and, by catering only to high-class trade, earned an excellent reputation for his goods. By the use of the most modern machinery, the employment of skilled workmen and keeping up the standard of their goods, this reputation has been maintained and the business has steadily grown until now the firm's factories cover more than an acre of floor space, and have a capacity of 12,000 pairs per week.

To keep pace with the "growing time" in this country, however, the executive force of the company has been increased by the admission of Messrs. George Reedy and John Gilchrist. Mr. Reedy has for years conducted an excellent dry goods business in Barrie, Ont., which he sold out to enter the Crompton company. Mr. Gilchrist has been for several years with the company as traveler. Both these gentlemen are comparatively young, and have been successful business men, so their entrance into this firm will add much to their capacity for business.

It is intended by the company to enlarge their staff and add to their machinery, so that the business may be extended in proportion to the growth in the demand for corsets in the Dominion, which their 14 travelers cover thoroughly every season.

DISPLAY FIXTURES IN DEMAND.

The past year has been an excellent one for the manufacturers of display fixtures in Canada. Clatworthy & Co., Toronto (see their advertisement on another page of this issue), have had a specially good year, an expansion of nearly 50 per cent. being shown over the previous year, from which it would appear that the efforts of this firm to suit the Canadian trade are being widely appreciated.

Anticipating a still greater expansion of their business during the coming season, this firm found it necessary to largely increase their facilities for manufacture, which will enable them to extend all lines of their business.

They will carry a full stock of their staple goods, such as revolving mantle racks, wax figures and papier-mache forms, and they are introducing their "Silent Salesman" and other showcases, which are offered at close figures. During the month of January only, they intend offering a reduction of 20 per cent. in the price of their ribbon and umbrella cabinets.

Many novelties will also be introduced this season, including millinery and hat stands, nickel-plated fixtures, etc.; also triplicate, duplex and other mirrors. Another novelty this firm are putting on the market is a double-rail, straight mantle rack, for which a big demand is looked, judging from inquiries.

It is evident that Clatworthy & Co. are determined not to neglect any means of securing a large share of the display-fixture business of Canada during the coming year.

AMONG THE NOVELTIES.

The white pique collar with bow to match the blouse waists is among the latest pretty ideas out this season. As usual, Messrs. Boulter & Stewart placed these on the market as soon as shown in New York. Keep the up-to-date goods, they always sell. Go one better than your competitors. You can see 100 designs of these popular goods at Messrs. Boulter & Stewart's, 13 Front street west.

Wreyford & Co., wholesale men's furnishers and manufacturers' agents, have removed from McKinnon Building, to more commodious salesrooms at Romain Building, over 85 King St. W., Toronto. They now carry a stock of several of Young & Rochester's leading lines in shirts, collars, and neckwear.

Owing to the popularity of shirt waists and blouses, it is evident that the Spring and Summer of 1900 will be a great belt season. Belts will therefore be shown in great variety. A leader in this line will be an elastic web, with ornamentations of marabout.

Among perhaps the most delicate and elegant materials that have ever been created to tempt the eye of the fair sex, are to be found the rich embroidered chiffon all-overs and sequin nets, which promise to be a leading attraction this season.

Mr. R. W. MacDougall, director of Gault Bros., Limited, Montreal, has been nominated again by the Dry Goods Association as its representative on the council of the board of trade. This is, however, merely a nomination, and does not necessarily insure appointment. The place is one that is somewhat keenly contested, and the authorities no longer recognize any association in the selection for office. No action can be taken until the annual meeting. Of course, the support of members of the Dry Goods Association carries with it that amount of value, and the hardwaremen and they generally work together. But the election takes place, every man on his own footing, so far as the board of trade is concerned.

NEW FEATURES IN WHOLESALE TRADE.

McINTYRE, SON & CO.

THE above firm draw the attention of the trade to their large assortment of imported wash fabrics and white goods. The assortment in this department is unusually large, and must be seen to be appreciated. The latest novelties in French printing are included in styles now being shown.

The dress goods department are showing the usual large range of plain and fancy styles for Spring delivery. On January 2 will be opened a special range of low-priced plaids for immediate shipment. Samples are in the hands of travelers.

The silk department is kept well assorted with good selling lines, many of which, being contracted for before recent advances, are now especially good value. French printed Foulard silks in novel designs are shown.

Kirby, Beard & Co.'s smallwares are too well known to require recommendation. Their needles, pins, etc., are among the best made. A full assortment kept in stock in Montreal.

In the kid glove department there is nothing but new, fresh stock. There are leading lines to sell at popular prices that will give a fair profit to the retailer.

P. GARNEAU, FILS & CIE.

P. Garneau, Fils & Cie., Quebec, report a great success with their line of silkalette. It is sold in all popular shades and can be retailed at 17 to 20c. Ask their travelers, or write for samples.

The same firm have full ranges in black and colored cashmere and a large line of black crepons in latest designs selling at 35, 40, 55, 60, 75, 95c. and $1.50. P. Garneau, Fils & Cie. are also showing large lines in tweeds, coatings, serges and other woollens at rock bottom prices.

A large consignment of black silks in peau de soie, nubienne, athos, figured damas, nicoise, taffetas, etc., is just being opened. They have now in stock very special values in Swiss point curtains, net curtains, vitrages, lace blinds and lace nets.

P. Garneau, Fils & Cie., are also receiving remarkable values in reversible cretonnes to retail with big profit at 15 and 20c.

S. GREENSHIELDS, SON & CO.

S. Greenshields, Son & Co. have just received a full consignment of their new laces and all-over lace nets. These include the new heavy guipure insertions and all-overs in the Renaissance and other new styles. They anticipate a large trade in prints, and have already sold a large quantity of them. Prints, no doubt, will be trimmed with laces and all-over nets. Merchants should buy these early, as they are already getting scarce, both in this country and in Europe, and it will be very hard later on to get orders filled.

S. Greenshields, Son & Co. are showing a range of very fine muslins for Spring trade, including the organdies and new Silmus muslins. They have also now on hand a large stock of white Victoria lawns and India linens, which they are offering at old prices, and which can be delivered immediately for January retail white goods sales. In Victoria lawns, they have special makes in both light and heavy at popular prices.

S. Greenshields, Son & Co. and other merchants have found it very hard to get orders filled in Switzerland for white embroideries and insertions. These goods, in most cases, will be delivered very late this season. Their buyer had fortunately placed his order very early for the coming season's trade, and they have already received a large quantity of all their lines, including insertions, which are complete. They had bought before the heavy advance, and are offering these lines at old prices.

THE W. R. BROCK CO., LIMITED.

As predicted last month, The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, have found that their Imperial suitings (large plaids) for ladies' skirts have become a decided feature. Their range is acknowledged to be an exceptionally fine one, and orders are coming in freely. As these goods are wanted for immediate use, and they are getting deliveries of them every day, they have kept their customers well supplied. They have made arrangements with the manufacturer to keep these goods fully assorted during the season.

They also report that many customers have taken advantage of their special offerings of stock lines in black and colored cashmeres, velours, whipcords, poplins, serges, and all staple plain dress goods that are in demand. Of course, it is understood that these prices only exist for stock on hand, and, after it is exhausted, the line will have to be dropped altogether, the advances being so great it would be impossible to keep them up. Some had predicted a falling off in the fancy black business, but The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, have not experienced this. In fact, they predict a larger season than ever for Spring in these goods, and, judging by orders already received, have good reasons to think so. There is, however, a tendency to go after smaller effects, although the large blisters are still selling freely.

Their Spring trade in fancies has been a surprise, although they felt with the general opinion that very few fancies would be wanted. In order to make their assortment as complete and attractive as possible, they placed orders for a nice range of the latest novelties, and have already been obliged to cable a number of repeats, which proves that fancy dress goods in Canada are not a dead letter to-day. The manager of this department, in conclusion, reports the dress goods business in the most healthy condition that he has ever remembered, orders having come in for future delivery much more freely, and customers generally inquiring for much better grades of goods.

The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, are in a good position to supply their customers with staple lines of black and colored silks, but strongly advise early placing of orders, as they will not be able to execute orders when present contracts have expired. As to fancy silks, they have a large range of costumes and skirts, the stock comprising the latest novelties of New York and London.

In cashmere hosiery, this house claims to attract the keenest buyers with their various lines, as they were fortunate in placing large orders for plain and ribbed goods when the market was more favorable than it has been for months past. They offer to send samples and quote interesting prices. The same is true of fabric gloves. As to cotton hosiery, in spite of the great advances, the department are maintaining their reputation for keeping the right goods at the right prices in stock, and offer for Spring much sought-after lines at the same prices as in the Spring 1898. These goods cannot be repeated except at a great advance.

In men's furnishings, business has greatly increased with the Toronto house since they built their annex to the warehouse, as they have more space to display and carry goods. For Spring trade, the department has gone more extensively into all kinds of outing, regatta and fancy shirts, and the selection of patterns and styles to retail at 50c. to $1.25 comprises the cream of the best manufacturers in the Dominion. Besides this, their working shirts and overalls are being offered nearly 20 per cent. below to-day's prices. In neckwear, the range, style and general assortment have never been such as now. This improvement is noticeable in men's underwear. Having only carried before one style in a price, they now carry many others in plain and fancy balbriggans. Braces from all the leading manufacturers are shown to retail at popular prices. Three special lines of white dress shirts (for 50c., 75c. and $1 retailing), called the "Wobbler," the "Warrior" and "W.R.S." lines, which could not be sold at the price quoted except for the fact that orders were placed for them nearly a year ago, may be mentioned. In the smallwares department can always be found drygoodsmen's and tailors' requisites, as the department aims to have everything in stock that can be reasonably asked for, and is continually getting in fresh supplies and adding any new Spring ideas in the market. They are showing, for instance, two qualities (A and B) of a new wool mending, called "Woolneedle," each card of mending having a darning-needle stuck in it, which makes it sought after.

For Spring trade in dress linings, percalines are a leading feature, and The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, show five lines, to retail from 10c. to 25c. in a full range of staple and high colors. The buyer of linens has picked up several stock lots at old prices, and some special things are being shown in table linens (two cream damask and one bleached damask), and four lines of towellings—a 16-in. glass towelling, an 18-in. huck, and two 18-in. Scotch crashes. For ladies' Summer suitings, linen crash will be in vogue, and an extensive range of both plain and fancy makes (including two lines bought at a clearing price), is being shown. White piques, of domestic, English and American makes, have been bought at clearing prices—mostly in up-and-down cords. The stock of black and colored Italians was bought on the first advance only, and customers will get the benefit while this supply lasts. In French canvasses, three specially heavy makes, CZ, CM, CA, are being shown.

In prints, an extensive range of heavy Canadian cloth, over 300 patterns, two-thirds of them exclusively printed for Brock's, is shown. Also an effective cloth with mercerized finish, 32 in. wide, retailing at 12½c. In fancy striped piques, two American cloths, bought at close figures, are being offered away down. Also, a low American cloth for 5c. retailing in black, red and regatta patterns.

THE MONTREAL HOUSE.

The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, Montreal (late Jas. Johnston & Co.), would call attention to their dress department, in which will be found a full range of the latest styles, both in plain and fancies, and particularly in black perolas and crepons. Cords and serges, also cashmeres, blacks and colors, which are very much under present market prices.

They are showing for Spring, 1900, a full range of black silks in the following makes: Surah satins, satin mervs, grosgrains, peau de soie, failles, glaces and moire velours; also a very large assortment in colors and fancies. Their ribbon department, as usual, is complete in all makes and prices; in trimmings, they are showing an extra large assortment of braids, jets and sequins; also black and colored fringes, which are to be one of the correct features for the coming Spring.

In the smallware and notion department are to be found all the staple everyday lines, as well as the latest novelties, such as belt buckles and clasps, combs and hair ornaments, braid, shell hairpins, beauty pins in plain and fancy, and some special lines in braids, including white and fancy washable braids. They are placing in stock a new range of whitewear, for which they have already booked some very nice orders. They also show some great values in wrappers.

JOHN MACDONALD & CO.

John Macdonald & Co., in their silk department, are showing the largest and best collections of black and colored silks and satins they have ever shown—all purchased before the recent sharp advance. Amongst them are two special leaders in black peau de soie, 014 at 75c., and 016 at $1; also extra value in black mervs at popular prices; black, white and all leading shades in colored taffetas; special value in white and colored satins. Their M.G.A. satin, to retail at 50c., is unsurpassed anywhere.

In their white goods department they have made preparations, on a large scale, for the usual January white goods sales. Their stock is now complete in cambric and Swiss embroideries, India linens, lawns, nainsooks, Swiss muslins, organdies, etc.

John Macdonald & Co. are showing a big range of novelties in all-over dress nets in guipure, valenciennes and embroidered effects. These goods are in big demand.

The popular brand of dress and costume serge known as "Seabelle" serge is now complete in all prices, in both black and navy. Every yard is guaranteed.

In the smallwares department they are showing a nice range of belt buckles, in enamel, cut steel and jet. These retail at popular prices. Ladies' watch guards, fancy hat pins, handkerchiefs in all styles; in fact, a fully assorted stock of haberdashery containing every late novelty is reported. In men's furnishings, collars are having a large sale, especially a line of 15c. linen. There is a large range of ready-made and negligee shirts as well as starched shirts. Black cashmere half-hose and black and fancy cotton half-hose are in great range, while, as to Spring underwear and sweaters, the natural wool is expected to precede the balbriggan.

For Spring trade, John Macdonald & Co. are showing a large range in fancy worsted suitings, trouserings of new designs and texture, and fabrics suited for Spring overcoats in covert, venetians, mixture twills and herringbone weaves. In tweed suitings, Scotch, English and Canadian, there is a wide range. In low and medium Canadian 3-4 tweeds; in 6-4 blue and black Canadian serges; 3-4 blue Canadian serges, special values are being shown. Their trade in "Belwarp" serges and worsteds is increasing, and for Spring quite a number of new makes are shown. In these cloths, color is guaranteed, and each yard is stamped with registered trade mark—"The Lion and Bull." The stock of trimmings for tailoring purposes includes all newest makes of Italian cloths, mohair serges and fancy and plain silesias.

For ladies' tailoring trade they are making a specialty of goods suited for ladies, cheaper lines than heretofore, and a more than usually comprehensive range.

THE CENTURY SAMPLER AND PRICER. The Greatest Invention of the Century

In the interest of the Retail Dress Goods Department.

ADVANTAGES

1. It is inexpensive.
2. It is practically indestructible.
3. It is both a Sample Holder and a Price Marker.
4. As a price ticket it is cheaper and more convenient than any on the market. Tickets can be removed and replaced without handling the goods.
5. Instead of being an expense it proves a source of revenue in the saving of both time and goods.
6. The sampler is always at hand without having to look through a box of samples, which requires time, and it advertises to customer that the store has samples to give on request.
7. The sample comes forth in good condition without having been crushed or stretched as when inserted with yard-stick.
8. Sample is always out of sight and no notch in the end of goods to suggest to customer that she might get out by asking for a sample to "show to her blind sister," or some equally poor excuse.
9. For "slow-moving" goods, a ticket differing in color from the regular ticket is a constant reminder to salesmen that "this piece" is to have special attention, and the change in ticket is quickly and conveniently made without removing the goods. Any plain paper can be used for ticket, or, if desired, we furnish tickets at about the cost of paper.

DIRECTIONS

Cut a strip an inch or an inch and a quarter wide the full width of the goods.

Fold one end of this sample into loops about 4 or 5 inches long (just short enough to fit into the box part of holder) leaving the other end free and long enough to pass forward and up through the first hole and down through the other; then forward, leaving just enough of the sample exposed to catch and pull forth when needed.

In placing the sample in holder, the long loose end should lie under, allowing the ends of loops to rest against the shoulder in box part, thus assuring its retention in box until the last end is used.

In clipping sample, pull forth the length needed and clip close to the holder.

In filling mail sample orders, you can go through the stock and clip samples without taking goods from the shelf.

Price ticket can be placed and removed without removing goods from the shelf.

Exclusive Sale for all Canada.

TIME SAVING FIXTURES.

It is not now a question of do display fixtures pay or do they not pay; that question has been settled beyond doubt. A glance at the successful stores of to-day is a standing evidence that they do pay. It now remains with the purchaser to buy the best. The Toronto Brass Manufacturing Co. are devoting special attention to time and labor-saving devices. To prove this a few new ideas may be mentioned.

All standards are marked off into inches corresponding with each other.

All brackets are fitted to one templet, thereby guaranteeing perfect alignment of rods without the old time taking trouble of measuring.

The cross rods while much lighter will stand double the weight of the old style without sagging in the centre. Small clamps are supplied with each fixture for preventing rods from turning on brackets when used as hat stand or shoe fixtures.

Adjustable supports are attached to the top of each single stand to prevent its leaning forward when loaded up with goods. This support is so arranged as not to interfere with the moving of the standards.

These are only a few of the points showing the superior quality of the goods but suffice to show they are experts at their business, and can give you lower prices and better satisfaction than any house in the business. Always a large stock on hand for immediate shipment. Send for catalogue and discounts.

ENGRAVED LABELS FOR CLOTHING, ETC.

The use of labels on all classes of garments has now practically become universal. Nearly every leading manufacturer and retailer has his distinctive mark in the form of a label attached to every article he puts upon the market. A firm that devotes its whole attention to the making of steel plate engraved labels for neckwear, shirts, waists and other garments is the J. L. & M. Jacobs Co. This house originated its own specialty, and is the only one in its line making white labels exclusively. The busy preparations now going forward on Spring goods call attention to what has come to be regarded as an essential feature of every line—the affixing of the firm label on each garment turned out. In this connection, the card of the J. L. & M. Jacobs in this issue is of added interest. This firm devotes the whole of its big plant in the Elm Square Building, New York, exclusively to the production of steel plate engraved labels, and the prestige it has won in its chosen field is testified to by the fact that nearly all the leading manufacturers and retailers throughout the country are numbered among its patrons. It is largely due to the J. L. & M. Jacobs Co. that the old crude method of producing labels has been brought to the present state of perfection. Many of the designs are in the highest degree artistic, and the firm is thoroughly equipped to fill orders in from two to five days. Correspondence is invited by the house, and samples, designs and prices are cheerfully forwarded on request.

AN ATTRACTIVE CORSET STAND.

A new corset stand, which has commanded a large amount of attention in London, Eng., has been exhibited in one of the show windows at Peter Robinson's establishment, in Oxford street west. The work of a French inventor, it is an exquisitely modelled wax figure, and, by means of electricity, the movements of the head, eyes and chest are imitated in the most lifelike manner. The model is wearing the "Prinsa" corset, the latest edition to the well-known range of "I C Persephone" corsets, which is made in satin and choice brocades, as well as in a variety of materials for ordinary wear. The model was loaned to Peter Robinson, Limited, by Sharp, Perrin & Co., of 31 Old Change, E.C., who are the sole wholesale agents for Great Britain and the colonies for the "I C" corsets, and it should prove a most attractive advertisement for these well-known corsets.

The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, Montreal, are clearing out a number of odd lots to make room for improvements in the building and for new goods coming in. They have just opened out a variety of draperies and art muslins in new effects.

Mr. George Reedy, who recently joined the management of the Crompton Corset Co., Toronto, was presented, at Christmas, with a handsome marble clock by the trustees and official board of Collier street Methodist Church, Barrie, of which he was an efficient member for several years.

Mr. Greeff, of Greeff, Bredt & Co., who have lately established an agency of their German business in Canada, was speaking the other day to THE REVIEW about the present state of trade in Canada, which was favorable to their trade as well as to most others. The headquarters of this firm are in Barmen, Germany, and they are, therefore, in good shape to get the closest prices from that centre of such lines as braids, trimmings, covered buttons, etc. In fact, they have the additional advantage of being able to study the requirements of the Canadian market, send to Germany with samples of some specialty which is wanted here, and the manufacturers will turn out a line in accordance with these suggestions. The firm of Greeff, Bredt & Co. sell exclusively to the manufacturing and wholesale trade. Their office is in the McKinnon Building, Toronto, and they will carry stock.

Ed. McFaul, dry goods merchant, Seaforth, has just completed the enlargement of his premises by the addition of the adjoining store, which was found necessary by the large increase in business. This he has carried out in the most attractive manner. The windows in both stores, which were of plate glass, are merged in one elegant front, making a fine display window. The counters of both sides are of natural wood with drop plate glass tops. The centre counter, of same class but oblong in shape, runs around the centre of the store, giving a fine display. But still more attractive are the large plate mirrors, 72 in. each, at the right and the left of the main entrance, with others of less size at the rear of the store, giving the impression in either direction you look that the store extends a much greater distance. The whole being of light finish, and, with the fine stock of goods, makes one of the most attractive stores we have seen.

Mr. Geo. Joseph who has returned from the Maritime Provinces as a representative of The Cloak Manufacturing Co. has some interesting things to say with reference to the state of trade in the Provinces generally, but particularly the great expansion now taking place in Cape Breton. The iron works which are being carried on by Whitney & Co. are three miles away from Sydney and already they employ about 1,300 men. There is also talk of a new industry being established at Sydney Mines, but this is not yet known to be on a practical basis. Mr. Joseph said that all the indications pointed to the rapid development of the district. There are solid buildings going up and it is hard to get accommodation for either merchants or householders. It is said that 56 new firms will commence business in the place this Spring. Seven banks are in operation and a strong indication that Mr. Whitney and his fellow capitalists consider the future assured is to be found in the fact that $5,000 have been given to found a library, and a music hall is also being built.

UP-TO-DATE WINDOW DRAPERIES.

In the November issue of this paper, an interesting description of the "strictly proper thing for a window drapery," written by a New York fashion critic, was published. The writer, in eloquent language, described the ruffled bobbinet curtain as the most graceful and artistic as well as a practical finish for a window.

While thus described as the newest thing in New York, it was not known that the same curtain was being made by a Canadian house. It seems, however, that almost simultaneous with its introduction in New York, these goods have been made in Toronto, by Prime & Rankin. This house make the goods in the same styles and patterns as those made in New York, but, as the raw materials are imported into both countries from Great Britain, and as the United States houses have to pay a much higher duty than is charged in Canada, the goods are produced at lower prices here than is the case in the United States. Prime & Rankin have issued a small booklet describing in detail and showing illustrations of many of the designs. This can be had upon application.

THE NEW SHANNON BINDER.

The accompanying illustration shows excellently the features of the new Shannon binder made by the Office Specialty Co., Toronto, for use with their binding cases. Of late a big improvement has been made in the quality of these binders. They are now made entirely of steel, with heavy plate steel base and steel tubing. This gives them strength, which is made all the more enduring from the fact that no solder is used in their construction, as solder necessarily caused them to rust and corrode. As, furthermore, they are handsomely oxidized, the qualities of strength and beauty in these binders are bound to increase the sale of the transfer cases manufactured by the Office Specialty Co.

CUTS FOR JANUARY BUSINESS.

Merchants who make efforts to do a good January business will naturally call in the aid of cuts for their advertising. The Standard Electrotype Co., Wilmington, Delaware, U.S.A., have gone largely into the supplying of cuts for merchants' ads., and suitable cuts are now among the easiest and cheapest things to obtain. The first small cost of the cuts is further reduced when you take into consideration the fact that they can be used in newspapers, circulars, dodgers, and all sorts of printed matter for years to come. They invite readers of THE REVIEW to send photo. views of stores, etc., for reproduction, and will quote prices on inquiry.

TO REPRESENT P. GARNEAU, FILS & CIE.

Mr. Percy Ross left Quebec on December 26 for Winnipeg, where he will take charge of the above firm's Western business. Mr. Ross' experience and well-known ability is an assurance of his success, and his appointment will, no doubt, be appreciated by the numerous friends this enterprising firm have in the west. Mr. Ross has been on Messrs. P. Garneau, Fils & Cie.'s staff for a number of years, and we predict for him a prosperous career.

Toth & Gunther, general merchants, Milverton, have found it necessary, on account of increase of business, to knock the rear wall out of their large store and build a large addition, which they will use as a millinery department and also for their stock of furnishings and clothing.

I. V. St. George Williams, superintendent at John Piercy & Co.'s, Victoria, B.C., has accepted a similar position with McKay, Smith & Co., of Vancouver. Mr. Williams, who is an old Toronto boy, was presented by his fellow members of the staff with a handsome gold-headed walking stick and an address.

Almonte flannels have a high reputation, and have done much to secure a good name for Canadian goods of this class. Mr. James H. Wylie, of Almonte, an experienced manufacturer of flannels, is now making a specialty of military and all-wool flannels, a fact which the trade will do well to note in view of present demand.

Messrs. J. & J. Baldwin, the yarn manufacturers, of Halifax, England, have issued to their friends a very fine calendar and blotter combined. The blotter contains about a dozen pages, each with the "Bee Hive" trade mark, and the stamp of the different wheeling, fingering and knitting wools which are so well known.

Major Weeks, who commands the Maritime Province company of the first Canadian contingent, is of good Prince Edward Island stock and connected with the dry goods trade. He is a son-in-law of Mr. Wm. A. Weeks, formerly head of the firm of W. A. Weeks & Co., Charlottetown, now Weeks & Co. (consisting of Messrs. C. D. Weeks, C. Leigh, jr., and L. G. Whear).

Manufacturers are always glad to know just where they can purchase the numerous trimmings, etc., which they require. M. Markus, Montreal, carries a full stock of all the trimmings required by clothing, mantle, shirt, neckwear, fur, corset, and suspender manufacturers, and makes a specialty of felt for clothing, mantles, caps and shoes. M. Markus also furnishes other requisites for hat and fur trade, as well as labels and hangers of all kinds. He has had considerable experience, and knows the wants of the trade. Merchants can count on having their orders filled promptly and without delay.

The manufacturers of the "Silent Salesman" show cases, John Phillips & Co., Fort street east, Detroit, Mich. (whose announcement appears on page 91), are shipping these noted cases to the Canadian trade from their Windsor, Ont., branch thus saving duty to the Canadian purchaser. The improvements necessary in store premises everywhere nowadays cause a demand for such fine articles as these show cases, which the enterprising dealer should not miss. Full circulars, prices, etc., by dropping a card to the manufacturers.

The National Rubber Co., which has lately been formed, will be the fifth large rubber manufacturing concern in Canada. The proprietors of the firm are: Mr. L. N. Rosenthal, formerly one of the partners in the Beaver Rubber Co. and brother of E. L. Rosenthal of that firm, and the Messrs. Glickman, of Glickman & Glickman, wholesale dry goods merchants. The new business will be carried on at 445 St. Paul street, Montreal, and it is expected that operations will be begun about January 15, 1900. Mr. Rosenthal made the first rubber coat ever made in Canada, some 12 or 13 years ago.

COMMERCIAL TRAVELERS, THE RAILWAYS AND BAGGAGE.

THE question of convenience, time and profit, in relation to the commercial travelers and the railways, suggests a few ideas which might be considered by both interests.

The railways and their employes are, as a rule, ever ready to facilitate this part of their traffic, and it is no small part, either.

The commercial travelers have rarely appreciated the trouble the railways have in the handling, checking and all the other et ceteræ of this immense traffic.

There are probably 10,000 commercial travelers, carrying, in the year, say, nearly 5,000 tons of baggage, on which the railways collect nothing direct. When this is considered, with the cost of the excess cards, prepaid certificates, and baggage-men, it is easily seen that the balance of baggage that pays its way must also pay for that which is nominally free.

Why not make all commercial baggage pay for being carried, and formulate a price that would be known to everyone—say, 100 lb. of baggage, 100 miles, for 10c.? This sum may be too low or too high, but no doubt their mathematicians could give a price that would pay the railways.

Were this system introduced, it would save the railways the cost of excess tickets and prepaid certificates. It would save the baggagemen no end of trouble just when a train was leaving. It would end the question of a commercial traveler handing any baggage to a companion going light. The idea being still further followed out would be facilitated by books of coupon tickets, which could be issued by the railways for any mileage or weight of baggage, and interchangeable on any line of railway or boat.

So far this may read as if it was all well studied out for the railways' benefit, but an idea to be of enough value for adoption between two people must be of value to both.

Were this idea adopted, the commercial travelers could have their baggage all settled for, before they leave for their trip, by the firm. When leaving a station, the time lost in having to be there long before train time to have excess made out or prepaid certificate attended to, is well known to mostly every man on the road. Under this idea, commercial baggage could be checked as any ordinary traveler's trunks. On arrival at its destination it could be settled for by the commercial traveler. If he traveled 50 miles he would simply give up 50 miles in coupons. Every firm knows to a pound or two what their travelers are carrying and how long a trip they will have, so the matter could easily be calculated, and it is much satisfaction to know your baggage is all settled for. By this idea the commercial traveler has the very last moment in the town he is leaving for business, just saving enough time to pack and get to the station. Under the present system he must be there from at least a quarter of an hour before train time. Then, a commercial traveler has more time when he arrives to look after the railway's requirements.

These books of coupons would have the commercial traveler's name and certificate number and firm's name. Each coupon being numbered, belonging to a series, would easily be checked by the railways.

Should a commercial traveler send part of his baggage back to his firm before he has completed his trip it is easy to compute the number of coupons to pay on the balance.

Should a commercial traveler not use his entire book, the balance could be used on a later trip, or used as part payment on a new book.

The amount of money saved to the railways by this method would very likely permit a reduction of the rate per mile on commercial travelers' passenger transportation, possibly bringing it to 2c. a mile, and, if this were so, there would be no reason why the employers of travelers would not also buy the passenger as well as the baggage transportation for their travelers, for their entire trip, before they leave.

These suggestions are submitted for criticism, and the promoter would be glad to get opinions from men on the road.

A COMMERCIAL TRAVELER.

FAVORITE FABRICS.

Among fabrics most favored, the first in rank is cloth of which at least two-thirds of both walking and, of course, tailor costumes are constructed. In fact, cloth meets with such general approval that it is even employed for visiting dresses, and very stylish and elegant it looks. "We have brought out several very handsome ranges of ladies' cloth," said Brophy, Cains & Co., "in both British and foreign makes, in the latest Parisian shades."

LACE.

Lace consumers are becoming much better informed in regard to laces than they have been heretofore. They select them with more care, and show more appreciation of the beauty of the pattern and the fineness of the mesh. "We," said Brophy, Cains & Co., "would add to this, that buyers will find that it pays to consider the growing exactions of the public in these matters, and in making their selections for the coming season should bear in mind that the tendency is decidedly toward a higher grade of goods. We are showing very handsome laces for the incoming season."

GIVING SAMPLES.

The big city houses are making quite a feature now of giving samples. In this way they please lady buyers and advertise their own stores. The samples they send out are quite small, but the ladies seem to be satisfied with a very narrow piece of goods. To facilitate this giving of samples, a little device, called the "Century Sampler and Pricer," has been invented and just put on the market. The "Sampler" has a number of good features about it, and enables the retail merchant to keep a very sharp eye both as to his prices and to the samples of goods. It is a cheap article, and saves itself both in time and in goods. John Macdonald & Co. are handling the device in Canada, and any retail merchant interested may write them for a sample.

READY FOR A BIG SEASON.

The great increase in the demand for millinery, from all quarters of the Dominion this year, has been a good test of the enterprise of the wholesale houses. All the progressive houses have responded to the development, by improving their facilities and enlarging their preparations for the Spring trade of 1900. Chas. Reid & Co., of Toronto, have suited their preparations to the season. Their buyers have examined the latest productions of all the great designing markets, and have secured large quantities of the newest goods desirable for this market. This company direct special attention to their stock and pattern hats, but their general stock is so large and varied that even a casual examination would be to the advantage of buyers.

SENT TO WOUNDED OFFICERS.

VERY few amongst the general public know what an amazing quantity of presents of every imaginable kind, whether adapted to an invalid or not, are always received from people he never heard of before by any prominent officer of our forces who happens to be wounded in action.

Distance seems to be no object whatever, for, during the campaign of which the battle of Dargai was a part, some thousands of separate parcels, including a gigantic music-box, were either sent the entire journey, or so far as easy transport went, to the officers and men, not one-tenth of these coming from people the wounded knew even by name. Lord Charles Beresford, lately, in a speech at a club, told of one officer who received nearly a hundred letters from devoted ladies whom he had never heard of before, and offering to go out and nurse him.

The writer, discussing this speech lately amongst a party of officers at Aldershot, heard some most extraordinary stories of this kind, the actual letters of the would-be nurses being shown. Some of them came from London working girls. But more strange than these were the eccentric articles sent anonymously to comfort wounded officers. These included a big doll, and a number of toys and puzzles—from little girls—a "Punch-and-Judy" complete, a set of fret-saw instruments, any amount of gingerbread and cakes, and many most incongruous articles.

JOHN CATTO, TORONTO.

For 40 years or more, Mr. John Catto, of John Catto & Son, Toronto, has been known in business as an enterprising, enlightened merchant, and with characteristic shrewdness and ability has attained very marked success. A native of Aberdeenshire, he had his early training in the Old Land, but while still a very young man he crossed the Atlantic, and in the process of time made his mark as a leading merchant. To Scotsmen the department of his business which is of most interest is that devoted to clan tartans, in which he does an extensive business, his goods being in demand not only in Canada, but in the United States.

GET A COPY.

A valuable book on children's and women's underwear, muslin goods of all descriptions, corsets and woollen knitted lines, has been got out by Messrs. Sharp, Perrin & Co., 31 Old Change, London, England, the extensive manufacturers of these goods. It is bound in cloth, contains over 200 pages, and has hundreds of designs and patterns in garments, lace patterns or trimmings, which make it of permanent value. Any Canadian dealer who wishes the book will get one free by dropping a card to the manufacturers.

The G. A. Thorpe Manufacturing Co. are showing special values in whipcord overcoats for Spring.

J. E. De Hertel, of Campbell & De Hertel, furnishers, Perth, Ont., has been elected as councillor in that town.

Knox, Morgan & Co., of Hamilton, in writing THE REVIEW, express the opinion that retailers ought to put their profits on the market value of goods in January or February, and not upon present day cost.

The firm of Blaquier & Jones, Petrolia, are dissolving, January 1, Mr. Blaquier retiring. The firm, which has been in existence seven years, has built up one of the most thriving businesses in Western Ontario, and Mr. Blaquier, who will probably become a traveller, should do equally well in his new sphere, as his experience, capacity and energy are the qualities that tell. Mr. Geo. Anderson joins Mr. Jones in the firm this month.

MASTER OF THE SITUATION.

OLD GENTLEMAN.—Now, boys, if I give you a penny each will you throw away those nasty cigars?

BIG BOY.—I tell ye wot. Gi' me a penny an' Billy'll throw his away.

LININGS.

Speaking of linings, Brophy, Cains & Co. said: "Converters seem to be directing most of their attention to the production of soft finishes, that shall take the place of taffeta silks in the popular fancy. It is worth noting that high colors, about which there was some doubt early in the season, are now taking the lead, and some of the most desirable tints seen are purples, French blues, cerise, bright cardinal, and bright gold." This house is also offering a new lining, their No. M 100 in 60 shades. It is a very high grade of mercerized cotton, and can be sold to the best trade. The finish is particularly soft and brilliant. Their black sateens, silkalines, and satannas are lustrous as silk—prices to retail from 12½ to 50c.

Silver and black, steel and grey, and silver and white are among the combinations shown by Brophy, Cains & Co. They are very tasteful and pretty.

The counter check book is so firmly established a feature in retail merchandising that a recommendation of such books is only good to the extent that the particular book recommended can stand comparison with others on the market. The Merchants Counter Check Book Co., Limited, Toronto, have such confidence in their books and their cash sale slips that they offer to send samples and prices to any merchant applying for them. Merchants who do not use this book would find these samples worth examining.

The Industrial

of Canada.

ONE now rarely hears pessimistic remarks regarding the industrial development of Canada.

There was a time, however, and not long ago either, when it was not altogether uncommon. But it is now even more rare than it was once common.

The explanation is not far to seek: It is simply that the causes have either been removed or are in prospect of being so. Canada, industrially, is developing in a by no means unmistakable manner.

It does not follow that because there was dissatisfaction there was no development of the industries of the country. It only means that it was neither as rapid nor as apparent as of late years.

THE MARKED DEVELOPMENT

during the last few years was not a mushroom development. It did not, like Jonah's gourd, have its planting and its maturing almost simultaneously. The seed was all the time in the ground. And even when the pessimistic could see no growth there was growth just the same. The roots were expanding and getting more deeply fastened in the soil. People who looked a little below the surface in the years 1896-97, the period of such great depression in the United States and other parts of the world, realized that to some extent, for, while commercial dullness was present in Canada, there was never any approach to a panic. Nor was there any difficulty in regard to the currency; there was

ALWAYS ENOUGH AND TO SPARE.

Neither were our banks toppling over like nine-pins and our railways falling into the hands of receivers like autumn leaves into a horsepond.

Opportunities come to nations as well as to individuals for proving themselves. During the depression of a few years ago Canada had an opportunity of proving herself. And the result stimulated our pride and earned remarks of approval from the outside world.

In the United States they learned that the banking system in Canada was one of the sources of her strength, and soon bankers and commercial and financial press were urging the embodying of its most peculiar features into the banking system of their own country.

THE GENERAL STABILITY

of our commercial institutions also gave foreigners confidence in them. And so with one thing and another Canada came out of the dull trade period rather well advertised. This fact has, perhaps, not been as fully recognized as it should have been.

Canada is now industrially in a position where she may be said to have got a good start. She was a little slow in starting; but no one will now deny that she has started, and that too at a gait that promises well. The evidence of this is so obvious that there is no difficulty in establishing a case.

The backbone of Canada is undoubtedly its agricultural industry. In the last report of the Dominion Department of Agriculture its value was COMPUTED AT $600,000,000 ANNUALLY.

But the value of the agricultural industry, as everyone knows, does not end with what it produces: The cereals of various kinds, the fruits of various kinds, the live stock of various kinds, all greatly increase their earning power after they have left the farmers' hands.

Valuable as is the agricultural industry of the Dominion, everyone who has given the subject careful consideration realizes that it is small indeed compared with what it will be, and that at a no distant future.

UNLIMITED WHEAT AREAS.

Within the Dominion of Canada is produced wheat that has no superior in the world, while in many parts of the country, notably in Western Ontario, Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, there are almost unlimited areas of rich virgin soil awaiting the advent of the settler.

In the wheat growing sections of the Dominion the winters are cold, but they are not uncomfortably so; in fact, on account of the dryness in the atmosphere they are not nearly as disagreeable as the winters in countries which have not a reputation for being cold.

Canada has really an exceedingly fine climate, and the opinion to the contrary that prevailed a good deal in Europe is gradually being dissipated.

Immigration, which a few years ago was in anything but a satisfactory condition, has changed for the better, and one satisfactory feature about it is the increase in the proportion from the British Isles.

ANOTHER FEATURE IS THE IMMIGRATION of people from the United States to this country. Most of them are agriculturists, and the large proportion of them settle in Manitoba and the Territories. The number who came from the neighboring republic last year to settle in Canada was 9,119.

Since Confederation, the exportation of wheat from Canada has increased more than three-and-a-half times. If we take the figures for 1898 the increase would be much larger than that, but the conditions in 1898 were unique, Canada being in a particularly favorable position, compared with other wheat-producing countries, to do an export trade in wheat, and not only in wheat, but flour as well. The quantity exported in 1899 was 10,305,470 bushels, and in 1868, the year after Confederation, it was 2,284,702. Only as late as 1890 the quantity was less than half a million bushels. In the abnormal year of 1898 it was 18,963,107 bushels.

The exports of flour in 1899 were, with the exception of the abnormal year of 1898, already referred to, the largest in the history of the country, being 792,536 barrels, against 131,181 barrels in 1889, 574,947 barrels in 1879 and 375,219 barrels in 1869. The proportion in the increase in flour is not as great as in that of wheat, being only 111 per cent. during the 30 years. But the flour milling industry of Canada was never in a more promising condition than it is to-day.

It is well within the memory of men living to-day when the

PORK-PACKING INDUSTRY

of the country was confined to the farm. Then the hog was killed and cured upon the farm. There certain parts were put into barrels, conveyed to the nearest commercial centre and sold, a portion being subsequently exported. To-day there are pork-packing factories from one end of the country to the other, equipped with the latest machinery and conducted on the most improved plans, while their output ranks among the most popular in Great Britain.

Canadian pea-fed bacon is becoming as

THE CHEESE INDUSTRY.

In this particular industry Canada is premier. Any country that contributes nearly three-fifths the quantity that Great Britain imports can be little else.

The exports of cheese from Canada last year were close upon 190,000,000 lb., or over 100,000,000 lb. in excess of 10 years ago. All but about 600,000 lb. went to Great Britain.

The number of factories in Canada making cheese is about 3,000. The output of these would be somewhere around 300,000,000 lb., and the value in the neighborhood of $21,000,000. The value of the exports alone is about $17,000,000.

THE UPS AND DOWNS OF BUTTER.

The butter-making industry of Canada the position into which they had drifted. It was realized that

CREAMERIES WERE THE REMEDY.

Eventually the Federal and the Provincial Governments interested themselves. And, by-and-bye, creameries began to multiply from one end of the land to the other, until to-day there are about 1,200 engaged in turning out butter. The creameries of Ontario in 1898 made 9,008,992 lb. of butter; in 1893, 2,707,570 lb. In 1899 New Brunswick made 6,837,588 lb., and two years before only 919,722, an increase of nearly 6,000,000 lb. Prof. Robertson is credited with saying that the dairying are greater than those of any other Province in the Dominion. New Brunswick certainly promises well. Manitoba made 1,002,809 lb. last year against 987,179 lb. in 1897. The output in the Northwest Territories in 1898, the last year for which we have any figures, was 484,984 lb., whereas five years before it was only 23,727 lb. In Nova Scotia the output was 298,519 lb. in 1899, and 112,798 in 1895. Prince Edward Island is as a butter-making Province, the creameries there last year producing 722,614 lb. We have no figures in regard to the quantity of butter made in the Province of Quebec. It is to be regretted, too, for it must be large, there being 404 creameries in that Province, a larger number than possessed by any other Province in the Dominion. We have no record, either, of the production of the three creameries in British Columbia.

POSSIBILITIES OF NEW BRUNSWICK

Taking the figures we have enumerated, there is a total production of 18,355,506 lb. It is evident, therefore, that the total production of butter by the creameries of Canada cannot be short of 30,000,000 lb. And we are confident that is a low estimate. Then of course there is the large quantity of dairy butter that is still produced on the farms.

With the development of the butter-making industry at home during the past ten years has come

A STEADY EXPANSION

of the export trade, until the quantity sent abroad last year was the largest on record, being 20,139,195 lb., against 11,253,787 lb. the year before. The expansion of the export trade has been chiefly on British account. And there is not only the satisfaction of knowing that the export trade is developing but there is the

INCREASE IN THE RELATIVE PRICE

on the British market on the Canadian article, as compared with the butter from Holland and Australia. For example, the much a household word in Great Britain as Canadian cheese has for several years past.

THE PROVISION INDUSTRY.

The development of the export trade in bacon and hams is simply astonishing. Ten years ago the quantity was only a little over 4,000,000 lb.; last year it was nearly 117,000,000 lb.

Practically our exports of hams and bacon in 1899 alone were as large as the total for the 13 years preceding 1888.

There is evidently not much need for "grunting" in regard to the Canadian hog.

If there is one industry about the development of which Canada can be pardoned for pluming herself it is during the past 30 years has been one of ups-and-downs. Away back in 1872 the exports of butter aggregated over 19,000,000 lb., but no later than 1890 they had fallen to less than 2,000,000 lb. The reputation of Canadian butter 10 years ago was as bad as it could be. And it was due to nothing but the butter-making methods employed. Nearly all the butter was made on the farms, and, consequently, possessed not that uniformity of quality which is so essential to the establishment of a good reputation for butter. But the very causes which brought the butter industry to such a deplorable condition became lashes which whipped the people of this country to a sense of their possibilities in regard to the industry as well as to a realization of increase in the price of Canadian butter on the British market during 1899, as compared with 1895, is 13.1 per cent.; Australian, 8.4 per cent., and Danish, 3.2 per cent.

In dealing with the development of the butter-making industry of Canada during the past few years one cannot overlook the influence of cold storage. At the close of last year, through a system of bonusing, 317 creameries in Canada were equipped with cold storage, while, from 32 starting points, there were trains fitted with refrigerator cars to carry the butter to Montreal, where steamships with mechanical refrigeration were in waiting to convey it across the Atlantic.

THE MINERAL INDUSTRY.

Coming to the mineral industry of the country, we again see a satisfactory development. The most marked has been in regard to gold. From 1875 down to 1895, in no one year was $2,000,000 worth of gold produced, but from the latter year onward there has been a decided advancement. In 1897 it had got to be over $6,000,000 worth; in 1898 it more than doubled, and in 1899 it reached $21,260,437.

The coal industry has developed notwithstanding conditions often decidedly adverse. Last year, the production was the largest on record, being over 5,000,000 tons, which was nearly 100 per cent. larger than 10 years ago, and nearly 350 per cent. above the quantity of 20 years ago.

Coal as an item in the export trade is gradually assuming a more important position. The quantity shipped out of the country last year was

THE LARGEST ON RECORD.

It was 1,140,840 tons, against 645,515 tons in 1889 and 315,793 tons in 1879. And, as in many other branches of Canadian industries, the outlook for the coal trade of Canada, both on export and home account, is better than it ever was.

The total production of minerals in Canada, last year, was $48,438,247, which was nearly 100 per cent. in excess of two years ago.

THE PIG IRON INDUSTRY.

It is 167 years since iron was first smelted in Canada, and from that time until within the last four or five years the industry was never in a thriving condition, although heroic efforts were made to make it so, blast furnaces having been started at different periods in the Provinces of Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Ontario. St. Maurice, Quebec, was the scene of the first furnace. That was in 1733. Ontario had its first furnace about 100 years ago, but there was a period from 1866 to 1896 when that Province had not a furnace in operation. In the latter year a furnace was constructed in Hamilton, and two years ago another for the making of charcoal pig iron was put into blast at Deseronto. These two are still in operation, while within a few weeks another furnace will be in operation in Midland, making three all told in the Province of Ontario. In Nova Scotia four blast furnaces are being erected at Sydney, and by the end of the year two of them will likely be in operation. The four furnaces will have an annual capacity of 400,000 tons of pig iron. The blast furnace at Radnor, Quebec, has been in operation steadily for some years. The output of pig iron in Canada last year was over 100,000 tons, which was the largest on record by about 25,000 tons. There now appears to be no longer any doubt about the pig iron industry of Canada.

THE FISHERIES.

The value of the fisheries of Canada has averaged over $20,000,000 during the last six years. This is about $3,000,000 larger than 10 years ago, and $7,000,000 larger than 20 years ago. But the outlook for any immediate development is not bright, on account of unfavorable Customs tariffs and to Porto Rico, one of our important markets, becoming a part of the United States. The export trade in fish in 1899, while little larger than in 1889, was not as large as in the five years preceding. Last year the exports of fish were valued at scarcely $10,000,000, while twice during the preceding five years they had aggregated over $11,000,000.

THE LUMBER INDUSTRY.

In spite of adverse tariffs in the United States and trade depression abroad, the lumber industry of Canada is in anything but an unhealthy condition. The average exportation of the products of our own forests during the last three years has been several millions of dollars in excess of any similar period in the history of the country. The McKinley and Dingley tariffs undoubtedly at the lumber trade of Canada, but it was not sufficient to put the industry to sleep.

The lumber industry was never in a more prosperous condition than it is to-day. Mills that have been idle for years are in operation, and they are joined by new ones; stocks of lumber have been depleted and

THE DEMAND EXCEEDS THE SUPPLY.

The exports last year, with one exception, were, in value, in excess of those of any preceding year. They aggregated $28,021,529. When the McKinley tariff went into force they were $26,179,136. The exports to Great Britain last year were the largest in 22 years, and nearly $8,500,000 in excess of the smallest amount sent to that country during the last 30 years.

At one time the greater part of our exports of forest products went to the United States. To-day the greater part goes to Great Britain. During each of the last two years we have sent over $6,000,000 worth more to Great Britain than to the United States. And, besides this, during the last two years we have sent more to Great Britain than we ever did to the United States. In the exports to countries other than those of Great Britain and the United States, the total last year was the largest since 1883.

THE MANUFACTURING INDUSTRY.

The manufacturing industry of the Dominion is steadily developing, and is to-day in a more healthy condition than it has ever been. The experimental stage has been market. The export figures also reflect it; and that in no unmistakable manner.

Within the last 10 years the exports of goods manufactured in Canada have increased by over 166 per cent., the value in 1899 being $11,706,707, and in 1889, $4,434,949. Compared with 20 years ago the increase is over 333 per cent.

sudden improvement, and the father who left a creeping baby in the morning returns in the evening to find a toddling youngster. Canada for some time did not appear to be making satisfactory headway. But he is blind indeed who sees not the advancement of the country to-day, and pessimistic beyond all hope of redemption who has not now bright hopes of its future.

It is a long time since Frontenac, Talon, La Salle and other worthies of the 17th century concerned themselves so much about the industrial development of Canada. But we fancy that if they could to-day tell us of their hopes and aspirations of two centuries ago they would confess that, commercially at any rate, the Canada we know exceeds what they in their fondest imaginations ever dreamed it would be. And we can only wonder what the Canada of two centuries hence will be as compared to our imaginations.

DEVELOPMENT OF THE FOREIGN TRADE.

The development of the foreign trade of Canada is a reflection of the development of the domestic industries. Compared with 10 years ago there has been an increase of about 75 per cent., compared with 20 years ago of 119 per cent, and with 30 years ago of 157 per cent. The aggregate foreign trade of Canada is now nearly $382,000,000. This means about $63 per head of population.

In no branch of the foreign trade has there probably been more gratifying success than in that of the export business. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, it was, like the general foreign trade of the country, the largest on record, being over $180,000,000, or 86 per cent. larger than 10 years before, 111 per cent. larger than 20 years ago and 143 per cent. larger than 30 years before. And Canada has now reached a stage in its industrial development when there will be a larger surplus of the products of the farm and factory for export than ever before.

passed in a great many branches, and we are now setting ourselves to the task of developing those industries which are compatible with our possibilities.

During the last ten years there has been a most marked and healthy development in the manufacturing industry.

OUR OWN REQUIREMENTS

are gradually being supplied in increasing proportion by the home factories. This is, perhaps, not so pronounced in the grocery as in other branches of trade, for many of its staple lines must of necessity come from abroad. Even in this particular line the tendency is also in favor of the home products. In the hardware trade is to be unmistakably seen the influence of the home factory. The goods for the supply of which hardwaremen are now dependent upon the foreign manufacturer are becoming few indeed. Cutlery is

ONE OF THE MOST MARKED EXCEPTIONS, but even in this line, as far as plated goods are concerned, we would feel little inconvenience indeed if the supply from abroad was cut off. In textile fabrics the home factories are rapidly supplying the home demand. And the same may be said of dry goods in general, and especially that branch of it included in underwear.

But the development of the manufacturing industry is not alone reflected in the home

KNOWLEDGE FROM OBSERVATION.

One cannot adduce figures which would show by comparison the general industrial development of the country. Figures can be procured to show population, export, import trade, etc. But as to the general development of a country a great deal must be learned from observation. A father cannot state in figures the physical or mental development of his son. But he knows, nevertheless, that the man of 25 is not the boy of 15 either mentally or physically. And, although the father cannot demonstrate it in figures, it is none the less a truth.

He who has carefully watched the career of the Dominion of Canada during the last 20 years may not be able to gauge and weigh her development, but he knows she has developed, and that particularly during the past few years in a surprising manner.

A young child does not sometimes appear to be making much headway in its attempts to walk, but by and bye there is a

IDEAS FOR FRUIT DISPLAYS.

OR the watermelon season build an old rickety fence in back of window and cover the floor with sand. Secure a watermelon or pumpkin vine and place it in a dish filled with water. Cover up around the stem with sand, then place a few melons in around the vines. Back of the fence place a figure of a negro boy holding a piece of melon from which hang a card bearing some appropriate wording pertaining to the display.

A nice idea for showing vegetables is to place a fountain in the centre of window from which water flows and place the vegetables around it. The fountain can be made of tin at a cost of about $3, and can be used every summer in different ways. This idea not only draws attention, but keeps the vegetables nice and fresh. If the window is large enough a good idea is to sod the bottom, leaving a little space for five or six beds of vegetables, which can be filled with earth. In one place radishes, in another lettuce, in another onions, and so on, according to size of window.

A FOUNTAIN CENTREPIECE.

It is a very simple and easy matter to attach a piece of lead pipe to the main water pipe in cellar or the nearest one to window. This is run through the floor of window to the fountain, the force being regulated by the top. Near the top of basin of fountain make a hole, to which attach a pipe or hose to carry off the water and keep it from overflowing. This can run to a drain or sink in cellar. To make the pipe for the centre of the fountain, get a piece of  $\frac{1}{2}$  inch gas pipe about 2 feet 6 inches high, then get a fancy curtain-pole end from a dry goods or house-furnishings store, punch it full of holes at top and solder it to gaspipe, then get from a tinshop three nice-sized tin dishes (basin shaped), one to be about 8 inches in diameter, the next 5 inches in diameter and the smallest about  $2\frac{1}{2}$  or 3 inches, cut a hole in centre of smallest one, size of gas pipe and solder it to pipe 6 inches from top. Put the next size 6 inches under the little dish and the largest size 6 inches lower down, then get a bottle of gilt and gild the pipe and dishes and solder pipe solid to basin. Enamel the basin or paint it white. On the dishes can be placed the different bunches of vegetables, or if you keep plants for sale, as some grocers do, this idea will come in splendid. The total cost of this is very small and will be found to pay for itself indirectly over and over again. If a few colored lamps were laid here and there throughout the fountain it would add very much to the display. By covering the sockets of incandescent lamps with insulation tape it makes them perfectly waterproof and the globes can then be placed anywhere in the water. A few rocks or ferns around the bottom would give it a better appearance. From this idea many others can be taken and carried out.

This is something out of the ordinary everyday grocery displays, and, while requiring considerable time in carrying it out, the time would be found well spent. The fountain is something people will not tire of quickly and it can be used over and over again in displays of groceries without becoming a chestnut.

DISPLAYING SPICES.

A good idea for showing spices, teas, coffees, or, in fact, any lines of goods that can be shown the same way, is to buy

Between each there should be a space of about two feet. Make second row about a foot higher than the first row, the third a foot higher than the second and so on. On each make a circle with loaf sugar, etc., and place whatever you desire to show inside of circle on glass. Stick a neat price or descriptive card in each lot. Arrange whatever you want shown nicely on floor. If you have a large mirror fill in the background with it. Mirrors placed at angles on sides of display of this kind would heighten it a great deal.

CEREAL DISPLAYS.

Autumn is a good time to show cereals. Any grocery trimmer can easily obtain bundles of wheat, oats, corn, barley, etc., by sending out to the country for them. From these, beautiful backgrounds can be made for displays of wheat foods.

Arches, pillars, circles, etc., can be covered over with the grain in the stook and the bottom of window nicely arranged with cereals. Infinite varieties of beautiful backgrounds can be made from this lovely new-grown wheat. One pretty design for instance could be made as follows: Take, say, a dozen hoops, cover them over with the oats in the sheaf so as to form pretty wreaths, suspend them from ceiling by about a dozen or more (according to size of your window), panes of glass about 10 in. square, have them nicely polished and suspend them from the ceiling of window by colored cord, or baby ribbons. Put the first row about a foot from the front of window and about two feet from floor.

ribbons tied in bow knots or arrange them in some neat way in the window, and in each place a nice colored package of "rolled oats" or some other food made from oats or wheat. If a trimmer will only get to thinking of some novel and artistic way of showing these goods he will be able to work out beautiful displays that are bound to command attention and result in drawing trade. I find many ideas can be had by looking through the illustrated advertisements in magazines. Every one of them convey ideas that can be worked out profitably in grocers' trims.

A SOAP DISPLAY.

Shaw Bros., grocers, Cornwall, Ont., were recently contestants in a window display competition inaugurated by The N. K. Fairbanks Co. The display was so attractive that THE CANADIAN GROCER prints an illustration thereof. The window contained nothing but goods manufactured by The Fairbanks Co. In the bottom of the window a platform raised towards the back was covered with bars of "Mascot" soap, and on top of these were grouped piles of "Copco" soap, ticketed 5c. cake; also a smaller size ticketed 2 cakes for 5c., also several cartons and piles of Fairbanks' glycerine tar soap interspersed with a profusion of advertising matter. At the right hand side of the window were several pyramids of washing powder in 5c. and 25c. packages. At the base of these pyramids were plied cakes of "Mascot" and "Ark" soap. In the background were five or six framed pictures; also across the back were strings of advertising cards, leaflets, etc.

AN INTERESTING CANNED GOODS DISPLAY.

An unusually pretty window display of canned goods was made in the store of E. Brown & Co., Peterboro', Ont., by A. Graham, clerk in that store, during the past summer. The goods shown were for the summer outing trade, which is quite a feature with Brown & Co. The scene depicted was "On the Modder River" with a young darkey canoeing a load of provisions. The river ran from the back of the window to the front, taking up the centre of the display. The water was made of canvas painted a dark green shade. The canoe was a real product of the canoe factory in Peterboro', and the "darkey" a figure which Brown & Co. had for some time. As the banks of the river were of real sod, laid upon a foundation of sawdust, and as they were enlivened with the addition of live ferns the scene was quite realistic. On either bank was a pile of meats and other canned goods. Price cards were nearby, giving necessary information as to price and quality. A photograph of this window appears elsewhere in this department.

WINDOW FRONTS AND WINDOW DISPLAYS.

Before a merchant can expect the best results from his window displays he must look to it that his windows are as well suited for the purpose as he can make them. Light, rather than size, is the important in Eastern Canada for about $100. This money, put in a bank, would draw $3. The insurance on it, at the rate charged, 7c. per square foot for three years, would be $11.76 for three years, or $3.92 per year. We may, therefore, base the cost of a really effective front at $7 per year. Apart from the dignity a plate glass front gives any store, this expense would be more than compensated if the improved facilities for display led to the sale of 60 or 75c. per week. The lighting of the window in the evening is also important. The best system of lighting that I know of is one where three incandescent lights are attached to the ceiling near the front, and so turned that the reflectors around concentrate their light on the goods shown. The position of the floor should be carefully considered. It would be better to have it too low than too high, for when it is desired to put the bottom of the display higher than the floor a temporary floor can be built during spare moments. The ceiling should be high as possible, that the windows should aid as much as possible in lighting the store. It would be well, for this reason, to have strips of Luxfer Prisms, 18 in. or 2 ft. deep above the windows.

Not only is it essential, in order to get the best returns, to have the most suitable window, but also to have a distinctly fitting method of displaying each line. This entails the necessity of preparing display appliances to suit the particular style of goods shown. This, however, can be done in leisure moments by either the window-trimmer himself, or by some of the clerks, at his direction. By the use of a few boards and nails, both of which are easily enough secured, a stand of almost any shape can be made. Such stands should always be covered with some material. Paper is good, cheesecloth is better, while for small stands to show high-class goods, felt or plush is used by many dealers. Green, dark red, blue, pink, yellow and black are the favorite colors.

GROCERS AND ARTISTIC WINDOW DISPLAYS.

The grocery trimmer should be constantly racking his brain thinking out novel window displays. He should try to be point in securing effectiveness of display. As already stated, experience has shown that windows of ordinary, or even less than the ordinary, size can be made decidedly attractive. But a poorly lighted window never shows to the best advantage the goods it contains. For this reason, if for no other, every grocer would find it a paying investment to instal, if he has not yet done so, a plate-glass front of the most attractive finish. An excellent front, containing two lights 7 x 7 ft., facing the street, and two 5 by 7 ft. leading to the doorway, could be put in position in almost any town original in his ideas. Some grocerymen think that artistic window display is all well enough for the dry goods and fancy goods houses, and that, owing to the nature of the grocer's goods, he cannot compete in artistic window dressing with the dry goods houses. This is where he makes a mistake. People will, in many cases, stop and look at a novel grocery trim after having passed several artistic dry goods trims without having their attention drawn to them. The grocer's stock affords dozens of lines of goods suitable for novel and trade-winning trims. The trouble with most grocers is they do not give the windows enough consideration. They overlook one of their best trade-winning mediums by attending to minor matters in connection with their business.

Grocers are, however, like the other business merchants, gradually awakening to the fact that there is success in good modern display, and those who are failing to keep pace with the wide-awake, up-to-date merchant who leaves no stone unturned to make his window and interior trimming novel and artistic, will sooner or later be found in the rear ranks with a long hard march before him to the city of success.

IDEAS FOR CIRCLES, ETC.

Every establishment where window dressing is recognized as one of the big paying features of the store should keep on hand a set of frames like the drawings. These can be purchased at any factory at a very small outlay, and after they are used a few times will be found indispensable by the trimmer. They should be made of lumber 1x4 inches. In putting them together a few nails as possible should be used—just enough to hold the structure firmly. In taking them apart care should be taken so as not to split them. These can be twisted and turned in countless numbers of ways and every time have an entirely different trim. Dozens of different pretty designs can be worked out with them, and among the grocer's wares any amount of goods can be found that will make a pretty, effective trim shown on them. THE CANADIAN GROCER in this and future numbers will illustrate and explain drawings of grocery window trims that ideas can be derived from. We will first illustrate the designs of frames that are the most suitable for grocers' windows and which are simple of arrangement into pretty effects. A number of each of these should be kept, the quantity according to number of windows to be trimmed. The drawings show how these frames can be worked together with the addition of straight boards 1x4. Among the stock to be used on these frames the following can be used (some can be tacked with pins, tacks or thin brads, that will not injure the goods), soaps, boxes of cereals, biscuits, brooms, whisks, brushes, packets of tea and dozens of other lines of goods. These designs when covered with colored crepe paper or cheesecloth and then covered over with the goods form striking and stocky looking displays.

The lattice work shown in the two accompanying rough sketches can be made

THE MOTIVE OF WINDOW DISPLAY.

"Why do you make window displays?" I asked a young grocer who has built up a remarkably good business, and who is credited by his fellows as using his brains all the time.

"To attract customers into my store," answered he. "I started in business during the strawberry season, and I soon found that I won more trade by always keeping on display the finest strawberries I could get than by any other means I could adopt. I soon adopted the principle that my windows should be used to attract the attention of passers to specialties rather than to the standard lines."

"Why specialties?"

"For the reason that a woman walking up street is not looking, as a rule, for the best sugar, or canned goods or any of the regular lines carried by all grocers. But many women who have never dealt with me before stop when they see a fine box or basket of fruit in my window and come into the store to make inquiries—see, watch that lady!"

I watched her. She had been wheeling by the store, when something shown caught her eye. She got off her wheel, came to the door, where my friend the grocer met her. "How much are your muskmelons?" she inquired. They both went out to the front of the store, and he came back with an order for a basket of peaches and for three muskmelons.

with white or colored tape or paper. The pillars shown in the archways can be encased with canned goods or almost any line of package goods.

"Now, there's a case in point," said he.

"She never would have got off her wheel if she had seen tea, sugar or any such article. I have got dozens of permanent customers in this way. The grocer who carries nothing but the regular groceries cannot expect passers-by to be attracted by his to these 'specials.' The best way to arrange such a display is to have it to impress those seeing it with the large quantity offered and the low price of it. Naturally, people like goods at a low price, and are impressed by the thought that a merchant has such a big store the great variety and the high standard of quality of my general stock. So people who call a few times to get some of my 'specials' soon get into the habit of buying at least a portion of their regular groceries from me. On these goods I have a set margin of profit, and anything sold below this profit I charge to advertising—unless, of course, they are not worth what I paid for them and would not sell at regular prices. In that case any loss on them would be charged to profit and loss."

"Are there not many people who come for the 'specials' only and never buy other goods from you?"

"Oh, yes; but you see I make some profit on my 'specials,' so I have no objection to this trade, especially as I am constantly getting new customers from this class."

ON THE WAY TO THE FRONT.

The photographs of the Strathcona Horse, published in this issue will, no doubt, prove of great interest to our readers, some of whom may even be able to recognize relations or friends, and all will agree that the Strathcona Horse looked particularly well while on the march. The photographs were taken by W. J. Hill, Esq., M.D., J.P. of Verulam, Natal, and supplied to us by Robert Crooks & Co., Montreal, who received them from their Durban, Natal, office. The Strathcona Horse, it will be remembered, were sent to South Africa by Lord Strathcona, the Canadian High Commissioner in London, England, who bore the expense of fitting them out. Everyone knows how well the Strathconas have acquitted themselves.

window unless he makes price an attraction."

Again he was called to the front—this time by an old customer. She bought a few peaches and grapes for table use. "Now," said he, "She is a regular customer of mine, but if I kept my fruit inside and displayed canned salmon she would just have gone on, and got what she wanted farther up street, as she passes two good fruiterers on the way home."

PART OF A SYSTEM OF ADVERTISING.

"I look upon window dressing," said a successful grocer the other day, "as part of my system of advertising. There are many mediums by which attention can be attracted and customers secured, but there is none that will surpass window dressing when used in conjunction with other means of winning trade. My system is to allow a certain proportion of one week's trade for the next week's advertising, except at special seasons, when I increase the proportion. As a rule I issue a circular once a week to my customers and throughout my neighborhood. On this I always have a few 'specials.' I can generally manage, by buying in quantities to get some article or another at a price which will give me a fair profit and enable me to make a leader of it. Then I devote at least one of my windows, and sometimes both of them, trade that he can buy better than his competitors."

"But, can you keep trade won in this way?"

"I have won a great proportion of my customers just by this means. You see I make it a point to emphasize inside my

HINTS ON THE CARE OF HONEY.

BY MORLEY PETTIE.

EVERYONE aims, or should aim, at excellence in whatever he or she undertakes. The adage, "There is always room at the top," is true in every trade and profession. To this rule apiculture is no exception, and those devoted to the production of honey will excel by supplying the very best comb and extracted on the market. Extracted honey is judged by color, flavor and specific gravity, or "thickness." In saying "color," we might say lack of color or transparency. This may be maintained by carefully excluding all darker varieties from the white. The other two qualities are secured by leaving it with the bees as long as possible or convenient. Some of our best men do not extract until the close of the honey-flow. By this, however, basswood and clover are not separated, and in opening hives after the close of the honey-flow, there is danger to the inexperienced of robbing.

As soon as possible after extracting put up the honey in the packages in which it is to be sold, leaving it exposed to the air as little as possible. Not that it will "work" or spoil, but it has great affinity for water, and the exposed surface soon becomes quite thin from contact with atmospheric moisture. Then, if left in a deep tin, holding, say, 400 or 500 lb., the thicker portions sink and the thinner rise until it becomes graded from very thick at the bottom to quite thin on top, and is difficult to secure a uniform sample without a great deal of stirring. Stirring, again, hastens candying, and candied honey, although quite as good, and by many preferred to, the liquid article, will not pour, and is much more difficult to dip into vessels for sale.

There is even yet some doubt among the uninitiated about the question of candied honey, many regarding it with suspicion. Impress upon all buyers the fact that candying, or becoming white and solid, similar to lard, in cool or changeable weather, is a proof of purity, although in rare cases the best extracted honey, in its natural state, does not candy, even under these conditions. To reliquify, set the can on wooden blocks in water over a slow fire. Remember that honey that has been slightly overheated has a burnt taste, is darkened in color, and will not candy again. On the other hand, if the granules are not all melted it candies again very soon. This suggests a point, in the case of extracting-combs, bearing on the subject. Before they are stored for winter have them thoroughly cleaned by the bees, so that there may be no adhering honey to granulate and set the next season's honey candying early.

For the very reason that all honey becomes hard in cold weather, the best package for retailing is one having a wide, open top, to allow the honey to be dug out, and that may be heated in water if it is to be liquified. Glass makes a very attractive package, as it shows up the transparency of the contents to good advantage. Although not quite the handsomest shapes, fruit sealers are the best sellers, as every housekeeper has use for them when empty. Less expensive and more convenient vessels are tin pails of 3-lb., 5-lb., and 10 lb. capacity. They may be secured with slip covers for the home market, or self-sealing covers for shipment. The most popular package for shipping large quantities is the 60-lb. tin, crated singly. It is about the right weight for one man to handle, and, being square, does not waste space. Have a supply of labels which are distinctly your own, and not like those of anybody else, and put them like a trade-mark on every package of first-class honey. Do not injure your reputation by selling dark honey with your label on it, for many will not understand that it is not your best.

With comb honey, carefully scrape all wax or stain from the sections, leaving the wood smooth and white. Grade the sections into two or three classes, according to whiteness of capping of honey, and extent to which sections are filled and capped. Do not spoil the market with poorly filled or uncapped sections, but extract and give to the bees next season. They will be filled much more quickly than sections containing foundation. Very neat and attractive showcases of whitewood with glass front may be obtained from dealers in bee-keepers' supplies.

Now, as to the best way of disposing of honey: I would say do not be in a hurry to sell at a low figure. Stimulate the home market in every way. Supply your grocers and get them to work up a good trade among their customers. Many never buy honey because it is not brought before their notice. Invite any friends who call to sample your honey, and get them to bring their neighbors and buy. After you have sold all you can at home, sell to those whose business it is to find larger markets elsewhere.—Farmers' Advocate.

TEA AT THE PARIS EXPOSITION.

Specially Written for THE CANADIAN GROCER, by a Tea Expert.

TEA is well represented at the Paris Exposition, and vigorous efforts have been made by various sections of producers to bring their produce under the notice of visitors.

China is, as might be expected, in the background entirely, and, although there is a fair representation of the ordinary products of that country and a good Chinese pavilion, tea by itself does not receive any special or adequate representation.

Close to each other in the colonial portion of the Exposition, near the Trocadero, Japan, India, and Ceylon, all have pavilions for the supply of cups of tea to visitors at moderate charges, and there is some interest in contrasting the different ways in which the teas of each have been put before those likely to wish to make use of them.

JAPAN.

As might be looked for with a land which has recently and most rapidly adopted the civilization of the West, this country is well forward in methods for attracting attention to its products. A beautiful pavilion has been built, surrounded by a garden in the Japanese style, planted by gardeners brought over from the Imperial garden in Tokio, in which there is a pagoda (an exact representation of one of the celebrated temples in Japan), and some beautiful and interesting specimens of Japanese art, architecture and industry. A separate tea-house has been erected and its operations are conducted under the organization of the Guild of Tea Merchants of Japan. The fabric is of the light woodwork framing peculiar to Japanese houses and the garden is surrounded by woodwork railings, the whole being dainty and characteristic.

THE METHOD OF SERVING THE TEA

is much the same as in the pavilions of the other producing countries, but it is somewhat suggestive of the Oriental wisdom and shrewdness generally associated with the wily Mongolian. The menu presented to visitors affords a much greater range of selection, as well as variety in price, than do those of the Indian and Ceylon pavilions.

The card itself is well got up, and printed in French on the one hand and English on the other. It offers a choice of the black tea and the green tea of Japan, also of the Oolong of Formosa, and for the small sum of 50 centimes a daintily-served cup of tea, with cakes, can be obtained. For 1 franc, the same is supplied, with the addition of a small souvenir present and a packet of tea to be taken home. The latter is Japan tea of most excellent quality, and, to anyone partial to a drink of the kind, likely to impress favorably those who make use of it. Of course, it is absolutely different in character from the black teas of India and

The Ceylon Tea Pavilion, Paris Exposition.

Ceylon. With the sample of tea is given some literature on the subject, printed in French on delicate Japanese paper and embodying simple directions for the making of the tea.

CEREMONIAL TEA.

On the first floor of the tea pavilion there is a salon reserved for the service of ceremonial tea, in the style followed in Japan. An afternoon call there is a serious thing, requiring ample time, and, of the latter, a large part is occupied in serving tea elaborately. The tea used for this is of a particularly fine and delicate character, being apparently very little more than the dust which covers the golden tips on the points of the young leaves. It was said to be worth 30 or 40 francs per lb., and was of a very small make, the size being something like the very smallest and most powdery dust, and the color deep green. A Japanese lady in attendance makes and serves this, and visitors take their seats on a dais, cross-legged in Japanese fashion, while the lady from Japan sits in the middle with an assortment of brushes, dusters and tea cloths around about her, so as to produce an absolute cleanliness in all the utensils. Each part of the process is conducted with the utmost care, and, when the tea is finally prepared for drinking, it is passed in a peculiarly formal manner, with elaborate bows on both sides, and has to be drunk out of a basin in a fashion which one must see to understand.

In one of the official guide books to the Exposition, it is stated, so strict are the Japanese in carefulness as to the picking of the tea leaves, that certain classes of those are gathered only in the spring by children wearing gloves on their hands. This may be somewhat of an exaggeration, and is probably intended to counteract any bad effects caused by the spreading of statements as to the dirty manner in which the people of Japan were in the habit of plucking, preparing and packing the teas they sent abroad for consumption by other than their own people.

The heads of the local executive of the Guild of Japan Tea Merchants made no secret of their feeling that they were in favor of consuming their produce, nor did they think that they were likely to do much direct good in stimulating the consumption of Japan tea by the exhibit they were giving, but they considered that it was a duty to make a representation at an International Exposition of the importance of that in Paris, and they were really doing their best to comply with what was expected of them by the Western civilization they were trying to follow.

INDIAN.

The Indian pavilion is part of the general exhibition given in the Indian Palace. The building is a beautiful and characteristic one, but there was grave delay in its completion and in the opening of some sections of it. That portion set apart for the sale of cups of tea is comparatively limited, and is not particularly well situated for attracting attention, but it is very daintily fitted up. The table service, as to the cups, pots, etc., used, is excellent. The tea is made in the best possible manner, and the tea supplied for consumption, while still remaining pure

Indian, is not obtrusively pungent in its character, and very WELL SUITED TO IMPRESS FAVORABLY those who already like tea and may want to contrast the tea of one place or origin with that of another.

The tea-room has the advantage of having a number of beautiful trees growing in it. Those in charge endeavored to buy up the right to cut them down, which the Exposition authorities would not sell, and it is fortunate they did not do so, as in the height of summer they give a grateful shade and add much to the pretty effect of the place.

THE WAITRESSES.

The tea is served by waitresses speaking several languages, who are very beautifully dressed in costumes which, although not strictly having any relationship to India, are Oriental in their general character, and of a design and in a style which suggests that they might have been furnished by Liberty & Co. All are dressed alike, but the costumes appear to be varied from day to day.

Although the tariff was somewhat higher than in the Japan tea-room, excellent value was given in the quality of the tea and of the cakes, etc., supplied, and this exhibit might be considered a very fair bid on the part of the Indian tea people to popularize their produce among the visitors to the Exposition. A considerable number of those seemed to appreciate the advantages of an afternoon cup of tea, but it was not very clear whether those were French people experimenting in what to them was a novelty, or visitors from other lands who were merely following "their custom of an afternoon."

CEYLON.

Closely adjoining — in fact, practically part of the same block of buildings as the Indian palace — came that of Ceylon, which was by no means so beautiful in its design and execution or in the wealth of its characteristic detail. Still, it served its purpose as a shelter for the representation of the products and industries of the Island. In this instance, the pavilion for serving cups of tea is right outside in a separate building, with large accommodation in the way of al fresco tables and chairs, much in the style of any ordinary French cafe.

A FEW CINGALESE MEN, with their characteristic tortoiseshell combs in their hair and dressed in the usual white cotton costume of Ceylon native servants, assisted in supplying the tea, but the waiting was mostly done by ordinary looking waitresses, who might have been those of an "A.B.C." shop in London. The trade being done was at times very large, and every seat seemed occupied. A small orchestra was playing in one corner to attract people, and this seemed to answer its purpose very successfully.

The tea supplied was neither so good in itself, so well made, nor so daintily served as at the competing pavilions, and the value given for money was inferior to that in either of the other two, but that appeared to be of little consequence. Ceylon tea has been so well advertised, not only throughout the Exposition, but throughout Paris in general, and the situation of the pavilion, at a point where many footways met and crossed, being a desirable one, there was no necessity to give more to the customers than they expected. A very large trade was being done, and, apparently, many of the visitors were French people, and numbers had frequently to be turned away.

CEYLON TEA WELL PUSHED.

Ceylon tea generally, throughout the exhibition, was being exceedingly well pushed in the restaurants, the Ceylon commissioners having made contracts with most of those to supply pure Ceylon tea, and a neighboring restaurant (with a familiar English name) had actually gone the length of cutting under the rates charged at the tea pavilion, to attract people into their place for cups of Ceylon afternoon tea.

TEA GENERALLY MORE IN EVIDENCE.

In Paris generally, tea was certainly more in evidence than ever before, several well-known English concerns having opened depots and a large number of places having been induced specially to push certain Ceylon teas that were being exhibited. It is doubtful whether any permanent effect of consequence will be produced on the tea consumption of France, but the many visitors from other countries, who passed through those tea sections and stopped to experiment or to refresh themselves, cannot fail to have some influence upon the consumption on their return to the countries from which they came.

SACCHARIN.

CONSIDERABLE interest is being manifested in Germany in regard to the provisions of the coming Act for the restriction of the sale of saccharin and similar coal-tar sweetening products. The Deutsche Zuckerindustrie points out that defective legislation, such as may not unreasonably be apprehended, unless the sugar manufacturers are fully on the alert, might easily result in the replacement of say 1,000,000 centner of true sugar by the spurious article.

Meanwhile, the following regulations for the sale of saccharin and similar compounds have been adopted in Russia, and printed in The International Sugar Journal.

Only apothecaries and druggists are allowed to sell them, the latter being required to obtain a special license.

Seccharin is only delivered on the production of a medical receipt.

Artificial sweetening substances are unconditionally prohibited in the preparation of articles of food.

Only apothecaries and druggists are allowed to import them.

The production of saccharin and similar substances is only permitted on condition that the products are delivered exclusively to those to whom the sale is allowed.

The import of articles of food and consumption containing artificial sweetening substances is forbidden.

Infractions of these regulations involve the confiscation of the products and three months' imprisonment or a fine of 300 rubles.

It is probable that the adoption of some very similar regulations will be found to be the only means of putting a stop to the use of these noxious substances in Germany also.

MONTREAL'S FAMOUS MUSKMELONS.

How They Are Grown to Sell at Forty to Fifty Cents per Pound.

THERE is one product in the growth of which the gardeners of Montreal excel, that is muskmelons. They may grow good strawberries, high-class apples, first-grade plums and even excellent cabbage, but none of these rank in point of reputation with their nutmeg muskmelon. In the summer resorts throughout the United States and Canada, in the various homes of the rich people, in the clubs, or wherever the fastidious of Eastern America congregate during the three hot summer months, par excellence, is the Montreal muskmelon. To illustrate this we shall relate a little true story.

THE ONE DELICACY,

From early spring to late fall, Montreal is flooded with visiting tourists. Most of them come to view the historic spots of the historic city. But there are a few that come to visit the land of the muskmelon. One of these came late last fall from Boston, put up at the Windsor, hired a cab and drove out to Outrement to the residence of Mr. T. J. Gorman. Mr. Gorman presented himself in his usual affable manner without attempting to display the importance of a man with a continental celebration among the higher classes of society. This at first surprised the aristocratic Bostonian, but he recovered in time to state the object of his visit.

"I want to see your melon patch, Mr. Gorman."

"Why, the melons are all gone, sir, and the patch is cleared."

"Well, never mind, I have to see where you grow your melons. I came all the way from Boston to see your patch and I'm going to see it."

"Well, come with me, then," and Mr. Gorman took him out to the bare spot of earth. "That is where I grew my melons this year."

HE TOOK OFF HIS HAT.

The Bostonian reverently took off his hat, walked into the middle of the plot and began to orate: "Now, then, I can say I have stood upon the spot of earth that grew the richest fruit I ever ate?" One could have thought he considered himself in the Garden of Eden.

This little incident is related not for its value as a story, but merely to illustrate the reputation enjoyed by the Montreal muskmelons. Throughout Eastern Canada, the New England States, the summer resorts in Quebec and on the Atlantic coast, in the clubs of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Toronto, Montreal—in fact, wherever people can afford them, Montreal muskmelons are, in the summer months, one of the richest of table delicacies. Year by year, they are growing in popular favor at a rate reckoned only by geometrical proportion, and this year the demand has been so great that it has exceeded the supply.

THE EFFECT OF THE SOIL.

The excellence of the Montreal melons is due chiefly to the character of the soil found on the Island, to the damp weather

MR. THEOPHILE JOSEPH DECARIE,
The most extensive grower of muskmelons on the Island of Montreal.

and to the care taken in the growth. It is said that, no matter how much care be taken with the melons nor how much nursing be given them, they cannot be grown 10 miles away from Montreal with the same success as follows the efforts of the growers near the city. There is something in the soil, what it is no one seems to know, that gives them a flavor and a size that cannot be found joined in melons grown elsewhere. The nursing that must be given them is also of much account. From the time the seed is sown, in April, until the last melon is gathered, in October—seven months—they must ever be under the watchful eye of the grower, if he wishes to attain to paramount success. Occasionally, one can come across a melon grown out in the open fields, just like pumpkins, that will rival those that are petted and nursed, but, as a general rule, its inferior appearance and size prevents its being shipped.

HOW THE MELONS ARE GROWN.

To grow a melon well the gardeners act somewhat in this way. The seed is sown in the greenhouse in rich sandy soil about the first of April and at intervals of a few days till the last of April, in order to have early and late melons. In three days after planting the growth appears. A week later the vine is transplanted into a 5-in. pot, two vines being put in each pot. It is then left in the greenhouse to grow until it is about 4 in. high when the weather generally permits its being placed outside in specially prepared beds. Trenches about 20 ft. wide and 20 in. deep are dug out in the middle of beds approximating to a size of 12 ft. long and 10 ft. wide. The bottoms of the trenches are spread with hot, rich manure, and in them are placed three pots to a bed. This makes six plants in a bed. Boxes covered with glass, commonly called hot-boxes, are placed over the vines till about the middle of July. These are generally about 6 by 8 ft. Starting in June, the vines are gone over every week and the ends picked off, to prevent a super-luxuriant growth and to drive the nutriment into the blossoms. Watering must be kept up faithfully every day in dry weather.

In June, when the vines begin to be cramped, the boxes are raised upon blocks and the vines grow out underneath, thus allowing the force of the weather to come gradually upon the roots and main stalks. When the boxes and glass are taken off about the middle of July and the vine grows to its full size, six vines will thickly cover a space of 15 to 18 ft. Each bed should grow six good melons and six of a second class—of course, some give more, some less. On a space of four acres Mr. Gorman grows about 3,000 melons.

The melons going through the growing and ripening process must be tenderly cared for. As they come on in size they are generally set on blocks and turned over regularly to allow the sun to get on all sides and to put the "knitted" appearance uniformly around them. The size is developed in this way without affecting the flavor.

MELON GROWING AN ART.

One can easily see that growing melons successfully is an art that requires study and experience before it can be mastered. Mr. Gorman, who has already been mentioned as one of the most successful growers, has produced melons all his lifetime. His father taught him the business. He has a laborer with him who worked a long time with his father. The whole Gorman family pride themselves on knowing as much about growing melons as there is to be known. In fact, they claim that Mr. Gorman, sr., originated the real Montreal melon by crossing a nutmeg and a minorca, the former small and extremely sweet, the latter large and rather tasteless. He worked for three years crossing and recrossing and perfecting the brand, until he arrived at what he and his patrons considered perfection.

THE SEED HIS FATHER GREW

Mr. Gorman still uses and to prevent its injury from the carrying of the pollen by Waltiez, all of Outremont, are also fine growers. All these gardeners stamp their first-class melons and thus preserve their prestige.

THE SIZE OF THE MELONS

varies greatly. The average weight is 10 to 12 lb., but they have been known to reach 44 lb. If a large one has a good appearance, it demands a very high price; some of them bring $5 to $6 apiece on the Boston market. The value set on the stamped melons is about $12 per dozen, is not great. Mr. Decarie, the largest grower, does not raise more than 5,000, and of these he sends 3,000 to the Waldorf-Astoria. Probably the number of the high-class article sent out of the city does not total more than 10,000. The principal shippers are Fraser, Viger & Co., Johnson & McCormack, Hart & Tuckwell and John Caldwell & Co. The retail grocers and produce dealers all over the city handle them, but probably there are more of the expensive variety sold at Lamb's market on University street than at any other city establishment. Fraser, Viger & Co. ship largely to American hotels, clubs and summer resorts and to tourist parties at Canadian points. Some of the points they reach are: New York, Boston, Philadelphia, St. Alban's, Mount Desert, Maine; Bar Harbor, High Gate Springs, Allanhurst, N. J.; Cornwall-on-Hudson, Corinth, N. Y.; Rockland, Maine; Old Orchard, Detroit, Bangor, Newport, R.I.; Poland Springs, Maine; Seal Harbor, and Toronto. In short, they go all over the eastern part of North America wherever the rich live. The other shippers send their boxes to dealers in Canadian and American cities. This year they have not been able to supply the demand. Fraser, Viger & Co. ship a few to England every year but their perishable nature will never allow of these shipments being placed on a business basis. It is only within the last eight years that the shipping of melons has become a business and that they have gained favor so quickly speaks well for their quality, for the proof of the fruit is in its eating.

NO WASTE IN THE OX.

It is remarkable to what extent the ox, when slaughtered, is utilized, remarks The New York World. Not so long ago fully 40 per cent of the carcass was wasted; everything, from the horns to the tail, is turned into money. The blood is used in the refining of sugar, or is hardened and employed in the manufacture of doorknobs and handles; the skin goes to the tanner; the horns and hoofs are turned into combs and buttons, the shinbones into backs of clothes brushes. The bones of the forefeet are worth $25 a ton, being made into collar buttons, umbrella handles and various novelties, after the marrow has been boiled out of them. The small bones are burned instead of coal. From each foot a considerable quantity of oil is extracted; the tail is made into soup. The hair goes to the mattress-maker and upholsterer; the fat to oleo makers; the intestines are used as sausage wrappers or are sold to goldbeaters. Even the undigested stuff in the stomach is turned to account, being made into paper.

bees and insects he grows no squash or pumpkins or cucumbers or any member of that family on his premises. Thus, he can get, on the average, $12 a dozen for his melons, and yet not supply the demand. In American cities the Gorman melon sells for $4. But Mr. Gorman is not the only gardener that grows first-class melons. Mr. T. J. Decarie is probably a larger grower, and this year he sent a daily supply to the Waldorf-Astoria, of New York. Thomas Hall, W. Findlay, Pere Jean and Paul and, although some may think it paying very dearly for the whistle, it is none too great a reward for the labor spent in nursing and for the knowledge gained from the experience of long years. Mr. Decarie has been growing melons for 23 years and can now grow them successfully in a field next to one on which his neighbor has failed. The melon is not a fruit that everybody can grow.

A STORY OF COUNTRY STOREKEEPING.

DAIRYVILLE was a pretty little cross-roads hamlet nestling at the bottom of a romantic valley. The commercial enterprises consisted, until 10 years ago, of a general store, a blacksmith shop and a hotel. There are certain people who will not, perhaps, allow that the last-named is a commercial enterprise, but it is to be hoped they will allow it to pass as such for just this once. For 30 years these three commercial enterprises had been doing business. And all that time without a competitor nearer than the next village. But, 10 years ago, the monotony was broken—at least, as far as the general store was concerned—for about that time a competitor settled down at the only one of the four corners that was unoccupied.

It should have been stated that, up to the advent of the new store, three out of the four corners were occupied respectively by the general store, the hotel and the blacksmith shop.

The new storekeeper was John Taylor, the son of a well-to-do farmer whose farm was on the next concession. John had early in life shown a dislike to the farm.

"Well, my boy," said Taylor sr., to his son one day, "I would rather you'd stay on the farm, but if you must be a storekeeper I suppose you must. However, I want you to begin right. I've seen the folly of young fellows going direct from farming to storekeeping. You've got to learn to steer a business just as well as you've got to learn to steer a plough. And the one's a blamed sight harder than the other. Now, I'm going to send you first to a business college. After you've got through the college, if you're still determined to go storekeeping you must put in four or five years with some bright, up-to-date merchants. Then, if you like, I'll put you up a store on that vacant corner. I was thinking of trying to sell that lot, but, as the taxes don't amount to much, I'll hold it till you are ready to start up. Another thing I want you to do is to subscribe for a good trade paper."

Young Taylor was wise enough to act upon his father's advice. He went through a well-known business college, and, after that, served five years with a wide-awake country merchant who believed in teaching his clerks all he could about the business.

"I have been clerking for over four years now," said young Taylor to his father one day while home for a short holiday. "I have learned a great deal, but I have a great deal yet to learn. I am sure, however, that I could now successfully run a business of my own."

Accordingly, it was arranged before he returned to his employer that not only should the store be erected but that his father should supplement by a snug little sum the capital he had saved during his clerkship.

It was early in December when John Taylor's sign was hung outside the new store and everything was ready for business. The store was bright and fitted up with many modern appurtenances, included in which was a spacious plate-glass window on either side of the main entrance. To the astonishment of the natives he had attractive displays of goods in his windows. And on the goods were neat cards giving prices or information of some kind.

"Well, I don't think I need be afraid of his prices," muttered to himself old Alex. McTavish, who kept the general store on the other corner, "they are just about what I get myself. But I don't believe in ticketing your goods. Then, as to advertising, it's a waste of money. The two columns Taylor has got in this week's Mirror will eat away quite a little slice of his profit."

It was obvious, however, that old man McTavish did not feel at his ease. And he told his wife so after he had closed up shop.

"I have made enough money during the 30 years I have been in business to keep us comfortably during the rest of our days. And I wouldn't like to lose it. Then, you know, there is Tom. We always intended the business should be his after I was gone. But, if there isn't going to be enough in it for me, how will there be enough in it for him?"

Tom, it should be explained, was the only son, who was the head clerk in the store of a merchant in a town several miles away. His excuse for going away was that there was not enough in the business to keep two of them. But, in reality, he went away because his father set his foot on nearly every modern business idea he suggested.

For a short time after the new store started, there was not much that perturbed the equanimity of old man McTavish. But, by-and-bye, rumors came to him that the new storekeeper was cutting prices. And, eventually, rumor began to give specific instances. Then the old man's combative qualities became aroused, and he began to cut prices. And Taylor, the other storekeeper, gave him a Roland for his Oliver every time. A year went on in this way, until McTavish found that he was actually losing money, although the volume of his business did not appear to deteriorate much. On a good many staple lines Taylor was also losing money, but, on the general turnover of the business, he managed to make the two ends a little more than meet, for he went a great deal into specialties, on which he made a good profit. But, generally speaking, business was anything but satisfactory to either one of the competing merchants.

Just about that time McTavish's son paid a visit to his father.

"Boy," said the father on the evening of the son's arrival, in reply to a question. "Business is going to the dogs. It is now a losing instead of a winning game. Prices are being so cut that it is impossible to make a profit. I'm going to close up and get out while I've enough money left to keep me. I had hoped that the business would some day be yours, but it is not now worth your taking."

"Is your turnover much less than it was before Taylor started up?" asked the son.

"Can't say that it is. Now that two stores are here more people come to the village to buy goods. The trouble is not so much with the quantity of the merchandise sold as with the money that is made, or rather, that is not made."

"When you heard that Taylor was cutting prices," persisted the son, "did you go over and see him, or, at least, find out whether he was doing as was charged?"

"I did not go near him, nor will I ever go near him," declared the old man with some warmth. "He came to this place to run me out of business. I guess he'll run me out, but I'm not going to stop until my money's gone. I'm going now, while I've something left."

"Father," said Tom, "will you let me manage the business and do as I like?"

"Will I let you manage the business and do what you like!" exclaimed the old man. "Yes, but for yourself. I'll lose no more money in the venture. But, I'll tell you what I'll do in order that you may have a fair start, I'll give you the entire business and $1,000 as capital. With the few hundred dollars you have saved yourself you will not be in bad shape as far as capital is concerned. But if I were you I'd let the old store go and start up in some other town."

"But wouldn't I have competition wherever I went?" persisted Tom.

"I suppose you would, but all the same I wouldn't stay in Dairyville if I were you."

But Tom would not be persuaded to the contrary. He stayed in Dairyville. One of the first things he did after taking possession of his father's store was to call on Taylor, whom he had known when a school-boy.

"Allow me to congratulate you," said

"We will," exclaimed Tom. And they did. The result was that cutting prices became a thing of the past in Dairyville, while business became profitable instead of unprofitable.

Tom soon had the old store remodeled and the old-fashioned windows supplanted by modern plate-glass ones. He also had price-cards in his windows and his advertisement in the local paper.

"Well, Tom," declared his father one day, some five years after he had retired, "I guess you were right after all. There is nothing like being up-to-date."

"And being on good terms with your

Chicago. He was called to New York State to attend the funeral of a near relative. When he went aboard the train that night he was worth $1,000,000. When he alighted next day he was worth exactly the clothes he wore, his gold watch and what money he had about him. The big fire had swept everything else away.

"Yes, he had two other assets I must not overlook. He had his energy and his high reputation. He knew there would be a great demand for goods.

"He came to New York and called on A. T. Stewart, whose customer he had been. Stewart said, 'Mr. Palmer, I want you to go through this store from basement to roof,

Taylor, as he warmly grasped Tom's hand. "I hope you'll do well."

"So I will if you don't cut prices," rejoined Tom with a laugh.

In the conversation which followed both learned that frequently prices had been cut in the past by both storekeepers upon no other basis than a rumor founded upon falsehood and not upon truth.

"Whenever you are told that I am cutting the price of a certain article," said Taylor, as Tom McTavish took his departure, "just come over and see me before you do ditto. And I'll do the same if I am told you are cutting the price on any line."

competitors as well as with your customers, eh, father?"

"Yes, lad; I guess you are right there too."

VALUE OF A GOOD REPUTATION.

"WELL remember an incident connected with the great Chicago fire," a leading hardware jobber and manufacturer is quoted as saying in an Eastern paper "that shows how business men are disposed to aid each other when they can, and proves that a good business reputation helps a man in the hour of need.

"You have all heard of Potter Palmer. He was one of the leading merchants of and pick out what you want, and as much of it as you want. We will ship it West on the first train, and you can pay us when you get ready."

"Our course towards the Chicago hardwaremen was of the same nature. We sold them all they wanted on their simple word, and let the accounts run until they could pay them. One had all of the goods shipped to his house, rigged up an awning in front, and ran a hardware store in his front yard. There was a great rush for tools and other hardware goods then.

"Did you lose anything by this risk?" asked one listener.

"Not a dollar," was the response.

The New Department Store Law of Germany.

An Interesting and Drastic Measure.

NO country in the world is probably so noted for the character of its commercial laws as Germany. One of its most recent and striking laws in this respect was one passed by the Prussian Parliament a few months ago imposing a special tax on department stores, and which has been proclaimed by royal edict to take effect January 1, 1901.

The new law, which has naturally excited a great deal of interest, has been made the subject of a special report by the United States Consul General in Berlin.

THE PROVISIONS OF THE LAW

are substantially as follows, it being premised that it applies to the Kingdom of Prussia, except the Hohenzollern Crown lands and the Island of Helgoland, and that all taxes collected under it revert to the treasury of the commune or municipality in which the store is located :

Paragraph 6 of the statute divides the merchandise to be sold into four groups, as follows :

1. Groceries and colonial produce, food products and drinks, tobacco and manufactures thereof, smokers' articles, apothecaries' supplies, colors, drugs, and perfumery.

2. Yarn and twine, upholstery goods, mercery, drapery; woven, knit, and embroidered goods; underclothing of all kinds, bedding and furniture of all kinds, curtains, carpets, and all material used in interior household decoration.

3. Household, kitchen and garden utensils and implements; stoves, glassware, porcelain, earthen and stoneware, upholstered furniture and materials thereto pertaining.

4. Gold, silver, and other jewelry; objects of art or luxury, bric-a-brac, articles of paper or papier-mache, books and music, weapons, bicycles; articles of sport, riding, driving, and hunting; sewing machines, toys; optical, medical, scientific, or musical instruments and apparatus.

THE BASIS OF TAXATION.

Every store, bazaar, or warehouse which shall sell articles belonging to more than one of the above groups, and of which store the aggregate sales amount to more than 400,000 marks ($95,200) per annum, shall pay a special tax graduated according to the total amount of its annual sales, as follows :

and so on, for every additional 100,000 marks ($23,800) sold 2,000 marks ($476) additional tax.

This law has been enacted for the purpose of equalizing the advantages which large bazaars, department stores, and cooperative retail establishments enjoy over the minor and middle-class merchants whose business is restricted to a few articles and does not exceed a yearly turnover of 400,000 marks ($95,200). At one time during the debate, it was proposed by the House of Lords—the upper chamber of the Prussian Parliament—to exempt the stores which belong to and serve army and navy officers and civil officials; but this was denounced by the House of Deputies as an odious act of class legislation, in favor of a specially privileged caste, so that the Lords were forced to yield and the law was enacted in its present form. Finance Minister Miquel, the ablest and most adroit master of taxation in Germany, who has stood as sponsor for the new Act during its passage through the Diet, has issued the following declaration explaining its purpose and portraying its results when accepted in good faith and impartially enforced :

It will depend upon the mercantile and industrial classes themselves whether this law shall fulfill for them the benevolent purpose of the lawmakers. It will be their task to promptly create and organize with self-helpful motives such associations and installations as are calculated to best increase their power of competition with the department stores. They will have to provide, especially through the organization of purchasing and selling societies, for cheap purchases and profitable sales. They will have to stand firmly on the principle of cash purchases and sales and neither accept goods nor sell them on credit.

In this respect also will the system of organized self-protection offer a wide field of usefulness. The State has already, through the creation of a central bank for the finances of organized guilds, done what it could properly do to promote the interests of the smaller merchants and industrial classes. It will be the task of the middle-class dealers, who have suffered from the competition of the great department stores, to improve the opportunity created by this new tax, to strengthen themselves by improved equipment and management for competition with the large establishments. The State has done its part, it now rests with the mercantile and industrial middle classes, through intelligent, energetic self-help, to secure themselves against the competition of large capital.

Mr. Frank H. Mason, the United States Consul-General, in commenting upon the new law, says: "These are brave words, and every friend of the German people will hope that the aspirations of the Finance Minister concerning the practical effects of the new law may be fulfilled by the event. But there are not wanting many intelligent observers who are extremely skeptical as to the result. The department stores and other large retail houses have six months in which to prepare for the new regulation. It is believed that many of them will confine their future trade to articles included in one of the foregoing categories, and thus evade the new tax. Should they do this, their stocks on hand belonging to other groups will be sold out at bargain counters before January 1 at whatever they will bring, and this, it is predicted, will supply the demand for certain articles and depress the market for some time to come.

"Moreover, a large number of the smaller merchants fail to see how the new law, which simply taxes the large concerns 1 to 2 per cent. additional on their sales and turns the proceeds of such taxation over to the communal and city treasuries, is to help the middle-class merchants and their customers to unite and pay cash for their goods, which they have heretofore bought and sold on credit. The big store, say these critics, will either add the amount of their tax to the prices of their goods or strive by increased sales to make up the amount. The line between the taxed and untaxed stores will be drawn more sharply than before, and the old struggle will remain between organized capital, which can always buy cheaply for cash in large quantities, and the merchants of moderate means who must buy to a greater or less degree upon credit and must sell before they can pay. The weak point which causes most apprehension is that this enactment opens the way for special taxation of all kinds of large industries and landed possessions. At a time when every interest and class is clamoring for protection, it encourages the demand for special legislation affecting special-

With all this in view, so conservative a journal as The Vossische Zeitung declares that the new statute is 'economically and politically the worst law that has been enacted since the memory of man,' and adds that 'when it shall have completely failed of its purpose, the fault will not be that of the smaller merchants and their customers, but of the Government which has enacted the law and hastens to wash its hands of the results.'

"This is, however, only an opinion and may be wholly premature and misleading. Justice to the classes who have asked for this enactment and to the Government which has granted it demands that the

SHOW WINDOWS AS ADVERTISERS.

AT the present day we find that window trimming has become the main factor in the retail trade, and, in fact, plays the most important part throughout the mercantile world, placing itself before such a strong competitor as newspaper advertising and all other means of winning trade. What better evidence have we to its merits and the benefits derived from it than the fact that it is not only being practised by retailers, but is taking a strong hold among the wholesalers, the latter offering cash prizes to the trimmer for the best display of their goods, having found that which, no doubt, would go elsewhere. In my estimation, a store is judged by its windows, as a man is by his appearance, nothing being as pleasing to human nature as a neat, tidy and refreshing appearance. No matter how fine or how poor the quality of goods may be, if not properly displayed they lose their real value.

How many merchants will coincide with me, when I say that it is this sort of thing that spoils the sale of many a good article which, if properly shown, would sell like hot cakes.

It is only after many years of hard labor and the use of much brain substance on the part of the leading window-trimmers in our money expended this way brings better results.

TEA FOR A FUNERAL.

[[In one of the Cleveland public schools, the teacher said to the class in English composition: "I wish every member of the class would write out a conversation between a grocer and one of his customers, introducing some pathetic incident or reference." A small girl handed in this:

Not many years ago the custom prevailed for retail merchants to depend upon the quality and price of articles to sell them, entirely disregarding their show windows, the best and most direct medium to connect with the people. But that custom has heard its death knell sounded in every part of the civilized world. Even the country merchant now wants the expert to create the impression that wins half the battle for them, thereby giving the establishment an up-to-date and progressive appearance, which even the unobservant eye will appreciate, bringing within the doors trade

Canadian Canned Vegetables in England.

HOW TRADE THEREIN CAN BE DEVELOPED.

If the statement be true in a general sense that Canada has been slow to realize the magnitude, the wealth of her resources, it is true in a special sense when applied to her capacity to contribute to the world's supply of fruits and vegetables.

True, the farms of the Annapolis and Cornwallis valleys in Nova Scotia, and of the Niagara and Essex peninsulas in Ontario, as fruit-growing lands, and of many other districts in the Dominion as fertile fruit and vegetable fields, has reached far beyond our own borders. Yet, with the exception of apples, and, possibly, potatoes, no Canadian fruit or vegetable has an established name and sale in foreign markets, either in the green state, canned or preserved. We do export, but in such a small and erratic fashion that our goods have not a sound footing in any mart of the world, except the home market.

To a Canadian who is acquainted with the great producing capacities of our best vegetable districts, who has become familiar with the taste of the many lines of goods which are distributed from our canneries, and who comes into touch with the condition of the canned goods market in Great Britain, it becomes at once a matter of surprise that Canada has not long ago secured a firm footing in the British market, and that our export of canned vegetables does not reach ten times the present figure.

According to the Trade and Commerce Returns the total exports from Canada of tomatoes, corn, baked beans and other vegetables in cans and other packages for the past five years were: 1895, $14,114; 1896, $3,207; 1897, $10,899; 1898, $10,340; 1899, $1,934.

The fact that our exports are so small, compared with the enormous production and home consumption bespeaks some special causes why they have not succeeded better in the British and other markets.

While in England this summer a representative of THE CANADIAN GROCER made a study of the conditions with a view of ascertaining these special causes.

In order to get into the question as deeply as possible, recourse was had to Mr. Harrison Watson, curator of the Canadian section of the Imperial Institute, who is, probably, in closer touch with trade relations between Canada and the Mother Country than any other person in London or, in fact, at any point in Great Britain. Mr. Watson has considered the matter carefully and en-other countries, packed expressly for this market.

"Another big objection is that Canada has never persistently set to work to secure a footing here. This market has rather been a dumping-ground for Canada's surplus stock. In a good producing season in Canada, we have offers of large quantities; when the consumption equals the pack, offers are withdrawn, thus breaking valuable connections and hindering any possible development.

NEW LABELS ON OLD GOODS.

"Looking upon this country as a market for surplus stock has led to the shipment of inferior goods from Canada. For instance, a short time ago, a Canadian firm which had a lot of tomatoes several years old found an opening here. New labels were put on the goods, and they were eventually retailed as first-class stock. They were old and inferior, and I can assure you, from what I heard of the case, that this unwise packer will have difficulty in selling the best goods he can put up.

"If Canadian canned goods packers want a footing on the British, or even the London, market, they must know that British buyers are conservative, that it takes years to establish a connection and a reputation here, and that, having to meet the competition of the world, they must put the products up to suit the requirements of the market."

"Can the Canadian packer count on a sentiment in England favorable to Canada as an aid to the sale of his goods?" THE GROCER asked.

"Not unless his goods are equal—I do not say superior—to what is already on the market," answered Mr. Watson. "There deavored several times and in various ways to secure a better understanding between the Canadian producer and the English distributor.

SOME OF THE HINDRANCES.

"There are several factors," said Mr. Watson, "which have hindered the sale of Canadian canned fruit and vegetables on this market. One of these—possibly the chief—is that the Canadian method of packing is different from that in vogue here, and, as the people are conservative, it is difficult except at considerably lower prices, to sell in competition with the goods from is never a sentiment favorable to a food with a poor reputation. But the best way to get an answer to that question is to see some of the principal wholesale dealers and brokers here. I will give you the names of several."

THE CANADIAN GROCER, a few days later, visited the firms suggested. Some of these were practically unacquainted with the production of canned goods in Canada, and had never handled them; others had experimented with some lines, and were selling one line regularly—gallon apples.

MUST BE REGULARITY OF SUPPLY.

"There is not much sentiment in our business," answered the manager of one of the largest wholesale houses, when the question put to Mr. Watson was repeated to him. "But there is a readiness which is to the market, or is it because of the price that they do not sell?"

"I think any change will have to be improvement in quality rather than reduction in price. Take canned fruits, for example. The British jam manufacturers have for several years been educating the public here to buy fruits which have been preserved whole. Canadian fruits do not reach the standard to which we have attained in this respect, so they do not take hold as readily as they otherwise would.

"We get most of our peas from France. These are given a high, artificial color, by adding sulphate of copper. This is slightly—rather infinitesimally—poisonous, and regulations have been made here to the effect that all cans containing it must have the fact stated on their label. Yet this does expressed himself bluntly as follows: "It is useless for any country or any man to count on sentiment against another man's dollar. We are in business to make money, and when we can make as much money out of Canadian canned goods as we are now doing out of those from other countries we might buy from them, if we could count on them maintaining both the quantity and the quality.

"We have a good demand now for other lines. So we will not push new lines unless there is money in it for us. If your packers come over here and like several United States packers have, there would be no difficulty about making sales. That would take persistency in pushing and consistency in quality for two or three years. After that, if they kept the standard up they could count on a steady demand at prices fully 1d. above what they would get now. Anything with a good name sells for good prices in England and Scotland."

GETTING A CONNECTION.

"How should a packer try to get a connection here?" asked THE GROCER.

"I should say, find out just what the market wants; make goods to equal the finest; get connection with the best broker possible; supply goods regularly, and be content to sell close for a year or two; then keep up the quality of the goods."

BUSINESS THROUGH BROKERS.

"You speak of doing business through a broker. Is that necessary? Do the wholesale houses not buy direct?"

"Assuredly they will if they can. But a wholesale house, no matter how big, has its limitations, while the broker can distribute through dozens of wholesale houses. To do business with a broker is generally recognized as the best method of reaching the British market."

not common in a conservative country like ours to buy from the colonies, if they can give us goods of equal quality at a price equal to what we are now paying, and if we can count on getting supplies with reasonable regularity. We don't desire to build up a good trade for a line of goods one season and then receive word next year that, owing to the unexpected demand from some mining fields in Canada, our shipper will be unable to supply us with goods."

"Yes, we are ready to buy from Canada," answered another manager, "but we must see our way to make money out of the purchase. This we cannot do unless the goods are suitable to the market and unless the price is low enough to compete with the products of other countries."

BETTER QUALITY WANTED.

"Are Canadian goods generally unsuited not interfere in the slightest with the sale of the French goods. But the Canadian peas, which lack the coloring, and, as a rule, are not as carefully graded regarding size as the French, could not be sold, unless at much lower prices than the French article.

CANNED TOMATOES.

"Tomatoes come to us from France, Italy, and from Maryland in the United States. The favorite brand here is a rather small variety, canned whole. Canada should be able to share in this trade if some of the packers there would concentrate their energies on this market and prepare their goods for it.

"As for corn; if your packers want a demand for their goods here they must come over and create it—build it up."

THE GREEN TEAS OF CEYLON.

Their Character and Possibilities.

INDIA and Ceylon, as producers of black teas, have become the world's leaders. And this position has all been attained within the last decade. Ten years ago the production of Indian and Ceylon teas aggregated but 152,000,000 lb.; last year it was 305,000,000 lb., an increase of over 100 per cent.

BRITISH BLACK TEAS.

Out of Great Britain the teas of India and Ceylon have almost entirely pushed black teas of China growth, and in all tea-drinking countries in the world they are exercising a great deal more influence than they did ten years ago. In 1890 Great Britain consumed 136,500,000 lb. of Indian and Ceylon tea, and all other countries 14,000,000 lb. Last year the figures were 219,000,000 and 68,750,000 lb. respectively.

During the past ten years the quantity of Indian and Ceylon tea taken by the United States and Canada has increased over 651 per cent., the total being 2,233,322 lb. in 1890 and 16,776,819 lb. in 1899.

REACHING OUT FOR THE GREEN TEA MARKET.

Having so successfully competed for the black tea trade of the world, a movement has, within the last year or two, been inaugurated to exploit the green tea market, in which Japan and China now hold sway.

The leader in this movement is Ceylon. Green teas from that part of the British Empire have been offering on the Canadian and United States markets for about one year, and they have been received with exceedingly good favor by Japan tea drinkers.

India is now following Ceylon's example, and there is quite a probability that within the next few years will be repeated in British-grown green teas that, during the last ten years, has taken place in regard to British-grown black teas.

It is not generally known that the imports of Japan and China green teas into Canada amount to more than the total imports of black tea. Practically speaking, last year there were imported into Canada 13,000,000 lb. of green tea, and about 12,000,000 lb. of black tea; so that the demand which Ceylon and India are now essaying to fill is by no means an unimportant one.

HE BELIEVES IN ADVERTISING.

The Ceylon tea-planter is a thorough believer in the benefits of advertising, and to promote this he assesses himself about  $\frac{1}{4}$  c. per lb. upon all the tea he produces, which amount being collected by the Government of Ceylon is afterwards spent in advertising the teas produced in that country. In addition to this, part of it is being spent in giving an export bounty to the green tea maker, so that now the planter exporting green tea up to a certain grade gets about 2c. for every pound of it he ships out of the country. But, with their well-known business foresight, the tea-growers of Ceylon have recognized that some badly-made green teas might do more harm to the trade than good, so they have appointed a committee of experts in Colombo who test every tea on which the bounty is claimed, and, if the tea is not up to a certain standard of excellence, the bounty is not paid. This, while it may not prevent the exportation of poor tea, certainly reduces to a minimum its possibility.

THE INDIAN PLANTER

is now taking great interest in the green tea question, and many gardens are sending samples of green teas to Canada to be tested, and some of the newspapers devoted to the planters' interests there, are strongly advocating the imposition of a cess similar to that imposed upon the Ceylon planters, the funds to be used the same as they are in Ceylon, viz.: In exploiting the American and European markets.

COLORING AND GREEN TEAS.

The total absence of the coloring in the dry leaf of the Ceylon and Indian green teas will be a great feature in their favor. Hitherto, all green teas coming from Japan and China have been colored. The Ceylon and Indian planters propose acquainting the public of that fact, and also of the fact that a tea is not necessarily green because it is green in the dry leaf.

The natural color of green tea in the dry leaf is not green but a dark olive or brown. A tea which is green in the dry leaf is only so because that color has been artificially produced.

THE INDUSTRY OF MR. MACKENZIE.

To Mr. William Mackenzie, the Ceylon Tea Commissioner in America, is due much of the honor for the interest that is beginning to develop in regard to Ceylon green teas. For some years he has been endeavoring to induce prominent firms in Canada to introduce Ceylon green teas, but he was unsuccessful until about a year ago, and it was because up to that time the teas had not been properly prepared. Then a new and improved process was discovered, and the result was a tea which met with the approval of those who had hitherto been dissatisfied. One prominent firm in Canada has shown itself to be particularly aggressive in exploiting Ceylon green teas, with the result that repeat orders are already frequent, while the demand exceeds the supply.

QUALITY OF CEYLON GREEN TEA.

The quality of the Ceylon green tea which is now coming upon the Canadian market is certainly good. "It closely resembles early May picked Japan tea," said a tea man, "only it seems stronger and more full in flavor." Judging from the samples that have been on the market for over a year, the flavor-keeping quality of Ceylon green tea is excellent.

A peculiarity in regard to Ceylon green teas in contradistinction to the green teas of Japan and China, is that they can be picked in even quality all the year round. The best quality of Japan tea is gathered during April and May only.

METHOD OF MAKING GREEN TEA.

In order that the planters of Ceylon may be thoroughly well informed as to the best method of making green tea, an interesting circular, giving instructions, has been issued by what is known as the Thirty Committee of Ceylon. The following is a copy of the circular:

1. Take the green leaf straight from the field and steam at once in a Quitah machine (a long narrow revolving box); full steam must be turned on for five minutes and then shut off. The leaf is then kept in a steam box for another 10 minutes, the box kept revolving meanwhile, in order that each leaf will get the full benefit of the steam. The leaf is then examined, and if found pliable (like slightly under-withered leaf) it is taken out and spread on tats to drain off the superfluous water; if the leaf is not found to be sufficiently pliable, another two minutes in box should be allowed. Some time should be allowed for draining off the water.

2. A suitable quantity is then taken to the roller and rolled for half an hour lightly. After being discharged, all lumps (of which a great many will be in evidence) must be carefully broken by hand.

3. The roll is then taken to the drier and partially fired to rid it of excessive moisture, care being taken not to allow it to become crisp.

4. It is then rolled again for one hour. Owing to the brittle quality of the leaf after it has been submitted to the steaming process, it is not possible at any time to apply weight to it in rolling. After discharge from roller, the leaf must be again carefully broken by hand.

5. Then final fired. This last operation must be thoroughly completed, care, however, being taken that temperature is not allowed too high (say D.D. Sirocco 210 degrees to 220 degrees should be the maximum), as the leaf very easily blisters, also a "toasted" flavor (which is objectionable) may be Dust from Young Hyson should be mixed with the lower grades. There should not be more than from 10 to 12 per cent. of dust altogether from the other grades, which is called "Twankay."

A MATTER OF NAMES.

There is some disapproval in Canada to the name "Hyson," which the planters in Ceylon are giving their green teas. "Hyson" is associated with China green tea,

HOW TO MAKE SHOW CARDS.

THE object of this lesson is to give instruction in the art of card writing, in simple and concise form, avoiding complexity, and enabling window-trimmers to adopt and enlarge the field for that kind of work, says a writer in an exchange. In the study of show cards, it will be observed that there are three distinct kinds — plain, ordinary and fancy. The first are made quickly and in an off-hand way, while the second or ordinary displays more taste in arrangement and style of making, and the third embraces all cards that take considerable work, and colors are added to bring obtained in the same way, but are only coated on one side.

The next thing to consider is color. Most of the colors can be obtained in dry form in order to be pure, or they can be obtained from concerns that make a specialty of manufacturing and preparing paints expressly for that kind of work. The colors are put up in small jars, and with them comes a small package of binders. They can be had in all colors. The following is a good variety for a first class writer, suitable for all classes of work: Zinc white, drop or ivory black, vermilion and yellow. The amateur must provide himself with a good and it is contended that it would be better if the names by which the Ceylon green teas are known were associated with Ceylon instead of with the foreign competitor.

Besides the quality of Ceylon green tea to recommend it, there is the Imperialistic sentiment to be considered. That sentiment, undoubtedly, stimulates to no small degree the demand for British-grown black teas, and it is not likely to be without its influence in regard to British-grown green teas.

A constant advertiser has all the advantage of a periodical or season advertiser. The man who keeps before the public all the time leads in business.

out special designs. The ordinary is by far the best for everyday work and should be mastered first, as it is the best field for the amateur.

The essential articles necessary to make an artistic card are good cards, pure colors and good brushes. Pay particular attention to these points. A great deal depends on what kind of tools and material you use for your work.

The first thing to procure are cards, which can be had in all colors; white, being the one used the most, can be had in medium weight coated board in either 4, 6 or 8 ply, 4 and 6 being used for price tickets and small cards, while 8 ply is used for large signs. The dark colors can be set of brushes. It is impossible to do any class of work with poor brushes. The best brushes are made from red sable, Nos. 1 and 2 in small and Nos. 3 and 4 in the large size.

Take a half-sheet of cardboard, mark very lightly what will be the top and bottom of each line of letters, then space of for reading; do not draw the letter, but mark lightly so that they will be uniform in size. This is not necessary for small cards.

Now, having everything in readiness, take a little ivory black and add a small quantity of liquid glue. The quantity of binder will have to be determined by your own experience; stir thoroughly, as most all colors are heavy and liable to settle.

SUNDRY HINTS IN REGARD THERETO.

THE DRAFT DISHONORING EVIL.

IF one can gather anything from the frequency of complaints, there is an all too common practice of dishonoring drafts. In some instances it is due to carelessness; in others it is deliberately designed.

A PARALLEL.

A draft, like a good name, should not be dishonored with impunity, and yet, no doubt, often from a failure to recognize the fact, there are some business men who will dishonor a draft who would no more think of dishonoring a good name than flying. The fault is not so much of the heart as of the head: They do not realize the enormity of so doing.

THE MOST FREQUENT CAUSE.

Probably the most frequent cause of draft dishonoring is slight mistakes on the part of the maker of the draft.

Instances could be cited where drafts have been refused and dishonored because of a mistake of a few cents, or because freight had been charged where the manufacturer or wholesaler had promised to pay the same.

Mistakes of this kind are, no doubt, often annoying, but, because they are annoying, it does not follow that they warrant the dishonoring of the draft.

AN INSULT.

To inform the bank that the draft will not be accepted because of an error, such as those cited, is nothing short of an insult to the house that made the draft. Some may think that this is a somewhat strong way of putting it. Perhaps it is, but it is certainly warranted by the circumstances.

If the house is a reputable one, it will certainly rectify the mistake of its employes. Therefore, to refuse to accept the draft which it has drawn is an intimation that it is not to be trusted. If the house is one that is not reputable, it is another matter. But, why deal with a firm that is not reputable when there are so many that are?

THE PROPER COURSE.

At anyrate, unless the amount entailed in the error is a serious one, it is always better to accept the draft and notify the drawer thereof of the error and ask for a credit note. Such a course is infinitely more commendable, and better for the drawee as well as for the drawer of the draft. In the first place it promotes good feeling instead of exciting bad feeling between the two.

"Now, that is pretty decent of A," the drawer will in effect say. "B wouldn't have done that. If we can show any favors to A we must certainly do so."

Whatever the loss to the drawer may be, because of the dishonoring of his draft, it is most probable that the loss in the long run will be much greater to the drawee.

THE ACCORDING OF FAVORS.

Business men do not give favors to those who take advantage of slight mistakes to dishonor drafts. It is contrary to human nature for them to do so.

It is always well for the merchant to be on good terms with his creditors, as well as with his customers, for, while he may be independent of them to-day, there is no guarantee that he will be to-morrow.

SOME EXAMPLES.

"There," said a manufacturer one day, "is a man whom, when he was in financial difficulties, I did all I possibly could to help. I personally saw most of the other creditors and persuaded them to agree to a compromise. Now, why did I do it? Simply because he one time accepted our draft, notwithstanding we had made a mistake of a few dollars in the amount which we had drawn upon him for. Now, I have another man in view. He has just refused to accept our draft because of a mistake less than a dollar in amount. What shall we do in his case? Well, we are just waiting for an opportunity to do something."

"We have a customer," remarked a well-known business man, "who, a short time ago, dishonored our draft, because, through an error on the part of a clerk, he had been overcharged a small amount. For years we had been giving that man a special discount. When he dishonored our draft I promptly notified him that the special discount would no longer be continued. He knew why we did it, and immediately with profuse apologies. But it will make no difference. He'll no longer get a special discount. My mind is firmly made up."

One of the largest manufacturers in Canada in a certain line of goods was, the other day, questioned in regard to the matter under discussion. "Are we annoyed by the dishonoring of drafts?" he said; "well, I should think we are. Here," he continued, as he opened a drawer in his desk, "are two drafts which have just been refused by a customer with the

that they are not correct. That man owes us several thousand dollars, and, in order to make it easy for him, we made an arrangement with him whereby we were to draw on him for a certain specified amount at certain specified periods. This is what we have done, and the drafts are strictly in accord with that agreement. And yet, he says they are not correct. I am of the opinion that he is merely

TRYING TO MARK TIME.

But he will gain nothing by it. He will get no more leniency from us. Now, if we are correct in supposing that he has been unable to meet the drafts, he should have notified us to the effect and have paid what he could. Had he done so we certainly should have been more inclined to be lenient with him than we are at present."

Enough has been said, we think, to show that to dishonor a draft is unprofitable as well as unbusinesslike.

TIPS ON BANKING.

Adopt a uniform signature, so that your bank may detect a forgery.

Make out your own deposit tickets, and see that the money you intend to deposit, checks, etc., are correctly listed and entered in your bankbook.

Checks made payable to bearer are paid to the person presenting them.

Checks to the order of the payee must be indorsed by party presenting same, making it a receipt for money paid; identification is also required, making checks drawn to order much safer than if made payable to bearer.

A LESSON IN DISCOUNTS.

REGULATIONS FOR STORE MANAGEMENT.

RULE 1.—Keep your eyes on the front door. Customers should be waited on promptly and pleasantly.

2. Wait on children as politely as you do on grown people. They are our future customers.

3. Salesmen, when disengaged, will take position near the front door, instead of the back. Customers do not come in at the rear.

4. Don't stand outside the front door when at leisure. It is an excellent notice to competitors and customers that trade is dull.

5. Salesmen are paid for waiting on customers, and are not expected to turn them over to the boys or new men who are learning the business, while they busy themselves arranging or putting away goods.

6. Don't take a customer away from another salesman until he is through with him.

7. Don't turn a customer over to another clerk, if possible to avoid it, except for the dinner hour.

8. Go for business in every direction ; in the store or out of it ; wherever you see a chance to make a sale, work for it with all your might. RUSTLE!

9. Salesmen will sell at marked prices. Do not go to office for a cut price. It always makes trouble.

10. At retail the dozen price is to be allowed only when the customer takes half a dozen of each kind, or more. Less than half dozen, in all cases, to be at price for each.

11. Sorting up a line of goods allowed to make the quantity, the highest dozen price of the lot to be charged, when half a dozen or more are bought.

12. Clerks or other dealers are to be charged regular retail prices. If the houses they work for buy the goods for them it is a different matter.

13. Don't send a customer up stairs or down by himself.

14. Salesmen will avoid the responsibility of trusting customers whose credit is unknown to them by referring all such cases to the manager. Extending credit without authority makes the salesmen responsible for the amount.

15. In opening a new account get the business and post office address of the customer correctly.

16. Never show a price-list to a customer; it confuses him.

17. Salesmen are expected to sell the goods we have, not the goods we have not.

18. Salesmen are responsible for their mistakes and any expense attending their correction.

19. Always charge goods first in the day books. Make out the bill from the charge in the book. Make this an invariable rule.

20. If you have a charge to make, enter it before waiting on another customer ; your memory is apt to be defective and the sale forgotten before it is entered.

21. All cash bills over $5 enter in your sales book.

22. Make your charges accurate in detail or description by number, size, etc. By so doing, it facilitates correction, in case of a dispute with the customer.

23. Close your entry books after making entry. Valuable information may be gained by competitors.

24. Clerks receiving change from the desk will count the same and see if correct before handing to the customer. Always hand the cash memorandum with the money to the cashier.

25. If you know of an improvement of any kind, suggest it at once to the manager ; it will be impartially considered.

26. Keep retail stock full and complete on the shelves, so as to avoid detaining customer. Notify each man in charge of a division when you find anything short in it.

27. Always put the stock in order when through waiting on customers.

28. Each clerk is expected to see that his department is kept clean and in perfect order.

29. In arranging goods, put the smallest to the front ; when the same size, cheapest to the front.

30. Use the early part of the day and the last hour before closing in sorting and straightening up.

31. Prices are not to be cut. Report every cut price by other firms to the manager after the customer is gone, unless he is a well-known and regular customer, in which case report at once.

32. Do not smoke during business hours, in or about the store.

33. Employes are requested to wear their coats in the store. It is not pleasant for a lady to have a gentleman waiting on her in his shirt sleeves, or with his hat on.

34. Employes are expected to be on hand promptly at the hour of opening.

35. Employes will remain until the hour of closing, unless excused by the manager.

36. The company will ask of you as little work after regular hours as possible. When demanded by the necessities of business, a willing and hearty response will be appreciated.

37. If an employe desires to buy anything from stock, he must buy it of the manager ; in no case take anything without doing so.

38. In purchasing for individual use around town, under no circumstances use the name of the company as a means to buy cheaper.

39. Employes pay for whatever they damage ; they are placed on their honor to report and pay for it.

40. Employes using bicycles will keep them in the cellar or in the back yard ; they must not be left where they will cause inconvenience.

41. Conversation with the bookkeeper, or the cashier, except on business, interferes materially with the work. Do not forget this.

42. Watch the ends of stock, make as few as possible, and always work them off first, to keep the stock clean.

43. Keep mum about our business. Always have a good word to say for it, and never say it is dull. Keep your eyes and ears open about your competitors.

IT WILL PAY YOU TO LEARN THE FOLLOWING BY HEART.

Towards customers be more than reasonably obliging ; be invariably polite and attentive, whether they be courteous or exacting, without any regard to their looks or condition, unless, indeed, you be more obliging and serviceable to the humble and ignorant.

The more self-forgetting you are, and the more acceptable you are to whomsoever your customer may be, the better you are as a salesman. It is your highest duty to be acceptable to all.

Cultivate the habit of doing everything rapidly ; do thoroughly what you undertake, and do not undertake more than you can do well.

Serve buyers in their turn. If you can serve two at once, very well ; but do not let the first one wait for the second.

In your first minute with a customer you give him an impression, not of yourself, but of the house, which is likely to determine, not whether he buys of you, but whether he becomes a buyer of the house or a talker against it.

If you are indifferent, he will detect it before you sell him, and his impression is made before you have uttered a word. At the outset, you have to guess what grade of goods he wants, high-priced or low-priced. If you do not guess correctly, be quick to discover your error, and right yourself instantly ; it is impertinent to insist upon

"BUSTED AG'IN."

OPPOSITE the railroad depot down in a Virginian town there was, according to The Washington Evening Star, a grocery kept by a colored man, and, as we had some time to wait for the train, three or four of us crossed over to look at his stock, said a commercial traveler.

Business was very brisk with the mer-

"To keep de dirt out o' de holes, sah. Can't no dirt git in dar now."

"Was it your own idea?"

"No, sah. I never should ev got dat idea if it had't been fur Deacon Williams. De deacon said it was de way dey did down in Greenville, and so he contrived to fix 'em fur me without cost."

"The deacon buys all his groceries here, doesn't he?"

"He does, sah; yes, sah, he buys 'em all yere, an' he wus tellin' me only dis mawning dat he nebber did see de beat o' how dem groceries held out."

the fulfillment of, and having made a promise, do more than your share towards its fulfillment, and see that the next after you does his share, if you can.

Never run down your competitors to customers. By so doing you advertise them. It won't pay you to get trade in that way. Competitors can talk back.

To sum up and put this whole matter in a few words: Attend strictly to business when on duty; be invariably polite and obliging to everyone, not only for the benefit of the company, but for your own good. Remember that civility, while it may be one of the scarcest articles in the market, is also one of the cheapest, and the net profit on it chant, though all of his customers were colored. We noticed that sugar, tea and codfish seemed to sell above all else, and during a temporary lull the colonel approached the battered old scales on which everything was weighed and picked up some of the weights. The hollow in each one had been filled with lead, and when quite sure that the pound weight would balance 20 ounces at least, he said to the old man:

"I see you have filled your weights with lead?"

"Yes, sah; yes, sah," he replied, as he rubbed his hands together.

"What was the idea?"

to the cotton warehouse and have them weighed, and he picked them up, and in a slow walk and very much puzzled, he proceeded to the warehouse. When he returned it was on the run, and his eyes hanging out, as he reached the store he exclaimed:

"No wonder I has gone into bankrupty fo'teen times an' had to sell my mewls and hogs, an' make de ole woman go bar'fut! Dat are pound weight weighs 22 ounces, an' every time Deacon Williams has bought two pounds o' sugar an' codfish he has taken away three pounds an' a half! Shoo, but I'ze gwine to close de doah an' put up a sign o' 'Busted Ag'in.'"

THE SUM OF FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS.

What Clerks Would do if They Had It.

IF you ever want to test the truth of the assertion that no two men think alike, just start out some morning and ask the same question to a dozen different persons. I tried it myself the other day on several clerks in Toronto. The question I propounded to them was: "What would you do if you had $500?"

The first clerk I interviewed has held a good position in an up-to-date store on Yonge street. "What would I do with $500?" said he, "I'd leave it where the money I now have is—in the bank."

"You would be content with 3 per cent. interest?"

"Yes, unless I saw a good chance to invest it."

"In real estate?"

"No. What do I know of real estate? But I do know something of the grocery trade, and if I felt sure of my ground I would when I felt that it was bound to advance shortly. Now, if I had put a couple of hundred dollars into sugar or currants a short time ago I would have made good money. And I am in a position, I think, to learn pretty well when to buy such goods."

"How would you store them?"

"I'd buy for future delivery. The wholesale houses would store them all right. And I have known instances where they bought the goods back at a profit without their even being moved from the wholesale warehouse."

"But you run the risk of losing when you speculate!"

"Well, as I said before, I am of a cautious disposition, yet I know enough of the grocery business to feel safe in buying staple goods under certain conditions. For instance, when sugar gets as low as $4.50 I think a man would be safe in buying it to hold. It might go down 10c., or even 25c., but I would be willing to take the risk, even though I am not a gambler in disposition."

THIS CLERK WOULD GET MARRIED.

The next clerk I saw was a younger man. He laughed when I repeated my question to him. "Now, you're out to guy me," he replied, "you know I'll never have $500 as long as I am a clerk. But if I had I'd get married to-morrow."

"And live on your present salary?"

"I guess nit! I'd borrow $500 more from the wife's father and start up for myself. You see, the girl I have my eye on knows the business as well as I do, and for the first year or two she could help me in the store. We'd make a winning team. But, say, this is only a dream! I've got to go down cellar and clean up. See you again."

HE WOULD BUY A HOUSE.

This young man was not the only one to whom the thought of $500 in his possession brought visions of matrimonial bliss. Another clerk, about 30 years old, who is now getting a salary above the average, answered the query somewhat as follows:

"If you won't mention my name I'll give you the tip that when I get about $500 I am going to buy a house, pay that much down on it, and start housekeeping."

"As a bachelor?" I innocently inquired. (Notwithstanding his 30 years he blushed.)

"No, I am going to be married as soon as I can get the house. She doesn't want to marry me until I do. I hope to have it in about a year more. Now, my name's secret with you, eh?"

"Certainly. But why buy a house instead of starting in business. That sum of money would go about as far toward one as the other; wouldn't it?"

"Candidly, I believe I am making more money here than I would make in business for myself unless I had nearly $1,500 to start with. I don't know enough about buying. On the other hand, we will be sure to save money, as I intend to get a small, cheap house and the interest on the mortgage, taxes, etc., would be much less than rent for a house the same size. No, we would be content to settle down on my salary as a clerk if we had $500 or $600 paid down on our own house. As for prospects, I hope to be a partner of this firm some day."

WOULD PAY HIS DEBTS.

The most laconic answer I got was from a sporty young clerk in a Queen street west store. He would say nothing more than: "I guess I'd pay my debts and salt down what was left. Salt down, I suppose you know, means to put it in the bank."

WOULD BANK HIS $500

Another clerk put his answer briefly at first by saying: "I'd bank it all." But I managed to draw him out a bit by asking: "Would you be content with $15 interest annually?"

"Well, its this way," he replied, "I have $450, and it's all in the bank. And, as I am putting all I can save there, it's likely that I will be content for a while longer. I don't think I know enough about the grocery business to start out for myself yet. And I don't think $500 enough to start with at anyrate. It has been done, but I am not going to try it."

"How much do you want?"

"About $1,000. Then I can borrow $600 or so more and by paying interest on that amount I can get my discounts right from the start. And the money in this business to-day, I have learned, is in the discounts."

The next clerk I saw had different ideas about the sum necessary to START IN FOR HIMSELF.

"If I had $500 I'd start out to-morrow to look for a stand for myself. Dozens of grocers have begun with less. Why, the boss here had less than half that sum when he commenced. Now look at his business. He does $500 business every week. He had the confidence of the travelers when he started out. So will I. I have stood by them every way I could. They know I am square and that I know the business."

"But would you get the discounts at the first?"

"I would not put in a very large stock. I would get a good horse and rig and pay cash for them. I would get my stock from one wholesale house, pay what I could on it down, and give a mortgage on the rest. But for all I would buy after I would pay cash down—and get the discounts. If I did as well as I should, and as I would expect to, I would be able to have everything paid off on the original stock in between one and two years, according to the amount of stock I bought. I would have to live close, but I am in a position to do that."

Only one of the number I saw thought of returning to school. Said he, when I approached him: "If I had $500 I'd next Monday. That would be just enough, with what I could earn in the meantime, to put me through the Collegiate Institute and Osgoode Hall. I am ambitious to study law. At the first opportunity I am going to forsake the grocery business for a lawyer's office, even if the salary is smaller."

WOULD BE A TRAVELER.

"I don't know what I should do," answered another clerk, the last I visited, "but I know what I likely would do. I'd throw up my job and start out to get another as a commercial traveler. And if I couldn't get the job I guess I'd do some traveling anyway. If my money ran out I'd come back to work at this business if nothing better turned up."

CHARCOAL IN THE GROCERY TRADE.

HERE seems to be about as much thought expended in securing economical production in the kitchen as in the factory or shop. New inventions in stoves, automatic cookers and dish washers are steadily decreasing the necessary total of labor in that part of the household. The staple fuels, coal and wood, have been ousted in many houses by gas, gasoline and coal oil. And, within the last three years, a new fuel has been added to the number of those at the service of the housewife or her cook. This fuel, charcoal, is not new to the industrial world, for it has been applied to many purposes for generations. But its general use in the domestic world extends back only three years.

Charcoal is, according to Webster, "coal made by charring wood under turf, or in other circumstances to exclude air." It is hard and brittle, clean, though black, infusible, cannot be dissolved by water or acid, has neither taste nor odor, and burns without flame and little smoke.

HOW CHARCOAL IS MADE.

It was made years ago in a conical shaped pile, covered with turf and charcoal dust. The fire was started in the apex of the cone and burned downwards and from the centre outwards. Now it is made in brick kilns by burning, or in brass retorts by chemical process.

The greater portion of the charcoal used in Toronto as fuel is made by the chemical process. In the works which have been established there are eight large brass retorts of much the same shape as a cart-ridge. The fire is not started within the retort, as was the case when it was made in pits, but the chemicals are abstracted from the wood by an extremely hot fire immediately underneath the retorts. Charcoal is also made by this process in Deseronto, Ont. In Comber, Ont., it is made by the brick kiln process. The best woods for the purpose are beech and maple.

Charcoal, as has been already stated, has long been used for industrial purposes. It is used for smelting high-grade iron, for making powder, for filtering purposes in breweries, etc., for various purposes in factories, and is considered by some people to contain excellent medicinal qualities.

DOMESTIC FUEL.

But it is as a domestic fuel that it is of interest to the retail grocers. When ready for market it is shipped in bulk to wholesale dealers who put it up in clean, neat, paper bags, holding a good half-bushel. It is sold to the retailers at 7c. and by them in turn at 9c. each, or "three for a quarter."

The principal sale of charcoal is done with the middle and poorer classes. Many families in these classes use it as almost their only fuel in the summer months. If properly used, three sacks of it will do the cooking for an ordinary family for a week, which is cheap service. But few housekeepers have yet learned the proper and economical method of using it. The majority of them fill the deep fire-box with charcoal. This is wasteful, as it creates a body of fire that heats the room, and is much more than sufficient to do the cooking.

METHODS OF USING CHARCOAL.

Some housekeepers effect an economy by doing all their cooking on the back pot-holes, putting the charcoal on the part of the stove between the oven and the top. A better plan is to get an old piece of grate and put it in the fire box, about half-way or a third from the top. Enough charcoal can be put on this to do the cooking without causing fire sufficient to heat up the room. The best way to get the most economical results is said by some to be to get a stove made specially for the purpose.

Even more generally than as a fuel is the use of charcoal for kindling purposes. As it lights very easily and maintains a steady, strong flame, it is superior to kindling wood for lighting either wood or coal. And, as it is sold in neat packages, which serve as a scuttle until emptied, and, as it is broken ready for use, it has another advantage over ordinary kindling wood, which has to be prepared before using.

THE PROFIT.

All this combines to increase its sale. The result is that, while the profit on each package is small, its introduction has helped to cause an appreciable increase in the retailer's total weekly revenue. Some grocers sell from 60 to 100 sacks per week, which means an addition to their revenue of about from $1 to $1.50 per week.

The best way to show it is to keep a dozen or so packages by the doorway or in front of the shop, with a price card stating its value. The advantages of its use might, also, with profit, be explained to customers.

THE EVILS OF DATING AHEAD.

LIKE many things that are good and wholesome in themselves and highly beneficial if used rationally and in moderation, the practice of dating ahead, while overdone and abused until it has become one of the most serious evils with which manufacturers and wholesalers are forced to contend, has a legitimate function to perform and is of great advantage in business, if confined within its proper bounds. The question is, then, not shall dating ahead be abolished, but shall unreasonable dating be done away with, and, if so, what constitutes unreasonable dating?

First, dating ahead on goods bought for immediate sale or consumption is wholly unjustifiable. For instance, a retailer at the height of the season, finding himself in need of certain goods, will select them from the stock of a manufacturer or wholesaler, very likely, and, if the season is well advanced, at reduced prices. These goods will be in the retailer's store within 24 hours, and, in all likelihood, sold for cash within a week, nevertheless, he demands, and, as a rule, receives 60 days' dating in addition to the regular 10-day discount. This is a very common occurrence—in fact, the rule in the larger cities and in towns contiguous thereto. The large retailer thus finds it to his advantage to defer placing orders until the goods are actually wanted by the consumer, and, while this is by no means a reprehensible practice, he is, under such circumstances, not entitled to a minute's dating. When orders are placed in advance of the season (and it will always be necessary for the manufacturer and wholesaler to begin selling, and even shipping, before the retail trade starts in) a dating sufficient to place the early purchaser on an equality with the late purchaser is certainly legitimate and equitable. Beyond this, dating should not go; if it does, it falls within the category of the unreasonable.

At present, a merchant who places his order in June for August or September shipment may have his bill dated November 1, although he starts in to sell the goods, we will say, on October 1. The merchant, however, who waits until the season fairly opens—that is to say, October 1—before making his purchases demands December 1 dating, and, as a rule, gets it. Thus, the early purchaser, becoming acquainted with this fact, also insists on December 1 dating, and, if he does not get it, will probably defer his purchases. As a general proposition, bills should not be dated ahead beyond the opening of the season. At present, dating often extends to its close, and the retailer is enabled to use the money derived from the sale of goods to discount their payment. Others, who do not depend upon this, deduct additional discount under the name of "interest for unexpired time," thus transforming the dating into an increased discount, a function which it was never intended to perform. If houses engaged in the same branch of trade would come to some agreement worked out on this line, the custom of dating ahead would resume its normal office and become a benefit instead of a serious evil.—Samuel J. Kline.

A CORNER FOR CLERKS.

Conducted by W. T. Robson.

THIS is a department especially for grocery clerks, devoted to their problems and the trade generally. I confess myself unequal to the task of managing this department, but am constrained to give it a trial in the firm belief that it will prove mutually beneficial in drawing grocery clerks closer together and be helpful in fostering a feeling of brotherhood among them. This only is the object I have in inaugurating this department. My life has been spent in the grocery business, near enough the country to be in touch with the methods of conducting a rural business, and visiting the city so frequently as to be somewhat familiar with trade of the city. My endeavors will be to deal with all subjects on this page in a helpful practical manner.

"Business men were never more willing to place large trusts on the shoulders of young men than they are to-day." This is true. The ability to see new conditions and to meet them is the secret of the power of young men in the world to-day.

Each age of men new fashions doth invent

Things which are old young men do not esteem,
What pleased our fathers doth not us content,

What flourished then, we out of fashion deem.

The young business man must be in touch with the new methods that revolutionize trade in these rapid times. Competition in trade is keen, men are alert, and the young man if he would succeed cannot afford to lose a single point. As a general statement, it is true that a young man's career is absolutely in his own keeping, and he is thus the master of his own destiny. Intense application is needed in every business position. It demands the highest and most persistent devotion if you would succeed. A young man to be successful must stand on his own feet, he must not depend on "influence"; his own effort and work must count. Unfortunately, so many young men are energetic in a new position until the novelty wears off and then they degenerate into mere machines whose places can be filled on a day's notice. They watch the clock and their employer: The first when to quit work, the second for an opportunity to shirk. Such an employe is a detriment to any business. A young man in the grocery business nowadays has a hard row to hoe, at its best. Obstacles are far more numerous than are encouragements. It is unfortunate, but it's true nevertheless, that there are ten people ready to pull a young man down where there is one to help him up. After all, it all depends on the man.

The great cardinal principles of honesty and thoroughness always remain the same. The rewards are oftentimes slow, but in the end they are sure and greater for their slow coming. What the world says matters little, it is the great inner satisfaction that counts. Your inner satisfaction will depend entirely on your mode of life. An upright life in youth means a lot to a man as he advances in life. Habits of dissipation, I care not in what form, kill the seeds of health, energy and success, which are all and everything to a man in after life. It is exactly as a young man lives that he thrives when older. This is a law of Nature and you cannot get away from it.

"A young man should either learn to love his business or leave it," said an old merchant to me, and there is much truth in what he said. A man in an uncongenial occupation never yet made a success, and never will. Where interest is absent, energy and ambition cannot exist. It is the same way in any other branch of business. Have confidence in yourself and your ability to succeed and the chances are you will succeed. In dressing a window, even if you feel the goods are not going to make a good display, and "I don't think the window will do the house much good," then very likely you will put them into their position in such a way—in such a half-hearted careless manner—that it really will be of little use to yourself, and not attractive to your customer.

It is wonderful the different conditions that exist in different stores in the same locality. A totally different class of goods for an entirely different class of customers is required often in the same town. A man going into the grocery business in a new locality must study carefully his customers. He can be an educator, in getting them to use better goods, but in this he must exercise care and judgment. The confidence of his customers is the one thing a clerk or proprietor should continually strive to obtain, and, once you have it, guard it jealously. The average grocer has the power to unmake, in one minute's conversation with the great majority of his customers, the trade of almost any line of goods he sells. I care not how much they are advertised nor how much people are warned through the press to "take none other," nine times out of ten will the customer take the goods the grocer recommends. The grocer must not mislead, or the consequences will be serious. Were he to recommend an article without merit, the result would be disastrous to his trade. The clerk and the "boss" (as the boys generally say) are so closely connected in business relationship that it applies with equal force to each. "Our store" many clerks say, when speaking of the place where they work. When you hear a young man speak thus of the place he is working at, you may bank on it, he feels himself a partner in the business, and there will be no lack of interest in him.

Now, in conclusion, I hope you will feel free to ask me anything pertaining to our business or your personal life. I will endeavor to answer and help you to the best of my ability.

Always sign your name (not for publication), and address me: W. T. Robson, care of THE CANADIAN GROCER, Toronto. Do not ask me to reply by mail.

ACQUIRED ABILITY IS BEST.

In order to succeed, a man must know his own value, says an exchange. Every man has a mind and body with which he can accomplish almost anything, if he only uses them in the right way. Ability comes from no peculiarity in a man's brain matter or muscle which other men do not possess. It is simply trained brain and muscle. Because a man does not inherit trained faculties, or because he has let his faculties go uneducated for years, there is no reason for his giving up ever accomplishing anything. A noted author, when asked by a beginner the best means of improving his style of writing, said that the best advice he could give was for a man to write as well as he could. This is true in any line of business. If a man has not as much natural ability as his friends or competitors, the best way for him to get it is to do his very best at all times. It is surprising how rapidly a man's ability will increase under such circumstances. It should be remembered that acquired ability is much more credit to a man than inherited ability, and for that reason the idea expressed by the Frenchman is not a bad one. His English friend was boasting of his long line of ancestors, and in reply the Frenchman said: "I may not have any ancestors to boast of, but I will make an ancestry."

Hardup—I'm very sorry, but I can't pay you to-day. You see the groceryman has just been here, and—

Butcher (interrupting)—Yes, I just met him, and he said you put him off because you have to pay me. So here's the bill.

THE BUTTER TRADE SITUATION.

SO far this season, our exportation of butter to Great Britain has not been of satisfactory proportions. The total shipments of butter from Montreal to date amount to 233,954 packages, against 408,416 packages for the same period last year, showing a decrease of 174,462 packages. The United States export statistics also show a decrease, and this year Great Britain is taking 41 per cent. less butter from this side of the water than she did last year.

Some might explain this by attributing the decline in the amount of exports to the decline in the amount manufactured.

The price of cheese has been ranging high all summer, and farmers have been sending their milk and cream to the cheese factories, where they could obtain better returns than from the creameries. Within the last two months, several creameries have changed their machinery and transformed themselves into cheese factories. This would stint the supply of butter.

But, if less butter were shipped, simply because it could not be obtained, would the price not rise? One would naturally suppose so. Yet, while last year at this time choice creamery was worth 22 to 23c. per lb., this year it will bring only 20½ to 21c. on the Montreal market. There must then be a slump in the demand. How can this be, when our dairy exhibit at the Paris Exposition is obtaining the highest rewards and exciting general comment, when our creameries are learning their business better every season, and when the Canadian Government is introducing cold storage and better shipping facilities? Surely the quality of our butter is not deteriorating, and surely we can make it as cheaply as any other country.

The truth is that the make is larger the world over this year and Australia is entering more keenly into the competition on the English market.

Our butter has been satisfactory this summer on the whole, although the September make, for some reason or other, did not turn out as good quality as usual. Still, this ought not to materially affect prices.

They are being kept down by Australian pressure. Both Australia and New Zealand are making great strides in the production of butter for the English market, the imports from those countries into Great Britain for the month of September last being 30,930 packages, against 23,042 packages for the corresponding Period last year. The imports for the nine months ending September 30, 1900, were 696,713 packages, against 439,072 packages for the same period last year, and 313,839 packages in 1898.

Although the English make is larger this year than last and other countries are also producing more butter than usual, thus making the feeling here rather easy during the last few weeks, there is evidently a steadier feeling in butter this week. There has been more demand for choice creamery, while dairy butter can hardly be obtained. English advices also tell of a firmer feeling and an improved trade with cooler weather.

Both in Montreal and the country there has been quite a lot of speculative buying in the expectation that prices will advance later on. Present cable limits, however, will not warrant top prices being paid in this market, so that if they are paid they are either for local consumption or speculative export account. Speculators should remember that last fall bargaining was being carried on with English buyers on a basis of 20 to 20½c. The outlook seems to be no brighter this year.

An air-ship should sail well these days, when the atmosphere is so heavily charged with political gas.

THE DEFICIENCY IS IN BUSINESS COMMONSENSE.

EACH of the political parties which is now appealing for the votes of the Canadian people is devoting a great deal of time in trying to demonstrate that it possesses in a higher degree than the other the quality of loyalty to the Mother Country.

They would be much better employed were they searching their brains for schemes for the commercial advancement of the country.

No sensible man impugns the loyalty of either party to Great Britain. Both parties have no doubt men within their ranks whose loyalty is not of the approved brand, but, to the whole, they are as but a drop in the bucket. What then, is the use of Conservative or Liberal wasting his time in proving that which no one except foolish partisans has called into question?

If it was the business ability of the respective parties that was called into question, there would be food indeed for argument. Neither party has any of that quality to spare. That is possibly the explanation of the numerous and verbose speeches in regard to loyalty and the few and brief speeches in regard to the quality of business.

It is not loyalty, but business commonsense, that the average politician needs to be inoculated with.

A BAD SIGN.

MERCHANTS who exhibit a high degree of enterprise may excite the envy of competitors, but they secure the admiration of customers.

It is a bad sign when one merchant becomes envious of another. It is an outward sign of an inward realization that his competitor is leaving him behind.

A TREATY WITH TRINIDAD—WHO WILL SECURE IT?

NOTWITHSTANDING the excitement in the United States consequent upon the Presidential election, quite a little interest is being developed, particularly among the commercial class in New York, in regard to the trade of Trinidad.

In February last, a convention was signed on behalf of the United States and Trinidad, in which it was agreed that the products of each country were to be accorded certain reciprocal advantages under their respective tariffs. For the ratification of this convention by the Congress of the United States and the Legislature of Trinidad, six months were to be allowed. Almost forthwith, the Legislature of Trinidad did its part towards the ratification. The matter came before the Senate of the United States, but that body succeeded in dilly-dallying with it until ratification was made impossible by the adjournment of Congress. By limitation of time, therefore, the convention signed in February expired about the middle of August last.

According to the provisions of the proposed treaty, the United States were to give the sugar, fruit and vegetables of Trinidad a reduction of 12½ per cent. in the regular duties. Trinidad, on the other hand, agreed to admit free of duty agricultural implements, cars and railway equipment, and other forms of machinery, from the United States. Besides this, reductions were to be made on breadstuffs and provisions.

By the commercial interests of the United States the convention was considered favorable to themselves, and the failure of the Senate to ratify it is difficult to understand.

The New York Journal of Commerce, in a recent issue, declared that no conceivable motive for the failure of the Senate to ratify the treaty could be assigned "other than the fact that it had the approval of Great Britain, and that to thwart any agreement with this power, no matter how advantageous to ourselves, would be popular with a portion of the electorate."

This is probably the correct explanation of the Senate's inaction.

Just before it was announced last spring that a convention had been signed between the United States and Trinidad, it will be remembered that the Canadian Minister of Finance, Hon. W. S. Fielding, announced that the Government proposed, except in regard to certain specified lines, to give the products of Trinidad free entry into Canada, on condition that certain tariff advantages were accorded Canadian products under the Trinidad tariff. The announcement that Trinidad and the United States had signed a convention, of course, nipped in the bud the intention of the Canadian Government.

Since the failure of the United States Senate to ratify the convention there has, however, been a renewed desire on the part of both Canada and Trinidad to enter into reciprocal relations with each other. At the annual meeting of the Board of Trade of the Maritime Provinces in August last, a strong resolution, calling upon the Dominion Government to reopen negotiations with Trinidad with a view to bringing about reciprocity, was unanimously adopted.

And from what we can learn Trinidad is by no means indisposed to having the question popped once more.

The Canadian commercial agent in Trinidad, Mr. Edgar Tripp, in his report under date of May 17, 1900, said: "That in intelligent circles throughout the colony the almost unanimous opinion is one of regret that advantage was not taken of the Canadian offer. And this feeling is accentuated by the general belief that we have sacrificed the substance for the shadow, and that the convention with the United States, which stood in the way, will never be ratified."

This report of Mr. Tripp's was, it will be observed, written before it was definitely known that the convention would not be ratified.

The statement that there is a sentiment in Trinidad in favor of closer trade relations with Canada is corroborated by Mr. Charles Pickford, one of the directors of The Pickford & Black Steamship Co., Limited, who is at present on a visit to Toronto. Mr. Pickford spends the greater part of every winter in the West Indies, and he states emphatically that there is a decidedly strong sentiment in Trinidad in favor of trade with the Dominion.

Neither the Government nor the business men of the United States who are interested in the trade with Trinidad are ignorant of the sentiment that is developing in favor of closer trade between Canada and the island in question.

The State Department at Washington is known to be strongly in favor of a treaty with Trinidad, and that the merchants of New York are in a similar position is evident from a petition which they have recently addressed to the State Department on the subject. Referring to the efforts that are being made to create a treaty between Canada and Trinidad, the petition in question says: "It is not too much to say that a large portion of the trade now possessed by the United States would be entirely destroyed to the great pecuniary injury of the undersigned petitioners."

That is how the New York merchants engaged in the Trinidad trade feel, and their anxiety should stir us up in this country to hasten the consummation of the reciprocal idea.

The trade of Trinidad is the most important of that of any other colony in the British West Indies, amounting, as it does, to about $25,000,000, almost equally divided between exports and imports.

Canada and the United States are both in the race for this trade. The question is, Which will win? Canada, apparently, stands a better chance of winning than she did six months ago. But she cannot afford to pause.

CEYLON GREEN TEAS IN CANADA.

CEYLON green teas are gradually coming into evidence on the Canadian market. Within the last twelve months one of the leading package tea houses has become an active dealer in those teas, and now several other houses are experimenting, with a view to placing Ceylon greens on the market in packets.

Several advance samples of Ceylon green teas have come to hand during the past week or ten days for Hamilton, Toronto and Montreal houses, and they are showing excellent quality.

The present is a particularly opportune time for Ceylon green teas, on account of the abnormally high prices which now rule for Japan green teas, to say nothing of unusually small shipments of the latter to Canada this year,

GERMANY AND THE CANADIAN BUTTER TRADE.

THE United States vice-consul at Frankfort is endeavoring to induce the buttermakers of the country he represents to take a livelier interest in the German butter trade.

According to the vice consul's report, the consumption of imported butter in Germany is increasing, the quantity imported during the first seven months of the present year being 8,098 metric tons, against 5,784 metric tons for the same period of 1899. Of the quantity imported during the seven months of the present year, Holland furnished 2,850 tons; Austro-Hungary, 2,476 tons, and Russia, 1,685 tons. A metric ton, it might be stated, is a little over 2,204 1/2 lb.

The report of the vice-consul should not be without some interest to butter exporters in Canada.

Germany ranks sixth among the foreign customers of Canadian butter. But, notwithstanding that, we send to Germany alone double the quantity of butter that the United States exports to all countries.

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, Germany took 84,552 lb. of Canadian butter, valued at $12,384, while the total exports from the United States to all countries during the last fiscal year were only 42,034 lb., valued at $7,723.

Although the exports of Canadian butter to Germany during 1899 were smaller than during the preceding year they were much larger than they were some years ago. This is shown by the following table :

|           | Quantityin lb. | Value. |
|-----------|--------------------|--------|
| 1895..... | 5,338              | $ 267 |
| 1896..... | 49,072             | 9,370  |
| 1897..... | 41,752             | 8,513  |
| 1898..... | 117,273            | 17,754 |
| 1899..... | 84,552             | 12,384 |

In 1894 no butter was exported to Germany from Canada, and in 1899 the quantity sent there from this country increased about sixteen-fold, compared with that of 1895.

The United States vice-consul in the report referred to says he sees "no reason why the United States should not supply the market here (Germany) with this commodity (butter) as it does with lard, meat, and grain."

If he sees no reason why the United States should not supply the German market with butter, there ought to be no reason why Canada should not be able to contribute, at least, a larger quantity than she now does.

ADVANCE IN THE PRICE OF APPLES.

THE competition among the Canadian apple exporters seems to be as keen as ever in spite of the immensity of the crop that will be gathered this year. When the first estimate of the world's crop of apples was made, buyers throughout the country began to bargain for apples on the 40 and 50c. basis.

The shipments of fall apples to Great Britain have proved so satisfactory that the price paid to farmers has now been run up to 65, 75 and 85c., and, in some cases, we have heard that the dollar limit has been reached for fruit on the tree.

Besides the profitable shipments made to Great Britain, the fact that the crops of the United States and Canada have been over-estimated is also working with a "bullish" effect. In addition, the quality of the fruit is proving to be very fine; much better, in fact, than last year's.

It is to be hoped this advance will not lead to a demoralization of the market. Packers throughout the country should be more careful than ever in safeguarding the quality of the fruit. Only the highly-colored varieties should be exported, for inferior qualities will not bring any higher prices than the continental domestic article.

A WARNING TO PACKERS OF GALLON APPLES.

A REPORT is current in Great Britain that Canadian canners of gallon apples are putting up windfalls. THE CANADIAN GROCER has investigated the matter and finds that there is some truth in the report. Windfalls are being packed, but there is nothing unusual in that. And those who are in a position to know state that a windfall is just as good as a hand-picked apple for canning purposes, as long as proper selection is made. It is not, therefore, as to how the apple is taken from the tree that determines the quality of the canned article; it is this: Is it good? And, being good, is it properly put up?

While there are, undoubtedly, canners in Canada who put their gallon apples on the market in first-class condition, there are others who do not. And, when there are so many windfalls as this year, there is only so much more opportunity for careless and inefficient packers to ply their trade.

The gallon apple trade of Canada must depend, for its maintenance and expansion, upon the foreign market. The home demand for such goods is insignificant.

At present the gallon apples put up in the United States possess a higher reputation on the British market than do those put up in Canada. It should not be so. If we are to compare the quality of the apples of the two countries in their natural state the superiority is undoubtedly with those of Canadian growth. Actual competition has proved this time and again.

This superiority is, of course, due to climatic conditions, the weather in Canada being more conducive to richness in flavor, which, and not the size, is the most essential qualification in an apple.

If, then, Canadian gallon apples suffer in the British market in comparison with those from the United States, it is obvious the cause is not with the fruit, but with the canner.

If, then, Canadian gallon apples are to secure that high position on the British market that the quality of green apples warrants us in expecting, it is clear that those who put them up should aim at a higher perfection and spare no pains to secure it. And we are so convinced as to the importance of this that we have no hesitation in urging the Dominion Government to provide the ways and means for the inspection of gallon apples intended for export. The British people are most particular in regard to food products, and it is important that we should not offend their sensibilities, as there is evidently a danger of doing, while we give license to indiscreet canners.

THE GOODS A GROCER HANDLES.

HOW SOME OF THEM ARE GROWN OR MADE.

THE grocer is the natural authority on the quality, characteristics and derivation of the goods he sells. His customers look to him as one who is sufficiently posted on all matters concerning the goods on his shelves to be the best judge of their comparative worth. Consequently, the grocer who can, when asked, give his customers a more or less complete history of his wares wins their confidence and respect much more readily than he who considers it his duty merely to buy and sell.

Many grocers and more clerks are in this latter class. Some have made a study of their business. Others would like to, but have not had the opportunity. To such the following items concerning goods nearly all grocers sell may be of interest:

ALUM.

Alum, which, as an ingredient in baking powder, is causing a controversy in Canada just now, is a combination of sulphate of potash or ammonia with alumina. It is produced from shale in nearly all countries. It is astringent. This power to contract animal fluids and tissues makes it valuable as a gargle or for an injection. It is used to whiten tallow and for clarifying liquors. Ground alum is often used by bakers to make white bread from dark flour and in baking powders to help keep them dry and fresh in appearance.

ANCHOVIES

are delicious, bony fish from four to six inches long. They are caught in the Mediterranean. They are shipped in small kegs to Great Britain, where they are prepared for market in small bottles. As many inferior fish are sold as anchovies every grocer should be able to tell the real from the substitute. It can be easily distinguished by its large silvery scales, its pink, salmon color, and by the fact that the fins on the side are much nearer the head than the fins on the back. Anchovy paste is used as a relish. Anchovies were the basis of the old Roman sauces, but most of the so-called anchovy sauces of to-day are made from cheaper fish.

CHICORY

is the white, milky root of a plant known as the wild endive. It is cultivated in Holland, Belgium, France, Germany and England. The roots are large, fleshy and carrot-shaped. When dug up in August or September, the roots are washed out into small pieces and dried until about a quarter of their original weight. They are then roasted with a little oil to prevent burning and ground into powder, when they are ready for mixing with coffee.

was first introduced to Europe by Humboldt, who found it in common use as a beverage by the Aztecs of Mexico when he conquered that country. It is now one of the popular beverages of Europe, and as a flavoring it ranks second to vanilla. It is prepared from the roasted seeds of the cocoa tree mixed with sugar, sago, potato-flour, corn-flour or some similar farina.

CINNAMON

is a native of the East Indies, China and Japan. The cinnamon of commerce is the bark of the cinnamon tree, which is one of the wonders of nature. Beside the valuable properties contained in the bark, there are the buds, known as cassia buds, which are so rich in flavor. An oil, similar to clove-oil, is made from the leaves. Camphor is derived from the roots and the fruit yields an oil, called cinnamon suet, which is highly fragrant, and in Ceylon was formerly made into candles for the exclusive use of the king.

CLOVES

are the dried, unopened flowers of the clove tree, which is now cultivated in several tropical countries. About four-fifths of the world's supply comes from East Africa, the city of Zanzibar being the great centre of the trade. The principal method of adulterating cloves is to include an excess of stems, sticks or stalks, which contain very little virtue.

COCOA, THE BEVERAGE.

is made from the berries or seeds of the cocoa, a tropical evergreen tree. The berries are harvested twice a year, in May and October. When gathered, they are conveyed to the "sweating-house," where they are submitted to a process of fermentation for from 4 to 10 days. This improves their taste, and gives them a fine, rich appearance. The process is completed when the pod falls off the bean, which is the cocoa of commerce. They are then dried in the sun, and shipped in bags of about 100 lb. each. These kernels or beans are, in this state, capable of yielding genuine cocoa. But, as this product is rather too rich, and is hard to cook, it is principally sold in the manufactured state. The variety in quality and price is largely due to the proportion of cocoa beans used as compared with the amount of inferior materials. As it lends itself easily to adulteration, the retailer should be careful to avoid new brands, when the special advantage claimed for them is their low price.

CREAM OF TARTAR.

Cream of tartar comes from a source that would be guessed by few. It is a product of the grape, being the powdered crystals that form out of boiling argol, which is a deposit left during the process of fermentation necessary in wine-making. It is chiefly produced in Italy, France, Spain and Portugal, but in recent years has been largely made in Germany and England, where it is sold at a guaranteed percentage of bi-tartrate of potash. It is sometimes adulterated with fine, granulated rice. This may be discovered by stirring half a teaspoonful in a large cup of boiling water, which, when poured into a glass tumbler, will show clear if pure, and milky if adulterated.

GINGER

is obtained from the knotty, fibrous roots of a reed-like plant, cultivated in several tropical countries, especially in Jamaica. Preserved ginger is made from roots taken from the ground early in January when they are five or six inches long and quite succulent. The dry gingers are dug up a few weeks later when the roots are firm and fibrous. The black whole ginger is made from the older, inferior roots by scalding them in water and drying in the sun. The best and soundest roots are made into whole white ginger by scraping off the outer dark-colored part and then drying without scalding. The finest whole ginger is new, dry, plump, heavy, white in color and chalky or crumbly in texture, but without worm holes.

MACARONI

is produced from wheat flour made into a thick paste with a little water, and forced through a mould which forms it into long tubes. It is a favorite dish in all civilized countries. The story of its origin is interesting. Centuries ago a wealthy Palermitan noble owned a cook who, in addition to being an expert in his own profession, was an inventive genius. One day in a rapture of culinary composition, he devised the farinaceous tubes now so much used, and the succulent accessories of rich sauce and grated parmesan, familiar to those who have partaken of macaroni al sugo. Having filled a large china bowl with this delicious compound, he set it before his master—a gourmand of the first water—and stood by, in deferential attitude, to watch the effect of his experiment. The first mouthful elicited the ejaculation "Cari!" or in English "excellent" from the noble epicure. The next mouthful caused him to exclaim "Ma cari!" or "excellent, indeed!" Presently the flavor of the toothsome dish grew upon him, his enthusiasm increased, and he cried out, in a voice tremulous with emotion, "Macaroni!" "Indeed, most supremely, sublimely and superlatively excellent!" In paying this tribute to the merits of his cook's discovery he unwittingly bestowed a name upon that admirable preparation which has stuck to it ever since. Macaroni is made in Italy and France, the best of it coming from the former country.

MUSTARD.

The use of mustard, powdered in its present form, originated in Durham, Eng., about the year 1720, where it was prepared on a small scale by an old lady named Mrs. Clements, who kept the secret of its manufacture to herself—grinding the seed in a mill and sifting it—for several years. She visited London and the principal towns in England twice a year, thus founding the reputation of "Durham Mustard." Mustard is made from a mixture of different kinds of mustard seed, white, black or brown in color, and with or without the addition of other ingredients, such as wheat flour, turmeric, cayenne, etc. It could be made from white seed alone, but, as the brown and black seeds only possess the oil yielding the piquant flavor which is so much esteemed, a mixture is necessary to produce the finest goods.

NUTMEGS AND MACE

The nutmeg is the kernel of the fruit of the nutmeg tree. (Mace is the covering around this kernel.) The tree, which resembles in shape and size the pear tree, yields about 10 lb. of nutmegs and 1 lb. of mace each year under ordinary circumstances, but it is said it will produce 10 times that amount when highly manured. Nutmegs are liable to attacks of insects. These can be got rid of by exposing them on sieves to the fumes of burning sulphur in a close vessel. The substitutes which have been most often sold as nutmegs are made of wood or of a paste made of flour, oil and nutmeg powder. Most of the nutmegs used in Canada come from the West Indies.

OLIVES

are the unripe fruit of the olive shrub, which is cultivated all around the Mediterranean and in South and Central America, Mexico and California. The general method of pickling is to gather the olives young, soak them in strong lye or lime water to render them mild and tender to the taste, and afterwards to soak them several times in clean water during a week or so. Then they are pickled in salt and water to preserve their green color, being seasoned with cloves, cinnamon or other spices. In many countries olives, both dried and pickled, are eaten before meals to create an appetite, but in Canada they are partaken of mainly at dessert to restore the palate and aid digestion.

PEPPER.

is a general term used for various hot, pungent and aromatic pods, berries, fruits or seeds obtained from the "Piper" species of plant. In the Middle Ages all imported aromatic spices were designated pepper. The natural family of the plant is now known to be limited to four plants only, of which the black pepper, the long pepper and cayenne pepper are the only kinds in general domestic use. From the black pepper berry or seed white pepper is produced, by taking off the husk before grinding. Black pepper is more pungent than white, on account of the acid resin, known as piperine, and a volatile oil contained in the skin or fleshy part. Ground white pepper is frequently adulterated with linseed meal, flour mustard husks, ground olive stones, ground rice, ground long pepper, and even by sand and clay.

PRUNES AND PLUMS.

Or to be more specific, they should be defined as the Julian variety of the common plum, dried whole, either in the sun or by artificial heat, without fermenting at the pit. Prunes are prepared in all countries on the Mediterranean and in California. In preparing prunes, the fresh-gathered plums are dried first in the sun till soft, spread on hurdles, and then placed for about 24 hours in a slow brick oven. After cooling, they are put in a warmer oven, and again a third or fourth time, till sufficiently dried. All surplus moisture has to be extracted from the fruit before it is packed, or it will mould in the packages.

RICE,

which is the staple food of China, Japan, Burmah and Siam, and second to millet in India, is the grain from a plant which resembles the oat plant in shape and color. It is common as grass in many wet, marshy, tropical countries, but has been cultivated in India and China from time immemorial. After the seed is sown, the land is flooded with several inches of water, which remains until the plant sprouts. Two crops are obtained each year. A great deal of it is shipped in the husk, when it is known as "paddy." This is husked by machine. Intoxicating liquors are made from rice in China and Japan. It is also used to some extent in British distilleries.

comes from the mealy trunk pith of various low palm trees, which grow in India, China, Borneo, Sumatra, Singapore, etc. The tree grows about 25 feet high. When about 15 years old, just before it flowers, it is cut down, and the soft spongy pith extracted from the trunk. Each tree yields from 300 to 1,200 lb. It is granulated by adding water and pressing through a strainer.

TAPIOCA

is derived from the large, tuberos roots of two species of South-American manioc plants, the sweet cassava and the bitter cassava. The roots resemble large parsnips. When the rind is taken off they are grated into a pulp. They are then subjected to pressure under water until all the juice or starchy matter settles to the bottom of the water, when it is removed, roasted, and stirred well with a hot iron, and finally dried on hot plates, where it separates into a sort of white powder called tapioca flour. It then consists of small irregular granules, some of which burst and form into lumps. It is sifted into several grades, known as small, medium, bullet and flake tapioca.

CHEWING GUM IN TIME OF WAR.

As the ultimate success of any article depends on its ability to stand a crucial test the manufacturers of Adams' "Tutti-Frutti" gum have good reason to expect their business to continue to develop as it has in past years. Among athletes a good gum has long been recognized as valuable for its thirst-allaying properties and by many of the medical fraternity it has been admitted to be a good aid to digestion. Still, many have been unable, or unwilling, to see real value of any nature in gum. For this reason the victory that Adams' "Tutti-Frutti" has scored in South Africa is well worthy of note. The manufacturers, in their confidence of its true worth, presented the Red Cross Society with 4,000 boxes for the use of the troops on the march. The story of some of the brilliant marches of our troops has not failed to please not only Canada, but the Empire, for all have recognized the sturdiness of the young men who represented this country in the Transvaal.

Col. Otter, when in Bloemfontein, after the stirring events which preceded his arrival there, wrote to Mrs. Fitzgibbon, secretary of the Red Cross Society, Toronto, as follows: "I must not delay in conveying to you our most sincere and hearty thanks for what will be a most acceptable gift, this 4,000 boxes of what was a once very much despised article, but now a highly-prized one—Adams' 'Tutti Frutti' gum. I shall, on its arrival, keep it carefully for issue on our next march." A couple of months later, Col. Otter wrote to the Adjutant General, Ottawa, as follows: "Referring to your memo. of May 30 last, respecting the efficacy of the 'Tutti Frutti' gum presented by the Messrs. S. T. Britten & Co., of Toronto, for the use of the battalion under my command in South Africa, I have the honor to report that the experience of our men has been entirely favorable to its use as a means of allaying thirst, and has, therefore, been of material benefit to them on more than one trying march."

Last year five of the largest gum manufacturers in the United States and S. T. Britten & Co., Toronto, were amalgamated under the style of The American Chicle Co. Instead of, as many of the combines did, reducing the number of their factories, this company have increased theirs. S. T. Britten, formerly of Toronto, went to San Francisco, and has opened a branch there, his former partner, J. A. Phin, assuming control of the Canadian business.

The writer had an opportunity this week of examining the process of manufacture. One taking such a trip comes away with all prejudice against gum on the score of what it is made of and how it is made completely gone. The factory is kept spotlessly clean, and the workers have to do the same. The ingredients are simply chicle, sugar and flavoring extracts. The process of manufacture is evolved, as every particle of grit and dirt has to be removed; but by the establishment of a thorough system in all departments the cost of production has been reduced to the lowest basis. When one sees how good gum is made he understands why its use has grown so rapidly, in spite of all prejudice or opposition.

A BUSINESS CHANGE.

Mr. J. H. Simpson, the well-known Paisley street grocer, has sold his retail business to Mr. Sanford Platt, formerly of Wallaceburg, who takes possession immediately. It is Mr. Simpson's intention to go into the wholesale grocery business in Guelph with R. Simpson & Co., the present wholesale tea and coffee house. Mr. Simpson has conducted a retail business in this city for the past 14 years, and during that time has obtained an excellent reputation for fair dealing and upright business methods. With commendable enterprise he has built up a first-class trade, and the energy which has accomplished this result will doubtless cause continued success in the new line in which the firm is about to embark. Mr. Platt, although a stranger in Guelph, comes highly recommended, and, with an experience of over 12 years in the grocery business, will no doubt be able to give all the old customers of the store, and many new ones, every satisfaction. Messrs. R. Simpson & Co. are at present arranging for larger premises in which to continue business.—Guelph Mercury.

HOME-MADE MINCE-MEAT.

It is a notable fact that successful manufacturers of practically every article used as a food emphasize the habit of cleanliness in the production of their goods. In speaking of the rapid growth in the sales of his home-made mince meat in recent years Wm. Neilson, Toronto, gave as the reason for the development, that 10 years' experience had taught him to use only first-class goods, how to blend them properly and to keep as near to the point of perfection in cleanliness as possible.

LAMPS FOR GROCERS.

Lamps are a line of goods that are largely handled by grocers and general merchants. In order to keep a well assorted stock it is necessary to deal with a wholesale house that carries full lines. The Rochester Lamp Co. of Canada, 24 Front St. West, Toronto, is a firm of this kind, according to its advertisement which is printed on page 145. Besides lamps for all purposes, they have in stock oil parlor heaters. The company solicits correspondence.

NIXEY'S BLACK LEAD.

Nixey's refined black lead, blue, knife polish and other similar lines are goods which have a reputation wherever the English language is spoken. It will be gathered from the firm's advertisement, on page 99, that it is the purpose to make these goods even better known in Canada than they are at present. The firm is also noted for the beauty and variety of its showcards, samples of which can be obtained by addressing W. G. Nixey & Co., 12 Soho Square, London, England.

A PLACE WHERE BISCUITS ARE MADE.

THE manufacture of biscuits and confectionery in Canada is growing. People are now realizing that the manufacturer can make biscuits more cheaply than any housewife; he can buy his flour, his glucose, his sugar, his coal, and, indeed, all his raw materials in large quantities at reduced prices, he can secure the latest machinery and reduce the cost of mixing and boiling and cooking to a minimum, he can make use of the highest skill obtainable; in short, he can specialize in baking as he can in making cloth. As the housewife realizes this, she is paying less attention to the kitchen and more to the grocery store. "Cookies," in the sense of the word of 20 years ago, are disappearing from the list of kitchen products, and taffy is now made in the home only when some old-fashioned Hallowe'en party is on. So candy and biscuit manufactories are growing.

One of the concerns in question is The Lang Manufacturing Co., which moved into large new premises at St. Henry, Montreal this spring and are supplying the Christmas trade from their new quarters.

This firm was established in 1886, and till this spring did business at St. Monique street, Montreal. But their trade has grown to such dimensions that they have been compelled to erect an entirely new factory, which gives them double the capacity they had last year. And yet they have worked overtime all summer, and are employing 175 to 200 hands.

The factory is on St. Elizabeth avenue, and is a fine brick structure of four storeys and a basement. The main building is 215 x 60 ft., while the right wing, which is a separate building, in which the baking is done, is 60 x 130 ft. The engine and boiler house is outside, while about 100 yards to the rear is a brick house, in which the caretaker lives, and in which paper boxes are made. A railway siding runs into the yards. The area of the ground used is about 55,000 square feet.

The baking department is on the first floor in the right wing. A 60-ft. traveling oven, of English manufacture, has just been installed, and is cooking 30 barrels of biscuits a day. In addition are two reel ovens. On the same floor in the main building are commodious offices, to the right of the main entrance. On the other side is a large stock-room, well filled. On the second floor, above the baking department, are the biscuit mixing and icing departments. In the main building are the candy wrapping and packing departments, and, separated off by partitions, are cloak-rooms. On the third floor are the candy boiling rooms, pan room, jap department, boiling machines, caramel cutting departments, pulverizing sugar, peppermints and lozenges departments.

On the fourth floor are made high-class candies. Here are to be found the gum, cream, and chocolate departments, with a hot-room for drying gums, creams and marshmallows. Throughout the building the latest improved machinery has been installed, chief among which are two chocolate dipping machines for which The Lang Manufacturing Company have the patent for the Province of Quebec.

Much more could be said about the marvels of the establishment but space forbids. The proof of the efficiency of the establishment is in the selling and eating of its products. Fourteen travellers are now scattered all over Canada, and the success with which they are meeting shows that they are representing a firm fortified with experience and reputation.

The officers of the company are: President, Mr. H. H. Lang; Secretary-Treasurer, Mr. Jas. Lang.

AN IMPORTANT AGENCY.

THE granting a Canadian agency for the whiskies of Ainslie & Co., Leith, Scotland, means an important addition to the business of Chaput, Fils & Cie, Montreal, who have been entrusted with the charge of introducing them upon this market. The Clynelish distillery of this firm produces one of the finest Scotch whiskies made.

The Duke of Sutherland established the concern as far back as 1819, and for fifty years it was in the hands of George Lawson & Sons. The whisky has long been sent out to private customers all over the United Kingdom, while it has also commanded a valuable export trade. The demand for it in that way has been so great that the proprietors were for many years obliged to refuse orders. In 1896, the valuable property passed into the hands of Ainslie & Co., of Leith, and since completing the purchase, they have received orders which they had to decline till they increased their capacity to 60,000 gallons annually. The holdings of old makes now in the distillery butts are said to be very valuable.

L. Chaput, Fils & Cie are to be congratulated upon securing such an important agency.

WRAPPING PAPER FOR GROCERS.

IT has ever been admitted that one of the necessary features of successful retailing is having in stock the goods wanted by one's customers. The same necessity is noted in a jobbing business as in the retail way. In speaking of the growth of their business, Douglas & Ratcliff, paper dealers, Toronto, stated, the other day, to THE CANADIAN GROCER, that they owed their success largely to their making a study of the retailers' needs in wrapping papers, bags, etc.

"What is wanted in a wrapping paper," said F. L. Ratcliff the junior partner, "is attractive appearance and good strength, and the weight should be the least possible so long as the strength is not impaired. To supply papers that possess these characteristics in the highest degree necessitates a constant increase in the range of wrapping papers carried in stock."

"And our business has increased because we have kept supplied with newest ideas and have introduced the most suitable lines," added Mr. Douglas, senior partner of the firm.

"Paper bags," continued Mr. Ratcliff, "receive little attention from many dealers. Yet there is reason why attention should be given to them. In selling by weight a bag should be heavy enough to affect the scales, and thus pay for itself. In selling by the number or amount the bag should be light and strong. We have introduced a heavy bag at an ordinary price which is meeting with great favor, for holding sugars, cereals, etc.

"In twine, too, we have lately secured a line that is likely to become popular. It is a line of cotton twine in variegated colors, sold on spools instead of balls. This makes a daintier twine for small parcels than the ordinary white twine, and is handier on spools than in the ball-shape."

"It takes time and trouble to introduce new lines which are an improvement on the old," concluded Mr. Douglas, "but it pays well in the end."

Pratts Food sells in the Fall and Winter, because it makes Hens lay early and continue laying regularly throughout the cold Winter months ; it fattens quickly the Thanksgiving, Christmas and New Year Turkeys ; it makes them grow larger and they are better eating.

It makes Hog Killing time profitable, because the pigs fatten faster and are much larger than ordinary fed Hogs, and as they are kept free from disease, the meat in consequence is far more juicy and tender.

It helps Cows during the changeable weather from Summer to Fall. It increases the Milk during the cold weather ; it produces more butter, and fattens Cattle for killing rapidly.

It helps Horses during the Fall and Winter weather ; the hard tough pulling during the snowy season is not felt by them when fed Pratts Food constantly. It cures and prevents Coughs, Colds, Pneumonia, etc., etc.

Sheep are better able to stand the test of Fall and Winter, they grow larger and their meat has a better flavor. A Sheep in good condition always produces more and better wool.

THE BAKING POWDER DISPUTE.

A DISCUSSION OF ITS DIFFERENT PHASES.

BREAD has formed the principal part of man's diet for ages, but the cooks have not yet decided what ingredients should be used to produce a wholesome article. Of course, we Canadians have shown the world what flour should be used; Manitoba wheat flour stands without a rival. But what baking powder should be employed is the subject of much discussion. We do not propose to settle the question here, but a brief summary of the arguments of the debaters of the question might prove instructive to merchants who handle the article.

CHARACTERISTICS OF BAKING POWDER.

Baking powder is a compound used for raising bread, or other leavened food. The object attained by the use of baking powder is aeration. Substances are put into the dough to produce carbonic acid gas, which, when liberated in the form of bubbles, causes the dough to rise until it reaches a proper spongy character, at which time it is ready for the oven. It shields the boarder from getting a stone when he asks for bread. Baking powder is simply a substitute for yeast, which requires warmth and time to act sufficiently.

THREE KINDS OF BAKING POWDER.

There are three kinds of baking powder sold to-day. These are alum and alum phosphate powders, which aggregate, probably, 80 per cent. of the total sales; cream of tartar baking powders, which rank next in importance, and, finally, phosphate powders, which are sold only to a very limited extent. The alum baking powders are sold from about 10 to 25c. a pound; the cream of tartar at 50c. a pound. The leavening power or efficiency of the former is double that of the latter. Consequently, the economical housewife buys the alum powder. But the cream of tartar baking powder manufacturer says she pays more than the difference in doctor bills, and the Canadian Government is even now threatening to prohibit the sale of the alum powders.

ALUM BAKING POWDER

is produced by mixing bicarbonate of soda, or baking soda, with burnt alum, and then adding some inert substance, like starch, to give it bulk and defer chemical action between the first substances. When this powder is mixed with flour and water, and the mixture is kneaded and baked, the bicarbonate of soda and alum enter into chemical reaction and carbonic acid gas is liberated. This leavens, lightens and aerates the bread, making it palatable and increasing its digestibility. In this process the alum is destroyed and the substances left are sulphate of soda and hydrate of aluminum. Charges have been leveled against the unwholesomeness of both of these by-products. Mr. McGill, of the Dominion laboratory, says, in Bulletin No. 68, that sulphate of soda is a "powerful purgative whose use cannot be conceived to be without injurious consequences upon the stomach and intestinal canals."

But sulphate of soda has created little discussion in comparison with that excited by alum and the other by-product, hydrate of aluminum, or, in the case of alum phosphate powders, aluminum phosphate. Alum, of course, is not healthy when taken in large doses. This has led to its being classed with arsenic in cases. Of course, such classification is absurd. Yet, if it is appreciably present in bread, it ought to be guarded against. Is it? We can hardly think so, else the cream-of-tartar men would have some examples of its effects to lay before us. As it is they have none. A student of chemistry knows that the reaction is not so complete that there are no traces of the original substances present. So there must be some alum in bread, as Mr. McGill points out, even if it cannot be easily found. But the amount is so small that it hardly merits consideration, when one considers that it is taken in small doses as a medicine. It is given to children, it is used by men to stop a razor cut, it is blown down throats in cases of relaxed uvula. Like alcohol, it means death if taken in large quantities, but in small quantities, even up to 20 grains, it cannot be considered seriously dangerous. Indeed, in some cases it is used for a purifying purpose.

THE OPINIONS OF CHEMISTS.

The other substance produced is hydrate of aluminum. Manufacturers of alum powders claim that this is insoluble in the digestive liquids, and that it passes from the body as inert matter. They assert that nothing has been adduced by any experiments to prove that the residual products of alum baking powder, which are left in the bread, produce any harmful or deleterious effects. On the other hand, Professor Rutan, of McGill College, says that "the presence of alkaline sulphates and of the poorly viscid hydrate and phosphate of alumina among the other decomposition products is sufficient to explain the relative indigestibility of bread containing these salts." He says further that "while the effect of alum is to entirely prohibit fermentation, that of the products resulting from the use of an alum powder is merely to retard digestion, and not entirely to prevent it." J. West Knights, F.C.S., says that "gluten, after treatment with alum or insoluble salts of aluminum, is less soluble than ordinary gluten in the gastric juice, by about one-half. Whether the alum is in a soluble or insoluble form seems to have no great influence in its effects upon the gluten. * * The extent of the injury may or may not be small."

Chemists and doctors equal in importance to these gentlemen assert the opposite, and challenge proof. To the statement that in a bread made with an alum baking powder, a certain amount of phosphates was rendered insoluble and incapable of assimilation, thus robbing our animal organism of an important form of nutriment, they advance the same argument. Reliable physiological proofs are wanting on both sides. Dr. J. L. W. Thompson, F.C.P. Lond., F.C.S., a well-known authority on physiological chemistry, states: "I have been frequently consulted on these questions by the board of health. In my opinion there is nothing injurious in the use of alum baking powder. It is perfectly harmless."

Tons of alum baking powder are sold every week, and no malady is known in conjunction with its use. It must appear that alum in food in diminutive quantities is not seriously injurious to health. Yet, to be impartial, we must quote a sentence of summary from the pen of Mr. McGill: "So that, if we overlook the possible presence of unchanged alum in the residues from use of an alum powder, and suppose hydrate of aluminum alone to be found as the result of the decomposition, we are yet forced to grant the harmful tendency of this residue, since the acidity of the gastric juice is sufficient to determine its reaction with the phosphates of our food."

ACTION OF CREAM OF TARTAR.

Now, let us look at the action of cream of tartar baking powder. When cream of tartar is mixed with bicarbonate of soda and a neutral filler, such as starch, a cream of tartar baking powder is produced. When this powder is mixed with flour and water, kneaded and baked, carbonic acid gas is set free to leaven the bread, and, as a side product, the tartrate of potash and soda, or Rochelle salts, is formed and left in the bread. Rochelle salts are well known as an old-fashioned medicament, once very commonly used, now not so much. According to Dr. Francis Wyatt, this is on account of its action on the kidneys and bowels. Some would have us believe that Rochelle salts are a cathartic, a medicine which so irritates the stomach and intestines that Nature sets up an inflammation and a sickness to expel it from the system, causing cramps, diarrhoea and dysentery, indigestion, dyspepsia and constipation. We have not seen any further evils mentioned! This just illustrates how far prejudices will lead opinion. Those who attack Rochelle salts seem to forget that Glauber's salts, or sodium sulphate, the by-product in the alum powder, is similar in its nature and has the same effect as the substance they attack. On the other hand, Mr. McGill attacks Glauber's salts, but says nothing about the effects of Rochelle salts.

NOT APPROACHING ANNIHILATION.

On the whole it does not appear that, as a race, we are approaching annihilation because we eat aerated bread. The evil effects of the by-products have been much exaggerated. The truth is that there are two groups of manufacturers fighting for the baking powder market, the fight is waxing keen, and they are resorting to the tactics of "throwing mud" at one another. Even the chemists and doctors cannot settle the matter. Till they do, would it not be well for them to carry on their discussions in secret, leave us free from the idea that we are indulging in poisons and happy in the notion that we can use either potion with perfect safety? E.H.C.

WILL MAKE WAX PAPER.

I. D. Bradshaw & Co., Toronto, have added to their chewing gum and pop corn business the manufacture of wax paper, having lately installed the most up-to-date machinery for the purpose. They are having a large demand for these goods. They offer one of their catalogues to any subscriber of THE CANADIAN GROCER who asks for it.

A STRIKING ADVERTISEMENT.

The writer of the advertisements of "Ram Lal's" teas generally succeeds in making his work effectual and attractive, but rarely has he succeeded in producing a more striking effect than in the firm's advertisement in this issue.

THE AUER GASOLINE LAMP.

THE general use of incandescent gas and electric lighting has been brought about by the constant demand for increased and cheaper illumination and consequently the inconvenient and in places of any size the dangerous oil lamp has been driven out of use. The smaller towns and country places, however, still continue to use this old system from force of circumstances. But The Auer Incandescent Light Manufacturing Co., Limited, Montreal, have lately placed a gasoline lamp on the market which, by reason of its strong light, extreme convenience and fine appearance, bids fair to make lighting even more brilliant and economical for out-of-town places than it is in the cities.

The Auer Gasoline Lamp is a nobby affair that gives 100 candle-power for each burner at half the cost of oil, acetylene, or incandescent electric light. It is claimed to be the only lamp giving 100 candle-power for 50c. per month, used three hours a day, and this reckoned on a high cost of gasoline. The strength of the light may be better imagined when it is remembered that the ordinary incandescent electric light is 16 candle-power and the usual oil lamp is even less. It is convenient because it is the only lamp that does not have to be taken down to fill, the reservoir being removable. It is also self-cleaning.

The idea of a lamp burning gasoline is liable to frighten some people, but the absence of any attendant danger is proven by the approval it has secured of The Canadian Fire Underwriters' Association. The best of material and workmanship are employed and the makers will give satisfaction or refund the money. It is made in four styles, one to set on the table ($7.50), one a bracket lamp ($7), one to hang from the ceiling ($8), and another with a double burner ($11).

The accompanying illustration shows the mechanism of the generator and the progress of the gasoline from the reservoir to the burner tip. After leaving the stop valve on the fixture arm, the gasoline passes into tube E, packed with sand to act as a filter, held in position by gauge cups M, then into casting A, through channel J, into vaporizing chamber H, where the gasoline is vaporized by heat supplied from sub-flame burning at S, a feature of the lamp. The gas or vapor now leaves chamber H and passes through channel K to channel L, where it passes through needle hole in nipple P into tube B. Here it is mixed with air to secure a blue heating flame at gauze G. The size of the flame can be regulated by the needle valve.

Altogether it is a complete and ingenious arrangement that ought to come into use both in the home and place of business, particularly where a lamp must be used.

STOCK AND POULTRY FOOD.

From now until the spring storekeepers in towns and villages will have a greater demand for a stock and poultry food than for almost any other single line handled. There is no article sold that requires more extreme care in its selection than this does.

If a meritorious food is offered the goodwill of customers is gained, while custom is lost and ill-will earned quite as readily if an article is offered that will, in all probability, cause the loss of, or injury to, valuable animals or poultry.

Nothing encourages respect and good feeling toward a storekeeper so thoroughly as to help a customer when in trouble with sick or unprofitable live stock.

In this connection THE CANADIAN GROCER is glad to call the special attention of storekeepers throughout the country to the immense success attained by Pratts food, which many believe to be the best regulator for cattle and poultry that is sold throughout the civilized world. It is distinctly a high-grade preparation, and the large and growing business in Canada is ample evidence that Pratts foods are meeting with the success in this country that their merit justifies.

THE CANADIAN EGG TRADE.

CANADIAN eggs continue to grow in popularity with the British public. During the first eight months of the year Canada has exported to Great Britain 70,011 great hundreds of eggs, in comparison with 30,672 hundreds during the corresponding period last year. Last year John Bull took 9,654,220 dozen, and this year, judging by the increase of 133 per cent. in the shipment of fresh eggs during the summer months, the exporters will vastly increase their output. In 1890 the number of eggs exported to Great Britain was trifling, not more than 3,000 dozen having been sent.

MOST OF THE CREDIT

of this gratifying result is due to Canadian merchants and shippers, who have been taught by experience that an egg is a thing fragile and delicate, yet capable of scientific treatment to preserve its freshness. Cold storage on board railway and steamship has been provided, and, although a month must elapse between the time the egg is taken from the nest and is eaten by John Bull, yet we are able to place new-laid eggs upon the British market that do not belie their name.

SPRING SHIPMENTS.

But the difficulty of placing eggs gathered in the spring upon the British market in the fall is by no means insignificant. Just after Easter, eggs begin to drop in price, for our people become tired of them and the hens are laying at their best. The market is glutted, so far as the Canadian consumer is concerned, and we have produce for export. But the British market is also well supplied, prices are low, and it doesn't pay to ship anything but fresh stock.

METHODS OF PRESERVING EGGS.

The question arises, how can we preserve the eggs in good condition through the summer? Various devices have been employed. Cold storage is the first agency thought of. By this means the goods are kept in a low, even temperature and in air that is constantly changing. But there is a limit to its preserving power. Exporters say that the egg has a peculiar woody taste when it has passed a considerable time in cold storage. The delicate flavor is destroyed and its quality deteriorates.

LIME PICKLING

has long been in vogue and is growing in popular favor as improvements in the system are made. Perhaps the most valuable improvement made in recent years is the glycerine process patented by D. D. Wilson & Co., of Seaforth, Ont., and controlled in Quebec by Hyslop & Hunter, Montreal. The treatment by this process costs only one cent a case more than the ordinary lime pickling and increases the value of the eggs about one cent a dozen. Glycerined eggs are a mean between new-laid eggs and ordinary lime-pickled. They have a glossier appearance than the lime-pickled, are cleaner and have a smoother surface, all of which makes them more salable. Moreover, after being put through this process, they will remain good for an indefinite time.

The ordinary lime-pickled egg is not a good boiling egg, because, when put into boiling water, the shell breaks to pieces.

THE GLYCERINED EGG

boils like the fresh article.

The preparation of eggs for export is a long tedious process. Each egg as it comes into the warehouse in the spring is carefully examined and tested. It is important that eggs showing any sign of a crack should not be placed in the preserving vats, so men are employed to detect cracks by the "ticking" process. Eggs are ticked against one another, until each one is thoroughly tested, and the workmen become so expert that few cracks, even those that are not visible, escape them. Each man will pass about 800 dozen a day through this process.

THE TESTING PROCESS.

Then they are put through the ordinary candling process—called candling because it was once done before the candle, for which the electric light is now substituted. The candlers are so expert that they can determine the age of an egg almost to a day, by a glance at the "void." The eggs are also grouped into different sizes, for the English grocer sells eggs by weight. The average weight of a "hundred" is about 15 pounds.

The goods that are fit for export are put into pickling vast about twelve feet deep, where they remain till the time for shipping comes. They are then dipped out of the vats in racks, washed thoroughly, and in cases where the glycerine process is used, the treatment is completed by a final dip in a prepared solution.

THE PACKING BOXES

employed by Canadian exporters which hold the eggs in paste-board compartments are growing in favor. The continental shippers still pack in straw in large boxes that hold 112 dozen. These are so made that they can be sawn through the middle to give the small buyer half a box when he wishes it; but the English jobbers since they have made the acquaintance of the Canadian boxes that hold only 36 dozen are sawing these big awkward boxes with some reluctance. A story is told of an objection made by an Englishman in regard to the small boxes in which the eggs are put in pasteboard compartments by the Canadian exporters. In a report, he said, "I wish you wouldn't send eggs in those pasteboard racks, for it takes my man too long to pick them out." But gradually the English conservatism is wearing away and the inconvenience of having eggs packed in straw is becoming recognized. This year the demand is greater than ever, and Canadian eggs are not only accepted but are asked for on the British markets.

THE PRICE OF EGGS.

And yet withal the Canadian farmer is obtaining a better price for his eggs than he did when our exporters could not compete on the British market. In 1896 and 1897 the Montreal price of choice, first-grade eggs in the first week of June, when the farmer is gathering his largest crop, was 9c. to 9¼c. The farmer was getting about 8 cents a dozen. This year many dealers throughout the country did not pay lower than 12 to 13 cents a dozen. This is an advance of at least 4 cents a dozen, due entirely to the finding of a market in Great Britain. Prices are now higher than they were when we were exporting so many to the United States and when so little expense for care and pickling was involved. As a leading exporter said the other day, it was the best thing that ever happened our egg trade that the McKinley Bill of 1890 placed a duty of 5 cents a dozen on eggs and stopped our shipping them across the border. We are now sure that our business will not be disturbed by the imposition of an import duty. Britain will never place a duty on food-stuffs coming from the colonies, even if she should on those of foreign countries.

THE FUTURE OF THE TRADE

seems bright if our merchants and exporters continue to exercise the same care in guarding the market as they have shown in cultivating it. Grocers and provision dealers throughout the country can do much by shipping receipts to their commission merchants or exporters as soon as convenient to do so. We must keep our stock good to hold the market. Merchants can do much to mould the ideas of the Canadian farmers and dissuade them from selling their small and eating their large eggs. Stray nests should not be emptied into the basket for the egg-man or for town. If the farmer knows why he is getting 4 cents a dozen more for his eggs than he was in 1897, he will surely appreciate the boon enough to consult his best interests by selling the best quality of eggs for export. ## WHAT OUGHT TO BE A GROCER'S PROFIT?

A CERTAIN soap firm in Great Britain annually offers a prize for the best essay on a subject appertaining to the grocery trade. Its latest offer was for an essay based upon the following questions: "What ought to be a grocer's profit? bearing in mind the present increased cost of working expenses, etc. Can the public be charged the extra, or how can the increased expenditure be met?"

The first prize was won by A. S. Barr, Woods Green. The following is an extract from Mr. Barr's essay:

"One trader is satisfied with 10 per cent., another works on a 15 per cent. basis, while yet others contend that 20 per cent. is little

ENOUGH TO COVER WORKING EXPENSES and leave a small net profit. The case is further complicated by one tradesman basing profit on cost as against another who makes turnover his basis for calculating profit. Manufacturers have tried to assist traders in obtaining a fair profit by fixing a stated selling price for their own wares, with the result that certain traders felt aggrieved, looked upon the move as an intrusion, and they would not be dictated to, and said they would sell at what price they chose; likewise various associations have taken the matter up and endeavored to arrange uniform prices which would return a fair percentage, but the attempt has invariably failed. What then should be a fair profit, and how is that profit to be fixed and secured? Take, for example, a shop doing £100 per week. To work this shop will be required a manager at, say, £2; assistant, £1 10s.; assistant, £1 5s.; junior, 12s., and two porters, 18s.—total wages, £6 5s. weekly; rent at £65 per annum; rates and gas, £28 per annum; incidental expenses, 4s.; stabling, 15s., and leakage, £1 per week respectively; totalling £10; equal to 10 per cent. for working expenses, to which add  $1\frac{1}{4}$  per cent. for interest on capital invested. Considering that 6 per cent. is a reasonable net profit, these figures show that a gross profit of  $17\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. on turnover is required, and to gain this percentage on turnover there must be added  $21\frac{1}{4}$  per cent. to cost.

COST OF MANUFACTURE.

"Another important question is: How can the increased cost of manufacture be met; can the public be charged the extra without interfering with trade? Yes, by manufacturers advancing cost price, and in cooperation with retailers advertising such advance. Let there be a card hanging in retail stores notifying the advance in price; and the goods which do not return  $17\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. on turnover quietly drop or keep in the background. Boldly advertise advances and reductions. Advertising stimulates trading; it also dispels the erroneous idea of having been overcharged."

TWELVE AND A HALF TO FIFTEEN PER CENT. A FAIR PROFIT.

The following is an extract from an essay submitted by another contestant:

"For my own part, I consider  $12\frac{1}{2}$  to 15 per cent. a fair profit for a grocer doing, principally, a cash trade, whilst  $17\frac{1}{2}$  to 20 per cent. is deemed necessary, and calculated to be indispensable, for the maintenance of your business if a 'family' trade is done and credit given. In calculating the profit on goods, it must clearly be remembered that the profit should be based upon the returns, otherwise mistakes are likely to arise. For instance, on an article costing 6d. and sold at 10d. there is a profit on the cost of 25 per cent., but on the return it is only 20 per cent. An easy way of calculating profits is by adopting the following rules:

| Add to cost 1-2 cost price to give 33 1-3 p.c. on returns. |      |   |   |        |   |
|------------------------------------------------------------|------|---|---|--------|---|
| "                                                          | 1-3  | " | " | 25     | " |
| "                                                          | 1-4  | " | " | 26     | " |
| "                                                          | 1-5  | " | " | 16 2-5 | " |
| "                                                          | 1-6  | " | " | 14 2-7 | " |
| "                                                          | 1-7  | " | " | 12 1-2 | " |
| "                                                          | 1-8  | " | " | 11 1-9 | " |
| "                                                          | 1-9  | " | " | 10     | " |
| "                                                          | 1-10 | " | " | 9 1-11 | " |
| "                                                          | 1-11 | " | " | 8 1-3  | " |
| "                                                          | 1-12 | " | " | 7 9-15 | " |

"As to how the increased expenditure can be best met, I would suggest the pushing of those articles bearing the best profit, and by refusing to stock proprietary goods not showing the necessary amount of profit. Needless to say, your business must be carried on at the lowest expense, yet without that false economical idea that the cheapest is the best * * * What assistants you have, let them be the very best. They may require a living wage, or even a little remuneration."

A HINT TO SMALL TRADERS.

From still another of the competing essayists the following is taken:

"If, as a general rule, they are content to pay cash and to take away the goods with them, business may, in a brisk market, be found profitable at  $12\frac{1}{2}$  per cent.; whereas, if the grocer has to send out for orders, deliver by horse and cart, give credit and render periodical accounts, 20 per cent. will not be too much—horse and cart work, in actual experience, alone representing a difference of 5 per cent. \* \* \* It is, for instance, a far too common practice, especially with small traders, to give away the benefit of a purchase or contract luckily made before a rise in the market, but to bear the loss themselves when the market falls. \* \* \* The chief remedy lies in noting what goods pay to sell, and resolutely pushing to the front only such as are both reliable and remunerative. Friendly arrangement may also be made with neighboring tradesmen to readjust prices when they prove unsatisfactory. Initiative in this direction will often be found to meet with a satisfactory response."

A SIMPLE SUGGESTION.

From a fourth essay the following extract is taken:

"To find what a fair profit should be calculate what percentage on returns your working expenses amount to; charge to working expenses your own salary. Having found this, add thereto 5 per cent.; fix the selling price so as to leave this percentage of profit. To give an instance: Suppose your working expenses are 10 per cent. add 5 per cent.—equals 15 per cent. You must fix the selling price so that you receive 15 per cent. on returns * * * Capital must be turned over from eight to twelve times a year, according to class of trade and amount of book debts. Buy for cash and take all discounts."

A GOOD WATCHWORD.

The Imperial Canning Co., Kingsville, Ont., realize the value of a sound argument in advertising. Knowing the value of flavors in canned goods, and the fact that the climate of the southern part of Canada is the best possible for the production of the finest fruits and vegetables, they have made their watchword: "The flavor of our goods cannot be excelled owing to our semi-tropical climate." The sentence appears on all their letter-heads, etc., as well as on much of their advertising. It is not surprising that the soundness of their argument carries conviction with it, and that their goods are among the popular brands on the market.

HOW SHALL CANADA INCREASE HER APPLE TRADE?

THE QUESTION DISCUSSED BY D. O. M.

THERE is no question but that the Canadian apple growing and exporting industry is, and has been for some years, in an unsatisfactory condition. Last year was, as everybody connected with the business knows, the worst of many bad years. In fact, it is a question whether there ever was a worse year for the shipper of apples. There seemed to be a combination of circumstances especially intended to make the season a disastrous one. High prices were paid at the orchards; the crop proved larger than was anticipated, buyers, to cover their losses, packed inferior fruit, which had such a demoralizing effect on the market that nearly every return meant a loss to the shipper.

While, however, it is easy to prove that the industry is not on a satisfactory footing, it is not an easy matter to effect the necessary revolution to put the business in a prosperous condition.

DISHONEST PACKING.

It is, of course, manifest that the trade should be protected from the dishonest man who resorts to "topping" or "facing" to swell his profits, regardless of the effect the practice is bound to have on the trade. This practice is largely due to the habit of buying by the "orchard" or "lump" system, by which the buyer, after making an estimate of the probable output of an orchard, pays the owner a lump sum for the fruit on the trees. Naturally, when he discovers he has overestimated the crop he is tempted to make good his loss by packing poor apples with a top or face of first-class stock. This system of buying should be discontinued, and a proper system of inspection must be instituted if the export trade of green apples is going to prove a profitable business to Canadian growers and shippers.

DRIED VS. GREEN APPLES.

But the question of the day is: "Should Canada export her apples in the green state?" It will be a most exceedingly difficult matter to prevent dishonesty in apple packing. In fact, it seems almost unreasonable to expect its prevention when we do not prevent the topping of tender fruits sold on the local markets in baskets.

Whither, then, shall we turn? Reason seems to answer: "To evaporated and dried apples." The experiences of the past few years seem to indicate that this is the form in which most of our apples will arrive in Great Britain, Germany and other distant markets in the not distant future.

INTERESTING STATISTICS.

The following statistics, showing the exports of both dried and green apples from Canada and the United States, will give a good idea of how the dried apple trade has grown in recent years:

|           | Canada.    |          | United States. |            |
|-----------|------------|----------|----------------|------------|
|           | Green.     | Dried.   | Green.         | Dried.     |
| 1893..... | ≈2,731,254 | ≈200,813 | $1,097,967    | $ 482,685 |
| 1894..... | 8 8,889    | 98 988   | 242 617        | 168,054    |
| 1895..... | 1,821,710  | 250,418  | 1,954 318      | 461 214    |
| 1896..... | 1,417,571  | 48,058   | 939,289        | 1,340,507  |
| 1897..... | 2,563,637  | 179,644  | 2,371,143      | 1,340,159  |
| 1898..... | 1,307,059  | 125,658  | 1,684,717      | 1,897,725  |
| 1899..... | 2,624,470  | 429,656  | 1,210,459      | 1,245,733  |

This statement shows that, while the exports of green apples are practically unchanged, the shipments of dried stock have much more than doubled. It shows, too, that the exports from the United States have increased in greater proportion than have the shipments from Canada. This is a significant fact, for all acquainted with the relative development of trade in the two countries know that in nearly every line Canada has gained on her big rival. The reason for it is found in the fact that until with the last year or two Canadians have been satisfied to send their stock abroad through New York houses, and much of it has gone via the port of New York. Naturally, this has retarded the growth of the Canadian business, for European buyers had not been taught to look to Canada, as they should, for their best stock, and Canadian dealers had not established a good connection across the Atlantic.

THE GERMAN MARKET.

Within the past year or two there has been an improvement in this regard however. Canadian dealers are manifesting a determination to seek the best market for their goods and European buyers are learning more of this country. Within the past fortnight the names of 16 firms, all dealers in dried apples and other fruits in Hamburg, Germany, have been sent to the Ontario Department of Agriculture. These names were accompanied by the information that there is a large and growing demand for these goods in Germany.

While in London this summer the writer had occasion to discuss the matter with several large importers of that city. The general opinion was that the taste for these goods in Great Britain has just begun to assume large proportions, and that the next few years will witness unusual growth in the business.

THE QUALITY OF CANADIAN APPLES.

There is no reason why Canada should not obtain a large, if not the major share in this increase. The apples grown in Ontario, in all the Eastern Provinces, and especially in the Annapolis Valley, Nova Scotia, will compare favorably in point of flavor with those of any apple grown. If properly evaporated or dried and packed in attractive packages they would have little difficulty in finding a market. Both rings and whole apples have good sale in Germany and in Great Britain.

If these markets are to be won for Canada, however, packers will have to put up their goods honestly and attractively. Canadian cheese, above all other products of this country, has been protected from dishonesty in manufacture. The result is that it is the product which has established the supremacy of Canada as a dairying country. The same results can be attained in the apple industry.

Must the advisability of shipping apples in the dried state rather than green be demonstrated? It is practically established in the fact that the shipment of apples in the green state is including a great share of risk, while experience has shown that evaporated apples, when judiciously handled, have uniformly paid well. The keeping qualities of the evaporated fruit give to the holder as much power over prices as the buyer, but when shipped green they must be sold promptly, thus giving to the buyer complete power over prices.

Canadian apple exporters, if they are to effect the

of their present difficulties, must be in the position to control the offerings of green apples. That much has already been admitted. To do this there must be a more careful selection of the apples to be shipped. If last season a third of the green stock shipped had been culled out and only the soundest and most attractive fruit shipped, there would not have been the glut nor the loss from goods arriving in poor condition that was the case. If there had not been this glut and loss, the market, instead of being a demoralized one, would have yielded a good profit to shippers. In future it should be the object of shippers to move carefully, select their green fruit, and pay more attention to the development of a permanent market for evaporated apples.

I have made no mention of canned apples. This is hardly necessary, as the demand for them is being met in a way satisfactory, both to the Canadian canners and to the British consumers. This trade is a growing one, but is not likely for some time to reach proportions sufficient to materially affect our aggregate apple trade.

STERILIZED UNSWEETENED CREAM.

IN order to supply the immense demand for St. Charles Cream in Canada, and other English colonies, the St. Charles Condensing Co. (controlled by English and Scotch capital) have built a fine factory at Ingersoll, Ontario, which is now in full operation. The company are also operating a large plant at St. Charles, Illinois, U.S.A., where their head office is located.

St. Charles Cream is prepared from the best milk obtainable in the finest dairy sections of the world, evaporated in vacuum, to the consistency of very rich cream, canned and then perfectly sterilized by a secret scientific process, insuring pure and safe product, especially valuable for infant feeding, and all culinary uses.

It is particularly commended as perfect for infant feeding, having been used for years by the leading institutions in all parts of the world. Physicians everywhere, after a thorough test, have pronounced it, when properly diluted, a perfect substitute for mothers' milk.

By the addition of water, a milk or cream of any desired richness is produced, particularly adapted to culinary purposes.

St. Charles Cream is used largely by the armies and navies of the world, it being recognized of especial value from the fact that it is a perfect substitute for milk or cream in its original form for all uses, which cannot be said of much of the ordinary condensed milk on the market, which consists of from 40 to 44 per cent. cane sugar.

The cream has been shipped to all parts of the world, and is guaranteed to keep perfectly in any climate. The demand in the countries where the climate is particularly trying is growing very rapidly, and the cream is reported as giving perfect satisfaction to dealers and consumers.

The label and package throughout are especially attractive, and the manufacturers exercise scrupulous care in maintaining the high quality of the cream.

Foreign merchants selling high-grade food products, are invited to write to the St. Charles Condensing Co., St. Charles, Ill., U.S.A., for full information as to prices, etc., and will certainly find it to their advantage to handle this excellent article.

"STERLING" BRAND GOODS.

"WHAT'S in a name?" asks Shakespeare. Evidently T. A. Lytle & Co., manufacturers of "Sterling" brand pickles, sauces and cordials believe in a name with a significance, and of late years they have demonstrated that they also believe in living up to the standard of worth which their brand signifies. It is an undisputed fact that in years past Canadian pickles have been inferior in many respects to the imported article, but of late the productions of Lytle & Co. have been of such a high standard that they do not hesitate to place their goods in comparison with the most highly reputed. Having discontinued the manufacture of vinegar, Lytle & Co. have sought to largely extend their bottling business. They make a complete range of high-class pickles, and are constantly adding to their lines of other goods. Their jams, jellies, marmalade, catsups and horseradish have established a sound reputation and have a steadily growing sale. This spring they installed a first-class laboratory, and started to manufacture flavoring extracts, fruit syrups, unfermented phosphate and fruit wines, fruit oils, dry and liquid colors, lime fruit juice and bitters. This departure has proven a popular one, as the goods are attractively bottled and of "Sterling" worth. Their general display of pickles, sauces and condiments won the gold medal (the highest award) at the Toronto Industrial Exhibition this year.

The writer was given the other day an opportunity to examine the process of manufacture in the Lytle works. One taking a trip through this factory could not fail to be impressed with the cleanliness and thorough system prevailing throughout. Everything combines to the most economical production of first-class goods so well that one readily understands when he has completed a visit to the different departments how T. A. Lytle & Co. have maintained the position their "Sterling" goods hold on the Canadian market.

AN AFTER-DINNER DELICACY.

What is claimed to be one of the choicest after-dinner delicacies that have been offered to the Canadian retailer and consumer is Bayle's after-dinner cheese, put up in ½ lb., 1 lb., and 5 lb. jars. Robert Greig & Co., Toronto, have recently been appointed Canadian agents for Bayle's goods.

THREE "AROMAS."

AMONG the many proprietary articles which have been placed before the Canadian consumers through the grocery trade during the past year or so, there are none more deserving of special notice than that of "Aroma" Ceylon tea, "Aroma" coffee, and "Paradise" baking powder, which were placed upon the market just one year ago by W. H. Gillard & Co., Hamilton, Ont., after exhaustive tests and long practical experience as to the requirements of the public, feeling every confidence in the peculiar and distinctive merits of their goods to give universal satisfaction. They have succeeded even beyond their expectations, and, to-day, these specialties command a large and ready sale in all parts of the country.

Being packed by the most approved methods, at a minimum of expense, the cost of the goods is in the contents—not mostly in the packages, and if the hundreds of unsolicited letters from satisfied users mean anything W. H. Gillard & Co. should be assured of a largely increased sale in the future.

A handsomely illustrated booklet will be sent to anyone asking for same.

W. H. Gillard & Co. report that they have been particularly fortunate this year in the selection and purchase of their teas, and their range comprises values unsurpassed anywhere, both for quality and with regard to the prices at which they are offered to the trade. In Ceylon orange Pekoes, especially exceptional values can be seen with this firm.

WILSON'S GROCER SCALE.

Scales have improved as much as any other article used by the grocer within the last ten years, and Canada is keeping to the front in the art of up-to-date scales. The Wilson Grocer Money-Weight Scale is so constructed that the weight, value and price are all shown on the beam. This is a great advantage, as it avoids much complication of having to find the weight and values separately. The scale is mounted on a patent swivel base so that it can be turned to any angle or from either side of counter. A special feature about the Wilson scale is the agate in the beam bearing and ball bearings under the platform, where all the strain comes. The platform is Italian marble, and the scale, instead of being painted, has several coats of enamel, giving it a beautiful appearance. The weights, instead of being nickled cast iron, are solid brass, and all the brass parts are heavily nickled. The catalogue will be mailed free by addressing C. Wilson & Son, 69 Esplanade street, Toronto.

AMONG TORONTO RETAILERS.

Why He Doesn't Build.

A grocer north of Bloor street, who is doing a large, paying trade, gave me an interesting reason why he does not erect a larger and more handsome store than his present one, which is so crowded with goods from floor to ceiling and from one end to the other that it seems cramped.

"Well, it's just this way," he said, when I suggested the matter: "I'm doing a good business here, and if I let things run on as they are my competitors will do the same, and the chances of an up-to-date, new man coming into my field are small. But, if I build fine premises, my neighbors will follow suit if they can, and others will begin to look upon this section as a fine place to start. I am content to let well enough alone."

"Is your business increasing?"

"Yes. You see, it's this way: I have lived here for years, and nearly all the young fellows who have grown up around here, and who get married and start house-keeping, have known me nearly all their lives. And, as I have generally 'stood in' with most of them, I get a good share of their trade. Every year increases their number, so my business keeps on growing. I expect to put on another rig soon. This investment will not excite the attention that a new store would, but I believe it will be of even more value to my business."

*Two Methods
in Business.*

There are undoubtedly many ways of doing the same thing well. Within the last three months two firms have opened grocery stores on Yonge street. The proprietors of both firms came from the United States, bringing with them methods of their own, which are entirely different from each other. Both seem to have succeeded in establishing their business in a satisfactory manner, which, as many beginners have gone to the wall on Yonge street in recent years, is sufficient evidence that their methods of establishing their business have been good. One of these firms is known as the "Viv" Co., Limited. My attention was directed to it by their window-display which consisted of a representation of a coffee roaster. By means of an electric mechanism, the roaster, which stood about four feet high, was given a realistic appearance. Coffee was seen entering in the green state and issuing as the roasted product. The bins, sluices, etc., were opened by automatic figures. I entered the store, and was shown the mechanism. The only thing I learned by the study was that the coffee was made to run as it did by a revolving set of pockets or carriers such as are in use in mills, elevators, etc. The policy of the proprietors of this store was in starting to make the window-display the means of attracting buyers into the store. When in, they are invited to partake of the special blend tea and coffee put up by the firm. The proprietor of the Viv Company told me that he would be content to sell only tea and coffee at first, in the belief that he could develop a general trade with such customers as bought these articles from him.

The other store I referred to in starting was Thompson & Co., corner Alexander and Yonge streets. Mr. Thompson came to Toronto from New York. His policy in starting was to issue large circulars, printed in red, advertising "specials." Each week he made a "cut" on some article. The first week it was on sugar, and buyers came to him from one end of Toronto to the other and bought sugar only, asking him to send it. Needless to say, a trial of that was sufficient. Next week his circular stated that all purchases of sugar at the "cut" must be accompanied by a purchase of regular grocery articles. He has all his goods ticketed, and, as he started doing business on a rather close margin, he has won a good share of regular customers already.

A DISPLAY STAND AND TABLE.

Of late years, grocers and, in fact, all merchants have devoted so much attention to displaying their wares that it is but natural that the genius of the inventor should be devoted to the improvement of their facilities for doing so. The evolution from the bulky, home-made stand to the neat, attractive combination stands and tables now offered has been a natural and rapid result of the opinion regarding the display of goods which has been manifested in the past few years. One of the tables on the market, which is well recommended, is the "Imperial," which is constructed to revolve and tilt to any angle and be securely locked. It has five leaves, 60 inches long. These are curved, thus making the display more effective. The table is made in a variety of shapes and styles. Walter Woods & Co., Hamilton, Ont., are the selling agents in Ontario, Manitoba and the Northwest Territories.

WHOLESALE ELECT OFFICERS.

At the annual meeting of the Wholesale Grocers' Association, of New York, the following officers were elected: President, G. Waldo Smith; First Vice-President, F.

W. Ormiston; Second Vice President, F. H. Leggett; Treasurer, August Koenig. Directors—T. C. Clark, E. H. Sayre and E. D. Depew, of New York; C. E. Brown, Springfield, Mass.; Geo. P. Bergen, Brooklyn, N.Y.; A. P. Bartlett, Providence, R.I., and F. W. Hannahs, Newark, N.J.

CHINAWARE AND GLASSWARE.

The unique methods of business followed by E. W. Klotz, Toronto, agent and importer of chinaware and glassware from Europe, has resulted in a steady increase in the number of orders placed through him by cash buyers. In his advertisement in this issue, Mr. Klotz draws special reference to Wood & Sons, of Burslem, England, high-grade earthenware, which are shipped direct from maker to buyer at factory prices. For the import season of 1901, which opens February 1, for fancy china and glass, he will show samples from the leading makers of England, Germany, Austria, Hungary and France. These goods will be specially imported to suit individual requirements, landed at Montreal or Toronto, freight and duty paid.

SECRETS OF CANNING.

As a rule business secrets are jealously guarded, but The Brighton Canning Co., Brighton, Ont., devote their advertisement on page 55 to the secrets of the methods by which their "Thistle" brand has won the reputation which it now possesses in Great Britain as well as throughout Canada. The firm have made it their policy to keep only goods of uniformly high quality, devoting every attention to the growing, packing and handling of their products. An evidence of the success of The Brighton Canning Co.'s methods is furnished in the fact that they have already sold their entire pack, of which over 20 cars are going to British Columbia.

BAYLE'S GOODS.

Bayle's Spanish salted peanuts are put up as follows: ½-lb. cartons, 50 in a case; 1-lb. cartons, 25 in a case; 5-lb. cartons, 6 in a case. Potted cheese: ½-lb. jars, 2 doz. in a case; 1-lb. jars, 1 doz. in a case; 5 lb. jars, ½ doz. in a case.

READY TO HANDLE MORE GOODS.

George J. Clancy, commission dealer, Toronto, is looking for several new lines to handle. Mr. Clancy has a good connection, and is now agent for several first-class houses manufacturing grocery lines, especially canned goods. But as his business keeps extending he is open to handle several more lines, either for export, import or domestic trade.

SALES of 125 barrels of new and old Amalia currants were reported in New York on Saturday on the basis of 12¾c. for 50 barrels of old and 75 barrels of new at 13c. for country shipment.

Sales aggregating 1,500 cases of Southern tomatoes, 3 lb. standards, were reported in New York on Saturday on the basis of 80c. delivered. A considerable business was reported also in 3-lb. standard Jerseys at 82½c. delivered.

CANE SUGAR CROPS.

Willett & Gray say: "It is too early to estimate closely the outturn of the cane crops of the world, but our latest information is such as to lead us to expect a very heavy increase over the crops of last year. The crops which will show an increase are those of Cuba, Louisiana, Porto Rico, West Indies, Demerara, Egypt, Mauritius and Hawaii. Those which will outturn smaller are Java, Brazil and Queensland. The present indication is that there will be a net increase of 550,000 tons in the cane crops of the world. The excess in beet crops is expected to offset the deficiency in visible supplies of the world, but the increase in cane crops is likely to prove larger than the normal increase in consumption."

SHIPMENTS OF PERSIAN DATES.

As setting at rest all doubts and contradictory reports regarding the movements of the first tide shipment of dates from Persia, it was officially announced to-day that the Turkestan sailed from Bushire for New York direct on Tuesday, October 16 last, with a cargo of 75,000 boxes of dates, consigned to G. F. Nixon. Barring delay, the vessel is due to arrive here on or about November 19 next. Bushire is about 120 miles from Bussorah on the way out. Last year, according to official data, the first tide steamer for this port sailed from Bushire on October 12, arriving on November 14. It is expected that the direct steamer will beat shipments via London and Liverpool by about five days.—New York Journal of Commerce, October 20.

CANNED SALMON ON THE COAST.

A press despatch from San Francisco, under date of October 13, says: "Wrangle advises following packs of salmon: Alaska Pachon, 60,000; Klenget, 29,000; Klanock, North Pacific, 30,000; Hunters Bay, Alaska pack, 50,000; Boyer Warnock, 4,000 cases; Ice Straits, Wrangle Narrows, 12,000. All salteries packs limited only by barrels on brand Alaska packs. Alaska Packers, Highland Landing, 60,000; Barnes, Gerard Point, 25,000; Snettisham, 12,000 cases; Yes Bay, 60,000; Forbes, Chikoot Inlet, 20,000; Lorens Ketchikan, 60,000. The Fraser river sockeye pack to the date of closing amounted to 161,450 cases, the output of 43 canneries. The largest and most valuable cargo of the season left San Francisco October 12, by the German ship Alsternixe for London. The cargo was valued at $528,598. There were 91,096 cases salmon. The salmon was the largest shipment ever made from here. The ship Llewelyn J. Moise arrived at San Francisco October 12, from Fort Wrangle, with a cargo of 50,000 cases of salmon."

PECULIAR POSITION OF SULTANA RAISINS.

Business in Sultanas is on a more limited scale, and in some cases lower prices have been accepted. Considerations in regard to this article are much on a level with those of currants, and, with an estimated crop of 17,000 tons no improvement can be anticipated. At the same time there is room for variations, as the past has seen a fall of from 3 to 5s. in some qualities. The lowest qualities are now cheaper than Provincial currants, and the fruit is in much better condition. This position is in the highest degree exceptional; in fact, it may be said to have never occurred before, and, in all probability, will not last very long, but the position at present is that good, sound, old dark Sultanas can be bought at 45s. and 46s., whereas sound old Provincial currants are worth 50s.—Produce Markets' Review.

THE CURRANT SITUATION.

During the past week transactions in currants have been limited in extent. The dislocation in trade usually connected with a general election, reacting through the consuming markets on the central one, probably accounts for this to some extent, but a more important factor is that the heavy supplies of the season are now at hand. A great proportion of the cargoes of the steamers now just about arriving has already been sold, and the knowledge that speculators had to receive these goods, mostly bought at or near the present level of high prices, caused some apprehension to be felt as to whether all engagements would be fulfilled. The liquidation, however, has now in great part been effected, and in all cases without any hitch. So far as supplies are concerned, the position of the market may now be considered as an ideal one. There will be, during the next week, an ample supply of all qualities of currants available for distribution, just at the time when the demand is heaviest; and, at the same time, when all existing engagements have been fulfilled, Greece, the producing country, will have practically disposed of the whole crop of 1900, together with the remnant of that of 1899. Thus, instead of the uncertainty as to the future, which must always be felt with a stock of some 100,000 tons remaining unshipped at the end of October, the trade this year has a perfectly clear position before it, and the demand can arrange itself with the knowledge that the quantity of currants available for the United Kingdom is definitely known.—Produce Markets' Review, October 6.

THE UNITED STATES TOMATO PACK.

The Trade, Baltimore, Md., says: "It is developing almost as a certainty that tomatoes will not amount to an average pack in quantity. Thus a well-informed packer, one who is in a position to have unusual facilities for information, writes of the tomato pack in Indiana as follows, under date of October 5:

"The tomato pack of Indiana is closed without a frost. After computing gallons and 2's into 3's, the total will show a pack not exceeding 45 cases per acre. An average pack in this State, one year with another, is over 90 cases per acre. We estimate the total pack at not more than 600,000 cases, and less than 100,000 cases unsold."

"In other words, Indiana, which is of all States in the West the tomato packing State, has but half an average pack, and even of what she has gotten, five-sixths of it are already sold and presumably gone into consumption. This is not doing much better than Indiana did last year, when she was compelled to make a strong call on Maryland to eke out supplies. And Maryland has no surplus to spare this year in tomatoes.

"Therefore, tomatoes can be reckoned on to hold their present value strong all through the winter; and the packers can confidently count on a very heavy demand for futures in the early months of next year.

"As comparing Maryland's condition in this respect with Indiana, we have before us the report of an Eastern Shore packer, who runs two factories in different counties, who reports as follows: He planted the same acreage in amount in 1889 and 1900, viz., 425 acres; in 1889 he got from his crop 129,000 No. 3 cans, and from the same acreage in 1900 he got but 70,396 No. 3 cans, a considerable falling off as all will agree—but little more than half a crop."

THE RETAIL PRICE OF JAPAN TEA.

THE stocks of Japan tea in Canada are lighter this fall than they have been for some years. From the opening of the season prices of Japan tea at the primary markets have been high. This has been chiefly caused by an abnormal demand from the United States, where the heavy stocks laid in before the duty was levied three years ago have been exhausted and where a large supply is now wanted.

It has been known also that the crop would be short; and now we are assured that the shortage will amount to 10 per cent. of the total output of 40 000,000 lb. With this contingency in view, American buyers rushed prices up at the beginning of the season, and, although there have been numerous bears, values have been well maintained.

In Canada, particularly, has the bearish attitude predominated. Dealers have refused to buy, and, in consequence, we find to-day that all stocks of Japan tea are light. To September 15, 1900, we have imported into Canada:

|                          | Lb.       |
|--------------------------|-----------|
| From Yokohama .....      | 3,191,816 |
| From Kobe .....          | 611,132   |
| Total .....              | 3,802,948 |
| Same time last year..... | 7,304,845 |
| Decrease .....           | 3,501,897 |

At the same time the increase of shipments into the United States amounts to 1,835,866 lb. over last year, and at the present moment prices are ruling 3 to 5c. higher than last year's values on mediums and good mediums.

The question is naturally asked: If American buyers were eager to buy why did Canadian dealers not also lay in stocks? Why did they wait in a rising market till the teas were all bought and till they could be held, as they are now being held, for further advances? The answer seems to be that, at the advance, medium Japans cannot be sold at 25c. per lb. to the Canadian consumer. When mediums were worth 14c. per lb. to the jobber, as they were last year, he could wholesale them at 18c., and the retailer could sell them at 25c. per lb. for a reasonable profit. But now these teas are worth 17 and 18c. per lb. to the wholesaler. He must sell them for 21 or 22c., and the retailer, to sell them at a profit, has to charge 30c. The difficulty is to change the retail price from 25 to 30c. per lb. in face of the competition with package teas. Importers would like to see it done, and it perhaps would be a good thing for all concerned, except the consumer, if it could be worked satisfactorily.

As it was last year, there was nothing in the business for the importer or the shipper from Japan. This year the Japs have refused to consign to Canada.

Canadian importers had to hold teas over from last fall to this spring for the advance, so they are not again taking the risk this year. With this increased price assured by the sale of tea at 30c., however, it is likely they will return to the trade. At the 30c. rate there would be an increased profit of 5c. to be distributed between importer, wholesaler and retailer.

But the difficult thing is to get 30c. Ordinarily it would be easy to advance a 25c. article 5c., but when 25c. per lb. package teas are in competition the attempt to raise the price from 25 to 30c. is a difficult matter. As yet the wholesalers and retailers have not attempted to do so, for they are still working off their old supplies, but when these are exhausted the question must be decided.

SELF-SEALING JAR PACKAGES.

Editor CANADIAN GROCER,—Your fine periodical is O.K., but we sometimes think it might be more assistance to the retailer if used in the right way, viz., as a medium to ventilate our grievances, and to assist us to remove them.

For instance, the retailer has a bona fide grievance in the very inferior packing or crating of self-sealers.

Now, we have to buy this line of goods early when the retailer is unable to judge whether there will be a full fruit year or a lean fruit year. Consequently, to be on the ground floor, he buys, as a rule, for a full fruit year.

If it happens to be a lean year he will have to carry over half of his jars. This is the point. It has been very exasperating to us to find in too many crates one to four sealers broken, and also to have to replace to customers upon whom we could rely more often three than less.

Now, the reason is improper packing. The manufacturers have sacrificed the retailer's profit for the sake of a cheap product to the consumer. Let them put up a proper package and we will have a chance to make a little profit anyway.

The wooden slat in the crate is no good. It must go, and now is the time for the retailer to kick for 1901 in the columns of your publication.

Mine is not the only case. My neighbor complains as I do, and of a different shipment.

We received a small shipment this year packed in cardboard sections, like egg sections. These came better, but we must say the cardboard ought to be three times as thick and to stand higher in the crate, then we will have some show to make a profit, as it is the poor packing which causes us the loss.

Again, jars are evidently not inspected when they leave the factory. The top of the jar is often imperfect and frequently has a hole in the thread.

As the profit is not large, we feel bound to bring it before your readers for redress, and that some friendly action be taken to induce the manufacturers to put up a better package. If it costs more to do so, the retailer is willing to pay it for the sake of a safety package of some kind.

Remember O'Connell's maxim, to "agitate, agitate." If we do not protest in this matter we will have to put up with break-ages in the future. As the matter can be remedied by representing to the factory that we want a better package and are willing to pay the extra cost, there ought to be no difficulty whatever.

I would suggest that the cardboard section be made three times as thick and twice as high, then, I think, we would have a safety package.

E. BEATTIE.

[REMARKS.—The subject referred to by Mr. Beattie is an important one, and THE CANADIAN GROCER takes pleasure in throwing its columns open for its further discussion.—THE EDITOR ]

A FINE DISPLAY.

In his advertisement in this week's CANADIAN GROCER, Mr. E. D. Marceau makes a fine display of his trade-mark and special registered brands of coffees, spices and teas. It is quite an imposing array.

CHARCOAL AS A FUEL.

Hamilton & Co., charcoal dealers, Toronto, whose advertisement appears in another column, are the firm whose enterprise and vigor contributed so largely to the general introduction of charcoal as a domestic fuel into Toronto. They are now in a position to supply dealers at outside points. Correspondence is solicited.

PURE VS. ADULTERATED PEPPER.

As a rule a manufacturer of any line of goods is protected from dishonest competition in the readiness with which a consumer discovers the real value of the inferior article, thus enabling the maker who puts up a consistently good article to win a reputation of great value. But this does not hold true equally in all cases. In pepper it is particularly difficult to detect adulteration. Mayell & Co., Toronto, in referring to this fact the other day, stated that the most common method of adulterating pepper is to mix with the whole pepper berry or seed the pepper shells. As these shells are composed of 40 to 75 per cent. of foreign matter this becomes a serious loss to consumers, but it is held that some manufacturers of pepper sell ground pepper in which these shells have been mixed as pure pepper, arguing that pepper shells are pepper.

The fallacy of their argument may be readily seen. But how their action interferes with such firms as Mayell & Co., who sell only the pure article as such, may be understood when it is known that the adulterated article is sold as pure at prices below what the wholesale dealers can import whole pepper in large quantities for. Practically the only way the trade can depend on getting pure pepper is to pay the standard price, and to buy only from houses that are known to be honest, who sell pepper mixed with shells as "compound pepper."

THE ORANGE CROP OF FLORIDA,

A conservative estimate of Florida's orange crop this year places the yield at 1,000,000 boxes. An extra large yield will be had in Manatee, Hillborough and De Soto counties. The groves are in a healthy condition, and within two weeks the fruit will begin to be marketed. Before the freeze in 1895, when the yield was 5,000,000 boxes, they sold at 50c., but this year the average price per box is $2.

"Chateau Brand" California Three-Crown Loose Muscatel Raisins

This lot is to fill our orders for 1,000 Boxes Campuzano Malaga Fancy Three-Crown Loose Muscatel Raisins.

On the 13th instant we received a LETTER COMMUNICATION from M. Campuzano, of Malaga, Spain, conveying the information that it was utterly impossible for him to fulfil his contract with us, or any portion of it, for the 1,000 boxes Malaga Fancy Three-Crown Loose Muscatel Raisins he sold us on the 31ST AUGUST for shipment in October.

Mr. Campuzano alleges, in support of his action, that this year's small crop of Malaga Raisins has been considerably damaged by rain, and that he prefers abstaining altogether from executing his orders, rather than to ship goods not up to his Standard of Quality and susceptible to not keeping. He claims that this is a case of "FORCE MAJEURE," for which he cannot be held liable, and which relieves him of the obligation of living up to his engagements.

These contentions, of course, are subject to discussion and will be dealt with on their merit in the suitable way, but our buyers cannot wait the issue of this matter to get their orders executed. Neither do we ask them or expect them to do so.

As we always deliver what we sell, equal or better, regardless of the conditions in which we are placed by uncontrollable circumstances, or by the unfaithfulness of our sellers in filling their contracts, we only ask of our buyers to accept at the same price Three-Crown Californias, instead of Campuzano's Loose Muscatels, which we cannot deliver at present, for the above imperious reasons.

Our sales of Campuzanos were made at prices ranging from 8c. to 9c., according to market fluctuations, and California Three Crowns have not cost to import this season less than 8<sup>3</sup>/<sub>4</sub>c.

Somebody is going to lose money on this operation, but you are not, and you never will in any similar occasion when dealing with Hudon, Hebert & Cie.

PRESERVED FOODS: THEIR PREPARATION AND NUTRITIVE VALUE.*

By Dr. Goodfellow.

THE preparation of food is of paramount importance to the human race. As the living units gradually congregate in special spots on the world's surface in immense numbers, and as the food-producing districts are unequally distributed over its area, it follows that in the future the surplus of available food in the prolific seasons of the year will require to be preserved for use in the famine seasons and for the maintenance of those who live in crowded countries incapable of producing locally the food required for the people living within their boundaries. There can be little doubt that reliable preservation of food, combined with rapid transport, will be the means in the far future by which the world's inhabitants will be fed. I need scarcely dwell on the importance of food preservation to Governments. It is the only practical method of feeding an army, and must always form the backbone of the commissariat.

IT IS A MATTER FOR REGRET

that, owing to recent revelations, many kinds of preserved foods have been looked upon with suspicion, and there is a common notion that they are not nutritious, and, in fact, dangerous foods. It is partly my endeavor to night to remove these suspicions, and to show you that preserved foods lose little, if any, of their nutritive properties under the process of proper manufacture. With a view of thoroughly investigating the modern methods of preserving, and making my information as reliable as possible, I placed myself in communication with a well-known English preserving firm, who, solely in the public interest, heartily entered into my project, and placed the whole of their immense factories at my disposal. The decay of all food is due to the growth, in or on the food, of small living motes known as microbes. These microbes are exceedingly minute, and, when they find a fitting soil (food is a good soil) in which to grow, they develop in immense numbers very rapidly and set up a series of changes in the food, accompanied by the production of gases of foul odor, to which we give the name of putrefaction. In order, then, to properly preserve food, it is necessary to: 1. Destroy the putrefactive germs in the food. 2. To prevent the access of germs to the sterilized food. By modifying the food so as to make it a less favorable medium for the growth of germs, we also, to a certain extent, preserve food, as in the coagulation of the albumen of meat during the cooking process. By the addition of certain bodies inimical to the growth of the putrefaction germs, food may be preserved. Such bodies are termed antiseptics, and include salt, boracic acid and salicylic acid.

IF FOOD BE KEPT

under conditions unfavorable to the development of the germs it may be kept good for long periods; and the method of carrying carcasses in frozen chambers or in chambers containing circulating sterilized air come under this category. I am, however, mainly concerned to-night in the first method whereby the germs are first destroyed in the food and access of air, which is always laden with microbes, entirely prevented. The germs in the food are destroyed generally by cooking, and the food, while still hot, is packed in tins or jars with gelatine or fat and hermetically sealed. The following is a brief account of the fundamental principles of the process: The food is cleared of all offal, and in many cases, of bone, so that only the actual digestible portions are utilized. The food is then subjected to the cooking process by means of steam and placed in tins with gelatine or fat. The object of adding gelatine is to completely fill the spaces in the tin, as it is essential that no air should linger in the tin. The lid containing a pin-hole is now soldered on, and the tin placed under the influence of heat up to 212°F, the pin hole being free to the air. The moisture of the contents of the tin is converted into steam which blows through the hole in the lid with considerable force carrying all air with it. When the steam is seen beginning to cease its escape a drop of solder closes the hole and the operation is complete.

THESE FUNDAMENTAL OPERATIONS

secure: 1. Sterilization of the food, as the germs are destroyed at 212°F. 2. The expulsion of air from the contents of the tin. 3. The exclusion of air from the tin. It is clear that under these circumstances the food cannot putrify and will keep wholesome for long periods. There are many modifications of the original method. Sometimes the food is put in raw and cooked in the tins. In other cases oil is employed as the preserving medium, as in sardines. Again, thick layers of fat are used to exclude the air, as in potted meats and chicken and ham rolls, but every modification must secure the objects mentioned previously. In tins, as the food cools so it contracts, and the pressure of the external air drives in the ends so that they become slightly concave.

HOW TO CHOOSE TINS.

1. Only choose those which bear the name of reputable firms. The recent revelations in the police courts emphasize the importance of this. Tins which only bear the brand and not the name of the manufacturer are best left alone. The name of a reliable firm is a good guarantee that at least wholesome food was employed in the first instance, and every reasonable care taken in the preparation. 2. Choose tins with concave ends. If the tins bulge ever so slightly it indicates that gas has been generated inside the tin by prefactive changes, and gradually forced the ends outwards. 3. In cases of potted meats, chicken and ham rolls, etc., always ask to be served from the latest delivery.

HOW TO USE PRESERVED FOOD.

When the tin is opened empty it completely into a dish. Never allow the contents to remain in the tin for subsequent use, as it may lead sometimes to a slight solution of metallic substances, owing to oxides being formed by the action of the air, and the subsequent formation of compounds by the action of the acids on the contents. Always examine the contents after removal from the tin by the sense of smell. The slightest unpleasant odor should condemn the food. This is most important, for poisons, termed ptomaines, are formed in putrefying food, which are most deadly in their action. The contents of the tin should be eaten fresh if possible, as they are more prone to decay than fresh meat. If these simple precautions were adopted we should hear no more of the ill effects of preserved foods which occur now and again through carelessness in choosing and lack of examination. But the public may rest assured that there is no more danger in eating properly preserved foods than in eating fresh meat if only a little common sense is exercised in their selection and examination. I have examined some hundreds of various kinds of preserved foods from the stock of reputable firms, and in no case have I met with a sample which was unfit for human food, and the specimens ranged from stewed kidneys and beefsteak to turbot, herrings and haddock.

I may now pass on to the important point of nutritive value, and here preserved foods win all along the line, as far as actual weight of nourishment is concerned. Of course there is a slight loss of flavor in some cases, and in certain kinds of preserved food there is a slight loss of blood salts, but these differences are so slight as to render them unimportant. I have been at some pains to demonstrate the comparative value of fresh and preserved foods, and with this

An advantage of over 8 per cent. in favor of the preserved food. These samples will suffice for my purpose, and show that preserved food is certainly not inferior in actual nutritive constituents to fresh food. Where there is a gain the result is due to the fact that, in the preliminary preparation of the food for cooking, the waste and offal parts, sometimes including fat, is removed; and sometimes to the lower quantity of water present. A very suggestive fact is that fresh codfish and turbot are now being preserved as well as cooked herring, mackerel and haddocks. Remembering the practically inexhaustible supplies of the ocean it is a matter for congratulation that means have been found to preserve the vast surplus of fish caught in the season which formerly lay rotting on the land as manure, and at the best only served as food for the time being for the country off the shores of which they were caught, but can now be kept for supply all the year around and for export to our colonies. I do not, of course, advocate the use of preserved food in preference to or in the place of fresh food, but I very earnestly say that it forms a very wholesome supplementary article of diet at once cheap and nourishing, and in view of the low rate at which it is sold is deserving of the attention of the people; besides giving us a greater variety of diet in seasons when many fresh foods are not in the market.

The army rations which I examined in my investigations for this lecture, are of a very interesting nature, and show what can be done in the direction of perfect diets in the preserved form. And the health of our army in South Africa is splendid testimony to the efficiency of the rations, as millions of these have been supplied to the Government for the commissariat. They consist of beef with correct proportions of such vegetables as carrots, potatoes, onions and beans. They may be eaten cold, but preferably they are heated in the closed tin for 30 (thirty) minutes in boiling water or 10 minutes over a camp fire. The following is a typical analysis, compared with the standard diet, the proportions being given in percentages of dry food :

|------------------------------|--------------|-----------|
|                              | average.     | diet.     |
| Proteid (flesh-forming)..... | 21.6         | 20 parts. |
| Fat.....                     | 11.2         | 12 "      |
| Carbo-hydrates { Heat }..... | 63.4         | 64 "      |
| Salts .....                  | 3.8          | 4 "       |
|                              | 100          | 100       |

From these analyses the average ration is practically a perfect diet.

I hope, in conclusion, that I may have succeeded in interesting you in this far-reaching subject, and removing any prejudice against properly preserved food, and at the same time if you have gained any knowledge on the proper selection and use of such foods, I am amply repaid for the time and labor involved in the preparation of this lecture.

GOING BACK TO A CASH SYSTEM.

Lumsden Bros., wholesale grocers, Hamilton and Toronto, have tried the net cash and the credit systems of trading and have decided to adopt a system different from either of these. The net cash was the most satisfactory of the two, but it was open to the objection that many customers who bought at net cash prices did not pay as promptly as they should, they buying at net cash prices and paying in a credit system time. The system Lumsden Bros. now propose adopting is to have short dates and large discounts. The effect of this will be to put the buyer who pays within the first date at such an advantage over any who take a lengthy time to settle their account that all customers will naturally make a big effort to get the big discount offered. Meanwhile, this firm is experiencing a steady extension in the demand for their "Social" tea, and for their coffee and baking powder, which they are selling under the coupon system.

HIGH-CLASS GOODS COMMAND SALES.

This is an old and tried maxim in the grocery business. When a grocer takes up a line of Hams and Bacon it is to his interest to be very careful in his selection. Inferior goods will kill his trade, while the best brands will help him to build it up.

MANITOBA MARKETS.

Winnipeg, October 22, 1900.

THE continued admirable weather for threshing and outdoor work of all kinds has improved the tone of trade generally, although the actual volume of business has not increased for the simple reason that farmers are far too busy to come to town to make purchases. The local dealers are, therefore, not increasing their stocks at the present except in the matter of a fairly good sorting trade. The prospects, however, are so generally improved, that wholesale merchants are in much better spirits than they were some weeks ago.

WHEAT—Comparatively little new wheat has as yet been marketed, but what has come in has shown a much better sample than was anticipated. There will be no very general hauling of wheat until the threshing is all done and the fall ploughing also. Except in cases of necessity, the farmers will not leave the fall work while the weather is fine. The moonlight nights were all utilized and the threshers hummed busily all through the long hours. More perfect threshing weather than the last two weeks would be difficult to imagine, and every man has made the most of it. Prices for such wheat as has been marketed are very fair, but showed a somewhat lower tendency on Saturday.

FLOUR—Business is good and prices have remained steady. Quotations are: Ogilvie's Hungarian patent, $2.30; Glenora, $2.15; Lake of the Woods Five Roses, $2.30; patent, $2.15.

CEREALS — There are a good many changes to note in this market. The market for split peas is weaker, the quotations being from $2.25 to $2.50, as against $2.50 straight. Rolled oats have advanced, and are now quoted at $1.80 to $1.85; standard and granulated, $2.30.

RICE—Trade is normal and the market is without change. Patna,  $5\frac{1}{4}$  to  $5\frac{1}{2}$  c.; B rice,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  to  $4\frac{3}{4}$  c., and Japan rice,  $5\frac{1}{4}$  to  $5\frac{1}{2}$  c.

DRIED FRUITS — New Valencia raisins have arrived and are very high in price at present. They are jobbing at \$2.95 for fine off-stalk and \$3.25 for selected. Currants continue to advance in strength; 12 to 13c. for Filiatras is asked, and higher figures are anticipated, as these quotations are much below what new goods could be laid down for. New prunes are in, and reversing the experience of last year, small sizes are very plentiful and large sizes hard to obtain. Prices range from  $4\frac{3}{4}$  to  $10\frac{1}{2}$  and 11c., according to size. Evaporated apricots are firm at  $11\frac{1}{2}$  to 12c.; peaches,  $8\frac{3}{4}$  to 9c. New evaporated apples are to arrive early in the week, and will job at  $5\frac{3}{4}$  to  $6\frac{1}{2}$  c. Dried apples are also in transit, and will be nearly as expensive as evaporated. Quotations are expected to be  $5\frac{1}{2}$  to 6c.

SUGAR—Sugar has remained without change for the week. Trade is fair and prices are $5.75 for granulated and $5.10 for yellows.

CANNED GOODS—In tomatoes there is some difficulty in quoting a market. Nominally, the prices are $2.20 to $2.30, but as some houses have secured goods outside of the association at lower figures there are houses quoting tomatoes at $2.15 to $2.20. There is no doubt that those who bought at association prices cannot touch these figures. Peas and corn are quoted at $2; strawberries, $4; raspberries, $3.50; 2-lb. peaches, $4; 2-lb. pears, $3.75; cherries, $4.50.

CANNED MEATS—Market is very firm. Lunch tongue has advanced 25c. per case for the 1-lb. tins.

COFFEE—Without change at  $10\frac{1}{2}$  to  $11\frac{1}{2}$  c. for high-grade Rios.

CURED MEATS—Trade fair and market firm with upward tendency. Hams, 14c.; breakfast bacon,  $12\frac{1}{2}$  c.; backs, short and long, 11c. Dry salt, long clear bacon,  $10\frac{1}{2}$  c.; shoulders,  $9\frac{1}{2}$  c.

GREEN FRUIT—The market is active, especially in regard to apples. Winter varieties are arriving in excellent condition. Jamaica oranges are on the market this week. They arrive in barrels containing from 400 to 500 each. The quality is not very satisfactory. The price is $10 per barrel. Arrivals of Concord and Niagara grapes are growing scarcer, and prices have slightly advanced. Plums and peaches are practically over, although a few crates of each are still offering. Good winter apples, $2.75 to $4.00, according to variety. Snow apples scarce at $3.50. Oranges, $10 per barrel; lemons, $6 per case; cranberries, $8.50; winter pears, $3 per box; Malaga grapes, per keg, $8.50; Concorde, per basket, 27c.; Rogers, 40c.; Niagara, 30c.

BUTTER—Creamery in fair supply at 20 to 22c. at factories. Dairy butter, 15c. for choicest fresh made. Summer dairy, in round lots, 12 to 13c.

CHEESE—Market not quite so strong. 10c. is being paid for extra good cheese, but  $9\frac{1}{2}$  is accepted for lower grades.

EGGS—In fair supply at 15c. Winnipeg.

BISCUITS AND CONFECTIONERY.

A sign of the times is the attention that the largest manufacturers are now devoting to the dealers in the smaller centres. It has always been an easy matter for retailers in the large cities to get the best goods. Now, it seems to be the policy of wide-awake dealers to place on an equal footing all dealers of good standing, regardless of the size of the community in which they do business. During the past summer tourists to various points in Ontario have commented on the excellence of the confectionery to be had in almost every town. The Toronto Biscuit and Confectionery Co. have done much to bring this about by offering a range of bon-bons, toffees, chocolates, etc., which compare favorably with the best to be had in Canada, at a price which makes their sale easy in any community. Their range consists of "Sweets of Existence," Chocolate and Royal bon-bons, Shamrock, Royal and Queen Victoria chocolates, Royal, Satin and Perfection toffees. These are put up in  $\frac{1}{2}$ -lb., 1-lb. and 2-lb. boxes. That they have been greatly appreciated by the trade is evidenced by the growth in their sales. For their "Land of the Maple" cream sodas in 11, 7, 3 and  $2\frac{1}{2}$  lb. tins, this firm have also won a good reputation. That their whole range of biscuits and confectionery is of a superior standard of excellence is attested by the fact that they won the gold medal at the Toronto Industrial last September for the excellence of the display of these goods made by them.

ONTARIO MARKETS.

Toronto, October 25, 1900.

GROCERIES.

NOTHING particularly striking has transpired in the wholesale trade during the week. The wholesale houses are still busy shipping goods ordered some time ago. As far as immediate business is concerned, the orders, while numerous, are, as a rule, small. In canned goods, the most interesting feature worthy of note is the arrival of shipments of new season's pack. There is a great deal of complaint among some of the houses as to the small proportion of their orders which is being filled by some of the packers. The price of salmon continues firm. In other lines of canned goods, the situation is much the same as a week ago. Coffees are quiet and fairly steady as to price. The demand for sugar is light, and the outside markets are easy. A fair trade is being done in syrups and molasses. A moderate trade is being done in spices, and prices generally rule firm. Teas are quiet, but firm. Further shipments of foreign dried fruits are to hand. In the primary market, both currants and Valencia raisins are slightly easier, but this will not affect local quotations. The demand for foreign dried fruits on the local market is fairly good. Payments are rather slow.

CANNED GOODS.

Shipments of new season's canned salmon are coming to hand this week and being taken into the different warehouses. Orders on retail trade account are now being filled. While some packers are filling their orders others again are able to supply no more than 10 per cent. of the quantity which they booked. As standard brands are most affected, there is quite a little discontent being expressed. The demand for canned salmon keeps up fairly well, in spite of the high prices, and the market is just as firm as ever. Practically, no new orders are coming to hand for canned vegetables, but some houses report that more inquiries have been received during the past week than for some time. Quite a few shipments of back orders are going out. Prices remain much as before. The better brands of tomatoes are selling at 85 to 87½c., but there are brands on the market which are being quoted at lower figures than those mentioned. The price at which most of the orders are being taken is 85c. Corn rules at 77½ to 80c., and peas at 80c. No interest is being taken in canned fruits, and very little is being done in canned meats. A fair trade is still being experienced for canned herring, mackerel, and finnan haddie.

COFFEES.

The local market is rather quiet with prices as before, green Rios being quoted at 10c. upward. In the outside markets prices are, on the whole, fairly steady.

SUGAR.

There is quite a little uncertainty in regard to the future of the market. The raw mar-

See pages 146 and 147 for Toronto, Montreal, and St.
John prices current.

kets in both Europe and America are easy. Raw cane sugar declined ¼c. on Monday in New York on small sales amounting to only 1,100 tons, but, up to the time of writing, no change has been made either across the border or in Canada in the refined article. Mr. Licht has issued his estimate of the beet sugar crop. He places it at 5,800,000 tons, which is much larger than the output of last year. In addition to this, an increase of 500,000 tons is looked for in the world's cane sugar crop. These influences have, naturally, had a bearish effect. In the meantime, people are only buying refined sugar sparingly.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

A fairly good trade is being done in bright table syrups, and particularly in the corn variety. A fair inquiry is being experienced for molasses.

SPICES.

Advices from the primary markets state that pepper is becoming firmer, and that cloves are advancing. Pimento, on the other hand, is slightly easier. Ginger is holding firm. Locally, spices are quoted as before. Wholesale houses report a small sorting-up trade, principally in pickling spices.

TEAS.

Low-grade teas at about 15c. are practically exhausted in Japan, according to advices to hand this week. A tea that was offered at 15c. a few days ago from Japan could not be obtained when a cable reply was sent. On a tea that was offered at 20c. a cable bid of ½c. less was refused. Medium teas are also scarce in Japan. Another source of strength to the Japan market is an increase in the rate of exchange. Importers here are making very little effort to buy, and it is the general opinion that they have enough stock of old teas to do them in the meantime. It is a question, however, whether they can get along with these until next July. The Indian tea market is a little firmer. Locally, however, there have been some transactions in Indian and Ceylon teas during the past week at low prices. Quite a few shipments of China green teas are arriving, but there is not much demand for them, and prices are much higher than last year.

FOREIGN DRIED FRUITS.

CURRANTS—The market in Greece, according to cables received this week, is slightly easier. The prices which have been quoted for the past few weeks from Greece were practically nominal, as no one seemed inclined to pay them. It is now the opinion that an effort is being made to bring them down to a practical basis. The lower prices in Greece are scarcely likely to affect quotations on this side of the Atlantic, as the figures which wholesalers are quoting have not, as a rule, been on a parity with the Grecian market. The ruling price for fine Filiatras locally is 13 to 13½c. per lb., with ordinary grade quoted at 12½c.; Patras currants are quoted at 15c., and Vostizzas at 16 to 18c. One wholesaler is reported to have paid as high as 20c. this week for extra fine Vostizzas. The demand for currants on retail trade account is good considering the high prices which are ruling.

VALENCIA RAISINS—These are also a little easier in Spain, but, as local quotations have not reached the parity of those ruling in the primary market, no change is looked for here. Further shipments are arriving and there is a fair demand. Ruling prices are: Fine off-stock, 9c. per lb.; selected, 9½c. and layers, 10 to 10½c. per lb.

FIGS—Shipments of figs are due this week. The demand is just fair. There is quite a range in the quotations on Elemé figs, which of course is due to the difference in quality. Five-crown figs in 10 lb. boxes, are quoted at 11 to 12c. and low to medium grades at 9½ to 10½c.; 7-crown figs 28-lb. boxes are quoted 16c.; comadre tapnets at 3¼ to 3½, while quotations on 1-lb. glove boxes range all the way from 8½ to 10½c.

MALAGA RAISINS—There is very little demand so far for Malaga raisins.

PRUNES—The demand is only moderate with prices as before. A few Californian "Ruby" prunes will be here in a day or so. They will sell at about 8c.

CALIFORNIAN EVAPORATED FRUITS—A few apricots are going out at 13c. and peaches are quiet at 10½c.

GREEN FRUITS.

The Scott street fruit market was closed on Monday, as the receipts of native fruits have fallen off so much that they can be easily handled by the wholesale merchants at their own warehouses in the city. The receipts of peaches, pears and grapes are moderate, and the price of best qualities is well maintained. The movement of fall apples is not as brisk as a week ago, and prices have dropped 25 to 50c. per bbl. Bananas are also moving slowly. Prices are steady at $1.25 to $1.75. The price of Palermo lemons has dropped $1, 300's now selling for $3.50 and 3.60's at $2.50 per box. Messinas and Malagas are unchanged. Malaga grapes are firm at last week's prices. The demand is fair. Oranges are in good demand at steady prices. Cape Cod cranberries are scarce, and prices have risen 50c. A further advance is looked for. Canadian cranberries are firm at $5.50 to $6 per bbl. Sweet potatoes are moving well at $3 per bbl.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

EGGS—The market is in a healthy, satisfactory condition. The demand for export is keeping the market well cleared, and as the local demand, both for boiling and for bakers' stock, keeps good, prices are firm throughout. Guaranteed fresh eggs are worth from 18 to 19c. Held fresh are steady at 16 to 17c., and pickled at 15 to 16c.

BEANS—There is a fair demand, though the low price of potatoes is affecting the movement. We quote hand-picked at $1.50, and mixed at $1.40 to $1.45.

HONEY—The market continues stiff, as offerings are moderate. Clover strained is firm at 9 to 10c. Clover comb has advanced 25c., and is now $2.25 to $2.50.

POULTRY—There is a good demand, but the weather has not been satisfactory for fattening, and offerings are moderate, especially for good stock. We quote: Chickens, 40 to 50c. per pair; ducks, 60 to 75c. per pair; geese, 6½ to 7c. per lb.; turkeys, young, 10 to 12c. per lb.; old, 9 to 10c. per lb.

GAME—A fairly good supply of wild ducks is coming in. There is a good demand. We quote: Teal and widgeons, 25c.; blue bills, 50c.; red heads, 60c.; black, 75c. per pair.

DRIED APPLES—The local movement is light at 3½ to 4½c. for dried, and 5 to 6c. for evaporated. The export movement has not yet opened.

POTATOES—The warm weather has delayed buyers from placing orders for quantities to store. And, as offerings keep large, prices are weak, at 2 to 5c. below last week's prices, the quotation for cars on track, Toronto, now being 27 to 29c. per bag.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

BUTTER—The market is in a dull, unsettled state. The export price is below what is ruling locally, and there is no sign of an improvement. Meanwhile, stocks, especially of inferior qualities, are accumulating, and prices, though unchanged, are easy. We quote: Dairy prints, 18 to 19c.; tubs, 18 to 18½c.; creamery prints, 22 to 23c.; boxes, 19 to 20c.

CHEESE—The local trade is but moderate in volume, but the export demand has kept up so well that the outlook seems favorable to a continuation of the present high range of values. The local jobbing price is steady at 11½ to 11¾c. for early makes, and 12c. for Septembers.

FISH AND OYSTERS.

The mild weather of the past week has limited the demand for oysters and cold water fish. Trout and whitefish are more plentiful, and as they are ½ to 1c. easier there is a good demand for them. We quote: Trout, 7½ to 8c.; white fish, 7½ to 8c.; perch, 3c.; blue pike, 3c.; grass pike, 4½c.; yellow pickerel, 7c.; bluefish, 5 to 6c.; herrings, 3 to 3½c.; steak cod, 6 to 6½c.; haddock, 6c.; white halibut, 13c.; fresh sea salmon, 17c.; redsnappers, 11c.; fresh mackerel, 14½c. each; haddie, 7½ to 8c. per lb.; ciscoes, per 100, 90c. to $1; Bay of Fundy herrings, splits, $3.25 per half-bbl., $5.75 to $6 per bbl.; shore herrings, $2.75 per half-bbl. and $4 per bbl.; boneless fish, 4½ to 5c.; quail-on-toast, 4½ to 5½c.; pure cod, 5½c.; shredded cod, $1.80 per box. Oysters, Southern mediums, $1.10 per gal.; Baltimore standards, $1.30 per gal.; Baltimore selects, $1.60 per gal.; New York mediums, 80c. per 100; New York selects, 90c. per 100.

GRAIN, FLOUR, BREAKFAST FOODS.

GRAIN—Prices are unchanged. Manitoba No. 1 hard wheat is firm at 68c. Toronto

freights, and $1 grinding in transit. Ontario wheat is steady at 58c. at outside points. There is not much doing on the local street market. Prices are steady as follows: Wheat, white and red, 69 to 69½c.; goose, 69c.; peas, 56 to 59c.; oats, new, 28 to 29c.; old, 32 to 34c.; barley, 44 to 49c.; rye, 53 to 54c.

FLOUR—There is a good demand. Prices are steady. We quote as follows: Manitoba patents, $4.75; Manitoba strong bakers', $4.50; Ontario patents, $3.75 to $3.85; straight roller, $3.50 to $3.75, Toronto freights.

BREAKFAST FOODS—The demand, both domestic and export, keeps good. Prices are steady as follows: Standard oatmeal and rolled oats, $3.30 in bags, and $3.40 in bbls.; rolled wheat, $2.50 in 100-lb. bbls.; cornmeal, $3; split peas, $4; pot barley, $4.00.

HIDES, SKINS AND WOOL.

HIDES—Prices are unchanged. We quote: Cowhides, No. 1, 7½c.; No. 2, 6½c.; No. 3, 5½c. Steer hides are worth ½c. more. Cured hides are quoted at 8 to 8½c.

SKINS—There is little doing. Prices are easy. We quote: No. 1 veal, 8-lb. and up, 8c. per lb.; No. 2, 7c.; dekins, from 40 to 60c.; culls, 20 to 25c. Sheep are selling at 55 to 70c.

WOOL—Business is quiet at unchanged prices. We quote for combing fleece, 15 to 16c., and for unwashed, 9½ to 10c.

SEEDS.

Alsike keeps dull. Another decline brings the range of value to from $5 to $7 for common to choice samples. Red clover is also weak, in sympathy with declines in the United States market. The range is now $5.50 to $6 for ordinary to finest qualities. There is practically nothing offering in timothy.

MARKET NOTES.

Wild ducks are offering freely at 25 to 75c. according to breed.

Trout and whitefish are ½ to 1c. cheaper, and are offering more freely.

Shipments of new season's canned salmon are arriving this week.

Palermo lemons are $1 per box cheaper. Cranberries are 50c. per barrel dearer.

Further shipments of new foreign dried fruits are being taken into stock this week.

Among the exports to the United States from Toronto last week was 27,000 lb. of Salada Ceylon tea.

Both currants and raisins are slightly easier in the primary markets, but no change has taken place locally.

Mr. Ross W. Hayter, representing Whittall & Co., of Colombo and London, received a cable on Tuesday, after the Ceylon sales, stating that leafy teas over 7½d. had advanced ½d. and 1d. per lb. He also received a letter from Calcutta stating that on account of the want of rain in Sylet and Cachar, there is likely to be a general all-around rise in the price of Indian teas.

QUEBEC MARKETS.

MONTREAL, October 25, 1900.

GROCERIES.

THE wholesale houses are busy filling contracts placed some time ago, and large distributing shipments are being made. The advantage of placing future orders has this year been very evident, for on many staple lines, such as salmon, sardines, lobsters and dried fruits of all kinds, the market has been a rising one. As the values continued to advance the number of orders increased, and so the number of contracts for futures now being filled promises to be a record-breaker. Business on new account is not of large dimensions, in spite of the fact that navigation will likely close in three weeks. The demand for sugar is slow, dealers buying only from hand-to-mouth from fear of new movements on the part of the American refiners. In the city no new developments have occurred, and it is claimed that merchants will have a chance to work off any supplies they may lay in now before the arrival of new crop raw sugars causes a drop in the value of the refined article. Raw sugars are still high and of short supply, and there is nothing to warrant an easy market. There is quite a movement of syrups and molasses. Canned goods, so far as new orders are concerned, are slow. Rice is in good demand. Bosnia prunes are lower, and all prunes are in good demand, as are also figs. People are becoming acquainted with the high prices of Valencia raisins. Teas are still dull.

SUGAR.

There is a difference of opinion in regard to the sugar market. Wholesale houses report the feeling weak, dealers buying from hand to mouth and business being of small dimensions. They claim that the American refiners reduced prices for the purpose of obtaining their raw material at low figures, and that the game is not finished. If the American prices come down then, on account of coming into competition with the bounty-fed American article, Canadian refiners must recede also. But will further reductions occur within the next three weeks or month? Those of unimpeachable judgment are of the opinion that the market is settled till new beet sugar, which is three weeks late, is brought forward. This would give dealers an opportunity to lay in stocks for a month and have time to work them off before the drop occurs. There is certainly some risk in deferring buying till after the close of navigation, for then freight charges come high. Granulated is still $5, and yellows $4.20 to $4.90 per 100 lb.

SYRUPS.

The most noticeable feature of the trade in syrup this year is the demand for the higher, rather than the lower, grades. Corn syrup is in fairly good demand at old figures, from  $2\frac{3}{8}$  to  $3\frac{1}{8}$  c., according to quantity.

MOLASSES.

Most of the trade is being supplied with Barbadoes, but some lots of New Orleans are moving. There is also a better call for best grades of molasses, and this fact gives the Barbadoes a firmer feeling. Prices are 41c. for small quantities, and 40c. for car lots. The most popular line of New Orleans is one selling at 25c.

CANNED GOODS.

Business on new account is only fair. Salmon is selling at last week's figures, \$1.75 to \$1.85 for flats, \$1.60 to \$1.65 for tallies and \$1.40 for spring salmon. Wholesalers report an increased demand for spring salmon, as the trade hesitate to pay the high prices set on Fraser river sockeye. It is evident, also, that high prices are turning the consumptive demand from salmon to mackerel, which can be obtained at \$1 to \$1.10 per dozen. Dealers expect mackerel to become a popular article, in time. In vegetables, there is nothing new to note. Tomatoes are worth 85 to 90c.; corn, 80c.; peas,  $77\frac{1}{2}$  c. to \$1.05, and beans,  $82\frac{1}{2}$  c. Fruits are unchanged. We quote: Strawberries, \$1.70 to \$1.85; cherries, \$1.95 to \$2.15, and raspberries, \$1.45 to \$1.65 per dozen.

SPICES.

A good trade is being done in spices. Pepper, nutmegs, cassia and cayennes are reported higher at the points of production. Cloves maintain their firmness. We quote as follows: Nutmegs, 25 to 50c. per lb. as to size; mace, 45 to 50c. per lb. as to quality; pimento, 9c.; cloves, 12 to 14c.; pepper, black, 15c.; white, 23c.

RICE.

There is a good demand for rice, with the feeling steady. It will probably be some time before the low prices of the new crops and the falling-off in the demand for famine-stricken India will have exercised their full force towards a decline. No immediate change is expected. We quote: B standard, $3.20 to $3.30; Patnas, $4 to $4.65; Japans, $4.40 to $4.90, and Carolina, $6 to $7.

FOREIGN DRIED FRUITS.

CURRENTS — Orders placed for future delivery are now being filled with what supplies are available. The ss. Bellona and James Turpie will, however, bring the bulk of the currants for the Canadian trade. For spot goods  $11\frac{3}{4}$  to 12c. per lb. is the price asked for fine Filiatras, although we hear that some houses are asking more. Provincials are selling at nearly the same price, and higher grades can hardly be obtained. The market has ruled quiet during the week, buyers, apparently, pursuing the policy of buying only for their immediate requirements.

VALENCIA RAISINS—People are becoming acquainted with the ruling prices, and dealers are ordering more freely than they were. The local demand is not brisk. Orders placed some time ago are now being filled, quite a few going at 7c. per lb. On spot, goods are worth  $8\frac{1}{2}$  c. for finest off-stock, 9c. for selected, and  $9\frac{1}{2}$  c. for layers. The market on Denia has declined somewhat, but business is difficult there, in view of the short supplies remaining in that market, and it is very probable that the Denia market will be practically cleared in the near future.

MALAGA RAISINS — Mail advices from Malaga note that bad weather has damaged the crop, but it is probable that the weather is now more favorable, in view of the fact that shippers are offering more freely. Still, prices are extremely high and dealers here have bought but little. Boxes that last year were worth $1.75 are this year quoted at $2.75, and "Royal Buckingham" clusters that were worth $3.40 last year cannot be obtained less than $4.40 this year.

PRUNES—Prunes are in good demand. There is some of last year's stock still on the market in good shape. They are worth 4c. per lb. Bosnia prunes to arrive are quoted as low as  $5\frac{1}{2}$  c. this week. Californian prunes are worth 11c. for 40 50's;  $7\frac{1}{2}$  c. for 60-70's; 7c. for 70 80's, and 6c. for 90 100's. French prunes are still selling at former figures.

FIGS—Figs are in brisk demand at  $3\frac{1}{4}$  c. for low grades in tapnets. Boxes are also selling well.

DATES—A good trade has been experienced in Halloween dates at 5c. per lb.

CALIFORNIAN EVAPORATED FRUITS—A few orders have been booked for evaporated fruits. The prevailing figures for choice fruit are: Apricots,  $12\frac{1}{2}$  to 13c.; peaches,  $10\frac{1}{2}$  to 11c.; pears,  $11\frac{1}{4}$  to 12c., and nectarines,  $11\frac{1}{2}$  to 12c.

TEAS.

Trade in teas continues dull, dealers not yet feeling themselves in a position to buy. To date there has been exported into Canada 3,802,948 lb. of Japan tea, against 7,304,845 lb. last year to date; leaving a shortage of 3,501,897 lb. on the shipments so far this season from Yokohama and Kobe. This explains the scarcity of Japan tea on the Montreal market. Stocks are firmly held; there are scarcely any offerings under 16c. Mediums are worth 16 to 17c. and good mediums 17 to 18c. These teas last year were worth only  $11\frac{1}{2}$  to 13c. We hear that quite a few low-grade nondescript Japans are being brought into this market. If this report be true, we cannot vouch that they will bring full values. Yet, they will not affect the value of the higher grades. The jobbers' stocks of tea are extremely low. No teas are to be obtained in Japan under 15c. laid down here, and it is just possible that when the Canadian demand sets in the holders of tea at the primary markets may be able to force tea still higher. The American market continues firm.

China blacks remain steady; the bringing of tea by the Suez Canal will probably lower the values of China teas slightly this year. Greens continue firm and scarce.

COFFEES.

Good quantities of coffee are moving at unchanged figures. Maracaibo is selling at 12 to 14c.; Rio, 10 to 11c.; Santos,  $9\frac{1}{2}$  to 12c.; Javas,  $17\frac{1}{2}$  to 40c.; Mocha, 19 to 25c.

GREEN FRUITS.

The movement in fruits is not so brisk, although some lines continue active. Grapes still arrive in large quantities and are being readily disposed of. Bananas are higher this week; New York is not consigning any more surplus to this market, and, as dealers have to buy, prices have advanced. Lemons are lower again this week. Apples are moving freely. There is a good call for figs. We quote as follows: Oranges, barrels, \$5 to \$5.50; new Jamaica Verdill lemons, 300's, \$3.50 to \$4; 360's, \$1.50 to \$2 per box; bananas, firsts, \$1.50 to \$1.75; eight hands, \$1 to \$1.25; Californian peaches, \$1.25 per box; Californian plums, \$1.25 per box; watermelons, 20c. each; apples, fall, \$1.25 to \$2 per bbl.; winter, \$2 to \$2.50 per bbl.; Californian pears, \$2.50 to \$3 per box; Canadian pears, 15 to 30c. per basket; Canadian peaches, 40 to 50c. per basket; grapes,  $1\frac{3}{4}$  to 2c. per lb., 18 to 20c. per basket; cranberries, \$7.75 to \$8.25 per bbl.; Spanish onions, \$2.25 per large crate and 80c. per small crate; chestnuts, 8 to 10c. per lb.; sweet potatoes, \$2.50 to \$2.75 per bbl.; new figs, fancy, 16c.; choice, 10 to 12c. per lb. in 10 lb. boxes.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

EGGS — The country market has been rather easier, fresh goods being offered at 15 to  $15\frac{1}{2}$  c., as against 16c. some time ago. The European market is easy, but there is no change locally. No. 1 candled stock is worth 17 to 18c.; No. 2, 12 to 14c., and culls, 9 to 11c. per dozen.

MAPLE PRODUCT — In maple product, there is no change, and business is quiet. Syrup sells at 70 to 75c. per tin of 14 lb., 50 to 60c. per tin of 10 lb., and  $6\frac{1}{2}$  to 7c. per lb., in wood. Sugar is worth 8 to 9c.

BEANS—There has been no change in the bean market. We quote: Canadian hand-picked at $1.60 to $1.65, and primes at $1.40.

HONEY—The demand for honey was quiet, and prices are steady. White clover honey is worth 12 to 12½c.; white extracted, in large tins, 8 to 8½c., and in small tins, 8½ to 9c., and buckwheat extracted, 6½ to 7½c.

ASHES—The market for ashes has been quiet and unchanged. We quote: $5 to $5.15 for first pots, $4.70 for second, and first pearls, $6 per 100 lb.

PROVISIONS.

Trade in all lines has been rather quiet, but the undertone is firm. Lard is about ¼c. higher. We quote: Heavy Canadian short cut mess pork, $19.50 to $20.00; selected heavy short cut mess pork, boneless special quality, $20.50 to $21.00; heavy Canada short cut clear pork, $19.00 to $19.50, hams, 10½ to 14c., and bacon, 12 to 14c. per lb. Refined lard compound (Fairbank's) $1.75 per pail; Snow White and Globe compound, $1.65 per pail; cottolene, 8⅞c. per lb. in tierces and 9¾c. in pails; pure Canadian lard, 10 to 11½c.

FLOUR AND GRAIN.

FLOUR—The market is quiet, as buyers limit their purchases to small hand-to-mouth parcels. We quote: Manitoba spring wheat patents, $4.40 to $4.70; winter wheat patents, $3.65 to $3.85; straight roller, $3.30 to $3.50; in bags, $1.60 to $1.70, and Manitoba strong bakers', $4.25 to $4.40.

GRAIN—Prices are steady. We quote as follows: No. 1 spring wheat, 75 to 75½c. afloat; peas, new crop, 66½ to 67c.; rye, 55½ to 56c.; No. 2 barley, 47½ to 48c.; oats, 28 to 28½c.; buckwheat, 55c.

FEED—The tone of the feed market is firm under a good demand. We quote as follows: Manitoba bran, in bags, $16; shorts, $18; mouille, $20 to $24; Ontario bran in bulk, $15.50 to $16, and shorts, $17 to $18 per ton.

OATMEAL—The market shows no change. Sales have been made at $3.25 to $3.30 per bbl., and at $1.57½ to $1.60 per bag.

HAY—The hay market has been rather quiet and easy. We quote: No. 1, $9.50 to $10; No. 2, $8.50 to $9, and clover, $7.50 to $8.25 per ton, in carload lots on track.

CHEESE AND BUTTER.

CHEESE—On Monday 7,000 to 8,000 boxes of Quebec cheese sold at the wharf at 10½ to 10¾c., this being a break of ½c. from last Monday's prices. The local market is dull and weaker. Prices are nominal. Holders would want at least 11¼c. for their finest Western goods, though buyers would not want to pay that much. Township's might be quoted 10⅞c to 11c.

BUTTER—The market is not active, but yet it is fairly strong, some sales of fancy creamery being reported at figures as high as 21c. The market might be quoted at 20½c. to 20¾c. Seconds run down to 19½c. Dairy is scarce at 15c. to 17c.

FISH AND GAME.

Mild weather has interfered considerably with business during the past week. Fresh fish are comparatively scarce. The market for salt fish is normal. We quote: Fresh fish—British Columbian salmon, fresh, 16c. per lb.; haddock, 5c.; halibut, 12 to 15c.; dore or pickerel, 9c.; whitefish, 9c.; pike, 6c.; trout, 9c. Prepared fish—Skinless cod, in 100-lb. cases, $4 to $4.25; dried cod, in 112-lb. bundles, $5 per cwt.; boneless cod, in bricks, 5½c. per lb.; boneless fish, loose, in 25-lb. boxes, 4½c., and 5-lb. boxes, 5c. per lb. Partridge, 70 to 75c. for firsts, and 40 to 50c. for seconds, per brace.

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

OFFICE OF THE CANADIAN GROCER.

St. John, N.B., October 24, 1900.

GENERAL trade continues fairly active, though the great vigor which characterizes the election campaign interferes to some extent. The features of the market are the strength of dairy products, molasses, provisions, fish and some dried fruits. Burning oils have declined a little, and sugar is dull. New yellow buckwheat meal is offered. The flour market is unchanged. The movement of lumbermen's supplies has begun, and several schooners have loaded for points up the Bay. The cut of logs in this Province will be about as large as usual. The question whether there will be as large a winter port trade as usual through this port is the most interesting local issue.

OIL—There has been a slight decline in burning oils. Demand is good at this season. In lubricating and paint oils there is no change to note.

SALT—Demand for coarse salt continues light, owing to the scarcity of herring this season for pickling purposes. Stocks are ample for the present. Trade in other grades is fair. We quote: Liverpool coarse, 50 to 55c.; English factory-filled, 95c. to $1; Canadian fine, $1 per bag; cheese and butter salt, bulk, $2.40 per bbl.; 5-lb. bags,

$2.85 to $2.90 per bbl.; 10-lb. bags, $2.70 to $2.75 per bbl.; 20-lb. wood boxes, 22c. each; 10-lb. wood boxes, 14c. each; cartons, $2 per case of 2 doz.; English bottled salt, $1.25 to $1.30 per doz.; mineral rock salt 60c. per 100 lb.

CANNED GOODS—There is no change in prices to record. Trade is fairly active and orders are now being filled. The largest local transaction for a long time was the purchase recently by a St. John firm of 16 carloads of the canned goods of The Maritime Pure Food Co., of Woodstock. Prices, generally, remain steady.

GREEN FRUITS—The supply of apples is large, and a good No. 2 Gravensteins can be got for $1 per bbl. Nova Scotian as well as Cape Cod cranberries are offered. Malaga lemons are in stock. In oranges, Jamaicas still rule the market. Both American and Canadian quinces are offered. Canadian pears are still offered in baskets.

DRIED FRUITS—New raisins, chiefly from California, are expected next week. A few Valencias will also be received. Currants are decidedly strong at high prices. In other lines there is nothing special to note. Nuts are high and firm.

DAIRY PRODUCE—Butter and eggs have advanced and the market is very firm. Cheese brings full prices.

SUGAR—The market is easy and dull, very little being done at present.

MOLASSES—The market is very firm, with stocks light, both of Porto Rico and Barbadoes. Some good-sized lots were not long since sold out of this market, making the feeling decidedly firmer.

FISH—Prices are tending higher for pickled and dry fish. Pickled herring are very scarce. There is practically nothing coming in, and dealers report trade dull on that account. We quote: Large and medium dry cod, $3.50 to $3.60; small, $2.00 to $2.25; pickled shad, $5.50 to $6.00; haddies, 4½ to 5c.; smoked herring, 8½ to 10c.; fresh haddock and cod, 2½c.; boneless fish, 4 to 5c.; pollock, $1.70 to $1.75 per 100; pickled herring, $2.25 to $2.35 per half bbl., bloaters, 75c., and kippers, $1; halibut, 10c.

PROVISIONS—Local packers report an active market for all the pork products they can turn out. The market is firm all around, lard being especially high.

FLOUR, FEED AND MEAL—The flour market is steady, and there is no change in cornmeal or oatmeal. Middlings are lower. The demand in all of the following lines is fairly good. We quote as follows: Manitoba flour, $5.10 to $5.25; best Ontario, $4.15 to $4.20; medium, $4.10 to $4.15; oatmeal, $3.50 to $3.65; cornmeal, $2.30 to $2.35; middlings,

A LESSON IN INTEREST.

TOO often it is the case that business men do not realize at the time how quickly the interest eats up principal, remarks a contemporary. The following anecdote of Peter Cooper, the great philanthropist, very forcefully illustrates the point.

Once, while Peter Cooper was talking about a project with an acquaintance, the latter said he would have to borrow money for six months, paying interest at the rate of 3 per cent. a month.

"Why do you borrow for so short a time?" Mr. Cooper asked.

"Because the brokers will not negotiate bills for longer."

"Well, if you wish," said Mr. Cooper, "I will discount your note at that rate for three years."

"Are you in earnest?" asked the would-be borrower.

"Certainly I am. I will discount your note for $10,000 for three years at that rate. Will you do it?"

"Of course I will," said the merchant.

"Very well," said Mr. Cooper. "Just sign a note for $10,000, payable in three years, and give me your check for $800, and the transaction will be complete."

"But where is the money for me?" asked the astonished merchant.

"You don't get any money," was the reply. "Your interest for 36 months at 3 per cent. a month amounts to 108 per cent., or $10,800. Therefore, your check for $800 just makes us even."

GOOD ADVICE RE POULTRY.

"I intend," said J. A. McLean, commission dealer, Toronto, to THE CANADIAN GROCER this week, "to make a big bid for the poultry trade this season. I have handled just about double as many eggs this year as last. My butter trade has also grown in proportion. Therefore, I see no reason why I should not obtain the same results with poultry. I have the connection and can sell the stock. I want to get in touch with shippers as early as I can, too, for I want to advise every man who does business with me to have a talk with his customers and tell them that the only way to get good results from their poultry is to fatten, kill and market them in the proper way. There is money for everyone concerned when proper attention is paid to these points. They should all be dry plucked and I would like them to arrive in smaller crates than is often the custom. I am looking for good prices this fall owing to the big export demand."

MARRIAGE OF MISS McWILLIAM.

Miss Isabella McWilliam, daughter of George McWilliam, of McWilliam & Everist, Toronto, was married on Wednesday evening of this week to Howard Ayre, of the same city. The young couple are both popular and received many valuable presents. After an extended tour to New York and other eastern cities they will start housekeeping at 103 Morse street, Toronto.

BAKING POWDER MEN MEET.

Mr. Wm. Dobie, manager for E. W. Gillett, Toronto, has returned from Chicago, where he was last week attending the meeting of the American Baking Powder Association. The association is an organization that was formed to withstand the Baking Powder Trust. On the evening of October 16, the delegates were entertained at a banquet given by the local members. It was a most happy affair.

TORONTO EARLY-CLOSING CASES.

Two Toronto retail grocers, Adam Reddock, 443 Parliament street, and E. J. Henry, 783 Queen street east, were tried on Monday on a charge of breaking the early-closing by-law. Sales of jam and biscuits were proven in Mr. Henry's case, and of sugar in Mr. Reddock's, and as both were classed as grocers under the by-law, convictions were entered and fines of $5 and costs imposed in both cases.

AN ANALYSIS OF COCOA.

A bulletin has been issued by the Department of Inland Revenue of analyses made upon 66 samples of cocoas and chocolates which were collected throughout the Dominion in February of the present year. The report says that the samples examined comprise 27 plain (non-sugared) cocoas and 39 sugared cocoas, or chocolates. Of the plain cocoas only three samples contain the whole of the fat normally present in the cocoa bean. The remaining 24 samples have been treated in such a way as to remove from one-fifth to about two-thirds of this fat.

Since the fat of the cocoa bean (cocoa butter) has a high value in pharmacy there is a great temptation to remove it from the beans before employing these in the manufacture of commercial cocoas. At the same time it is claimed that cocoa from which a portion of the fat has been removed is a much preferable article to the normal substance, giving a more palatable solution and being more easily digested. This may be quite true, but it is pointed out that the removal of the fat deprives the cocoa of much of its value as a nourishing food, and that the purchaser has a right to know to what extent the manufacturer has carried the removal.

FLOUR FOR GROCERS.

Grocers and other retailers who sell flour always like to be brought in touch with those who make a specialty of that commodity. P. R. Miller, of Room 511, Board of Trade building, Toronto, makes a specialty of flour, and it will be noticed by his advertisement on page 34 that he invites correspondence. When writing to him kindly mention THE CANADIAN GROCER.

THANKSGIVING DAY OUTING.

THERE is no lack of good feeling between Toronto grocers and grocery travelers. At every opportunity they, or at least some of them, get together and enjoy themselves in some up-to-date manner. On Thanksgiving Day a party of 30 was organized, consisting of W. Berwick, of John Sloan & Co.; W. Kendry, of F. W. Humphrey; Chas. Irwin, of G. F. & J. Galt; C. E. and John Edmonds, J. Norris and T. Holman, of The Christie, Brown Co., Limited; O. E. Jones, of The Eby, Blain Co., Limited; M. A. Muldrew, of T. Kinneer & Co.; E. L. Williamson and M. R. Ryan, and the following grocers: D. J. Kelly, R. H. Stewart, Fred. Mauthie, W. Anderson, Somers Bros., R. Robertson, A. O. Robinson, J. T. Schoales, H. C. Manly, W. Moore, Pringle, Scott, Ricard, Gibbons, Bright, J. Murphy and Thos. Pears.

The party met at the corner of Yonge and Queen streets at 10 a. m., arrayed in tall white hats, and light-colored overcoats and wearing carnation buttonholes. In two fine drags they made a merry trip to Woodbridge Fair. Here they marched in a body to the grounds, where their unique uniformity of costumes excited much comment. Here they rounded up N. Clarke Wallace, J. W. St. John, J. G. Gibson, J. S. Bond, W. H. Marmion, J. F. Morrish and other notables, and made all give them a speech. After the fun they made a tour of inspection of the various exhibits. On the return home they stopped at Weston for supper, where speeches were made by several in the party and songs rendered by others. The rest of the trip home was a rollicking, jolly affair, all joining in singing the songs popular on such occasions. About 10 o'clock the party arrived at the City Athletic Club, where one of the comfortable rooms was secured and the day properly finished by making each one in the party tell a story, sing a song or make a speech. "And the beauty of it all was," said one of the party "that there were no headaches nor hard feelings the next morning."

GOLD MEDAL FOR CANADIAN CHEESE.

Canadian cheese has long been recognized as a leading article in its line, so the award of the gold medal at the Paris Exposition to MacLaren's "Imperial" cheese will not surprise many in this country. The excellence of MacLaren's cheese has now been testified to by two continents, as it will be remembered that the highest award at the Chicago World's Fair in 1893 was given to it. The number of brands of cheese put up in imitation of MacLaren's is, perhaps, the best recommendation that can be given, but the failure of the imitators to approach the quality of this cheese will keep it in its place at the front of Canadian products.

QUALITY ALWAYS COUNTS.

"I DOUBT if quality is as important in any business," said T. H. Smith, Toronto, this week, "as it is in the commission produce business. We handle such an immense quantity of goods, coming from so many and going to such a large number of people, that we have to dispose of every degree of quality. Take butter for instance. In the same day we will sell some for 12c. and some for 18c. This year the tendency seems to be to make ordinary stuff, partly because of the difficulty of making gilt-edged stock in hot weather, and partly because of the high values that have been paid for even common stock. The result is that gilt-edged butter is a ready seller, while you can get more than you want of the common stuff any time. Merchants should, therefore, make it a point to keep their eye on quality.

"The same is true with regard to poultry. Clean, fat, but well starved, dry-plucked stock, sells readily at any time, but when it is sent in lean, scalded, and with a full crop, it has to be sold for half or three-quarter price, and sometimes is a dead loss. I know the retailer is not directly responsible for this, but I believe he can do much to persuade his customers to pay more attention to quality. That's why I say this to you."

Tillson's Pan-Dried Rolled Oats

Substitution seems to be very popular just now. It is surprising the number of grocers that are selling inferior grades of Rolled Oats under the guise of Tillson's Pan-Dried. Samples of so called "Tillson's" Oats have been sent us by women who claim that they were bought for "Tillson's Brand" — the sample and the original are as far apart as the sun and the moon.

Just what a grocer expects to gain by substitution is far beyond us — if he is not afraid of the ill-will of his customers he will certainly gain that! We can't stamp our Trade Mark on each individual flake, but we often wish we could. The grocer who keeps on substituting will sooner or later be found out. Our means of detection are better, stronger, surer than they ever were.

ARE HANDLING CEYLON GREENS.

The popularity of Ceylon green teas is still further evinced by the fact of another large package tea company having gone into that line. The Monsoon Tea Co., to whom reference is made, have every confidence that this tea will eventually be largely consumed in Canada. The business of this company has doubled during the past year, and they may be expected to do a large portion of the business in Ceylon green teas. The posters and signs which they are putting out in all the Canadian centres are striking advertisements. One in Toronto is 480 feet long, with the familiar figure of the Hindoo carved in relief, and 26 feet in height.

UPTON'S MARMALADE.

Among the products of this country that may be found in many foreign lands, Upton's marmalade must be given a prominent place, as it is looked upon as a leader in other countries just as much as in our own. Grocers are always glad to handle goods that give a fair profit and are not useful merely to "hold trade," so the marmalades, jellies, jams, etc., put up by Thos. Upton & Co. should receive particular attention, as they combine this quality with many others.

*The Cyclone Fruit

is built entirely of metal and is the most efficient, durable and yet simple fruit cleaner ever invented. It will clean over 1,000 lbs. of currants per hour and leave the fruit with the natural bloom revived, the skins uninjured and apparently of a higher grade than before, ready for immediate packing or using in any form required.

COMPOSITION ON A PAIR OF PANTS.

Pants are made for men, and not for women. Women are made for men, and not for pants. When a man pants for a woman, and a woman pants for a man, they are a pair of pants. Such pants don't last. Pants are like molasses, they are thinner in hot weather and thicker in cold. Men are often mistaken in pants, such mistakes are breeches of promise. There has been much discussion whether pants is singular or plural. Seems to us when men wear pants it is plural, and when they don't wear any pants it is singular. Men go on a tear in their pants, and it's all right, when the pants go on a tear, it's all wrong. If you want to make pants last, make the coat first. Every dog has his pants—after a run—but there is only one Rooster that has pants and that is the "I crow over all" Rooster. He has more pants than the Boers have whiskers. He has pants for every kind of wear and every kind of weather, and makes a specialty of pants. Don't overlook his pants—they fit—they wear—they sell.

WHAT YOUR STOCKS NEED

It is not that the goods on your shelves have depreciated in real worth so far as material is concerned. The fabric is as good to-day as when first from the factory. But you have struck the wrong color and all the bargain prices you like to tack on will not sell it. An article that cannot be worn with taste is dear to a shopper at any price.

Whatever the goods that are off color—whether by error in buying, or be they faded or shelf-worn, if they are sent to these works they will be dyed to the fashionable shade of the season.

All the new methods and appliances find their first practical development here. We ever keep abreast of the times—rather, we aim to keep in advance.

Dyeing, cleaning and curling of feathers and plumes has careful attention here. We hardly know when we have disappointed a customer with this particular work—it is all so well done.

Let us hear from you. We can please you and save money for you.

THE CANADIAN DRY GOODS REVIEW.

VOL. X.

MONTREAL AND TORONTO, FEBRUARY, 1900.

No. 2.

PROGRESSIVE STOREKEEPING.

A MONTHLY ARTICLE ON THE PROPER MANAGEMENT, SYSTEM, ETC., OF AN UP-TO-DATE RETAIL BUSINESS.

Specially written for THE DRY GOODS REVIEW

By CHAS. F. JONES, NEW YORK.

1. Hiding the Goods.

A great many sales are lost and a great deal of dead stock is carried by stores which are in the habit of having places behind or under the counters in which to place goods. These goods are probably never overhauled, except at stock taking times, and these drawers and hiding places are an excellent catch-basin for all sorts of goods, which are usually called "stickers," and which ought to be out on the counters where they can be pushed more than ordinarily.

Do not have any places in your store where goods can be stuck away out of sight. If you have plenty of room, it is better to have all the goods above the counters, on the shelving. Have no shelves below, so that there will be no opportunity to put things away out of sight. A great many stores, however, cannot do this, as they are crowded for room, and it is, therefore, necessary that a part of the goods should be kept below the counter board.

If this is necessary, see that every piece of goods not in easy access is looked over and examined and brought out to the light at least once a week. If the goods are kept out where they can be seen all the time, they are very much more apt to sell than if hidden away. The salesmen are usually very careless about goods which are not easy to reach, and they very seldom take the pains to look into any of these old drawers, or under the shelves to find the goods to sell.

If customers come in and call for some particular thing which they know to be in such-and-such a place, they usually go and get it, but if it is in some place where there is any doubt about finding it, they either say they haven't got it, or they don't take the pains to look for it where they should, and try to substitute something else, which possibly the customer does not want.

If you have goods that cannot be carried on the shelves, arrange bins on the counter, or on a centre-table in the middle of the aisle, and place them there in full view of the customers. Do not let anything be hidden from sight.

2. Display all Lines.

Window dressing is a subject which should be given just as careful attention as any other branch of the dry goods business. It is the best advertising medium that a dry goods merchant can have, providing that his store is so situated that numbers of people pass by every day. This is usually the case with dry goods stores, as they generally occupy business houses on the main thoroughfares of the town.

The dry goods stores now-a-days usually carry quite a number of different lines of goods, and each year seems to tend more and more towards a consolidation of numerous stocks under one head.

If the dry goods store has a large number of windows and is situated on a corner, or some place where it has all the advantages for displaying a number of kinds of goods at the same time, it is much better for the store than where there are only a few windows.

Some stores make a mistake in not giving many of their stocks a just representation in the show windows. This is possibly on account of the limited space which they have, but I think it would be well to give each stock its turn. It will be of just as much advantage to the house in general to occasionally have an underwear window, and again a corset window, and again a hosiery window, as it would be for the house to keep dress goods in the window all the time. Dress goods may be the principal stock, and may have a larger share of the window displays than any other stock; still, it will be to the advantage of the individual stocks to give them each a fair show, one after the other, and, at the same time, this will not be a disadvantage to the house or a disadvantage to the dress goods.

Just as nice looking and attractive windows can be made out of small articles, or out of any stock in a dry goods house, as can be made out of dress goods, and, in many cases, the small articles will have the greatest trade-drawing power, because the price on the goods will be smaller in figures, and, consequently, look cheaper in many cases than dress goods prices, which are sometimes quite large. I, therefore, think it is well for a house to allow each stock to be represented in turn, giving no one unfair preference over the other.

3. Clearing Old Stock.

One of the greatest sources of loss that a dry goods store can suffer from is the accumulation of old stock which through age has become unsaleable, or at least has lost a portion of its value. There are some goods, of course, which are staple almost all the year around and will be staple next season as much as they are now, but the majority of goods will lose something of their value by being here next year, and even the most staple goods lose something from age—if not one way, then in some other.

New goods generally command a better price and are certainly easier to sell than goods which have been in stock for any length of time. Would it not be well to mark your stock in some way, so you would know just when it was received and be sure that your clearance sales would enable you to get rid of the old goods first? This could be easily done by placing some kind of a secret figure or letter upon each bolt or piece of goods as it is received. Say, for instance, goods received in January, 1900, might be marked "A," and February, 1900, "B," and so on each month until the entire alphabet is exhausted. Certainly, long before the last letters in the alphabet are reached every piece of goods in the house ought to have turned itself into money.

It is well, if possible, never to allow a piece of goods to remain in the house through two inventories. If the goods are purchased in 1900 and you take an inventory in July and find them in the house, be sure you make a price on them, or use such extraordinary efforts as will sell them out before the next inventory comes. This rule of keeping goods as short a time as possible will work to your advantage greatly in keeping your stock clean.

One inventory ought to be enough for any kind of goods, particularly of goods which are apt to depreciate in value on account of change in style or change of seasons.

A store that watches these points carefully can very often avoid serious losses. Mark your goods so that you may know when they came in; that will help to prevent them from staying too long. As soon as you find that they are getting old, it is time to run them off at some price.

4. Know the Goods.

Know your goods. As far as possible, you should be thoroughly acquainted with the wear and durability of the goods you handle; if you are not, test them yourself. The only practical test is by using them. If there are any goods about which you have doubts, try them yourself. See how they wear. Also make inquiries of customers who have purchased them.

Find out all you can about the goods you are selling so that you may know how to recommend them to others or how to get rid of them in case they are not giving satisfaction.

5. Regulating Samples.

Many merchants find it profitable to display light goods by sample instead of in the piece. Where this can be handled well it saves a great deal of soiled light goods. Be sure that your samples are large enough to give an exact idea of how the goods look and do not let the customer think that you are simply showing the sample in order to get rid of showing the piece. After the customer has approximately decided upon certain goods in the samples, then use the piece goods to clinch the sale. Never let the customer suppose that you are simply trying to sell by sample in order to avoid showing the goods themselves. They will very often imagine that the goods are not equal to the sample or that there is some reason for keeping the goods in the background.

6. Treating Clerks Well.

Be kind to your employes. Kindness wins on every occasion. It is only natural that any clerk will be more likely to take pride in his work and use every effort to please his employer when he finds that he appreciates his services and is considerate of his interests.

7. Lavish Displays.

Display as many goods as possible. The more goods you display the more you will sell. Not only make your display on the counter, but overhead, on the shelving in some proper way, either directly on the shelving or on suspended rods. The more attractive you make your displays, the more you will interest people to buy your goods. Always keep your displays in good trim. See that they are dusted many times a day; and any goods which are taken down to be sold have their places taken by new goods.

Put plenty of price tickets upon your displays, so that persons passing along the aisle can readily see what the goods are sold for. A display of goods itself without price may be good on some occasions when you are simply decorating the store, but the price on the goods generally clinches the argument in its favor.

8. Leave Rivals Alone.

Do not run down competitors. They may deserve it ever so much, but you will find it to your advantage to say as little as possible about your competitor.

People usually misjudge what you say about them. They will either think you are running them down because you are jealous of their business, because they are getting the best of you and that you are afraid to say anything good about them for fear they will get some of your trade.

9. The Value Of Behaviour.

Be sociable in your store. Be very respectful to everybody, rich and poor alike. As far as possible take an interest in those who are buying. If at any time you become acquainted with them, show yourself eager and anxious at all times to be of service to your customers. Let them feel that your store is the accommodating store, the home store, where everything is made as pleasant as possible for buyers.

10. Don't Mark Goods.

In marking your goods, mark them on tickets and not on the goods themselves. It is very difficult to mark the goods themselves so that the price can be easily erased without hurting the goods.

Purchasers do not usually care for the price to remain on their goods after they have paid for them. Besides, you may wish to change or reduce the price yourself and this still further defaces the goods if it is marked on them.

Use tickets which can be unfastened without hurting the goods. Tickets which are gummed and stuck on to the goods are not desirable. They do not hold any better than pin tickets, and usually, when torn off, leave a portion clinging to the goods, which does not either look well or make the goods any more attractive to the customer.

WRAPPING PAPER HIGHER IN PRICE.

An advance is announced in the price of wrapping paper of Canadian manufacture. The new prices, which went into effect on January 11, are as follows:

No. 2 rag and "cleaver" brown—Carlots, $2.10 per 100 lb.; ton lots and less than carlots, $2.25; less than ton lots, $2.40.

No. 1 brown—Carlots, $2.50 per 100 lb.; ton lots and less than carlots, $2.75; less than ton lots, $3.

"Half Moon," "Bogus" or No. 2 manila—Carlots, $3; ton lots and less than carlots, $3.25; less than ton lots, $3.50.

No. 1 standard manila—Carlots, $3.50; ton lots and less than carlots, $3.75; less than ton lots, $4.

Fibre paper—Carlots, $3.75; ton lots and less than carlots, $4; less than ton lots, $4.25.

Bag manila—Carlots, $3.75.

Hosiery manila—Carlots, $5.50.

One of the many advantages to be gained by buying from Brophy, Cains & Co., Montreal, is, that with them you will find the best of everything.

While it is a fact that they are rightly called "The High-Class Dry Goods House of Canada," it is also well to know that a strong feature in each of their departments is carrying complete ranges of all lines handled. Ask for Flannelettes—they show you from the cheapest to the best Canadian goods made, followed by the latest styles and most desirable lines of English and foreign manufacture brought into Canada. This assurance also applies to their stock of Grey Cottons, White Cottons, Prints, Linings, etc., etc.

The trade generally admit, that for beauty, fashion and actual value this house is unsurpassed in Dress Goods, Silks, Satins, Costume Cloths and Robes, a satisfactory point to the retailer is the certainty of a handsome percentage of profit.

Possibly the largest orders ever placed by many of our retail dry goods houses for white goods were booked by Brophy, Cains & Co. in the month of January. Special mention of these goods was made in the Spring Number of "The Dry Goods Review."

January has been their "Banner Month" for NEW ACCOUNTS, many of them being our largest retail houses, who previously had the impression that by direct importation only could they get the goods required.

To keep in touch with the times we live in you should visit Montreal at least once a year. Throw the responsibility of your business upon your staff for a week—they will appreciate it and do their level best for you—and visit Brophy, Cains & Co., in their warehouse, 23 St. Helen Street, Montreal, in the month of February, when their stock is complete in all departments.

Good Advertising

For Wide Awake Retailers

By F. James Gibson.

Our "Good Advertising" department is to help our subscribers to do better advertising. The gentleman whom we have selected as its conductor is well-known as one of the foremost advertising specialists of the day. Any of our readers who desire the benefit of Mr. Gibson's criticisms on advertisements or advertising methods, or his advice on any advertising subject, can have it or both entirely free of charge by writing to him in care of this journal.

If correspondents so desire, fictitious names or initials may be used for publication. But all requests should be accompanied by the subscriber's name.

HERE is a little story with a big moral for advertisers: Two peddlers met in a country village. One had a heavy pack strapped across his shoulders, the other a small satchel. The one with the pack took off his cap, mopped his brow, and said to the other:

"Why do you come so far into the country with such a small satchel? See me! I bring everything! How do you make anything with such a little package, tell me?"

"Easy enough," said the other, carelessly. "You sell people what they need, while I make them need what I sell."

This is the age of specialization, as well as the age of combinations. In writing advertisements about goods, it is always well to write about one particular thing or line of goods at a time. Of course, in a large advertisement several different kinds of goods can be written up. But these several lines ought to be each treated separately.

* * *

The right way and the wrong way of advertising is exemplified in these two advertisements (Arnold, Constable & Co. and Best & Co.), which I clipped from a recent issue of The New York Herald. They illustrate the point brought out in the conversation between the two peddlers:

Best & Co.

Little Feet That "Toe-In"

This awkward habit can be completely cured by wearing our "Toe-In" Shoes. No discomfort — not unsightly — look like any other shoe.

Prices, $2.00 to $3.50, according to size.

Also shoes to prevent or cure "Bow-legs," "Flat-foot" and to strengthen Weak Ankles.

Cost but a trifle more than ordinary shoes.

So superior is our assortment of styles and sizes — so certain are we that we can always fit the foot and suit the customer, that we encourage people to make our Shoe Department a test for all the store.

If you have never enjoyed the advantages of clothing children here, suppose you begin with Shoes.

for children—in fact, everything for children—but nothing but shoes is mentioned in this advertisement, and rightly so. Their announcement stands in the same relation to Arnold, Constable & Co.'s advertisement, that a well-aimed rifle ball does to a carelessly discharged charge of buckshot. The Arnold-Constable advertisement aimed at half a dozen wants of women, and probably hit nothing, because not enough was said about anything in particular. Every mother who has a "toe-in" child (and most mothers have them), and who reads this advertisement, will look up Best & Co. when the little one needs its next pair of shoes. On the way to the shoe department she will see many other articles for children's wear. Probably she will buy some of them also. And last, but not least, the house has secured another, and probably a steady, customer. If Best & Co. merely advertised that they were dealers in everything for children, not one-half the effect would have been obtained.

When you advertise, emphasize one thing at a time. If you have occasion to push more than one line at a time, divide the advertisement up into sections; one section to one line of goods, and so on.

* * *

The full benefit of advertising is often lost by careless display of the goods advertised. I remember one instance of this. A firm advertised some crepes for evening wear. The advertisement was very temptingly worded, and I dropped into the store to see the result. One piece of the crepe, a very dainty silvery blue, was thrown over the counter alongside another piece of a rich cream shade. So far all right, for the artistic effect was correct. But, alas! close to these two pieces was a piece of brilliant red crepe, beautiful in itself but quite destructive of the excellent artistic effect produced by the other pieces. Women, of course, are more artistic than men, and notice such things when the average man would not. But, as women are the chief spenders of money in the stores, it will always pay a merchant to look after even such apparently small things as the proper matching of colors in a store display of advertised goods. The firm I refer to was losing money through the carelessness of its dress goods chief, and I wager money that they blamed the advertisement for not selling more of the crepes.

* * *

The little incident just referred to reminds me that in most stores that advertise great carelessness prevails in respect to cooperation between the advertisements and the salespeople. The bigger the store the more likely this carelessness is to exist. It certainly is very annoying to walk into a store in response to an advertisement and be told that no such goods are in stock or that the price is much higher than the advertisement said it was. By dint of persistent inquiry you find out at last the intelligent salesperson did not know anything about what was in the advertisement, and, finally, after interviewing two or three people you get the kink straightened out. Every salesperson in every store ought to know almost exactly what is advertised in his or her department; but how many really do know? Not half of them. The other half give the advertising a "black eye" and help in turning the hair of the advertising man grey before its time. If your store is a small one, see that every person connected with your establishment reads every advertisement you put out, and change the copy every issue of the paper. If the store is a large one, insist that each person in the several departments shall familiarize himself or herself with the advertisements relating to that department. See also that the floorwalkers, the elevator man, the cashiers, and even deliverymen read every advertisement put out by the firm. You will find that it will pay to go to a great deal of trouble over this point.

The Best announcement is a shoe advertisement, and shoes for children that toe in, at that. Best & Co. sell lots of things

Be in earnest about your advertising; be in earnest about everything you do. There are some advertisers who seem to look upon their advertisements as a joke, as something to be played with, as a toy. They are quite in earnest about the other features of their business, but when it comes to getting out their advertising announcements they seem to think that "any old thing" will do. This deplorable state of affairs no doubt arises from the fact that such people really don't believe in advertising; if they did believe in it they would be as earnest as they know how to be. A merchant who contracts for a certain space in a newspaper and runs the same advertisement in it issue after issue, is not in earnest. Not so long ago a Canadian weekly paper contained an advertisement of Christmas goods in June. This advertisement had been running since the preceding December. If the man who paid for this advertising (?) had had the slightest faith in advertising he would not have permitted this sort of thing. The fact was apparent that he was not in earnest, and so he threw away most of what the advertising cost him. Advertising is to-day the great motive-power of business. It is like the steam that propels the engine. It is like the blood that circulates through one's veins, giving life and vitality to all parts of the body. It is publicity. It is the bridge by which a merchant's customers get to his store. It is the prop by which many a tottering commercial edifice has been saved from destruction.

Why has Toronto grown so fast, and some country towns gone the other way? Why have Toronto's big stores grown so big, while some country stores, which used to flourish, now flourish no more? It is the big Toronto newspapers that are responsible. These newspapers advertised Toronto and Toronto advertisers. The "big store" of the present day is a creation of the big newspaper. Doubtless, the proprietors of some of them think that they created these big stores themselves. But the fact remains, that, without the daily newspaper, that is to say, without advertising, the great commercial emporium of the present day would almost be an impossibility. Yet there are good business men, otherwise levelheaded, who pooh-pooh advertising and say that it doesn't pay, that the game isn't worth the candle, and so on. Such men don't believe in advertising, because they don't understand it. The way of the nonadvertiser is hard these days, if he is a business man. It will be getting harder all the time.

WINDOW AND STORE DECORATING.

Conducted for THE REVIEW by H. Hollingsworth, an Expert Window Artist.

TO DRY GOODS REVIEW READERS.—We shall be glad to receive photographs and descriptions of window displays that have attracted special attention in their own localities, and which would be considered helpful to trimmers generally. Any inquiries or questions on the subject of window dressing will be answered cheerfully, and any information given that may be desired by readers. Queries should be addressed: "Window Dressing Department."

PROPER TRIMS FOR FEBRUARY.

AS January and February are pretty much clearing-up months, the windows should be used as the chief factor in special sales. Everything should be well ticketed. A good idea in displays of special sales is to have the former price (in black) on every ticket, and a red line drawn through it and the sale price printed underneath it in red. The customer can then see just what a bargain he or she can secure. The heavy goods should be well pushed, such as woollen underwear, blankets, comforters, etc.

The illustration herewith shows an elegant sales window of blankets, and the idea is very easily carried out. This idea could also be used in a display of white counterpanes, rugs, etc. The main feature of this window is the ticket in the centre. It cannot fail to impress the onlooker with the idea that there is a special sale of these goods on, and there is nothing to confuse the eye as regards the prices, because of there being just two prices, viz, $3.00 and $4.00.

The other illustration on page 20 is one of my Christmas windows. The background was covered in cerise colored material, the top, behind the lattice effect, being covered in with pale blue. When the numerous lights were turned on the effect was very pretty. The doll in the centre was mechanical. She danced a very modest skirt dance all day long. The mechanism was underneath and was operated by means of an electric fan motor. It proved an excellent attraction. This idea of a background is very simple and effective and can be carried out on a smaller scale. It may also prove an idea to some of our readers for a background for a boot and shoe display, or for one of clothing or dress goods, etc.

EARLY DISPLAYS OF WHITEWEAR.

During February and March the sales of whitewear should be pushed by the window-trimmer. Ladies commence about this time to look around for pretty cambric wear. The new goods are all coming in, and before they receive handling, and while they are crisp and new, they should be nicely shown (well ticketed) in the windows.

A few years ago this class of goods was not thought of until the warm weather had set in, but, now-a-days, immediately after the Christmas holidays, the whitewear department predominates. In all the larger cities in the United States and Canada there is, during these months, keen competition among the merchants in the whitewear goods. A good idea is to take all the windows of the store and turn them into whitewear displays. Say, one window of embroideries, another of white shirts, another of cambrics and cottons, sheetings, linens, ladies' and children's nightwear, underwear, etc. You impress on the people that they have whitewear to buy and that you have it to sell. Boom it in the newspapers, using lots of cuts, descriptions and prices. Have large tickets printed and hung in conspicuous places throughout the store and in the windows, reminding the people that there is a whitewear sale on now.

THE NUMBER OF WINDOWS.

If you have only two or three windows it is not policy to crowd everything in the whitewear line into them. Make each line exclusive.

Where there is only one window it is far better to trim it first with, say, embroideries, which are generally in natty wrappers, which make a pretty and catching display when nicely arranged. After this window has been in a few days change the display into one of ladies' wear. Then, after this has had sufficient showing, change it to children's wear; then, to cottons, sheetings and pillow casing, and so on.

The results from exclusive displays are far ahead of those from a conglomeration of everything crammed into one display.

For backgrounds for these displays light shades are pretty, viz, pink, pale blue, or Nile green. Black shows up nicely and makes the white garments appear crisp and clean. Mirrors, set at angles, make the display appear larger. The paper stands, described in a former number of THE DRY GOODS REVIEW, come in nicely in whitewear displays. They are just the height of a skirt and show it off to advantage.

PRACTICAL HINTS.

Designs with arches can be covered over with chemises, nightgowns, etc., and on these show up well.

A large card in the centre, appropriately worded, will help the display considerably.

In the centre of the display the prettiest goods should be shown.

Make the centre-piece the prettiest garment in stock.

Forms used in mantle displays can be utilized for showing corset covers and chemises on. Put a neat price ticket on every garment.

One thing to be watched in a display of white goods is the window-pane. Have it thoroughly cleaned, as a dirty glass will make the goods appear soiled.

BUSINESS WINDOW TRIMS.

Many merchants have the notion that mechanical ideas in window trims should be discouraged, as well as "picture" windows and elaborate trims of all sorts, under the plea that they are not "business windows." "Give me a plain, business window," says the merchant, and the trimmer does not argue the question very fiercely for it saves him a lot of thought and a lot of hard work.

the business window. To make an attractive window requires all the brain power, and craft, and taste, and handiwork of the expert trimmer. The inexpert trimmer is the man who decorated that window which is not attractive and which the passing throng do not see at all.

In order to make a window stand out from its fellows, something more than a plain arrangement of goods is needed. It must be unusual and distinctive to the extent of arresting the attention of busy people as they hurry along the busy street.

Shrewd and observant trimmers have found that the secret of successful windows is to have a background of mechanical device, or elaborate trim, that will command attention, and then to place the goods in such an ingenious manner that in looking at the display people note the excellence of the goods, and the desire is generally to purchase them. You must have an attraction that induces the pedestrian to stop and inspect, otherwise the window will be a flat failure. This is why

A WINDOW OF PRESENTS AND FANCY GOODS.
Containing Ideas in Decoration.

What is a "business" window? What is usually meant by the term is a window that will sell goods—the final aim of all window trimming. How can a window sell goods? By placing them before the public in such a manner that the observer has a desire for them, and enters the store to make the purchase. Once in, the customer may see other things she wants, and no matter how much she purchases under these conditions the credit of the sale belongs to the window.

Now, mark one point in this statement. I said "observer." All goods placed in a show window are not observed. Since the street is lined with windows, all filled with merchandise, few people stop to notice them unless there is something in the window that especially catches the eye. A "business window" that has no attractive quality is not really a business window. The attractive window is beautiful, artistic, mechanical displays are to be encouraged, as they are the real "business windows."

EVERY TRIMMER HIS OWN CARD WRITER.

Almost every merchant requires his window-trimmer to write his own cards. The exceptions are the largest departmental stores where a card writer is kept busy from morning until night, and even in these cases the trimmer can with advantage make his own window tickets, and so get what he needs and when he needs it. The plain, neat, simple lettering demanded for mercantile purposes, is easily learned by any man handy enough to be a window-trimmer. Most trimmers know that one of the first questions asked by the employer (when a trimmer applies for a position) is: "Can you write show cards?" If you can, he will proceed to talk business with you, but if you say you can't, it requires a remarkably good record as a window-trimmer to overcome the disadvantage of not being able to make a show card.

Therefore, if you can't letter, commence and learn how. It just requires patience and perseverance, and when these are exercised failure is unknown. To begin with, purchase about a dozen sheets of white cardboard, which will not cost more than 4c. or 5c. a sheet; also two or three small camel's hair brushes. Then get two packages of Diamond dyes, say, one of scarlet and another of blue. Any color you may desire can be had in Diamond dyes. By taking about a quarter of the package of the dye, putting it in a cup, adding enough mucilage to make a thick paste, and then, after mixing it thoroughly, filling the cup about half full of water, a splendid lettering composition can be made. You can get from a very pale pink to a deep red by adding more water for the pale shades and more dye for the darker shades.

I find this formula a splendid one and use all shades—purple, green, yellow and all the bright, attractive colors. By keeping the brushes in water they will remain nice and soft. I generally find the one brush sufficient. I keep a cup or tumbler filled with water by me, and when I desire a different color I just dip the brush three or four times in the water and it is then ready for another color. A package of Diamond dyes will last me a year. When the color dries up in the cups I just add a little warm water, stir it up, and it is as good as ever again.

In doing the lettering, the best way is to draft the letters out in pencil and then fill in with the brush. By constant practice a fellow will soon be surprised how easily it is to make a nice ticket. It is very discouraging, sometimes, to the beginner, but by taking time and keeping things neat and clean as you go along, it will soon prove interesting, and in a short time it will prove an easy matter to make a neat business-bringing card with rapidity and ease.

The main thing in the lettering is "not to crowd." Give every letter lots of space. Say as little as possible, but to the point. Most ticket writers have a tendency to say too much on a card. This is a big mistake. A card is useless unless it can be read at a glance.

The illustration will give you a good idea of what a neat business-window ticket should be like. Try it. H. H.

MUSLIN UNDERWEAR WINDOW.

Start by constructing a large hoop or circle. Arrange this in the centre of the window about a foot from the background. Cover this circle like a drum-head, with deep pink (or any color you desire) tissue paper. Then, with white tissue paper, make one sheet large enough to cover the circle. Cut out fancy figures or the words "Muslin Underwear Sale" and put it on the circle over the pink paper. Puff that part of the background which shows with bunting of the same color as the tinted tissue paper. Then arrange muslin garments on the outer edge of the circle, also on the background.

Then construct an arch a little wider than the circle and as high as the background. Arrange this in the centre of the window about eighteen inches from the glass. Cover this arch with puffed bunting and puff the base with bunting.

Then, on the side arms, on the arch, on display stands, arranged on the base, and on the base, display muslin garments. Each garment should have a descriptive or price card on it. One or two electric lights behind the circle will give a pretty effect. —St. Louis Drygoodsman.

A DRESS GOODS DISPLAY.

Cover the background of the window with draped dress goods. If the main color of the goods you have selected to display is dark, use light bright plaids for the background. Then, about every two feet, along the top of the background, fasten six-inch pieces of curtain poles so they will stick straight out, or you might use iron brackets as they are easier to fasten. On these, arrange a piece of bright red dress goods, gathering it at each bracket so that it will hang in folds.

Arrange the base into a series of steps, three or more, according as the depth of the window will permit. On these steps arrange forms and drape dress patterns on the forms. With each pattern next to the glass display the linings, that is, waist and skirt lining, binding, stays, etc. Then, on each pattern, put a descriptive price card reading, "Regular price 75c. a yard. with linings included." The yard price should be lettered in black and the pattern price in red. In the centre of the window, near the glass, arrange one large show card reading, "To reduce stock, special January offerings in dress patterns."

The displaying of dark goods, especially black, is a problem which puzzles the head of the man who wants to show some of the new and particularly handsome patterns that come into the stock.

The building of a black background is out of the question and the monotony of unrelieved light grounds make them very unsatisfactory. The breaking of such monotony and at the same time not detracting attention from the prime object of the work is difficult.—Chicago Dry Goods Reporter.

A DISPLAY OF EMBROIDERY.

The idea of an embroidery window must convey the impression of bargains out of the ordinary. Ladies are liberal buyers of these goods at this season if they are impressed with the showing and the saving in the special prices.

With the window all cleared and cleaned, start by arranging an upright about the size of stove pipe, and height of the background, in the centre of the window. From about two or two and a half feet either side of the centre of the top of background arrange sticks or rods, bringing them to a point at the top of pillar. Then arrange sticks or rods across both back corners of the window at the top of the background, either by fastening them to the background and sides or by suspending them on strong black threads fastened to the ceiling. Then suspend on strong black threads or fine wire attached to the ceiling, on either side of the centre pillar, hoops about two feet in diameter. Cover all this work and the background with yellow bunting. Now select a nice pattern from each of the special-priced lots. Display one piece on each of these sticks and hoops, arranged in a series of back and forth loops, to show up the pattern nicely. Entwine one nice, wide piece around the pillar. On each of these pieces arrange a generous show card (about 11x14) reading, "This handsome pattern or choice of 24 others at only 5c. a yard," or, "This pattern and 18 other pretty patterns only 10c. a yard." These cards should be lettered in glossy black and red. With this overhead work arranged, cover the base with yellow bunting, puffing it loosely. Then arrange a few T display stands on the base, displaying embroidery arranged in series of back and forth loops. Fill in the base with embroideries left in their original papers and arranged on easels. In the centre of the window, near the glass, place a large show card reading, "Sample embroidery specials from the white goods sale."

Make showing inside to harmonize with the window display, and have all embroideries out where they will do their own talking and interest customers.—Chicago Dry Goods Reporter.

EMBROIDERY WINDOW.

An attractive embroidery display can be arranged by first covering the background with pink bunting, puffing or pleating it. In the centre and top of the background fasten a piece of curtain pole or an arm bracket. At either side, about 18 inches from the outer edge of the background, arrange similar pieces of curtain pole or arm brackets.

Then take a piece of wide embroidery and drape it in a series of back and forth loops, starting at either outside bracket and going to the opposite, over the centre one.

In the centre of the window arrange an arch proportionate to the width of the window and about six inches lower than the background. The material used in this arch should be about 12 inches wide. Then arrange pegs in the window side, one at the top in the centre of the arch, one at either side about where it bends, the others at proportionate distances down the sides; cover the arch with puffed pink bunting.

Arrange embroidery on these pegs, starting at the lower peg, either side looping to the next until the lower peg on the opposite side is reached, then back and forth, shortening the loops each time. Then arrange full pieces of embroidery on the outer edge of the arch, slanting them upward.

Cover the base of the window with pink bunting, puffing it loosely. Arrange a pedestal in the centre of the arch, and place a large dressed doll on it. Fasten a series of narrow embroideries to the window frame at either side of the glass, and bring them to the centre in the doll's hands.

Fill in the base of the window by arranging embroideries in the piece on easels, or dropping them on "T" stands.

Presuming that you are showing only your finer patterns, in which case you rely more on the exquisiteness of the designs than on price to create desire, letter one neat show card reading, "Exquisiteness such as only little Switzerland can produce, at such little prices that you will wonder how we can do it." Place this card in the centre near front of the window.

A CANADIAN PATRIOTIC WINDOW.

Wims & Co., Campbellford, Ont., recently had a window, the designer of which was evidently a clever decorator with a head for business. The window had in the centre a young Canadian boy playing on a flute and upon a card at his feet were the words, "We'll hang Paul Kruger on a Sour Apple Tree." To the right, were a number of rifles with fixed bayonets and nearby hung a card with the words, "England expects every man to do his duty." Mr. Wims is to be congratulated on his window. This country feels deeply over the war, and the bravery of our troops under difficult circumstances makes every true Britisher resolve to stand by the Empire. A display reflecting this feeling is good business.

BEDSPREAD WINDOW.

This is a line that in most stores must be kept in papers or tight drawers, so that they won't become soiled and unsalable. The result is that the line is neglected to the extent of being seldom shown, unless asked for by customers. With muslins and linens bidding for business, bedspreads will come in for considerable attention from housekeepers, if shown at this time.

Cover the background with light tinted material; if strong color scheme is desired, use purple or red. At the top of the background, midway between the centre and the sides, fasten round brackets about the size of the candy pail covers. Then, across either corner fasten a stick or rod. Over these two sticks or rods and shelf brackets arrange bedspreads, dropping them so that the pattern shows plainly.

Then take a number of spreads and fasten one corner of each at a point in the centre of the background. Frill one spread in a puff at the point where these are fastened. Then take the opposite corners, fold them back, and fasten the spreads in a semicircle at the base of the window, shaping a pyramid.

On pedestals, or forms, placed on either side of the window, near the front, drape bedspreads and stack a few on top. Have a price card, lettered in red, on each spread. Letter one large show card: "Bedspreads spread for a bargain feast."—St. Louis Drygoodsman.

Fur Trade.

The State of Trade.

The Canadian hat dealers generally, both in towns and cities, put in pretty heavy orders for Spring. As the Spring business is usually on a larger scale than the Fall, and 1900 promises to be as good a year as last, good orders were justified. Since the first week in January importations of Spring purchases have been coming in, and some dealers are already receiving a part of their supplies.

The Winter in Canada has been a mild one and many men have been wearing their felt hats the whole time, so that the demand in Spring is likely to be brisker than usual. There have been some good orders placed for American hats. The Canadian factories are reported to be busy up to their full capacity.

An English Hat Combine.

It is rumored in England that a large combine is about to be formed by the manufacturers of felt, wool, and silk hats, with a capital of £2,000,000 or thereabouts. There are doubts as to whether it will be carried through successfully. Some time ago an agreement among the felt hatters was proposed, and meetings held in order to bring about some understanding which would put a stop to the unusually keen competition and cut throat policy of the smaller firms, but this attempt was futile. The whole of the trade could not come to terms, and first one firm, and then another would drop out, until the idea had to be almost completely relinquished. With regard to the contemplated combine, a meeting has already been held, and a second meeting is to take place, at which it is expected that all the manufacturers will throw in their lot in a valuation of their manufactories.

The English Hat Trade.

The more famous London hat firms report a good outlook and brisk trade for Spring. The correspondent of The New York Hatter, writing from London last month, says he has called upon the leading men: Messrs. Christy & Co. are busy at the factory working on goods for Spring deliveries. Many of the travelers are home, and among them, I am sorry to hear, is Mr. Emerson Wood, who was telegraphed for and had to abandon his trip in the United States on account of the dangerous illness of his wife. Whether or not he will be able to return in time to finish his Spring round, remains doubtful. The few towns he had visited before his return were liberal in their orders, and but for the unfortunate necessity of his recall, the trip bid fair to be a record one. The lines of samples shown by Messrs. Christy & Co. this season are exceptionally good, and have been appreciated in a practical manner wherever shown. In the straws, panamas and fine pedals in Alpine shapes have been largely ordered in addition to the plain boaters, which have gone mostly in Jap rustics.

At Messrs. Lincoln, Bennett & Co.'s, Mr. Davis tells me the New York representative has made a very good start. A few orders have been sent over from some of the best houses, and there is every prospect that the agency will be a success. The new silk hat for the Spring has a little less bell than formerly, and is about  $6\frac{1}{4}$  inches deep, with well rolled brim. Soft felts are going very well in natural greys and dark slate, with contrasting bands, and there is also an occasional call for light drabs with black bands. Orders for straws are still good.

At Mr. W. H. Heath's, I was shown some of the new samples for Spring, and was particularly struck with the general appearance of the felts. For his best grade, Mr. H. uses a beaver fur, and the result is a hat with a rich, soft gloss, a fine velvety finish, and great elasticity in the body. The ladies' department is still doing well in spite of the drawbacks of bad weather, etc., which speaks well for the good taste and judgment of the head; plain fur toques and turbans are "the thing" this month.

I found Messrs. Tress & Co. busy taking stock; the season's trade has been very satisfactory, and Spring orders on felts and silks are beginning to pile up. The new styles differ very little from this season, a slight modification all around being the only change. In the ladies' department some very good effects in trimmed boaters are being shown.

From Messrs. Battersby & Co. I learn that their American representative, Mr. C. W. Munro, has started on his trip, and is meeting with success. Having had some experience in the American trade, Messrs. B. & Co. are able to turn out sizes and ovals suitable for that market. At their factory, which is one of the finest and best equipped in the trade, they intend keeping a stock of the principal shapes in a forward state to insure quick delivery of repeats. They are having some success in England with a shape called the "Kimberley." It is a conical round crown about  $5\frac{3}{4}$  inches deep and a flat raw-edge brim  $2\frac{3}{8}$  inches wide, with a natural calfskin band with two buckles instead of a bow. It is a first rate knockabout hat, and should suit the American market. Among their English connections they find a tendency for smaller shapes in felt, but not so small as asked for in the United States. They run here about 5-inch crown and 2-inch brim as the best seller.

Where Cheap Hats Don't Pay.

It has been figured out that workingmen pay more in a year for hats than do the ordinary business men. In the larger towns and cities the workingmen will be seen almost entirely to be wearing hats, not over 25 per cent. wearing caps. The laboring man always buys a low-priced hat, ranging, say, from 75 cents to $1.50, a hat that does not give good or satisfactory service. Consequently, says The Chicago Dry Goods Reporter, every two or three months he must get a new hat. The business man, on the other hand, pays $2.50 or $3 and gets much better service for his money. The hat is not only of better appearance, but has not that "seedy" look which the cheaper hat has almost from the start. It would seem that not so many hats but better hats is the more economical, a very good doctrine to preach to those who insist upon a cheap hat.

EXPANSION IN THE CANADIAN COTTON INDUSTRY.

WITHIN the past year or two expansion and improvement have been the steady theme in connection with cotton manufacturing in Canada. Some of the companies have built new mills, and additions and extensions to old ones, while others have confined their energies to the substitution of new and improved machinery and appliances of all kinds with which to carry on their work. Some idea of the advance made in recent months may be gathered from the perusal of a few statistics.

In January 1897, The Montreal Cotton Co. had in operation 2,200 looms, whereas to day they have installation for 4,000. These will be in actual working order inside of three months. The company have made large improvements with regard to a plant for mercerizing, and now these goods compare favorably with English goods. Two mills have been erected, one, the Empire mill, for the spinning of Egyptian cotton; the other, called the Louise, for weaving purposes.

The Canadian Colored Cotton Co. have bent their energies principally to the process of remodeling. Their aim has been to make a specialty of the finer lines, such as gingham, zephyrs, and fine oxfords. To this end they have put in 500 Jacquard looms in their St. Croix mill at Milltown, making the total number of looms in that mill upwards of 1,200. The annex which has lately been built in connection with it represents an outlay of $40,000, and two smaller additions to the main mill have also been built for holding machinery. The new building is a structure 160 x 100 ft., three storeys high, well lighted with about 7,000 lights of glass. In Spring a spur of the C.P.R. will be built beside the mill, so that shipments may be made right from the doors to all parts of Canada. Modern, up-to-date improvements have taken place too in Cornwall. The mills there have undergone an extension to hold the newest kind of bleachers for certain classes of goods. At Merriton there has been a change, and the mill there is now a blanket mill. (The large sale of these cotton blankets, due to the difference in price is making considerable difference to the woollen goods.) Everywhere with this company new looms, spindles and cards have been substituted for old ones; and it is their wish to concentrate as much as possible particular lines in the several mills. The idea is above all to push the finer lines of goods. The fact that the employes in various mills have received this year an increase of 10 per cent. in their wages speaks for itself.

The Dominion Cotton Mills Co. have in like manner laid the chief stress not on building anew, but in throwing out and putting in. Though exact statistics are not to hand, they have largely increased their working power at Magog by the addition of 1,000 looms. At Kingston the company received a bonus on condition that they should spend $150,000 there. At Hochelaga an extension has been built, new looms have been put in, a machine-shop has been erected, and new machinery for working purposes acquired. An electric plant has been inserted for power instead of using coal as formerly. The Montmorency Cotton Co.'s mill, belonging to The Dominion Cotton Mills, has been enlarged for yarns, and exemption from municipal taxation has been granted. The Dominion Cotton Mills Co. are applying to the Dominion Parliament at its next session for the passing of an Act to ratify and confirm the letters patent of the said company; to increase their capital stock, to authorize the issue of preferential stock; and other purposes. It is understood that an increase of $1,000,000 will be made in preferred stock.

The Merchants Cotton Co. have made the most expansion probably of any of the mills within the past couple of years. In 1898 30,000 spindles were put in, which gave employment to 500 extra hands. Besides this, 10,000 new spindles replaced old ones at a cost of $10,000. The whole cost of improvements and additions in that year was in the neighborhood of $650,000. During 1899 a further advance was made. On October 16 the shareholders of the company met, and authorized the directors to increase the capital stock from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000. An extension was made to hold spinning machinery for giving knitting mills cotton yarn; and new looms were placed in the basement. Across the road from the main mills a new mill is now in course of construction of about one-third their capacity. It will employ 400 extra hands, and its cost will come near half a million of dollars. This mill is to be devoted to the washing of yarns, ducks and coarse drills for manufacturing purposes. They will pay attention to specialities. The aim is to push especially the coarser lines. The inauguration of the Colonial Print Works at St. Henri, adds one more to the quota of increases in Canada. The new buildings, particulars of which are given elsewhere, cover five acres of ground. This company expect to be in readiness about March 1, 1900.

NEW BLOUSE FACTORY.

Signs of prosperity and enterprise are continually making themselves manifest. One of them is to be seen in the large building operations that have been going on all over the land. At Drummondville, Que., a new factory has been established for the manufacture of blouses, and kindred lines. The Maple Clothing Company, which has been in existence about six months, consists of W. Mitchell, president; Edward Willet, secretary-treasurer and E. Pelletier, general manager. They began operations in a modest way some time ago, in Drummondville, and have been selling goods for about a month. The goods were found so satisfactory that it became advisable to increase the accommodation, and, with this end in view, larger premises were secured. The new buildings are four storeys high, 100 x 40 feet. The company are also placing, in addition to the machinery which they already have, about 100 machines. They will occupy their new works in about a month, and there will then be 150 hands employed. The facilities granted them by the town of Drummondville enable them to manufacture goods at a rate which can meet competition. Their trade mark, as the name of the company indicates, is the maple. They claim to manufacture blouses of a kind which are unique in value and in style; under and over skirts, silk petticoats, and whitewear which can defy competition. They are particularly proud of their lines of overalls, jumpers, smocks: and what they would specially draw attention to, is the fact that their goods in the various departments are cut under tailors—experienced tailors!

Among those initiated into the Union Commercial Travelers' Association at its last meeting was Mr. John McRae, the popular representative of The D. McCall Co. in the West.

Mr. James Mundie, a prominent member of the Northwest Travelers' Association, has left to take charge of the factory of The W. J. Peck Clothing Co., in Montreal. Mr. Mundie has been in the West since 1872.

Canadian buyers and subscribers may have their letters addressed to the London office of THE CANADIAN DRY GOODS REVIEW, 109 Fleet Street, E.C., London. Letters so directed will be kept or forwarded according to instructions.

MONTREAL AND TORONTO, FEBRUARY, 1900.

BRADFORD'S TRADE WITH THE UNITED STATES.

Canadian buyers who go to Bradford will be interested in knowing the condition of trade with the United States in 1899, as compared with the previous year. Bradford's sales to the United States showed an enormous decline when the Wilson low-tariff measure made way for the present Dingley law. The first year of the Dingley tariff produced a falling off of $18,000,000 in the exports from Bradford. This was partly due, perhaps, to overbuying previously. But, in 1899, the trade began to recover, and there was an increase of exports to the value of over $2,000,000 compared with 1898. The increased purchases consist of cotton goods, silk goods, silk yarns, alpaca, mohair, camel's hair, etc. It is curious to note that cotton goods have now become the principal Bradford line of export to the United States. Although Canada is no such market for Bradford goods as its Southern neighbor, yet, we believe that, proportionately, it can make a better showing than the United States.

LORD MASHAM'S WORK.

LORD MASHAM, the head of the great English silk company known as Lister's, has just completed his eighty-fifth year, having been born January 1, 1815. He entered business in early manhood, says The Textile Mercury, and, throughout the whole of the long period that has since intervened, he has been distinguished for energy, courage, skill and tenacity of purpose which have commanded universal admiration. These qualities, combined with intelligence, breadth of view, strict integrity and a tireless physical system, are such as, to a great extent, command success.

Lord Masham has made a great success in the manufacture of plush by utilizing the waste silk, which was formerly thrown aside as of no use, and he has, besides, maintained the success of English silk throughout a period when the severest foreign competition has been met with. In public affairs, he has shown a decided talent for discussing the trade question on its merits, giving due weight to theoretical principles, but not wandering away from conditions and facts that ought to govern the tariff policy of a country like England. What has always seemed, to business men, the weakness of free trade is that its soundness is proved by a process of deductive reasoning which creates its own premises and thus easily reaches the desired conclusions. Lord Masham has done much to free England from the slavish adulation of mere theory and its consequent application to conditions that do not fit the case by men who could neither construct nor conduct a large business if they tried. Opinions once thought sacred dogmas are being modified. Lord Masham will, we hope, live many years yet to see in force some of the commercial principles he has so ably expounded.

THE CANADIAN COTTON INDUSTRY.

THE Canadian cotton mills, judging from the facts presented elsewhere in this issue, appear to be doing well. The mills of one company have almost doubled the number of looms, and a plant for mercerizing fabrics has been put in. The extensive concern which operates mills making colored goods has gone largely into cotton blankets, which were formerly bought in the United States, and 500 jacquard looms have been put into another of the mills. Yet another company has gone largely into new machinery for more than one mill, while the print mill has also been added to. Another company has added 30,000 spindles to its equipment, while a new company has been formed to make prints, thus providing domestic competition in this line of goods.

Altogether the cotton industry is flourishing. This is partly due, no doubt, to active trade at home, seeing that the export business is still a small feature of the total business done. Then the tariff was undoubtedly framed to save the cotton mills from any sudden reduction under the preferential rates to British manufactures. The protection is now 18¾ per cent. on white and grey cottons, and 26¼ per cent. on colored cottons—that is, as regards England. The tariff towards foreign countries is 25 per cent. on white and grey and 35 per cent. on colored. The cotton industry has, therefore, no reason to complain of the treatment accorded to it by Parliament, and if all manufacturing interests had been similarly dealt with, small wonder if they showed as much expansion as cotton during the golden years of plenty which we have been recently experiencing.

THE CAUSES OF FAILURES IN 1899.

WE have received from Mr. T. C. Irving, the Canadian manager for Bradstreet's, an instructive statement of the number and causes of failures in Canada and Newfoundland during the past four years. This covers an interesting period. From 1896 to 1899 the commerce of Canada has been steadily improving, until now—1900—it has reached what may fairly be called high water mark.

Briefly summarized, Bradstreet's review of the situation amounts to this: the number of failures have been:

|       |       |       |       |
|-------|-------|-------|-------|
| 1896. | 1897. | 1898. | 1899. |
| 2,204 | 1,925 | 1,470 | 1,306 |

In the same time the liabilities have dropped from $16,000,000 to $11,000,000.

The causes of failure in 1899 are in the following "order of merit": 1. Lack of capital; 2. Incompetence; 3. Specific conditions; 4. Fraud; 5. Inexperience; 6. Neglect; 7. Competition; 8. Unwise credits; 9. Extravagance, failures of others and speculation.

There is food for reflection here. It seems that 74 per cent. of the failures are caused by lack of capital. It is a great mistake for our young men to go into business for themselves without the necessary supply of money. The chances are dead against them. If they fail they call it "overcompetition." In point of fact, they never had a fair chance from the first. Conditions were against them. A young man who has saved $300 or $400, is well thought of by the people who sell to his employer, possesses energy, health and the polite manner which brings trade, often thinks of setting up for himself. He should not be in too much of a hurry to embark on his own hook. Let him go on saving. If he does not like this advice, let him consider the above figures—three quarters of the failures in Canada during 1899 caused by insufficient capital.

PEDLARS INTERFERING WITH TRADE.

Nothing is more reasonable than the demand that pedlars shall not be allowed to interfere with legitimate trade. Merchants are large taxpayers. They form an important factor in the upbuilding of a village, town, or city. They are the natural and necessary means by which goods are distributed to the consumer.

In old times, the pedlar was the means by which much of the distribution was done. He was, therefore, in those days a benefactor in his way, and deserved toleration even when some hard bargains were driven, because it was a convenience to have the goods brought to one's door when stores were remote and roads impassible. Now, however, all is changed, and it is hard to understand why merchants so patiently bear the competition. In Carleton County, for instance, it is said the pedlar nuisance is particularly bad this season. Recently, a pedlar offered for sale all over that county some silk handkerchiefs of a certain pattern. These he sold for 25c., while in the ordinary stores they could not be bought for anything less than $1. The presumption is that the low-priced ones were stolen. On the other hand, another of these salesmen offered for sale alleged gold-rimmed glasses for a sum that would buy in the city half a dozen of the same kind.

This should be looked into. The county authorities ought to protect regular trading.

"IS THAT THE LOWEST PRICE?"

IN the placing of advance orders, there is one question which is asked perhaps oftener than any other, and asked frequently without any particular idea as to what it really means, "Is that the lowest price?" The inquiry accompanies the transaction proposed in a casual kind of way, without any intention of impugning the uprightness of the seller; but, nevertheless, it does so, and it all depends on who the seller may be and who the purchaser may be, as to what answer will be made in such cases. Some of the stricter men will answer by a polite reminder that such a question is entirely improper, while others, who are not so particular, will most emphatically and unwaveringly state that the price quoted is once and for all the lowest obtainable. An American contemporary, some time ago, dealing with this question, stated that it was to their knowledge that, upon the implied insinuation of such interrogation, business relations had been broken off by the house refusing to further do business with people who suspected their veracity.

It is quite true that this question is asked every day, and will probably continue to be asked, without any animus being incited on either side; but all the same, it is a useless one evidently: for it must be plain that the seller puts himself in a ridiculous position, if—after quoting a certain price, which may naturally be supposed to be the fair and square price, and the one at which he can make a fair and square profit—he will, upon simply being asked if he has a lower one, change it, and thereby declare that he was making an unfair profit. In some countries, it is true, this system of beating down is a recognized institution; and no one who buys from an Arab or a Turk expects anything else. But, surely it is neither necessary nor wise for us to emulate their example.

There is one thing that has always to be taken into consideration. The man who purchases only a small quantity of goods cannot expect, in the nature of things, that he can buy as low as the one who purchases largely; and it is not politic for him to come in and raise all kinds of disturbance, because he has heard that another, who has bought ten times as much as he has, is being quoted lower prices. Some houses make it a point to have "one price for all," and it is always their own business to sell at whatever they please, to whomever they please. There is not, however, any rule to bind them down to such an arrangement. During the last 18 months the purchasing trade has not had the upper hand to the same extent they had some time ago; and sellers are beginning to think that it is time to call a halt. With the present condition of the markets, many abuses of this kind, which have crept in, might well be eradicated. Much deceit and many underhand methods could thus be abolished; and the result would be satisfactory to all concerned.

TREATMENT OF CLERKS.

ARE your clerks steadily becoming more valuable to you? Do they take a greater interest in your business than they did a year or two ago? If they do, encourage it, both by word and by deed. If not, what is the reason? There is an old saying, "It takes two to make a quarrel," that, with slight alterations, would be worth a merchant's attention. We mean to make it read thus: "It takes two, the clerk and the employer, to bring out the best in a clerk." A clerk may earnestly want to improve, but a rebuff or two may have led him to believe that his employer wants to "keep him in his place," and he may try to master out the business secretly. He may be working out plans at window-dressing, sketching suitable advertisements, considering methods of showing goods indoors, yet, as he never has been asked to, he has never offered to dress the window, write an ad., or rearrange goods in the store. It is bad policy on a merchant's part to allow a clerk to think he wants to keep him from learning too much. A clerk cannot learn too much. If his learning makes him more valuable, you get the benefit first, and, if you share the increase with him, you may always get the benefit of his increasing knowledge and ability. Ask him to try his hand at everything in connection with the business. If he shows aptitude, train him in every line he feels like following up. While keeping your position as head, and making it a rule that all changes shall be submitted to you before they are made, and keeping a watchful eye on everything done, allow your clerks as much opportunity as you can to improve your system of business. If a suggestion does not suit your ideas, say so candidly, giving reasons for your position, but do so in such a way that the clerk will feel free to offer another suggestion to-morrow. Treat your clerks as men or boys whom you trust and depend on, and the effect will show in a manly, confident treatment of customers and in a respectful deference to your own opinions.

SOMETHING ABOUT KHAKI.

During the present war, much is heard of khaki, the material of which the Queen's soldiers' fighting uniforms are made. Khaki serge, with its dull brownish-yellow color (indeed, the word "khaki" means a drab shade), is not a new thing. The cotton khaki has been used for years by the Imperial troops in India and other hot countries. It is merely a white drill, such as is worn in tropical climates, dyed a khaki color, and the ingredients used in dyeing are kept a profound secret. In the early stages of this material, and, in fact, until comparatively recently, great difficulty was experienced in machining the clothing, owing to the chemicals used in the dye "firing" the needles and rendering them unfit for use, but this has, to a great extent, been overcome by recent improvements.

Finding that, in warm, damp climates like South Africa, a woollen, rather than a cotton, material was necessary, the army authorities have ordered a khaki woollen serge, which will, it is believed, be more comfortable and satisfactory. It is said that recent contracts are for more than 500,000 yards of the lightest weights in woollen serge.

Cotton khaki has been used in Canada by a few men for lounging and outing Summer suits. An English manufacturer is making up some boys' suits of it. There may be a popular demand for it in Canada when our troops return.

WILL IT LAST?

We are sometimes asked if the present trade activity in Canada will last. Doubters think we have reached the top of the present trade-wave, and that, from now on, things will begin to recede a little. Our advice to merchants is: For business purposes, count on a continuance of prosperity; in matters of private expenditure and luxuries, cut away expenses as if 1900 were to be a bad year.

PRICES OF CANADIAN COTTONS.

A CORRESPONDENT of THE DRY GOODS REVIEW writes that the present prices asked for Canadian cottons are not, generally speaking, much higher than they were several years ago. In some instances, he says, the prices are really lower than they were in 1896, and that was not a year of high prices such as 1900 undoubtedly is.

For example, white carpet warps are actually 10c. cheaper now than then, and colored carpet warps are no higher in price. Certain lines of denims are to-day about the same prices quoted in the month of August, 1896. In shirtings, also, several numbers are on the old basis as to price, while other lines are not more than 1/8c. higher. Tickings, too, are only about 1/4c. higher.

"It should be borne in mind by the trade," continues the correspondent, "that while many advances in prices have been announced during the past twelve months by all the mills, prices are not abnormally high. It is doubtful, considering the state of the markets abroad, whether cottons have had their proportion in the general increase. The impression produced by the frequent circulars issued by the mills is that an enormous advance all around has taken place. In point of fact, it seems only fair to state that this is not so."

What our correspondent says is interesting. He is probably correct that numerous reports have made the advances seem greater than they are. They are, however, pretty high, and unless some abnormal change takes place in the raw cotton market there should not be any further considerable advances.

KHAKI YARNS NOW READY.

In view of the expected call for khaki it is interesting to note that the famous Halifax, England, yarn manufacturers, J. & J. Baldwin, are making a specialty of khaki shades in their various qualities. They particularly recommend the 3-ply "Beehive" and wheeling in khaki shades for knitting various articles for the soldiers of the Empire. There is a stronger likelihood of this idea "catching on" the longer Canadian soldiers are with the army. A neat little sample card of shades has been issued by J. & J. Baldwin, whose Canadian agent is Duncan Bell, Montreal. The trade can get fuller information from him.

BRITISH COLUMBIA TRADE NEWS.

COMMERCIAL EVENTS AT THE PACIFIC COAST.

DURING 1899 the imports at Victoria amounted to $3,320,586 and the exports to $1,832,292.

Beginning on February 15, there will be a day steamer between Victoria and Vancouver, doing the trip in four hours and a half.

The Rossland Board of Trade is moving to secure the cooperation of the Provincial boards in effecting the following ends: An appropriation of $25,000 a year for the British Columbia agency in London, a protest against any increase in mining taxes at this time, the establishment of a high school for Kootenay and Rossland, the necessity for more school accommodation, a grant in aid of a School of Mines, and asking for an appropriation of $15,000 for roads and trails in the Trail Creek mining division.

Many commercial travelers have been visiting the chief cities during January, and Spring business is brisk.

There were 130 buildings erected in Greenwood last year at a cost of $320,000.

The outfitting firms are beginning to feel the effects of the Spring movement of people towards the northern goldfields. Several good-sized parties have already gone north.

Fire gutted the store of Jones & Kimball, Rossland, ruining a stock worth $10,000; partly insured.

Vancouver and New Westminster merchants are moving against trading stamps. After March 1, they will not be used in the latter city. The bank managers have all expressed disapproval of the system, and the board of trade will be asked to request the Provincial Government to pass special legislation against lotteries, trading stamps, premiums and nickel-in-the slot machines.

F. E. Burns has opened up his store at Kamloops. The store has been completely renovated, and presents a bright and attractive appearance. He has a full and tasty line of men's furnishings.

The new Bills of Sale measure, now before the Provincial Legislature, contemplates the shortening (in the cities more particularly) of the time in which securities must be registered, while providing for registrations at Golden, as well as at Revelstoke, in the Kootenay district. The important section of the new Bill reads:

"2. Section 9 of chapter 32 of the Revised Statutes of 1897, being the Bills of Sale Act, as enacted by section 2 of chapter 7 of the Statutes of 1899, is hereby amended by striking out the first four lines thereof, and by substituting therefor the following: Every bill of sale of property situate in the counties of Victoria, Nanaimo, Westminster, Yale, Kootenay and in the territory forming the county of Vancouver, before the passing of chapter 17 of the Statutes of 1899, shall, within a period of eight days after the making thereof, be registered by filing such bill of sale, together with the affidavit, provided by section 6 of this Act, in the office of the registrar of the County Court, as hereinafter provided; and every bill of sale of property situate in the county of Cariboo and in that portion of the county of Vancouver added to said county by said chapter 17 of the Statutes of 1899, shall, within a period of 14 days after the making thereof, be registered by filing such bill of sale, together with the affidavit provided by section 6 of this Act, in the office of the County Court, as hereinafter provided."

STOREKEEPING IN REGINA.

IT is not surprising that the merchants of the Canadian Northwest should find a gratifying development of their business during the present era of increasing population and good prices, yet the growth of some retail houses in several towns is really remarkable.

In speaking to THE DRY GOODS REVIEW regarding the business of E. McCarthy & Co., general merchants, Regina, N.W.T., Mr. E. U. Steen, who has just returned from an extensive buying trip in the East, gave an insight into trade conditions in that section which is instructive as well as interesting.

E. McCarthy & Co. have been in business in Regina about 12 years, but, though their trade grew steadily, it was not until the last two years that they decided to largely increase their business. Then they added to their stock of groceries and boots and shoes, stocks of crockery, clothing and dry goods, and secured two additional stores, which were connected to their original place of business by large archways. This year they intend adding hardware to their stock, and connecting another store, which practically makes four stores in one, which is a large concern for a town of the population of Regina.

"What has lead you to branch out in this way?" asked THE REVIEW.

"There is a steady, permanent growth of trade in Regina. The population is steadily growing, and the majority of our old customers are well-to do, and liberal payers, as a rule. Our own trade has grown in the past year fully 75 per cent., and we feel we can count on the permanence of this increased trade, as it is not out of proportion to the growth of the district and of our facilities for carrying on such a trade."

"Do you consider Regina likely to grow very much in population?"

"The town is essentially a commercial centre. It has practically no future as a manufacturing town, as there is neither coal nor iron in its vicinity, and as there are not good water privileges in or near the town. But, as a distributing centre, it is bound to be of importance. The boring of wells, many of which are now flowing, has improved the surrounding land for agricultural purposes; the development of the mining districts of British Columbia has created a home demand at better prices than formerly for flour, butter, meats, and other farm produce. As the principal town in Assiniboia, and as the seat of Government for the whole of the Northwest, it is but natural that Regina should obtain the trade of a great section of country."

"What nationality are the residents of the section?"

"Canadians. Although this section includes people from many countries they have become so adapted to our style of living, and loyal to our institutions, that it would be unfair not to admit them as our countrymen. There are several Indian reserves some miles from the town, and a number of Germans in the place, but no Galicians or Doukhobors."

"Do the Germans and Indians prove good customers?"

"Excellent, though of altogether different characteristics. The Indian comes into our store, generally soon after the Government bounty has been paid, examines, say, a pile of blankets, pulls a pair out that suit him, asks the price, and, if it suits him, flings it down on the floor, and passes out without even waiting to have the blankets wrapped up. The German is, on the other hand, very slow in making a decision. He wants to reason and compare, but when he is satisfied he pays as promptly as the impetuous Indian. We are making a big effort to get as much of this trade as possible."

Carpets, Curtains and Upholstery.

THE CANADIAN CARPET AND CURTAIN TRADE.

THE prospects for a good Spring trade among the retailers are believed to be cheerful, and inquiries are already being made in the cities by householders who need new furnishings. The wholesale importers have been receiving their early shipments during January and sending them on to early buyers. During the next month or so merchants from Western Canada will be expected in the chief importing centres of the east to make what are generally called Spring purchases. From western reports the number of buyers will be large this season. There are some nice brussels carpets this year for $1.25 retailing, as well as cheaper lines. The range of curtains is extensive, and there are any number of pretty new designs.

CANADIAN SEA GRASS FOR BEDDING.

The United States commercial agent at Rimouski has been making a consular report on Canadian sea grass, which has been coming into vogue for upholstery purposes. He says :

"Sea grass is a long, thin grass that grows on the protected flats of the lower St. Lawrence river, along the south shore of the counties of Gaspé and Bonaventure, in the Province of Quebec, and on the east shore of the Province of New Brunswick. The grass grows from two to four feet long at Isle Verte and Rimouski. At these places the bottom is hard, and teams drive anywhere on the flats. The flats at Gaspé, Bonaventure, and New Brunswick are generally soft, and the grass grows from five to twelve feet long. Brant, geese and ducks, as they migrate, stop to feed on this grass. Geese commence to arrive here in March and leave about May 10 for the breeding grounds farther north, returning in September. The grass is known here as 'herbe a bernige' (brant grass) and 'herbe a outarde' (wild goose grass). These flats are very extensive in places. At Isle Verte over 1,000 tons of grass are cut, and 400 tons can be cut at Rimouski. Islands protect these flats from heavy seas. The grass is mown with scythes. It takes a very large area to dry much of it, and it shrinks rapidly in the sun, 100 lb. of the green grass making only about 12 lb. of the dry. If dried quickly with the salt in it, it is very brittle. To season it well requires from three to four weeks. After it becomes dry, showers are needed to take the salt out of it.

The dew will accomplish this object, but it takes much longer. Much experience and care are necessary to cure it properly and have it entirely free from salt. When properly dried the grass is strong, elastic and curly, giving it its value for upholstery. It is largely used by carriage manufacturers.

"The grass was first cut in Canada at Isle Verte in 1891. Now, power presses are used to bale it, and from 10 to 15 tons are put in a car. The amount of the yield in 1898 was 1,473 tons. About 10 per cent. of this was used in Canada and the balance went to the United States, largely to Ohio and Illinois, very little being used in the East. As it becomes better known I believe it will be more popular. It is clean, healthy, elastic, durable, light and cheap. The average price on the car is $25 per ton, or $30 delivered at Chicago or Cincinnati. All but 190 tons were gathered in this consular district. The work is done in about three months. The dealers buy it from the farmers, sort it, press it and market it.

"Last season the farmers received for their grass from $15 to $20 per ton; this season, from $12 to $15 per ton. The dealers have also been cutting prices, so that grass has netted only from $17 to $20 per ton on the cars here. There will be about twice as much shipped to the United States in 1899 as in 1898. At the present rate of shipment the amount on hand will be exhausted long before next year's supply will be ready for shipment. Some dealers have thought 'sea moss' a better name to sell under than 'sea grass,' so they have adopted it. It is not a moss, does not grow like it or resemble it in any way."

THE BRITISH CARPET TRADE.

In Canada, which is the largest market abroad we have for carpets, says the Manchester correspondent of The London Drapers' Record, Worcestershire, Yorkshire and Lancashire firms have had a good year's trade, and the Australian demand, which follows that of the Dominion in importance, has also been extensive. Although the United States probably consumes more carpets than any other nation in the world, the demand for British goods is very small, owing to the high tariff and the enormous development in the home protection. Houses like the Templeton's, of Glasgow, Crossley's, of Halifax, and some of the Kidderminster concerns, making high-class goods, can alone hope to transact business with the United States. Crossley's have £79,743 available for dividends as a result of last year's trading. The directors have decided to declare a further dividend of 4s. 6d. on the ordinary shares, making 6s. 6d. for the year. The value is £5 each, fully-paid. The results are much below those recorded in the early nineties, but the carpet trade has so many difficulties to contend with that one cannot look upon the return as unsatisfactory. Speaking generally, it cannot be said that makers of axminster, brussels, wilton, and other classes of carpets have been fully compensated for the advance in the yarns they employ. Cotton, linen and jute, in addition to woollen yarns, are used in the carpet trade, and on all these producers have had to pay much higher prices.

OILCLOTHS AND KIRKCALDY.

In chatting with a well-known Scotch member of the trade the other day, he stated that the city of Kirkcaldy probably owed its growth and prosperity more to the manufacture of linoleum and floor oilcloth, which was conducted therein, than to any other cause. He said that in 1874, when the late Michael Nairn commenced the manufacture of floor oilcloths in an humble way in the place, that Kirkcaldy was only a small town with an "assessable rental" of about $75,000. To-day it is a city of possibly 60,000 inhabitants, and draws taxes on property valued in the millions.

The oilcloth works which were started in 1874 are now the gigantic linoleum and oilcloth works of the M. B. Nairn Company, with the oldest son of the late Michael Nairn as president of the corporation.

Besides this house, there are at present five large works in the city, all of which are engaged in the manufacture of oilcloth and linoleum. Three of these were included in the recent big combination which was effected a couple of months ago.—Carpet and Upholstery Journal.

THE TENDENCY IN ENGLISH DESIGNS.

In discussing the Kidderminster carpet trade during 1899, The Kidderminster Shuttle says: "There has been a distinct increase in the demand for the best brussels and wiltons, and it is believed that these goods, on which the home market has so much depended in the past, have come once more into favor. We hear of several tapestry manufacturers and makers of other floor coverings having issued increased price lists, and makers of brussels and wiltons ought, and no doubt soon will adopt a similar policy.

"Some of the larger manufacturers of axministers declare

A NIGHT TRIM OF LACE CURTAINS AND RUGS,
at the Store of Hewson & Co., Cobourg, Ont.

that this year has been with them the best on record. This may not be taken as representing the average axminster trade, although it is quite true that more carpet has been cut up than in any previous year. The best qualities have quite held their own, and it is in the medium and cheaper classes that the increased volume of trade has been noticeable. This has been the feature of the home market. Shippers have reported some increase of trade with foreign countries, and altogether the year has been a satisfactory one.

"A steady trade has been done in rugs. The question has been asked: Why do not our manufacturers make an endeavor to compete with the makers of the expensive Eastern and French Aubusson carpets, and so cultivate a really high-class trade? One answer is that such endeavors on a limited scale are being made in some quarters which are being attended with a certain amount of success.

"There is not much that is new to be said with regard to carpet designs. Not that our designers are lacking in originality and public spirit, for many striking and novel designs have been put on the market, but, after all, the education of the public taste is a slow process, and it is found that the best selling patterns run very much on the lines of the chintzes, Persians, and the conventional treatment of floral designs. For some time past, however, there has been a growing demand for soft self-colors, and a tendency in the direction of French characteristics."

THE WEAVERS' STRIKE IN THE UNITED STATES.

The prolonged strike of the weavers of upholstery goods in the United States has become alarming; the strikers have been out over three months and there seems no prospect in sight for a settlement. The weavers, knowing the mills were overwhelmed with orders for Spring, took advantage of the situation and demanded more pay, besides an adjustment of mill regulations. Both sides are obstinate. The weavers had been receiving advanced pay, but demand more. The manufacturers say the strikers' demands are beyond reason and that they will keep their mills closed a year before they will yield. The market has been depleted of salable goods and buyers are seriously alarmed at the prospects of getting their usual Spring supplies. Even should the strike be declared off now, the manufacturers will not be able to more than half supply the orders already on their books. Manufacturers are declining orders at any price until the weavers get to work again. Here, in Canada, we are not so badly off, for the new upholstery plant of George H. Hees, Son & Co., at Valleyfield, Que., is running full blast and turning out lines of beautiful tapestry and chenille curtains, draperies, table covers, portierres, furniture coverings, etc., that were formerly imported from the United States. And right here we see a direct example of the benefit we get by encouraging home industry: Every year sees Canada more independent of other countries, as factories are springing up in our midst and supplying goods that were formerly imported. Keep up the good work and encourage home industry whenever it is consistent to do so.

of old tapestries are always pretty, and if a good quality is used will last a long time.

There is a great display of curtains this month. The new importations which The Brock Co., Toronto, have put into stock include lace curtains of all makes. A larger display in this line is being made than ever before, and a very extensive trade is being done in them. Some special numbers for retailing at popular prices are being shown to close buyers. Curtain materials of all kinds, including art draperies, muslins, cretonnes, sateens and similar fabrics are in great profusion this season. This firm have secured some snaps in white quilts which are being quickly taken up by the trade.

In lace curtains and curtaintettes, say John Macdonald & Co., values are better than last year. In carpets, a strong range of wilton velvets, including 54 in. widths in pretty colorings, is shown. Paper patterns of an extensive range of 4-yard wide linoleums can be had by any dealer who sends an application by mail. There are some pretty things in tapestry and chenille curtains, oriental and roman stripe effects being a feature. Some 3½-yard lace curtains, to retail at a very low price, are shown just now. The department also carries different widths of coco mattings for the use of churches, and also a range of church carpets, samples of which can be sent at any time. Repeat shipments of moquette mats and rugs in fancy designs have been received.

COLONIAL BLEACHING AND PRINTING COMPANY

Another stride has been made in the advance of the cotton industry in Canada, by the completion of the new Colonial Bleaching and Printing Company's works at St. Henri, Que. These mills are known as converting mills, and deserve the support of the trade in that they supply a want which has been felt for some time past. They will bleach, dye and print grey cotton bought in the open market in England, United States or Canada, and taken to them.

The works at St. Henri, of which cuts appear in our January Special Number, consist of a main building and two wings. The structure is of solid brick with stone foundation, and its dimensions are: main building 412 x 62 ft., right wing 180 x 62 ft., left wing 150 x 64 ft. The mills cover five acres of ground, and two acres additional have been secured so that in case the cloth required should not be obtainable the erection of a cloth mill would be possible in connection with the other buildings. The company expect to begin operations about March 1, when goods will probably be ready to be shown. About half of all the machinery is now in position, and all haste is being made to have everything in working order by the early Spring.

FANCY PARASOLS.

Representatives of The Irving Umbrella Co., Limited, are now on their respective routes with a full line of up-to-date fancy parasols. From orders now on hand, the indications are that this will be the largest fancy parasol season in many years, and, as they carry a complete range in their showroom, they are always pleased to receive a call.

Some of the latest designs shown are fleur-de-lis, hem-stitched, and tucks, in rows of three, four and five, also frills and 20-inch plain. The leading feature of many lines is the colored enamel stick to match the goods.

OBITUARY.

THE LATE HENRY HILKER, OF PORT ELGIN.

WE record, with much regret, the death at Port Elgin last month of Mr. Henry Hilker, one of the pioneers of that district and a man who filled a useful and honored place in the community.

Mr. Hilker was born in Germany in 1824. When young he accompanied his father to Jamaica. In 1837 they came to Canada and settled in Waterloo county. From a sketch of his life published in The Port Elgin Times, it appears that his early years were spent at first in business and then in farming. In 1852, when the settlement of Bruce was beginning to take place, Mr. Hilker sold his farm and removed his family to the new region which offered more openings to his energy. "It is doubtful," says the chronicler, "if there would be such a place as Port Elgin to day were it not for the spirit of enterprise displayed in those early days by Mr. Hilker and other residents of Waterloo who came shortly afterwards." He began in the shoe business, and later the firm of Ruby & Hilker was formed. The house was known all over Bruce county and far beyond. It engaged extensively in grain buying, and the volume of business done equalled that of any firm in Northwestern Ontario. To day, Hilker & Co.'s is one of the leading stores in Port Elgin. Mr. Hilker also went in largely for building, and many fine structures in the town were planned and carried out under his direction. He was a public spirited citizen, and often filled prominent positions in the municipal councils, and interested himself in the development of the district. "It will," says The Times, "be a long day before the name of Hilker is forgotten in Port Elgin." The deceased gentleman, who had been in poor health for several years, left a widow and 10 children surviving. The latter are: Messrs. A. Hilker, H. E. Hilker (reeve of Port Elgin), Bismarck, Charles and Elijah; Mrs. Macdonald, Guelph; Mrs. Wyld, Wetaskwin, N.W.T.; Mrs. Thomson and Miss Helen. There was a large attendance of friends at the funeral to pay the last tribute of respect to a worthy citizen.

LADIES NECKWEAR.

This department has now become quite a feature in all well-appointed retail stores where they cater to a good class of trade.

For the Easter trade, the latest thing will be soft, fluffy chiffon, trimmed with narrow silk fringe. The shapes in this, now shown in New York, are many, but the most popular is the Windsor and the made-up shapes, made to imitate a well-tied Windsor, and the best color will be white, trimmed with white or black, and pale shades, trimmed with white.

Travelers from New York are showing some very nice collections of these goods, the difficulty being that, as they are all made from French cloths and trimmings, which pay a very heavy duty coming into New York, it makes the price prohibitive when the Canadian duty on goods coming from New York is added, and intending buyers will find the Canadian manufacturer now showing as good, or better, range in variety and style as the best New York maker, and at prices which will save the purchaser the duty and more.

NEW GOODS IN WHOLESALE TRADE.

THE dress goods season is proving an active one. In figured black crepons this firm are showing a line (No. 1110 X) to retail at $1.25, which is especially good. A black wool and mohair figured (No. 522) will retail at $1, while the whole range of figured blacks is full of the latest designs. In better class goods, such as silk and wool mixtures, two lines (No. 542 and No. 536) are very attractive and will retail from $1.25 to $1.75. A magnificent line of black silk grenadines, in stripes and checks, includes goods to retail from 80c. to $2 per yard.

In plain costume cloths, one (No. 0433) retails at $1, and there is a range of 20 shades including the new Spring colorings, greys, fawns, browns and tans. A pretty fabric which is proving a good seller is a French poplin (No. 0439) with a small silk lover's knot design. Another novelty is a silk back covert cloth for tailor made costumes, the silk back doing away with the lining. A line of 48-in. worsted costume cloth (No. 427), in a variety of colorings, will retail at 75c. Seabelle serges, black and navy, are selling freely. Black lustres and mohairs do likewise.

In silks, and in this department John Macdonald carry a large stock, five lines of new blouse materials in beautiful coloring for 50c. retailing are just in. Their two special numbers of black peau de soie (014 and 016) for $1 and $1.25 retailing are specially good things. There is also a big range of colored taffeta silk, and a good stock of white and cream satins.

The approach of the millinery season renders interesting the immense stock of white, black and cream brussels nets, mechlins, and point d'esprit nets. Black and colored ribbons in all widths from 3 up can be had, and the range of laces is complete, including vals, torchons, black silks, cream silks, also all-over laces in light and heavy makes. A new shipment of veilings is just in, and a complete range of chiffons.

The men's furnishings department have just received a large lot of handkerchief ties with the handkerchief border, blue, green, etc., with new white designs.

They are showing cashmere half-hose at the old prices, which are less than manufacturers' prices for orders placed today. A special line of braces for 25c. retailing can be had now, as well as two specially cheap lines in men's rubber coats. Silk front shirts are having a big sale and a full line is shown.

A few hundred dozen seconds in black cashmere half-hose have just been secured which can be profitably retailed at 20c. A line of seconds in linen handkerchiefs (to retail two for 25c.) is being jobbed.

FRANKENTHAL BROS., NEW YORK.
(Geisha Waists.)

About 50 different styles of belt buckles are shown for this season, including jet, steel, enamel and plain gilt. Jet belts to retail from 35 to 75c. are being sold, and there is a large range of pearl mantle buckles, smoked and white, which are good Spring property.

The print trade this season has excelled former years. There are some stylish new patterns in cashmere effects, large checks, a large striped-check which has been a successful seller, and the new purple blue ground with a lover's knot pattern. Some new patterns, not yet shown, are expected in shortly.

This firm draw attention to their large and well-assorted stock of household linens from the most reliable makers. Many of these lines are offered at old values, but, as the linen market is at present developing a strong upward tendency, the present rate of prices can only hold on present stock. A word to the wise is sufficient.

The dress goods department is experiencing the busiest season known for years, the demand extending over a large variety of styles. High-class black goods are in favor with shrewd buyers, and high-class fancies always attract the attention of those who have an exclusive trade to cater for. There are many lines of black goods which were contracted for before recent advances.

In the cotton and wash goods department, new goods are being received and shipped daily. Printed muslins, dimities and orgrandies, printed spot and embroidered muslins, silk weft zephyrs, mercerized printed lawns, sateens and foulards, mercerized plain sateens and italians are among the many lines already added to this department. Every pattern is new this season. White goods are in such variety that space will not allow a detailed description. Imported zephyrs in variety, in colors which can be depended upon.

The smallwares of Kirby, Beard & Co. are the best known for quality and moderate price. Silks, velveteens and velvets are shown in variety. Ferguson's percalines and linings are sure to be wanted for Spring trade. They are the best.

In the kid glove department, suede gloves are shown as leaders for the Spring trade. The latest styles and shades are here in a variety of prices. White kid gloves are still in demand for good class trade, and are sure to be scarce in desirable lines before the season is far gone. Buyers should see that they have enough to supply a fair demand. Latest advices from Europe indicate strong advances in the near future, in addition to those already put in effect.

BRAMPTON FIRMS DOING WELL.

Though near Toronto, the Brampton merchants are not much concerned about city departmentals. The Brampton firms carry fine stocks, and hold the local trade well.

Geo. R. Anderson & Bros. have just finished stock-taking. They have, during the past year, done a larger volume of business with more satisfactory profits than ever.

T. H. Shields & Co. have just doubled the size of their store by securing the adjoining store on the east side. To this large store has been removed the ready-made clothing and men's furnishings department. To this department has been added that of ordered clothing. Shields & Co. have been doing an ever increasing business since first opening in Brampton, and last year proved more successful than ever.

A QUESTION OF IMPORTANCE.

ADVANTAGES TO BE DERIVED FROM CONFIDENCE BETWEEN RETAIL AND WHOLESALE MERCHANTS.

UNLESS confidence exists, harmonious business relations cannot follow. This may be set down as an established fact, and one that no one entrusted with the dispensing of credits will attempt to gainsay. Unfortunately, however, sometimes on account of delicacy on the part of the wholesaler in asking for it, sometimes on account of unwillingness on the part of the retailer to extend it, this confidence does not exist, and, in consequence, misunderstandings arise and losses ensue that might otherwise have been avoided.

No reasonable merchant, no one who professes to conduct his business upon business principles should refuse to give a statement of his financial position, should any occasion arise that may call for such a request from those who are supplying him. A merchant who refuses to give a statement must do so for one of two reasons—firstly, because he is really absolutely independent, or, secondly, because he is not, but would like to appear so. Any debtor who asks a favor in the way of a renewal should not object to give his full confidence when it is asked for. He should rather be willing to make the fact of his asking a renewal the occasion to give it without solicitation. Unfortunately, in many instances this is not the case, but, on the contrary, confidence is refused, and very often brusquely, even in instances where repeated renewals have been given freely and without inquiry. Merchants do not seem to look upon merchandise purchased from the wholesaler as so much cash advanced, but as something of lesser value, and yet, if appealed to by their own customers for credit or an extension of an account already overdue, they would, if business men, carefully investigate before acquiescing.

A merchant who knows he is in a good position financially, and has always met his bills promptly, may, perhaps, feel hurt at inquiry being made as to his standing. Occasion may, however, call for this by the fact that his account, which has never exceeded, say, $1,500, has recently increased to $3,000, or because, owing to peculiar circumstances, he has asked for regular credit terms, whereas in the past he has always taken his discount. In such cases, or others of a similar nature, confidence when asked for should be given and given freely, so that a basis of understanding may be reached whereby further accommodation, if desired, may be extended without doubt or anxiety on the part of the wholesale merchant.

All transactions in business should be straight and above board. No merchant should act or write in such a way as would intimate he has anything to conceal, much less should he assume an independent air when favors he may have received at the hands of his suppliers have perhaps been the means of carrying him over rough places financially. A retailer approaching a wholesale house for credit, or asking for renewals, should assume the same attitude as towards a bank from which he is borrowing money. He should be prepared to show his hand and say, "Here is the security I have to offer for the favor I am asking." Unless this is done, confidence cannot exist, and without confidence there can be no feeling of security. The wholesale houses in Canada are most liberal in all dealings with their customers. Let that liberality and leniency be rewarded by the utmost frankness in all dealings, by the interchange of confidences and by the evident desire to give rather than withhold any reasonable information that may be required. This system properly conceived and faithfully carried out would in a very short time exercise the most wholesome influence upon the wholesale trade and make many transactions a pleasure that must otherwise be classified under a different heading.

J. FRASER MACDONALD.

UNSHRINKABLE UNDERWEAR.

The makers of the 'Wolsey' unshrinkable underwear have had letters and correspondence from all parts declaring that these shirts are what they purport to be, i.e., goods that will not shrink under any circumstances whatsoever. All kinds of goods are constantly advertised as being unshrinkable, and are found wanting upon trial. The company are willing to make any guarantee that these shirts will stand anything—except the use of pernicious chemical stuffs. Even soda has been tried, and the goods have come out uninjured. This is not due to any one particular shirt. Any shirt which is all wool, under the same process, will stand equally well. The underclothes are all stamped with the trade mark. The proprietors state that they have been offered large sums by English houses for the privilege of selling their goods with the mark removed; but they have refused. They have been selling these goods for 15 months in the Old Country, and none have been returned. The wool retains its elasticity under all conditions. Most of the leading houses here are handling the goods, and they have already been on sale for about one year. The invariable report has been that after boiling, and other test treatment, the garments have come out exactly the same size as before. Another thing is that this process does not destroy the wool, nor make it in the least injurious to the most sensitive skin.

PREPARING FOR SPRING.

Boulter & Stewart have now ready for the coming openings, all the latest novelties from Paris and New York in tailor-made suits. The most popular jacket this season will be the Bolero or Eaton, worn pointed in front. Also many are made with aplica of velvet and fancy braided or worked with taffeta.

There is steady demand for homespuns, and same will be largely worn in the light and dark greys. Plaids for separate skirts are still in demand, and will be good sellers with the ever-popular shirt waist.

Silk blouses are to be the fashion for early Spring, and the new designs are very pretty, all being trimmed with lace and fancy aplica. For later wear the white pique skirt and blouse will be the leader. The pique collar on blouses has been pronounced a success and looks specially well worn with pique skirt.

Boulter & Stewart are making great efforts to fill orders promptly for these goods and state they are sold up until April. Their showrooms are fitted up with the idea of comfort for their patrons, and you can see a large assortment in a few minutes. A call will repay you.

The Canadian Rubber Co. and The Toronto Gutta Percha and Rubber Co. have notified the trade that, beginning February 1, a 5 per cent. advance will take place in the prices of rubber belting, packing, hose and mechanical rubber goods, owing to the advanced prices paid for crude rubber, cotton fabrics and other ingredients.

TORONTO and MONTREAL.

THE MONTREAL COTTON CO., of Valleyfield, is always to the fore in the manufacture of goods to suit the changing demands of the trade. During the last few seasons dress fashions have varied with great rapidity, and the consequent introduction of new linings, or old ones under new names, has made it difficult to keep pace with the requirements of the dressmaking trade generally. That the M. C. C. should have accomplished this successfully is due largely to the extreme watchfulness of their selling agents, Messrs. Stevenson, Blackader & Co, and their readiness to acknowledge the advantages of any novelty introduced, whether English or foreign, and to adopt it immediately, so that it can be placed before the trade in time to head off importation. The very large additions to their works, which are now about complete, ought to enable them to make prompt deliveries, but we unhesitatingly advise merchants to

Clothing and Woollen Trade.

THE CANADIAN TRADE.

CANADIAN woollen buyers have not yet returned from the other side, but their reports to importing firms here are that the market continues firm. As to conditions here, the ordered tailoring trade has been good, as well as ready-made clothing. In the case of sales of cloths to merchant tailors, there has been much activity in orders for worsteds, owing to the heavy advances in price. It is believed that cheap worsteds will give way this Summer to serge suits, which is a sightly cloth and always more or less popular.

The Crown Clothing Co., Limited, Toronto, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $40,000.

Stanger, of Fredericton, has a fine merchant tailoring establishment. The store has recently been completely renovated. Hardwood floors have been laid and the walls have been covered with narrow, beaded sheathing, and painted a glistening white. In keeping with modernized tailoring establishments, Mr. Stanger has discarded the old-fashioned counters, and now displays his fine and varied stock of cloths upon tables. The main store is separated from the cutting department by an archway hung with rich portieres, the business office being in the front store and separated from it by a handsome balustrade.

The Stratford Clothing Co., which it was announced would move to Toronto, have decided to remain in Stratford.

Oak Hall, of Toronto, had a patriotic window that was almost an obstruction to travel at Yonge and Adelaide streets, so great were the crowds that surrounded it. Oom Paul was the central figure. He sat, life-sized, smoking a long pipe over a keg of gunpowder. A real Maxim gun was aimed at his head. The Boer flag lay at his feet, and converging on him were mounted and unmounted soldiers in uniforms similar to those made by Oak Hall for the second contingent. A large card announced that subscriptions received at the store for the Patriotic Fund will be acknowledged. The Sanford Co. have been turning out a great many uniforms for the Canadians ordered south, and have been doing it with great speed as well as thoroughness.

An English firm of manufacturing clothiers have been showing some samples which give an idea of what English styles are. A natty line is in the American blouse suits, better known, perhaps, as the Boston suits. This has a broad box pleat down the centre, embroidered in a neat fashion. There appears to be anticipated a large demand for the three garment suits for youngsters. These, with a fancy silk spotted or dashed vest, are to be seen in all the houses in profusion. A novel line in this particular style has a broad collar, fastened to the waistcoat, with a small embroidered pattern at each corner; but the novelty lies in the foreparts. These are very tastefully embroidered, and present a unique appearance. No great contrasts are shown in the colors of the embroidery and the cloth, as this would not at all enhance the novelty, but all are subdued in hue, and are certainly worth a more than casual inspection from the buyer. This firm are also showing a smart line of juveniles in fancy cheviots, of what is known as the herringbone pattern.

Mr. Justice Davidson rendered judgment at Montreal last month in the suit of Vineberg & Co., wholesale clothiers, against The Dominion Woollen Mills Company, dismissing the plaintiff's action with costs.

The action was for $10,962.50 for damages alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff, through failure of the company to fill certain orders given in January, 1897, for future delivery, of about 40,000 yards of frieze. Delivery was to be made by June, and terms of payment—spot cash on delivery.

The defendants pleaded in effect that after beginning to manufacture for plaintiff, the goods in question, the plaintiff represented that they would not be able to take and pay for in cash the quantity of goods mentioned in the orders, and that the orders were cancelled and arrangements made by which smaller quantities of goods were to be manufactured and delivered to plaintiff as required.

That the company cancelled the original orders in the books and manufactured and delivered to plaintiff, certain quantities of goods, which the plaintiff failed to pay for in cash, as delivered, and that plaintiff made no provision for the sum of $25,000 required to pay for the goods on June 1, and did not take any steps to put the company in default to make any delivery.

That the capacity of the company's mill was sufficient to manufacture the quantity of goods for which they had orders.

The judgment upheld the pretensions of the company upon all the points raised by them and dismissed the action with costs.

Says London Fashion, discoursing upon men's ordered clothing: "The 'Raglan' is to-day being made in almost every conceivable cloth and shade. The coat itself seems to be as popular as ever, and my advice to those about to order a new 'Raglan' is not 'don't.' Nor is it, at the same time,

 RIGAULT ROAD, FULHAM, S. W., 20th Dec., 1898.

DEAR SIRS,

We have washed one of the vests called "Wolsey," whilst the other was kept to prove the shrinkage of the washed article. We have washed and rewashed the article many times, and there is no appreciable difference in the size when compared with the unwashed article. It was put into the boiling water, and into water which contained soda, and in every way treated very badly, but it has now come out, after all these trials, exactly the same size as that which has never been in water.

Yours truly, a particularly pressing 'do,' for I have an idea that the overcoat for 1900 will be more of the Chesterfield build, with 'Raglan' pockets, certainly, but with a velvet collar, and a less cape like hang from the shoulder. The ordinary 'Raglan,' however, in drab or light grey herringbone for traveling or morning wear, and in dark grey for evening dress (satin-lined in this case), wants a lot of beating as a coat to possess among others. Made of a waterproof material, it is an ideal coat for wet weather. Indeed, the 'Raglan' was originally a waterproof overcoat, and had its birth, I think, at the establishment of a Regent street tailor, who gave it a long name I never can remember. So many tailors claim to have started the 'Raglan' that I refrain, for the sake of peace, from mentioning the name of the Regent street firm in question. The 'Raglan,' if not too long, and if made liberally and with a long slit up the centre of the back, is by no means a bad coat for riding in. It is best, though (particularly for your horse), when riding in wet weather, to have a real riding rain-coat, which is full enough in front and behind to act as a tolerably competent covering for the 'noble animal.'"

"A nice-looking overcoat for frock coat and evening dress wear is a dark grey (almost black) tweed, made single breasted, with plain or turned up cuffs, silk facings, and an all through black satin lining. This coat should reach down a little below the knee, so that it may cover the bottom edge of the frock coat. There is a mistaken tendency to make the coat too short, with the result that it is rendered useless for frock coat wear. The pockets are either of the usual kind, or, at the opening, are of the 'Raglan' type, but these are of the plainest make, and have none of that through stitching which, in the 'Raglan,' gives outside indication of the capacity of the pockets. The coat has neither side-slits nor back-slit; the seams are only very narrowly overlapped, while the hang, both in front and behind, is easy without being positively full. When the material is of a much lighter grey, there should be no silk facings. Silk facings to light color clothes are now almost as old fashioned as blue frock coats. The general design of the garment does not adapt itself to heavy material."

The same authority declares regarding costumes for golf: "There is no form of sport on the face of the earth less particular about a uniformity of dress than the sport of golf. It doesn't seem to mind in the least bit what its players wear, especially in the matter of leg-gear. Woollen stockings, folded over box cloth continuations (buttons right to the front, the same as on riding breeches), and brown or black boots or shoes—such, perhaps, is the most popular nether attire of the golfer. And there is variety of material even in such a small matter (small, that is from the point of visibility), as the continuation to the breeches. One kind is of box cloth, another is of the same material as that of which the breeches are made, a third is of melton, and a fourth is of buckskin—a very uncommon kind, this, by reason of its cost. Box cloth always looks well on account of its neatness and its sporting "tone," but it should not be attached to breeches of a dark shade, or it will give an odd and patchy appearance to the leg. In spite, however, of the general appropriateness of box cloth for this particular use, I think it will be pretty extensively admitted that most golfers prefer to have the continuations below the knee made of the same material as the breeches.

UNION OF ONTARIO WOOLLEN MILLS.

The union of certain Ontario woollen mills under one management has, after protracted negotiation, gone through at last, and the new company is applying for incorporation as the Canada Woollen Mills, Limited. The new concern includes five mills, those of A. W. Brodie, Hespeler, the Waterloo Woollen Mills, the Maple Leaf Woollen Mills, the Lambton Woollen Mills, and the Hawthorne Woollen Mills. The capital stock is $2,000,000, of which $800,000 is subscribed. No stock will be offered to the public, it all having been subscribed by the mill owners and by private subscription. The president of the new company will be Mr. W. R. Brock, Toronto; the vice-president, Mr. A. W. Brodie, Hespeler; while Mr. John M. Morley will superintend the management of the mills. The selling agents of the united company will be Millichamp, Coyle & Co., Toronto. The provisional directors will be Messrs. Brock, Brodie, as already mentioned, and Mr. G. T. Benson, Montreal; John M. Morley, Waterloo; Timothy Eaton, Toronto; and R. Millichamp, Toronto.

NEW RACK FOR STORES.

A store fixture of utility has been patented in Canada of considerable interest to dry goods stores. It is called Kirk's patent hat and cap rack, but is equally adapted to the display of such lines as ties, scarves, laces, furs and fancy goods. The rack is suspended from the ceiling and can be made any size. It is not expensive. Particulars can be had of the patentee, Mr. E. J. Kirk, Box P., Bracebridge, Ont., as a circular, illustrated and with full details, has been issued.

DRESS GOODS MATERIALS.

An European manufacturer, writing to a Canadian customer about fine lines, said that considerable advance would yet take place before the price of fine merino wools is met. The wool sales now on have shown a slight decrease in merinos (with crossbreds firm) but not enough to satisfy makers of fine cloths.

One of the leading Canadian cotton companies has notified the trade that in future the freight charges on goods for Fall, 1900, would be paid by purchasers instead of mills as in the past.

Mr. A. W. Cochrane, of Montreal, sailed for Europe on January 4. He will visit London, Manchester and Paris, in the interest of The Colonial Bleaching and Printing Co., Limited., who have recently erected very extensive works at St. Henri. He will be absent about six weeks.

Messrs. Brown, Graham & Co., 37 Glassford street, Glasgow, are supplying to the wholesale trade "The Absent-Minded Beggar" handkerchief. Imprinted on it is a map of South Africa and portraits of Her Majesty the Queen, and Lord Roberts, also, by permission, the poem, with music. One penny per dozen on what they sell goes to the Kipling Fund for soldiers' wives and families.

Adolph Rosenthal & Co., manufacturers and merchants, London, England, have issued illustrated sheets of their latest productions in corsets, ladies' skirts and blouses. Specimen circulars are also enclosed, and, in order to bring any selected numbers before the trade, they are prepared to supply merchants with such circulars, illustrating and describing each individual corset, skirt, or blouse, at a nominal price of 1s. 6d. per 1,000 for paper, quality No. 1., and 2s. per 1,000 for paper, quality No. 2., the merchant's own name and selling price to be printed on them as desired.

REPORT OF A NEW COTTON MILL.

PROPOSED ERECTION AT THREE RIVERS OF AN IMMENSE MILL.—POWER TO COME FROM SHAWINIGAN FALL.—WHITE AND GREY COTTONS FOR EXPORT.

THE trade will be prepared to hear, at an early date, some news that may materially change the situation in the Canadian cotton industry. Negotiations are, at the moment, taking place with a view to the establishment of the largest cotton mill in Canada, or, it is said, in the world. When it is stated that negotiations are under way, it will be understood that there is no reference whatever to the indefinite rumors that have been circulating for the last few months. THE DRY GOODS REVIEW is quite aware that such rumors have been promulgated for some time past, and have come to nothing; but, while the cotton men in general have professed to sneer at the idea of anyone in his senses investing capital in such a thing as cotton, THE DRY GOODS REVIEW is inclined to put credence in some information of which it has become possessed.

It has long been known that at Shawinigan Falls there was a power almost illimitable—greater than that of Niagara, because more concentrated. There are thousands upon thousands of horse-power ready for utilization. Over this whole St. Maurice Valley the Shawinigan Water and Power Co. have now control. It has been stated on good authority that a tremendous amount of water-power has already been bargained for in the interests of the proposed cotton company. While this is denied at headquarters, it is not denied that the deal is pending, and as good as closed. Indeed, the progress of affairs is so far advanced that it was intended to apply for a charter at the meeting of the Legislature. The money behind the new concern is not only Quebec capital, but large stock has been taken by leading men in Ontario and the New England States. The names of such men as Senator Cox and Wm. Mackenzie, of Toronto, and Senator Forget, of Montreal, are mentioned as a guarantee of the good standing of the undertaking.

The new mill is to be built at Three Rivers, which is only 18 miles from the source of power, and the goods will be manufactured within a few feet of the St. Lawrence and on the railway, so that the shipping and importing facilities will be unsurpassed. The mill, as already remarked, will be the largest on record, and all the goods will be manufactured under one roof, under the direction of one manager, and worked by one plant. This will effect an enormous saving in expense. The company will operate probably in a day of two shifts of 10 hours each, consuming about 2,000 horse power daily, and it is calculated that the difference in cost between the power obtained here and the same amount generated elsewhere would average $75,000 per year, or 7½ per cent. on $1,000,000. This item alone would make the case worthy of consideration, and, when added to the economy of having everything concentrated in the one place, it may easily be seen what the advantages are. But this is not all. The two things that cost in the manufacture of cotton are raw material and labor. Now, raw material is imported into this part of the country just as cheaply as into the New England States, at least the difference is not appreciable. Nextly, it is from this very district that the large New England cotton mills get their hands. It has been made, in fact, the subject of comment on the other side of the water that French-Canadians were being employed in American mills because they worked cheaper. Evidently then in these two principal points success would be assured. The most modern equipment in the way of superior machinery will be acquired. The cotton mills are constantly finding that their machinery is getting out of date, and there is a good deal of the out-of-date style in operation at present. The mill will manufacture all lines of cotton goods, while probably making a specialty of whites and greys. In the meantime the intention is to make chiefly for export.

As regards the possibilities of a Canadian export trade, the bounds are so limitless that they cannot well be calculated. The mills in Canada have generally been so busy making for domestic use, that little attention has been paid to the outside. The only mill that has really gone in for it to any extent is the Montmorency, now connected with The Dominion Cotton Co. They have for years past manufactured largely for the China trade. This trade is a line of its own, and the goods have to be of a certain peculiar stamp. Throughout China cotton is used much like coin, as currency, and if a bale of cotton is overweight, or in any other way unsuitable, it is thrown aside as useless. The bales are made up of 20 pieces, and each piece must be exactly 40 yards long and a yard wide. From this the great care necessary in the manufacture will be evident. The Montmorency mills have been able to satisfy all these conditions because of their superior heavy machinery presses. The difference between their cotton and that which comes from England is apparent to the most untrained eye. Every bale stands perfectly clear cut and clean, instead of having ragged and dirty edges which make it impossible to pile regularly. Our Canadian cotton also has less clay in its make up than the English, and is consequently finer and softer and lighter. In China alone there is room probably for all the cotton we could manufacture, without making any appreciable difference to that country—they use it so constantly, and for such various purposes. Then, there is the trade of India to be considered, and even in South Africa. Who can tell what the future has in store in the matter of South-African trade, when the now clouded horizon there has cleared? The question of transportation is one which was long ago decided. With a highway such as the C.P.R. and Pacific steamers, there is every advantage on the side of Canadian industry.

SOMETHING ABOUT RIBBONS.

Brophy, Cains & Co. say: "The narrow satin ribbons are still used in various designs on lace overdresses. Some whole costumes are seen entirely covered with these ribbons, gathered prettily in various designs, the favorite colors being cream and black.

"A glance at the new styles in millinery and costumes for the Spring and Summer of the new year show a decided increase in the use of ribbons, and it is quite noticeable that ladies' neckwear calls for even a larger use of ribbons than previous seasons.

"Velvet ribbons, however, still hold a very prominent place, and will do so throughout the year. There is a possibility about velvet ribbons which no other material can furnish, and effects in dress trimming can be produced in great variety and pleasing contrasts by their use.

"Fancy ribbons in the different plaids are used in decorating many of the fad cushions of the day.

"Double satin ribbons still hold a good position, as they are used for all kinds of fancy work, and can be found in all the latest shades.

"The Spring indications are that sash ribbons will be more in favor.

"Liberty taffeta satin ribbons are still having a good run, and are seen in every well-selected stock.

"We find all shades of blue are still much in demand."

Men's Furnishings.

THERE is a question that is constantly worrying the public, and the trade in particular; and that is the question of the laundering. The vexatious results of the present system are pressing men to seek for some kind of remedy. There is no doubt that as things now are, the certainty that fine goods will be destroyed, if sent to the average small laundry, keeps many people from the purchase of high class ware. It becomes too costly altogether to keep buying expensive shirts and collars, which, on being returned from their first laundering, are in a state unfit for wear, both because of insufficient cleaning, and of the total destruction which chemical stuffs which may be used in the process invariably produce. The articles are returned crumpled and besmirched, with a fluffy surface which will rub off just like blotting paper. The laundries are not always to blame. Many gentlemen are very careless in the care of their wardrobe, and, unless their clothing is looked after for them by a housekeeper, or someone else, the washing is left to the last minute. Then, suddenly, when unsoiled linen becomes a scarce commodity, the laundry is telephoned, and the things are ordered back for, probably, the next day. Now, it is quite evident that perfection, or even moderate satisfaction, is not to be expected under such conditions. Of course, the quicker the washing has to be done, the more the injurious chemicals have to be used; and the result, as already stated, is that handkerchiefs come back to the owner worked with all manner of curious embroidery, for which he did not pay; and the shirts, either minus tails altogether, or with a netted work effect for which he never bargained. Many people find that the best satisfaction is to be got by sending to a Chinaman, who will not spoil the clothes, though he does not put quite such a fine bluish-white color on the linens.

Numerous remedies have been suggested, especially in connection with the men's furnishing trade. For in the long run, it is the haberdasher who suffers from the bad conditions in this respect. It has been suggested that the retailers should combine to build their own laundry. This is a project which seems neither to be feasible nor desirable. There are many obstacles in the way to success of such a scheme. In the first place, the merchants who went in for the scheme would have to support it, and send their goods there to be laundered whether it was the best place or not. Someone would have to be selected to run the laundry; and he might be satisfactory or he might not. But in either case there would be no guarantee that the work done would be any better than that of the ordinary custom laundry. Go into some of the leading men's furnishing stores in New York, and you will see some of the most unconscionably ugly shirts exposed for sale. You would wonder how on earth it came about that anyone should be willing to buy such an article. It simply means that the goods have been badly washed and laundered. It is quite true that if a merchant thoroughly understood both the shirt business and the laundry business for retail customers he could make a good thing out of the combination under his own roof. There are, however, few dealers who would care to attempt such a scheme.

The sale, say, of a shirt depends more on the way it is done up than on anything else. It depends far more on this than on the quality of the shirt. How many men who come into your store to purchase this article of apparel have the very faintest conception of the difference between a good shirt and a moderately good one? Not one in ten has any more idea than he has of the respective merits of the various pictures which he has just been criticizing at the art gallery. He takes the shirt up, and looks at it in a knowing way, and then turns it over and looks at the back, and what does he see? practically nothing. The chances are that there may be one of slightly better quality than the other. But the one chosen will invariably be the one which is neatest and cleanest and best gotten up by the laundry. The fact is that most of the complaints lodged with the merchants about shirts which have given out after a couple of washings are made in the wrong quarter. They should be made at the custom laundry in some instances, and in others it is the person's own fault.

There is no doubt at all that better satisfaction can be got by buying unlaundered shirts, than the other way. The factories sell a great many of these to dry goods stores throughout the country. When a woman comes into your store, she wants to turn everything inside out, and look at it in every conceivable position; and it is of great value to a merchant to be able to allow her to do this. Nothing prevents this in the buying of unlaundered wear; and, besides, the quality of the goods may thus be far more easily ascertained.

But people do want to buy made up shirts, as well as collars and cuffs; and the best satisfaction is apt to be had where the laundering is done at the factory. There is a good reason for this. Firstly, uniformity is guaranteed, as all goods must be turned out exactly the same. Doubtless, mishaps will occur anywhere, but that does not seriously affect the matter. Secondly, work in the factories is piece work, and the employes know that there is no use in turning out poor work or it will be returned to them, and they will not be paid for it. Thus it stands to their advantage to see that the work is up to the mark in every particular. In the factories there are experienced hands and good machinery, and there is not the same necessity for rush, as in the custom laundry. Again, it is, on the face of it, their business to see that goods are in prime condition before they are exposed for sale; so that, taking everything into consideration, the factories seem likely to maintain their present arrangements with regard to the laundering of linen goods.

The Rage in Shirts.

The things that merchants will buy and that people in general will wear, if only they are fashionable and the rage, are enough to break a man's heart. Some of the shirt patterns which have had and are having the most tremendous sales are sights for sore eyes. They look as if they had been besmeared with blotches of blue, black and red inks, and then left out in the weather during a season of rain for a week or so. Others, which cannot be scorned for an indistinct effect, look as though they had formed the ground for the trial impression of many and various trade marks, crests and coats-of-arms. It is simply shocking, and those who wear such things ought to be arrested for noisy behavior. Just now the fancy runs in the most extreme patterns, with pink, blue and heliotrope ground upon which are striking figures. There is also quite a demand for shirts in white ground with figures. The fact is that very often the numbers which the traveler is least sure about are those which take best. As long as the change is not too awfully great from the previous fashion people would be quite willing to wear anything.

Special Easter Trade in Neckwear.

One of the accompanying circumstances of the prevailing good times is a certain systematizing of many lines of business. The different departments are spreading out and becoming more and more separate and distinct; and with this change comes others not at first so apparent.

It has been customary heretofore to have, as it were, two large divisions of the trading year, namely, the Spring and the Fall, with an extra splutter at Christmas time. In the case of neckwear, for instance, with which we are dealing just now, merchants have been accustomed to look for their new samples of Easter goods very early in the year. All this is rapidly being changed. A movement is on foot to divide the year into four instead of two. A special Easter trade is to be established, which, it is expected, will be on a par with the Christmas trade. This year such a scheme is liable to work better than usual, because Easter comes so late that the seasons will be quite proportionate. Thus there will be the Christmas trade, the Easter trade, and the Summer and Fall trades, all distinct, and each with its own peculiar features.

In this connection it may be mentioned that many of the larger houses are refusing to show Easter samples earlier than March; and merchants are warned that it is impossible to show patterns before the New York ones are received. Travelers are now in the Old Country selecting. Another announcement along the same line is that none of the Summer wear in the shape of wash ties and handkerchief scarves will be shown until after the Easter trade is over. Tooke Bros., Montreal, are one of those firms which are starting this idea, and it seems a good one. It will stimulate trade, and cut off some of the fag ends which overlap from one season to another.

THE DRY GOODS REVIEW heartily approves of this action, as it will tend to increase Spring business, and help the merchant.

Store Space. A feature of retail furnishing in the cities that is attracting attention is indoor displaying of goods so as to tempt customers to extend their purchases. The time is not far past when a customer entering a furnishing store or the furnishings department of a general store would have to ask for neckties, braces, socks and many other lines if he wanted to see them. The adoption of the glass case, which answers the purpose of counter as well as showcase started the movement towards showing these goods as prominently as possible. It has been followed in many stores by glass wall-cases, built specially to display neckwear, footwear, or men's wear generally. Counter display racks have been introduced, and are made such good use of that many sales may be accredited to them. The result is that a person going into a city furnishing store to buy a collar would likely see umbrellas in a rack and waterproofs on a form near the doorway, shirts, underwear, etc., on tables (which, by the way, are high as counters generally are), while braces, handkerchiefs, neckwear, footwear, etc., are before his eyes as he is waiting for service or for his change. Possibly, also, there may be a tray or two containing perfumes, collar buttons, cuff links, and other small articles he is in the habit of buying. If the clerk is shrewd, he may be persuaded to add to his purchases one or two articles he had not intended to procure.

NEW YORK MEN'S DRESS.

WHAT FASHION DICTATES AT PRESENT.

THE DINNER COAT.

A New York fashion authority has lately delivered himself of the following judgments as regards men's dress: what they should wear according to the present mode, in what details they are apt to go wrong, and how to be dressed according to fashion without going to the extreme.

First, as to when and where the short evening coat, known as a Tuxedo and under various other names, should appropriately be worn. The abuse of that justly popular and convenient garment threatens to become so widespread that it is a pleasure to define the limits of its usefulness. Now it is sadly overworked, even by persons who pretend to be informed about such matters. The short dinner jacket is an extremely informal garment, intended primarily for the man who dresses every evening at dinner to wear in the bosom of his family. It is not looked upon as appropriate even at informal dinners to which two or three persons are invited. It is generally said that the presence of women makes the short jacket inappropriate, although that cannot apply to the women of one's family. At the opera a dinner coat is inadmissible, under all circumstances, unless possibly it be at a Sunday night concert when two men go together. It is no more appropriate for the theatre when women are to be of the party. Two men dining alone and going afterward to the theatre might be permitted to wear a short coat; if they went with women there would be no excuse for their doing so. Of course, a dinner coat is preposterously inappropriate at any dancing function, unless it be at a Summer hotel, where flannels might not be regarded as out of place.

Sometimes men have been known to show themselves in public wearing a dinner coat, with a white waistcoat and a black necktie. Such a combination is incongruous enough to discourage any person interested in good dressing. The black tie is all right. No other tie should be worn with a dinner coat; but the waistcoat should be black too; a white waistcoat and a white necktie should always be kept separate from a dinner coat. Nowadays, the haberdashers are making, for wear with the dinner coat, dull black silk neckties, decorated with small designs in the same colored silk. These have won some admirers, but it is still the broad, small, black satin necktie that appeals most to well dressed men. For full evening dress, the white tie, which is still broad and somewhat narrower in the middle than at the ends, is the only one admissible.

THE WHITE WAISTCOAT.

Nowadays, the double-breasted white waistcoat is so customary with evening dress as to be an almost indispensable part of it.

This form of white waistcoat, with its two rows of buttons, has passed beyond any suspicions of being a new style, and, after having been worn at all times and in all places, it takes its place as a permanent style. Not only are the white waistcoats usually double-breasted; so are the brown and colored extra waistcoats, made for ordinary wear.

AS TO HATS.

With a dinner coat, the man who knows what is appropriate wears a derby hat. With evening dress, the opera hat of ribbed silk is a necessary accompaniment. Men who wear ordinary silk hats with evening dress are not necessarily out of style, but they are not quite so much in the style as they might be. The silk hat of the year that comes from England has less of a curve than usual. Derby hats are smaller, with narrower brims, and a general tendency to inconspicuousness.

EVENING SHOES.

The average New Yorker who goes to the opera or the theatre in evening dress, could wear loud buttoned patent leathers, or with moderately thick soles, and be in the style. If he were a little more particular, he would wear what are commonly called low quarters in patent leather, covering them with goloshes, as any man will have to do who is not equal to the rigors of Winter with only silk socks to protect his ankles. For dinners and dances, New York has almost unanimously adopted the same low quarters, although the low pump is more strictly the mode. This has always been the London fashion, and the men wear pumps there just as regularly as they wear evening dress when they go to a dance, a dinner or the theatre. But the style has never become so popular here, and that is not to be regretted.

Watches are carried in the pocket without a chain, or worn on a black fob; but the latter fashion has very little to recommend it. The man who wears gold studs or white studs in his plain dress shirt can feel that he is just as much in the style as the man who wears pearls, for one is as appropriate as the other. The well fitting dress shirt, with its smooth linen bosom, is in better form and taste than the fluted, embroidered or tucked shirt bosoms, which are from time to time displayed in the shop windows, but are never, by any possible chance, seen on a well-dressed man.

THE GLOVE.

With the dinner coat and its accompanying derby hat, a man may wear any sort of glove that he may use during the day. It is only with full dress that he is expected to wear white gloves. These are made for the street in thick white kid, and can be supplanted in the house by white gloves of the customary weight.

The expensive brown and grey deerskin gloves are still those selected by the man who does not think of price, but of looking the best. Imitations, particularly in the grey, can be had now for a very much smaller sum than the genuine, and are effective enough when one cannot get the others. Ordinary smooth dogskin is still proper, although the man who is more interested in good dressing than in anything else, would never select them.

RELATING TO GOLF.

The brown linen waistcoats introduced two years ago for Winter wear, are as popular as ever, and so are white waistcoats made in the same fashion. These are more likely to be seen than the colored cloth waistcoats which are reserved by carefully dressed men almost exclusively for wear at golf. Even the cloth waistcoats, ornamented with designs or checks in color, are little used, except at golf.

Another change is to be noted in connection with the knickerbockers for golf and tennis. They are not so loose as they formerly were about the knee. The tendency is to make them tighter and to use for the continuation, the same material rather than the whipcord at one time the fashion. It is only the fancy waistcoats that are made double-breasted. Even the waistcoats intended for golf have but the single row of buttons.

A Striking Window.

One of the most novel, and, at the same time striking, window displays I have ever seen was made by a Toronto furnisher the other day. At first glance, persons passing the window were surprised to see a great hole in the centre of it, while on the floor inside a half brick and a large number of small pieces of glass bore out the impression that some window-breaker had been at work. But closer examination showed the brick and the broken glass were merely aids to a clever illusion. Instead of there being a great hole, the appearance of one was made by pasting thin strips of plate glass with rough edges on the window so as to converge to a central point to represent cracks leading to a big break. To give the blue appearance of a crack in plate glass, the paste used to stick the strips to the pane was of a light blue color. But the attention of passers was not allowed to drop at examination of the break. In a position where those looking at the "hole" would be sure to see it, was a large card stating that a "smashing" sale in clothing was going on within. A number of overcoats, suits and smoking jackets were exhibited to show how prices were being severely broken, while qualities were being kept intact.

In Clothing.

In overcoats the much discussed raglan is too well known to need any description. The fashion of wearing very loose coats reappears periodically in men's dress. Sometimes it is a box or driving coat which is copied, just as the old raglan is this year. The man who expects to wear his overcoat for several seasons is advised not to invest in a raglan, but to choose a fashion likely to last longer. All the overcoats are made now in a way that avoids the lines of the figure and allows them to hang loosely from the shoulder. The hard, smooth cloths are very little used except in the middle-weight raglans as a covert coat. The raglans made in dark greys have somewhat supplanted these as coats for light wear, but their pre eminence is likely to be only temporary. Rough goods are used for the Winter weight as well as for the lighter middle season garments, lined and edged to the lapels with silk. The covert coat is intended to be no longer than the ordinary sack coat, which is just now showing a tendency to become a little bit longer than it has been for several seasons past. The short sack coats made by New York tailors during the past few years are often a striking evidence of the fashion in which an English style may be exaggerated beyond all measure. Some of the Fifth Avenue tailors have made for men of mature years short coats that were merely ridiculous to look at. For very young men they have all been made very short, and as young men may be forgiven for falling into excesses, the tailors did not succeed in dressing them quite so inappropriately. With the older men their exaggerations are frequently absurd. In the American-made covert coat the tendency has always been exactly the opposite; light coats made of covert cloth coming down as far as the knees were never heard of outside of this country, and the London tailors make them about the same length as the ordinary sack coat. It is only in that form that they are really smart in appearance and able to fulfil their purpose as a garment for riding or walking.

What Goes in Chicago.

Chicago dealers are already beginning to consider what men's fashions will prevail.

In neckwear, says the writer for The Dry Goods Reporter, there will be a demand for tecks, puffs and bows this Spring. Still these will in no way hurt the sale of the loose shapes, as imperials, Ascots, four in-hands and squares, which are generally preferred by the better class dressers. A very advantageous point in early buying is the opportunity offered to select attractive patterns for window display, a most important feature in the successful selling of neckwear. The demand for white shirts is still on the increase. Soft or comfortable shirts are being asked for in large quantities, and the colored shirt holds its own. As was evidenced last Fall, buyers are asking for better goods.

A Good Furnishing Store.

Attractiveness and practical utility are excellently combined in the new store just opened by T. F. Fleury, tailor and furnisher, Queen street east, Toronto. It was specially designed for this business after models in the fashionable retail districts of New York. The store proper is finished in white and gold, the woodwork being of white, with gold striping. This, with the metallic roofing and the linoleum floor would give an air of tastiness to any store. The windows, which are made a pair of equal size by placing the doorway in the centre of the front, are of plate glass bound together by brass plates. Glass counter cases run the full length of both sides of the store, with three openings in each to allow the clerks to pass through, one at either end, and one at the centre, thus making two cases at each side. These cases are about four feet high, three feet of which are devoted to showing goods. On the floor of one of them shirts, collars, cuffs and cravats are shown in combination, also laundered and unlaundered shirts alone. On a glass shelf, half-way from the top of the case, collars and cravats are shown together, the collars resting on the shelf and the cravats hanging down; also cravats and silk handkerchiefs. On the floor of the next case underwear is shown, the texture of the goods, outside and inside, being shown by turning the shirt at the neck or the bottom. On the shelf in this case caps, socks and negligee shirts are on view. Above the counters are a couple of display racks holding neckwear, etc. In the shelving behind these counters furnishings are kept. The shelves on the opposite side of the store contain cloths for men's and ladies' tailoring. In the counter nearest the door on this side men's gloves, neckwear, collar buttons, etc., are shown. In the case farther back a very attractive exhibit of the fine and fancily colored fabrics known as ladies' neckwear is made. In the centre of the back of the store is an archway containing the store desk and a doorway to the cutting and sewing-rooms at the rear of the shop. Mr. Fleury intends to cover the entire back of the store, except this archway, with mirrors, thus adding to the appearance of size as well as the beauty of the store. The method of lighting the store makes it even more attractive at night than in the daytime. At each side of the store and in the archway at the back are rows of 5-candle-power incandescent lights, while in the centre of the ceiling and in each window is a group of four 16-candle-power lights. It is further intended to make archways about one-third from the top of both windows with a row of 5-candle lights in them. Mr. Fleury takes great care with his window dressing. In one window a display of furnishings is made on a modern display rack. In the other, cloths for tailoring are shown, the display of these goods being excellently relieved by putting mufflers, caps, etc., on top of each fabric.

The Collar Trade.

Reports from all points predict a more than usually brisk season for collars. During the Winter months the tendency is, as a rule, towards the wearing of higher collars than in the warm weather. When this is the case there is some difference made in the profits of manufacturers. The same price is paid for the collars, whereas there is a much increased quantity of material consumed. When taken in toto there is a vast difference between the amount of stuff required for making  $2\frac{1}{4}$  and 3 in. collars respectively. For Summer wear there are some novelties which are calculated to satisfy in both ways. There is an especially good demand for the high band turnover. It will sell in all heights,  $1\frac{1}{4}$ ,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  and  $1\frac{3}{4}$  band-. This collar is adapted for wear in warm weather, as it has the advantage of the ordinary turn-down, and at the same time does not make the long-necked man feel uncomfortably elongated. In ladies' collars, the "Hebe" and the "Maxine" are two that promise well. These collars, which retail at 15c, are cut on the same principle as dress stock collars. They are 2 inches in front and  $2\frac{1}{4}$  at the back. The "Hebe" buttons in front, while the "Maxine" has the opening behind.

Spare Time.

An authority has said: "Show me how a young man spends his evenings, and I will tell you what quality of man he will be." The same axiom might be applied to the clerk in relation to the portions of the day in the store when the absence of customers makes it possible to either waste or improve valuable time. Almost in proportion to the use a clerk makes of this "spare" time, he is valuable to himself and his employer. If he spends the time listlessly waiting for the next customer to arrive, or amusing himself or his fellow clerks, his value is reduced to a minimum. But if, on the other hand, these quiet minutes are used for planning and effecting improvements calculated to make the windows, the counters, the shelves and the store generally, more attractive to customers and in studying trade conditions, methods of advertising, qualities and styles of materials, book-keeping, and other essentials to the successful management of a furnishing business, the clerk who so makes the most of his time can depend that the reward will come—if not from his present employer, from some other, for trained, capable clerks are ever in big demand.

"But," you say, "what shall we do? The window is dressed for the week; the goods are in their proper places; the 'boss' looks after the bookkeeping, buying and advertising himself, thus making it unnecessary for us to study that up."

Still, there is something to do in the next half-hour you have free. How about next week's window? Why should you not plan a display that at small cost would set the town talking about your store—or, at least, would be an improvement on the present window? And your counters could be made more attractive. With some ingenuity, a little wire and a few strips of wood you could make hanging display rods which might help sales of gloves to a quite respectable extent. Just take a look around, and see if you cannot plan some improvement indoors.

Now, as regards advertising. While the "boss" may look after it himself, you should learn as much of it as you can now. Advertising is an art that takes years to learn, and the earlier you start the sooner you will be proficient. And, in the meantime, you may strike an idea once in a while that may commend itself to your employer, and he may use it. The same is true of buying. If you are ever to know the furnishing business you must study materials and styles, and learn in what proportions different lines should be bought. As for bookkeeping, if you have no opportunity of doing the practical work, learn the theory, and, sooner or later, it will prove of value. Whatever you do during the hours of your work-day, do something. Don't kill time; don't waste it, for if you waste, you shall want.

Montreal Business Troubles.

Two of the principal men's furnishing houses in Montreal have, within the past few days, made announcements which will be received with very general regret. On Saturday, January 29, formal demand for assignment was made upon the firm of Glover & Brais, the demand being made by Mr. H. L. Smyth, in behalf of Foster & Porter, one of the firm's Old Country creditors. It has been known for some time that difficulties had arisen, and arrangements for a settlement were being made. The offer made by Glover & Brais of 40c. was not satisfactory to the English creditors, and, though it is said that another larger offer was subsequently made, it was not accepted. Mr. Brais went to the Old Country with a view to making satisfactory settlement, but was presumably unable to do so. Affairs are now pending, and it is doubtful how much will be realized from the stock. It is stated that it will shortly be auctioned, but this is not certain. Some of Mr. Brais' friends wish him to bid for it himself, and continue the business.

The other house referred to is that of Cookson, Louson & Co. An extract from a circular prepared in their behalf will explain the situation:

GENTLEMEN,—The above firm finding that through the long illness of Mr. Cookson, on whom the management of the manufacturing department and the general business devolved, and, also, owing to insufficient capital to stand the strain entailed by his absence, decided that they would not be able to continue business. They, therefore, called an informal meeting of their creditors, with a view of taking their advice.

After matters had been fully discussed by a well-attended meeting, it was unanimously resolved that in the best interests of the creditors the business should be wound up with just as little expense as possible, and Mr. John McD. Haines was appointed liquidator.

It had been the intention of Messrs. Cookson, Louson & Co. to go out of business in any event, and they had counted upon being able to pay their creditors 100c. With this idea they sometime since sold to S. Greenshields, Son & Co., their stock of men's furnishings. Recent developments, however, made it seem unlikely that the full amounts could be met, and in a straightforward manner they called a meeting of creditors. Matthews, Towers & Co. have taken the warehouse, and will occupy it in the course of a week or two. There is but one feeling among the trade with regard to this failure; and that is one of genuine sympathy. No one has anything but good to say of the members of the firm, and all express sincere regret. The cause was one which could not possibly have been avoided, and those who know bear record that Mr. Louson was about the hardest worker on the road. If it was not for Mr. Cookson's state of health, they could yet go on and make the business a success. Each of them loses his whole amount of capital, and their honorable action has been appreciated by those with whom they held business relations.

Surplus Stock.

The windows of many of the furnishing stores show that stock-taking is over and that it has been found that there is a surplus of one or more lines. These are being sold now. The method of selling is worth noting. One dealer has a window full of ties with, in a central position, a sign "Any tie in this window for 25c." The majority of the ties are up to date 25c. ties, but many of them are 35c. and 50c. ties, which were in vogue some time ago. The combination is a strong one, for the 25c. ties bear the impress of the latest style, while the air of quality is given to the whole display by the 35c. and 50c. goods. None but the initiated know that the 50c. goods are not "good form" now, and, as the uninitiated form a fair percentage of buyers, such clearing sales as this always prove more or less successful. Sometimes a good run is made by merely dressing the window with a large and attractive range of one line, say gloves, and making a cut of not more than 10 per cent.

The Outlook in Men's Neckties.

As to patterns, bold decided stripes are more in favor than ever, checks are somewhat slower, but are still asked for, but the demand for wild stripes still increases.

In colors, purple is the correct shade, that is, purple combined and toned down with white and black. The great and unforeseen demand for purple-striped goods has cleared the market, and the result is that there is not sufficient supply of purple-striped flowing end ties to fill the demand.

For shapes, flowing ends lead and graduated derbys come second. Striped patterns in these must be cut bias, and the flowing end with a long bias point.

Notes of Current Trade.

Mr. M. Markus, Montreal, informs us that he has just received for the coming Fall and Winter seasons, 1900-1901, his full range of samples in dress goods, mantlings, linings, dress and mantle buttons and trimmings, mufflers, hosiery, gloves, linen goods and other novelties, and that the samples will be shown to the wholesale trade on February 1. There are some striking novelties in the range, and Mr. Markus claims the values are the best ever offered in these lines. He would like the trade to reserve orders till they have seen what he has got to show.

Tooke Bros., Montreal, have just issued their catalogue for 1900. It is full of interest; and anyone who wishes to obtain one may do so by dropping a card to the firm and mentioning that they noticed the statement in THE DRY GOODS REVIEW.

Evans, announcing his safe arrival, and stating that the first orders of his second trip through the country would be sent with the earliest mails. After covering the Australian colonies for the second time, Mr. Evans will return, via Hong Kong, Singapore, and Yokohama, when the dainty neckwear creations of E. & S. Currie will be introduced to the residents of these cities of the Orient.

The extremely unsettled weather during the last few weeks has materially affected the trade, and that at a time of year when trade is never any too brisk.

Since last issue, Tooke Bros. have moved into their new premises at the factory in St. Henri. The occasion was celebrated by a very pleasant gathering of all the employes, where refreshments and general good cheer were the order of the day.

Special sales have been the order of the day ever since the new year, and there have not been many exceptions. Some of the merchants think this way much preferable to that of selling with a discount before Christmas, when the trade is good anyway.

Gault Bros., Limited, are developing in the West. They are erecting a building worth $60,000 in Winnipeg, and have also opened up a large establishment in Vancouver. These are general dry goods houses, and they buy all their goods direct, except those made in their own factory.

The Empire Manufacturing Co are showing some taking novelties for Spring and Summer in the line of shirts. One of these is a combination shirt, that is to say, a shirt with a vest. They also have some fine silk goods, which are imported direct from Japan, and which they are thus able to dispose of at a much lower rate than they otherwise would.

For Summer there is a great demand for all kinds of sporting costumes. There is quite a feeling in favor of a return to flannels, instead of ducks, for tennis trousers, etc. The fact is that when every Tom, Dick and Harry start in wearing duck pants on the street and everywhere else, the "elite" begin to look around for something else, by which they may be distinguished. There is no doubt whatever that ducks are far more serviceable and durable in every way, and there is no trouble in washing them. However, the flannels look exceedingly nice when new, and many people are content with this. Experiments with silk goods have been made, but they are rather too expensive for most, and would be, also, not very suitable for any but the gentlest usage.

A Circular to the Trade.

The following circular was issued the other day by Messrs. Tooke Bros., Limited, Montreal:

MONTREAL, January 31, 1900.

TO THE TRADE.—The object of this circular is to contradict the false statement recently circulated, to the effect that we do not intend continuing the furnishing department of our business. The action in itself (making false representations) is sure to reflect on the individual who has to resort to such method to obtain business.

We are glad to say our furnishing department is increasing in output every year, so much so that only recently we have engaged an additional buyer, Mr. Foster, who is now in Europe looking after our interests.

The neckwear department is under Mr. Edgar's charge, and we never were in a better position to extend both of these departments.

We trust your valued orders, heretofore placed with us for this class of goods, will not only continue, but increase, our aim being to serve you to the best of our ability.

Thanking you for past business favors,
We are, yours very truly,

TOOKE BROS., Limited.

EARLY DELIVERY OF SILKS.

K. ISHIKAWA & CO., Toronto, are making particularly early delivery of the import orders of Japanese silks and matting placed with them for the Spring. The first deliveries were made at the end of January, and the firm are endeavoring to have all of their orders put in the hands of the trade as speedily as possible. They have already received a number of repeat orders for habutai and fancy blouse silks.

The favorite silk for Spring wear is the printed foulard, of which K. Ishikawa & Co. have a large assortment in French and Japanese twills. There is also a big call for corded silks in striped and plaid effects, while checked taffeta in black and white and navy and white are selling well. Some dainty new plaids in Spring colors are now being shown to the trade. Plain habutai in light colors as well as the new shades, magenta, marine blue, purple and cerise, are proving desirable property. K. Ishikawa & Co. have just past at the Customs House all the season's Spring silks, and are now ready for prompt delivery.

NOVELTIES IN TAMS.

There is no dearth of variety, beauty of design, nor deftness of workmanship in the tams which The Bruce Manufacturing Co., Toronto, are offering to the trade for this Summer. A representative of THE REVIEW was shown this firm's stock the other day by Mr. Bruce, who expressed himself as more than satisfied with the way his goods are being taken this season. Among the novelties, the tam, which is shown by the accompanying cut, is a leader, because of its high quality as well as its beauty. It is of the wire crown shape, and of broadcloth material. This shape of hat is in much favor. It is made of duck in cardinal, navy and Dewey blue; of linen or crash with fancy brims and ornamented with silk cord across the top; of pique, with tucked top. Another novelty is a tam for rainy weather, the top of which is of leather, and the under part of velvet, a combination which is as pretty as it is serviceable. This is made in round, square and octagonal shapes. Some dainty soft crown creations are shown in duck and drill. The latter is so constructed that the lining and band can be taken out of the crown, so that it can be laundered. This is known as the washable tam. Some of the prettiest soft-crown duck hats are made in white duck with fancy bands and silken cord over the top, or fancily ornamented with braid and ribbon. Another attractive shape is a soft-crown of pique, turned up on the side with two quills as ornaments.

SILK WAISTS.

Silk waists for afternoon wear will have the vests fastened down the front with jeweled buttons or tiny velvet bows. The range of blouse and waist silks shown by Brophy, Cains & Co. include those of French, English, Japanese and American manufacture. Some very beautiful designs are shown, and checks, plaids, stripes, spots, plain taffetas, tamolines, broches and japs in endless variety.

To the Canadian Merchants:

Recently we opened a branch in Windsor, Ont., and are now able to supply the Canadian Trade with our up-to-date SHOW CASES free of duty. Being large buyers of English Glass, we are in a position to sell cases made of the best British Plate at a very reasonable price. Our cases can be seen in all the principal cities and towns in the United States, which is sufficient evidence of the superiority of our goods.

Some years ago, we placed on the market the Celebrated Silent Salesman Show Cases and they met with phenomenal success. A few months ago, we invented and patented a device for illuminating these superb cases, which adds fully 100 per cent. to their selling power, while the additional cost is nominal. The electric lamps are concealed in the top moulding, and the light, by means of a reflector, is thrown on the contents of the case, which makes selling easy.

When ordering the illuminated case, please state the voltage of your lighting plant to avoid delay in filling your order. Further particulars will be furnished on application.

LININGS AND PRINTS.

THE W. R. Brock Co., Limited, Toronto, have paid particular attention to this branch, as being always a valuable adjunct to any retail man's business. Linettes, still in demand, are shown in five different qualities in the full range of shades. Percalines are selling far more freely than for many seasons back, being soft and suitable for the new style of skirts, and of these they show four qualities in all the styles and shades and a large range of high colors. Surah waist linings are crowding all other makes out of the market, being light, soft and unstretchable, thus an ideal waist lining. They can offer six different qualities to choose from. They also carry a full range of jeans and twilled waist linings, twilled silesia, mercerized linings, fancy striped linettes, opalescent, silkline, moire pongees, spun glass, etc. Many merchants can spend a profitable half hour in looking over this department as one of the strongest features. It is reported that the best results are being obtained by the domestic goods, as Canadian manufacturers pay particular attention to this class of goods.

The same firm report their print business far in excess of anything in the history of the house, and this is attributed largely to the excellent values and special finishes they have secured exclusively for themselves. Among one of the best is a foulard print, mercerized finish, which can retail at 12½c., and has taken the trade by storm, many customers buying a full range. Another specialty is 3H heavy Canadian cloth, in which they claim to show the largest range in Canada. Over two-thirds of the patterns are printed from their own rollers. In 32-in. best British cambric, they show an unlimited range, patterns selected, not from one printer only, but productions of 11 of the largest Manchester printers, so that the selection from this great number make a better assortment than from one. They also show some novelties in stripe and spot piques, bought before the market became so buoyant, and can be offered at very low prices.

THE KHAKI CRAZE IN ENGLAND.

A London correspondent of THE DRY GOODS REVIEW writes under date January 27: "Khaki" vests, or to be more correct, waistcoats, are being introduced. I have seen them in some of the windows, and they look very nobby, to my mind, with their flat brass buttons. Many hosiers are showing "Khaki" ties, in puffs (which look best) and four-in-hands, some of these being made so that in tying them they show a piece of scarlet for the army, or blue for the navy. They are rather loud, still they are being shown. Prayer books and Bibles are also coming in for their share, inasmuch as "Khaki" bindings are quite in vogue. Photo frames and purses were, I think, the first to receive the distinction of khaki, so you see it has received a sort of "handspring" of popularity. Young & Rochester are issuing a line of handkerchief ties, with the flag printed on khaki colored material.

JOHN CATTO, TORONTO.

For 40 years or more, Mr. John Catto, of John Catto & Son, Toronto, has been known as an enterprising, enlightened merchant, having with characteristic shrewdness and ability carried his business of high-class dry goods exclusively to a position of marked success.

A native of Aberdeenshire, he had his early training in the Old Land, but while still a young man crossed the Atlantic, and, in the process of time, made his mark. One department of the business we would specially note, which possesses great historic interest for Scotsmen, is the one devoted to Scottish Clan and Family Tartans, which figure so conspicuously in the history and literature of the land of the heather, so rich in material for both novelist and historian.

Mr. Catto takes a personal interest in these time-honored fabrics, in which each line and stripe speaks of some service to king or country in days of yore.

Silk skirts promise to be "a big thing" this season in London. There are very marked indications in the retail of a good demand, and the wholesale are making great preparations. This is in proper sequence of a steadily advancing fashion, which has been felt for about three years, till London bids fair to become like Paris, where every working girl wears a silk skirt, however coarse her outer dress may be. One has only to walk through the Magasin du Louvre to realize what an important portion the silk skirt is of a Frenchwoman's wardrobe. Shapes will not be quite such a problem this season.

Millinery Season

— Mantles, Trimmings and Laces.

THE MILLINERY SEASON APPROACHING.

THE Spring millinery season promises to be a brilliant one, according to the common expectations. The millinery people have made great preparations for it. The Toronto wholesale millinery houses are somewhat divided with regard to the date of opening. February 26 and March 5 are the dates. Toronto will again be besieged with the usual large army of milliners from all points in Canada. Those holding their openings on February 26 are confident that they will have the usual large number of buyers on hand. They claim the fact that Easter is a little late this year will work out to the advantage of the trade. Others who make March 5 the date, and they are the majority, will probably be in shape for early buyers.

As to styles, the interviews with the various houses which follow, will give the trade a good general idea in advance. The French modistes are showing smaller effects for early Spring trade, such as Spanish turbans, turban toques, etc. Picture hats are in rather a smaller style and the trimming generally is flatter.

So far, no actual new color is announced, but the pastel shades of green, helio and blue are likely to be a prominent feature. These subdued tones have a good effect grouped together in trimming or any other way.

The materials chiefly used are tulle and chiffon. Ribbons are indispensable, and, when used, seem to be called for in plain colors.

Flowers are to be drawn upon in profusion. The large sizes are favored, and there is a distinct feeling for giant roses, while foliage is particularly good, and comes in some pretty things in pastel colors. Violets will be freely used for early Spring on everything.

Ornaments are of pearl, mother-of-pearl, pastel metals, while both osprey and bird of paradise plumes will be correct.

A number of taffeta silk hats are being shown, the silk being used for the foundation of the hat.

Among novelties in materials may be mentioned some gold-decorated, hand-painted ribbon, real Battenburg lace, and any number of straw trimmings, including a chiffon embroidered with straw.

Trimmings, which have been on the increase for several months past, seem to be coming into greater favor than ever. Reports brought in by travelers through the country are to the effect that there has been an unprecedented demand lately for this class of goods. Prosperous times are the main, or one of the main reasons for such a feeling. People can afford to wear nice things just now.

MAKING EXTENSIVE PREPARATIONS.

Geo. Goulding & Son, Toronto, who do an exclusively millinery business, claim to carry the largest stock of strictly millinery goods in Canada. For the coming season their stock will be the largest and most widely assorted they have ever placed before the trade. The prominent features this season will be fringes, laces, straw braids, gauzes and scarves. Of all these lines they will have an unusually complete selection of the most desirable goods, while in all other lines of general millinery requirements their stock will be fresh and up-to-date. This house is included in the number who intend holding their millinery opening on March 5 and following days.

"In thus meeting the wishes of many of the trade," said a member of the firm to THE REVIEW, "for a later date than usual, the wholesale houses feel they are taking a step which will meet with general approval. But, for the convenience of early buyers, we intend to have our stock all in our warehouse by February 15, when the trade is welcome to make a thorough inspection of it."

THE McCALL CO. OPEN ON FEBRUARY 26.

The large warehouse of The D. McCall Co., Limited, presented a most active and businesslike appearance when THE DRY GOODS REVIEW representative called in search of information regarding the styles, etc., for the coming Spring and Summer seasons. In every department throughout the house, the greatest activity prevailed. "We are preparing for the greatest millinery season the trade has ever experienced," said Mr. McCall; "everything points to big business in millinery this season, and you must admit that the appearance of our stock will bear out my statement when I say we are prepared to meet all demands the trade may make. We are, as you see, ceiling-high with new goods in every department, and what is most important to know is that what we have is what the trade evidently want.

"Our orders to date are something enormous. To give you an idea of the popularity of our goods and the increase of business which is coming our way, it will be sufficient to say that we have been shipping since the middle of January, day and night, which is some three weeks earlier than heretofore, and we expect it will take us all our time to get all forward before the rush of the opening is at hand. We hold our opening on the week commencing February 26—always the big event of the season—and it will be bigger this season than ever.

"We have already had the pleasure of waiting upon a number of our customers from the more distant points. From now until opening week, our warehouse will be thoroughly alive with buyers from all over Canada.

"We have just received word from the Maritime Provinces that a large party will soon be on their way to attend our opening, and we have also advice from the Northwest and British Columbia to the same effect. Yes sir, this will be the greatest opening ever held in Canada in every respect, and you may depend upon it that we are doing our utmost to make it a meritorious one, so that it will do us good and be a credit to Toronto, 'the fashion metropolis of Canada.' With regard to the visit from our Maritime Province friends it may be well to remark that it has been customary for most of these people to go to the New York and Boston openings in the past. So you must admit that it speaks well for our reputation as producers of the correct styles, etc., to effect such a desired change.

"There is another matter which we find is working to our advantage, and that is the fact that we carry millinery exclusively; nothing but millinery, and millinery in all its branches, and in the greatest possible variety. Our whole time and attention is devoted to millinery. This explains, to a great extent, the great increase in our business of late years.

"As to styles for the coming season, you will find that, in hats, the demand for early trade will be strong on the order of the Spanish turban. The tendency seems to be for large and higher crowns than previous seasons. A novelty of the season will be made up of row and row alternately of straw and chiffon, and again of straw and taffeta silk. Toques are shown by all the leading modistes in Paris. They are rather large and will be worn more over the face than usual.

"In trimmings, the variety is quite extensive, including straw galloons, all-over nets, malines, muslin de soie, horse-hair sequins, etc.

"The very latest materials include straw embroidered chiffon, muslin de soie, tulles, hand-painted tulles and chiffons, horsehair, sequin and straw, crinoline, tuscan straw braids, all over nets, and sequins of all kinds.

"Flowers are much in evidence and in great variety. The leaders will be roses, poppies, grapes and beautiful colorings in the pastel shades and autumn tints in foliage. A novelty is shown in the pastel shades of soft muslin, which looks particularly well in roses and poppies.

"In ribbons, wide widths are being largely used, principally in soft mouseline, taffetas, satin oriental and gauzy effects.

"Ospreys in cross, whip and paradise, demi tips and  $\frac{3}{4}$  flats will also be used considerably.

"In colors, the leading shades are aquarelle, pastel, fresque (new green tones), Van Dyck, Rubens, Raphael (old rose tones), Watteau, Murillo, Rembrandt (new blue tones), Athos, Porthos, Aramis (heliotrope tones). Good staple shades are paille, beige, tabac, parme, violet, argent, oriental, turquoise. The pastel shades are undoubtedly correct. They are being used extensively, and are certainly very pretty in all classes of goods. In combinations, as many as six or eight shades are grouped together. A particularly good combination which will find favor this season is black and straw.

"So much for anticipations," concluded Mr. McCall, "come around on our opening day, February 26, and see the results of our efforts."

WHAT THE IVEY STYLES WILL BE.

The John D. Ivey Co., Limited, again furnish some advance notes, concerning everything in millinery for the coming season.

Beginning with the shapes, they state that the latest creations exhibit a good deal of novelty, the most noticeable change being in the form of the crowns, which are higher and plainer than formerly, while the trimming is lower and mostly on the brims, giving them a thicker appearance.

Many toques, however, are shown with low or dome-shaped crowns, and the trimming consists chiefly of a drapery of tulle, chiffon, net or lace prettily knotted. Other toques are more of the hat-shape form with medium width brim. The "Amazon" hat, with the brim drooping in front and back, and curving up at the sides, is a most "distingue" style. Some very swell shapes are verging on walking hat and turban form.

Now for materials: The existing vogue for tulle, chiffon, silk, muslin, nets and laces lends itself accommodatingly to the dainty combinations with more staple fabrics, such as, tulle

No. 1, The J. D. Ivey Co., Limited.

"Amazon" hat of black chiffon finely folded around crown. Apricot velvet "pinched" facing, over which is a drape of black real lace, ostrich feather and paradise mount being the decoration.

and velvet, chiffon and taffeta silk and ribbon, or the newer material "Flambuoyant," which is exceedingly lovely in the pastel shades. By the way, these tints are so beautifully blended that one color seems dissolved in the other, or to be "only the shadow" of the colors used in preceding seasons. A combination of five or six shades of these delicate colors now appear on one hat, or are used with contrasting colors of rich deep hues. Tulle and velvet employed in this way are most effective.

This firm's last Spring "opening" of the 19th century bids fair to outshine all previous efforts. The materials being used in their pattern hat department are of such rich manufacture that the models are really "works of art."

Laces have a prominent place, and are lavishly used in trimming, making and veiling, and are shown from the exquisite real lace, to the pretty and inexpensive imitation.

Soft ribbons, in plain taffeta or satin, also enter largely into the manufacture of millinery, and are used in combination with other materials.

The pastel tints in flowers are a leading feature; they are to be seen in endless variety. The most popular, at present, are roses, violets, cowslips, pansies and hyacinths. Unmounted roses make a splendid under-brim facing for large hats, and violets and white cowslips make pretty edges for outlining shapes. The "high novelty" of the season is "giant" flowers in beautiful pastel tints. Foliage of every description is indispensable. Some hats are entirely floral, with a real lace "Alsatian" bow for trimming. Ostrich feathers and paradise play an important part in giving a graceful sweep and finish to an "Amazon" or large hat, and will be much used. Orna-

EVERYTHING FROM EVERYWHERE

THE CHOICEST goods are bound to be where the power of collecting is greatest. That power is no more reflected in capital than in the agencies capital employs. A buyer must know his goods; he must get the best in the world for the money; he can't pick the best without knowing all, comparing all, turning pounds, francs, piasters, marks, rupees into dollars, computing expenses, duties, freights; he must know qualities, fashions, makes, makers, materials; he must choose out of all the world for all sorts of people with all sorts of tastes.

That's what we've been doing for months past in millinery and fancy dry goods, and there are surprises lying in wait—surprises in style and pattern, in color and tone, in everything you may expect and things you don't expect, with the mark of exclusiveness all over them—the best and biggest stock ever under one roof in the Dominion.

Easter is far down in the calendar this year. For that and other seemingly good reasons, tho' we were ready for the earlier day, the buyers had their way. So our opening day comes a little later this Spring—not until Monday the fifth of March.

The markets of the world have been laid under contribution; but not indiscriminately. Every selection has been made by trained skill and approved by cultured taste, by Dame Fashion herself. If you seek a feast of beauty, it will be here; if you seek stock that will be of the greatest use, here it is, also.

No need to magnify our facilities for the showing and the seeing. Is there a higher, wider, lighter warehouse in Canada,—our own new one next door alone looks down upon us.

Canadians are all right. Do you know that up to a few years ago we were under the impression that Canadians were back numbers and only half civilized? But for the past year or two they have been dropping into our place quite lively, and we find them up-to-date and go-a-head hustlers. In fact, we have a wonderful opinion of Canadians to-day; for instance, J. N. McKendry, of Toronto, is one of the sharpest men that enters our store. His face is streaked with honesty and integrity, and all my buyers say he has lots of gunpowder in him. Let the Canadians come! We have everything in the Millinery line, including Pattern Hats, sold for Net Spot Cash and at prices that will gladden your heart and bring a sunshine smile to your countenance even if you were glancing at a cemetery.

Look for our 64-page catalogue. It is filled with bargains, all of the latest ideas, and at about half the price that the old-fashioned regular houses will charge you. Keep your eye on us! We are like the Canadians—we are all right.

ments are used as much as ever. Some very unique designs are shown in pastel, pearl, steel and jets. The straw hat department, under the management of Mr. McKinlay, whose reputation is well known to the trade, will be most complete, comprising the very newest shapes and brands from the best manufacturers of Paris, London and New York. The styles, shapes and brands shown, from the nobbiest dress hats to the common, ready-to-wear goods, demonstrate that nothing has been overlooked in this department, and argues well for an immense season's trade. Leghorns and other brands have advanced considerably over previous seasons, but, by placing large contracts a long way ahead, we will be enabled to give the trade the advantage of buying their goods at practically old prices. No merchant or milliner should place their hat orders without first giving this department a good look through.

The firm have again found it necessary to further enlarge their trimming-rooms to accommodate this fast growing department. Milliners, representing the most prominent retail establishments in the Dominion, avail themselves of the advantage of copying patterns for themselves, with very satisfactory results.

Referring to the general opening on March 5, this firm express the opinion that the trade will highly appreciate the change to the first week in March. They state, however, that though their general opening will be later than usual, they will be prepared to receive and wait upon early buyers any time after February 16, as importations are already well forward.

"The prospects for the coming season," stated Mr. Ivey, the president of the company, "are most encouraging. The styles and shades blend themselves to a very profitable millinery business. Our early orders are far in excess of any previous year. Payments are satisfactory. In every way business is certainly in a most healthy condition."

IN NEW PREMISES.

The removal of Cockburn & Rae, wholesale milliners, Toronto, from their premises at 8 Wellington street west to their present warehouse, 46 Bay street, has given that firm excellent facilities for increasing their already large trade. The new premises comprise five large floors. Three of these are devoted to the stocking of millinery requisites; one contains the work-room and the show-rooms. The other is devoted entirely to the receipt and shipment of goods. The work and show-rooms are on the top, or fourth floor. Here, about 500 pattern hats are shown. As none of these are copies, all being Paris productions, the assortment is both large and varied. The work room is thrown open for the convenience of any of the trade throughout the country who may desire to copy any of these models.

The third floor is devoted to flowers and feathers. This stock, which is both comprehensive and varied, shows a pre-dominance of roses among the flowers. The pastel shades, particularly fresque, rubens, gouache, wateau and khaki, are everywhere in evidence. The foliage comprises some of the finest fabrics that have ever been shown. Maiden hair ferns, violets, roses and capucine are shown in quantities that evince their popularity. A large variety in shape, color, size and price of the novelty of the season in foliage, the bunch of grapes, is shown, together with the big stock of all kinds of feathers and flowers, on this floor.

Trimmings take up the second floor. Chiffons, mechlins, tulles, etc., are very much in evidence in all the popular colors, of which black, white and the pastel shades seem to be in chief favor at the moment. A lot of straw braids, and narrow straw edgings in tuscan braid are also shown. In ornaments, the correct articles are medallions, which are as tasty as they are new. In ribbons, while all widths and shades are shown, the great number of large widths in soft shades show a special call for this class of ribbon.

On the first floor, hats and children's headwear are arranged. This firm have always made a specialty of children's headwear, and are taking advantage of their increased facilities to further enlarge and complete their assortment in this line. On this floor are also the general and private offices.

While all the floors are already well stocked, the large number of unopened boxes on the ground floor show that more goods are being steadily received. For the convenience of buyers, who wish to visit the city previous to the first opening day, March 5, the warerooms have already been prepared, and the trade are invited to inspect this firm's stock at any time.

GOODS REVIEW at the factory and warehouse of S. F. McKinnon & Co. "Look around you. The goods we told you of a month ago have been coming, and coming, and still are coming, world without end. Yes, our stocks in strictly millinery are much larger than in any previous year, and we have branched out much heavier along kindred lines in fancy dry goods. In both stocks we shall control much that is new and exclusive. A rapidly-increasing and expanding trade, and a trade outlook that speaks well for the Dominion, our leadership and confidence in what we see and the reports that come to us have each played a part in the accumulation of these great stocks—better and greater than ever before under one roof in all Canada. There is another reason, however, that is especially pertinent just now. The retail merchant goes to Europe less and less. He has paid well for the information, but he has found out that it costs just as much in time and dollars to go to Europe and buy $1,000 worth of goods as it does to buy $100,000 worth; that he can't get all the discounts that go along with big buying year after year; that the big buyer controls many lines that are bound to popularity; that his own selections are put in the shade, and he must sacrifice to meet popular demands; that he is often unable to take advantage of offerings because of his own unwise selections; that costs him more, yard to yard, item to item, to put the goods in his store than the same goods bought at home. He is finding out that he can use the wholesalers' resident buyers practically as his own, get quicker deliveries, make money and avoid risks, bothers, mistakes, expense, and—it's direct importation just the same, after all.

"Yes, you might call on Mr. Alexander, but he's a busy man these days—all is life and preparation up among the mantles, and he'd have to talk in a wholesale way. He'd say that 'McKinnon-made' jackets, coats, cloaks, suits and costumes are coming out and going out by thousands—that means perfection and popularity."

TRIMMINGS.

As the wholesale dry goods and manufacturing trade has increased in Canada so did M. Markus, of Montreal, increase his stock of trimmings and smallwares for this trade. There is no order too large, none too small to be filled immediately.

In quality as well as prices this firm claim that they can't be beaten, and, as they control the sale for many foreign manufactures they are able to meet any outside competition.

If you have never bought of this firm, Mr. Markus thinks a trial order would convince you that it would be to your interest to buy of them.

STRIKING FEATURES IN THE NEW FASHIONS.

When the representative of THE REVIEW visited Chas. Reid & Co., Toronto, he found that firm busy making extensive preparations for an active trade this Spring.

"We are looking forward to a fine millinery season," said Mr. Reid, "One which will be profitable to the milliner. Styles and fashion enhance this view. Everything, even colors, lend themselves to softness combined with richness. Chiffons, crepe de chine, tulle, gauzes, taffeta silks, liberte satins, laces, wide soft ribbons, all combine to make a milliners' season.

"Without doubt, the leading shape of the early Spring will be the toque, made up from the before-mentioned materials, and in combination with straw braids of soft tuscan, cuba, or silk. Sequin trimmings are to the front again, the chief colors being claire de lune, black and silver, and black. Lace applique will be very good, and all indications point to this being the best flower season, especially in roses, for several years. Ostrich feathers, of course, will have a good place.

"One of the handsomest patterns is a large black hat of fine chip straw trimmed with wide liberte satin ribbon in a soft pastel shade called 'Miniature,' something like the old crushed strawberry shade, with two large ostrich feathers to match. A striking feature in flowers on some of the toques is a large bunch of grapes and foliage. This, in combination with a tuscan shade of folded crepe de chine has a decidedly handsome and dressy appearance.

"Laces, of all kinds, for millinery and dress will be very good. In all-overs there are some very striking designs. This branch of the trade promises to be a large one the coming season, especially in the finer grades.

"Fringes, so long dead, have suddenly leapt into prominence for dress and millinery trimming; the wide ones for dresses, sashes, and scarves. The narrow ones in combination with lace are selling more freely and promise to have a good run. Colors are taking very well, but blacks and whites have the first call.

"With regard to colors, there is no doubt that in England, where there is so much mourning just now, black and white and black will prevail, but this will not militate against the use of colors in this country. Black, white, cream and tuscan, however, will be the leaders.

"Veilings, which have had a setback for about two years, are again to the front, and promise well.

"Prices of many lines; in fact, nearly all lines, have advanced enormously since October, and late buyers will be at a decided disadvantage. We were very fortunate in making all our contracts early."

SPRING MILLINERY COLORINGS.

Color is a question of paramount importance to the buyer of millinery goods. Too much stress cannot be put upon this feature. Time and thought given in obtaining correct information regarding the colors of a new season are both well expended, says The Dry Goods Reporter. The success in selling depends so much upon the right choice of colors.

Every season in millinery is a law unto itself. For it is, more than all others, the trade in which novelties thrive. A season is largely made up of a succession of "fads" which give leaven and lightness to the bulk of staple trade.

The color "fad" is unquestionably the most important and far reaching, and has more to do with the value of millinery goods than possibly all of the other "fads" of a season.

Indications are that this will be more than ever true in the coming spring season. While there will be a full quota of novelty shapes and novelty materials, the special feature of the season will be the new colorings—the pastels.

Enough has already been said of the pastel tones to convey an idea of their character. They are shown in sufficient numbers to afford much variety in the making up of stock.

Contrasts and harmonies in color rather than matches will be the scheme of this Spring's millinery. Genius for color combinations may be exercised to the fullest extent in building the hats.

The syndicate color card contains several series of pale, rather dull greens, all of which are marked as strong favorites, of dull pale pinks, blues, straws and mauves, the last having an excess of pink in their composition. All of the pinks and mauves combine harmoniously with the greens, yellows and blues, and the latter with each other. It is in such combinations that the pastels will be chiefly used.

While at first glance it would seem that the pastel tones were too much of a novelty to be used by the general trade, yet it may be recalled that when some years ago faded colorings were fashionable, they immediately became popular with all classes.

The average woman is much more easily persuaded to take a new subdued color than a bright showy tone. Hence it is reasonable to suppose their popularity will readily revive.

With so many light art colorings in vogue there will of necessity be much black required as foil or contrast. Likewise mode and grey tones will carry out many effective color combinations.

In summing up the color features of the Spring it may thus be put in a nutshell, black, grey and mode, enlivened and contrasted with dull blues, pinks, mauves, greens, and straw tones, each in turn contrasting and combining with the other to form the color symphonies of Spring millinery.

MILLINERY BUSTS AND MANTLE FORMS.

Millinery, like other things, must be displayed in the show-room and in the window. To do this properly, certain fixtures are indispensable. The making of these fixtures has become a business in itself. Where the construction of wax forms and faces has to be done, a great deal of skill and artistic work are required, and A. S. Richardson, 425 1/2 Yonge street, Toronto, who has gone into the manufacture of such wax goods, has the only establishment of this sort in Canada. The kind of articles made includes fine wax figures, papier mache forms of various kinds. Not only are they suited to milliners, but also to tailors, clothiers, etc. Mr. Richardson has issued an illustrated catalogue with good sized cuts of the wax and other forms, with descriptions and prices. As this is the millinery season when many buyers are in town, their attention may be attracted sufficiently to visit the place, but, if not, any reader, by dropping a card, can get a copy of the illustrated catalogue

A NEW YORK HOUSE GOES AHEAD.

A New York firm that is asking for a share of the Canadian millinery trade is that of John Miles, of New York and Paris, a business built up by the courage and ability of its founder. Mr. Miles went to New York from Ireland a poor boy, had eight years' practical experience in millinery and then started for himself in a small way. He has now built up one of the largest and best equipped concerns on this continent. The Canadian trade who may wish to do business with Mr. Miles will be interested in knowing the kind of man he is.

Not long ago Mr. Miles, in an interview with The New York Star, described his plan for giving the staff a share of the profits of the concern. His business had quadrupled and he thought of giving his hard-working staff a stake in the concern:

"Beginning January 1, 1900, I advanced the salary of each of the men whom I have taken into the corporation a certain amount, according to what they are now receiving. This advance will not be given them each week, but will remain in the treasury, representing so much stock. When it has reached $100 in each case, a certificate will be given for that amount, which is worth its face value under all circumstances. The certificate can be cashed upon receipt if the holder desires, but otherwise, at the end of each year, he is entitled to his pro rata share of the profits of the business."

"Suppose, for some cause or other, an employe, who is a member of the company, is derelict in his duty or in any other way becomes unworthy of your confidence?"

"I have taken good care of that," answered Mr. Miles, "for in such event he would be given the full value of his certificates in cash and whatever else was coming to him up to that time and then dismissed. Besides this, I have also instituted a pension fund for my employes. This, however, is entirely independent of the corporation, being solely taken care of by myself. It is operated in this manner: If any of my faithful workers get too old, or in any other way become incapacitated for work I do not discharge them. I simply send for them and explain that, while I fully appreciate their fidelity, their services are no longer of sufficient value to justify me in paying their full salary, and they can consider themselves retired on a certain sum per week, and if it should so happen that they cannot call for their money each week I will send it to them."

In reply to the remark that this was a most liberal and charitable example in an age when there was too much disposition to throw faithful employes upon the world when they could work no longer, Mr. Miles said: "I am doing simply what my conscience dictates to be right between man and man. I don't pretend to be up in social economy, and those sort of problems, but I know what's right, and try to do it."

THE GEISHA WAISTS.

As novel designs in shirt waists are likely to be in great demand this season, some manufacturers are going to extraordinary pains to produce artistic designs. The Geisha waists, manufactured by Frankenthal Bros., 77-81 Wooster street, New York, are an example of what is being done in the line of perfect-fitting garments of superior finish. They are shown in a variety of materials, and prices range from $4.75 to $174 per dozen, with over 800 styles to choose from.

LINENS, COTTONS AND WOOL.

Irish linens are away up, and the usually cool-headed North of Ireland man has lost his head. Goods which a few months ago were selling at 3d. per yard are now 5d., and this with uncertain delivery. The wool sales have been very firm, especially for fine and superior greasy stock.

The Montreal Cotton Co. have advanced some lines of lawns and muslins. These are almost an exact reproduction of the Scotch goods, and it is very creditable that they should be able to produce a line which it is so difficult to imitate in manufacture and finish.

Early in January the Montreal Cotton Co. issued advances on ducks and suitings, about 1/2c.; on some of the higher lines 1c.

On the 10th, the Merchants Cotton Co. advanced grey drills about 3/8c.

On the 16th, the Montreal Cotton Co. raised Victoria lawns, apron lawns and check muslins about 1/4c.

Under date January 24, the Canadian Colored Cotton Co. withdrew the following lines from the market until further notice: Flannelettes, 450 and 452; shirtings, E E and G G; galateas, G 44; sateen stripes, G 5; dress goods, 888 and 907; Oxfords, s/2; lawns, 2/60; apron gingham, 776 and 783; and cycle suitings, B 17 and B 20.

STEEL-PLATE ENGRAVED LABELS.

THE use of labels on all classes of garments has now practically become universal. Nearly every leading manufacturer and retailer has his distinctive mark in the form of a label attached to every article he puts upon the market. A firm that devotes its whole attention to the making of steel-plate engraved labels for neckwear, shirts, waists and other garments is The J. L. & M. Jacobs Co. This house originated

FRANKENTHAL BROS.,
NEW YORK.
(Geisha Waists)

its own specialty, and is the only one in its line making white labels exclusively. The busy preparations now going forward on Spring goods call attention to what has come to be regarded as an essential feature of every line—the affixing of the firm label on each garment turned out. In this connection, the card of The J. L. & M. Jacobs Co. in this issue is of added interest. The firm devotes the whole of its big plant in the Elm Square Building, New York, exclusively to the production of steel-plate engraved labels, and the prestige it has won in its chosen field is testified to by the fact that nearly all the leading manufacturers and retailers throughout the country are numbered among its patrons. It is largely due to The J. L. & M. Jacobs Co. that the old crude method of producing labels has been brought to the present state of perfection. Many of the designs are in the highest degree artistic, and the firm is thoroughly equipped to fill orders in from two to five days. Correspondence is invited by the house, and samples, designs and prices are cheerfully forwarded on request.

THE POWER OF ILLUSTRATIONS.

Every advertiser could use, profitably, some of the numerous stock cuts that are now being offered by up-to-date electrotypers. Their power in advertisements is of inestimable value, as they attract attention to the advertisement; the first mission of an advertisement being to attract attention. They make plain the idea; in fact, they photograph the object itself on the mind. A good picture talks foreign languages as well as English and tells a story quicker than cold type.

The successful advertiser of to-day believes in illustrations. Suitable cuts are now among the easiest and cheapest things to obtain. The first small cost of the cuts is further reduced when you take into consideration the fact that they can be used in newspapers, circulars, dodgers, and all sorts of printed matter for years to come. This is the view put forward by The Standard Electrotype Co., Wilmington, Del., U.S., and they invite merchants, who have seen the print of a cut anywhere that they would like to have, to clip it out and write. They can make it, or a cut of the merchant himself from photo, or of the interior or exterior of store or building or of any article of merchandise.

NEW GOODS IN WHOLESALE TRADE.

THE W. R. BROCK CO., LIMITED.

IN dress goods, The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, Toronto, are showing seven lines manufactured by a very large German concern that have been doing an enormous business with the United States, the Continent and Great Britain, but any goods sold to Canada have previously had to be bought through some middleman, and this is the first time that the business has been done direct. The lines are: F. M. 1, a cloth called Victorian fru fru, which, made of the finest merino wools, is a perfect texture, having the appearance and touch of silk goods, is quite the rage in London and New York this season. This firm having contracted for a large quantity are in a position to offer these goods at great advantage. F. M. 2 is the Victorian covert. F. M. 3 Victorian myleanette is a cloth of similar fine yarns to fru fru, but with a sort of granite pattern. F. M. 4 is a drap de Paris, but so far superior to the ordinary as to be almost of a different material. F. M. 5, Victorian Sebastopol, is more of the character of a poplin or bengaline. F. M. 6 is a silk warp henrietta and F. M. 7 is a sedan. All these lines have a finish and touch and a perfection of weave which cannot be surpassed by any maker, and, while by no means cheap goods, they are well within the reach of the majority of consumers, and, when value is taken into account, are economical.

FRANKENTHAL BROS., NEW YORK.

In a lower line of plain stuff, a cloth worth attention is J. U. 6 Victorian royal, a Bradford cloth of extraordinary value, considering to-day's price. Another of similar texture at an even lower price is the Victorian corkscrew (S 12).

Coming to serges, a wonderful range is seen. There is a Yorkshire serge to compete against the low French goods, 39 to 40 in. wide (S. 11) to retail at 25c. W. H. 8 is, at the same price and same weight, much heavier and wider than what can be offered in all-wool French cloth. But the firm say they still have a few pieces to sell of their W. B. 71—35 and 36 in. Victorian all-wool French serge, which can be retailed at the same price as the two union cloths named. In better goods, W. H. 11 is generally acknowledged to be unsurpassed for value, and it is impossible to get better to retail at 50c. It is made by probably the largest English manufacturers of dress serges, and sold only by The W. R. Brock Co., Limited. In No. 600 Victorian velours, a full range of shades is in stock, and also blacks, but the quantity is limited. In colored fancies the trade has been larger than was anticipated, the numbers specially run on being J. U. 1, a low priced tartan, G. 510, cream, wool and silk, striped goods for blouses and dresses, a stock lot of exceptional value; G. 511, W. 7 and W. 8 are grandrill stripes and checks respectively, and attractive salable goods, as is also H. 93, washing tweeds. The fancy black trade has been very good, and promises to continue, the great difficulty being the possibility of getting repeats in time. This firm predict a scarcity of new and desirable lines in medium and high-priced stuff.

Fancy silks have been having a brisk sale lately, and this firm have a number of lines which they can offer to the trade at a low figure. These will be quickly sold out. The ranges will soon be broken, and cannot be replaced. Two lines are specially referred to: One of stripes, to retail at 40c. (usually at 75c.), and one of checks at the same. They have also a specially fine line of printed satin foulards, in navy and black grounds with white spots and figures, the most correct style to-day, and a beautiful range of printed Japanese silks, in floral designs, light colored, for blouses and evening dresses. Their staple lines in silks and satins, in blacks and colors, is fully assorted, and, at the prices they are prepared to offer, should be attractive to prospective buyers.

The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, Toronto, are showing some AI values in embroideries, bought before the advance, and which could not be repeated to day under fully 33½ per cent. more. The edgings and insertions, both in cambric and Swiss muslin, are well represented, besides a number of box-lots, bought as a job, in regular lengths and 4½-yard ends. All-over embroideries and flouncings are also well represented.

Laces and veilings are two lines to which special attention has been paid this season, including the all-over laces, now so much used for various purposes. The muslin department is stocked with all lines, including special values in tucked apron lawns, Victoria lawns, Swiss spots, checked and striped lawns, fancy leno muslins and others, none of which could be bought except at great advances.

The fancy goods department is showing a range of novelties in belts, belt buckles, girdles, beauty pins, skirt sets, blouse sets, scarf pins, hair ornaments in fancy metal, celluloid and horn, unique pompadour and side combs, fancy hairpins, links, and all kinds of new ideas and everyday requirements. In hosiery and gloves, this firm have on many occasions felt themselves in good trim for this important branch of trade, but never in better position than to-day. They placed contracts for cash for immense supplies of cashmere, cotton, lisle and fancy hosiery before the market reached the high point of to-day, also for silk, taffeta, lisle and kid gloves, thus enabling them to quote interesting prices.

In men's furnishings, as previously intimated, trade has much increased since the department was moved into the new annex. This season, it is particularly strong in all kinds of men's and boys' fancy and outing shirts, comprising silk fronts, negligee, regattas, Ceylon, working and other lines, together with full ranges of white and full dress shirts, also unlaundered, including their well-known "Tempter" to retail at 50c. In men's neckwear, large shipments of the latest novelties are received monthly, in styles and patterns abreast of the times. In tailors', drapers', and dressmakers' supplies, the smallwares department receives daily shipments of various lines of necessaries to supply the demands of these three lines of business. Any novelty with any merit can always be found there.

THE MONTREAL HOUSE.

In the staple department of the Montreal house of The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, some stock lots and jobs at interesting prices are offered, as well as a shipment of black and colored satanas. In underwear, special values are shown. The dress goods department are showing all the newest things on the market in blacks and colors, specially black figures in mohairs, sateens, peorolas, and crepe effects, also cashmeres, poplins, and amazons, at much under present market value.

M. SAXE & SONS.

Among the special lines which are to be seen at Saxe & Sons, are English lined suits, with French facings, special quality of linings, at $5. Also all-wool suits, heavy weight, with handsome patterns in smooth and rough effects, at $6. A range that has been attracting considerable attention is a heavy-weight blue serge, at $8. This suit has a soft, smooth finish, and is an imported indigo blue clay worsted, all wool, Italian lining, satin pipe seams, satin linings. Then there is a line of imported French fancy worsteds, satin lined, special, at $10.

In overcoats, there is a splendid assortment. Amongst the more prominent might be mentioned the covert, self-lined, fancy back Spring overcoat which sells at $6.50. There is, likewise, a range of English whipcords, lined with skin or satins throughout the body and sleeves, with French facings. This overcoat is gotten up after the latest American style, with three links, price $10. Messrs. Saxe & Sons expect to be showing their samples for Fall wear within a short time and will be very pleased to hear from the trade with regard to early orders for Autumn goods.

NOT THE LOCHIEL.

Yankees are proverbial for their sharpness in business transactions. but there is one point upon which they trust implicitly to the good faith of the Scotch merchants; and that is in buying tartans. The ordinary American has not the slightest conception of the difference between the Campbell tartan and the Stuart, and, as for fine distinctions, he would be lost altogether. At the same time, this style of costume finds great favor in the United States, and tourists in the Old Country make quite a demand for it. The Scotchman may be Sabbath keeping, but he hates to lose a business transaction; and when the particular tartan in request is not to be had, there is always the alternative of palming off some other on the unsuspecting customer.

A lady the other day related an experience of hers in an Edinburgh shop. She had asked for the Cameron tartan, and was shown one accordingly. "But this is not the Cameron tartan," said the lady. "Och, yes," was the reply, "that will be what they are wearin' for the Cameron tartan." "Tut, tut, don't tell me that's the Cameron tartan. It's only a poor thrashy thing, some two or three hundred years old. I want the real Lochiel."

"But sic a gaudy thing will no be for the likes o' you, Miss, never at all."

The whole explanation was that the article in question was not in stock. The Canadian girl, however, was too well posted, and sought elsewhere.

THE CLOAK CO.'S ASSIGNMENT.

The assignment of the Cloak Manufacturing Co., of Toronto, Limited, has created some stir in the trade. Mr. E. R. C. Clarkson has been appointed liquidator. The assets, which were stated to be about $47,000, have been sold for 66c. on the dollar. The liabilities are about $87,000, the Quebec Bank being a creditor for over $30,000. The creditors include leading Montreal and Toronto wholesale firms. The failure was precipitated by the recent sudden death of Mr. A. D. Benjamin, who financially backed the company, and against whose private estate the creditors of the firm may be able to rank. Meantime, the creditors are taking steps to secure their rights. The assets were sold to Parsons & Alley, of Toronto. The new firm will continue the business and will place it on a sound financial basis. Mr. S. R. Parsons, chairman of the Ontario Board of Directors of the Canadian Fire Insurance Co. of Winnipeg, will look after the financial affairs of the new concern, while Mr. W. Sanford Alley, manager of the Oak Hall stores in Toronto, will, it is understood, represent the W. E. Sanford interests.

The proposed organization of knitted goods mills in Canada, heralded by the daily press a month or so ago, has not resulted in anything. In fact, it is reported on good authority that the whole project has fallen through.

MUSLIN UNDERWEAR AND BLOUSES.

THE WHITE GOODS SALES.

THE white goods sales this season are exceedingly satisfactory as far as can be learned. In the cities some extensive displays were made of these lines, and the advertising through the press was quite as extensive as usual. It is not easy to account for the popularity of these sales in the cold month of the year, but the fact remains that women buyers either put by money, or get the cash by asking for it, in order to purchase quantities of white goods in the shape of clothing or household linen not for use until later. The sales this year have been satisfactory, and better quality of stuff has been readily demanded.

The expected rise in prices for muslin underwear, announced in this column last issue, has been a similar movement to what has taken place in the United States. The Economist notes that New York retailers have announced that it will be impossible to duplicate the underwear they now control at present prices. One merchant advertises that on gowns for which he has been paying from $4.50 to $5 he must hereafter pay from $4.75 to $5.75 for, and other garments in proportion.

It will be noticed that retailers are in a measure preparing their trade for higher prices. It is hoped that, to a large extent, this will do away with low-priced underwear.

It is reported in the same quarter that hemstitched effects in underwear will certainly obtain in the lower price grades, as the trade prefers them to cheap laces.

There is a new material which will only appear in fine chemises, corset covers and drawers. In substance it seems thinner and finer than silk mull. Enough of the fabric to make a corset cover can be crushed in the hand. It is certainly very dainty and will make up exquisitely in the finer pieces. It will doubtless figure to quite an extent in the creation of trousseaus for the Easter season.

Now, the credit of being the creator of the first big January sale belongs, says our contemporary, to a merchant of Philadelphia. The idea was born with him from the fact of his noting the large number of cases of cottons that were going out from his house during December and January. He wondered, "What does this wholesale buying of muslins mean? Not all can be made up into sheets and pillow cases, or shirts. In those days flimsy nainsook and lawns were unknown. It must be that enough underwear is made during the snowy season to practically carry the whole family through the year." It meant that grandmother, mother, and sister were not intending to pass the balmy Spring and Summer days plying the needle. "If this is what the buying of so many pieces of cottons means, why would not ready-to-wear undergarments appeal to the housewife?"

Forthwith our merchant sets out in the Summer season and bids manufacturers make up their samples so that he can book an order for undergarments to be delivered in December or January, as was the case in the early days, with which he could surprise his customers. This first sale was very small compared to the second, and the third opened the eyes of the community. After the second sale producers were awake, and drummed for business in other directions. Not many manufacturers took hold of the idea in the early days, but enough were interested to keep the factories running during the dull season.

BLOUSES.

In the blouse department there is a very general demand for goods with insertions and with all-over fronts. These are selling as high as $38 and $40 per dozen. There is also a good demand for open work. The new dress sleeve is the great thing for white goods and muslins. The cambric blouses are still made with the shirt sleeve, laundered cuffs and collar. In colored goods, stripes are still the article wanted, and large figures are receiving a good deal of prominence.

In all the white goods and muslins the French back will be used. Also in the mercerised stripes, where goods are stable enough. It may be explained that the material used in the French back needs to be specially good, because this shape causes quite a strain across the yoke. The tucks in the back are with three pleats on each side, tapering from the yoke to the waist. This makes an exceedingly nice effect. These are being made of white repiques and corded piques.

There is in addition a large demand for silk blouses. The prices have advanced on account of the advances lately made in raw material. Even in the cotton blouses prices are up, and when the stuff now being worked on is used up, there will likely be a further rise. The moral is, "order early."

LATEST EFFECTS WITH COSTUME GOWNS.

Our Montreal friends, Messrs. Brophy, Cains & Co., say: "Soft, fluffy effects at the neck make the severe tailor gowns more attractive and becoming, and the long lace jabots are particularly good for this sort of thing. It is absolutely reckless the way in which real lace veils are utilized for these neckties. But the best material of which to make them is the lace net a yard wide that is tied into a bow, with a small knot in the centre, and then the ends are left to hang down. They must not be left with the unfinished ends, however, but must be finished with a little narrow lace of the same description. When bows of chiffon are used the ends must be made of the lace, but just for the present the bows made entirely of lace are more worn.

"This is in keeping with the general drift that is observable in every department appertaining to ladies dress, everything is fanciful and flowery, hence lace and all other gauzy tissues are the chief need of the hour.

"No stock that a retailer can keep is susceptible of a better profit, nor is there one more attractive."

I regret to announce that Mr. Henry Macartney, whose visits to England on behalf of Messrs. Gault Bros. & Co., Montreal, have frequently been chronicled, died recently from a paralytic attack. Mr. Macartney had just attained his half-century, and had been over a quarter of a century with Messrs. Gault.—London Drapers' Record.

Nisbet & Auld, Toronto, report to hand repeat shipments of all clan tartans, including the "Elliot," or "Minto" tartan, which was reproduced in our January issue. This firm state that they are in daily receipt of novelties, very many of which cannot be secured elsewhere. This statement, coming from a house which knows what is right, and is in touch with the various markets, will be understood by the trade to be of importance. Their stock is as comprehensive as is consistent with a house which is always in the market for new goods. Regarding values, they state much briefly when they say that, almost without exception, none of their lines could be repeated at to-day's prices.

THE CANADIAN DRY GOODS REVIEW

VOL. X

MONTREAL AND TORONTO, MARCH, 1900.

No. 3.

PROGRESSIVE STOREKEEPING.

A MONTHLY ARTICLE ON THE PROPER MANAGEMENT, SYSTEM, ETC., OF AN UP-TO-DATE RETAIL BUSINESS.

Specially written for THE DRY GOODS REVIEW.

By CHAS. F. JONES, NEW YORK.

Watch Small Leaks.

There are so many leaks in a dry goods business that it requires constant watching and constant investigation to keep them from being very disastrous ones. The little losses which are occasioned here and there seem to be, of themselves, of very little importance, but when taken in the aggregate they amount to a great many dollars during the year.

There is one department, for instance, in the larger stores in particular, where the dry goods merchant sometimes fails to be very watchful and yet in which the little leaks of every day are constantly draining the stock. I mean the toilet and perfumery department.

Soaps are necessary to be used in every store, but in some stores I find that the amount of soap used, presumably, for the toilet-room, is not at all in proportion to the cleanliness of the employes. I have had personal experience in watching the way soap mysteriously disappears from the toilet department, and have known of cases where the salespeople in this stock would give away a great quantity of soap to individual clerks, possibly for the purpose of standing in with them in other matters.

Again, how little a thing it is if your perfumery saleslady helps herself to the cologne and gives all her fellow salespeople a share every day. This amounts to a very little thing once in a while, but when kept up day after day, all the year around, in a large store, it will, no doubt, exhaust many gallons of cologne, which costs a high price, for it is a fact that salespeople do not use the cheap colognes when they wish to be liberal with themselves and their friends. They invariably use the best quality, and this makes the practice that much more expensive.

The only way to stop such practices is to have a very strict rule that nobody in the house, no matter whom it may be, is allowed to use any portion of the toilet goods stock. If it is necessary to have soap for the toilet-room taken directly out of stock, have some one person whose duty it is to see that this soap is distributed each day and that it is not wasted.

It is only by paying strict attention to these little leaks and curtailing them in every way possible that any toilet goods department can hope to stop a serious drain in its profits.

Advertising Bargains.

At some seasons of the year there are a great many firms which advertise, in large, flaring headlines, that they are selling goods away below what they cost. Supposing that this is true in every particular—I hardly think that it is always a good plan for one to admit that he is compelled to or does sell for less than what he pays for goods. Would it not be a more telling point to have people suppose that it was simply your regular line of business to sell goods at a much lower price than other stores, and that it was your facilities for buying that enabled you to do this?

One idea in cutting prices on goods or in making special prices, is to give the public the idea of the reasonableness with which you can sell merchandise. It does not impart to them any particular knowledge of your ability to make close prices when you say that you are selling below cost. Anyone can sell below cost who has a mind to do so, but it takes a great store indeed to be able to sell at these very low prices and still make money.

Might it not be that you would gain a greater reputation for yourself, if in all cases where you are compelled to, or do for any reason, sell at less than cost price, if you would do so without admitting the facts in the case, but rather boasting of your ability to make these special values, when your competitors are not able to do so without losing money?

A firm sometimes overreaches itself in the endeavor to be constantly harping upon the fact that it loses money on any particular line of goods. In the first place, it is not a good reputation to gain that one is not making money, as it very often leads to the thought that the business is unsuccessful.

A merchant would gain a much better reputation by letting people know of the cheapness of his goods and let them say to themselves that "This is so much cheaper than I can get it elsewhere," and let them believe, if they will, that it is your regular business to make such prices on all kinds of goods.

Some Reports on Display.

It is certain that window dressing is one of the best methods of advertising dry goods and of attracting attention to the dry goods store. While Mr. Hollingsworth advises you in detail on this subject in another department of this paper I wish to offer some general observations which appear from my experience to be desirable. More and more of the dry goods stores all over the country are enlarging their facilities for good display, and each season I notice that many stores which have before paid no attention to this matter are going into it very largely.

The shape and size of show windows have a great deal to do with artistic dressing, some stores having much greater opportunities to display goods to advantage than others which have very little store frontage in which to use large, or well-arranged windows.

There are, however, many practical points which every store that has a window at all may observe and which will add to the effectiveness of their window displays if adopted.

In the experience of city merchants the most attractive thing which can be placed in a show window is something living or in motion. Inanimate displays of dry goods can be made very beautiful or very striking, if properly arranged; but the public generally has a great curiosity to see anything living, or anything in motion, displayed in a show window. People are much more interested in the manufacture of goods than is usually supposed and they often will stop in front of a show window to see something made, when any ordinary display would never catch their eyes. The metropolitan stores all recognize this fact and very frequently have windows dressed with living persons in them, or at least with articles and implements which are used in manufacturing the different goods displayed.

About the holidays, particularly, we see in most of the large stores displays of this character, such as a spinning wheel turned by an electric battery, or a crank worked by someone concealed in the window.

Almost anything of this kind draws the eyes of the passers. If a live person be placed in the window, performing some of even the ordinary acts of life, a great number of people will stop to look; for instance, an old lady (or a child) sitting in a rocking chair knitting, with different kinds of floss and knitting silks displayed around her, would make an excellent advertisement of these goods, and would draw a hundred times more people to see the display than any fancy show of knitting silks without the old lady would attract.

There are so many different ways in which a window display of this kind can be designed that it is impossible for me to mention them all. Any person with a little ingenuity can easily think of something different from what has been used before and put it into practical operation in a show window connected with some line of goods.

How Trade Is Directed.

Some dry goods stores do not place price tickets on the goods which they display in the windows. I think this is a mistake in all cases where the goods sell at a low or a medium price. It might not be well, in cases of very expensive goods, to place the price upon the article, as this might have a tendency to cause many persons in the lower walks of life, who do not know the value of goods, to consider the store a high-priced one. But, on all goods which sell for a popular price, there is nothing like having a neat price ticket, so that persons looking into the window can get some idea as to the prices at which you sell the goods. Particularly if the articles are bargains it is well to make a liberal display of prices.

A window, to some extent, can direct the class of trade which you wish to patronize you. If you are seeking after only the very fine trade, a display of very fine goods and novelties, without prices, will be apt to cause such persons who buy these goods to call into your place of business. If you are seeking after those who wish bargains, then you should dress your windows entirely with bargain articles, marked at very low prices.

SUCCESS OF THE NEW IDEA.

Very few drygoodsmen will ask, when the term "The New Idea" is used, to whom it applies. The phenomenal success of the New Idea Pattern Company has made its name familiar to the dry goods trade of the United States and Canada. In the six years that this company has been in existence it has been on the move, not because "it is cheaper to move than to pay rent," but for the reason that just as the New York and Chicago offices would become comfortably settled in new quarters the growth of business made another move necessary in order to obtain sufficient room.

Every business man knows that ideas are as valuable and as necessary as capital for the success of any business, sometimes more valuable.

In the paper pattern business the new idea that won success was a high-grade accurate pattern to retail at 10 cents, with handsome profit to the retailer, no contract required from the dealer, and full control of the business in his town.

Mr. J. W. Pearsall, the founder and president of the company, knew that these ideas would win, and that they only needed publicity to attract attention and obtain support. For this reason he became a large user of space in trade journals, and has from time to time increased his advertising appropriation, and backed it up by such progressive and aggressive methods that New Idea patterns are famous wherever the English language is spoken in the western hemisphere.

The increase in New Idea pattern business for 1899 was over 50 per cent., and 1900 promises to beat this record.

JAPANESE SILKS AND MATTINGS.

K. Ishikawa & Co., Toronto, report that Spring business has opened up fully as well as they anticipated. The total amount of Spring orders for both silk and matting which has been placed already is considerably larger than any previous season. Their stocks of silks were received quite early this year which has enabled them to finish their shipments of Spring silks already. They are now receiving repeat orders for printed Habutai and printed Pongee silks, which are very well thought of throughout the country for Spring and Summer dresses.

Plain Japanese silks in pink, blue, cerise, brown, grey and other fashionable shades are also selling well.

Japanese corded silks have been well taken by the trade again this season after having disappeared from the market for five years. K. Ishikawa & Co. have already disposed of a thousand pieces of this material, and are still experiencing a steady demand for it.

The matting trade is satisfactory in every respect. After having finished making deliveries of their Spring orders in February, this firm are now receiving numerous repeat orders in the medium and lower grades.

The Treherne, Man., W.C.T.U. has passed a resolution requesting merchants to prohibit smoking in their stores, claiming that dry goods, groceries, etc., retain a disagreeable odor long after purchased, and that they object to purchasing goods thus contaminated. Those of the merchants who fail to comply are threatened with a transference of patronage to those who do.

If you were not here in February you will come early in March to see us, and at the same time take in the Millinery Openings. NO, we are not a Millinery house in the sense you mean, but we have:

THE KID GLOVE TRADE.

THE QUESTION OF VALUES.

JUDGING from the standard of prosperity in other lines, gloves have not held as prominent a position on the money-making side as have other lines of goods; still, compared to past glove conditions, business is good, says The New York Economist. The scarcity of raw material, stiffening of price for skins, increased labor valuation, and general prosperity of the country, have succeeded in giving a value to goods which did not exist a few seasons since. Business is fair in the importing lines, but, in the words of a prominent importer, "We would like to meet a man who has made more than a living out of the importing glove business during the past two years."

The Economist maintains that such conditions are not only wrong, but decidedly unsatisfactory. If, in the good years which we are enjoying to-day in other lines, we are not able to lay by enough to supply ourselves with reserve against the poor years, which, however undesirable, are apt to come, the situation is logically not a very business-like one.

THE RETAILER'S POSITION.

The retailer has very little to complain of; he gets a great deal for his money, insurance added, as a rule, against loss by damage, and business for him is made easy in every sense of the word. All the retailer's troubles in the glove question are made by himself. If he hasn't got sense enough to decide which goods his trade wants, or to take care of the goods after he receives them, or to advertise them properly, then he should go and start a soap factory.

The importer certainly has done everything to make life easy for the retail glove seller. We know of no further concessions that can possibly be made. If the retailer knows of any concessions, or can think of anything which he hasn't got already, we would like to hear from him, because we are positive that the glove trade is curious to know what else could be expected of it.

However, the retailer is making a great mistake. Having everything in his favor, he fails to understand how to increase his profit in glove selling and bring his business to a higher standard. This, however, is not his fault entirely. It is the fault of the importer and wholesaler who have guaranteed gloves at every price to the retailer. The only line which has escaped this universal guarantee is the lowest grade of Schmaschen. Even here some protection has been offered by week-kneed importers.

The retailer, however, leaning upon this offer of the importer to make good, has unwittingly dropped his own possible profits in his eager desire to undo his competitor, to give his customer something for nothing, or nearly nothing. The line of gloves guaranteed at retail was pushed down and down until almost any glove, at any price, is guaranteed to the customer at the counter. The foolish notion of pleasing trade, at whatever cost to the house, was pursued in the glove lines until it became an absolute folly. Retailers of note found themselves doing things so against right and business-like procedure that they have absolutely become ashamed of themselves.

MISTAKES IN SELLING.

"Man-afraid-of-his-customer" would be a good title for the average seller of gloves. The writer of this article was a witness to a scene in a New York store some days since, which more fully conveys the folly of the guarantee idea than any amount of mere argument.

In a prominent 23rd street house a customer was engaged in a controversy as to her right to have a third pair of black suede gloves given her, owing to the faults which her own peculiar manner of wearing discovered in the two previous pairs. Originally paying $1.60 for the black suede gloves, which, by the way, is the most delicate of kid fabrics, especially when dyed black, this woman had the effrontery to insist upon a second substitution for the original pair.

In the construction of suede the surface skin is removed and the spongy soft texture of the under skin is retained, which is treated and then dyed. Fabrics so produced are necessarily very susceptible to damage, and weak spots are quickly penetrated by the surface dye, which, hardening the under texture, is liable to crack or break it, even in the very best quality. It will thus be seen that to guarantee black suede gloves is pure folly, yet this house has given a second pair to a woman.

Noticing the hand of the person claiming the gloves, the writer saw that it was fat, pudgy and spongy, the kind of a hand that pressed into a glove will burst it immediately. Few glove fingers are made to fit such fists, yet the management of this department gave the second pair willingly, and, no doubt, upon an appeal to the office rather than have any trouble, the third pair was also conceded.

A POOR BUSINESS POLICY.

It is just upon such ridiculous and dangerous practices that the glove guarantee business has forced its way along. The average dry goods house is without repairing departments, and endeavors to recover from the importer the price of ill-made lots of this character.

The desire to please the customer and keep her in good humor, is, of course, first and foremost. To do so, however, at the expense of good practices, is a poor business policy.

The next disposition of the retail department is to evade the losses so incurred and shoulder them upon someone else. Retailers to-day who refuse to give importers and manufacturers the benefit of having their brand name appear in gloves sold over the counter, should scarcely expect these same importers and manufacturers to stand good for the weak-kneed practices of the retailer.

There is right and wrong in every line of business, and we feel that though the practice is not general, there are instances in which the glove importers and manufacturers are indulging their customers to an extent that is not only foolish, but will eventually work certain injury to the entire trade.

To bear out the statement, we have only to allude to the fact that the percentage of returns from the various retailers is quite divergent. There are houses which conduct their business so that the returns of damaged goods are hardly worthy of consideration.

On the other hand, retailers of equal size, handling equal quantities of similar grades of gloves, will make claims on large quantities of goods in proportion to the amount purchased. Here are contradictory conditions which speak for themselves, and clear the view as to the real cause of this serious loss to importers.

The second condition shows a house in which principle is not as essential in their consideration. To please the customer at someone else's expense is evidently their dishonest and unfair game. The glove importers are, no doubt, to some extent responsible for this trade dishonesty, and it is our sincere hope that by removing the guarantee from lower-grade goods such practices will be eventually done away with.

The Merchant and Credit.

Editor DRY GOODS REVIEW:

DEAR SIR,—The advantage to be derived from confidence between retail and wholesale merchants struck me so forcibly in reading Mr. J. Fraser Macdonald's article, and in covering the matter so fully, he leaves very little to be said. I simply write to endorse it.

"My first word to all men and boys is, don't get into debt. Starve and go to heaven, but don't borrow. Try first begging. I don't mind, if it is really needful, stealing, but don't buy things you cannot pay for."

This is the advice of the late John Ruskin, and it should govern many people starting in business. They are referred to more particularly as want of experience may lead them astray. Mr. Macdonald's article should be very carefully read and considered by young firms, meaning young men having recently commenced or about to commence business on their own account. The apt advice of a western man who made millions by adopting its principle is offered young men, here it is: "When you go into the world you will meet many sharp, tricky, crooked men, but you will find they always die poor. If you can form a character and establish your credit, there can be no question about your ultimate success. Most failures in life are due to deficiency in character and a consequent lack of credit."

The methods under which business is now conducted have been so very much changed within the past quarter of a century that too much attention cannot be paid by a firm to its credit. In the old days, merchants visited the wholesales in person, picked out their purchases and generally had a pretty good idea of the quantity of goods and value of their bills before they left the warehouses.

Now, however, it is hardly necessary for a merchant to leave his town. He is waited on by nearly every house looking for business, and he may think that if he is refused credit for what he wants from one he can buy from another.

Doctors say that pain is a blessing in disguise, and if a slight injury to his commercial pride is the means of bringing to his notice that his credit is impugned, he will be wise to hesitate and have it established on a solid basis with the doubting firm before he makes it worse by increasing his liabilities without improving his assets.

Overbuying is in most cases the cause of poor credit, and want of attention to the copy of orders given is one of the main reasons for it. Another reason is in doing business with too many houses, also an unreasonable desire to have control for the town of every good thing shown. To get control, it is necessary to buy largely and it frequently happens that the "good thing" is quite the reverse.

When the time for payment falls due, comes the request for renewal and then is the time when a merchant should know just how he stands financially. When the purchase was made it was a straight buying and selling transaction, but when the renewal is asked for a merchant has no excuse for refusing a statement of his position, if it is asked.

❁ WINDOW AND STORE DECORATING. ❁

Conducted for THE REVIEW by H. Hollingsworth, an Expert Window Artist.

TO DRY GOODS REVIEW READERS.—We shall be glad to receive photographs and descriptions of window displays that have attracted special attention in their own localities, and which would be considered helpful to trimmers generally. Any inquiries or questions on the subject of window dressing will be answered cheerfully, and any information given that may be desired by readers. Queries should be addressed: "Window Dressing Department."

LINENS.

DURING the next few months housekeepers will be replenishing their stock of linens and it behooves the window-trimmer to do his utmost towards securing the trade of linens for his firm. The linen department ranks next to the dress goods department both in value and interest. The linen stock affords a source of supply for materials with which to dress the window, exceeding all other departments in the establishment.

The great variety of qualities, widths and colors of the fabrics, the number of varieties in the forms and styles of napkins, etc., the beauty of the displays possible from their harmonious colorings and combinations, and the ease of management and grouping all continue to make them favorite objects for window exhibitions.

Composed as they are of goods indispensable to the furnishing of the household, they are always of the greatest interest to the chief patrons of the store, and the best audience of the windows, viz., "the ladies." Linens consist mainly of snowy white goods and the window-trimmer has an easy time in the arrangement of color scheming as almost any pretty shade serves the purpose for the background.

Towels, napkins, doilies, etc., form choice lines wherewith to carry out pretty designs, as they can be folded in so many artistic ways. The illustration on page 22 shows a neat, stocky, linen sales window. It is arrayed on three flights of steps. This style of display does not necessitate a background and is a change from the ordinary. One big mistake made in this display was the non-appearance of price tickets. I consider this trim robbed of its effectiveness on account of no price cards. The large card on bottom of trim reads

"EXTRAORDINARY SALE OF RELIABLE LINENS."

While this may be all right to a certain extent, I am sure this card would not be the means of inducing one customer into the store to buy linens. Had every piece of table linen shown in this pretty display, borne a card reading similar to this:

" 'PURE FLAX,' 72 INCHES WIDE, EXTRA FINE VALUE, 50C. YD."

I am sure it would have proved more of an inducement to the onlooker to purchase, and have added greatly to the attractiveness of the trim. The towels could have been ticketed like this:

"PURE LINEN TOWELS, GOOD VALUE, $2 DOZ."

The table napkins might have been ticketed with a nice neatly printed ticket reading

"SATIN FINISHED TABLE NAPKINS, DINNER SIZE, $2 50 DOZ."

If they had been advertised in the newspapers, every card might have read

"AS ADVERTISED," ETC.

I always consider that if a merchant has not marked his goods at too high a figure, he should not be afraid to tell the people the prices of them. A dining-table covered with a linen tablecloth and spread with a tea or dinner set makes a good centrepiece for a linen display. Flowers and palms also add to the beauty of a linen trim.

UPHOLSTERY GOODS.

Housekeepers are beginning to think of Spring house-cleaning and rearranging at this season of the year, and one of the things generally foremost in their minds is the changing and the replenishing of this room and that throughout the house. Some are moving into new houses, others are furnishing flats. These require new carpets, new curtains, portieres and furniture. These lines have to come under the window-trimmer's notice, and displays of same are to me made attractive as well as the other trims. The richness of coloring and beauty of design exhibited in these and all their varied forms and qualities would render them objects of admiration and interest, even if they were not so widely used.

In these days when so many houses, hitherto strangers to artistic hangings of this sort, are blossoming out with the new and better forms of drapery decorations, nothing is more attentively viewed than upholstery exhibits.

Furniture coverings especially serve as great materials for beautiful and striking display. Curtains, rugs and tapestries do not require any pains in draping, the particular style may be left to the tastes and the ingenuity of the dresser.

In showing lace curtains and curtain muslins it is always well to show them over pale blue, pink, yellow or green colored cambric or tissue, in order to give a tone to the curtain and prominence to the pattern.

In tapestry and other heavy fabrics no pins should be used when the weight of the goods is sufficient to hold the folds in their proper positions.

An effective way to display lace curtains is shown in the illustration on this page. Strings or wires running parallel across the top of the window are tightened about a foot and a half apart. Curtains are hung on these one behind the other, each one being pulled the width of its border towards the centre of window from the one in front of it. The bottom of window is filled in with others on stands. These could have been opened out on stands covered with some light-colored material or of different colors.

Each of these curtains should have had a nice price card stating the kind of lace and the length, etc. For a mixed display of this kind a few nice lamps with pretty colored shades would have made up a fine display. Pictures on easels would show up well with a curtain display of this kind.

Another catchy show could be made by leaving the lace curtains as they are and filling in the centre with pretty filled screens. In fact, almost any line of goods belonging to this class could be shown along with a backing of white lace curtains.

A pretty lace curtain display is made by showing them all over apple-green tissue paper or cambric.

Carpets are generally shown in rolls or opened out with border put around them to match. It is advisable, I think, to show one kind at a time, instead of mixing brussels, tapestries, moquettes, axminsters, wiltons, etc., all together.

A WINDOW OF CARPETS.

The better plan is to take a whole window each day, say one day brussels only, next day tapestries, and so on. When they are all shown together one cheapens the other in appearance.

Mats, of course, look best by themselves, but can be shown along with rolls of carpet.

The above illustration conveys an idea of how a pretty, effective trim can be made by a combination of rugs and bric-a-brac. Carpet sweepers go well with any carpet display, but if there is sufficient stock to draw from, a display of sweepers alone will be found preferable.

The best way of showing furniture is by carrying out the idea of a furnished room. I have found this a very good plan. For instance, if I want to show a bedroom set, I first get a neat wall paper suitable for a bedroom, and cover in the back and sides of the window. Then a molding to match; then pictures, curtains, chamber set, toilet articles for bureau, pillows, counterpane, and everything necessary to furnish a bedroom.

This shows off the suite to perfection, and, in several instances, has sold the whole outfit just as it was, carpet and all. The same idea is applied to dining-room and parlor sets. Odd fancy pieces of furniture can be placed in a display of beautiful coverings. These should not be many, just two or three choice pieces.

Furniture sales window displays should always be well ticketed.

In making a display of Chinese or Japanese rugs or matting, a good idea is to make it a strictly oriental window. Lanterns, parasols, bric-a-brac, fans, etc., give it the oriental appearance, and displays of this kind always attract.

STRONG BACKGROUNDS.

The effectiveness of a background, says The Chicago Dry Goods Reporter, has much to do with the attractiveness of a window display. The simpleness of a background of many a valuable painting may lead one to believe that the background is of little importance, but to get this simple and just right background no doubt required much thought on the part of the artist. Many an otherwise handsome picture is spoiled by an inappropriate background, just so with many a handsome window display. By considering the work of some of our expert window artists, many of the displays are so simple that one wonders what there is to the picture that makes it so attractive to the eye. By carefully examining the picture it will be found that each essential feature is brought out in harmony or pleasing contrast with the other. The background is what pushes the display to the attention of the eye. To carry out its mission it must be right.

Some windows may show up best background by a mirror; others will flatten out with a mirror background. It is a study just as every feature of window advertising is. The result depends upon the picture you present and the impression it makes.

To construct a background, divide the space into sections of about 12 inches. Cut white bunting into stripes a little wider than the spaces, run a shir thread through both edges. Then arrange these strips of bunting on the background, adjusting the shirring to produce the wave effect. Pleat a sunburst where the circles are to be arranged. Then cover 2-inch strips with bright red, and fasten them in place. For the top, cover a 6 inch board with bright red. The circles should be made of boards and puffed with white bunting; then fastened in place about 4 inches out from the background. The space between the circle and the background should be filled in. A decidedly rich effect can be produced by using white sateen and red velveteen. The contrasting color can be selected from any of the many which go with white. Black and white with yellow or deep lavender centres for the circles would prove an effective background for mourning goods or bright colored silks.

The colors to use for a millinery showing are white with deep lavender trimming and yellow or lavender sunburst. Construct about nine pedestals, with about a 12-inch square base and a round top. Cover these with white bunting and trim with contrasting color. These pedestals should be of three heights and three of a height. Arrange them in the window, the lowest ones near the glass. On top of these display trimmed hats arranged on millinery display stands. Fill in the base with flowers and other trimming novelties belonging to this line. The white circles, as well as white spaces of the background, might be made even more effective by arranging violets or other flowers on them.

For corsets, much depends upon your forms, and the color of the corsets you wish to display. If the forms are black and hanging them in slanting position, toes pointing outward. Then arrange three rows of tacks in the ceiling running parallel with the glass. These should be about 12 inches apart. Attach to these tacks black silk thread, forming three loops to each two, the loops to be far enough apart to hang three shoes one above the other; the lower shoe about 18 inches from the floor. Cover the base with bunting. Then place your shoe display stands and arrange shoes on them. Always fill shoes with last, shoe form or curled hair, before placing in the display, because no shoe, even the finest, shows up to the best advantage unless properly lasted. Each shoe should have a price card, and each price card should have the lot number of the shoe upon it, so that customers can designate which shoe is wanted, without taking you outside to show you.

MOURNING GOODS DISPLAY.

A neat and distinctive window of mourning goods at this time may prove productive in several ways, direct business, and impress upon the minds of the people that yours is the store which pays special attention to carrying the goods that make up this feature of the dry goods business. There is little to show now in the millinery department, and as this line receives little display during the millinery season, it's well to create a little interest by showing this line now.

In designing a display of mourning goods it should be kept in mind that it is easier to crowd a display than to show too few goods. With your window all cleared and cleaned, start by covering the background with white bunting or you show black and yellow or red trimmed corsets; white and red or yellow, or yellow and black background would answer best. If forms are red and corsets white, use white and red background. If, as many show them now, your forms and corsets are lavender, use white and lavender.

To present something strikingly pretty for dress goods, work out the background in soft light grey and trim with pink or crimson. Then select a few neat grey dress patterns and drape them over drape forms. Pin a bow of white ribbon, pink or crimson, on each pattern, with a neat price card. Letter one large show card reading: "The always neat and pretty greys rightly priced," and arrange it in the centre of the window near the glass.

For shoes—Color combinations that show shoes to the best advantage are white and yellow, orange and light yellow, white and red, or cerise and sage green. With your background finished, arrange on the circles infants' fancy soft-soled shoes. In the spaces of the background arrange ladies' fine shoes, bleached cotton flannel, pleating it nice and even. At the top and in the centre of the background fasten a half-circle about the size of a wagon wheel felloe, slanting it slightly upward. Across either corner arrange a smaller half-circle the same way. Cover these with white cloth. Then drape a piece of black dress goods (nun's veiling) by throwing a double fold over the centre of the centre hoop, then carrying the ends to either corner. This draping must be done in careful folds. There should be nothing of a careless look about the display of mourning goods. On such white space as shows of the the three half-circles arrange a few bunches of violets. Cover the base with bleached cotton flannel; either smooth or puffed. Then arrange about three drape forms on the base of the window. Over each of these drape a piece of appropriate dress goods, and place a hat stand, or, better still, a wax figure with a mourning hat, on each form. Sparingly about the base arrange bunches of violets to complete your display.

Why Foxes are High-priced.

A few years ago the common red foxes that now command double and triple their former prices were used extensively, mostly by manufacturers of robes and rugs. It is true that about five or six years ago an enterprising dyer tried to obtain a black dye on red foxes, and produced a few skins that, while they were used, never gave any satisfaction. By the time that his black dye was acceptable the demand for black-dyed foxes had died out, and the trade never gave the matter any thought. Black-dyed red foxes were not employed for trimming, or even fancy furs. Red foxes remained a staple for rug trade, but no other outlet made inroads on their usual quantity.

Less than two years ago, American dyers brought out a sable dye on these skins that took the country and trade by storm. One after the other of the leading dyers brought out an improved dye, until the American dye was considered perfect. From the despised red fox, a beautiful sable colored skin was produced, and the style of the whole animal scarf is becoming unprecedentedly popular with the best buying classes. Retailers, from whom the handsome articles were demanded, fell over each other in their endeavors to obtain scarves and muffs. Toward the end of the past season imported samples of the pointed silver fox were shown by retailers, and at once the very best of the buying public "took to" the novelty.

Price being no object in an article that entered from the low fur class to that equal to such furs as martens, mink and skunk, there is nothing surprising in the fact that, when as high a price as $75 is paid at retail for a silver fox set of boa and muff, the raw material should appreciate in price. On the other hand, it is equally likely that, with an assured enormously increased demand, other sources of supply should open which may control in a measure the really surprising rise in price. We hear from the other side that Russian foxes in large quantities are on their way to this country, and, as these have been secured at about three-fifths of the prices paid for American foxes, their coming will tend to keep the price within bounds. We are told that the supply of these is practically unlimited, yet, it is doubtful whether Russians will not be as anxious to benefit by the higher prices prevailing here as the American importers.

Holders of American dyed foxes claim that these skins, which have the texture of the northwestern red fox, will not take the American dye, and that for that reason the public will have to rely on the domestic skins. Manufacturers predict a reduction in the price at the next London sale, which, by the way, is not impossible. Be this as it may, the parties waiting for a decline may perforce remain out of the market during the coming season, as far as the handling of red foxes is concerned. —New York Cloaks and Furs.

Succeeding an Old Firm.

Attention is drawn to the advertisement in this issue of the firm of Edgar, Coristine & Co., who are successors to the Greene & Sons Co., Montreal, who have been well known to the trade for over 50 years. The two principals in the new firm have each had a business experience of over 30 years, and are thoroughly posted and up to-date business men who will be able intelligently to cater to the wants of their friends. A representative of THE DRY GOODS REVIEW was shown through the warehouse the other day, and the assortment of all kinds of hats and caps was simply magnificent. For Spring there is a splendid and varied line of goods. They are specially proud of one novelty, which is the "H. A. and F." stiff hat. For this article Messrs. Edgar, Coristine & Co. are the sole agents in this country. The hat is in many styles—lined and unlined. Altogether the firm claim that their goods are second to none on the market, and with regard to their straws they are satisfied that they have the largest and best assortment to be found. Their travellers will be on the road in a short time with their next season's fur samples, comprising the newest lines in ladies' jackets, fur-lined pellerines, and all the latest New York ideas and designs in ladies' fur ties and collars. The trade are invited and advised to see these samples before placing their orders for the coming season.

A large Canadian Concern

Though the past Winter cannot be called a severe one, Messrs. Jas. Coristine & Co., Montreal, report that the fur trade during the past months has been the best in the history of their business. Of course, the trade, not being weather prophets, have to buy somewhat before the question of weather can be calculated upon; but there is no doubt that the good times are specially relevant to a department such as furs, which many people regard as more or less of a luxury. The price to-day, notwithstanding the great demand, the scarcity of raw material, and the general rise in prices, is, they claim, better than at any time previous, on account largely of the competition of the factories. Their own factory is now manufacturing exclusively in wool-felt hats. This line of goods they had heretofore to purchase in the Old Country. They are turning out 200 to 300 dozen per week, the work in the factory being facilitated by the aid of the newest machinery, which is complete in every particular. Notwithstanding the recent general advances in raw material, they propose to furnish the trade with goods at the same price, or with a few advances on those of last year. This they are enabled to do by having anticipated the market. The advances are liable to be on seal and sable. The firm's employes are working day and night, and could not very well be busier than they are at present. Twenty per cent. more orders have been taken for Spring than were at this time last year. In filling Spring orders they are handicapped by the late delivery of the better class of goods from England. So many steamers have been impressed recently for special service in connection with transport of troops to South Africa that, added to the great demand, conditions have made it impossible to keep up with trade. Some English houses have refused to fill early repeat orders.

Trade in a Western City.

Prices are on the advance in hats as well as in other departments of men's wear, says The Chicago Dry Goods Reporter, and the retailer should ask a reasonable advance from the public, who, under present conditions, are willing to pay it, but who will not pay it unless asked. If a customer comes in and wants to know why you have advanced your $2.50 hats to $2.75 or $3, be able to tell him about the advance in all material entering into the manufacture of hats. If your jobber or manufacturer demands an advance from you, any reasonable purchaser will accept the advance you exact from him. It is poor policy to try to get around this advance in hats by offering a substitute of poor quality. Your customer will not thank you for selling him a hat on which he, perhaps, saves 50c., but looks "seedy" almost from the start.

Stiff hats are evidently coming into favor more than has been usual during the past few years. Last Fall the stiff hat demand was materially better than last Spring, and this season the demand from all over the West is regarded as satisfactory in every particular.

Straw hat manufacturers enjoyed the best year for 10 years past last year, and are preparing for even a better trade during 1900. Crash hats, which have been worn to a considerable extent during the past few years, are dying out, and, it is expected, that this will benefit the straw hat trade a great deal.

Do you advertise a "special" in your hat department to retail at $2 or $3, so that anyone in town may know where he can get a certain value at a fixed price? It is a good idea and one that will build up a permanent hat trade provided good value is given for the money. A number of Chicago hat stores carry nothing but certain grades, and the $2 and $3 hat stores are very popular. This idea can be carried out in the departmental store as well as in an exclusive furnishings or hat store.

Poster and Window Cards.

A handsome and attractive poster, something quite unique in the hat trade, has been got out by Messrs. Waldron, Drouin & Co., wholesale hats and furs, Montreal, for the Spring trade. It is a large illustration in colors of a motor carriage, with two occupants, making its way along a park road, and the awning over the carriage is a stylish hat, one of Buckley & Son's English makes. Any dealer who wants a copy of this handsome poster can have one by dropping a card to the firm. Messrs. Waldron, Drouin & Co. have also issued some beautiful window cards, and dealers who display hats, either in the windows or inside the store, can profitably use them to sell goods. It is by features of this kind that sales are increased.

The London Fur Sales.

Canadian buyers who attended the fur sales in London declare that it was a very exciting experience this year, owing to the high prices that prevailed. Talking to Mr. James D. Allan, who has just returned, THE DRY GOODS REVIEW learned that it was the most buoyant sale in his experience of over 25 years. Some of the highest prices realized do not appeal to experienced buyers as being on a reasonable basis. For instance, the prices paid for seals, showing an advance of 80 per cent. on previous prices, seem absurd and suggest a little cornering. Then, in the matter of foxes, one silver fox sold for £390 sterling, a perfectly unheard of figure. In the matter of Persians, the first point is that these are in universal demand, as it is probable that English, French and German demand for this fur will be large. Advices from Bokhara state that many lambs died in birth and the mothers died also, and now in Russia they are asking 83 roubles for skins which were bought at 53 a short time ago. To illustrate the great increase in the use of Persians it may be mentioned that small German dealers who usually consume about 200 skins would buy 1,000.

Mr. Allan states that all the China stuff has gone up in price and the advance in goats was due to the small quantity which came forward and the demand for it. Astrakhans of fine quality are hard to buy at all, while it may be said there was really nothing that did not sell well at the sales. The price of skunk skins went up 20 per cent and every skin resembling skunk shared in the advance. Grebe is more worn than ever before, while ermine is much in demand, as is also chinchilla. Great quantities of Russian sables were sold, but these are not bought for Canadian trade.

In furs, the business of the world is good except in Russia, where numerous failures have taken place, but this has not affected Canada—the condition in Russia being off-set by fresh demand elsewhere. Mr. Allan, who travelled through a number of countries on the continent, saw in many places the common use of furs for neckwear, etc., and there is every indication that the trade is in for two seasons at least for a great consumption of furs. As to profits, a great deal will depend upon circumstances. The firm will get their stuff ready and will advise dealers who believe they can find customers to order at once and to stand by their orders.

The Cape Soft Felt.

One possible influence of the war on the hat trade is reported by a London correspondent who says: "Present operations in the hat trade point to the probable popular revival, next Summer, of the soft cape hat, in buff color. No doubt the style is being prepared now so that it may be ready when wanted to celebrate a more or less recent victory in South Africa. It is to be hoped, however, that all our articles of attire will not be fashioned in accordance with the only possible ultimate result of the war. The victory of America over Spain was productive, in the States, of the most astounding and eye-aching designs in ties, shirts, socks and waistcoats, and I was assured, soon after that victory, in a letter from a friend in New York, that Americans had taken unto themselves the external decorative characteristics of highly patriotic Christmas trees."

A correspondent asks for the origin of the phrase as "mad as a hatter." The following explanation appears in Dr. Brewer's "Readers' Handbook": "Mad as a hatter, or mad as a viper. Atter is Anglo Saxon for 'adder' or viper, so called for its venomous character; 'ater,' 'poison'; 'atter-drink,' or 'attor-drink,' 'a poisonous drink'; 'attor-lic,' 'snake-like.'" In effect, the words "mad as a hatter" are a corruption of the original phrase, "mad as an atter or adder."

A change has been made in the name of the well-known firm of G. R. Renfrew & Co., Toronto. It will hereafter be known as Holt, Renfrew & Co., the members of the firm being Messrs. John H. Holt and Allan E. Renfrew. Mr. John Bastedo will be, as heretofore, in charge of the Toronto house of the firm.

Hosiery Importers, Jobbers, Domestic Manufacturers and Retailers are likewise interested in the following statement recently made by Jas. T. Smith, of the Lowell (Mass.) Textile School, before a subcommittee of the Federal Industrial Commission, at Washington :

“ It is not difficult to understand what an immense value to the hosiery industry of Germany the invention of the HERMSDORF FAST BLACK has been. We have developed as good a black at Lowell, but the value of the HERMSDORF dye not only depends on the chemicals, but on the methods of manipulation It is a very nice process. It gives a brilliancy to the fibre --- one of the principal reasons why the HERMSDORF dye became so celebrated.”

This report will shortly be transmitted to Congress.

Good Advertising

For Wide Awake Retailers

By F. James Gibson.

Our "Good Advertising" department is to help our subscribers to do better advertising. The gentleman whom we have selected as its conductor is well-known as one of the foremost advertising specialists of the day. Any of our readers who desire the benefit of Mr. Gibson's criticisms on advertisements or advertising methods, or his advice on any advertising subject, can have it or both entirely free of charge by writing to him in care of this journal.

If correspondents so desire, fictitious names or initials may be used for publication. But all requests should be accompanied by the subscriber's name.

EDITOR, Good Advertising,—I have a small dry goods store here and have a good trade, but somehow I got overstocked with ribbons and can't seem to make them sell. Could you tell me how to advertise them in some way that will help me to clear them out?

—ONT., Feb. 16, 1900.

SUBSCRIBER.

[You could make your ribbons go quickly by having some of the stock made into belts, finishing them off with brass and other metal clasps, and advertising them as such. Neck ribbons and millinery made into bows for hats are other ways of putting "live wires" through your ribbon department. If you try these schemes I am sure you will soon cease to be overstocked.]

* * *

Some time ago, a certain well-known 14th street, New York, merchant said to his advertiser: "We have the same class of goods in stock as that of A. & Co., but we don't seem to get that class of trade, although our prices are much lower."

Reason should have told this man that if he tried until doomsday to bring the A. & Co. trade down to 14th street he would not succeed, but reason did not do her duty and he is still trying. The ad. man could not tell him or he would have made for himself an enemy for life.

Moral.—Know your people before you begin advertising. Put forth such inducements as will appeal to the people whom conditions are likely to bring to your store and not to an impossible patronage.

To advertise well does not follow that one must say the article in question has qualities not possessed by anything else of its kind, but in mentioning some quality not spoken of by other advertisers: For instance, Roxbury Rye Whiskey has made a great hit because the sentence "Bottled in Bond" is used wherever it is spoken of. Nearly every whiskey, for that matter, is bottled in the bonded warehouses, but no whiskeyman ever said so. It is a clever idea, and Steinhardt Bros. are to be congratulated

* * *

No matter how little is said in an ad., that little should be magnetic; there is entirely too much mechanical, wooden advertising done.

Merchants who are particular about having clever, up-to-date salespeople will buy newspaper space and use it in making a little feeble cry, not strong enough to hold the reader's eye for a second, much less bring in business.

I suppose that some of these merchants will wake up to this fact some time before the latter part of the next century. If they do not make use of clinching arguments they might as well throw their money away. Many a yard of dress goods has been sold through a ribbon advertisement, and in one instance a woman attended a shirt waist sale and before she left the store purchased a grey tailor made gown to match the "pretty red waist" she bought at "such a bargain."

There is nothing under the sun better able to strengthen a veiling advertisement than to have an unusually pretty girl behind that counter to throw the various gauzes before her face while serving the customer. The sales in the veiling department of a New York house were increased 30 per cent. through this little device.

In short, nearly every line of goods must have some connecting detail in the department—something to clinch the inducement after the people are brought in the store through the newspaper.

A listless, indifferent salesperson can kill the best ad. that was ever written, and a tactless, over-attentive one can do the same thing. As the heart and lungs of the human system work in accordance, so must the advertising and the general management be in harmony with each other.

The best advertisers in the world are those who at some time have themselves sold goods.

These are they who have combined theory with practice and made their own deductions.

Cuts are a vital part of to day's advertising, and the best of drawings should be used, not the dowdy, sloppy, line cuts that can be had cheap. These are a detriment rather than a benefit. Use first-class drawings or else leave the space blank.

A snappy, stylish drawing of a woman's jacket will do more towards sale than 100 words as to its quality and value. If the drawing is poor, last year's sleeves, etc., the "unusually low price" will not have the same effect on the feminine reader. Strictly outline cuts are by far the best for newspaper use, but let the work be done by artists, not "would-be's," and half your work is done.

Originality has put in a great claim for having improved the advertising of the present day.

Judging from some of the horrible examples of "original" advertising I have seen, I believe that advertising would be justified in filing a mighty big claim for damages against "originality." True originality is a result of being natural, therefore, neither affectation nor artifice can produce it, so don't try to be original.

* * *

There are persons who can say as much in half-a-dozen words as other men can in 50. The faculty of brevity is of great service to an advertiser. Let me illustrate what I mean by brevity: During a recent cold snap in New York, one of that city's leading department-store proprietors in looking over his firm's advertising saw no mention of the large stock of skates on the second floor. The next morning his advertising manager found a note on his desk, reading:

"Mr. M:
"Do we sell skates?"
"S. T."

Newspaper and other kinds of advertising space is expensive, and if the advertiser can cut an advertisement in two and preserve, and, perhaps, increase its effectiveness, he is a valuable man.

Not long since, I noticed an advertisement of a polishing preparation in a New York paper, which, for the most part, consisted of the words "A Parlor-maid in a Bottle." This is not only brief, otherwise clever.

A good way to acquire the faculty of brevity in writing is to go over what one has written and relentlessly cut it down to "hard pan," as it were, and then go over it again and cut down still more. Let me illustrate:

JOHN SMITH

Begs to notify his friends and acquaintances that he has opened a new store, where everything in Staple and Fancy Dry Goods can be found at the lowest prices. A call is respectfully solicited.

Reduced to its lowest terms, this will read:

Call and see John Smith's new store. Everything in Dry Goods.

In advertising, there is frequently a craze for being "smart." Cammeyer, the great New York shoe dealer, is one of the latest victims of the disease:

"CAMMEYER" STAMPED ON A SHOE

MEANS STANDARD OF MERIT.

We Talk a Great Deal About Our U C A N B E Z

(You can be easy)

But the shoes deserve it. We cannot say too much in their favor. They are the best shoes in the world at the price, or at anything near the price. All the thousands of persons who have purchased them say the same thing. And you will also when you get a pair on your feet. Why delay when you have only to come here and get them, and both you and your feet be instantly and enduringly happy?

For men, Patent Leather, Black Kid Single Sole, Black Kid Double Sole, Black Calf Double Sole and Black Kid Cork Sole. For women, Black Kid, Patent Leather Tip, Button and Lace.

Women's High Cut Arctics, $2.00.

Alfred J. Cammeyer, 6th Av., Cor. 20th St.

The illustration herewith shows how ridiculous a sensible man can sometimes make himself. The name of Cammeyer stands very high in the estimation of shoe-buyers in New York. In fact, the words "'Cammeyer' stamped on a shoe means standard of merit," come pretty near to expressing the truth in the estimation of the great majority of New Yorkers. But not satisfied with this, along Cammeyer comes with a ridiculous name for a shoe that doesn't really mean anything to most people. If the name "Cammeyer" is not sufficient to sell shoes in New York, the word "Ucanbez" certainly will not be much help.

If Cammeyer has succeeded in getting a new easy-fitting men's shoe, why doesn't he say so!

* * *

A great thing in advertising is to focus the attention upon some particular thing. Glittering generalities don't do much good now-a-days. If there ever was a time when they were useful in advertising, that time has gone by. These two

Both of these advertisements are about the same size, but for one person the Horner advertisement would draw to the store, Flint's would, and probably did, draw dozens. LISTER & CO., LIMITED, ANNUAL MEETING.

THE annual meeting of Lister & Co., Limited, was held in Bradford, Eng., January 30, Lord Masham presiding.

In moving the adoption of the report, the chairman said this year, for the first time for the last six or seven, they had had a rise in the value of raw material; there had, in fact, been a general rise in the value of all products, and they had shared in it. He did not think, however, that the prosperity of their firm had altogether arisen from the general improvement, but arose more from the improved position attained by the firm. They had worked a long time to establish new business and to open out new outlets in different countries, and generally doing their best to improve trade, and, in his opinion, their improvement arose not alone from the general prosperity and the advancement in silk, but largely from a really stronger and better business. The rise in silk had been remarkable—far more than they might have looked for—and was not altogether, he believed, beneficial. The advancement had been too rapid to be retained, and, if retained, he was of opinion that it would be hurtful to business. The directors, however, had worked prudently, and their stocks were such as enabled them to meet the difficulties of the situation. The directors had taken stock at cost price, and not at present day value, so that it was worth more than what it was shown at in the balance sheet. The figures in the balance sheet were not swollen by manipulating the stock, but the accounts showed the dividend to which the shareholders were fairly entitled. Some of their financial critics had expressed the opinion that they should have earned more than 5 per cent., but all he could say was that they had done their best. Mr. B. T. Gibbings seconded the resolution, which was accepted unanimously.

The chairman, in a personal explanation, said that at their last meeting he announced that he hoped this year to retire from the chairmanship of the company. He regretted to say, however, that his son, whom he hoped would meet with their approval as his successor, was not very strong or very well, and, under those circumstances, if it met with the approval of the shareholders, he would like to retain the chairmanship for another year. He was another year older, unfortunately, but he thought he was still as good in his head.—London Draper's Record.

E. G. Hall, of the Emporium, Rat Portage, Ont., is having his establishment renovated for the Spring trade. A new floor is being put in and the entire store given a coat of paint.

THE STATE OF THE MARKETS.

"One is tired of talking about it," said an experienced authority in the trade to THE DRY GOODS REVIEW, "but prices still go up. It is clear that the tendency is from the root up, being based upon rise in raw materials, and that values will be as high, if not higher, for the next 18 months."

"Take the case of cotton goods, for example. At first the idea of a corner in cotton might be suggested by the rapid rise of prices, but the trade are now convinced that the increases are based on natural conditions. Linens, too, are bound to be higher. It is said that all the home-grown Irish flax can be consumed by a single manufacturer of Irish linens. War has developed a feature not hitherto considered. Irish manufacturers have been using Russian flax for the coarser grades of goods, reserving the home-grown for the finer grades. There has arisen a demand for the Russian flax to be used for horse coverings, and this demand has sent the price up about 100 per cent., with a consequent effect upon all manufactured linens.

"The Liverpool and Manchester markets govern the price of raw cotton, and the standard price in the United States of recent years has been in the neighborhood of $5\frac{3}{8}$ or $5\frac{3}{4}$ c. A recent quotation in Manchester is about $10\frac{1}{2}$ c. Now, what does this mean? A reasonable estimate to make of the rise in price in manufactured goods, in sympathy with advances in raw material, is, at least, one third, so that if raw cotton has gone up almost 100 per cent., the manufactured materials will advance $33\frac{1}{3}$ per cent.

"Another controlling feature is the labor question. Organized labor is affecting every branch of manufacture by successful demands for higher wages. This change is taking place simultaneously with the advance in raw materials.

"In the Canadian markets, the best evidence of the condition is the scarcity of United States goods. The manufacturers there have not lately been showing cotton goods of any kind in Canada, although this is usually a dumping ground for their surplus stocks. There has been none of this for months past. The enormous advances in iron have made machinery dearer, so that every factor affecting the cost of textiles tends to a stronger market. There is no perceptible check in the volume of business, due to the South-African War, and in spite of 1900 being the Presidential year, business in the United States is still reported good. No corner in any class of raw materials is known to exist."

THE PROSPECTS OF FORT WILLIAM.

While the representative of THE DRY GOODS REVIEW was in Fort William he had the pleasure of calling on Mr. Marlette, manager of the Hudson Bay Stores, who was good enough to show him through the building. It comprises two stores with an archway joining them. One is given over to the grocery trade, and the other to dry goods; on the second floor, men's furnishings and clothing, next department is devoted to carpets and crockery ware.

Mr. Marlette said: "You know Fort William is only in its infancy. When we get the blast furnaces, copper smelters, and the Ogilvie Co. build their mill and elevator, it will make a wonderful difference. Of course, it is not supposed this will be completed much under two years."

THE ORGANIZATION OF RETAILERS.

THE Ontario organization of retail merchants is again moving to bring the question of departmental stores before the Provincial Legislature. The support of the legislative committee of the Toronto City Council has been secured in promoting a bill to amend the Assessment Law so as to impose municipal taxes upon business firms in proportion to the annual turnover. If the Legislature can be got to devote attention to matters outside of mere party disputes, there seems no good reason why the proposal should not be fully discussed on its merits, and, if it commends itself to practical men, be passed into law.

The secretary of the association, Mr. Trowern, addressed a meeting at Peterborough lately, where a branch of the parent body was formed. In his address he pointed out that on such questions as insolvency bills, municipal taxation, the liability of corporations, trading stamps, and other matters, retail merchants had a deep interest, and should organize to have their wishes obeyed. A criticism of city departmental stores was made, showing that retail merchants were suffering by reason of the misrepresentations which were put out in advertisements, etc., to draw trade away from its natural channels. The Peterborough branch has elected the following officers: President, Robert Fair; 1st vice-president, James Connal; 2nd vice-president, James Lynch; secretary, W. A. Cressman; treasurer, Alex. Gibson. The Peterborough association is thus in capable hands.

Much will depend upon the course retailers pursue. Departmental stores serve a purpose and a general attack upon them, through the press or in a similar public manner, is not always the wisest course. The man who goes hunting with a brass band does not usually shoot the most ducks. There are certain grievances which the retailer has and these ought to be remedied. Organization, a perfect understanding between one another, pressure brought to bear upon individual members of the Legislature and Parliament in the localities they represent are some of the best methods retail merchants can follow. In agitating for changes in the law—for instance, equitable taxation of stores, punishment of false advertisements, etc.—let the case be stated on its merits. If city departmental stores are denounced you hit the great consuming public in its strongest point, namely, the general desire to get goods as cheap as possible. But if a reform asked for is in itself reasonable, it commends itself to reasonable men. We believe that some approach to the German legislation against deluding people by means of lying advertisements is perfectly feasible for adoption in Canada. It would be a protection to the public and would help honest trading. That is its chief merit. That it will hit someone is a matter of secondary importance.

We have always believed that the local merchant is entitled to his local trade. To retain that he must necessarily practice the same enterprise and vigor in vogue with big city establishments. He is also entitled to protection from unfair and illegitimate competition. If asked for in the right way and by the united voice of the trade, we do not believe that any Government, any combination of powers, or any agitation can successfully resist the appeal.

CANADIAN MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION.

EVERY manufacturer in Canada should inquire into the merits of membership in the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. Under the recent change in its management an entirely new life has been infused. Among some of the objects to be attained through its influence may be mentioned: Reduction in the railway freight rates, a proper and equitable insolvency law for all Canada, guarding against injurious legislation, watching hurtful tariff changes, procuring information of a practical nature about foreign markets, and many other important measures for the development and advancement of Canadian manufacturing industries.

As insurance against fire would be a failure unless the whole community paid premiums, so it is with everybody that wishes to attain benefits. Manufacturers in Canada spend thousands of dollars annually to protect their business against an improbable fire. In the Canadian Manufacturers' Association the yearly fee is only $10, and every measure that is considered is for the benefit and gain of every member. Write the secretary for a copy of constitution and by-laws. The association is non-political and extends over Canada, wherever there is a manufacturing district it has members, and every Province has its vice-president. On all the committees outside towns and cities are represented. The executive committee meets every second Tuesday at 2 o'clock, and members of the association are always welcome. Very commodious premises have been secured in the Board of Trade building, Toronto, where will always be found plenty of reference matter in the way of trade papers, returns, freight rates, etc.

THE LINEN SHIRT.

THERE is hardly a line in which cotton has more successfully fought linen than in men's shirts. For superior trade, the finest linen was once required for shirts, but, as whiteness became the great feature of this article of men's apparel, cotton came more and more into vogue.

In order to get a very fine appearance, it was necessary to bleach the linen to such an extent that the wearing qualities of the garments became impaired. This paved the way for the use of cotton, until now, it is said, an all-linen shirt is a rare article. Rich people, including even royalties, are now declared to have only the fronts and cuffs of their shirts made of linen, the bodies being made of cotton. Instead of ordering shirts at about $7 apiece, one of the Rothschilds, who prides himself on being correct in every point of dress, now contents himself with a cotton-body $3 shirt.

Is it not a strange thing that, as the world grows wealthier, the use of the most expensive grades of goods becomes less common? Hand-made goods, which are usually more durable, tend to disappear, and manufacture by machinery rules the roost. This is natural enough for the mass of mankind, who are not anxious to pay any more than they can help. But, one would imagine that, as a certain section of the people in highly-civilized countries grow richer (richer than at any previous period in the world's history), there would grow up beside them a class of makers producing goods for the luxurious classes, which could not be purchased by ordinary people at all. But, speaking in general terms, one man is nearly as well dressed as another. The average millionaire, rolling along in his carriage, is probably no better dressed than the man who walks along the street with but one-fiftieth part of the millionaire's income.

MAIL ORDERS.

THE mail-order business has developed into a great convenience in trade. This is true of both wholesale and retail. Wholesale houses now make a great many shipments in a year in response to orders by mail. The city departmental stores, as is well-known, thrive on mail orders.

What causes more trouble than any other feature in this business, is that the person ordering the goods does not clearly state what he or she wants. The departmental stores usually assign their brightest people to look after the orders received through the mail. The wholesale houses put the duty in the hands of competent men.

But much depends upon the purchaser. If he or she makes a mistake, or does not give a definite description of the lines required, how on earth is the person filling the order to supply the omission? "I am not a mindreader," said a clerk to THE DRY GOODS REVIEW one day, handing over for inspection an order just received; "so how can I tell what was in that man's mind when he wrote that order?" It was well-nigh impossible to know exactly what was wanted. However, after careful thought, a certain line of goods was deemed the one required, and, as prompt shipment was requested, it was sent out. It proved satisfactory, at least no complaint was ever made.

At the same time, purchasers, whether in the trade or merely individual consumers, ordering from a merchant, ought to bear in mind the difficulties which a vague order entails. No one wants to wait for goods, nor is it satisfactory to have further correspondence, as life is too short to spend it in writing two letters where one will do.

Therefore, clear, definite orders should be encouraged, and no purchaser has a right to complain if trouble arises from his own faulty statement. The city departmental stores go to immense pains in filling out-of-town orders. They know quite well that if this was not done their trade would fall off.

WOOLLEN GOODS IN AUSTRALIA.

If a better tariff arrangement between Canada and the new Australian Commonwealth were to be effected during the next few years might not our woollen mills look for increase of trade there? The British woollen manufacturers do a large trade there now. Their travellers make regular trips to the Antipodes, and some mills have regular agents there, either with or without stock.

The principal woollen goods of Australian manufacture are made in the colony of Victoria. The extent of this industry at the present time is as follows:

Spindles in use.....	23,065
Wool used.....	2,685,803 lb.
Cotton used.....	188,000
Pairs of blankets made.....	23,872
Shawls made.....	2,375
Tweed, cloth, etc., made.....	988,067 yds.
Flannels made.....	1,031,914 yds.

This indicates a woollen industry of some dimensions, but at the same time the imports of woollen materials are large, and as Victoria sells less than £50,000 worth yearly of these goods to her neighboring colonies, it is clear that the union of the whole continent under one tariff, with a mutual preference between Canada and Australia, would afford an opening which our mills should not be slow to avail themselves of. We must trade where we can, not where we would like to trade. Australia is a distant market and, therefore, an expensive one in which to initiate trade. But, as the United States do not want and will not take our goods, it is well to look elsewhere.

SELLING TO EMPLOYEES.

SEVERAL merchants in the Eastern Townships of Quebec Province have had an interesting correspondence. It has been sent to THE DRY GOODS REVIEW for publication, and will be found in another column. The question dealt with by these gentlemen is the price at which employes in their own stores should be allowed to buy goods.

We would like to hear from other merchants on the question, which is one deserving of consideration. The three merchants whose letters are given, namely, Mr. W. G. Brown, of Cowansville; Mr. J. J. Mullin, of Bedford, and Mr. A. J. Hudon, of Richmond, are of one mind on the subject. They agree that it is not sound business to sell goods at invoice prices, because, of course, that is less than the actual cost of them, and a wise merchant does not wish to sell goods except at a profit.

There are the two standpoints from which the matter can be looked at. First, there is the merchant's position, which is, as we have said, dictated by the desire not to lose money on his goods. If he clears out the remainder of a line at a reduction he is supposed to have made his profit on the early sales. Consequently, a clearing line is not a precedent for selling goods to anyone below cost.

Then there is the employe's standpoint. They appreciate good treatment, and it is always the best policy to treat them well. They are, doubtless, glad to get goods for their own use at the lowest possible price. If they get them at invoice prices they know that is less than cost. Then it becomes a money bonus to them. Is it not, however, better to get a concession in hard cash than in goods? The temptation to buy more than one needs is strong when one feels that goods can be got under current rates. Many employes, most of them, probably, would prefer all concessions from the merchant to come in the shape of their salary. As the business prospers they will receive a higher rate of pay. If, however, any employe has a different opinion, and cares to express it, without giving his name for publication, we shall be glad to print it.

SUBSTITUTION AND CASH PURCHASES.

A CORRESPONDENT, signing himself "Business Man," writes us: "In nearly every issue of your paper, you advocate buying goods for cash. I wish to make the remark that retail business men cannot buy goods for cash and make it pay, for the simple reason that the wholesalers in Canada would rather sell on credit. I have ordered goods in Canada and sent the money with the order, and every time my order has been substituted."

Our correspondent, who wishes to be anonymous, goes on to state that, in one instance, he sent an order to the agent of a firm, enclosing a cheque for the amount. The goods received were not what he ordered. There was no invoice accompanying the goods. He returned them and demanded the money back, but the goods were merely sent back to him without explanation. Our correspondent concludes: "Do you call that business?" and remarks that probably the firm itself had no knowledge of its agent's proceedings. No doubt, and our correspondent might have written direct, and his grievance would have been remedied. Every first-class house is anxious to oblige its customers, and does oblige them very often. Difficulties will occur sometimes, even when precautions to avoid them are taken, but we have never yet found a case where an explanation could not clear up a misunderstanding. It does not follow that either the retailer or the wholesaler is always wrong.

Where cases of substitution occur it may be due to the vague wording of the order, or a misunderstanding by the traveler, or a mistake in the wholesale house, but in any event it is well to have the whole thing cleared up. Mistakes will occur. If there was an infallible rule for preventing them this world would be a paradise. But we do think that the retailer, on making a complaint, is entitled to prompt attention and courtesy; and that any honorable firm, on making its explanation, is equally entitled to belief and confidence on the part of its customer.

THE U. S. MOVE AGAINST RECIPROCITY.

CERTAIN manufacturing interests in the United States are opposing a project to have a reciprocity treaty with France. One article in the proposed treaty provides for a reduction of 5 per cent. in the existing duty on silk goods and cotton fabrics mixed with silk, and this, it is contended, will disadvantageously affect the manufacturers of upholstery fabrics. One of our upholstery and carpet contemporaries in the United States says:

American mills would do well to look closely into what is being attempted. German and French agents have already been taking advantage of the stoppage of our curtain and piece goods mills, incident to the present strike, and orders have been booked which should have stayed at home.

There is nothing to be particularly coveted in a close alliance with France if our working people are to be the sufferers in consequence.

What comes from there should pay a stiff duty, and if enough French goods do not come in under the highest rates, the output of our own mills will abundantly provide what is lacking in stuffs quite good enough.

We do not blame our American friends for looking carefully after their own interests. If they do not, no one else will. But to the foreign mind the question naturally suggests itself: How high do the United States interests think their tariff can be put without courting retaliating measures abroad, and how do they expect American goods to be purchased by foreigners if they are going to decline to buy the goods of those foreigners? These conditions take time to work out, but, as the Dingley tariff is abnormally high, and likely to remain in force for some time to come, we cannot help thinking that Europe will one day begin to take combined action. So far, Great Britain has stood in the way. By admitting American goods free of duty, she is thus the best friend the Republic has across the ocean. But supposing she modified her policy in the direction of an Imperial tariff, in order to found an Imperial defence fund, would not the Americans suffer? There is such a thing as overdoing protection.

In Canada, our tariff which is low compared with that in the United States would not last two years if an equally convenient means of raising enough revenue could be devised. But, as our population is widely scattered, the cost of collecting direct taxation renders it impracticable as a method of providing revenue. But even our low tariff tends to become lower rather than higher, and it would not be surprising if the duties on British goods were still further reduced as time goes on.

TRADE MARK.

Carpets, Curtains and Upholstery.

THE OUTLOOK IN PRICE.

THE buyers of carpets must look forward in the near future to paying more for all lines. Every item in raw material has very much advanced, and there appears to be no prospect of a reduction for some time. Wool, cotton, linen and jute are scarce, hence the rise.

Raw material for textiles differs very distinctly from that of any other class of manufacture. Sheep have to be raised and the wool to grow; cotton to be cultivated, also linen and jute. The silkworm also has to be propagated. But industries relying on woods or metals only need the application of energy to give them what is needed in a given time.

In carpets, some dealers are always willing to buy what happens to be a good-looking line, if it happens to be low priced, without regard to the honesty of its yarns. And high-priced yarns will always give a careless maker of carpets the opportunity to put on the market an inferior, but nice-looking, article.

Here is where the value of a trade mark comes in. It is the honesty it guarantees that gives it value, and any manufacturer who respects his credit will not destroy the value of his trade mark. Caution should be used by buyers to guard themselves against deleterious carpets going into their stocks, which will surely do harm to the reputation of the carpet department. Buy from reputable houses. Buy standard goods, and be prepared to pay the advance for reliable goods.

THE CHINESE MINISTER AND ENGLISH CARPETS.

The Chinese Minister Plenipotentiary, Sir Chihchen Lofenghih, is making an industrial tour of the great manufacturing centres of Great Britain, accompanied by his staff. The scope of his investigations has included almost every department of industry. One of the most attractive operations seen by Sir Chihchen was the manufacture of carpets in Kidderminster.

The finest carpet works visited was that of Woodward, Grosvenor & Co., Limited, which, according to Commerce, London, may justly be regarded as being the head of the British carpet-weaving industry, their turnout of brussels, wilton and axminster carpets being enormous. The firm dates back to the 18th century, and was originally formed for the manufacture of bombazine, many ancient patterns of which were shown the visitors from the Orient. The treatment of the various designs well-known to the trade as "Oriental," "Empire," "Adams," and "Louis XVI.," was carefully gone into, and His Excellency expressed great admiration at the exquisite effects produced. In the course of his conversation with Mr. Grosvenor, Sir Chihchen remarked that the principal carpet centres in China were in the north, the rigors of the climate rendering heavy carpets necessary. In the south, he explained, matting was principally used for floor covering. The Kidderminster carpets were considered a great luxury in that section of China.

The works of John Brinton & Co., were also visited. These are the principal spinning and weaving works of the place, and turn out a large quantity of material. The various stages through which wool is converted into worsted were carefully examined by His Excellency, and pointed questions were put as to the organization of this vast establishment. Of more than ordinary interest was a magnificently constructed loom, capable of weaving an axminster carpet in one process.

The perfecting of this machine has taken many years to accomplish, improvement after improvement being made in order to make the loom the complete thing that it is.

COSEY CORNERS.

A professional decorator, in speaking of the cosey corner fashion, said: "It is so now that there is not a library or hallway, not an upstairs sitting-room or even a dining-room, in houses of any pretensions to comfort which is not fitted with canopied couches. It does not seem to matter whether the style of the room admits it or not. It does not matter either with what the couch is canopied and cushioned, though assuredly turkey red calico would be preferable to much of the material used. Bagdad curtains which have outlived their best usefulness, bits of colored spreads, lengths of cloth picked from bargain counters and draped over a frame are accounted sufficient to make a room attractive, and are introduced regardless of the room itself. Even drawing-rooms, where a certain amount of dignity is looked for at least, are invaded.

"The third floor 'dens' in so many houses started the fad. In dens cosy corners are eminently fit. Nothing lends such an air of comfort, and even suggestion of Bohemianism, as such a corner, where the rest of the furniture of the room consists of odds and ends in old oak and cast and brasses picked up everywhere and huddled in a room with no thought of fitness. A den is a delicious place, and no home should be without one. But where the exigencies of the rooms will not admit one, it is by no means desirable than an attempt at a den be made in the down-stairs rooms, to the destruction of their individuality.

"'Magazine illustrations of the ideal room,' said an architect lately, 'have done more toward making inartistic homes than has any other one influence. Window seats were all right. But a bit of Oriental stuff draped over a stick, and a tabouret set near it, are neither artistic nor desirable, and nine times out of ten quite destroy the character of a pretty, albeit somewhat commonplace, room.'"—N. Y. Upholstery Trade Review.

TRADE REPORTS FROM ENGLAND.

It appears that the carpet and kindred trades in England are very active just now. Mr. Mitchell, the buyer for John Macdonald & Co., who has just returned from Europe, says that the first advance in the price of carpets went into force in January and amounted on all tapestries to one half penny per yard. It is expected that by the time new business for Fall is placed a much stiffer advance will be put on.

Linoleums and floor oilcloths are now up 25 per cent. in price and the manufacturers claim at the present prices they are not getting cost, seeing that oil is up 100 per cent. and that about 65 per cent. of linoleum is oil. Then, again, canvas is not only up 20 per cent. but the demand cannot be supplied by the Dundee maker, who supplies the whole world with this material. Therefore, the British linoleum manufacturers believe that this is a critical time for them as they fear they will either have to close down for a certain number of days per week or else work short time. In consequence, the manufacturers will not take orders for future deliveries except at prices prevailing at the time of delivery. They have not raised prices in proportion to the advance in their raw materials so that if any decline takes place in these raw materials the price list for the manufactured lines will not require any modification.

In the case of lace curtains and curtain goods the English prices are up from 10 to 25 per cent. while jute goods are firm with 10 per cent. advance. On account of the amount of business which the manufacturers have handled, they say that new patterns are out of the question and that therefore the best a man can do, with possibly a few exceptions, is to make repeats of the best sellers of last season.

A LARGE STAFF OF TRAVELERS.

Ten travelers are now on the road representing the firm of Messrs. George H. Hees, Son & Co. Besides, they have one resident traveler in Newfoundland and one in Australia. Their new lines of upholstery goods and lace curtains are meeting with unlooked for success, and from this fact it must be granted that their goods as well as their prices are very satisfactory, for no shrewder buyers are to be found in any country than right here in Canada. Messrs. George H. Hees, Son & Co. handle such immense quantities of upholstery goods and lace curtains that they are able to have the leading foreign factories confine their goods in Canada to them exclusively. At their new upholstery plant in Valleyfield, new looms are constantly being added, and some of their latest productions would be a credit to any of the oldest manufacturers. No one in the Dominion handling upholstery goods, lace curtains, window shades, drapery poles and trimmings or other goods they either manufacture or control can afford to pass by this progressive firm. If you are not already dealing with Messrs. George H. Hees, Son & Co. write to them to have one of their travelers call on you. Their travelers cover all parts of the Dominion. For the convenience of the trade in the vicinity of Montreal, they have fitted up the premises at 43 St. Sacrament street, which are in charge of Messrs. Duverger and Torrance.

A LATE ENGLISH REPORT.

A late report from England, in The Kidderminster Shuttle says: "The tone of the carpet trade has improved. On the whole manufacturers are well employed, and in some instances pressure is being applied for the execution of Spring orders. The question of an advance in the price of carpets cannot now long be deferred, and it is stated in some quarters that action will be taken within the next week or two. One of the questions which is exercising the minds of business men just now is the advance established in all kinds of material. It is not only in yarns, cotton and jute, that the manufacturer has had to face a rising market, but in such subsidiary materials as oil, soap, leather, iron work and fuel. These items, perhaps small in themselves, considerably increase the regular charges of a manufacturing concern and emphasize the importance of a revised price list for carpets. In wools and yarns trade is progressing in a steady and satisfactory manner. Prices both for wools and yarns are for the moment stationary, but the marked advances secured some time back are being maintained, and a fair steady trade is passing."

CARPET TRADE NOTES.

The large carpet sizes in Smyrna rugs continue to grow in favor, and the line made by the Toronto people is worth attention. The plain color ingrains used so much with them can be had in several popular shades.

The lace industry in Ayrshire is reported to be in a satisfactory state, although the output of some firms is restricted, owing to a scarcity of weavers. Manufacturers are busy with the designs for next season. In the home markets the demand is for Brussels—net and double-action curtains. Designs of a light and fanciful style are in request for the American market.

A hall carpet lasts for years, but the same fabric used on the stairs becomes shabby in a few weeks, and threadbare in a few months. To prevent this, step plates and nosings of metal have been tried, but have proved unsatisfactory, being noisy, ill-looking and dangerous. Many an accident has occurred through a shoe or a skirt catching in them, or by the slipping of a foot on the smoothly worn surface. They were liable to crack, bend or break after short use, and a great deal of labor and care was required to keep them clean. The patent rubber nosing, known as Knapp's, is coming widely into use.

The Toronto Carpet Manufacturing Co., Limited, have just placed on the market one of the most popular rugs they have yet issued. The trade will recall the success of their "Jubilee" Axminster rug, and, believing that the patriotic feeling now so strong all over the country would appreciate a patriotic rug, they have just issued a Smyrna rug in their "Tecumseh" quality, size 30 x 60, adapting the bull-dog and Union Jack, after the celebrated painting of "What we have, we'll hold." The coloring has been carefully studied. There is no doubt this rug will have a large sale, and orders should be sent in at once.

FRINGES.

Just of late the trade in general has not been quite so brisk. There is not so much demand as there might be for the long and expensive lines of fringes; but, in spite of this fact, the demand for nearly all lines is on the increase. The favorite fringe is the ornament for the front of the skirt. This has taken very well indeed. As stated before, the fringes are in all colors, and some wholesalers have gone to the trouble of selecting a full line of fringes in every shade. The majority, however, prefer to keep to the black, as it is suitable to any shade of color or ground, whereas the colors are frequently hard to match. The medium black fringe is enjoying an extensive sale.

The Toronto Board of Trade has appointed a sub-committee on new industries to cooperate with the city assessment department. A proposition is now before it to establish in the city a factory for making cotton duck. Mr. Charles Grantham, of Yarmouth, N.S., who has the project in hand believes that an investment of $500,000 would create a mill employing 400 hands and be a paying investment.

A TRIBUTE TO CANADIAN GOODS.

THE Southern Review of Commerce, published at Louisville, Ky., says: "It is a well-known fact that during the eighteen years' existence of The Southern Review of Commerce there has never appeared upon its pages the indorsement of any unreliable article or manufacturer, and in order to sustain its reputation for honest and unprejudiced opinions on all subjects called to our attention by subscribers, we never make a recommendation until after we have first satisfied ourselves, beyond the possibility of a doubt, as to what article, line of goods or manufacturer (as the case may be), is actually the best and most meritorious. These investigations are conducted by our representatives in various parts of the country and without the knowledge of anyone in any way connected with the article in question. Accepting no pay or reward of any kind therefor we are always in a position to state the facts as they are actually found to exist.

"In pursuance with our policy we have just concluded one of our invariably careful and exhaustive investigations on the subject of underwear for the benefit of dealers among our subscribers, and now have no hesitancy in recommending the Penman Manufacturing Company, Limited, of Paris, Ontario, as making the best and most reliable line on the market.

"In the production of their goods, every care is used, both in the selection of the material used and the manufacture and the skilled labor necessary to successfully complete the product. Their mills are equipped with the latest and most improved machinery and appliances which enables them to give a finer finish and at a less cost than any of their competitors.

"We advise those who have written us, and others who may be interested in this editoial, that you place yourselves in direct communication with the above firm, or Messrs. D. Morrice, Sons & Co. of Montreal, Quebec, selling agents. Inquiry from them will doubtless elicit information as to further details which space limitation prevents our giving in these columns.

"We take pleasure also in recommending manufacturers and selling agents alike as gentlemen of the highest commercial standing, with a known reputation for business integrity and fair and honorable dealing.

"We realize the importance of such a decision since we are aware that our readers will accept it as final and worthy of the fullest credence. However, the superior quality of their product justifies The Southern Review of Commerce in giving this firm its editorial indorsement and the dealer who handles this line of goods will find that he has in them not only a popular but a profitable line of goods.

"In conclusion we might add that we have no interest in the above firm or their selling agents, other than to place a reliable manufacturer of underwear before our subscribers, whom only we seek to serve."

BLOUSES.

Tooke's sale of blouses is on the increase. The demand for silk blouses is notably so, notwithstanding the advanced prices in silk. Cotton blouses are up again, on account of the difficulty of getting cotton from the mills. As one merchant said, "It is like drawing teeth to get your orders filled." The trade are requested not to be in too much of a hurry therefor, but to have some patience; and another thing that should be remembered is that orders which have been sent in months ahead must naturally receive attention before those which are now coming in. As to design, the same is still the case as has been for some time past, stripes, large ones, are in favor, and large figures. The new dress sleeve has taken particularly well, and is most popular with white goods and muslins.

BULLER AND WHITE.

The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, Toronto, always up-to-date and in the front ranks, like the gallant Highlanders, have cabled for and received, just in time for the relief of Kimberley and Ladysmith and the surrender of Cronje, a most suitable patriotic handkerchief, assorted in various colors and two designs, one being a map of South Africa with lifelike photos of the gallant Col. Baden-Powell, who has held Mafeking, Hildyard, Methuen and Gatacre, with the appropriate motto, "Empire Welders." The other is a picture of the "hero bugler" and an equally appropriate motto, "United We Stand," and photos of the gallant Generals Buller, White and Symons and Governor Milner. They are put up in 10-doz. bundles, and sell on sight, and the trade can wire or telephone for them while the patriotic wave is on.

BRISK SEASON AND HIGH PRICES.

The new department of The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, Toronto, report a very satisfactory trade in all grades of carpets and housefurnishings. A sharp advance in prices on all classes of goods in this branch has spurred the retailer who has sufficient foresight to anticipate his wants for the next few months. This has made trade unusually brisk. The firm expect this state of things to continue for some time and are augmenting their stock in anticipation.

S. Greenshields, Son & Co. state that they can now quote on Shetland floss for Fall delivery, and request that they be written to for prices.

Messrs. Hainstock & Dean, of Olds, Alberta, have sold out to J. Brumpton, of Moorefield, Ont. Mr. Brumpton has been in business some fifteen years in Ontario and intends to open an immense display of goods at Olds this coming Summer.

The old firm of Lajoie & Finn, in business at Three Rivers for the past twenty-eight years, have sold out. One of the firm, H. Lajoie, died not long ago, and the remaining partner, N. Lajoie, retired. The business will be carried on by the firm of Lajoie, Frere & Co., composed of Riel Lajoie, A. Fugere and Nap. Desaulniers.

MESSRS. WILSON & RANKIN'S STORE.

IN the present issue will be found two interior views of the establishment of Messrs. Wilson & Rankin, in Brandon, Manitoba. These views are both interesting and instructive to the trade generally, for they are full of suggestion as to the display and arrangement of stock, and indicate taste and management of a high degree in interior store system. The views also reveal to the eastern merchant the magnificent stores which are growing up in our western country. The arrangement and style of the men's furnishings department and the dress goods department, both of which are shown in the illustrations, are well worth an examination. Messrs. Wilson & Rankin are old readers of THE DRY GOODS REVIEW, and when Mr. Rankin was in the eastern cities lately on a buying trip he discussed business matters freely with a reporter.

The business situation in Manitoba, he said, was satisfactory, for the crop outlook was good, and, while the mild winter had doubtless interfered with the trade of some merchants in heavy goods, it was also true that, as a general thing, trade was good and people were making money. Another matter of equal importance to the country, Mr. Rankin pointed out, was the growth of immigration. As an accidental illustration of the tendency to locate in the West he had met a gentleman in Chicago, who owned 5,000 acres of land in Dakota, and who said that, as

United States land was becoming scarce, people were looking to Manitoba, and he himself had thought of making purchases in that Province.

THE POSITION OF IMPORTED GOODS.

Mr. A. H. Hardy, of S. Greenshields, Son & Co., has just returned from Europe. During his stay there he carefully studied the English and continental markets, and found a heavy advance in the prices of all lines of dry goods. Moreover, the working classes are getting higher wages, and will only work on the better classes of goods, which compels the manufacturers to give very slow delivery of low and medium-priced lines. Even in such regular lines as cotton and cashmere hosiery, handkerchiefs, laces, lawns and muslins, etc., manufacturers will not bind themselves to any particular date for delivery. There is every prospect of further advances, and Mr. Hardy advises cautious buyers, who have not already bought for their Summer season, to place their orders as soon as possible with his firm. There will be a scarcity of popular and fashionable goods for Summer trade, and the careful buyer should not lose any time in securing at once lines which are likely to be in demand for the season.

MONTREAL COTTON CO.'S STRIKE.

At time of writing, the strike of the operators in the mills of the Montreal Cotton Co. had not been settled. This is regrettable. It seems that the operators did not know exactly what they wanted. They at first asked for an advance in wages of 10 per cent., and got from 11 to 15, according to the quality of work done. They then stated that this was not what was wanted, and demanded 10c. on every 100 lb., an increase which would amount to from 35 to 50 per cent., according to the quality of work. It is stated by the authorities that the wages earned by some of the girls in this department are as much as $4.50 to $5 per week. Every girl has the same chance; but, of course, there are different degrees of smartness in this as in every other line of business. The millmen think it would be considered rather peculiar if the large retail dry goods stores were asked to pay salesmen and saleswomen all the same salary. At time of going to press, though help was still out, the dye works and bleachery were in operation.

Men's Furnishings.

AS stated in the last issue of THE DRY GOODS REVIEW, there is going to be a special feature made this year by most of the large houses of Easter trade. There has been lots of time this year for sorting over and getting ready; and the new goods for Spring are being got in order. By the time this number reaches subscribers the various travelers will be on their respective routes with Easter neckwear. As regards the style, shape and color of these goods, predictions have come true. Puffs are dropping off for the most part, and the great favorites will be flowing ends, with graduated derbys, and flowing end derbys. The Paris tie, with pointed end, for making into a bow, has always a certain amount of demand, and can be counted on for Spring. Knots are taking the place of puffs. So much for the shape.

In color, as is to be expected for Spring, the shades are very bright. It is worth remarking that the shades are precisely those which have obtained throughout the Fall and Winter, i. e., all kinds of purple, with "Jack Rose" red and "Eldorado" red. The fact is, that the leading New York haberdashers, who discarded these colors last Fall, have taken them up again. The ground colors for 1900 are given as marine blue, royal blue, blue purple, and prune. For Easter, there will be a great deal of white ground introduced. The styles which will take most are not in stripes, but in large designs—ornaments, squares, circles, etc. Stripes are not quite so much in favor as heretofore. A particularly bright design is the Paisley design; it may almost be styled flashing. Another novelty is the "Rasimire" wove ground. This stuff has a peculiarly pretty effect, and is in various colors. It ought to be a decided success. Some houses, which are alive to the possibilities of catching public fancy, have gotten out designs of a patriotic nature. Tooke Bros. have what they call heraldic designs—crowns, shields, and the like, in 36 different combinations.

The Brais Estate Sold.

On Tuesday, February 27, the entire stock of the firm of Glover & Brais, Montreal, was auctioned. According to the inventory taken, the total value was $70,115.14. The terms were cash, with a 10 per cent. guarantee deposit by purchaser, with an allowance of seven days in which to check the stock. In case of default on his part, this money is forfeit, and the vendor will sell again. It was thought at first that fixtures were included, but it was found that these belonged to the landlord, and they were taken out.

The auction was in three lots. (1) The wholesale stock of men's furnishings, etc., McGill street; (2) The retail stock, at 263 St. James street, and (3) The book debts. Lot 1 was bought at 67½c. by Mr. F. F. Kelly, Montreal. Lot 2 was bought by Mr. Goold, of Port Hope, at 47c., and lot 3, the book debts, amounting to $32,459.65, were taken by G. Deserres, Montreal, at 58¾c. The bidding was not overly brisk, but the prices fetched were considered very good, indeed, especially for lot 3, which, of course, the purchaser takes entirely at his own risk. The bidding for lot 3 was the busiest of all.

The Style in Colored Shirts.

To look at a number of windows where the new season's colored shirts are on view, one might readily believe that anything in the shape of a bright-colored striped shirt would pass muster this season. But, when the study made is close, it is found that French gingham takes precedence as material, with Scotch zephyrs and cambrics also correct and in favor, and that the new (and consequently correct) colors are blue, pink and heliotrope. The stripes are almost always up and down the bosom—the exception being made in the case of the wide, loud stripes, which run across the front. While stripes are universal, the design is often varied by the addition of a small pattern. One shirt I noticed was of heliotrope, with narrow, white stripes an inch apart. Between the stripes, small white fleur de lis were arranged at regular intervals. This did not take away the effect of the stripe, but, because of the regularity of the patterns, rather aided this effect.

Men's Gloves.

The grey gloves, although worn to some extent for a year past, have come into sudden and extensive demand in Chicago, says The Reporter, and manufacturers are busy trying to cope with the flood of orders from all sections. The reason given for the great popularity of the greys in gloves is undoubtedly due to the fact that they can be worn with the Oxford, black and dark grey overcoats now so much in vogue.

Mocha skins, owing to the large demand, have advanced in price considerably of late. One of the large Eastern manufacturers is preparing to sell direct to the retail trade, as the skins are so high the jobber cannot handle the gloves with a profit. A great many retailers have frequent calls for foreign-made gloves, and the customer is not satisfied with any other.

Silk-lined gloves for cold weather are coming in to stay. They appear to have reached as near perfection as skill can

The Well-Dressed New York Man.

A New York correspondent in Vogue, who is an authority on the best fashions among well-dressed men, says: "During next Summer I venture to predict that flannel trousers will again be rather smarter than knickerbockers for golf, but for cycling, for camp, the woods and the mountains, knickerbockers are so comfortable and serviceable as to be sure of maintaining their place, and every man must have one or two pairs of them. The cut is very full over the thighs and rather tight at the knees, something after the fashion of riding breeches, though, of course, not as pronounced, as the narrowing down of the cloth is more gradual. The baggy fold over the knees, which was one of the features of the knickers of two years ago, is thus done away with. Cuffs, or extensions, are of box cloth, and should button tightly over the legs just below the knees. The best materials are the Scotch goods of quiet and unnoticeable pattern. It is well to have at least two pairs of knickerbockers. For golf or skating in Winter one needs something rather thick and heavy, whereas the light and more loosely woven materials are decidedly the most comfortable for warm weather.

Stockings should be plain in color, except at the tops, where they are turned down over the calf, and even at the tops the color ought not to be too bright and striking. Duck trousers were very little worn by smart men during last Summer. A garment possessing the charm of novelty, which has been somewhat worn in England lately for wheeling, is a sort of combination of knickerbockers and gaiters; that is to say, a pair of trousers rather full above the knee and very tight from the knee down, ending in ordinary spats that buckle under the boots. I have, as yet, not seen them worn in this country, and am inclined to doubt if they ever become popular here. Another article of man's attire as yet little used on this side of the water is the puttee. Puttees are extremely serviceable for shooting as well as good looking, if properly put on, and the fact that they are still uncommon is an extra point in their favor.

Of the other garments that must be included in the stocking of a wardrobe are sweaters and waistcoats. The heavy ribbed sweaters with high rolled collars are the best of all protections from the cold, as every man knows who has gone forth before daybreak on a cold November morning, and crouched behind a blind on some marshy point to wait for the ducks to fly over him. For ordinary use, however, the sweater that is cut away at the neck so as to show the collar and tie, is rather better looking and a little the smarter. It is usually necessary to have these made to order, as comparatively few shops keep this model in stock.

On a former occasion I mentioned fur waistcoats as being rather smart, and suggested as a good and less expensive way of making them, to have some variety of short-haired fur, such as sealskin or Persian lamb, put over an ordinary single-breasted, high-cut, cloth waistcoat. These waistcoats are far less common than the knitted ones, and they have far more style. A little noticeable, perhaps, but a man can afford to be so in some ways if the things he wears are good style and good form.

A fit shooting coat is made of tweed, cut loose and roomy, with large pockets on the sides and a breast pocket, all placed on the outside. There should be knickerbockers of the same material, and pullers, or heavy ribbed stockings, with high gaiters. Boots of heavy tanned leather.

For ordinary wear with knickerbockers, I should advise a black, or at least a dark sack jacket and waistcoat, not a jacket made of the same material as the trousers. "Knickerbocker suits" have never been much worn by well-dressed men in this country, so far as I have observed, and they are now too common in the cheap shops to be good style.

With shirts as with shoes, the same rule holds good, that it is the best economy to have a number. A shirt worn often must necessarily be often washed, and there is nothing so bad for it as washing, except the ironing that follows after. Two weeks' wear will not cause the same damage to it as one bad doing up, and good laundry work is one of the hardest things in the world to find.

On white evening shirts attached high standing collars are usual, but not, so far as I have been able to discover, particularly to be desired. If one has well made and good-fitting shirts and good, heavy detached collars, they will sit quite as well as if attached, and will launder far better. Some men may think differently; I have had so many shirts ruined by having the collars pulled all out of shape in the "doing up" that I may be a little prejudiced. The evening shirt should be of plain white linen, without rib, ruffle, or adornment of any description. Even plain pique is not used by well dressed men. The shirt should have a broad bosom with two small buttonholes for the studs, and open only in front. The cuffs should be rather small and made rather sharply rounded or square at the corners. The stud buttonhole at the back should be parallel with the band.

Colored morning shirts just now are being made with stripes running up and down the bosom and cuffs. Stripes may be fairly broad in pinks, blues, or lavender. The cut is practically the same as that of the evening shirt, except that the bosom may be narrower. I have seen some that opened all the way down the front, so that one could put them on like a jacket, and I think the idea a good one.

Khaki in London, Eng.

A drygoodsman who had just returned from a buying trip to England was asked by THE REVIEW as to the amount of khaki he had seen in London, England. "Not a great deal," was his reply; "In men's wear the only khaki article I noticed was a cheap necktie of mercerized cotton with silk finish. This makes a nice, cheap line, which they are selling at 1s., or less. In ladies' wear it is more popular, but it is only made in woollen materials, and is made up largely into ladies' skirts. The mills are finding a great customer in the British Government just now, which has recently placed one order for 3,000 pieces."

Colored or White Shirts.

It is noteworthy that there is in the large centres a steadily-growing preference for colored shirts over the white shirt for business wear. A few years ago the white shirt was supreme during business hours. Gradually, however, has come the change, until now the white shirt has to take second place. The variety of coloring and design in the popular article is remarkable. The elderly business man wears, as a rule, a shirt of soft hues and a stripe or check so small that one never notices the design. The younger man, as a rule, however, is not content with anything so quiet. He takes unto himself a shirt with stripes anything from a quarter of an inch to an inch and a half in width, and of the most flaring colorings ever produced. When one considers the extreme to which many men go who discard the white shirt for the colored, one can understand the deep-rooted objection many women have had to the latter. This antipathy is steadily becoming less pronounced, for the reason, possibly, that a moderate toned shirt of small, neat pattern, is really a "tasty" article of apparel. But tastes differ, and the loud designs will continue to have their share of the demand as well as the quieter ones. Almost every furnisher I know is making displays of colored shirts, either in their windows, or indoors—a favorite method being to devote a large table in the centre of the store, or a counter to them, leaving them in their boxes, which are, of course, open, so that a customer can freely examine them. Others show them in glass counter cases, with a few samples on the top.

Striking Neckwear Displays.

The variety of materials and the great range of gay colorings gives to the furnishing displays that are being made at present a picturesqueness that is very suggestive of Spring. The neckwear shown makes, possibly, the most striking effect. Some of the dealers continue the special offer show them to best advantage. The display is changed weekly and sometimes oftener. The other furnisher, who does not handle ladies' wear, varies the display in the showcase as frequently as he does that in his window. A third furnisher, who has a corner stand, which is known as "the rounded corner," on account of the shape of the building at the junction of the streets, has had constructed two glass showcases at either side of his doorway. These have proved to be of great value for display purposes.

Handle Leather Goods.

Leather goods might be handled with profit by many furnishers. One of the most progressive furnishing houses I know make a strong feature of leather goods. Having the confidence of a large number of young men (and, incidentally, young men's friends), this firm find many opportunities to push the sale of some line of leather, and, as they carry everything from a small leather toilet case to a strong leather trunk, the aggregate receipts from this source are quite respectable.

Seen in Dealers' Windows.

NEW CANADIAN-MADE RUG.

in neckwear that I mentioned last month, keeping their windows full, and showing nothing but neckties, any one of which is offered for 25c. One dealer supplements a display of this nature by putting in a central position in the foreground of his window a pincushion made of a Union Jack flag, into which are stuck cravat pins, representing the British crown. A small card refers to these pins as especially suitable for wearing just now. In another window plaid ties, in bows and four-in-hands, are shown, at 25c. apiece. The variety of colors and designs shown makes this window decidedly attractive. A prominent section of another window is given to "new black wear," of black silk, in bows and four-in-hands. Behind them are some brightly striped Ascots, the striping running on a bias across the face of the tie.

Out-Door Showcases.

The out-door showcase has made its advent, and has so quickly proved its value that the conclusion is forced that it is likely to be largely used by up to-date furnishers. Two Toronto furnishers already make use of space in their doorway, which is not essential to the convenience of incoming or outgoing customers, to display cases. One of them keeps in his case at all times a display of ladies' shirt waists, using three forms so as to

The Furnisher's Dream.*

Ned Derby, of Derby & Hicks, furnishers, Ottawa, is a good-living and good-hearted fellow, but an experience of his the other night convinced him that a reformation in his life was desirable. He had been out to a dinner and returned home about 1 o'clock a.m., quite sober, but with a sense of having eaten rather more than advisable. He found difficulty in reaching that happy state of "complete oblivion" called sleep. Instead, he soon found himself in a court room waiting his turn for trial. Looking about him he recognized one face after another of his fellow-prisoners as customers of his own. Then, as one was called into the dock, he examined the judge, the prosecuting lawyer, his own counsel and others. The judge was a venerable, kindly-faced old man; the prosecuting attorney a thin-faced, keen-eyed fellow of about 40. The first prisoner called was charged with using sulphurous language in a boarding-house, shocking a lady-boarder in the room above him and having an immoral effect on the landlady's young son. The prisoner pleaded guilty, but claimed extenuating circumstances, as the dark blue expressions which had vibrated through the corridors of his boarding-house had been caused by the loss of the last collar-button he had when he was in a hurry to meet a lady friend, and by the fact that a search which resulted in the removal of every article in his room, including his bed and his dresser, had not recovered the missing jewel. He had been compelled to borrow a collar-button from a neighboring boarder who did not believe in loaning. The judge looked thoughtful—so much so that Ned. believed he was thinking of his own past—for a moment. He asked where he bought his furnishings, and when the prisoner pointed to Ned., the latter was surprised to see what stern eyes and mouth the judge possessed. Suspended sentence was passed. One prisoner after another was tried. All were charged with the same crime. All claimed extenuating circumstances. One had bought a size 15½ shirt, when his stock of collars was of the same size. Another had bought several size 16 collars at different times, and had found them to vary so that some were so uncomfortable that occasionally he had to relieve his mind. All told the judge that they got their furnishings from Derby & Hicks. After all had received a sentence similar to the first prisoner Ned. was called. His charge was that he was in league with the "King of Sulphurdom" to cause the language that the previous prisoners had pleaded guilty to using. He could not speak for surprise, but his counsel made an able plea, claiming no responsibility for the bad language of his customers—language which he would not think of using. After counsel on both sides had spoken, the judge ordered the prisoner to stand up to receive sentence. With shaking knees and shivering body (it was a cold night and his window was open) Ned. stood up. The judge eyed him sternly, then with stern voice proceeded to sentence him to sleepless nights unless in his business he should see that his customers kept a number of extra collar buttons, that they should get shirts, collars and cuffs of proper and uniform size, and that "green" customers should not be allowed to blunder in their purchases. Strange to say, Derby & Hicks' business has grown greatly since that dream. Ned. says though he wants his next lesson administered more gently.

A Few Hints From London.

Some striking novelties in neckwear have been introduced on this market during the last few weeks. A range of ties that has attracted considerable attention is made up of a silk of ombre and self twill grounds with tobine stripe. This is really two very wide stripes of different colorings, the ombre giving a beautiful watered effect. The combinations of colors are both effective and harmonious, and the range includes thirty-six different colorings, and can be obtained in the Gatwick and Paris shapes, handkerchief knots and bows. Another attractive range is that of border scarves in most beautiful mixtures. These are made up in the derby and Paris shapes, and also bows. When tied, these scarves show a stripe in the knot, and the ends are a check.

From the house of Young & Rochester, Love Lane, Wood street, E.C., there has emanated this year a succession of original ideas which have found great favor here. The "Willow" ties were a huge success, so much so that the order placed for printed silks of this pattern was the largest ever taken in Macclesfield. The "Willow" is running as strong as ever in the new shades. The tinted groundwork introduced makes a very attractive tie. Some are printed so that the pattern only appears on the knot while the apron is plain. Handkerchief ties are all the vogue just now, and the "Tandem" is a novelty in this style of tie which is selling well. These wide apron ties make an effective show in the window, and as the name implies, it ties either end and shows a different color in each case, so that the wearer has a double change. For window display we have seen nothing so attractive for some time. The patriotic ties also introduced by this firm are still in request, particularly so in the colonies, where they seem to have caught on even more strongly than in the old country.

The detached cuff is not popular here. The difference of opinion regarding this article here and in America is well shown by the following extract I clipped from one of the leading fashion journals here: "Loose cuffs are largely manufactured in America, where, indeed, shirts are often made with only a wristband, the cuffs being then necessarily an extraneous attachment. But in England, I do not think that many people of any consideration (for fashion's purposes) use loose cuffs. It is much more convenient and comely to have cuffs made on the shirt; and a shirt that has been worn sufficiently to soil the cuffs is surely a more proper subject for the laundry than for the dressing table. The same is not true of an attached collar, which may be soiled and deprived of its gloss before the shirt is actually 'done with.'"

A remarkable feature in the hosiers' and outfitters' shops here this season is the large shows of goods for ladies' wear. Almost every establishment which at one time was devoted exclusively to men's goods, are showing large ranges of ladies' wear of all kinds. Many hat and tie windows have been very effectively dressed with the aid of ladies' fancy silk handkerchiefs and fancy gloves.

Easter Gloves. For Easter trade, gloves, like everything else, will be shown in light colored specialties. The prevailing lines will run in grey suedes, grey castors and grey mochas. These are shown in a variety of ranges. They are both in self backs and embroidered backs. Some of these are silk-lined. Among the light kids, a favorite shade for Easter will be the ox-blood. Dent's gloves are always to the fore; but Perrin Freres are considered the better makers by some for the suede gloves.

Some time ago THE DRY GOODS REVIEW mentioned the novelties in the line of ventilated shirts, which were all the rage on the other side of the line. A Canadian firm have now taken up this article, and expect it to take well with the trade. The Empire Manufacturing Co. are producing pleated shirts with ventilated front. This, if it is found a success, ought to be a great success. Some doubts are expressed as to how it will stand washing and the wear and tear of use, but the makers claim that all obstacles have been overcome. They are making a specialty also of their silk shirts for Summer, which they state are equal in quality to the English make. There is a line of $6 50, Paris make, for the sorting trade only. This shirt was formerly sold at $9. The Empire Manufacturing Co. state that they have some new ideas in collars, which their travelers will show to the trade when they start on their rounds.

NEW GOODS IN WHOLESALE TRADE.

McINTYRE, SON & CO.

THIS firm have lately added to stock several lines of dress goods secured by their European buyers, including, among others, new camel-hair effects; satin cloths; grenadines, in black and colors, with silk stripes and checks; poplins, in fancy weaves, with stripes and checks; silk-warp poplin, etc.

In the cotton department, they show new printed muslins—some low lines with stylish patterns; printed muslins, with embroidered spots; printed organdies, with checks and stripes; some novelties with silk effects; white and black muslins in great variety; piques—white, black and colors; zephyrs and new Swiss embroideries.

In the silk department, they show new taffeta silks, black silks in a variety of weaves and designs, and new French foulards.

In the kid glove department, new stock is being added every week. The newest styles and colors are here to be found in lines that will yield a profit to the retailer. They carry suede gloves in new tans, greys, castor, mode and black, and white Tyrol or chamois to retail at popular prices.

NISBET & AULD.

The demand for 54-inch colored mercerized Italians, in high colors, is growing very rapidly, and they are already being handled by the larger dry goods dealers throughout the country.

Those who have taken them up find it to their advantage to increase their range, and repeat orders always follow the adoption of this width.

Nisbet & Auld have a big range of colors in two qualities, both of which are popular sellers.

They also report the arrival of a shipment of their 30-31 inch Roman satin in a variety of new and staple shades, and will hold this lot at a price that will permit their customers to retail at 25c. a yard.

They state that, owing to the advance in these goods, the present will be the last lot of this quality that they can offer at this price.

KYLE, CHEESBROUGH & CO.

This firm advise all dress goods buyers to purchase their Fall dress goods in the plain weaves, from the stocks at present in hand, as all futures will be extremely high. Fancies are bound to be up too, but still the advances are not so noticeable as in plainer makes.

Their travelers will show special silk gloves to retail at 25c. per pair. This line is a leader, and they bought over 1000 dozen of this one number.

The firm report a heavy demand for laces, particularly in the heavy plauen makes. These they have in all-overs, with insertions and edges to match, in ecru, white and cream. The latest novelty placed in stock is embroidered and tucked nets in the new buff shade. These goods are very stylish, and, mounted over silk, are extremely handsome. Prices range from $1.50 to $2.50 per yd.

Embroidered chiffons, silk-fringed chiffon and fancy lisse ties are just the thing. They have just placed a new lot in stock.

The firm ask their customers to bear with them this season on the delivery of balances of orders, but they are doing their best to place all, and hope to be pretty well up by March 15.

R. C. WILKINS.

Mr. Robt. C. Wilkins, Montreal, is showing some very catchy skirts. His "Lady Minto," "Lady Smith," "Lady Roberts" and "Lady Kitchener" merit special attention from dealers.

Robt. C. Wilkins reports that, notwithstanding the high prices, he has never before had so many rush orders for overalls and workmen's pants, and is working night and day to fill orders.

ESTABLISHED, 1840

THE CONSOLIDATED CLOAK COMPANY.

As mentioned in our last issue, the assets of The Cloak Manufacturing Co., of Toronto, were sold to a syndicate of purchasers, the chief members of which are Mr. W. Sanford Alley, a director of The W. E. Sanford Manufacturing Co., Limited, of Hamilton, who is also a nephew of the late Senator Sanford; Messrs. Jas. McLenaghan and S. R. Parsons. The above three names appear on the directorates of some of Ontario's most flourishing financial institutions, and this combination augurs well for the future of this new cloak company. With the business of The Cloak Manufacturing Co., Limited, is to be amalgamated that of The Empire Cloak Co., of Toronto, whose select, elegant and well-fitting garments are well known to the trade. Friends and customers of the latter concern will, doubtless, be pleased to learn that the services of Messrs. Bull and Cuffe, of The Empire Cloak Co., have been secured by the new company, which will be known as The Consolidated Cloak Co., and are located at 18 and 20 Front street east, Toronto. The illustration of the fine building appearing on this page shows the premises which the new company occupy, and which are so admirably adapted for carrying on the business.

Mr. W. Sanford Alley's long and practical experience in the clothing trade has led him to the conclusion that the ladies' ready-made garment trade, particularly in ladies' suits, is only in its infancy, and by turning out the very best finished goods possible, there is no question about this branch of the trade assuming as large proportions as the ready-made clothing trade in the near future.

The Consolidated Cloak Co. begin business with the advantage of having the very latest up-to-date machinery, and will manufacture mantles, costumes, skirts, etc., and being in a position to purchase all their goods for cash and from the best markets in the world, coupled with the fact that they are engaging the most skilled labor that money can buy, the trade may safely rely on having the very latest ideas in ladies' garments placed within their purchaseable reach at the lowest figures compatible with reliable goods.

It is the intention of the above named gentlemen to make application to the Government for a charter of incorporation for the new company, the capital of which will be one hundred thousand dollars ($100,000), when the business will be conducted under the style of The Consolidated Cloak Co., Limited.

A PLEASANT OCCASION.

An enjoyable dinner of the buyers and travelers of Messrs. John Macdonald & Co. took place in Webb's parlors, Toronto, February 28. Mr. R. Begg was chairman and Mr. T.

A. Mitchell the vice-chairman. The affair was a preliminary reunion, and has been so enthusiastically taken up that it was decided to make it an annual event in the future, and to include all the members and employes of the firm. After the loyal toast to Her Majesty the Queen, the health of the "Soldiers in South Africa" was proposed and responded to by ex-Sergeants Rough and Boyd. "The Firm of John Macdonald & Co." was responded to by Mr. T. A. Mitchell. A toast to the "Absent Buyers," who are now in the European markets, brought forth responses from Messrs. Gemmill and Armstrong. The "Absent Travelers," including the Montreal, Quebec, and British Columbia representatives, were dealt with by Mr. R. E. Cooper, one of the British Columbia representatives, while Mr. Tisdale responded for "The Manufacturing Department." Another toast was to "Our Resident Foreign Buyer,"

THE CONSOLIDATED CLOAK CO., on Front Street East, Toronto.

Mr. E. H. Norris, who is of English birth, but who, after a quarter of a century's connection with this house, has become a loyal and enthusiastic Canadian at all times. The chairman, Mr. Begg, responded. Then the health of "Our Competitors" was proposed, wishing that they might always be as successful as John Macdonald & Co. had been in the past, and hoping that they would all see their 50th anniversary, as this firm had just seen. The toast to the "Ladies" was in the hands of Messrs. Crofton and Boxall. The speeches were interspersed by songs from Messrs. Burns, Shaver, and Armstrong, and, after votes of thanks to the chairman and vice-chairman, the pleasant evening was brought to a close with "Auld Lang Syne" and "God Save the Queen."

Khaki colored straw hats are "the latest." These have been enthusiastically shown by a Luton manufacturer. As a matter of fact, they are a revival of an old favorite shade under a new name, like most "new colors."

Messrs. E. Mills, of Ryan Bros., Chas. Mills, of the Berlin branch of G. B. Ryan & Co., and Jno. Canham, of the Guelph house of the latter firm, the European buyers for their respective houses, have returned from the European markets.

Glothing and Woollen Trade.

THE CONDITION OF THE MARKETS.

A GREAT many had surmised that by this time we had reached high-water mark, and that prices of cotton and wool, though they would undoubtedly continue firm, would not rise again for some considerable period. Things have, it is true, been a little more reasonable since Christmas; but last week again saw some of the heaviest advances yet, in two or three lines. The Montreal Cotton Co., on February 20, issued advances of from 2½ to 12 per cent., according to quality, on all goods made from Egyptian yarns. Yarn of this kind, which sold this time last year for 17½c. per lb., is now 31c. All the wholesale and retail men have not yet discovered this fact, as the English merchants and converters have had large stocks to dispose of at old prices. When satines, muslins and all that class of goods are up about 3c. per yard, as they will, it is claimed, be in the near future, there will be some scrambling for goods.

The clothing trade are very busy. The country customers are howling for Spring goods. The mills are all behind in delivery, and, in consequence, the manufacturers of wholesale clothing are retarded in their turning out of stuff. As the mill men put it, the manufacturers of clothing have for the last 12 years had the mills sitting on their doorsteps, looking for orders. A new generation of buyers have sprung up in the meantime, who do not understand what it is to have an active market. These men have had the idea that they could do pretty much as they liked with regard to orders. The old and experienced buyers have, however, been quietly placing large orders early in the season, and are now reaping the benefit of their foresight. It is now the turn of the woollen buyers to sit on the mill doorstep, and they don't seem to relish the idea.

From what we can learn, the woollen houses are going to place orders for Spring season in bulk without delay when they see the mills' sample sheets, instead of waiting for a month after receiving their clippings, and then picking out one double three-quarter width to a pattern.

CANADIAN MAKES SUCCESSFUL.

The Canadian mills are now making for Fall, and some of their tweeds show the highest qualities in texture and finish. In some cases it is impossible to distinguish them from the imported goods. In beavers and meltons especially, they are showing some particularly fine goods, which are likely to replace the imported goods in the same weight and finish.

THE WOOLLEN MARKET IN BRITAIN.

Woollen buyers who have just returned from the other side of the ocean report that prices are stiff in all woollen goods, owing to the scarcity of wool. While some people maintain that the top has been reached, it is believed that there is every prospect of prices being maintained, while some lines will go even higher yet. The outlook for next season in Australia is for a shorter crop, while Cape wools will also be short. The British home trade is good, and colonial buyers have to pay the current prices.

Mr. Begg, of John Macdonald & Co., informed THE DRY GOODS REVIEW that the Scotch tweed manufacturers were busier than for several years, and he confirmed the reported advances in all woollens, which are due to the fact that everything entering into the manufacture of woollen goods had gone up in price. The popular shades in men's woollens just now in England are mixtures, drabs, greens, olives, while, according to the latest United States fashion reports, stripes and broken checks for suits are to the fore. The patterns shown for Spring wear include tweeds, fancy and mixed worsteds, and stripes and checks. Ladies' tailor-made costumes for Spring are being designed in plain and check effects, as also in homespun and cheviot makes in mixtures. Shepherd checks are being also largely shown. For outing purposes, the diamond check is a favorite skirt pattern, while the block check is for walking costumes.

A RANGE OF NEW STYLES.

M. Saxe & Sons report that their travelers are leaving almost immediately on their respective routes with samples for Fall trade and next Winter season. They are showing the largest and finest assortment that they have ever sent out, including all the latest novelties in suitings and overcoats. Among the new features may be mentioned a suit with the back lined one half with the same material as the suit and the other half with satines. They have an overcoat which is an adaptation of the American style, with oval-shaped seams for the shoulder. In the line of pants, there is a novelty shown, this being full-shaped, tailor-made pants, not cut straight, as is the ordinary fashion in ready-mades. Another novelty in the suitings is the new double-breasted coat, with round corners, instead of straight, at bottom. This idea has of late been very popular in Europe and in the United States. M. Saxe & Sons are making a specialty of their juveniles' range, these also at popular prices. And, in this range, there is one particular suit called the "Patriotic" suit, being a blue one, with brass buttons and long pants. This is likely to catch the fancy of a large number of buyers.

THE DRY GOODS REVIEW thinks that there is a gold mine for some merchant in getting out a juvenile suit in khaki. It ought to sell like hot-cakes, as it would be just the thing for

“Tiger Brand” Clothing

As we say to the individual in our big retailing department, we say to the trade through the wholesale department—“the label is your guarantee.”

We believe “Tiger Brand” Clothing is the best clothing being produced in Canada to-day—in every way—style and quality. What we believe, the trade is proving—and perhaps the best evidence of it is the fact that in a twelvemonth we’ve well nigh doubled the output.

Yes, Sir! it pays to have the high quality to sell, and the sooner you admit it for yourself—well, the better for your trade—splendid assortment of most everything you could need for men and boys—all the year round—come to market or write.

little fellows to knock about in without danger of tearing or dirtying the material. There is such a great deal of attention being directed to this particular stuff at the present time that it needs no introduction, and the boys, and girls too, would be as proud as peacocks to think they were dressed like the soldiers.

NEW IDEAS IN MADE CLOTHING.

THE REVIEW is indebted to H. Shorey & Co., of Montreal, the manufacturers of Shorey's ready-tailored clothing for the following forecast of styles for the coming Fall and Winter of 1900.

Their designers in the different departments are just now busy in getting out their Fall samples and our representative was permitted to inspect some of the first designs which are being made to try effects of different cloths and trimmings:

The predominant color in fabrics both for suits and overcoats will be Oxford grey.

Sack coats will be cut a little higher to show less shirt front than formerly.

Double-breasted vests made without a collar and cut rather high will be in favor again.

A feature in morning coats will be a flap on the ticket pocket—this is a decided innovation.

Double-breasted sacks cut rather high and made to button with three buttons will be in favor for business wear.

Some very stylish lines of overcoats are piped at the edge with silk velvet and with a rather wide velvet collar.

Checked overcoat linings are giving place to heavy twilled plain mohairs for the medium length single-breasted overcoats; these linings are also taking the place of silk satin, which is rather a step in the right direction as they are more durable and quite as easy to slip on and off over rough tweeds.

In long overcoats for storm wear a plain double-breasted overcoat with seam in the back, the vent buttoned with a fly, wide storm collar and throat tab, with crescent-shaped side pockets, and ticket pocket was shown. This garment was made from a soft thick material in various shades piped with a velvet at the edges to match the material, and with cuffs also piped with velvet.

For boys' and youths' clothing the double breasted sack seems to be mostly in favor, as it is also for the larger sizes of children's two piece suits. For very small children, in sizes 20 to 25 breast measure, vestee suits will be in favor.

Mr. Fred. C. Shorey, the Manitoba representative of H. Shorey & Co., of Montreal, has just returned from a visit to the leading clothing centres of the United States, where he went in quest of ideas and styles for the coming season. He says that he did not see anything that was too good for Canada, and, taking into consideration our part in the capture of Cronje, the best should not be considered too good for us.

STYLES FOR SPRING—WHAT A BUYER SAW.

Mr. Alex. J. Johnston, the well-known buyer for The Wyld-Darling Co., Limited, returned from a trip to the British markets the other day. Though he was making his purchases for Fall trade, Mr. Johnston did not fail to observe the trend of style in Spring clothing for men.

"There is every evidence," said he to THE REVIEW, "of a return to popularity of tweed for suitings, which, as you know, have not been in fashion for the last two years. In the fashionable centres, both in England and Scotland, I observed a great preponderance of tweeds, and on the Teutonic during the return trip the same fact was manifested. Many of the passengers had on new suits, which they were wearing to escape the Customs duty. As these suits had been purchased just before sailing, in all probability, and as they were principally tweed, there is no doubt in my mind about the revival of tweed for suitings.

"For overcoatings, coverts in greys and olive mixtures are everywhere in favor.

"In trouserings, it looks as if the striped worsted is to largely give way this Spring to small, neat checks, both in wool and worsteds. Of course, neat worsted stripes are bound to always be in more or less favor, but this season they are not as universally worn as a year ago.

"In vestings, the tendency is towards sportiness. The red-breast woollen material, which has been selling in London for more than a year, bids fair to find a place here this season. The feature, though, will be the introduction of brass buttons, which have been worn in the Old Country for some time."

H. Shorey & Co. are showing among their designs for Fall of 1900 two lines of khaki duck vests, one single-breasted and one double-breasted without collar. As the price is not as high as the patriotism at present running in this country these should be taking lines.

PRINTED MATTER IN TRADE.

H. Shorey & Co., of Montreal, have issued to their customers a circular letter offering to supply to them free of charge original and specially written ads., illustrated and set up in electro form, ready for the printer, advertising their clothing department. It is unnecessary to say this generous offer has largely been taken advantage of. As a result, we expect to see much improvement in the clothing ads. in country papers this Spring.

This firm are also issuing to their customers a very neat booklet illustrated by half-tone cuts, descriptive of the different garments they make in friezes for the Fall of 1900. This firm were fortunate in having made a contract last July with a mill which held a quantity of wool suitable for the manufacture of this very useful fabric, so that they will be able to give it to their customers at old prices. They show some very stylish mixtures in these goods that are suggestive of Scotch ulsterings.

MONTREAL COTTON COMPANY.

At the annual meeting of the Montreal Cotton Company, which was held in Montreal Feb. 12, a very satisfactory report was presented, and the following board of directors unanimously re-elected: Messrs. A. F. Gault, Chas. Garth, Jacques Grenier, Hon J. K. Ward, S. H. Ewing, Samuel Finley, and R. R. Stevenson. Mr. A. F. Gault was elected president and Mr. Charles Garth was elected vice-president.

Mr. Fraser, of S. Greenshields, Son & Co. has left for the Old Country to buy dress goods for next season. Mr. Kent has just returned from England where he has been buying in the interests of this firm.

THE REVIEW is glad to record the fact that Messrs. Robertson, Lindsay & Co., St. Thomas, Ont., who were burned out recently, have adjusted all difficulties in arranging matters for the future. This firm will continue business under the old firm name and at the old stand in St. Thomas, being ready with a new stock and new building about March 14.

A QUESTION OF TRADE INTEREST.

AT WHAT PRICES SHOULD EMPLOYEES GET GOODS?

Editor DRY GOODS REVIEW:

DEAR SIR,—Permit me to bring to your notice a subject I would very much like to hear from some of our progressive merchants on—that is the habit of selling our goods to employes at actual cost. I find this is done more from habit, as most merchants I have spoken to admit that they don't approve of the system, but others or their predecessors have done so.

Now, I contend that it costs the average merchant 10 per cent. to sell dry goods and boots and shoes, that is, for salaries, rent, freight, insurance, light and fuel, incidental depreciation on stock, etc. The merchants who get over these items on 10 per cent. are, I consider, doing well, for, to cover these items, I charge my employes an advance of 10 per cent., and consider that I am only realizing what the goods cost me (old fogie merchants and some employes' opinions to the contrary).

I would like to see this question brought to the attention of the retail merchant, as I feel that it is only just that a general understanding should be arrived at. I herewith inclose you two letters I received from Eastern Townships' merchants, which speak for themselves. I have no doubt, should you wish to make use of them, permission could be obtained cheerfully. Thanking you in anticipation for your valuable space.

Yours truly,

"THE HUB,"

Cowansville, Feb., 1900.

Will am G. Brown, Prop.

MR. MULLIN'S LETTER TO MR. BROWN.

MY DEAR BROWN,—Yours of to day to hand, in reply would say that, viewed from a strictly business standpoint, you are, I believe, quite right in adding 10 per cent., and no objection could fairly be urged against it.

The practice of charging employes actual invoice prices seems to be general, as far as my experience goes, although I have always felt that an advance of about 10 per cent. should be added to cover items you mention. In my own case I have not done so; charging simply invoice prices. I believe, at least, I hope, the help appreciate it. If they do, the concession is not bad policy. The truth is that what is a favor to day becomes a right to-morrow.

Yours truly,

JOHN J. J. MULLIN.

BEDFORD, Feb. 8, 1900.

MR. HUDON'S LETTER TO MR. BROWN.

MY DEAR FRIEND,—Your letter of the 8th inst. duly received with pleasure and contents noted. Re goods purchased in our places of business by employes, in my humble opinion, most undoubtedly you are correct in your contentions that at least 10 per cent. should be added over and above original cost price, and this rule should be strictly enforced in every instance by a strictly up-to-date business man. Doing otherwise, that is, selling goods at flat cost, he would not be getting actual cost, and that is not the tactics of a strict business man. I have been in business for over 20 years, and I have made the above one of my strictest rules with my employes, and it has worked most satisfactorily for the time above mentioned.

I feel pleased and in some way flattered to have this matter submitted to me for a decision, which I trust will be satisfactory.

Yours, very truly,

A. J. HUDON.

OF IMPORTANCE IN LADIES' TRADE.

Brush & Co., Toronto, are constantly introducing American novelties in ladies' wear that have proven successful. They are about placing on the Canadian market a new shirt-waist holder and skirt supporter, called the "All-Ways Ready," that is absolutely perfect. Owing to its peculiar construction, it requires no preparation of shirt waist or skirt before wearing, holds both firmly together in perfect position and leaves the waist-line smooth. These holders may be retailed at 25c. each.

A sample of the "All-Ways Ready" shirt-waist holder will be sent to any merchant without charge, upon application to Brush & Co., Toronto.

They are also getting ready to place on the market two new bust forms. One, the "B. & C." Wright bust form, which is a substitute for a corset, is closed in front, has no heavy steels, gives a symmetrical, even form from shoulder-point to bust, beautifully-curved waist-line, and is short on the hips. It is especially adapted to slender people, and tailor-made gowns can be fitted over it without any padding.

The "B. & C." bust perfecter which they are introducing produces a similar effect to the "B. & C." Wright bust form, except that it is designed to be worn with a corset.

THE SILENT SALESMAN.

The use of fine fixtures in stores grows apace. It brings trade to have the place well set out, and goods well displayed are half sold. With a kind of inspiration the manufacturers of Phillips' illuminated showcases called their patent case "The Silent Salesman." The idea has worked out by experience that a line of nice goods well shown in a handsome store go quicker than under other conditions. The Phillips' showcase people furnish a list of merchants in Canada and the United States who have bought and used "The Silent Salesman," and their testimony can, therefore, be got at by intending purchasers. The cases are of high quality, being manufactured with special care, and the Canadian trade are supplied from Windsor, Ont., which has enabled a reduction to be made in the price.

TO CLEAN SILK AND LACE.

For cleaning fine fabrics and millinery requisites, "Glovine" has come greatly into favor. It is sold on a guarantee, and the trade report it a satisfactory seller. It will clean the most delicate fabrics, crepe de chene, silk laces, velvet, white shoes and gloves—either glace or suede. Mr. F. W. Winter, 33 Melinda street, Toronto, is Canadian agent.

Some of the retailers who are handling "Wolsey" brand of unshrinkable underwear are well pleased with the demand for it. Each garment being guaranteed, the claims of its unshrinkableness are well founded, and there seems to be a genuine demand for a high-class, perfect-finished and durable underwear for men, women and children. Children's combinations are also shown in these goods.

FEATURES OF THE NEW INSOLVENCY BILL.

SOME CRITICISMS BY A DISTINGUISHED AUTHORITY ON BANKRUPTCY LAW.

THE Bankruptcy Act introduced into the House of Commons by Mr. W. F. Maclean, M.P. for East York, has some advantages over former Acts that have been brought before Parliament at Ottawa, viz., it is very much shorter, and it is not so much clothed in legal phraseology as to make it unintelligible to ordinary business men.

Too much verbiage invariably leads to much litigation, and the English language is quite good enough to express a meaning on any point without resorting to the use of Latin or any other language that the majority of laymen do not understand. In this respect Mr. Maclean deserves credit for bringing forward a bill that is more easily understood than the majority of our Acts of Parliament; but even in this bill, which is simplicity itself compared to some others that might be named, there is room for some amendments.

Section 2 says: "Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to repeal or affect any Act of any of the Provinces of Canada relating to, or providing for, voluntary assignments for the benefit of creditors." Section 17 seems to be contradictory to this, for it says: "When an order has been made adjudging a debtor bankrupt, all proceedings for voluntary liquidation shall be stayed, and all proceedings therefor taken by any trustee appointed under any voluntary assignment shall be subject to revision under order of the court."

Section 8 provides that a single creditor, or two or more creditors, having debts aggregating $200 may present a petition to the court praying for an adjudication of bankruptcy. If the $200 debt was confined to a single creditor, this section would be all right, but there is the danger that a number of small creditors may combine to harass a man who, in time, might be able to pay all in full.

Section 12 sets forth what are deemed acts of bankruptcy, to which very little or no objection should be taken. And it also provides, sub-section F, that the debtor has 10 days succeeding the service of the summons of a creditor for not less than $200 in which to pay or compound the debt, or commence proceedings to have such summons dismissed.

Section 19: "The clerk of the court shall, as soon as may be after a debtor has been adjudged bankrupt, summon a meeting of creditors to appoint a trustee and, if desired, a committee of inspection, and at such meeting (section 20) a majority in number and value must be present or represented by proxy to make it a duly constituted meeting, the clerk to be chairman of the meeting (section 21), unless unable to attend through illness or any unavoidable cause, when the meeting will elect its chairman.

All resolutions shall be decided by a majority in number and three-fourths in value of creditors present or represented by proxy (section 26). No provision is made for having votes calculated according to the amounts of the debts as in the Ontario Act. There is room for amendment here. The small creditors have too much power.

The trustee is to have full power to wind up the estate of the bankrupt in any way he sees fit, but has to transmit a statement of proceedings to the creditor at least once a year, and the auditor can call him to account for any misfeasance, neglect, or omission, or cause the trustee to make good any loss the estate sustains thereby, and if the trustee fails to comply, the auditor shall report the matter to the court, and the court shall make such order as it thinks just.

The trustee is to pay all sums received by him into a bank, and, if he keeps in his hands a sum exceeding $200 for more than five days, he shall be subject to certain penalties.

The auditor is to be appointed by the Governor-in-Council, and is to receive an annual salary.

A secured creditor (section 54, sub-section 2) shall be entitled to a dividend in respect of the balance due to him after realizing or giving credit for the value of his security. The effect of this clause will be that creditors will have to value their security before getting a dividend—a wise provision. Heretofore, this matter has been a bone of contention between the banks and wholesale houses, and has given rise to much litigation.

The bankruptcy is to be closed by order of the court, after the trustee has reported that he has realized on the whole of the property of the bankrupt, or as much of it as can be realized on without needlessly protracting the bankruptcy. After the bankruptcy is closed, no portion of a debt provable under the bankruptcy can be enforced until the expiration of three years, and the debtor is to get his discharge if he makes up during that time a sum sufficient to make the dividend on his estate 33c. on the dollar, in the event of such a dividend not having been originally paid out of his property.

If a debtor does not get his discharge at the end of three years, any balance remaining unpaid of a debt proved in bankruptcy shall be deemed a subsisting debt in the nature of a judgment debt.

A bankrupt can apply to the court for discharge when the bankruptcy is closed, or at any time during the bankruptcy with the assent of the creditors testified by a special resolution, and the discharge shall be granted if 33c. on the dollar has been paid, or if the resolution of the creditors testifies that his bankruptcy or the failure to pay 33c. on the dollar has arisen from circumstances for which he cannot justly be held responsible.

Section 73, referring to fraudulent preferences, is short and to the point, and a very necessary provision in any bankruptcy Act.

Section 74, the concluding section of the Act, is to protect innocent persons who have had dealings with the bankrupt previous to the date of the order of adjudication.

On the whole the Act is a good one, and, with very few amendments, will, in all probability, prove a workable Act. It leaves to the creditors full power to look after their own interests, and it protects the debtor from unjust oppression by greedy creditors.

NEW GOODS IN WHOLESALE TRADE.

JOHN MACDONALD & CO.

In woollens, a large and selected stock of men's fancy worsted trouserings and suitings in Canadian and imported lines is being shown, as well as a variety of Scotch and Canadian tweed suitings. Tailors can be supplied with the newest makes in linings, including Italians, twilled serges, fancy silesias, pocketings, haircloths, etc., and all requisites for a first-class tailoring business.

In the carpet department the shipments of new goods are earlier than for years past, and a greater percentage of orders has been filled than formerly. Repeats are now coming in, and all back orders will shortly be completed. A large range of art squares, assorted sizes, are selling freely in tapestry, brussels, axminsters and wiltons. These are very handsome goods.

The dress goods that are particularly in demand just now include pekin stripes, silk effects in mohair, shown in a range of shades, plain cloths for costumes and fancies of the better class. There is a good trade in fancy black fabrics, silk grenadines, and black lustres, while black and navy serges are holding their own. A number of repeats in piques and Victoria lawns have been received. The skirt, blouse and wrapper department is doing a large business. There is at present a great demand for all-over embroideries, whites and creams, and also all-over tuckings, with brussels net insertion, the colors being pink, blue, solid white and black and white. Swiss and cambric embroideries with insertion to match are shown. A new shipment of chiffon in white, cream, black and all the leading shades has been received, and also blouse silks to retail at popular prices. The department is strong in gloves, hosiery and underwear, and the stock is complete. Special attention is drawn to black cotton hosiery, Hermsdorf dye, which was bought a long time ago, and are being sold at exceptional values.

The haberdashery department has a nice line of belt buckles in fancy steel, enamel and jet, and is showing the new pulley belt in black silk, black velvet, black satin, cardinal, pink and pale blue satin. The pulley belt is the latest thing in the belt line, being shown in New York as a novelty just out. A large range of beauty pins and blouse sets is shown, and the general range of haberdashery is very complete at present.

In underwear, the men's furnishing department is showing some very nice lines in balbriggan and natural wool. In half-hose, a very large range of black and fancy cotton half-hose for the Summer trade can be had; also, a line of black cotton half-hose with natural wool feet, to sell at 25c. a pair.

Handkerchief ties are counted on to run well for Summer trade, and a very large range of them, to retail at 50c. with a good profit, may be inspected.

P. GARNEAU, FILS & CIE., QUEBEC.

This firm have secured a shipment of satin duchesse cloth to retail at 50c. It is shown in popular shades, and is the correct thing for Spring wear. Inquire for Range 400.

In view of the great demand for plain linen skirtings and bicycle cloths for Summer costumes, the firm placed heavy contracts early in the season. They are, therefore, in a position to sell these goods under present market value. Orders should be sent in early, as present stock cannot be replaced near actual prices.

Their line of silkalette, in all self colors, for ladies' blouses, still continues a great success. They are now opening their sixth repeat order. Retail at 17½c.

A very desirable line for dresses is a wool canvas cloth—G53—to retail at 50c. Sold in standard shades.

All-wool costume cloths, to retail at 75c. and $1, are in stock; and they are also selling a line of extra heavy cream flannelette in three prices.

Costume ducks in navy and white spots and navy and white stripes is a specialty with this firm. Inquire for price.

P. Garneau, Fils & Cie. have in stock a well-assorted line of black lustres, brilliantines and moire lustres, purchased early in the season. For curtains and draperies they have special good values in art muslins, cretonnes, damasks and tinsels.

THE W. R. BROCK CO., LIMITED.

The Toronto warehouse of this firm report that in dress goods, dimity muslins, plain and fancy, are having a great run, and that sedans, tweed suitings, cheviot finish serges and fancy blacks, with the designs a little smaller, are all materials that command an extensive sale. Plaids are exceptionally good both in the low and better priced stuff. Plain black lustres are selling just as well as they did last year.

In woollens, a job lot of Canadian homespuns, all shades, bought at less than mill prices, are being offered, as also a job lot of Canadian tweeds—low price for counter sale. The department's four numbers of serge, blue and black, called the Henley, Champion, A 8219 and A 8221, are finding much favor.

The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, have cleared for cash the balance of a manufacturer's stock of neckwear, comprising the latest designs and newest patterns. Three prices in both knots and derbies are quoted.

There is a great demand for gilt buttons for dress trimmings, and the firm have in stock a nice selection of bright and dull finish goods, in all sizes, from 12 to 30 lines.

The demand for belts and belt buckles is very large and the styles quite numerous. A large range of jet, leather and other fancy belts is shown; jet, gilt, steel and effective combinations in belt buckles, with a varied assortment of hatpins, clasps, tiepins, cuff links, etc., with patriotic designs, such as the Maple Leaf, Union Jack, Royal Standard, and also the Old Flag of Canada.

The aim is to have in stock in fabric and kid gloves, a range of lisle, taffetta and silk gloves of remarkable value. The assortment of staple gloves and novelties, in addition to the usual range of kid gloves, has been supplemented by another line called "Vancouver," which they contend is the best glove in the market for $1 retailing. The increased demand for celluloid goods is going to be extensive. They show a complete range of side combs, back combs, nuque combs, pompador combs, hair pins, etc. In addition, they are expecting in something special in horn hair pins manufactured in Canada.

The firm are offering a line of blue serge pants, called "Terror," which are great value for $1 a pair, and "terrible" goods to wear. F20 and F21 are two numbers of men's shirts and drawers, in flesh and blue-grey, for 25c. retail per garment. They are exceptional value, and the amount sold indicate that they are what the masses require.

As April showers are near at hand, this firm's assortment of ladies' and men's waterproof garments is large, well selected and good value. This branch of trade has been on the increase for the past two years. In hosiery and underwear, attention has been so frequently drawn to these two branches that it seems superfluous to again refer to them, but the buyer will be so impressed with the immense stock in the warehouse for the coming season that one cannot help thinking it contains everything a merchant requires for his customers. As the values are always right, an inspection of these two important lines should compensate for any time expended.

In colored satanas, The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, Toronto, have placed heavy contracts for British colored satanas, anticipating a large demand. Sales have been greater than even expected. One cloth, with a particular bright finish, can be retailed at 20c. It has taken the trade by storm, as there is a low price for the goods. The second cloth is a fine fabric, to retail at 25c.—hard to tell from a piece of silk.

The print stock is now complete in every variety of cloth. They have made a specialty of the 3H heavy Canadian print, of which they show over 2,000 patterns, more than two-thirds being their own exclusive designs. Some of their special patterns have had a phenomenal sale, having turned out trade-winners. Mercerized foulard is a very fine light cloth in silk foulard effects. It is just the idea for ladies' waists and the latest thing in the market.

Four specials in linens are worth noting. No. M. 43, 16 in. glass towelling is the last of a special purchase made about nine months ago when the market was at the lowest ebb. They have still about 300 pieces left which the trade can have to retail at 5c.; fine cloth. B. 18 is an 18-in. huck towelling, a nice even thread, fairly heavy cloth, to retail at 10c. at good profit and is worth 33½ more. M. 38 is a 68-in. cream damask table linen, in seven different designs, nice mellow finish and fine fabric, to retail at 40c. M. 41, a 72-in. bleach damask table linen, four pretty patterns, will retail at 75c., which is fairly 25 per cent. below regular prices. B. 8, 20x40, is a fine huck towelling, fringed, to retail at 25c. per pair. All of the above are leaders for any up-to-date storekeeper.

THE WYLD-DARLING CO., LIMITED.

The Wyld-Darling Co., Limited, in their smallwares department are particularly strong in gloves, hosiery, and underwear. Having contracted heavily for these goods previous to the stiff advances which have taken place, enables them to offer exceptionally good values.

In gloves, their line of taffeta to sell at 25c., is, they claim, the best value on the market. By an early buying, they are in a position to sell cambric embroideries, insertions, and all-overs fully 30 per cent. under present market values.

This house are showing a large line of belt buckles in steel, gilt, enamel, and jet; of beauty pins in gilt, silver, enamel and pearl, and of beaded belts and metal girdles. In celluloid hair ornaments they have in stock the latest styles of back, side, and pompadour combs, hair braids and shell hairpins. In ladies' collars they have the newest styles in stand-up, turn down shapes, which are now so rapidly coming into favor in New York.

In men's furnishings they have a full line of men's colored shirts, either starch front or negligee in cambrics, zephyrs and oxfords; also the leading shapes in collars. Special attention is called to their "Vic." collar, a stand-up, turn-down with round corners shape. In cashmere and silko socks they are offering a special line to retail at 25c. They have a good job line of soft shirts of various kinds. A line of 2,000 dozen of men's neckwear in graduate, knots, strings, bows and puffs has been received. These, being of extra value will, no doubt, soon be gathered up by the trade.

The staple department is now complete with the most up-to-date goods. This house are offering a specially good range of gingham and prints, also mercerized satines in blacks and colors, plain and twill. The satines are proving even more popular this year than last, and, as prices have advanced greatly since The Wyld-Darling Co., Limited, bought their present stocks, repeats cannot be looked for at the prices that are now offered by this firm.

While the Canadian market is a limited one for specialties of ordinary or inferior merit it is one well worth cultivating with anything of really first class value. This has been well manifested by the development of the business of the "S. H. & M." skirt bindings. Since the value of these bindings has become recognized on this market their sale has steadily extended. The past year has been especially gratifying to the "S. H. & M." people, for, while last year the demand was largely for the moderate priced lines, this year buyers have wanted the finest lines that the firm are making. The "S. H. & M." bias brush edge binding has been especially popular, and is still having a record sale.

The

Millinery Season

Mantles, Trimmings and Laces.

THE SPRING OPENINGS.

The Spring millinery openings, which are being held as we go to press, are bearing out the predictions made by the various wholesale houses a month ago—that the attendance would be larger and more representative than even last Spring, which was such an unusually successful season.

From almost every section of Canada faces are seen which have not been seen for some years, but it is from Manitoba, the Northwest and British Columbia that the great proportion of the increased attendance has come.

Liberal buying is, too, proving a characteristic of the season. The good feeling throughout the land and the exceptionally tempting assortments of pattern hats, materials, etc., have combined this year to give buyers faith in the possibilities of the season, and courage to make large preparations for a big Spring trade.

The general opinion seems to be that the displays this season are superior in point of range, beauty of colorings and richness of material to any display that has been made in recent years. There is no question but that the materials and trimmings of the season, tuscan straw braids, tulles, chiffon, all-over nets, straw-embroidered chiffon, crinoline, sequins, flowers and foliage, and the exquisite delicacy of the colorings, especially in the pastel shades, lend themselves to combinations which make possible the creation of tasty and attractive effects in millinery such as are likely to tempt the most critical buyers.

It seems justifiable to conclude that satisfaction should be general in millinery circles this Spring. The wholesale dealers are greeting a record attendance of liberal buyers, and the retailers find at their disposal the most exquisite of patterns and materials with which to enter on their season's work, which promises to be in every respect one of the most profitable in years.

SOME FEATURES OF THE NEW STYLES.

The success of the policy adopted by The D. McCall Co., Limited, of holding a 10 days' continuous opening, has been such that they express confidence that this idea is one that must be generally adopted in the future. The changed conditions of trade, resulting from the growing connection with outside Provinces which the Toronto houses are favored with, tend to alter the time honored method of holding openings.

The display made by this house this season was commented on by many buyers, who declared that it was even more complete and up-to-date than the excellent displays they have made in past seasons. In point of beauty, there is no question but that the creations of this season surpass the preceding ones. The delicate texture of materials and the no less delicate tones and combinations of colorings have given to this year's millinery an air of daintiness and elegance that in many cases is really bewitching.

The leading shapes of the season, the toque, which is worn more over the face than usual, with a decided dip to both back and front; the turban, which is somewhat higher on the left side, with fancy brim, and larger shapes, such as leghorn and sapho, also help to make the season a specially artistic one.

A smart pattern included in the display made by this house was a turban with black violet rim, with a trimming formed of chiffon and cream lace insertion, ornamented with black osprey.

Another dainty turban was made of all over lace with pastel ribbons with a large buckle caught in the front, ornamented with black roses and sequin band.

A striking toue was made with a hyacinth brim and pink covering, and to the front a fan-shaped trimming formed of Oriental satin caught with an ivory and cut-steel buckle.

A new pattern is a "Miss Hobbs" shape, made with white Neapolitan, with petunia rose crown and with a trimming of chiffon applied in gold draped over the brim, and with a large knot of velvet in front.

Another "Miss Hobbs" shape which attracted much attention was made with tuscan neapolitan crown, and brim of chiffon, with an overdrawing of lace held in place with cream buckle, and ornamented with black jet wing and touches of black ribbon velvet.

A decidedly elegant hat was a "Sappho" shape, with black violet facings and cream crepe de chine mount at the side and a lace scarf artistically draped on one side to fall on the hair.

A smart leghorn was shown caught up at the side, having white neapolitan crown with renaissance lace draped on the brim at the back, ornamented with a mount of violets and a large bunch of velvet.

Another leghorn which was greatly admired was draped on the brim with chiffon, hand-painted to represent violets, and trimmed over the crown with feather formation of oriental blue ribbon, caught at the back with a fancy buckle.

BRILLIANT DISPLAY BY S. F. MCKINNON & CO.

"No, we cannot say it will be a tuscan season in straw and color," was said at S. F. McKinnon & Co.'s, where the Spring opening was the central thought when a representative of THE DRY GOODS REVIEW called for news and views. "Tuscan will be much in evidence, but not so much as to justify proclaiming a tuscan season. The novelties will include much in jumbo straw, plain and jumbo chips, which will be found in pastel shades of blue, resedo, vieux rose, veit pale, ophelia and vandyck. Tuscan plaits will be a predominant feature, but not the only one. Black goods, milans, pedals, cantons, jumbo and chips, the fancy straws and silk braids will be freely used.

"Materials for trimmings are essentially varied, and include brilliants, taffetas, satin superbs, chiffons (plain and brilliant), mousseline de soie and malines, with crepe de chine and pan velvets as high-class novelties.

"In addition to the ordinary taffetas and satin ribbons, there are two novelties called mousseline brillante and satin superbe, in widths running from No. 60 to 120. They are being extensively used by the leading French modistes — Carlier, Suzanne Bloom, Virot, Pouyenne and other celebrities. You might say further of trimmings that horsehair and sequin and horsehair and tuscan will be a feature, and that ornaments will consist principally of jet, steel, paste and the new Hope diamond buckles and slides."

"Yes, hat scarves in embroidered laces are much inquired after. The demand for laces this season is, and will be, in the higher class makes of luxerie, renaissance, soutache and cluny, not alone for millinery, but in dressmaking.

"The vogue in flowers will be in the pastels and Autumn tints. Unmounted roses will be more used than ever, and they are made of the softest possible materials. A new rose is the turbillon. It is as impossible in nature as a yellow aster, but it is so artistically designed that it is already a favorite in France."

THE WHOLESALE TRADE SATISFIED.

When THE DRY GOODS REVIEW representative visited the showrooms of the J. D. Ivey Co., Limited, on Monday, March 5, to have a look at this firm's display, he found the house literally thronged with visitors.

"This," claimed Mr. Ivey, "is a proof of the steadily growing popularity of Toronto as a millinery centre, and of our house as leading exponents of millinery fashions. The number who have already visited our display is far greater than has ever been the case before, and includes customers from both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. Our sales to date throughout the house are fully one-third greater than last year.

As we said last month, the beautiful combinations and effects that are made possible by the delicate, yet exquisite, materials and colorings which are in favor this season, have much to do in making this season an excellent one, not only for ourselves, but for the retailers.

"Yet this is not alone responsible for the success of our opening. We are now recognized as specialists in high-class novelties in business. We do no business except with responsible people, having no supply accounts whatever. Thus, we have no method of keeping our customers except by the quality of our goods and our manner of doing business.

"We are millinery specialists, and, by having only this one line to devote our thoughts to, we are able to be fully abreast of the new ideas that are coming to the fore in the London, Paris and New York markets.

"We want no better proof," concluded Mr. Ivey, "of the trade's appreciation of our efforts to serve them than the numbers in which they are attending our opening; the generous manner in which they have bought this season, and the ready payment of accounts that is a characteristic of all our customers."

PETTICOATS.

The following are some of the latest Paris ideas in these undergarments: "White muslin, with very deep flounce, finely plaited and adorned with voluminous lace frillings, is the basis of many of these 'jupons.' Others have a deep flounce, plaited in the upper portion, each plait being fixed by a row of stitching; the lower part of the flounce falls in natural folds, which are separated at intervals by bands of embroidery or insertion.

"Other petticoats are composed of white sprigged muslin, with a somewhat narrower flounce put on almost plain, and on which vertical bands of lace frilling edge the foot of the flounce. A pretty petticoat is composed of broad bands of sprigged muslin, alternating with large box plaits, this double combination forming the flounce, which is, of course, trimmed by the inevitable frilling of lace on the hem.

"Another petticoat has narrow plaited muslin flounces alternating with lace flounces of the same width in a vertical movement.

"Again a succession of narrow flounces are each headed by a band of openwork insertion, through which colored ribbon passes in and out, and is tied in bows at intervals."

You cannot get them ready-made, but you can keep this description for your own and your customers' use, and buy the proper material from Brophy, Cains & Co.

CASH DISCOUNTS.

We have lately heard some opinions expressed regarding cash discounts which seem to point to a time when a reduction in them will take place. At present, as everyone knows, a basis of 5 per cent. on 30 days is easily obtained by any merchant who desires to pay cash. This is considered large, and some years ago an effort was made to bring cash discounts into what the trade consider a more direct proportion to the value of money. Hitherto these efforts have not prevailed. Although the wholesale trade are believed to regard the present discounts as high, there is no difficulty experienced in getting firms to grant them. There can be little doubt that a discount of 5 per cent. does not leave much margin of profit to the wholesaler and that the retail merchant acts wisely in buying and selling for cash. Some, it is true, do not. These gentlemen flourish on a credit basis and will, we hope, always flourish. At the same time the cash basis, wherever practicable, is a safer policy for the majority of merchants in these days of change and vicissitude, and we do not modify previously repressed opinions in favor of buying and selling for cash. And, as we have said, the day may not be so far distant when the discounts will be reduced.

THE DRY GOODS REVIEW would draw attention in this issue to the advertisement of Mr. F. F. Kelly, who has bought the bankrupt stock of Glover & Brais. As stated in another place, this stock was bought for cash. Mr. Kelly does not intend to continue the business, but will dispose of it in lots to the trade.

Mr. Fred Suckling, of Toronto, has joined the staff of the Gault Bros. Co., representing the firm in Northern and Western Ontario. Before leaving for his new sphere of labor he was presented by Mr. I. Silver, on behalf of the old customers and employes of Suckling & Co. with a fine leather traveling bag.

TO MAKE A FINE STORE.

Mr. H. T. Lockyer, manager of The Hudson's Bay Company's Vancouver store, has been visiting New York, Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Winnipeg and other cities. The chief object of Mr. Lockyer's trip was to inspect the new buildings going up in the big cities of the east, with the idea of gathering suggestions for the company's Vancouver store, which is to be enlarged and improved immediately. An extension of 40 x 120 feet to the present building has been decided upon, and the whole establishment will be remodeled and improved with the idea of making it one of the most thoroughly up-to-date retail stores on the American continent. A passenger elevator will be placed in the centre of the building, luxuriously-appointed waiting-rooms for ladies will be provided, and every modern device for the comfort and convenience of customers will be adopted. It is intended to spare neither pains nor expense to make the building a credit to the city and the company.

NORTHRUP LOOM CO.

The annual meeting of the shareholders of the Northrup Loom Co., of Canada, was held at their works in Valleyfield, Thursday, March 1, at the hour of 11 o'clock. The President, Mr. A. F. Gault, was in the chair. The annual report was read and adopted. Among the shareholders present were the following: Messrs. A. F. Gault, S. H. Ewing, H. Markland Molson, Edgar McDougall, Louis Simpson, Fred. Lacy and R. R. Stevenson. Mr. Arthur Plimsoll was elected auditor for the coming year.

The following were appointed directors: Messrs. A. F. Gault, Geo. O. Draper, S. H. Ewing, Louis Simpson, R. R. Stevenson and Samuel Findlay. Mr. A. F. Gault was elected president, and Mr. Louis Simpson, vice-president, at the meeting.

END OF THE COTTON STRIKE.

The strike of the employes of the Montreal Cotton Co., at Valleyfield, is ended. On Friday, March 2, Mr. A. F. Gault interviewed a committee of the strikers, and, after some discussion, an agreement was arrived at whereby operations should begin again by Monday morning, March 5, at an advance on some sorts of goods of about 5 per cent. in wages.

Mr. Laidlaw, of Durham, Ont., has sold out his business in that town to Mr. Ireland, a merchant from Blyth. Mr. Laidlaw remains a silent partner in the business.

Mr. Thomas Whitehead, a prominent business man of Walkerton, died suddenly February 9. Mr. Whitehead was president of the board of trade, and carried on a very large mercantile business on the departmental store system, having also branch stores in several neighboring villages. Mr. Whitehead was 58 years of age and of English descent. He was an exceedingly enterprising man, and very highly esteemed.

The power of first-class illustrations in making a description of any article is well known to printers, but few manufacturers have so recognized this fact as have The Williams, Greene and Rome Co., of Berlin, Ont., Limited, makers of "W. G. & R." shirts, collars and cuffs. The house issued in January a folder giving cuts of a dozen different styles of the shirts they are making this year. The cuts show so excellently the good points in shape, make and pattern of their shirts that it should be gotten by every furnisher who has not secured one. This firm offer to furnish electroypes of their shirts and collars free to customers who desire them for advertising purposes.

THE CANADIAN DRY GOODS REVIEW

VOL. X.

MONTREAL AND TORONTO, APRIL, 1900

No. 4.

PROGRESSIVE STOREKEEPING.

A MONTHLY ARTICLE ON THE PROPER MANAGEMENT, SYSTEM, ETC., OF AN UP-TO-DATE RETAIL BUSINESS.

Specially written for THE DRY GOODS REVIEW.

By CHAS. F. JONES, NEW YORK.

Pointer to Salesmen.

Salesmen should try to know their business thoroughly. The salesman of to day must necessarily know more about the goods that he is selling and the technical points of the business than the salesman of 25 years ago. Intelligent salespeople are the real want of the merchant at the present time. They are really hard to get, and where they are secured they command good salaries. The intelligent salesman can nearly always count on receiving double the salary that can be earned by the one who is not posted.

Know your goods thoroughly. If possible, try to know them just as thoroughly as the head of the store who is over you. Learn all the technical points of the manufacture, of the real fibre of which the goods are composed. Be sure you know the values of the goods well enough to tell in a moment whether they are very cheap or only reasonably so.

A Tale of Two Cities.

The writer of this article once upon a time made a trip from one city to another. The city from which he came was one of what we call moderate enterprise, but had quite a large business on account of its own and the neighboring population, which, taken altogether, amounted to more than 200,000 persons. The merchants in this city were fairly progressive, but made no particular boast of setting the world afire, and were all supposed to be doing a fair amount of business at a good living profit.

The city to which he went was one of unusual size, and one which has the reputation of being one of the greatest and most enterprising in the country. The stores in this city have grown to enormous proportions, and have the name the world over of being the cheapest and most liberal of any others. Yet, when the writer came to the larger city and began to look into the inside workings of business, and notice the different prices at which various goods were sold, he found that, although the stores had the name of being wonderful bargain-givers, and were known everywhere by the name of great price cutters, still, taking the stocks as a whole, these stores in the larger cities, in nearly every instance, sold goods at a higher price than they were sold in the smaller town, and, almost without exception, the gross profits which the merchants made on the goods were from 10 to 15 per cent. higher than the merchants in the smaller city could get.

This seemed exceedingly strange, and it set the writer to wondering how it was that this large city and these large stores should have the name everywhere for enterprise and low prices, while the stores in the smaller city, which sold the cheaper, were, as a rule, called high-priced and old fogey.

As the subject was investigated a little more closely, however, he began to notice one thing—that there were some instances in which these large stores sold goods wonderfully cheap, much cheaper, in fact, than the goods could be even manufactured at. This at first seemed a little queer. What could be the object in selling goods at such ridiculously low prices? For instance, in one case a certain store advertised a well known dress lining which usually sells at 25 and 35c. a yard, for 8c. These goods cost a great deal more than this selling price and what could be the object in taking so popular an article and disposing of it at perhaps one-fourth of what it sells for in many stores?

The writer thought he would go to the store which made the offering and see what information could be gained on the subject. When he got to the store he found it packed with eager buyers, not only around the immediate counter where these goods were being slaughtered, but the majority of those persons who came to buy the bargain advertised had gone all over the store buying other goods which they might be in need of.

On inquiring of the manager how the business was, he replied that it was splendid. "We are offering the people some bargains to-day which they cannot resist."

"But" the writer asked, "how can you afford to sell these goods which you advertise at so much less than cost?"

The reply was: "Oh, that is only done to bring the people to the store. They will not come unless there is some unusual inducement held out to them, but when they do come they buy enough goods at a regular profit to more than make up for the loss which we sustain on the linings."

A further careful examination into the matter and visits to several other stores where sales were being conducted in a similar manner, showed that these larger stores drew almost their entire trade through holding out such inducements to the people.

The merchants in this larger city make a totally different practice of price cutting from the merchants in the smaller place.

The merchants in the latter city sell their goods all around at a reasonably cheap price. They make no very great profit on any line of goods and gain no particular reputation for selling cheap, for the people naturally expect that everything should be at a moderately low price, and they are never startled by having any very remarkable bargain offered them.

Just the opposite to this, the stores in the larger city make a good round profit on nearly everything they sell except those articles which they hold out as special inducements to buyers.

The people in this city are kept in constant excitement on account of the real sensations which these stores make week after week. They will select some well-known and staple article and sell it for probably a half or a third of what it usually costs to make it. On the sale of these goods they, of course, calculate to lose a considerable sum, but they gain the attendance of enormous crowds at their store, and the liberal profits which they make on other goods far more than compensate for the loss on the bait which they hold out to the public.

The Two Systems Weighed.

The thought, therefore, presented itself to the mind of the writer as to whether the small city was not making a great mistake in its methods of doing business. The merchants are aiming to sell goods low, but are not in any sense impressing the people with this fact, because there are no particular objects which can be picked out and mentioned as presenting anything extraordinarily low.

The larger city is, day after day, and year after year, gaining a greater reputation as a business centre, simply because there is not a day in which some store is not practically giving something away to the public. These larger stores handle possibly from 10,000 to 50,000 different objects. Out of this whole number of objects there will be possibly from 10 to 20 which are sold at a loss, but these are at such a manifest loss that the people are really surprised and are so pleased at getting these things cheap they overlook the fact that they are more than making up for the loss on the other goods which they purchase.

This is what may be called progressive, up-to-date merchandising. A store is certainly in business for the profit it can make, and every store is entitled to a just profit on its goods. The stores of this larger city certainly get this profit, but, at the same time, the great excitement which they cause by selling a few articles very cheaply gives them a greater reputation than if they sold the whole stock only moderately cheap.

For instance, in the smaller town, if a merchant was getting up a sale of ladies' hosiery, and had, say, three or four different lines which he wished to mark down, he would probably mark each line with a 10 or 15 per cent. reduction all around. This reduction, while it would make the goods all very cheap, would probably only draw a few buyers who were really in need of the goods, and who knew the real value of the qualities offered.

If the same sale was gotten up in the larger city which I have mentioned, the store would probably make only a very slight, if any, reduction on the majority of ladies' hosiery, but would take one kind and cut the price deeply, or, perhaps, even make it half of the usual selling price.

For instance, if one line consisted of black hosiery which regularly sold at 25c. a pair, it is very probable that the store would mark these down to 10 or 15c. a pair, even though they may have cost as much as $2 a dozen. This kind of a reduction would create some excitement and bring a crowd of people to the store, and, while the loss on the one article might be quite heavy, the sales of the other goods at nearly regular price would make the average loss on the whole much less than would be the case where the store in the smaller city made an all-around reduction in price.

Cities where the merchants have been doing as in this smaller city might learn a lesson here, and change their tactics.

Believes in a Cut Being Low. To be considered bright and wide-awake, you must get the people to believe that you are going to give them something wonderful. Get them to believe that you have it in your power to sell goods for half, or less than half, what they are being sold at in other stores. This has been done, not by actually selling everything at a half price, but by really slaughtering one or two articles, while you may even make a larger profit on others to make up for it. Therefore, the secret of cutting prices seems to be not to cut everything or to make any general reductions, but to cut the very heart and life out of one or two things and make up for it on something else.

KHAKI SERGE TRADE IN CANADA.

Khaki promises to be one of the most popular colors for the coming Summer, and there is no doubt there will be a demand for this shade in all classes of goods. S. Greenshields, Son & Co. have just completed arrangements with the agents of E. Spinner & Co., of Manchester, to control the celebrated khaki serges and drills of Leeman & Gatty, who supply the British Government with the cloth for Her Majesty's soldiers.

Lord Roberts, himself, complimented Spinner & Co. on the benefits their khaki had given the army in India in the following letter :

“Commander-in-Chief's Office, “Headquarters, Bombay.

“E. Spinner & Co., Bombay.

“Lord Roberts directs me to inform you that he fully appreciates the benefits which have accrued to the army in India, both British and native, through the introduction of Leeman & Gatty's fast dye, and offers you his congratulation on the success of the invention. The appearance of troops of all arms when dressed in khaki has, in Lord Roberts' opinion, improved immensely since your goods have been generally used.

“(Signed) EATON A. TRAVERS, Major,

“For Military Secretary.”

The popularity which khaki has attained, on account of the present war, will certainly create a demand for the goods for both ladies and gentlemen. S. Greenshields, Son & Co say that a large shipment of wool serges and drills are now on the way. Messrs. Greenshields will very shortly have samples in the hands of their travelers. They, however, invite inquiries regarding these cloths, and will be very pleased to answer them.

Millinery, Dry Goods and Clothing in the West.

From "The Dry Goods Review's" special correspondent.

WINNIPEG, March 28, 1900.

THE wholesale millinery opening was the first thing in March. Winnipeg had only one this year, that of The D. McCall Co., Limited. Their comfortable showrooms on Notre Dame street west were tastefully arranged and filled to overflowing with choice goods. The trimmed goods were arranged in the rear showroom, and the first thing noticed on entering the room was the entire absence of the startling colors and combinations which, during the past two seasons, have been so much in evidence. Pastel shades predominate in all millinery, and the effect is very charming. Another noticeable feature was the large amount of tulle used in black, white and colors. Gauze, taffeta ribbon and flowers complete the list of the principal materials used for trimming, but the straw braids, Tuscan braids, satin straw braids with val lace edges and double frilled mohair braids in white, black, green, blue and lavender are really trimmings, although they are used principally in foundation work.

Though there are many shapes in fancy straw, mohair and sequins, etc., the majority of the trimmed hats shown at the opening were made up on wire shapes. The toque and Spanish turbans predominated, although there was a goodly number of leghorns, shepherdess and rubens. The prevailing idea in trimming seems to be to use light and gauzy materials and arrange them in massive effects. The rosettes are more used than ever, and are almost as large as an ordinary breakfast plate. Flowers and foliage are lavishly used. The use of foliage on Spring millinery is somewhat of a new departure, but with the delicately tinted gauzes and tulles the results are very fine. Another pretty material for crowns is gold gauze with an applique pattern in fine straw mount.

A great many handsome black hats were shown. One was a rather wide horsehair and sequin brim, with high straight crown, surmounted on the upper edge of the crown with a dense twisted fold of black tulle. On the left side, rosettes of the tulle standing fully ten inches from the brim completed the trimming. Under the brim was a long, trailing spray of foliage, shading from soft sage green to deep crimson. The effect was very striking. Another noticeable hat was a big leghorn, trimmed in front with a profuse bow of Dolly Varden ribbon. Large sprays of forget-me-nots starting from this bow in front encircled the crown with the ribbon and met at the back with a large steel buckle. Beneath the brim was a cluster of sunset roses to nestle against the hair.

A wide white chip hat had a big tam crown, made of alternate strips of fancy straw in crushed strawberry and white satin. A huge rosette of white satin with a rhinestone centre and a bunch of flowers under the brim completed the trimming. Some good effects were produced in wood tints, bluettes, wateau, murillo and vandyke shades. Heliotrope is still popular, and a few hats are made entirely of violets. A combination rather new and very effective is the plaiting of white tulle in long, full bands that look like long ostrich plumes, and then combining them with three-quarter white tips. This is a style especially adapted to the big white leghorn.

Mr. John McRae reported the opening as the most successful yet held, and all pattern hats were sold the second day.

Forty milliners from outside points attended the opening and the following list shows representatives from all parts of Manitoba, N. W. T., and even as far west as British Columbia; Miss Anderson, Virden; Misses Campbell, Young, and Dunsmore, Neepawa; Miss Sample, Souris; Miss Cyr, and Miss Churchill, Fernie, B. C.; Miss Dodds, Grand Forks, B. C.; Miss Neelands and Miss Post, Regina; Mrs. Creary and Miss Craig, Wapella; Miss James, Glenboro'; Miss Hardy, Brandon; Miss Hornibrook, Carberry; Miss Macleod, Roland; Miss Breckenridge, Carman; E. King, Killarney; Mrs. M. A. Lindsay, Wawanesa; Miss Leeson, Souris; Miss Harrington, Dauphin; Mrs. Laurie, Morris; Miss Swingford, Morris; Miss Madill, Russell; Mrs. McCauley, Carman; Miss B. Malcolm, Portage la Prairie; Miss Parkins, Morden; Mrs. S. McAdams, Treherne; Miss McBrowne, Pilot Mound; Miss R. Munroe, Minnedosa; Miss Partlett, Selkirk; Miss Murray, Miss Vanzant and Miss Seibert, Holland; Miss Curl, Wawanesa; Miss M. Thomas, Deloraine; Mrs. J. T. Wilson, Shoal Lake; Miss C. L. Anderson, Manitou; Miss Scott, Manitou; Miss Waugh, Baldur.

Messrs Bryce & Co. and Strachan & Co., manufacturers' agents, showed full lines of ready-to-wear goods, straw shapes, trimmings and flowers, and all report a very satisfactory business.

Retail millinery openings were the order during the middle of the month and were largely attended and well patronized. Among those of special note were Furner & Co., Hudson's Bay Company, Preston & Co. and J. Robinson & Co. The last named opened very handsome new showrooms, the company having found it necessary to utilize a large portion of the second floor of their building which was formerly devoted to offices.

CLOTHING.

This is rather between seasons so far as Summer goods are concerned as all Spring orders have been shipped and sorting orders have not begun to arrive except in very limited numbers, but with the first few days of Spring this trade will be brisk, especially in lines of bicycle goods and the like.

With regard to orders for Fall, clothing men are feeling the result of the large carried-over stocks from last Fall, perhaps, more than any other class of merchants. The prolonged mild Fall and then the unusually mild Winter, coupled with the low price of wheat and bad roads, left country merchants with tons of stuff on hand which should by right have been sold last Fall. The clothing men are realizing this more and more as they look for Fall trade, and the most sanguine are not cheerful about the prospect. The country is all right and sound and business is good, but collections have been slow and the carried-over stock has been a nightmare to many a country merchant.

Myron McBride & Co. are showing a very fine line of Canadian-made, mercerized, fleece-lined underwear for Fall and Winter. These goods compare favorably with the best products of the Old Country and are good sellers.

HOUSE FITTINGS AND FURNISHING.

Where Winter is as long as in Manitoba, the advent of Spring and Spring cleaning is hailed with delight by the housewives. With the best of care and the most admirable ventilation, houses that have been cased with double windows from October until April begin to feel stuffy and look grubby. The first fine days with thawing snow and slushy streets are quite enough to send the women folk madly in pursuit of new curtains, new matings, new carpets; in fact, everything and anything in the way of making the house feel fresh. Men with rolls of paper, paint pots and stepladders are everywhere except at your house at the hour they promised to be, and, in spite of the grumbling male animal of the household, things are torn up, turned inside out, and upside down and made sweet and clean once more.

R. J. Whitla & Co., since occupying their new premises, have devoted more attention than ever to their stock of house-furnishings and a run through them is a pleasure, as it gratifies the eye at every turn. The space of the second floor of their great warehouse devoted to these goods is light and airy, and things are well arranged for displaying goods.

The velvet pile carpets show principally the oriental designs, now so fashionable, but other patterns are not wanting. One pattern of special beauty was in three shades of wood brown with a design of hydranges in cream and faint pink. Art squares are in every color and every design the heart of woman could desire, or the hand of man execute. A design in four shades of bluettes is the very latest caper, but, as the latest thing very often is, it is more fashionable than beautiful. The "What We Have We Hold" rugs are meeting with a tremendous sale, for Manitoba is nothing if not loyal, and really they are so well executed they are almost equal to a copy of the picture.

This house shows a range of lace curtains from 27½c. to $17 per pair. Some of the curtains in swiss net, with designs of Easter lilies and fleur de lis, with corners of heavy guipure in true lovers' knots, were works of art. A full line of raw silk and chenille curtains and tablecovers were also shown, and it was gratifying to note that some of the handsome goods in chenille were from Canadian factories. In addition to the above, there was an endless array of linoleums, floor oilcloths and the like, in the latest designs and of the very best quality.

NOTES.

Mr. Godfrey Parker, dry goods buyer for The Hudson's Bay Company; Messrs. Campbell and Binns, buyers for R. J. Whitla & Co., and Mr. Wilson, buyer for Stobart, Sons & Co., have all left for European markets on their semi-annual purchasing trips.

Mr. Harry Slater, representing Robinson, Little & Co., London, has just moved into pleasant new quarters in the Dundee Block.

Mr. Climie, representing Gordon, Mackay & Co., and also a partner in the Western Canada Financing Agency, is spending a well-earned holiday in California.

A great many traveling men are on the road with Fall and sorting samples.

The manager for the western branch of The Gault Bros. Co., Limited, Montreal, has arrived, and is very busy superintending the arrangement of the interior of their fine new warehouse, corner of Bannatyne West and Albert streets.

WINDOW AND STORE DECORATING.

Conducted for THE REVIEW by H. Hollingsworth, an Expert Window Artist.

TO DRY GOODS REVIEW READERS.—We shall be glad to receive photographs and descriptions of window displays that have attracted special attention in their own localities, and which would be considered helpful to trimmers generally. Any inquiries or questions on the subject of window dressing will be answered cheerfully, and any information given that may be desired by readers. Queries should be addressed: "Window Dressing Department."

DOES WINDOW DRESSING PAY?

EMPHATICALLY yes. An artistically trimmed window is to a business what electricity is to a trolley car, viz., the grand motive power that pushes the thing along. But how many merchants give this subject the serious thought it deserves?

A merchant will always seek a good location for his business. In all probability he will have an elegant front and, possibly, handsome windows. Then he will leave the trimming of the windows to some clerk, who has scarcely any or no knowledge at all of window trimming. Consequently, the goods will be piled in without regard to color harmony, attention to arrangement or consideration of qualities or prices, a conglomerated mass of everything which the passer-by rarely notices. If he does stop he can get no intelligent idea of any article he may desire.

A man who pays no attention to his windows and disregards the trimming of his store interior to make them bright and attractive cannot keep his trade, and, consequently, will find his customers patronizing merchants who give attention to these details of their businesses. Many merchants will pay out hundreds and thousands of dollars per year for advertising. For what? To catch the eye of the reader, and his attention to their goods will most likely attract him to the store.

But these merchants never think of the thousands of people passing their window every day. Some of them pass several then avoid seeing what the merchant desires it should—the goods and prices.

I believe that a well-trimmed window is an object lesson which conveys at one glance more ideas than many columns of newspaper description. It will undoubtedly sell goods, not only to those intending to buy, but also to those having no intention whatever of purchasing then and there.

The merchant, clerk, professional man, mechanic, farmer, laborer, and those who possibly do not get time to read papers daily, will stop before an attractive display as they pass. Then, perhaps, as many people pass that store during the day as read the papers. Customers who have made purchases will be attracted to the windows and make purchases of goods exhibited, which they had no idea of buying. The advantages to a merchant from a well-trimmed window cannot be estimated, and a salesman or window trimmer who can dress a window with fresh goods, artistically arranged, with a change of design each week, is worth a good salary, for his window will sell as many goods as the influence and ability of three salesmen could do in a week. If a merchant doesn't think so, let him try it. Experience is the best argument that can be used.

INTERIORS.

Interior display should be simple, harmonious and artistic. Don't attempt to bewilder your customers. A woman in search of an apron shies from a great bunch of aprons swung from the ceiling, but is attracted by a single apron tastefully displayed.

So it is with all goods. Lavish interior displays are getting out of date, although some departmental stores still cling to them. In modern establishments where good taste prevails, the shelving and fixtures have been reduced in height. This necessitates giving more room to departments, but has many advantages.

First, the customer is enabled to see throughout the entire store, as the view is not obstructed. Second, it admits plenty of light, which is equally diffused. Third, it enables the floorwalkers or the merchant himself to see what is going on, and to look after customers properly.

It is only a short time ago that silks and other piece goods were draped from the ceilings and from pillar to pillar in times. Is it not worth while to attract their attention, as well? But this cannot be done by just an ordinary display of goods. Something must be displayed besides the goods to "catch the eye," the eye being directed towards the window. It cannot many fantastic ways, but this is now to be discouraged, and low fixtures are considered the better.

Everything in overhead decoration has been, or is being, done away with by the up-to-date stores, except the few neat dressings over the fixtures. Where fixtures run along the walls, a good idea is to measure the length of top of shelves and divide it into spaces of, say, six or eight feet.

Erect arches over each space, up to the ceiling, and cover over with puffed cheesecloth. This gives you apartments in which you can drape and dress nicely. Say, for instance, over the dress goods shelves, you could show in one space, as described, mantles, in next space blouses, in next, say, silks, and dress materials.

The illustrations (Nos. 1 and 2) show the idea. The arches can be erected in dozens of different designs. The Gothic designs are newer than the half-circle, and can be latticed or covered in cheesecloth and edged with a different color to the foundation.

Palms and plants through out the store give the interior an inviting appearance. Interior trimming is to be considered just as important as the window trimming. Everything should be well ticketed. It is surprising to note the great amount of trade that can be done by having everything ticketed.

Customers strolling through the departments are induced to buy through the aid of a little price ticket. Canadians visiting the large up-to-date stores in the American cities (New York and Chicago, especially) cannot help purchasing articles they would not think of buying at home.

On a recent trip to New York in search of new ideas, I spent nearly a whole day in Siegel-Cooper's immense store on 6th Avenue. I noticed everything was ticketed. Customers by the hundreds poured in, and, on observing very closely, I noticed, in most cases, that they did not come in for any special article, but merely to look around the different departments and purchase little articles that took their fancy. They could stroll through from the first floor to the last floor without having to ask the prices of hardly anything. All the pretty, catchy articles were displayed prominently, and the price and descriptive cards did the talking. Everything shown seemed to be interesting to the customer. Lines of merchandise that we would not be bothered looking over at home seemed to be the most interesting there.

I went in merely to see what was to be seen, and had not the slightest intention of purchasing, but, before I came out, I found I had been induced to buy so many little things (through those appealing price cards) that I had an uncomfortable armful, and asked to have them delivered to my address, as I had so many. I could have bought the same articles, or similar ones, at home (and just as cheap), but everything appeared such a strong inducement that one could not help purchasing. I noticed it was just the same way at Wana-maker's and all the other large houses.

What a pleasure it is to shop in such stores! Not a question hardly to ask. You can almost wait on yourself. Besides, how much quicker the salespeople can effect a sale. I noticed in dozens of instances the salesperson was making out a bill of a purchase of one customer while half a dozen others were waiting for her to make out a check for something that had "sold itself."

Some of the stores in Canada are adopting these methods, and are doubling their sales through them. Some are wondering how it was they did not think of these ideas long ago. In brief, the ticket and display system is the whole secret of successful merchandising.

APRIL WINDOW DISPLAYS.

This is the month that taxes the window-trimmer. All the new goods for Summer wear have to be shown this month. New dress goods, new muslins, new mantles, costumes; in fact, new everything. The fine, warm sunshine coaxes the ladies out, and, of course, they are all greatly interested in the new goods. They go from window to window passing comments on this and that.

This is the time for the window-trimmer to watch details. The new muslins and wash goods are, perhaps, the most important displays during this month. These should be nicely draped and well ticketed. Avoid crushing, so as to make them appear nice, new and crisp.

A great many merchants like to show every new pattern at once as an opening show, preferring them shown in the piece with one or two folds puffed up. I think a much better way is to take for an opening display, say, about a dozen of the choicest patterns and drape them out nicely on forms.

Open them out well, showing the patterns off to the very best advantage, leave this show in for, say, two days, and then take a few more and drape them up artistically, adding, perhaps, a few pretty sunshades or a few of the choicest muslin blouses on forms, placed well apart. Leave this in, say, two days, and take a few more and drape them up artistically, adding, perhaps, a few pretty sunshades or a few of the choicest muslin blouses on forms, placed well apart. Leave this in, say, two days and change again.

This gives you three entirely fresh changes, and I think them far ahead of the one crowded one left in for the week. It also gives the customer a better impression and also conveys the idea of a large assortment.

The little illustration (No. 3) gives the idea of a neat little display of muslins or wash fabrics. A neat descriptive price card should be attached to each one, also a large card neatly worded like this:

A HANDSOME COLLECTION OF DRESS
MUSLINS FOR SUMMER, 1900.

Or one similar to this.

"NEW IDEA" DESIGNS IN SUMMER MUSLINS.
NOTE THE PRICES.

The forms used for draping in the little illustration are simply wooden uprights, 1 x 2 inches, nailed to a 1-foot square block, 2 inches thick. These can be made in all heights, and are splendid stands on which to drape dress goods, silks, rugs, etc. By tacking a cross piece over the top they can be used for showing curtains or portieres on; in fact, almost all lines of dry goods. They are easily made and cost but a trifle.

The dress goods and millinery departments should be pushed just now by the trimmer. The millinery department comprises the best stock in the house for beautiful creations in window display for Spring.

Beautiful designs can be made up and covered with flowers. This is where the trimmer should be very careful as to color arrangement. White backings are preferable in millinery trims. The accessories should be plain and yet as rich as possible.

Show a few prettily trimmed hats at a time. Keep them well apart. See that the different colors do not conflict. Watch that the hats are placed towards the glass in such a way that the best view will be seen from the street.

With a few large mirrors, a few nice plush or silk draperies, a nice stock of ribbons, laces, fancy nets, tucks and chiffons, flowers, etc., to draw from, the trimmer can carry out beautiful color schemes and effects, and these windows never fail to catch the feminine eye.

The accompanying illustration (No. 4) conveys an idea of what a highly artistic millinery display should be like. The surroundings are neat and artistic, and I'll venture to say that there is not one lady in a thousand who would pass this trim without stopping to admire it.

In future editions of THE REVIEW I will explain and illustrate several pretty millinery displays, mechanical and otherwise.

While many readers of these columns may find such illustrations as this one too elaborate for the average merchant to carry out the same idea, yet such an illustration inspires new life in the ordinary window-trimmer and urges him on to greater accomplishments.

A FINE DISPLAY IN NANAIMO.

More than one store in Canada made a special display in honor of St. Patrick's Day, March 17. Special mention is made of the success achieved by Mr. Foster, who showed great artistic skill in the windows of Charles E. Stevenson & Co., Nanaimo, B.C. A card in the centre window called for "Three cheers for Generals Roberts, Kitchener and Ireland." Two Irish harps were tastefully trimmed with green and white bunting and an arch round which the twining ivy grew intermingled with the bright tint of a large snake. The background was green, the price tickets in the form of a shamrock and the electric lamps also green. Irish serges were in evidence also. The whole effect was wonderfully pretty and original, and Mr. Foster was congratulated on his excellent taste.

FOR PRESENT TRIMS.

Just now is the best time of the year in which to make beautiful windows, says The St. Louis Drygoodsman. There is no season like this when there is such a variety of light and bright colored materials to work into the displays.

Wash goods form the best part of these materials and they are susceptible of more changes and styles of draping which will bring out their good points and make pretty windows than any other single class of goods.

Don't think that these goods have to be mussed and crumpled into all sorts of impossible shapes in order to bring out their patterns or attract the attention of passers. It is more particularly the patterns and colorings of them which appeal to the people who look into the windows, and they are not any better shown by persisting in mussing up every piece of goods that goes into the window.

You can make a good display of your fine wash goods without crumpling the materials in the least or hardly making a crease in them, especially fine gingham and other soft finish goods.

Fold the edge over for several yards, either half way or sufficiently to conceal the selvage. Then take T stands of different heights, turn them so that the horizontal bars are at right angles to the glass and lay the folded goods back and forth over the bars with the doubled edge towards the window. Drop the first end close to the stand so that the frame will be concealed, bringing the goods far out over the front of the horizontal bar. Then place each successive layer farther back from the front and bring the point of contact with the floor continually farther away from the base of the stand, making the finished effect like an inverted V (Δ). The folds will drop together where they near the bottom, if care is taken not to crease them when folding. That can be best avoided by folding as you go.

Allow your goods to lay loosely on the base about the bottoms of all the stands, having the base first covered with white or a light color, and unless you have a nicely furnished wood background cover that also with same goods as the base.

PREPARING FOR EASTER.

Time is short, no time to lose now. With Easter time drawing near, the desire for new gowns and articles of dress comes to every woman and man, too. Are you going to present a showing that will command attention and reap the benefit of this universal desire, or will you let matters take their course? There is no time in the year when it is so essential to bend every effort toward making an impression on the public mind. The entire season's business depends to a great extent on this effort.

Besides the immediate business to be derived, the general good which always comes from increased prestige is an item worthy of consideration and extra effort. Not only should your windows present a clean, fresh, Spring-like appearance, but the entire store should have a general cleaning up, and rearranging. The interior decorations should lend zest to the opening of the Spring and Summer seasons.

With new Spring stocks all in, there is ample material for generous showings throughout the store. Ledge displays lend an air of cleanliness to the store and utilize room which is too often given to accumulators of dust, reserve and carried-over stocks which make anything but attractive displays.

Arrange a nice Easter display over the dress goods section showing the new dress materials with trimmings to match. Divide the rest of the space over the piece goods shelving into sections of four or five feet. Fasten standards from the top shelf to the ceiling. Then pleat bunting from the standards to the wall. Bend light strips from one standard to the next to form arches. Puff bunting on the standards and arch strips, and with ribbon or wide white tape arrange lattice work from the arch strip to the ceiling. In each section or booth, display a different line of goods. Fancy hosiery, gloves, neckwear, belts and so on, showing all the new things which go to make up your Spring stocks.

While arranging these goods to attract the lady buyers don't forget to treat the men's furnishing goods department with a new Spring dress. Somebody is going to sell a lot of nobby new ties and fancy shirts, and an attractive showing will help you materially.

A HOSIERY WINDOW.

Every indication points to a big season in fancy hosiery, says the same paper. The large city retailers are now giving a great deal of window space to the showing of these goods. A well-arranged display of fancy hosiery makes a very attractive window. Here is a suggestion that is easily carried out:

Take three light wood strips, arrange one by bending it arch shape and fastening it to the top of the background at either corner, so that it bends out at right angles to the glass. Fasten the other two from the window frame at either side of the glass to the top and centre of background. Arrange fancy hosiery on these three arched strips. Then arrange some half-circles on the background, like brackets. Puff the entire background and half-circle brackets with bunting of a color best suited to the hosiery you are showing. Drive knitting needles in the edge of the half-circle brackets. Arrange fancy hosiery on the knitting needles and on a nickel display stand placed on each bracket. Puff the entire base with bunting and arrange fancy hosiery on the boxes and on display stands. Make a large show card reading: "New Spring Showing in Fancy Hosiery."

A GOOD WINDOW.

The Frank Dowler Co., which had the contract for making suits for the Guelph cadet corps, made a fine exhibit in their window the other day. The window was tastefully decorated with flags and bunting, and contained a number of soldiers' equipments. The whole effect was enhanced by a picture of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, and one of Captain Clark, to whose energy is due the drilling and equipping of the corps.

TWO PATRIOTIC DISPLAYS.

Two really fine windows, produced for Messrs. I. L. Matthews & Co., of Port Arthur, by Mr. H. B. Dawson, deserve special mention. The first had for a background red, white and blue bunting, hung in heavy, soft folds, and as the centrepiece two flags crossed, one a pure white, on which was a ticket reading: "Majuba Hill, February 27, 1881," and the other was our dear old Union Jack, the ticket on it reading: "Majuba Day, February 27, 1900." The decorations used in this window were war handkerchiefs, one, the brave little drummer boy, Dunne, and the other a map of South Africa. The bottom of the window was covered with these handkerchiefs, and scattered along the middle front of the window were the names of the generals and chief officers now serving in South Africa.

The second display was a window deeply draped in black, with a large Union Jack as the centrepiece, the flag being draped with folds of crape. In the centre and at the bottom of the display was a card reading: "Canada Mourns for Her Sons." On the left side a card: "Canadians who fell at the Battle of Modder River," and in front of this a full list of our dead who fell at that battle, all on separate cards. Just to the right of this a card: "Died from wounds received at battle of Modder River," and in front of this card a list on separate cards of those who have died from their wounds. On the right side a card reading: "Canadians who were killed at the Relief of Kimberley," and in front of this card the names, the same as in the Modder River battle, the manner of display being the same, but the names different. Then, to the left, a card: "Those who died from wounds received at battle of Relief of Kimberley." In front of this the names of those who have since died. In the centre and just below the mourning card was a card reading: "Canadians who were killed while serving in the Imperial Army," and in front of it the three names, Capt. C. A. Hensley, Lieut. J. W. Osborne, and Lieut. C. C. Wood. The latter display caused considerable comment, and was greatly admired by all who saw it.

In honor of St. Patrick's Day the firm had another tasteful display. In one window a "Patriotic Irish Creation" was shown, white silk being used as the background, with green satin and ribbon as decorations and the "Harp of Old Ireland" as the centrepiece. Along the bottom was a quantity of shamrock, interspersed with Irish mottoes, and in the centre was Bengough's latest poetic effort. The other display was of Irish linens and curtains.

These displays are highly creditable to the designer, and would naturally attract the attention of a town full of buyers.

Readers of THE DRY GOODS REVIEW will remember that St. George's Day falls on Monday, April 23, and that it is a good occasion for a patriotic window.

KHAKI WASH SUITS.

The military authorities having adopted khaki as the most suitable color for our troops in South Africa, there has been created a great demand for all articles of wearing apparel in this shade. Boulter & Stewart are showing a full line of ladies' wash suits, skirts, etc., made in khaki colors and correct military style. There should be a strong demand for this class of goods. See their ad. on page 23.

Mr. Frederick W. Watkins, of Hamilton, has been appointed buyer and manager of the dry goods section of The Stanley Mills & Co.'s departmental store business carried on in that city.

Speaking of the general craze for special sales of one kind and another, and the eagerness with which people wait for these, in preference to buying at ordinary rates, a contemporary tells of a clerk who advised a lady to hurry up and purchase her goods before the store took fire. "Oh, no," said the lady, "I think I will wait until the fire sale." The story is, of course, imaginary, but it points to a moral.

DISCOVERY AND RISE OF "KHAKI."

Some Account of the Color and the Fabric.

THE story of khaki is one of the industrial romances of the century. It is worthy to rank with that of the Jacquard loom, the mercerising of cotton, or the invention of bleaching powder. The following brief account will serve to show that, as in other discoveries of far-reaching importance, energy and patience and skilled knowledge were brought into play before success was at length attained.

The use of an olive dye in connection with the clothing of the British troops in India dates back for many years. The tint was devised, in the first instance, by native dyers, who used for the purpose pigments which they were unable to fix, and also unable to prepare, in a uniform state. A traveler for a Manchester firm was one day taking a railway journey in Northern India, and found himself in the company of an Anglo-Indian military officer. The conversation drifted to cotton drill, and the regimental officer made the remark that the first Manchester man who succeeded in producing an absolutely fast khaki dye would make his fortune.

The remark made a deep impression on the traveler, who, upon returning home, set to work to study the reason why the olive and brown dyes hitherto used always washed out after a few applications of soda. He put himself into communication with a skilful dyer, and the two experts set themselves the task of discovering a method of fixing these dyes upon cotton yarns or fabrics. Many experiments were made, and at length an effective dye was obtained, but, unhappily, it yielded at once to the soap and soda test.

Instead of giving up in despair, the two inventors pursued their researches, and one day the dyer produced a piece of fabric which, upon being tested, was found to retain its color even under the severe application of a caustic alkali. He was requested to try again, and again he failed. Then the two colleagues put their heads together, and went over the conditions again very carefully, and they at length observed that, whether accidentally or not, the cloth in which the dye was fast had been dipped in a dish made of a certain metal, whereas all the unsuccessful experiments had been made with a dish of another metal. The invention was assured from that day, and fortune was the result.

The first deliveries of fast khaki were produced by means of mixtures of oxide of chromium and oxide of iron, which were carried into effect by mixing a solution of chrome alum and sulphate of iron, and, after being dipped into this, the cloth was passed through an alkaline solution, such as carbonate of ammonia or potash. Darker shades were obtained by redipping, and the darkest shades of all by drying the fabrics before passing them through the alkali. This process is now open to any dyer to employ, but improvements in it are the subject of a patent which is still in existence, and within the last 18 months a rival genius has patented an altogether different process, which is being used in the manufacture of goods already supplied to various Governments.

The so-called Government shade is that which has been adopted by the War Office, and it is now in general use at the seat of war in South Africa, while, last month, it was adopted by the New Zealand Government as well. The shade used in certain branches of the Indian army and other Asiatic States is somewhat darker, and a ruddy tint which differs from both of them, is supplied for use in Egypt. There are many difficulties in the production of a uniform tint, as firms who have gone into the trade without previous experience are learning to their cost. During the present pressure, the Government factory in England has had to deal with deliveries in which the shade of khaki varied from light to dark in one and the same piece of cloth.

When khaki cotton is said to be fast dyed, the meaning is that no amount of washing, either in laundries at home, or by native dhobies upon the banks of running streams in India, will affect the color. The rapid test for arriving at this result consists in boiling the fabric for a prolonged period in a solution of caustic soda or a similar alkaline reagent. By means of peroxide of hydrogen it is also determined whether the color is fugitive under the prolonged action of sunshine and air. It is never pretended that the color is impervious to the attacks of acid, and, indeed, the now fashionable material is being introduced for ladies' dresses at home, in a form in which striped and spotted designs are produced upon the cloth in a printing machine by the action of an acid, which turns the parts affected to a whitish hue. It is for this reason that when khaki uniforms are worn for a length of time the wristbands and collars show lines of white, where the dye has been driven out by the contact of the acid perspiration from the skin. There is another fortune awaiting the inventor who produces a dye which is fast, not only to alkali, but also to acid.

Up to the present, less success has attended the attempt to impart a khaki shade to woollens. Not only is the dye less permanent, but the peculiarities of the woollen fibre make it difficult to produce any uniformity of tint. Half-a-dozen pieces of serge, dipped in the same vat, will give almost as many variations of color. For this reason troops, when clothed in serge, as the men now under arms in South Africa will presently be, as the southern Winter comes on, cannot present the smart appearance of a regiment wearing cotton drill.

THE NEW "VICTOR" GARMENTS.

The Victor Manufacturing Co. is a new concern being formed in the city of Quebec to make ladies' cloaks, suits and skirts. The company is composed of two young business men of the ancient capital who have the best connections in the trade, and who start under excellent auspices. These gentlemen are Messrs. S. Richard and L. A. Moisan, and they have secured the best possible designer who has had a long New York experience. Ample capital has been provided to carry on the business in a successful way, and, as great progress has been made in men's ready-made garments in Canada, the new concern justly think that there is a good field for well-made garments for ladies. With this object they intend to seek trade in the whole Dominion and have secured experienced and successful travelers who have been well known to the trade for years. It is the intention of the company to put their registered trade mark of "Victor" on every garment as a proof of finish and excellence in every respect. Although The Victor Manufacturing Co. are a little late in putting their samples on the market this Spring, they will offer as compensation for this the fact that their designer has seen samples of the New York manufacturers (which are not shown, as the trade know, until June), and the very latest ideas in ladies' garments will be incorporated into the new line. A request is made that the trade will withhold orders so that they may have an opportunity of seeing the "Victor" garments.

This, at first thought, may not seem easily practicable. Goods will become shelf-worn, faded and off-color, despite every care.

This is true, but there is a way out of the difficulty by having these goods dyed to the fashionable colors of the season or to some good staple color that is salable all the year round.

We have the best dye works we know of—always making improvements—adding new machinery—keeping right up-to-date. We use the very best dyes and we employ the most skilful men. The work is as near perfection as anyone can get.

Our methods of dyeing and cleaning and curling feathers and plumes give the completest satisfaction as hundreds of merchants in all parts of Canada can testify.

THE NEW TARIFF.

VIEWED, as we are bound to view it, entirely as a business proposition, the new tariff announced in Parliament by the Finance Minister possesses considerable interest for the dry goods trade. The increase in the preference for British goods from one-quarter to one third of the duty amounts, generally speaking, to a further drop of about 3 per cent. in the duties on imports from Great Britain.

Already, under the one quarter preference, the imports from Great Britain have increased a good deal. The further reduction will stimulate this growth of trade, and it would not be surprising if, a year hence, the volume of business between Canadian importers and British houses had not swelled to much larger proportions. As times are good in Canada, some of the increase of trade with Great Britain is probably due to that fact. At the same time, the effect of the tariff preference has been felt.

The Canadian dry goods trade buy very largely in the British market, and the European competitors of the British manufacturers will now find themselves seriously handicapped in several lines in making Canadian sales. The British will correspondingly benefit.

The increased preference goes into force at a good time for the Canadian manufacturers who may be affected. The domestic mills are busy with home orders, and the market abroad is one of rising prices. This is especially true of Great Britain. The increased competition resulting after July 1 will not, therefore, be so serious a factor for the Canadian mills as if it came when the market was falling. Whether the lower duties could, in a depression of trade, be borne by our mills without disastrous results is a question that does not fortunately arise now. When such a condition does arise—as it may—that will be time enough to consider it. We commend very highly on this point the wise and moderate views of Mr. Andrew F. Gault, of Montreal, who speaks as one with large investments in Canadian manufacturing industries. Evidently, he hopes the best, which is, for the present, the most sagacious course for our manufacturers to take. Should they feel the pinch of the new tariff, however, it will be equally their duty to speak out plainly.

ENGLISH SILKS IN CANADA.

An important change in the silk trade with Canada is announced this month.

Messrs. H. L. Smythe & Co. have been appointed the agents in Canada for the well-known Lister silks, which have formerly been sold exclusively through London wholesale houses, but which will now be sold direct to the Canadian wholesale trade by Messrs. H. L. Smythe & Co.

It is expected that the trade in English silks with Canada will largely increase, as many persons not hitherto reached will now be waited on by the Canadian selling agents. The silks affected by the change include plain pongee, plain lameline, fancy stripe, fancy check, and broche.

NEW SELLING AGENT.

It will be somewhat of a surprise to the trade to learn that D. Morrice, Sons & Co. have resigned the selling agency of The Trent Valley Woollen Mills Co. This firm have held the agency ever since the mills were incorporated, about 20 years ago, but having sold out their interest in the mills (of which they were the largest shareholders), they relinquished the selling agency, as they represent only those companies in which they have an interest. We understand that the newly-appointed selling agent is Mr. Geo. H. Bishop. It is said that there are few men in the commission business who can cover the ground quicker than Mr. Bishop, and, as an originator of styles and new things for the mills, he has always held a position second to none. The new styles and ideas developed for the Hawthorne Mills were generally as good as were to be seen anywhere.

BRITISH COTTONS IN CANADA.

THOSE who profess to know the cotton market assert that the coming season is going to see a considerable increase in the imports of English cottons. It is well known that the high prices of American goods are interfering with the sales in Canada, and for some time past very few United States cottons have come in here. Now that the prices of Canadian cottons are mounting up so high, the expectation is that Canadian buyers will have a choice between British and Canadian goods.

It is asserted that Canadian buyers who have gone across the ocean intend to buy English cottons much more extensively than before—this will apply to flannelettes, saxonys, shirtings, printed wrapperettes and other lines. So marked is the tendency to buy imported goods, that one firm in Canada has imported a lot of German oxford shirtings. The advanced prices for Canadian cottons seem likely to diminish the retail sale of the very cheapest lines, as people, having to pay more, will probably go in for the better class of goods.

The above information was given to THE DRY GOODS REVIEW before the announcement made on March 23 by the Minister of Finance that the British preference would (after July 1 next) be increased from a quarter to a third of the duty. The increased preference will probably have the effect of accelerating still more the movement referred to.

As to what has already taken place, we have only the details of trade down to June 30, 1899. We have compiled a comparative table which will show the trade what increase took place in imports of British cottons up to that date. It is as follows :

The most remarkable increases are about $500,000 in colored cottons, prints, etc., and $100,000 in white and grey cottons. The increase recorded in clothing, scrims, piques, etc., is worth remarking.

CANADIAN GOODS.

Those who ask that Canadian fabrics and products shall get a fair chance in trade are not making an unreasonable demand. There is an undoubted tendency among some people to "cry down" a thing because it is Canadian. An instance of this occurred a few days ago, when a gentleman happened to examine a certain product in a large establishment, and remarked that it was very fine. Quite unconsciously, the clerk replied: "Yes, very good, indeed, for Canadian." The gentleman pointed out that this was pretty severe. The clerk was amazed, and had evidently never heard of any Canadian product being equal to the best in its class.

Not all the blame rests with the consumer and the merchant. They, as a rule, do not know. The manufacturer is to blame for not branding and pushing his goods. We do not know of any case where a brand of high quality in Canadian goods failed to succeed. If the manufacturer is making some lines that he is ashamed to acknowledge, that would account, to a considerable degree, for the low opinion entertained of Canadian products.

TEXTILES AND THE METRIC SYSTEM.

There will probably be conferences in connection with the Paris Exposition for more than one commercial purpose. For instance, an international congress will consider, some time during the Summer, the basis on which tariff duties are often estimated on cotton, woollens, and linen fabrics—namely, the count of threads in the fabric (number to the square inch, centimetre, etc.)

Foreign nations favor the metric system—the kilogram as unit of weight and the kilometre as unit of length. The British Empire retains its own system, and even in France the British system is in vogue for linen goods. The manufacturers of tulle in Calais and Saint Quentin, with a view to their English market, keep to the same method. In the woollen manufacture methods are still more diverse, according to the kind of weaving and the locality.

The commanding position of the English-speaking countries in textile and other manufactures gives them a governing voice in the systems of measures, weights, currency, etc., but there is undoubtedly a movement to approximate all these things to a common system for the advantage of trade.

OPPOSING A TURN-OVER TAX.

One of the ablest business documents recently issued is the report laid before the Toronto Board of Trade from the municipal taxation committee. It states the objections to a tax on the turn-over of a business in clear terms: That in limiting it to sums over $50,000 it would be class legislation; that it would burden Toronto concerns, as compared with other places; that the Winnipeg plan of a personality tax, arrived at by a percentage on rental value of the premises occupied, is preferable. Everyone knows that the turn-over tax is supposed to be the best means of getting after the departmental stores. But if these stores are not paying their fair share of municipal charges there are better ways of making them do so than by discriminating against other and innocent persons.

EMPLOYES ON STRIKE.

STRIKES, instead of becoming less during the prosperity which we are enjoying, seem to be on the increase. There has been quite an epidemic lately, and the prevalence at this date of such a barbarous means of carrying on business between employer and employed does not speak particularly well for our advanced moral and commercial civilization.

The cotton and woollen mills seem to be emulating each other in this respect. Only last month THE DRY GOODS REVIEW had to record a strike in the mills of The Montreal Cotton Co. at Valleyfield, where the operators had gone out to obtain an increase of wages. Fortunately we were also able to state that an arrangement satisfactory to both parties had been arrived at, and that every department was again in operation. On top of this comes a strike in the woollen mills of The Cornwall Manufacturing Co. The trouble this time is principally among the weavers; and at the moment of writing no compromise had been made, nor was there apparently much hope of a settlement. The employes were not prepared to make any definite propositions, and, consequently, the authorities did not feel called upon to make any changes.

The demand was simply for more money; and the way that the management viewed the question was, in short, whether they or the employes were going to be masters. This is not at all such a rhetorical question as it appears on the face of it. For, on the other side of the line there are indications that the employer has become so hedged in by workmen's unions and labor laws, and one thing and another; watched at every turn by the walking superintendent of these organizations, that he has really begun to wonder whether, after all, he is running his own establishment, or is only a figurehead.

Each case must be considered by itself, and on its own merits; and no general law can be laid down to cover all cases; but it is safe to say that the right is not all on one side or the other. There is a bill before our own House of Parliament at the present time making it an indictable offence to employ a workman or laborer more than eight hours a day. It is doubtful whether Parliament has the power, or, at all events, whether it will use it, to effect such an enactment. There is always an objection to hard and fast-binding categorical schemes and constitutions. Things must gradually develop, and they refuse to be iron moulded to suit the requirements of any individual, or set of individuals. There are circumstances under which it is not only allowable, but advisable that the length of the day's work should not be limited to the said number of hours; and it would be a curious law that would make it a crime to hire help for a longer period, if the good of both parties would thus not be injured. These questions are working toward solution, but not so fast as some people would like to see them doing.

BRITISH COLUMBIA BUSINESS MEN.

The deputation of business men, as such, to the Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia was a proper proceeding. In fact, if business men would join together oftener for intervention in politics it would, as a general rule, be of good effect.

Merchants as a class are, we believe, weary of party politics. They see that, in the main, public affairs are manipulated for the benefit of the professional politicians. No man cares to leave his party, because individual action often subjects him to unpleasant criticism. But when he forms one of a class, all acting together, he can shake himself free of party feeling to a considerable extent. Therefore, all movements of business men tending to increase the influence of the commercial body in politics should be encouraged.

The two most important elements in this country are the merchants and the farmers—commerce and agriculture. They form a vast majority of the population. Do they wield most of the power? Not by any means. The lawyers and professional politicians—some of them unable to earn a dollar in any useful occupation—rule the roost.

When business men, as a class, have thoroughly grasped this fact, they will, we hope and believe, be readier to act together as a sort of curb or brake upon the wheel of party.

THE NEW TARIFF.

By the announcement of the Minister of Finance in Parliament March 23, the preference of 25 per cent. of the duty in favor of British goods is extended to 33½ per cent. after July 1, 1900. This practically brings into force a new tariff, and, as far as the textiles and dry goods trade is concerned, we give the principal items with the two duties to be levied after July 1—the rate on foreign goods, and the rate on British goods:

COTTON ADVANCES VS. READY-MADES.

PRICES are again away up. Within the last few days The Canadian Colored Cotton Co. and The Montreal Cotton Co. have each issued very decided advances. The new prices, as is shown in another column, mark an advance of anywhere up to 15 per cent. Unprecedented is no word for the state of the cotton and woollen markets. The trade has become sick and tired of reading about unprecedented advances. The sentences have been twisted and varied into every conceivable shape to state the same old chestnut in each issue of the trade papers all over the continent for the last twelvemonth, and still the good work goes on.

There was a general impression that prices had about reached their zenith, and that the Fall lists would remain practically unchanged. But no : they have leaped ahead once more. There is little that is new to be said in this connection, so far as the mills are concerned and the ordinary wholesale trade ; but a word with regard to the position of the manufacturers of ready-made goods may not be out of place.

To the retail trade throughout the country we would say that the manufacturer is certainly not the one who benefits by these rises in price. Many realize this ; but, on the other hand, the true inwardness of the situation does not invariably strike the country buyer. Take the case of shirts, for instance. The trade are accustomed to buy a certain line of shirt at $1 per dozen. Everything has gone up in value—thread, buttons, labor, as well as raw material. For all of these the manufacturer has to pay. At the same time, under no consideration can he afford to change the price of that shirt to $1.10. The retailers simply won't buy it. They want it ; but they want it at the old price, because they know that their customers in turn will refuse to pay more than they have been used to pay. Consequently, when the said brand is inquired for, the reply is, "Oh, he is not making these any more," and another article is offered which is "just the same quality." and which is at the $1 price.

The manufacturer must run the risk of ruining the sale of his shirt, or else must lose the advantage of the high prices, must, indeed, sell at a disadvantage as compared with before. We say this in simple honesty and fairness to the manufacturer. For, on most of his lines, or many of them, he is unable to raise the price at all.

It must not be expected, however, that such a situation will hold good all around. The recent changes will, for example, make a difference of 50c. to $1 a doz. on black satines, and on overalls the difference will probably be from 50c. to $1.50. On the other hand, black denims are still at the original quotation. We quote an instance of the difficulty experienced in the manufacture of ready-made goods. A certain line of buttons was always used for a certain make of overalls. These ran short. They were up in price. The manufacturer sent to four different places, ordering quantities of the buttons, and could not get them. Finally he wrote to a personal friend of his own in the United States, one who is in the same line of business, asking him to please help him out by lending him 10 gross of the required buttons. He received in reply a letter regretting very much that it was quite impossible to procure them, and that he was not in a position to spare any himself. The result was that another style of button altogether had to be adopted.

This instance will serve to show how the manufacturer of ready-mades is situated. He is no fool ; he does not pretend that his wish is to give his goods away. But he is forced by circumstances to sell at a settled price in many or most of his lines ; and the trade ought to be willing to pay some slight advance on some ranges, without haggling and kicking over each separate item.

THE COTTON AND WOOL MARKET.

AS noted elsewhere, the different cotton companies have all issued advances lately on nearly every line of goods. As prophesied in our last issue, Egyptian yarns have succumbed to the inevitable, and taken a rise, and the present price of Egyptian yarn in England is bound to make another advance. Fine satines in Manchester are up from 3 to 3½c. per yard ; and there is a short crop of Egyptian cotton in sight for Summer. Woollens seem active enough, though there is no great stir being made. The situation in the United States is altogether more strained than in England, apparently. In quilting, for instance, the American sellers wanted 15 per cent. more than their English rivals. To-day it is actually the case that the price of linens and canvasses is 100 per cent. ahead of what it was at this time last year. Retailers are, however, buying better stuff. There is a tendency noticed in many quarters to lay in heavier stocks. Heavier weights of blankets are bought, and finer lines of cotton goods.

Letters from the Old Country reflect the state of things there. The following from one of the largest houses in London was received the other day by a correspondent in the dry goods commission business : "Quotations in all classes of cotton goods are kept firm no more than a few hours, alterations are so frequent, and the whole cry of the manufacturers here is that they cannot get delivery from spinners. There was never such a time of panic since the American Civil War. The writer's father has been in Manchester this week, and he has just returned having come away without placing any orders. A number of the mills are sold ahead until next October, and manufacturers and spinners are, alike, very independent. That the advance was never anticipated is evidenced by the fact that spinners and manufacturers are working from hand to mouth, and, not only so, but the prospects ahead are still of an upward tendency. It would be a source of gratification to have you here, but, as far as the purchase of yarn is concerned, we fear it would be of no avail."

Four days later they wrote as follows : "Cotton is up 3½d. since we wrote last week, and we learn that some of the mills have had to shut down their looms because they cannot get yarn from the spinners. As an Irishman put it the other day : 'We are so busy, we have got nothing to do.'"

Spinners are, in fact, so well engaged for a long time ahead for large quantities at the fullest prices, that they are unable to respond to the required deliveries. This is the first occasion on which the supply of yarns has reflected a situation like the present. Some weavers have had to resort to closing their mills for lack of yarns to fill the looms.

AGENTS APPOINTED IN CANADA.

THE use of cuts in advertising is becoming an absolute necessity. The last few years have marked a great change in advertising methods. An advertisement to command attention, when a dozen others are clamoring for attention, must stand out bold and distinct from the rest. Nothing can make an ad. stand out better than a picture in it. The cuts cost little and can be used, not only in newspaper advertising, but in booklets, circulars, and all kinds of printed matter. One of the most progressive firms supplying these cuts is the Standard Electrotype Co., of Wilmington, Del., United States, who say that they are now sending electrotypes to all parts of the continent. They are liberal advertisers themselves, and have built up a fine Canadian business. In order to get shipments out promptly and to relieve their patrons from the annoyance of paying the duty, etc., they have established a distributing agency in Canada.

Their representatives are The Pugh Co., 67 Yonge street, Toronto, Ont., to whom all inquiries should be addressed. All orders are now filled and sent out from that point. As the duty is paid, and there being no trouble or extra cost, the price charged has been slightly advanced, being exactly 5c. each over the former price. This includes the prepayment of postage or the method of delivery, and the merchant now gets the electrotypes delivered to him at the price advertised in THE DRY GOODS REVIEW of this issue.

The 5c. extra on each cut, just about pays for the delivery and the duty, and further, as above stated, saves all annoyance and inconvenience on the part of the merchant ordering. We would advise you to write to The Pugh Co. for their descriptive circulars and proof sheets.

There is a story in the trade connected with that patriotic rug which has a bull dog seated on the flag, and the motto "What we have we hold." A merchant down east was burned out. He had just paid several notes to wholesale houses. After the fire, finding himself crippled, he wrote to one Toronto house, stating that other firms had consented to accept 75 per cent. on the notes recently paid, and had let him have back the balance. He, therefore, suggested that the wholesale firm in question remit him 25 per cent. of the amount sent them. All they did was to send him a rug. The hint was in the motto.

Good Advertising

For Wide Awake Retailers

By F. James Gibson.

Our "Good Advertising" department is to help our subscribers to do better advertising. The gentleman whom we have selected as its conductor is well-known as one of the foremost advertising specialists of the day. Any of our readers who desire the benefit of Mr. Gibson's criticisms on advertisements or advertising methods, or his advice on any advertising subject, can have it or both entirely free of charge by writing to him in care of this journal.

If correspondents so desire, fictitious names or initials may be used for publication. But all requests should be accompanied by the subscriber's name.

I AM indebted to Messrs. McCurdy & Co., Sydney, N.S., for a batch of fairly good advertisements. The typographical display in all of these advertisements is very bad. But this no doubt is the fault, in part at least, of the printer. The cuts are mostly very poor. It seems to me that a firm of the financial resources of the McCurdys ought not to be satisfied with anything but the best in the way of cuts. It really doesn't cost much, these syndicate days, to get good cuts.

Some of the wording of these McCurdy advertisements is very commonplace. For example:

McCURDY & CO. wish to thank their many friends for their liberal patronage during the past year, and trust by strict attention to the needs of their growing business to merit their confidence in 1900. We have still on hand a splendid range of Winter goods which we offer at 10 per cent. off in every line, so as to clear before entering our new store, April 1.

This is a little better:

JUST opened up a splendid supply of FANCY LINENS, in Table Covers, Piano Scarves, and many other useful articles in this line. Our new supply of Handkerchiefs, in Silk and Linen, convince us we lead in every line.

And this has quite a little "snap" about it:

Blankets.

Blanket business is booming at our store, more blankets sold this season than ever before. The reason is we sell only the good reliable qualities that carry comfort and satisfaction in every pair. These prices will prove our claim to be Blanket Headquarters in Sydney: Prices, 55c., $1.35, 1.50, 1.65, 1.90, 2.00 and 3.60.

McCURDY & CO.

This "Great Bargain" is really quite good advertising:

Great Bargains

IN JACKETS.

We have a lot of last season's Jackets, which we will sell for HALF PRICE.

Ladies' Cloth Jackets, former price $4.00; now $1.90.

Ladies' Cloth Jackets, former price, $5.00; now but $2.50.

Ladies' Cloth Jackets, former price, $6.00; to clear, $2.75.

Ladies' Cloth Jackets, former price, $9.00; closing at $3.50.

Considerable portions of the McCurdy advertisements are devoted to talk about low prices and reduced figures and all that sort of thing, without any quotations. If prices have been marked down why not say what the old prices were and what the new prices are? "Silks that were $1.25 at 89c." would be far more effective than to say "Great Reductions in Silk Prices."

McCurdy & Co. also give up too much space for the name of their firm. The name of a firm should always occupy a secondary place in store advertisements. The store is not for sale, and neither is the firm name. What is for sale is goods. Therefore bring out the goods (what you have for sale) prominently. If, instead of wanting to bring out goods prominently, you wish to feature some peculiar attraction possessed by your store bring that out prominently. If the advertisement writer has succeeded in really interesting a person in some goods, or some prices, or in some other attraction, he need not worry about the name of the store and the address not being seen even if they are in very small type. I don't see anything interesting about the words: McCurdy & Co.;

A recent mail brought me two newspapers from far apart sections of Canada. Each of these papers contained a marked advertisement. One of the advertisements is quite a large one—a full page of a rather small-sized newspaper. J. Thompson & Bros., Havelock, Ont., are responsible for it. This advertisement is quite an ambitious attempt. The other advertisement referred to is the following, it is clipped from a Chilliwack, B.C., paper. I don't know whether or not the Messrs. Ashwell held back. If "timothy seed" is important enough to place in display capital letters in this advertisement it certainly is important enough to quote a price on.

Likewise, half the space in the Thompson advertisement could be saved. Owing to limitation of space, this advertisement cannot be reproduced in full here. This advertisement is headed, "Directory for Great Bargains," and yet prices are not given for even half the goods referred to. Take this jacket section of the advertisement as an example of advertising foolishness (No. 2.) Who will believe that prices are very "close," while the advertiser is obviously afraid to say what they are? This fur section, on the other hand, is all right, as is also this clothing section. But what earthly good, from an advertising standpoint, is this section devoted to "Staple Dry Goods,"? (No. 1.) These sections devoted to ordered clothing, boots, dress goods, crockery and gloves, are not worth are under a contract to use the space taken up by their announcement; if they are, it is the only excuse I can think of that would really excuse their using so much space and saying so little. If this advertisement were cut off over the line "white carrot" the Ashwell's would have saved about half the cost and have quite as effective an advertisement. If a n advertiser quotes the prices of carrot, beet and turnip seeds, and, while enumerating the different varieties of clover seed he has for sale, studiously refrains from committing himself to any quotation for them, he gives me the impression that something is being an advertisement is supposed to be a "directory of bargains," by all means put "bargains" in it and give the prices of them. If the attractions are of another kind, well and good, but don't get things mixed.

In the page Thompson advertisement just referred to, I came across this advertising gem :

Autumn has come,
And now the breezes,
Whistle through the leafless treeses.
Now the boy with ragged trousers
Homeward drives his father's cowses.
Cold his hands and blue his nose is,
And, Bless my soul! how cold his toes is!

If his parents will only bring him to our store we can put him in a position to defy the weather with a Shorey Suit, Ulster, or Reefer.

SHOREY'S CLOTHING is Guaranteed in every stitch. Made to fit, not to order, which is the reason we keep it.

Of course, I don't know who brought this alleged clothing advertisement into existence. I assume, though, that Shorey, the wholesale clothier, sent it to Thompson with his compliments, and Thompson has thought it good enough to use. It would seem, from reading this production, that some boy, name unknown, and who, by the way, does not appear in the picture, is, or has been, suffering from the Autumn breeze till his hands, and nose, and toes are quite uncomfortably cold. Further on it develops that the remedy for this distressing complaint consists of a suit of Shorey clothing, or an ulster, or a reefer. Now, I have lived most of my time in Canada, and I know something about the climate, and I say, without any desire to libel the climatic peculiarities of the Dominion, that I would hate to have to try to keep warm on a cold Canadian day without anything on my head, and my hands, and my feet. Whoever is responsible for this advertisement ought to try over again.

* * *

I came across this unique advertisement of Mr. E. P. Cuffe's quite recently. After reading it I said to myself: What a pity that a man able to write such correct, vigorous, terse and snappy English should not know more about advertising! The two important things that seem to have escaped Mr. Cuffe's

Common Sense Jackets, Dress Goods, and Millinery.

These are our leading lines. We buy them right, keep them right, sell them right. The public appreciate us, patronize us, talk about us. At present, we cut the prices of many lines of Jackets and Dress Goods much below their regular values.

No trouble to show you goods, and your money will be refunded if you can buy goods cheaper elsewhere, quality considered.

ARCADE, E. P. CUFFE NORWOOD.

attention are: first, women don't care nearly so much about common sense jackets, dress goods and millinery, as they do about fashionable jackets, dress goods and millinery, and, secondly, people usually want to know what they are to pay for things they see advertised.

* * *

Now that the Winter goods have gone and the new Spring merchandise, radiant with newness, style, color and every other possible beauty, have come, let us discuss ways and means of telling the people about them. The element of freshness, newness and novelty—an important advertising element—can be infected into the "store news," and with this the advertising pen takes on new life and the public ear caught with a new note. Millinery, silks, dress goods, women's and children's garments and, in fact, every line of goods that carries style about it can be talked about in a manner that January and February bargain sales are not susceptible to. By making your advertising interesting, Mr. Retailer, you can easily attract the attention of the public.

The best way to start the Spring advertising campaign is to place in your daily paper, if you have one, a general Spring goods advertisement. Follow this next day, or next week, as the case may be, with, say, a millinery opening advertisement. Millinery openings are usually also advertised by cards engraved in delicate script, which should, of course, be sent out several days before the opening. Sometimes it may prove desirable to have a private opening in the millinery department, say one or two days before the regular opening. Special invitations, by letter or otherwise, should be sent to such persons in your locality as you may wish to invite to the private opening. At a private opening there ought not to be much or any effort to sell goods. The women of the locality should be made to feel that it is a privilege to be invited to the private opening. Follow this up with some vigorous newspaper advertising, and you will have no occasion, if your stock of millinery is as good as it ought to be and your prices are reasonable, as they ought to be, to find fault with your millinery trade. What has just been said of millinery can also be said, for the most part, of capes, jackets, wraps and suits, which come every six months to fascinate the feminine population of your locality. Then follow the silks, satins, velvets, dress goods, gingham, challies, and so on. All of these are brimful of suggestions to the advertising man who keeps his eyes open. The practical advertising man, who is in earnest in advertising his wares, can find many a useful suggestion in the pages of the trade journals devoted to his particular kind of merchandise.

MORE SPACE NEEDED.

The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, are making some changes in their Montreal warehouse. These are in the way of enlargement of space due to the demand for increased accommodation which has been growing of late. The first floor has been enlarged for a more extensive linen department. Above the third floor there has been opened out a full new flat, which will be devoted exclusively to the departments of hosiery, smallwares and men's furnishings. The underwear, which forms a very important item in itself, and of which a specialty is made, is shown in the hosiery department, while the linens, sheets, etc., are along with the men's furnishings. Messrs. Cote and Curle, two gentlemen who have been with the firm for a considerable length of time, will have charge of the hosiery and smallwares departments respectively.

Talking of khaki, there are as many ways of pronouncing the word as there are ways of spelling the same. An erroneous opinion exists, however, that khaki is a material, and not a color. Khaki may be cotton or woollen, or anything. Serges, drills, and so forth, are all made in khaki, and may be almost any shade. The khaki refers to a shade, and just as there are many shades of navy blue so there are of khaki.

SELLING GOODS TO EMPLOYEES.

OPINIONS OF MERCHANTS.

THE discussion in last issue upon the question of the price at which goods should be sold to merchants is continued by two gentlemen, whose letters appear below :

FROM MR. STEWART, OF EXETER.

Editor DRY GOODS REVIEW :

SIR,—We notice your readers are having quite a discussion as to the percentage clerks should pay over and above cost for their goods.

Now, Mr. Editor, could you tell us just what a particular piece of goods costs us? No doubt you will answer: "Look up your invoice." Very good. We do so, and that tells just what the goods cost us in a certain warehouse when bought by us. But the question is what does it cost us when the clerk has it charged up on his bill? We think the cost to us is 10 to 12½ per cent. over and above the invoice price.

The custom with ourselves has always been to charge all employes 10 per cent. advance on invoice prices. This, we think, gives the clerks their goods as near actual cost as we can figure.

We notice some writers favor clerks paying regular retail price, while others say a discount of 10 or 15 per cent. off selling price would be about right. The whole thing simmers down to what is the custom in your particular store. When engaging a clerk it should be distinctly understood at what percentage or discount he shall get his goods, and all clerks should be treated in exactly the same way. Nothing will so quickly and surely break up that harmony and good fellowship which should exist between clerks, as for them to find that some of the older and more favored ones get their goods at special discounts.

And just a word more, Mr. Editor. Don't you think that all clerks should receive their wages every week? Surely the day for clerks being paid at the end of the year is fast passing away, but, sir, you would be surprised to find how many of the country and town merchants hug and cling to the old system of settling up once a year. "Antideluvian, worn-out idea!" What right has any merchant to the money that has been earned by his clerks? Pay the boys and girls every week and pay them every cent that is due them. They earn it; it's theirs, and they should have it. Just imagine, sir, a man who works in what is supposed to be an up to date store giving his butcher an order on his employer to pay for his meat bill. "Most humiliating you say." Nevertheless, it's just what a great many business men are doing to-day, and then Mr. Merchant wonders why his clerks don't take more of a personal interest in his business. It is a wonder, ain't it? Use the clerks well, it pays.

J. A. STEWART.

Exeter, Ont., March 26, 1900.

FROM MR. BRASHER, OF TILSONBURG.

Editor DRY GOODS REVIEW :

SIR,—Re discount to employes. It is a matter I have not considered very much.

It has been the custom for years in this section to allow clerks to have goods at cost with 10 per cent. added, and I have never disturbed the custom.

GEORGE BRASHER.

Tilsonburg, March 24, 1900.

THE PULLEY BELTS PATENTED IN CANADA.

THE trade will be interested in knowing that the famous "Pulley" belts and collars, which Messrs. S. Koch & Sons, of New York, have introduced with such marvellous success in the United States, are now protected by a very stiff patent. Mr. W. L. Beadnell, representing Messrs. Koch & Sons, has just visited Canada in connection with the enforcing of the patent for the belts and stock collars in this country, and has sold the exclusive right for manufacturing and marketing the same to the Canada Featherbone Co., who are well and favorably known to every dry goods firm in Canada.

On another page will be found Messrs. Koch & Sons' formal notice that the Canadian patent office at Ottawa has issued to them, under date of March 16th, 1900, the exclusive patent for these "Pulley" belts and collars, and the announcement is also made that any retailers, manufacturers or wholesalers who handle or sell any imitation of the Koch patent will be proceeded against under the law.

The development, popularity and sale of these articles in the United States have been simply phenomenal. It is interesting to note in this connection that Messrs. Koch & Sons, the inventors, have, as far back as two years ago, made similar belts. At that time the styles of garment were such as not to create any great demand for this form of belt. But with the advent of the new shaped corsets, the long-waisted fronts and short-waisted backs, a more pliable form of girdle than the usual stiff band belt was required. Consequently when the ribbon belt, with its improved featherbone stays, its boned back and pulley idea in front, was brought out in New York before Christmas it immediately caught on and is now going with amazing rapidity at all centres of trade. The inventors, finding themselves confronted with numerous imitations which were being turned out in inferior goods and marketed at a high price, without a single claim to warrant their existence, decided to secure the strictest registration for their patent, both in the States and Canada, in Great Britain and other countries.

This has now been done, and the notice to which reference has been made, addressed to the Canadian trade, is of considerable importance and should be kept in mind, as Mr. Beadnell and the Canada Featherbone Co. inform THE DRY GOODS REVIEW that the company have no intention of permitting their rights to be invaded in this country in any one particular.

NEW COTTON COMPANY.

W. D. Long, J. M. Young, Alfred Morgan, of Hamilton, and C. T. Grantham, of Yarmouth, N.S., are among those interested in the Imperial Cotton Company, which has a capital of $750,000. The company proposes to establish a factory east of Hamilton and will manufacture cotton duck. About 500 hands will be employed. Power will be furnished by the Cataract Company, Hamilton.

GERMAN GOODS AND THE TARIFF.

Although the preferential tariff may be raised to 33½ per cent., the export of German textile goods is on the increase, and German manufacturers study this market now more than before, as they want to keep the trade they have, and therefore show always better goods more suitable for this market. This is exemplified by the immense range of German textile goods shown by the enterprising firm of M. Markus, 30 Hospital street, Montreal, who show one of the best selected ranges of German dress goods, silks, velvets, trimmings, and the latest novelties in dress and mantle buttons. The leading German manufacturers are represented by this firm.

Clothing and Woollen Trade.

AN EXCEPTION · NOT THE RULE.

THE following item has appeared in two exchanges which try to follow more or less closely the dry goods trade in Canada: "A local tailor remarked the other day that in a certain line he has given the preference in purchasing to English goods because the double width cloth was in all six inches wider than the Canadian cloth of a similar grade. It was a mistake, he thought, of the Canadian manufacturers, who had to compete with the imported article, to make this difference in the width of the cloth. The prices of the two lines he was comparing were the same, but it was more advantageous for him to have the British make, and he had bought it, as it was more profitable to him in cutting suits. As the Canadian makers have in every other respect taken such pains to compete with the imported cloths and have been so successful in the matter of style, finish and the holding of colors, there is reason to believe the difficulty mentioned will be overcome."

This article was shown by THE REVIEW to a firm doing one of the best and biggest trades in woollens and clothing in Canada. When an opinion was asked, one of the partners answered:

"Well, it may have been true that this tailor found such a remarkable difference in width between Canadian and English goods. But, if it was the case, it was very exceptional.

"Cloths are made in all countries on the basis of 28 in., $\frac{3}{4}$ yd., and $1\frac{1}{2}$ yd. Goods made in Canada and the United States are, as a rule, made and sold for all classes on a basis of 54 in. This width is, I consider, the most practical, because the least wasteful. British goods are made for various markets, having many standards of width, hence they come here in all widths. The table you see there has nothing but English goods. Hardly any two are quite the same width, and between the shortest and the longest there must be four inches difference. Our buyers are careful, so you will find that all of these come up to the 54-in. standard. The trade will almost always find that British, Canadian and United States goods will be always up to the widths for which they are bought. But cloths from continental Europe will generally be found, instead of coming up to the widths of Canadian cloths, to be from 2 in. to 4 in. narrower than the basis on which Canadian materials are made."

The Canadian manufacturer has no reason to worry over the number of orders that are lost to him because of the narrow width of his product. The demand for Canadian goods this season is greater than ever before, and must in every way be satisfactory to the home manufacturer. And he has, to a very great extent, himself to thank for this, for, though the loyalty of the jobbers, particularly in Toronto, has done much to give Canadian goods the prestige they now enjoy, the way in which these goods have been turned out up to the highest standard in every respect, including both width and finish—has been the chief factor in causing them to be held in the high esteem in which they are held. To-day it is a well-known fact that Canadian-made woollens, both for men's and women's wear, are quite equal to those made in any other part of the world. In fact, in homespuns for men's business suits, as well as for ladies' wear, Canadian goods lead the world, and are to day being sold on their merits in London, where they get in free of duty, and in New York, Philadelphia and Boston, where they have to bear a duty of nearly 100 per cent.

Saxe & Sons, Montreal, wish to say that their travelers are now on the road with Fall samples; and they state that they will be enabled to quote old prices, as they placed contracts for many of their goods before the rise in the woollen market took entire effect. Special values are shown in all-wool, heavy tweed suits in dark patterns, at $5. Also in beaver overcoats, French faced, one-half satin linings.

J. Rosenbloom & Co., proprietors of the Star Clothing Hall, Sherbrooke, have leased the store adjoining their present location. The two stores will be connected by an archway, and the new store will be filled with a new and complete stock of boots and shoes, giving additional space in their present stand for clothing, of which they will carry a still larger stock. The firm will have one of the most complete clothing stores east of Montreal.

The Palace Clothing Store, of New Glasgow, N.S., which has been conducted by J. Fisher Grant & Sons, has been closed. This firm have decided to open a branch store in Sydney, C.B., and have secured one of the most desirable locations in that growing town, where they will carry on the men's furnishing business on a large scale. Messrs. John and Harry Grant, sons of the head of the firm, will conduct the Sydney store.

McMillan & Torrie, of Orangeville, Ont., have been making extensive alterations and improvements. The premises have been greatly enlarged. The interior walls have been freshly painted and the arrangement of the goods greatly altered. The secret of the success with which this firm is meeting seems to lie in the fact that they are first-class tailors as well as dealers in ready-mades. Nothing but the best goods in any grade, whether dear or cheap, find a place on their counters.

Travelers from the wholesale woollen firms will go out with a full line of Fall samples some time this month.

A New York fashion writer, speaking of men's clothing: "There is nothing new to be said of morning coats. The three-button cutaway continues in favor, but, of course, with the approach of warmer weather, will be less in evidence as a business coat. Cheviots and lambswool are the popular materials in black goods, while, in the brown and olive shades, herringbone and other fancy weaves of worsted are fashionable for Spring wear.

"Although still regarded by the "well-dressed man" as an extreme of fashion, the very short sack coat has the call now, and is destined to be seen frequently in Summer business suits. The coats are also cut with quite a full front. Grey and olive worsteds are favorite materials—as they were during the Winter in heavier weights. For Summer wear, flannels will be used to a very great extent. Grey promises to be the fashionable color of Summer. Waistcoats for sack coats may be either single or double.

In Spring overcoats, the Raglan fad is quite noticeable. With the thinner goods that this season demands, it cannot be said that the Raglan sets very gracefully upon the average man's shoulders, but, in the matter of comfort, it seems to be eminently satisfactory. For wearing over a dress suit, the skeleton grey Raglan is, to a certain extent, superseding the Inverness cape. The Raglan, in this respect, serves its highest purpose, for it never was a street coat.

"The dressiest light overcoats for street wear remain those of black lambswool cut in sack style and faced to the edge with silk or satin. Covert coats are unchanged—that is to say, they are quite short and have straight, full backs. They may be made with or without lower pockets.

"Golfing garments will show a distinct change in the increased popularity of flannel trousers, rolled up, of course, at the bottom. They have been found quite as practicable as knickerbockers on the links, while they are certainly dressier off the links when golf is not the sole feature of one's day. In cycling and other outdoor suits, nothing startlingly new is announced in New York."

REOPENING AT ST. THOMAS.

The Robertson, Lindsay Co. reopened their new store in St. Thomas on March 24. The whole building is modern throughout, and thoroughly up-to-date. Twenty-five feet on the east side have been separated from the main store and converted into a ready-made clothing store, which will be conducted under the firm name of Lindsay & Oke, the partners being Thomas Lindsay and William Oke. In the centre of the dry goods store are three runs of shelving, which will be used for the hosiery, gloves, smallwares, corsets, underwear, ribbons, dress trimmings and men's furnishings. On the west side is the staples department, and, on the east side, dress goods. At the south end of the building are the millinery showrooms, mantle department, offices, workrooms, parcel rooms, etc. The upstairs will be used for carpets and house-furnishings. A large archway connects the ready-made clothing store with the "big store." Miss Wilson, who has been with Pratt & Co., Hamilton, for several years past, will have charge of the millinery.

MESSRS. PATON & CO.'S IMPROVEMENTS.

THE firm of James Paton & Co., Charlottetown, have recently completed some extensive changes in their establishment. It will interest the trade to know in detail the changes which this successful firm have introduced in accordance with modern notions of convenience and taste. By removing the private offices farther to the rear the middle of the store was made light by giving two more windows. A centre stairway was removed to one side, and the main elevator also moved to the rear. Moveable tables replace lengthy ones. The millinery and mantle department is finely lighted at the back. Near it the firm are fitting up a room in which a new department, ladies' ready-made dresses and skirts, will be shown.

A new hardwood floor has been handsomely laid in blocks and doubly varnished. The old heating coils previously in use have given place to a new circular apparatus surrounding the pillars in the store. The electric lights are suspended from the pillars instead of from the ceiling as before.

The old system of displaying goods upon wires from end to end of the store has been abandoned, and the modern method of display by means of brass rods suspended by tiny chains from the ceiling has been adopted. These rods are about five feet in length and being arranged diagonally along the sides of the store the different goods thereon are readily and distinctly seen.

The counters have been remodelled, varnished and rendered adjustable, greatly to the convenience of the staff, while the ceiling and cornices have all been finished in white. Messrs. Paton & Co. are to be congratulated on the success of their operations.

The Victoria Colonist denies rumors that the northern trade is falling off and that the Coast cities are feeling it in decline of business. The rush to Dawson City may not keep up, unless fresh discoveries of importance are made, but the Atlin district, and especially the reports from the Big Salmon River indicate a better year than ever in trade with the north.

A British manufacturer, who never did business in Canada before, but who has been encouraged to begin under the new tariff, has written as follows to his representatives here: "I am pleased to hear that you are satisfied with our business transactions so far, and can only reciprocate the feeling. The results obtained up to now have far exceeded my expectations. I had no idea that, considering the small population, the business would be so important."

Some very handsome goods in renaissance lace collars and ties, as well as a number of other lace lines, are being shown just now. The trade in these goods seems to be exceedingly brisk. It is astonishing to hear the prices which, in city trade especially, are being paid by people for such articles as lace ties, mats, counterpanes, and similar goods. The Battenberg work in different styles is all the go. Looking over some of these new goods, which Mr. R. H. Cosbie, Manchester buildings, Toronto, is now showing the trade, some beautiful lace ties, black and white, with and without fringe; a line of French vals, renaissance trimming, used for millinery and dress purposes; all-overs, in a great number of designs, veils, etc., are to be found. In curtains, also, Mr. Cosbie showed samples of Nottingham, French, Belgian, and Swiss goods, including the new applique, Marie Antoinette, and renaissance effects.

DEAR SIRS,

We have washed one of the vests called "Wolsey," whilst the other was kept to prove the shrinkage of the washed article. We have washed and re-washed the article many times, and there is no appreciable difference in the size when compared with the unwashed article. It was put into the boiling water, and into water which contained soda, and in every way treated very badly, but it has now come out, after all these trials, exactly the same size as that which has never been in water.

Yours truly,

A HAPPY EVENT.

Presentation and Dinner to Mr. F. C. Skelton by the Employes of Skelton Bros. & Co.

It was indeed a very happy gathering that assembled at the Queen's Hotel, Montreal, on Thursday evening, the 22nd Feb., to celebrate the opening of the handsome new factory recently erected by Skelton Bros. & Co., the well-known shirt and collar manufacturers, on the corner of Duke and William streets. The employes of the firm decided to mark the event by tendering to their respected head, Mr. F. Chas. Skelton, a presentation and a dinner, which took place as above mentioned.

The dinner was served in the usual first-class style of the Queen's Hotel and reflected great credit on the cuisine of that deservedly popular establishment.

The chair was taken at 8.30 p.m. by Mr. W. A. Brown, the manager of the firm, and on his right sat the guest of the evening. The vice-chair was ably filled by Mr. W. G. C. Lanskaill, the firm's cashier, and a very large number of the employes gathered round the festive board.

After ample justice had been done to the good things provided to refresh the inner man, the chairman proposed the time honored toast of "The Queen," which was loyally drunk and the National Anthem sung.

Letters and telegrams were read from two of the firm's leading and most popular travelers—Mr. Jos. O'Hara and Mr. J. J. Doran—the former who represents the firm in Western Ontario, and the latter in Manitoba and British Columbia, expressing regret at their unavoidable absence and best wishes for a happy evening and great success to the new factory.

Mr. Brown then rose and read a beautifully illuminated address to Mr. Skelton, signed by the employes, congratulating him on his success in the past and hoping for increased success in the future, and expressing the hope that for many years to come he would continue to direct the important work in which he had been so long engaged. He then presented him with three very handsome chairs for his private office. Miss Wheeler presented a basket of beautiful roses to Mrs. Skelton.

The chairman then called upon Mr. Walter Radford to propose the toast of "The Firm," which that gentleman did in a neat speech, calling attention to the long and honorable career of the oldest shirt and collar house in Canada, and urging each and every employe in his various station to do his work honestly and well, thus insuring increased success to the firm they all esteemed so highly.

Mr. Skelton replied as follows :

"Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen,—I do not know how I can express the deep emotion I feel and the sense of gratification at the manner in which you have proposed the toast of the firm, and the dinner arranged for my entertainment. I thank you for the valuable and handsome furniture you have bestowed upon me for my office, for the illuminated address and for this beautiful gift of flowers which I am to take to Mrs. Skelton. But, beyond the value which I place on these things, valuable and beautiful in themselves as they are, I appreciate far more highly the kindly feelings which they are intended to express, and I only regret that Mrs. Skelton is not able to be present to night to share your hospitality along with me. She has recently suffered deep bereavement, and I know you will understand this is a sufficient reason why she cannot attend this brilliant function.

"Now, I will not attempt to make a speech to you. I am not accustomed to expressing myself in this way, and I do not think you will expect very much from me in that way. The art of speechifying is only to be cultivated, like all other things, by definite thought followed by frequent practice. It is not one of my accomplishments, and the gift of tongues does not seem to have fallen upon me, but I would like to tell you in a plain, simple way how much I appreciate your kindness towards me and the pleasure it gives me to see expressed what I have always known to exist, the sense of comradeship among the employes. It is a very proud moment in my life to be here to-night receiving this testimony of your regard, although in my heart I do not feel really I am worthy of it. However, if you think differently, I accept it in the same spirit, and take more pleasure from it than perhaps you can conceive. On this occasion, when we are just entering a large, new factory, filled with new machinery and very many modern appliances, I would like to pause for one moment and go back in retrospect a little over a quarter of a century to the time when our business was started; for you know it is beyond the quarter century mark since we first began to make shirts, and, during all that period, the constant effort has been towards advancement and improvement, and that we have to-day a large and prosperous business in our hands, is due to that one idea predominating all connected with this business, each striving towards progress and improvement. That this concern is in existence to-day is not originally due to thought of mine, but rather to that of my brother, Mr. Leslie Skelton, who has not, however, been for many years in any way connected with the firm owing to the condition of his health. But in the early days of this concern, during the dangers and difficulties of establishment, among the rocks and shoals of a pioneer path, it was his hand that guided and his wisdom that directed the affairs of the firm. Of late years the direction has devolved upon me, and I would like to say now that whatever measure of success has attended this firm of late years I attribute largely to the energy, diligence and wise counsel of the friends I see around me to-night and other members of the staff, who, although not actually present at the moment, are represented by you.

"The manner in which our move from the old to the present factory has been carried out is an immediate instance of this which must be present to the minds of us all. It has been a hard and trying task, taxing the courage and endurance of all connected with the business, and that we have got the work done so well, so quickly and so thoroughly justifies me in saying to-night that the staff who operate this large factory are the equal of anything on the continent of America. Before work was stopped in the old factory and prior to the moving of a single machine, everything was carefully planned and thought out to its conclusion. It was arranged by whom each machine should be moved as well as how and when. It was carefully set down what the exact location of each machine should be in the new factory. Hands were detailed to have all moved from the old, and others to receive everything as it arrived at the new. By this system each one knew his duty down to the youngest junior, so, when the "great trek" began, everything having been carefully committed to paper and each day's work decided upon in advance, no unnecessary delay occurred and each one knew what he ought to do. I think Mr. Brown, to whom we all owe so much during this rather difficult time, and all the other heads of departments planned the work accurately and well; the result proves that. But everyone will perceive in a moment that without the energy and esprit de corps that existed among the general staff all this forethought would have been worth nothing. A large contractor, who visited me last Monday morning and walked through the factory, expressed himself as being greatly surprised to see the machinery running again complete within the week. He told me he had seen a good many firms move their machinery, and had assisted himself in the moving of some, but he had never seen a large plant moved as this one had been, so quickly and without any subsequent alterations necessary, for, as you know, in our case the original plan was adhered to in respect to even the smallest and most unimportant machines."

"Mr. Radford, who proposed the toast to which I have now the pleasure and honor of replying, says that he finds others here to-night, some who have been longer in the employ of the firm than he has. Well, that is true, but I do not feel towards Mr. Radford as though he were not one of the old staff. When his duties in life were apart from ours, and when his path lay elsewhere, it was my pleasure and privilege to know him personally for very many years, I don't exactly remember how long, but I do know it is over 20 years. During all that long period he has been a good business man, of sound judgment, always willing to help a friend where he could, and his reputation in this city singles him out as a man of high integrity. As a traveler, he has carried our flag to victory in the Atlantic Provinces, and the future seems to point to a plentiful success awaiting him there.

"This firm owes a great deal to its travelers. They are the men who meet our customers face to face in daily conversation, and as the traveler represents the firm, so the firm must appear to the customers. I believe the factory operators will find that our travelers, who are men of sterling worth as well as of sound business judgment, will continue to provide orders that will keep the machines busily running during the full 12 months of the year. I can only tell the travelers that, with the increased power of our plant, and that with the new machines we have added, they are going to find it a difficult task to sell more stuff than we will be able to manufacture. In the old factory, it is true, they did get a little ahead of us at times, but I think a cure has been found for that. We have in our factory, in the warehouse, and other departments of the business, people who have been working for the firm well-nigh since its inception. There are not only one or two isolated instances of this, but I have in mind quite a number of old employes who understand this business. Any skill or knowledge that is known to the trade they know, and they make it their business to find out everything new as quickly as it transpires. Now, if the travelers think they can keep ahead of this plant and this staff of hands, they can go out and have a try at it. One thing they will assuredly find, that the amount of our output will be amazingly increased from what we have been doing, the plant having been, as you know, very much added to in all departments. I might mention casually that if the steam pipes, which have been put into the building during the past 10 days, to say nothing of what was put in during construction, were strung together in a straight line, they would reach from where we sit to the top of the mountain and back again.

"I would like to say one word of encouragement to the juniors in this business before I sit down. It is necessary that new life should be constantly infused into the business. These young people are working well for the business and I hope the growth and increase of the business will continue in the same proportion as during the past few years. If it does there will be new departments that will require managers. There will be new branches added to the industry which will require men and women to direct them, and naturally we must look to the younger people around the business to fill these posts. Let me say to them all that it is by careful attention to what may seem comparatively small things that they will best fit themselves for their future work. Large and important matters are recognized as such by everybody and rarely neglected, but it is by the little things of daily life our characters are most trained. I am glad to know that amongst our staff it is clearly recognized by, I think, everybody that the large and important matters almost take care of themselves. They cannot be missed. But it is in smaller affairs in which the skill to direct and the power to manage can be best acquired."

Mr. Lanskill proposed "The Travelers," which was very ably responded to by Mr. C. Harold Skelton, the youngest traveler of the firm. The toast of "The Office" was proposed by Mr. Brown and replied to by Mr. Lanskill.

Mr. F. H. O'Brien, the popular city traveler of the firm, in a very happy speech proposed "The Warehouse and Factory," to which Mr. Brown responded.

Mr. J. E. Fradd proposed the ever-popular toast of "The Ladies," closing a very neat speech with the unanswerable question—what could we do without them? Mr. Arthur Skelton replied most acceptably on behalf of the ladies.

During the evening Miss Wheeler recited "Our Royal Canadians"; Mr. Fred Richan sang "Sweetheart Sue" and "Bid me Love"; Mr. J. J. Masterson, "There'll be a hot time in the Transvaal to-night"; Mr. Ranshansar, "Friends."

"God Save the Queen" and "Auld Lang Syne" brought a very happy evening to a close and it was long after midnight when the jolly party broke up.

WOOL FROM MANY SHEEP.

A wool sorter is a factory hand who stands all day at a table on which great, soft masses of wool are piled, sifting out the dirt and waste from this, and sorting the good wool that remains. In a single fleece (or shearing from one sheep) there are 32 grades of wool. These fleeces do not come to the sorter whole, but piecemeal, jumbled together in great bags. He recognizes their several grades as a pianist recognizes the keys of his instrument. A good sorter can also tell at a glance the nationality of his wool, whether it be Chinese, Egyptian, Persian, Alaskan, etc., while in the case of Western, American, or Territory wool he can even hit on the Territory it came from, being guided by the texture of the staple and by its color, which corresponds with the color of the soil on which the sheep has grazed.

A few statistics in regard to the new building to be erected by John Wanamaker, in Philadelphia, may give some idea of the massive proportions contemplated for the structure. It is decided that the building shall be 10 storeys in height and cover the space now occupied by the old store. As first proposed it will be erected in quarterly sections, six months being required for the furnishing of the iron and beams of one section, or two years for the entire framework alone. The new store will eclipse all the other lofty structures that have so far clustered around the new city hall, in Philadelphia, and leave nothing but the tower of that building visible to those viewing it from a distance.

A critical examination of our goods is what we ask.

THE Northway GARMENT

Have you noticed how natty, neat and attractive the tailor-made suits look—especially this season's goods? To all appearance nearly every one of them look as though they had been specially fitted—that is the advantage we offer you in the Northway Garment. It has all the appearance in fit, finish and style of a personally fitted garment. Our system of measurement and making enables us to do it. In fact, the majority of those stylish-looking suits are the Northway. The price controls only the material—the care necessary to make even the lesser priced goods have a stylish appearance is always insisted upon.

CANADIAN COTTONS ADVANCING.

ON March 19, the Canadian Colored Cotton Company issued to the trade their revised price list for Fall goods. As will be seen by the following table, there is not the slightest tendency to an abatement of the advances. Every single item shows a rise, this, in some cases, amounting to nearly 20 per cent. There is, of course, a possibility of further changes before June, and it is not likely that orders would be taken just now at these prices:

THE NEW YORK MARKET.

The New York Dry Goods Record of March 24 says: "That the market was not an active one for any classes of goods had the support of an abundance of facts, the greatest one of all being the inability of the mills and commission merchants being unable to respond to the quantities and deliveries asked for by purchasers of every description of cotton goods. As remarked in this column the latter part of January, that of many cotton goods there would be an actual famine by the time the ides of March were here, becomes more realized every succeeding day, as purchasers find it impossible to have new engagements accepted for reasonably near deliveries. And that fact is more annoying than all others complained of.

"It is a condition they have never before experienced, and some purchasers are loth to believe the mills are so oversold, yet it can be vouched for by those in closest touch with the selling agents. With such a very nominal, if any, supply of stocks to draw upon, it is heartless nonsense to regard the market as otherwise than exceptionally strong. A similar feeling was abroad in December, when stocks were fuller and the mills were not so sold ahead, and the price of cotton less than 8c.; hence, those who figure on any other change in values, except higher ones, will find themselves most egregiously mistaken.

"As a whole, the merchandise situation is in as healthful a condition as could be wished for, which conclusion is supported by the readiness of the majority of purchasers having placed such very full engagements for Autumn so far in advance of requirements, and such purchases included full quantities by those that are regarded as constitutional growlers, and by some of them for the Spring season of 1901. Such advance purchases are not in keeping with their views of the market for seasonable goods, because not procurable through the output of the mills being so oversold. The market for cotton goods closes with more tone apparent."

As another evidence of the strength of the Canadian market, the following circular to the trade by Messrs. Wm. Parks & Son, Limited, cotton manufacturers, St. John, N.B., will serve:

"DEAR SIRS,—In consequence of the advancing cost of nearly all the materials entering into the manufacture of our goods, we beg to notify our customers as follows: All goods made by us are subject to an advance in price at any time without notice. In case of an advance in prices, any orders which have not been accepted and acknowledged by us, with prices and quantities specified, will not be recognized by us as entitled to be filled at the old prices."

C. Kirkpatrick, ladies' furnishing store, Parrsboro', N. S., writes: "Enclosed please find four dollars, covering my subscription to THE DRY GOODS REVIEW for 1899 and 1900. I find THE REVIEW a great help."

In our January issue it was stated that Mr. L. N. Rosenthal, of The National Rubber Co., had previously been one of the partners in The Beaver Rubber Clothing Co., of which Mr. E. L. Rosenthal, his brother, is proprietor. This was incorrect we are informed, as Mr. E. L. Rosenthal has always been sole proprietor. Mr. L. N. Rosenthal, however, worked for his brother in The Beaver Rubber Clothing Co.

The dry goods houses in Montreal, most of them, had teams in the Dry Goods Hockey League during the Winter. The championship match was played at the Victoria Rink between the employes of The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, and Gault Bros., Limited. Mr. Hugh Baird refereed the match, which was won by The W. R. Brock Co. Limited's team by 10 goals to two.

Men's Furnishings.

THE demand for colored shirts keeps on the increase. THE DRY GOODS REVIEW noted the probable large demand for this line of goods last month, and we can only reiterate and intensify the statements then made. Many of the stores in our chief cities have, within the past week or two, given over their windows entirely to the display of shirts and shirting material for Spring wear. Evidences of this have not been wanting. There is, as a matter of fact, an annually recurring request for colored shirts. Young men, especially, want something more or less flashy, when the first fine weather permits of going without overcoat and scarf. Houses in Montreal have been preparing for a big trade in this department, and word from the other side of the water confirms them in the belief that this year will see an unprecedented demand for all lines of colored shirting goods. All the manufacturers in England and New York are crowded with orders.

Linen collars are going to be worn higher than ever, so comes the report from England as well as New York, $2\frac{3}{4}$ and 3 inches in the new styles of stand-ups, meeting close at the front, and high turn-over for the warm weather.

Flannel coats and trousers promise well for Summer. Pretty greys with delicate stripes will be largely worn both here and in England. The flannels make a comfortable lounging suit, and have the advantage of absorbing the perspiration better than the ducks, which have been so popular for the past year or two.

A Furnisher's Trip Abroad. Mr. J. J. Hannan, the well-known Montreal men's furnisher, has lately returned from the Old Country, where he has been laying in a supply of all the newest styles in neckwear and men's furnishings in general for the Spring and Summer seasons. Mr. Hannan was in London at the relief of Ladysmith—that long suffering and much-abused town—and he says it is absolutely impossible for us to conceive of the rollicking and entirely unbounded patriotism of the Londoners. To say that all business was suspended is to make a statement very much short of the mark. The sober-minded Englishmen shouted and halloed, walked in processions, and did themselves proud in every way they could devise. The Exchange was closed, and the city went wild with joy. Up till midnight the streets were jammed with people, and there were so many who had come into town to see the sights and join in the festivities that there was not railway accommodation to carry them away again. All traffic in the city was at a standstill throughout the whole day and evening.

Mr. Hannan says that undoubtedly the trade will be very much affected by the fashions resultant from the present war in Africa. In neckties the patriotic colors, as they are called, are almost wholly predominant. Red, white and blue in every conceivable combination are seen in all the windows; and what is more, they are worn not only by the man in the street, but by the gentry as well. Nobody is too good for the colors he wears these days, and my lord does not consider that it is beneath him to don colors that might otherwise appear a trifle loud for one so strictly proper. Besides, even these colors are worked into some very taking effects in the quieter lines. Khakis are, of course, very popular. Khaki graduates and derbies are already seen here in some of our shop windows, and no doubt they will come more into vogue after the spring months. The same indications are true for ladies' wear. The fair sex are not to be a whit less patriotic than their brothers and fathers; and patriotic colors and designs will play a prominent part in their wardrobes for some time to come.

There is another side, however, to the fortune of war, and many are the homes in Britain, as well as in Canada, left desolate by the ravages of the fire-breathing monster. Mourning will be very general in England, and already a good deal of black is being worn. Perhaps the most widely predominant shade will be in the black and white. The West End houses are making quite a specialty in this line. The shapes are mostly in the large flowing end to be made up oneself, Oxford ties, with a small quantity of graduates. Puffs and bows, as we have indicated before, are things of the past, and will not be worn to any extent this Spring.

Easter Trade. While in the general mind the principal articles of commerce that are intimately associated with Easter are eggs and bonnets, it is yet true that this season means as much to the men's furnishers as to either the milliner or the egg dealer. The same breezes and rain and sunshine which cause the fashionable or would-be fashionable maiden to substitute for the heavier, quieter-toned Winter hat a lighter and more gaily bedecked creation, also causes the average youth of the land to make a more or less complete change in his habiliments. There is reason, too, for anticipating an unusually good Easter business this year. A late

Spring has deferred buying materially, but the change from Winter to Spring is likely to be the more pronounced when it does come. Easter is later than usual, too, so in all probability the atmospheric conditions will unite with the custom of years to induce young men to lay aside their Winter clothing and enjoy Eastertide in apparel lighter in weight as well as in color.

The fashionable young man considers it a duty to make an almost complete change in dress at Easter. There are many young men who are not so particular, but, when the change in weather conditions makes it imperative that they shall put off their Winter coat and scarf, they find it advisable to procure not only new clothing, but new neckwear, linen, etc.

It would be well, therefore, to start at once to set customers thinking of their Easter needs. I should consider it a good move on the part of a merchant doing a strictly men's furnishing business to devote all his newspaper advertising and window display space to talking up Easter and Spring goods for the next couple of weeks. The windows in the large cities are just now full of these goods. In the stores where ready-to-wear clothing is sold Spring suits are attracting most attention. Custom tailors, too, are nearly all talking Spring suits, pants or coats. In the strictly furnishing stores the colors and materials are all decidedly Springlike. While a few houses are clearing out heavy underwear, the majority are devoting their attention to light-weights. The shirts and shirtings shown are nearly all colored, showing an almost equal proportion of stiff front and negligee garments. The favorite collars seem to be the straight high and high-band turn-down. In ties, the puffs and Ascots seem to be generally giving way to flowing ends and four in-hands. There is even a greater degree of brightness and variety of coloring than has been looked for this Spring, for the scarlet, khaki, red, white, blue and green, all of which have been made unusually popular by the war, combine in themselves large possibilities in the way of color effects. Several dealers are ready for the demand that April showers will be sure to create for umbrellas and waterproofs, and are making these a part of their displays.

Patriotic Neckties.

The intense patriotism with which the entire British Empire has been electrified, and which has surprised the world, is beginning to show its effect in the styles and colorings of wearing apparel for both men and women.

For example, during the past war excitement in London, every man wore something to show his patriotic feeling. This outlet was usually in the form of a patriotic necktie, khaki color, or red white and blue.

The khaki idea has already struck New York. There they wear it on the principle of turning up the bottom of their trousers when it rains in London. Americans would scoff at the idea of following London and wearing khaki ties, so they call it drab and are happy — "a distinction without a difference."

Here, in Canada, with our own boys distinguishing themselves at the front, we feel at liberty to revel in patriotism, and neckties seem to be the safety valve.

A beautiful display of these goods can now be seen at the up-to-date men's furnishes; leading them all we see the Union Jack in derby and flowing ends in combination with plain cords of all colors, or in combination with the popular and new patterns in baratheas stripes; also the Union Jack in a bat-wing bow, the Jack covering the entire front of the bow, then come red white and blue in all possible combinations; after that comes khaki, at present king of colors in the British Empire. The popular idea here is for the khaki to be in the most conspicuous place in the tie when tied, namely the knot head, whether in four-in-hand or flowing end, and the correct thing for the balance of the tie is baratheas stripe, thus allowing a man to exercise his individual taste, whether purple, navy, royal or light color suitable for Easter.

The rage has struck us, and no doubt the result will be an enormous sale.

English Patriotic Neckwear.

The public are undoubtedly "up to their neck" in patriotism. The well-known firm of Young & Rochester, London, England, introduced flag ties last season, and they had an extensive sale, but, being practically small Union Jacks, Standards, etc., were only suitable for holiday wear. This season, their representatives, Wreyford & Co., of Toronto, are showing some very artistic designs in patriotic neckwear, that are being bought in large quantities for general wear by gentlemen and ladies. One range is of khaki-colored silk with the colors across of the famous British regiments now on active service: The Gordons, Inniskillings, Dublin Fusiliers, Naval Brigade, etc., 15 different regiments. Another range comes also in khaki and rich, dark-colored ground, with woven flags of Great Britain, Canadian coat of arms, Prince of Wales' plumes on ends. To meet the convenience of the trade, Wreyford & Co.

A New York Authority on Men's Fashions.

A New York correspondent, dating his letter March 28, says: "The very names themselves would seem to imply that sack and lounge suits should be made loose, but the tailors tell me that clothes are now being cut shorter and tighter than ever before. Excepting in the particulars mentioned, there is nothing deserving notice in the lounge suit. The side and change pockets have the usual flaps, and there is an outside breast pocket without flaps and an inside breast pocket on the right side. The sleeves have three hard buttons, and there are four hard buttons down the front, the bottom of which is rather sharply rounded.

"As has been said, single-breasted waistcoats, rather than double, will be worn with sack suits, although the double-breasted fancy waistcoats, with pointed ends, have by no means gone out of vogue. Grey mixtures bid fair to be the most modish materials, and are especially suitable to slender men of good height, while darker tones are, perhaps, better suited to short men inclined to be stout. Many of the materials for lounge suits have a greenish tinge, and there are, of course, browns and blues. Brown will not, it seems, be a particularly fashionable color this Spring, but still some of the brown mixtures would be most becoming to very dark men, if worn with a dark-red striped, colored shirt, and with a red or black tie, and to such men I strongly commend it.

"There seems to be little doubt, as the season advances, that flannel lounge suits will again be widely worn. Indeed, my only fear is that they will become so popular, on account of the comparative inexpensiveness of the material, as to be cheapened and vulgarized by some. I use the word fear advisedly, because I wish that the light-weight flannels might have fashion's full sanction throughout the coming Summer. We are rather apt to clothe ourselves too heavily in this particular section of the country, especially those of us who are more or less confined to the cities during the warm months. We do not, as a rule, wear gauze undergarments, thin enough shirts, or cloth materials of sufficient lightness, but rather content ourselves with leaving off our waistcoats and trusting to iced drinks and palm leaf fans to keep us cool.

"Some of the flannel materials are exceedingly good-looking, and their light weight is a most decided factor in their favor. Stripes, of course, more or less decided, and grey tones of color, are the most usual, but plain greys and dark blues may also be had.

"The cheap waistcoat of fancy design has again taken its place in the windows of the cheap haberdasher.

"It is a pity that everything must be imitated and sold broadcast at a price equal to about one-quarter of what the really good article should cost, so that nothing can be kept beyond the reach of the masses. There is, of course, no real danger of ever mistaking a waistcoat of fine material and good workmanship for one of the cheap, but dear at any price, varieties, and yet one cannot help wishing one could keep the fashion of his clothes, as well as their cut and texture, from the desecration of the "$2.98, marked down from $3.25," window-ticket. Under existing conditions as regards waistcoats, my advice can only be: Do well, or do not do at all, regardless of fashion.

"If you can afford to go to a tailor of reputation for a waistcoat and pay his price, do so; otherwise, do not go in for the latest shapes in this particular garment.

"Some of the smart shops have been showing single-breasted knit waistcoats of dark-green wool with very small red dots in it, cut high at the neck, with flat gilt buttons, and black or dark-green silk sleeves. These are intended for golf and country wear. They are somewhat pretty, except for the sleeves, which serve no useful purpose whatever. Perhaps they are designed to cover the shirt sleeves and prevent their showing when the jacket is removed, or, perhaps—dreadful thought though it be—the waistcoat is intended to be worn without any shirt at all.

"From London comes an entirely new waistcoat, which may become popular among English sportsmen. It is made of dark-green crocodile skin, soft and pliable, but with a highly polished surface. The waistcoat has a double row of buttons set close together straight down the front, but instead of buttoning it is fastened by silk laces, which are twisted around the buttons from the top to the bottom, and there tied in a small bow knot. The waistcoat is cut high at the neck, and has four pockets with flaps finished in two scallops, which give them a three-pointed appearance. It may be had, we are told, in all shades of brown, as well as in green. The idea at first seems just a bit snake like, and for riding the thing must be a trifle warm, but if it becomes the mode in England it will, no doubt, be somewhat worn here, and we may expect, on misty, moist mornings to meet young men, at least, half clothed in leather. It may be that the cloudiness of the London weather gave the tailor his idea, or perhaps he is a crocodile hunter and uses himself as a decoy.

"Fashions in clothes, whether of cut or material, are dropped by the high-class tailors, and cease to be worn by their customers, whenever they become common with the masses, and blue serge has furnished one of the most notable examples of the rule. Every 'ready made' clothing house in the land was stocked full of blue serge suits during the Summer of 1896, 1897 and 1898, and I almost venture to say that no other one material ever had a larger sale. The result was, of course, inevitable. Notwithstanding all this, however, I should not strongly advise against having a double-breasted, dark-blue sack coat of good, rough-grained serge for this Summer. Not a full suit, mind you, or even a waistcoat, but simply a well-made, double-breasted jacket, to wear with white flannel trousers and straw hat. The combination is not only exceedingly neat, cool, and fresh looking, but it is becoming to most men and very effective with some.

"Duck trousers will, it seems, be little worn by the best-dressed men, either for tennis or sailing; flannel is to be the fad of the year. Tennis, by the way, is coming back into favor, if not into fashion, and it would not surprise me greatly to see the links deserted for the courts by the younger set at the various country clubs during the season.

"The shops are now showing a large variety of design in soft-fronted percale and madras shirts, and I have seen some exceedingly pretty ones for $2 apiece at several good places. Like the stiff-bosomed shirts, the designs are, in the main, in vertical stripes. The cuffs are attached, and, of course, of the link cut. Many of the shirts have a rather low-banded turn-over collar also attached, but it is, I think, not greatly to be desired, if a trifle the most smart. The buttons are of the ordinary pearl kind, and three in number. To distinguish them from the starched shirts, these are usually called outing or negligee shirts, and the names are sufficiently correct in so far as they imply that the soft-bosomed shirt is not to be worn with anything more formal than a sack suit, but not if understood to mean that they are only correct for country wear. They are intended quite as much for town as for the country, and in the Spring and Summer months they are smart with morning clothes.

"Washable ties of madras, similar in color and design to the shirt materials, will no doubt again be worn with lounge suits during the hot weather. They may be bought to match the shirts at many of the haberdashers'; or, ordered of the shirtmakers, to be made of the same material. The shape should be the same as that of the silk string or bow ties. When ordering shirts made, it is a good idea to have an extra pair of cuffs cut for each. Cuffs often become shabby before the rest of the shirt begins to show any signs of wear, and it is easy to have the old pair taken off and the new sewed on without in any way destroying the looks of the sleeves.

Window Cards For Easter.

While it may be true that "in the Spring the young man's fancy turns to love," it is also a fact that the remarkable climatic changes at this season make it necessary for the serious thought of the average Canadian youth to "turn" to his clothes, or rather his need of them.

This thought should be kept in mind in making Easter displays. Even if the display is similar in design or in the goods shown to what has been exhibited for some time, the window cards should be worded to emphasize the suitability of the goods for the warmer air of Springtime.

If you are showing hats, why not use a card such as "Don't wear an old hat at Easter when you can get new ones like this at from $1.50 to $3.50"; "These hats will help you look as you should at Eastertide"; "Easter elegance in hats"; "We have hats at $3.50, and they are worth it. But, if you cannot afford that, don't keep wearing that old hat of yours as we can give you a new one that looks really respectable from 75c. up." "Look at these hats—now, look at your own—can you afford not to buy one of ours?"

If you are showing clothing, a card like one of these might help to make it win attention: "Be well dressed; it pays; there is no economy in shabbiness." "Easter elegance made easy; notice the price of these suits." "Spring styles like spots of sunshine"; "Fashion's revelations for Spring"; "We have been waiting till you took off your overcoat to sell you one of these new suits—you will have to get one soon, why not at once?"

For a general display, the following hints may help you to prepare your cards: "These ties appeal to your taste, and are not loud in doing it"; "These sox are selling because they are suitable for Spring and Summer"; "Elegance is estimable, especially at Easter—consider these aids to elegance"; "Satisfying shirts for Spring"; "Everything necessary to Eastertide nobbiness"; "Winter has gone. These goods have the air of Spring about—how bright and fresh they look."

Notes of Current Trade.

The premises formerly occupied by the firm of Glover & Brais, on St. James street, Montreal, for their retail establishment, have, on the assignment of that firm, been occupied by A. S. Campbell, manufacturer of semi-ready clothing, for the display of his goods. Mr. Campbell used to manufacture for The Semi Ready Clothing Co., but is now making for himself.

Mr. Lee, manager of the men's furnishing department of S. Greenshields, Son & Co., is at present in the Old Country in the interests of the firm. They expect to be able to show a full line of men's furnishings for Fall in the course of a fortnight.

American styles of suspenders and neckwear, the productions of The Dominion Suspender Co. and The Niagara Neckwear Co., are carried in stock at their Montreal office, 207 St. James street, and by L. A. Bergevin, 111 St. Joseph street, Quebec, and they are always pleased to see their customers there. The Niagara Neckwear Co., Niagara Falls, have had an immense sale on heraldic and flag-design silks since January 1. They are now showing beautiful coloring in greys for high-class trade. Some time during April they expect to show their fine neckwear trade a collection of khaki silks with stripes, purple and lavender, cardinal and white, hunter and lavender, navy and white, Paris and white, and cherry and lavender. Of course, the stripes will be of different sizes, and the ground khaki shades.

The Dominion Suspender Co., Niagara Falls, are showing an important line of suspenders for Summer in washable fabrics and the ventilated mercerized Lisle web for hot weather wear, all their own exclusive productions. They are also showing patriotic suspenders with the Union Jack, British Coat of Arms and the Maple Leaf. Their latest novelty is "Our Bobs" suspender, with the picture of Lord Roberts on the webbing. Their own exclusive novelties, the "President" suspender and the "Manhattan Cast-off" suspender are the exclusive productions of the Dominion Suspender Co.

NEW GOODS IN WHOLESALE TRADE.

JOHN MACDONALD & CO.

AS the season is at hand for a big house trade in carpets, John Macdonald & Co., have their available stock in order for buyers. The range of wilton velvets, brussels, tapestry, wool and union carpets is large. Shipments of lace and swiss curtains, chenille curtains of all makes, curtain muslins and curtainettes are almost complete. There are some lovely goods in English-made white patent satin counterpanes, higher qualities, fancy designs. There are two clearing lines, one in smyrna wool rugs, sizes 21 inches and 30 inches, and the other axminster rugs. Some large shipments of jute and brussels mats and rugs are just to hand. A new stock of rug fringes, scarce goods, has come in.

A special line of five patterns of two-yard wide linoleums is being offered at a medium price. The stock of four-yard wide floor oils and linoleums is heavy. The department has just issued its annual letter-order circular giving the usual information as to the prevailing prices in all lines of goods in the department.

In men's furnishings, odd lines of regatta shirts, broken sizes, are being cleared under manufacturers' prices, and there are also some job lines in men's underwear. A big trade is being done in the linen collar, all shapes, to retail two for a quarter. There is a nice line for Summer trade in men's handkerchief ties, to retail 50c., at a good profit; also a full stock of men's balbriggan and natural wool underwear. Black and fancy cotton socks, as also black cotton with a natural wool foot, for 25c. retailing, are features just now.

The haberdashery department report a range of belt buckles, among them the "Pulley," blouse pins, etc., and the general stock is complete for the sorting season.

The sales of silks and satins have been phenomenal recently, especially taffeta silks, and the department, which, as usual, carries an immense stock, shows all the fashionable shades, as well as white, cream and black. They are strong in a line of striped silks to retail at 50c. There is also a special thing in black peau de soie. The range of colored and black silk ribbons and colored and black satin ribbons is well assorted. Mention should be made of the valenciennes and torchon laces, and the cream and black silk laces, which, as well as embroidery and insertions, are being shown in great variety. Fresh shipments have been received of cashmere and cotton hosiery, and the department is in good shape for demands for either domestic or imported goods. A fine line of cashmere stockings to retail at 40c. is shown. In gloves, too, the department is showing everything in lisle, taffeta and silk, in black, tans, white and creams, while the leading things in mitts are also shown.

A big job sale of blouses is being made just now in muslin, print, pique and mercerized, to retail at 50c.

The dress goods department reports fine sales of black and colored dress goods. Some clearing lots are being shown; for instance, some fancy black and colored fabrics, some mercerized goods, some swiss spot muslins, cotton hose, and ladies' and children's natural wool vests. These clearing lots are for immediate trade.

The woollen department are showing the newest novelties in Spring suitings and trimmings. They have also a selection in the London styles, in individual suit lengths and trouser lengths, showing a variety of patterns. This is a convenience to the trade. The stock of trimmings is well assorted in the newest designs and best makes. There is also an extensive range of ladies' costume cloths, homespun effects, venetians and plain finish cloths, all suitable for tailor-made garments.

The staple department has just opened some new and very handsome designs in English prints. These have not been seen in this market before, and are both novel and striking. For these shipments the old prices prevail. In linen toweling also the prices have not been advanced in accordance with the tone of the market, and they are showing some of their special lines at the old figures.

BEAVER RUBBER CLOTHING CO.

The Beaver Rubber Clothing Co., of Montreal, are now showing the very latest styles in the mackintosh coats. The "Raglan" coat is the most comfortable coat for any gentleman to wear, made in the celebrated "Beaver" brand waterproof. They also show now a very select class of rain coats, made in "Chesterfields" or "Raglan."

K. ISHIKAWA & CO.

K. Ishikawa & Co. are now showing samples of their Japanese silks, handkerchiefs and mufflers for Fall delivery. They are giving to the trade special value in 20-in. plain silks, which will enable retailers to sell this width at 30c. with a good margin of profit. Their handkerchiefs with embroidered initials, to retail at 25c., are as excellent value as those offered last year. The fancy silk handkerchiefs show a large range in prices, and include many new and choice designs in printed borders and in Japanese hand-embroidered goods. A big assortment of windsor ties. The latest novelty in this class of goods is a crepe silk windsor tie for ladies, which seems to be meeting with much favor.

This firm have now in stock a large range of matting, and are ready to make prompt deliveries. They have a special line at 9½c. and one at 14c. per yard, which they state is the best they ever had. In the 20-inch, 23-inch, and 27-inch widths their stock is complete. They have more than 70 different colors in each line. They have also a good assortment of crystal-corded silk at 25c. This house reports, too, a large sale of plain China silk windsor ties in white, cream, black, and colors, to retail at 15 and 25c.

GAULT BROS. & CO., LIMITED.

The Gault Bros. Co., Limited, Montreal, wish to call attention to their ranges of costume cloths and mantlings. All the new shades in homespuns are being shown in pleasing variety. The checks are large, medium and small. Striped Autumn cloths and serges in special lines. A matter that is worthy of note is that checks are expected to be in demand in the coming season. Plain sateen cloths are shown, also colored corkscrew cloths. They are making a specialty of golf cloths and heavy ulster cloths.

In tailoring goods, there is a fine class of cheviots and coatings, beavers and vicunas. Gault Bros. would draw attention to their line of trouserings, in special classes to meet the demands of the trade. They are prepared to give fine values. They show suitings in worsted and Scotch, also Scotch trouserings. Swell vestings are somewhat of a novelty. Tailoring trimmings are in stock to match everything. Altogether, the different ranges present are exceedingly good array.

CANADIAN CARPETS AND THE TARIFF CHANGE.

THE effect of the change in the tariff on the Canadian carpet industry will probably take some time to estimate. The lower duties on English goods must be in operation for a time before manufacturers here can tell exactly what the results may be. Most of the Canadian carpet mills make chiefly unions and woollen carpets, and their competitors in these lines are not English, but United States manufacturers. In this respect, of course, the tariff will put them at a slightly better advantage, because it leaves the duty on American carpets where it was and makes a slight reduction on the raw material. As regards brussels and axminsters, the Canadian mills which make these goods will probably feel the loss of about 3 per cent. in the protection hitherto granted, and in course of time will know more precisely what its effect on their trade will be.

The Canadian carpet mills have always felt that any protection they had on the finished product was greatly diminished by the fact that they had to pay a high duty on their yarn. The yarn is brought in in an unscoured state, and as it loses about one-fifth in cleaning, the manufacturer pays freight to the mill on material which does not get into his carpet. Canadian mills do not make their own yarns, thus imitating some of the English mills, which buy their yarns from Crossley, who makes raw material, not only for himself, but for some of his principal competitors. The new tariff will not, it is expected, have any appreciable effect on rugs or mats made in Canada.

LATE SHIPMENTS TO CANADA

There is not very much that is actually new in the way of carpets, though some new shipments have been arriving. Late deliveries have been retarding business in all departments of the dry goods trade, and S. Greenshields, Son & Co. state that were it not for the fact that their buying had been in such large quantity early in the season, and they had been able to get a fair proportion of their orders filled, they don't know what they would have done to satisfy their customers. Amongst the shipments of goods just arrived are to be remarked china mattings in low cotton warps at special values. Other lines to which special attention is drawn consist of all grades of lace curtains. Notwithstanding advanced prices, S. Greenshields, Son & Co., will continue in the meantime, at all events, to show these goods at old prices. Full lines of brussels and axminsters are in stock, and are being ordered in large quantities.

IDEAS ABOUT SELLING PATTERNS.

A well-known designer, in some recent comments on his art, said :

"To ornament is to beautify. To decorate is to ornament ; but no textile surface can be beautified unless the forms upon it are at once bold, vigorous true and graceful, and the applied colors harmonious. If new arrangements are required, let the designer proceed as an artist ought to do, and not as a mere mechanical drudge ; let him think out something that will give not only an ornamental but also a commercial value to his work.

"The very best patterns may consist of somewhat strong colors in very small masses, so small indeed that the general effect shall be rich, low toned and neutral, and still have a glowing color bloom ; every material has its own distinction of character which can be rendered beautiful by a very small degree of taste and judgment.

"There is no doubt that bad patterns sell equally as well as good, perhaps more of the indifferent, if not of the very bad, than the good, but this taste is disappearing gradually, and the general public are becoming more and more enlightened in their choice. Just here let me say that in all our textile productions the greatest errors and most glaring inconsistencies occur in the production of carpets. The grounds are very often out of all harmony with the figures or rather colors placed upon the ground ; it may be said the public demand is for such. I reply, show them something better. A white ground on a carpet cannot look well ; a light ground, but not white, is passable, such as light creams, greyish, or green whites, but even in this way it is a very difficult matter to make the carpet appear as a suitable background for the furniture of the rooms. If a close-fitting, well studded pattern be so arranged in small sections of bright colors to fall on a ground of very dark brown, chocolate or indigo blue, a beautiful bloomy effect may be obtained. In fact, the most satisfactory carpets are all colored upon this system. It would seem that there is a timidity of new things among designers and manufacturers. It is better to have some daring than be continually reproducing the old lines over and over."—Carpet Trade Review.

LACE CURTAINS.

It will pay you to see, before placing Fall orders for these goods, the offerings of Messrs. Geo. H. Hees, Son & Co. Mr. Hees, of the firm, who is now in Europe, writes that he has secured control for this market of many beautiful designs in lace curtains, nets, etc., that notwithstanding the increased cost of making these goods, they will be able to offer to the trade at surprisingly good bargains. That the reader may understand the magnitude of this branch of Messrs. Hees, Son & Co.'s business, we mention one order alone of over 25,000 pairs that one house is making for them for their Fall trade. Messrs. Hees, Son & Co. manufacture and control many lines of goods that the trade would do well to handle.

WINDOW SHADE MANUFACTURING.

As conditions are much the same in Canada as they are in the United States, the remarks of The New York Carpet and Upholstery Trade Review with reference to the window shade market will interest our trade :

"Every indication points to a maintaining of present prices, and even of a still further advance in window shades. Contracts made by the manufacturers for supplies now and of recent date are at figures which were beyond the imagination of the greatest optimist a year ago.

"Primarily the basis for higher prices is cotton muslins. That the cotton market is in strong hands can readily be proved by anyone who will inquire into the situation. The demand for raw cotton is far ahead of the present supply and the cotton spinners have the present stock well in their hands. They are doubtless making large profits in spinning, but it is their innings, and they evidently intend to utilize the opportunity for substantial gains. We even hear that emissaries of the cotton spinners or other cotton operators are now in the South endeavoring to limit the acreage to be devoted to the coming season's crop, thereby aiming to keep up the price of raw cotton. They are trying to make it an object to the planter to keep from planting a large crop, under the inspiration of the present high prices. How far they will succeed in this is, of course, problematical, but it is certain that the prices of cotton yarns and cotton fabrics will remain high, with a tendency to go still higher during the next six months.

"In white lead, benzine, oils and other ingredients the advance in prices has kept pace with that in cotton muslins, the prices in some instances being from 50 to 80 per cent. higher than a year ago. Hence there is in our mind every reason to expect higher rather than lower prices in all window shade goods, for it needs but little calculation to show that the window shade manufacturer has not kept a relative pace in advancing the manufactured goods compared with the advanced cost of materials."

TRADE IN THE UNITED STATES.

The mills are still busy on orders placed for the Spring retail trade, and between these and the preparations of lines for the coming season, manufacturers have their time very fully occupied.

Retail business is not expected to show much activity in March, but our advices indicate that trade in most parts of the country is better than is usual at this time. Goods are being cut up freely, and the demand for the better grades is especially marked.

The straw matting trade is active, and manufacturers of linoleum and floor oilcloth are also well satisfied with the present conditions and outlook.—N.Y. Carpet Trade Review.

ALWAYS SOMETHING NEW.

Hardly a month passes but new and beautiful productions come from the looms of the new upholstery plant of Messrs. Geo. H. Hees, Son & Co. New designs in tapestry furniture coverings, portieres, curtains, draperies, table spreads, etc., are now produced by this firm, and are eagerly bought by the dealers who wish to keep abreast of the times.

THE VALUE OF A CARPET BRAND.

Since the Royal Carpet Co., of Guelph, began to brand their different makes of carpet, their trade has increased right along. They make 10 different brands, commencing with the cheapest union, the "Leader," to the highest grade of three-ply, the "Monarch."

Each brand designates a certain quality and weight. Their special brand, the "Canadian," is confidently considered the best wool carpet in the world without contradiction. Carpet dealers are invited to watch their ad. for pointers.

A ONCE-A-WEEK SALE.

JOHN MACDONALD & CO., who are ever on the alert to introduce new ideas into the Canadian wholesale trade, as well as new goods that tend toward the general success of the retail merchant, are holding a weekly sale every Wednesday during the months of April and May. At certain seasons of the year weekly and monthly sales are held in the city of New York by wholesalers, and we suppose that John Macdonald & Co. conclude that if such sales can be made a success there, why not be made a success in the city of Toronto? They have entered into this once a-week sale systematically, and with determination to make it a success. At present, they have new goods arriving daily in every department, suitable for the assorting and Summer seasons, so that merchants visiting these weekly sales will see the latest productions of manufacturers, as well as the special lines mentioned in their advertisements. We think the five-corner idea that they have put into operation a first class one. They have set aside a space on each floor where all specialties in the department are shown every Wednesday. Passing through their different departments, just before going to press, our attention was directed to the departmental corners. On the first floor they have the "Snap Corner," in which is a line of plain colored flannelettes at 6½c., another of fancy flannelettes at 5¼c., and a line of grey cottons at 5¼c. per yard. On the second floor we saw the "Job Corner." Some of the items pointed out to us there were: 300 yards 54-inch fancy tweeds, 50c.; 200 yards 56 inch black and blue serges, at 55, 60 and 75c. per yard; 400 yards 54 inch mixture costume suitings, at 37½c.; 50 yards 54 inch black costume suitings; 400 yards .27 inch Canadian tweeds, at 19c. per yard; 450 yards 27 inch Canadian tweeds, at 25c. per yard; and a lot of short ends too numerous to mention. On the third floor is the "Cut-price Corner," and, judging from the figures quoted to us for colored, black and colored mercerized dress goods, colored swiss spot muslins, skirts, blouses, wrappers, laces, ladies' cotton hose, ladies' and children's vests, we at once saw that the name of this corner was significant. Standing out with vivid prominence on the fourth floor is the "Bargain Corner," containing men's underwear, men's shirts and men's half-hose. We were informed on entering upon the fifth floor, it was not because the corner or the men were odd on this floor that we found located here the "Odd Corner," nor had they any corner on any great quantity of carpets and housefurnishings, but that they had lines specially kept in the "Odd Corner" for their once-a-week Wednesday sales.

NEW PATRIOTIC RUG.

NEW GOODS IN WHOLESALE TRADE.

THE W. R. BROCK CO., LIMITED, TORONTO.

THE dress goods department in the Toronto house of Brock's report that sales are particularly good of German plaids, of sedans, of fancy blacks. There are some handsome new designs in the latter just in stock. Some 50 inch wool serges, two numbers, one black and navy, one black—are being sold below market values. A line of 50-inch black cashmere serge is also exceptionally good. In wool serges, a cheap line for 25c. retailing can be had in all shades, from cream to black. A line of underskirts, 40 per cent. below market price, can be had.

The wash goods department report a shipment of the latest fabrics from New York: a line of Tirian cords in a plain white ground, with clusters of little objects, with double, treble, and four cords running lengthwise by the piece—the latest novelty there and selling largely. From Paris: 32 inch very fine sateen in floral effects—a work of art in which the French print has no peer. The pattern seems to stand right out from the cloth. From Manchester: Just in stock, a large range of harvest blues in polka dots, stripes, clusters, and plain effects, much sought after this season; mercerized foulard in pink and blue grounds, and foulard designs and cluster spots.

Khaki color is without doubt going to have a large run for Summer wear. The Brock Co. were fortunate in placing contracts six months ago for 32-inch heavy drill in fast colors to retail at 15c. White piques are strong again, and, as prices are advancing both in the home and foreign markets, there should be a good demand for them. The stock includes lines retailing at 15 to 35c., bought before the advance; 14-inch glass towelling, six different checks, to retail at 5c., 25 per cent. below the regular price; 18-inch huck towelling, retailing at 10c., also 25 per cent. below market values. These are special purchases.

For the April sorting trade the carpet department are showing a range of all grades of carpets, oilcloths, linoleums, Japanese mattings, etc., and in the house furnishing end they have added largely to their stock of curtains and curtain materials. They show many novelties at interesting prices.

There has been placed in stock the well-known brand "Silkrochery" cotton, 12 balls to the box, the color and shadings second to none in the market. Amongst the new arrivals in the smallwares department are new elastic cabinets containing a large assortment of colors and patterns in garter webs, put up in pair lengths; also ball and socket fasteners at a reduced price, hair ornaments in horn and celluloid, such as pompadour, nague, back and side combs, hair bands, pins, etc.; also several cases of hooks and eyes of various qualities, sizes, and prices. The fancy goods section advises the arrival of the latest craze in belts and buckles, called the "Pulley," in a variety of styles, colors and prices; also beauty pins and sets, belt pins, and a variety of metal and celluloid ornaments; also a large variety of plaid and fancy ribbons, including the "Victoria" belt.

Parasols and sunshades are shown in a large assortment of staple lines and novelties, the conspicuous points being the choice handles and durability of cloth combined with excellency of value. Brock's muslin department has just opened up several lines of white dimities in popular prices and styles.

In hosiery and gloves, the assortment of these important goods carried by this firm has been so often referred to in these columns, that it seems almost superfluous to advise our readers; suffice it to say that this season finds them in a better position than ever; stocks of all lines are larger, better assorted, and values much below those of to-day.

Sweaters are still much in demand. Some houses thought their end was drawing to a close, and bought lightly. Not so with The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, who bought largely before any advance in price in many lines of men's and boys' plain and fancy sweaters, English, German and Canadian. They find them selling well, and will be pleased to send particulars on request, or samples can be seen with the travelers.

In their woollen department a very large range of grey worsted suitings in checks and stripes, comprising the very latest, up-to-date novelties, are shown; also tweed suitings, among them being several ranges of the new "Gun Club" check. They report they are now catching up with their orders for the "Henley" and "Champion" blue serges, and expect all orders filled by April 10, and after that to carry both lines in stock so as to be able to fill all orders as they receive them. They carry a large range of homespuns, in all shades, for ladies' costumes, comprising all shades of grey, from the lightest to dark Oxford.

The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, Toronto, have purchased, for cash, 400 to 500 dozen of men's half hose. They offer a large stock of ladies' and men's waterproof garments, English and American styles and makes; umbrellas of all kinds, sizes and prices.

"Rosedale," "Vancouver," and "Josephine" are the three special lines of kid gloves offered for cash trade. New stock and Spring colors just passed into stock.

In spite of the immense advance in price of all cotton goods, the W. R. Brock Co., Limited, Toronto, are still offering Victoria lawns, India linens, nainsook, organdies, jacconets, check and fancy stripe muslins at most interesting quotations. They anticipated the heavy advances and placed large contracts, thus enabling them to give their customers from ocean to ocean special privileges.

GALE MANUFACTURING CO.

The Gale Manufacturing Co. have just completed their Fall range of samples. Our representative, when calling upon them lately, was shown their line of silk and flannel waists, etc. He ventures to say nothing more complete and nobby has ever been displayed this side of New York. This firm are showing exceptional taste and judgment in the selection of their cloths and patterns. Those visiting this market would do well to give them a call.

R. C. WILKINS.

Mr. Robert C. Wilkins, Montreal, has produced some very striking garments in the line of smocks, etc., for Fall. Each line has an individuality and a selling merit that is at once apparent. The leaders are: "Strathcona's Horse," "Baden-Powell," "Lord Roberts," "Lord Kitchener," "General Buller," etc. A few merchants have already seen these samples and express themselves as delighted with them.

Mr. Wilkins calls the special attention of the trade to his tweed pants at $10.80, $12, $13.50, $15, etc., which are better value than ever produced in Canada before at the prices.

Skelton Bros. & Co., Montreal, wholesale manufacturers of shirts and collars, have removed from their old premises at St. Peter and Recollet streets, and have established themselves further west, having gone to William street, where they will have more accommodation.

Hat, Cap and

Fur Trade.

Present Trade. The severe weather and heavy snow during March had quite as much effect on the retail hat trade as on any other retail business, and the consequence was that the development of Spring business was checked. April, however, is opening with warm weather and bright suns, and a much bigger trade will at once set in, rendered all the more satisfactory by the temporary check during March. The wholesale houses have had their travelers at home, but they will go out again now.

The hat which fashion certainly prescribes is the small low-crowned one, and the dressy man will certainly wear that kind. Some are as low as $4\frac{3}{4} \times 1\frac{3}{4}$ high. This, of course, is the extreme of fashion in the small hat. The majority, which is the staple size, are probably about $5 \times 1\frac{3}{4}$. The new hats give quite a youngish appearance even to elderly men, and will not on that account be any the less popular.

During the last two weeks of March there was quite a sale in the large cities for tweed hats, made in the fedora shape. The most popular shades were in small checks of grey, green, brown and drab. The large dealers all showed these in the windows. But they are really a warm hat, and, with the opening of real Spring weather, it is more than probable that something lighter will be in demand. The expected sales of hard felts should begin almost immediately.

The Coming Trade.

For Summer wear, the Canadian trade is following pretty closely in the wake of American styles. Straw hats are modelled directly upon this style, "Jumbo" braids and rough straws being very much in evidence. There are some interesting novelties in sailors, as well as in full shapes.

Ladies' straws are going back to the sailor shape, specially in the fancy colors. As to the crown, both in ladies' and men's straw hats, the tendency is to a slightly lower crown, with medium brim. There is at present a good demand for harvest hats, which are still advancing in price, as the material is scarce and hard to obtain. There will not, so far as can be seen, be any change in the way of reduction in price till after the arrival of new stock from China and Japan. And as this will not be for some time to come, the changes will probably be too late to affect the trade for the coming season.

Linen hats for the coming season are being shown in a variety of style and color. For the present, however, the demand in this department is limited.

In soft hats the tendency appears to be that caps should be dropped, and the American style of crush hats, or "crushes" as they are called, adopted. One of the leading ranges in the crush hats is the 20 dwt. Of course there will continue, in spite of anything in the way of novelty, to be a steady demand for fedoras; but there is likely to be somewhat of a falling off in this direction in favor of the crush hats.

The new bicycle hat is in fairly good demand, in spite of fact that it is by no means a beautiful contrivance in the way of headgear. It is a kind of a cross between a fedora and a crusher, with a slight infusion of the stiff hat. The brim in front is turned down, so as to protect from sun and wind when riding, which gives a rather ungenteel appearance to the hat.

In stiff hats lower shapes will prevail, following more or less the Knox and Dunlap styles, which are being extensively copied by English manufacturers.

Alleged Corner In Persians.

A New York contemporary says it has received inquiries in regard to the alleged corner in Persians, and from what has been learned it can but confirm the rumor of a combination which has succeeded in obtaining a very large percentage of the better and best grades of these skins. It is said that instrumental in the coming rise of prices are a firm of Liepsic dyers and a well-known French concern. Dealers who have secured their quota of Persians will have cause to congratulate themselves on their foresight. Persians, in comparison to other furs, certainly were not high in price. Americans who have returned from abroad are unanimous in their declarations that nothing but rubbish, not suitable for either American or Canadian demands, is all that is now left in the open market.

The "Bobs" Hat.

Though the Anderson & Macbeth Co., Limited, the hat firm organized in Toronto at the beginning of the year, is one of the youngest firms in the wholesale hat business in Canada, the long experience of the members makes it to all practical purposes an old, tried house. The senior partner, Mr. George Anderson, has been in this business in Canada for over 20 years. Mr. Hugh Macbeth, a Canadian by birth, has for many years been connected with the trade in the United States.

The firm make a specialty of handling nobby, stylish goods, and as both partners are alive to the trend of fashions, they are fully abreast of the newest ideas. It is their house that got out the novelty for Spring in the shape of a "Bobs" hat, a compliment to Lord Roberts. This is a soft hat, with raw edge, in khaki and all colors.

When a representative of THE REVIEW visited this firm's warehouse at 58 Bay street, the other day, their staff was literally "rushed" filling orders, the most practical proof of the ready recognition by the trade of the up-to-date manner in which this firm are conducting their business.

Furs in the Northwest.

The receipt of all grades of furs from the Canadian Northwest so far this year have been unusually small compared with former years. Several of the best posted firms handling furs in those sections, say that the Spring receipts, which contain the large lots will be small. If this shortage proves a reality during the remainder of the season Canadian furs will be high next year, and it will make prices still higher for the furs that come from those sections. Furs are usually sold on tender in Canada,

ABOUT FURS.

The marked advance in all classes of goods has naturally affected Furs. We, however, anticipated the rise to a great extent by making heavy purchases early in the year. This enables us to supply the trade with our usual product of High-Class Furs at a slight advance only on last year's prices. In most instances the prices are the same.

We pride ourselves on having an unequalled line of samples for the coming season. In addition to a full range of staples, comprising Astrachan, Coon, Lamb, etc., etc., we have a splendid assortment of Combination Collars, Muffs, Caperines, etc., which are very desirable goods, and bound to be good sellers. Our representatives are now on the road, and we will be pleased to have you give our samples careful examination. We have made special arrangements to execute orders promptly.

and, as they are too high for the American manufacturer at prevailing figures, they will have to be exported. An important Canadian exporter claims that this is an off year, for which fact he finds but one reason—"no rabbits."

The receipt of furs in places tributary to the Twin City markets from this and the adjoining States are very light since February 1. This holds good even for muskrat. Whether there is an actual shortage, or whether the receipts are divided up among the many firms, cannot be told definitely. There is a good call for furs from American manufacturers, but they have bought sparingly, because prices, they say, are too high. The receipts of furs even in this northern country will come in only for another four weeks, and there will not be enough to supply manufacturers. They will have to obtain their goods either directly or indirectly from London. Times are prosperous and people want better furs. Muskrat, in their natural state and dressed, dyed and plucked to imitate otter, are used extensively here, one manufacturer alone, it is said, having used up about 12,000.—New York Cloaks and Furs.

The Fur Sales.

Speaking of the fur market at present, Mr. Jas. D. Allan said to THE DRY GOODS REVIEW: "The fur sales have been in progress in London to March 30, and only fragmentary information, from which no definite conclusions can be drawn, has been received. It is not considered that the reports sent over to this side of the ocean during the sales are official, and Canadian buyers do not, therefore, rely upon them. The indications are that 'something is up' in connection with Persian lamb. If there is a corner in these skins, as is reported, the chances are it will be unsuccessful. If the high prices are due to mortality among the lambs we must expect to see much higher prices. As for the offerings now in the market, they are of the common description and prices are considered prohibitive. A feature of the fur business which might be mentioned is that people are apt to form their values of certain skins irrespective of the quotations, and in ignorance of the markets. For instance, one may make offers for the purchase of bear skins, giving good quotations according to market values, but answers are not received on this basis, and it seems to be the fact that higher prices are expected for bear skins here than are being paid in London, which is the world's market."

Hat Making in South America.

The hat factories in Argentina, 227 in number, are represented by a capital of $10,000,000, and give employment to 6,700 hands, of whom 2,300 are women and children. Only thirty factories employ steam power. Of the material used for the manufacture of hats, the wool is the only home production; while of those made of hair, only 30 per cent. of the raw material is of home production, the remainder being imported. A Belgian company, however, will shortly establish a factory in Buenos Ayres for preparing all the hair required for the hat industry.

A Hat Yarn.

Some men will buy two or three black derby hats a season, and these will always look rusty and old. Other men will buy not more than one a year, and that will never lose its deep and brilliant gloss. "I'll tell you why it is," said the best dresser in Germantown, the other day, "It is because one man brushes his hat with a stiff-bristle whisk, and the other rubs his softly with a piece of woollen cloth. The felt of a hat is such a delicate stuff that a stiff whisk applied to it has pretty much the effect that a curry-comb or rake would have on a suit of clothes. It wears the nap off, exposing the bare grey foundation in short order. A piece of woollen cloth, rubbed over a hat with a circular motion that conforms to the grain, doesn't rub off the nap at all, but keeps it lustrous and firm and of good color. I buy one two-an'-a-half hat a year, and rub it each morning with a bit of flannel. I guarantee that it outlasts three $5 hats that are raked and scraped with whisks every day."—Philadelphia Record.

Racks for Showing Goods.

In a hat store there is a great deal in being able to exhibit the goods attractively because it is too much the tendency to make the inside of the store look like rows of boxes. Racks which enable a large number of hats, caps and furs to be suspended on them during the day time and packed away at night are very convenient things, because they impart to the interior of the store a brighter appearance. This is especially true of the Canadian patent hat and cap rack, which Mr. Kirk, of Bracebridge, Ont., has invented. His rack is different from others, in that, it can hang from the ceiling over a floor space, or over a table, in such a way that no room is taken up by the display which can ill be spared. The hooks and general finishings of this rack make it quite a handsome piece of furniture, and it can be made to order for any dealer who wants it of a certain size to suit his store. Mr. Kirk invites correspondence by dealers who want to find out prices and styles, etc.

A Peterboro' Change.

The extensive fur and hat business of J. W. T. Fairweather & Co., carried on at the corner of George and Simcoe streets, Peterboro', has been sold to Mr. Thomas Barrie. This has been one of the enterprising firms of Peterboro'; no other firm has been longer or better known. It is one of those distinctive premises which could not fail to invite popularity and trade. This corner has always been an old stamping ground for shoppers, not only in swell furs and hats, but also in other lines of merchandise. Mr. Thomas Barrie, who has purchased the business, has been associated with Fairweather & Co. for the past 18 years, and will retain the trade and popularity of the house.

An Inventor's Death.

The death of Geo. Yule, the inventor of hatting machinery, at Newark, N. J., is chronicled by the New York Hat Review. Mr. Yule was born in Lille, France, March 26, 1852, and may be said to have inherited his inventive genius from his father, who was a celebrated inventor of machinery used in various textile industries, one of his inventions, the "Weft Fork," being still regarded as indispensable in the flax manufacturing trades. Mr. George Yule, whose father died in 1854, removed from Lille to Stockport, England, in 1863, where he secured employment in a cotton factory, and, later, in the hat manufacturing works of Wakefield Christy, and on account of his knowledge of French, was employed as interpreter and assistant to the French dyer engaged in the factory. During his connection with this factory Mr. Yule designed and invented a number of machines to be used in hatting, and he also learned the hat trade in the course of pursuing his work of inventing and operating machinery. In March, 1872, Mr. Yule went to the United States, and his first situation was secured with Charles Crossley, hat manufacturer, at Newark, where he was employed as an engineer, and, later, had charge of the machinery in the factory, and still later, on account of his important work in connection with the "Wells Hat Body" case, Mr. Yule was assisted by a leading hat manufacturer in Newark in establishing in business on his own account as a designer and manufacturer of hatting machinery, which he conducted practically to the moment of his death. Mr. Yule invented a number of machines, including the portable fulling stock, double action wool hardening machine, double action fulling stock, friction upright lathe, reversible lathe for pouncing, conical wool hardener, hair fulling stock, hydraulic hat press, and many other machines.

Messrs. James Coristine & Co. report that they are very busy with their shipments of goods just now. New goods are coming in, and they are now preparing their special Easter ranges of novelties. Some of these goods are already being shown at time of writing, and the full assortment will be on deck by the time this reaches subscribers.

Millinery Season

Mantles, Trimmings and Laces.

RETAIL MILLINERY DISPLAYS.

IN almost the same degree that the millinery openings of the large jobbing houses is an event of importance each Spring to the average retail milliner, the opening which the retailer gives a few weeks later is full of importance to the average female mind and heart.

If the enthusiastic language in which local reporters have described them may be taken as evidence, the openings of the retail milliners in every section of the country have been strikingly successful this year.

In the West, the openings were a week or ten days earlier than those of the Eastern Provinces. In Victoria, B.C., Tuesday, March 20, was recognized generally by the retailers as an opening day. Several of the milliners in Winnipeg and Vancouver also made this day or the one following it their first opening day. In Ontario, Quebec and the Maritime Provinces the most generally recognized days were Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, March 27, 28 and 29.

In Victoria, the first day of opening lasted from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m., and the "sales" were reported to be very large and numerous, but, as it has grown to be the custom in that city to allow customers to have hats out on approval, it is likely some deduction would have to be made later for "returned as unsuitable."

As a rule, the length of the opening day was greater than in Victoria. In the east, few stores closed before 9 p.m., and many kept open as late as 10.30 p.m. A year ago, one London firm, Smallman & Ingram, tried a strictly evening opening as an experiment, but their large building became so crowded that it was found necessary to close the doors, and, though the weather was extremely disagreeable, hundreds of ladies remained outside for hours. Inside, the crowd was so large that few were able to see the display. The experiment was deemed unsatisfactory, and this year a full-day opening was held.

Many of the retailers, to make their opening the more attractive, made a veritable palace of enchantment out of their showrooms. Many of these rooms bore evidence of the patriotic spirit pervading Canada just now. In the showrooms of Gordon & Orr, Stratford, Ont., the national colors were predominant, many scores of yards of red, white and blue being artistically draped about the walls and ceilings. Even the mirrors and gas chandeliers were covered. The entire display was neat, but extremely catchy.

At T. F. Kingsmill's, London, Ont., a patriotic background was given to the display by the use of numerous British flags, a wealth of white, red and blue bunting, and paintings of the Queen and of Lord Roberts.

As a rule, however, the showrooms were made beautiful by a skilful arrangement of the millinery materials. G. B.

Ryan & Co.'s showrooms were very artistic. A beautiful trellis of roses ran across in front, while throughout the room were baskets of lily of the valley and buttercups, mounds of violets, roses, poppies, lilacs and other seasonable trimmings. The large millinery showroom of the C. Ross Co., Limited, Ottawa, was turned into a bower of radiant leaves, ripening grapes and bright flowers. In the cloak department of this store, an inviting cozy corner, draped in Oriental splendor, made one corner very attractive, while in another was a group of life-sized boys and girls in sailor and man-o'-war costumes. The interior display made by W. W. Wilkinson & Co., Galt, Ont., was said to be "the most artistic and magnificent ever seen" in that town.

Another Galt firm, H. A. Matchett, made his opening interesting as well as attractive by securing the attendance of an orchestra during the opening day. Though a somewhat expensive attraction, the use of orchestras on such occasions as this seems to be growing in this country.

The hats shown, and the colors and materials described, were much the same as were previously shown by the wholesale houses. Several dealers, notably H. G. Broderick, St. Thomas, Ont., have given to their shapes military names. One hat shown by this firm, the "Tommy Atkins," was a blue straw with tam crown of full shirred chiffon, with clusters of golden and brown bread clusters at the front. It turned slightly off the face. Khaki seems to have been popular with most of the retailers.

Though the majority of the general merchants confined their openings to millinery, two St. Thomas firms, Northway & Anderson, and J. Mickleborough made special displays in all their departments. The former firm gave almost as much attention during the opening day to jackets as to millinery, as they make a specialty of tailor-made costumes.

In almost every instance, the windows of the stores were devoted during the opening week to millinery goods. Some of the displays were strikingly beautiful.

THE PRESENT SEASON'S FASHIONS.

When THE REVIEW representative visited the warehouses of the J. D. Ivey Co., Limited, this month he found that firm unusually busy making preparations for sorting business and for the second opening, which will be held before the end of the month. In speaking of the outlook, Mr. Ivey, sr., president of the company, was still of the opinion expressed by him in a previous issue of this paper, that the existing styles are such that the business of the present Spring is bound to exceed all past records.

This company have recently passed into stock many repeat cable orders for scarce goods, and in addition to this their buyer has purchased very choicé materials in high-class novelties for their second opening. Each department in their warehouse is replete with seasonable goods of the newest fabrics and styles produced since the general opening of last month. In the untrimmed straw department are shown most stylish dress shapes in Neapolitan horsehair braid, English split straw and chip down to the very popular ready-to-wear hat. Their stock of outing hats is most attractive.

In the same department are also shown straw braids, in all widths and manufactures, also the chiffon and straw combinations and peice straw laces—all of which are so freely used for drapery on early Spring millinery. In the soft pastel shades these goods are very effective.

Concerning artificial flowers, the demand is unusually large, for the quantity used in the garnishing of the picture hat requires an entire foundation of flowers, in many instances veiled with lace or tulle. Roses, poppies, carnations, chrysanthemums, either in natural size or giant, blowed or magnified form, are among the most popular, while the smaller flowers and foliage play an important part in decorating the Easter hat. Fruit has come conspicuously to the front. Cherries, grapes, currants and berries, used in bunches or in wreaths, make a smart finish and tone on the faint shades of materials used, while Parma, English and wood violets are as popular as ever. Ribbons are more in evidence, now that the season has begun. They promise to be a leading factor in the requirements, notably the soft satin-taffeta weaves in delicate tints, also hemstitched ribbons in self colors. The haute nouveaute, however, is black velvet ribbon about 2½ inches wide, with a white silk edge. This makes a very chic finish on a hat. The most approved ornaments and buckles are rhinestone, pastel, steel and jet, either alone or in combination.

In the model hat department some exquisite creations are being shown. Individuality is the keynote of the success of this department, for copied shapes do not possess the distinctiveness of originals. These latter hats are exceedingly airy and transparent, both in materials used and in manner of using these fragile fabrics. So much is done with tuscan and white crinoline, or hair tissue, in plain makes, combined with tulle or chiffon, which is tucked or puffed so lightly as if blown together. A chou of miroir velvet makes a rich finish to these transparent novelties. It will certainly repay the trade to visit the showroom of this firm at their second opening.

TAKING THE LATEST NOVELTIES INTO STOCK.

Though the rush of the openings had quite subsided when THE REVIEW visited the warerooms of the D. McCall Co., Limited, the other day, the employes of the firm were busy as ever.

"As soon as our opening was over," explained Mr. McCall, "our European buyer left for that market, and already we are hard at work taking in large shipments from Paris and London of the most desirable goods, consisting of chiffons, maline nets, taffeta silks, Oriental satins and gauzes in white, cream, black, and all the latest shades, including fawns, beige, greys, lemons, argent, as well as the pastel shades which are so favored just now.

"We are also receiving large quantities of cream, butter and black all-over laces as well as a big assortment of fringe-edge scarfs.

"Taffeta ribbons are arriving, too, in all prices and colorings for present use. We have also just received a shipment including buckles and ornaments in jet, rhinestone, and pastel, and a vast variety of novelties in foliage and flower effects, including chrysanthemums and black roses with colored centres.

"Our stock of hats is being constantly replenished with the latest New York productions. Our buyer for this department makes fortnightly trips to New York, and is thus enabled to pick up novelties as quickly as they are produced in that city.

"As you may see from our stocks, turbans are receiving more attention this season than they have received for years. The notable shapes are the Hilda, which is on the Spanish order, and the Mara, a very stylish shape, with a large, heavy roll on the left side. A striking hat in this shape is made of alternate rows of hair braid and straw. Another pretty style of turban has a turn-up brim made of fine chip straw formed in a plait about two inches deep.

Though, for the present, and likely for a month or more, sailor hats have to give place to turbans and ready-to-wear hats, when the warm weather comes, and the ladies begin to don their shirt waists, the sailors will be revived, and will likely be as popular as ever in midsummer."

PARISIAN MILLINERY MODES.

Among Spring models two absolutely distinct styles are prominently apparent, writes a Parisian correspondent to THE DRY GOODS ECONOMIST. The first consists of hats with very small and extremely high crowns—in fact, terminating almost in a point. The brims of these are rather broad and somewhat oval, shaping low down on the back of the head, while in front they flare upward in a curling movement.

The preferred trimming for these hats is a large bunch of flowers placed high up in the centre of the front, reposing partly on the upturned brim, partly on the crown. The remainder is adorned with draperies of mousseline de soie, which encircle the crown and almost hide the standing back of the brim, or else one or two semi-long ostrich feathers, which follow the sloping movement of the "coiffure."

Of the second style, the brim is broader and rounder, while the crown might almost be said to be absent—it is so low. The favorite trimming for these is a garland of large flowers and foliage, almost covering the brim, which often has a gentle undulating movement over the face, while in the back it is straight or is turned boldly up. The flat crown, almost concealed by the garland, is covered with draperies of mousseline or narrow shirrings of black or white net, according to the garniture of the hat.

Summer toques will be worn even larger than those seen last year, but almost invariably of the turban shape; that is to say, without a separate brim, the entire hat being draped in one. The covering of these will be black or white spangled or chenilled tulle, and all-over lace of all descriptions from point d'esprit to heavy guipure and Luxeuil. They will, in preference, be but little adorned, the trimming consisting of osprey, light, fluffy aigrettes, a high cluster of loops of ribbon or wired net placed on the left side and flaring considerably. Anything in the way of strings is, for the moment, totally abandoned.

A new idea is to cover wired frames with fancy foulard draped in ledges on the brim, while the portion of the foulard covering the crown is caught in here and there by a stitch. The effect of these hats, for which any not too large shape is suitable, is most original and really attractive. They should always be arranged to match the costume in color and, if possible, in material. Their adornment consists of a lace aigrette or a shaded ostrich feather—never flowers.

Another novelty is a hat of which both brim and crown are covered by narrow shirrings of white mousseline de soie, the trimming, feathers or aigrette, being also white. This is a very elegant but somewhat fragile mode.

Still another novelty shows hats of Panama straw through which run large but narrow crossbars in black, brown or red of self material. These are covered with mousseline de soie, in preference white, and are very slightly draped, allowing the straw to be visible beneath the textile. For trimming, ostrich feathers or aigrettes of white or colored net, according to the bars of the straw, are used.

A big demand for chrysanthemums has developed in the millinery trade within the past few weeks. While at the opening of the season there was a marked indication for showy flowers, interest was not centered on any one flower until recently, says The Dry Goods Reporter. This sudden demand for chrysanthemums of every shade and make-up may be said to have been as unexpected as a clap of thunder from a clear sky. Though all colors are being taken, yellows have first sale, and this fact may possibly hold a hint of future color plans for Spring and Summer. One of the leading Fifth Avenue milliners in New York has brought the chrysanthemum to the attention of the fashion world. The reputation of this firm for good taste and ingenuity invariably gains a quick and lively following of any introduction, hence, the popularity of the chrysanthemum seems assured.

A PROSPEROUS INSTITUTION.

The annual meeting of the Anchor Knitting Co., of Almonte, Limited, was held recently in Almonte, when satisfactory reports of the year's business were presented, the usual dividend was declared and the reserve fund account was largely augmented. The following compose the directorate for the ensuing year: President, H. K. Pinhey, of Ottawa; vice-president, A. J. McAdam; secretary-treasurer, H. W. Lundy; managing-director, Joseph Ainley; Robt. Bowie, Brockville; Geo. F. Francis, Pakenham; and J. G. Forgie, Pembroke. The mill is now running overtime, and has orders enough to keep it busy till the end of this year, so that the prospects for the future are quite bright.

The death of Mr. Robert M. Muldrew, the Toronto representative of D. Morrice, Sons & Co., of Montreal, was a shock to his many friends. Some few weeks ago he was taken ill, and he sank gradually until the end. He was much esteemed by all who knew him, was generous and straightforward in all his business dealings, and will be greatly missed by a host of friends in the dry goods trade.

Mr. H. M. Belcher, western manager for the Gault Bros. Co., has arrived in Winnipeg from Montreal, and will take up his permanent residence in that city. Mr. O. Sommerville, formerly of James Ogilvie's dry goods establishment, Ottawa, has been engaged by the Winnipeg firm, and will be employed in the new warehouse for some weeks before being placed on the road as traveler for the firm.

A PLEA FOR GOOD MANNERS.

QUARRELS are said to have aided in building reputations in literary and artistic circles, but they never yet have been the foundation of success in business, says The Outfitter. Enmities are luxuries that business men cannot afford, and the good-will of any man may be valuable most unexpectedly. Even the veriest boor will be gracious to a buyer or to the representative of a house from which he looks for favors, but it is also to be remembered that in a country of rapid changes and easy relations between employers and employed, the clerk or "yesman" of to day may be the independent principal of next year, and men occupying very subordinate positions not infrequently have opportunities of diverting considerable trade, according to their likings or hatreds. It is true that men of the disagreeable, brow-beating type have often been successful, but they have won their success, not because, but in spite, of their manners, and in doing so they have given themselves little happiness, and have wounded many who will secretly injure them at any opportunity, and who will openly rejoice at their not impossible downfall.

A PATRIOTIC WINDOW.

One of the Peter McSweeney Co.'s windows, in Moncton, N. B., was lately very handsomely decorated in patriotic style and attracted a good deal of attention. The national colors, in red, white and blue bunting formed a pretty background and a large-sized photo of Her Majesty the Queen adorned the centre. Implements of war, in the shape of rifles, bayonets and helmets were arranged to lend a warlike effect to the decorations. The window was dressed by Mr. Gilbert LeBlanc and was devoted to advertising the patriotic concert held in the town.

AUCTION SALE.

On Thursday, April 5, at 11 o'clock a.m., an auction takes place of the following assets of the estate of John Aitken & Co., Montreal, who are insolvent:

Lot No. 1—The stock-in trade in store 1757 Notre Dame street, of haberdashery, hosiery, underwear, blouses, silks, flannels, etc., amounting, per inventory, to $13,031.38.

Lot No. 2—Furniture, fixtures, etc., $2,452.15.

Terms, cash. Purchaser to deposit 10 per cent. Stock and inventory can be seen at any time on application to the curator, Mr. A. Angus, on the premises, between 10 o'clock a.m. and 12.30 noon, and 3 and 5 o'clock p.m. The auctioneer is Mr. Walter M. Kearns, and, no doubt, good bargains in the above-mentioned goods will be obtainable.

STRATFORD'S NEW STORE.

The new dry goods store of Mr. J. A. Duggan, on Downie street, Stratford, is a fine structure. It is the width of four stores, and is three storeys high, besides basement. The cost of the building and fittings has been over $40,000. The floor space, counting the two main floors (the top flat being held in reserve), is over 20,000 square feet. The depth of the store reaches as much as 145 feet and the front width 78 feet.

Four large windows and the spacious interior give ample scope for a display of stock. Two of the windows are fitted with plate-glass mirrors, which add greatly to their appearance. There are two entrances, that on the right leading into the clothing department, and that on the left into the dress goods department. The millinery department is at the rear.

The ceilings of the building are metallic, and there will be 25 clusters of incandescent lamps, making the night almost like day. There are in all about 150 lamps. All fittings are high-class and of the latest design. There are a large number of showcases, in which goods can be conveniently shown. The counters are open and the shelves are low, so that goods may be readily reached. The upstairs will be lighted by gas.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

Clark & Steeves have opened in tailoring at Summerside, P. E. I.

Messrs. Jos. McGowan & Co. have greatly improved their stores at Delhi, Ont., and now Delhi has one of the finest dry goods establishments in the country.

Messrs. John Elett, Henry Lowndes, J. M. Lowndes, C. B. Lowndes, George A. Baker, and H. L. Mason, of Toronto, have been incorporated to manufacture clothing, as The Lowndes Company, Limited, with a share capital of $50,000.

The merchants of Prince Edward Island are bestirring themselves to take advantage of the opportunities for trade opened up to them by the rapid growth of the town of Sydney, C. B. Both Charlottetown and Summerside are moving in the matter of securing a regular steamer service between island ports and Sydney, not only to enlarge trade with Cape Breton, but to make closer connection via Sydney with the markets of Newfoundland.

Messrs. Hiles & Collins have opened their new store at Kincardine, Ont., and are showing a nice new stock of general dry goods, groceries, boots and shoes. As both gentlemen are well known in the vicinity they should do well, and the outlook is very promising.

Mr. Louis Simpson, who lately retired from the management of the cotton mill at Valleyfield, is organizing a company to start a new cotton mill at some point in Canada. Mr. Simpson has been inspecting the district about Ottawa as a suitable site. A committee of Ottawa gentlemen will confer with him.

I. L. Matthews & Co., Port Arthur, have handsomely fitted up a large room of their main store, putting in nice furniture, carpets, and pictures on the wall, and they display an attractive stock of ladies' costumes, skirts, capes, mantles velveteen suitings. The goods are tastefully disposed in such manner that each garment occupies a space alone, a great advantage for proper display. A small line of very fine umbrellas occupy a space in this room also.

"Profits?" remarked the manager of the big department store. "Why, we made our profits when we bought the goods. The margin we get when we sell them pays for the running expenses, advertising, and rent. The real profits of our business are in the discounts we get by paying cash for what we buy, instead of asking for long credits. That's where the principal profits of the big department stores come from, and that's why the smaller stores cannot compete with us successfully."

The large department store business of Charles Woodward, Vancouver, has been converted into a limited company. The capital of the company is placed at $100,000, of which $30,000 is already paid up. The business is an exceedingly good one, and has been very successful for a number of years. The other members of the company are: Mr. Woodward's son, Mr. J. N. Woodward, and Messrs. E. J. Knowlton, John Little, J. Norris, Max Cameron and A. Eckley.

It was decided long ago that

is the best in the market.

Canadian Women will wear only such imported black hosiery as is dyed by and stamped

Louis Hermsdorf
Dyer

Consumers recognize the fact that this dye is absolutely fast, doesn't fade or lose its lustre, and that it is the only unquestionably reliable black in the market.

Retailers should insist, when placing their orders with importers or jobbers, on having their hosiery dyed by Hermsdorf, and the well-known stamp Louis Hermsdorf^{Dyer} to be put on every pair of hosiery.

It pays to keep this dye only; it's the most salable.

PROGRESSIVE STOREKEEPING.

A MONTHLY ARTICLE ON THE PROPER MANAGEMENT, SYSTEM, ETC., OF AN UP-TO-DATE RETAIL BUSINESS.

Specially written for THE DRY GOODS REVIEW.

By CHAS. F. JONES, NEW YORK.

Value of Appearance.

Make your store look busy. Do anything in your power to get the name of being a busy store, because business attracts business. People usually like to buy of a store that has the appearance and the name of being progressive and up-to-date. If your store once gets the name of being the centre of attraction in your town it will draw a great many more customers than if it should get the name of not being popular, even though the goods and prices in either case might be identically the same. People love success and are likely to trade with the store which has the appearance of being successful.

When Cleaning is Done.

Watch your porters. Have good porters. See that your store is kept bright and clean as a new pin and that your cleaning is done at the proper time, either after your customers have left the store, or before they arrive in the morning. Do not allow your porters to commence cleaning so late that your customers are in buying before the cleaning is done. Selling and cleaning cannot go on at the same time, or if they do it is at the detriment of one or the other.

Novelties are one of those things which give your store a good reputation and which bring trade. Novelties sell well early in life, and, therefore, you want to be one of the first to introduce them, and after they have run their course you want to be the first one to get rid of them and get something else that is new.

Do not, however, mistake oddities for novelties. There are some things that are very odd, but at the same time very useless and very unattractive. But this is not the kind of goods you want to get hold of.

Despatch of Goods.

Watch the bundle counter. Watch it for two reasons. First, to see that your bundles are delivered promptly; that customers are not kept waiting for their goods. Next, watch the bundles carefully, that they are not soiled or hurt. Thousands of dollars worth of goods are yearly made unsatisfactory to the purchasers by being soiled in handling after they have been bought and before they have reached their destination.

It is your duty as a merchant to see that your customers get the goods in just as good condition as when they made the selection.

Be Systematic.

Do not do business spasmodically, one day in proper form with a good system, and the next day in a slipshod way without any system. If you are going to have a system, of course, be sure it is a good system, and that it is enforced all the time. It is steady work day after day that brings success; one day working with a form and the next day allowing your house to assume a lazy appearance, will never make you a bright future.

Keep cool when rushed. Do not get nervous or rattled. The crowd of buyers which will come to your store is just what you want. Do not let a little rush of business get you so excited that you cannot properly attend to this. You want your store to look busy and, if possible, rushed all the time. For, as I have said before, this brings more business. Take things as they come, in an easy way.

A Few Words to Clerks.

A great many clerks neglect their stocks by not covering them well at night. They forget that all the dust, etc., which is collected on their goods, on account of them not being covered up, is adding extra work for the next day in dusting and cleaning.

Covering up not only saves labor on the clerk's part, but it saves dollars for the store as well by keeping goods from becoming soiled.

Keep a stiff upper lip. Do not get discouraged. Always do the very best you know how. If your best does not succeed do not feel discouraged over it, but try again. It does not pay to become discouraged. You lose energy and your work has not as much effect as when you are all the time determined to push yourself forward and to do things the right way. It is easy enough after one gets in the habit of keeping up spirits and no one is so likely to be so successful in selling or in making one's way forward in any business as he who is full of determination and grit.

Do not indulge in loud talking or fussing among yourselves. It does not do any good; it may do your fellow clerk an injury and it will certainly do the store and the persons for whom you are working great harm. If you have any fussing or loud talking to do, wait until after business hours, until after the store is closed, and you will find yourself in some other place more suitable to a controversy.

As to Tale-Bearing.

Stop carrying tales. The clerk who is continually making a business of seeing what other people are doing and reporting their negligence is very likely to be neglecting some things himself. Of course, I do not mean by this that when a good clerk sees another do something which is detrimental to the house and which is done purposely and not through simple ignorance, that the good clerk should not report it. It is only your duty to your employer to see that his interests are taken care of. But do not be constantly on the lookout for little failings in your fellow salesman or saleswomen in order that you may have some fault to find with them. If you find them doing something which is not right and you believe they are doing it in ignorance, it will be much better for them, and for the house, to first explain to them that what they are doing is wrong. This will give them an opportunity to correct and make them better salespeople and will hold you in higher esteem in the house as well.

In waiting on a customer do not be too afraid of work. Do not be too afraid that you will show them too many goods. It is always well to show several things and not just one which they ask for. By showing several things you may not only make additional sales at the time, but you will win friends for yourself and employer, for all buyers like to be waited on by courteous and painstaking people, and the customers whom you please are likely to wish you to wait on them again, and the house for which you are working will undoubtedly appreciate your services about in proportion as they are appreciated by the public.

As to Off Days.

Try to keep customers interested. Do not let the time seem to drag, either if you are waiting on them, or if they are waiting for a package or change after having been served. Of course, if there is a rush of business in the store and you have other customers to wait on, you are of necessity compelled to leave a customer to herself if she is waiting after the sale. But if there is no one else claiming your attention, it is well to keep the customer's attention engaged by showing her other goods. In this way you will make additional sales and keep the customer from getting wearied while she is waiting.

Use the rainy days and the off days in the store in cleaning up your stock or reticketing the goods. Do not allow a rainy day to come in and get you in the habit of loafing. One day of loafing makes it very hard indeed for you to go back to steady work the next day, beside the waste of time it occasions. You can brighten up your department and work to its advantage during all the spare moments in which there are no customers to be waited upon.

Good Men are Sure.

There is always room at the top for good salespeople. That is, those who prove themselves to be worthy of trust, and bright, live people after trade can always be depended upon to keep their positions, no matter what comes. When the dull season is at hand, and any of the employes are necessarily laid off, it is not the good ones who are out of positions, but those who have not proven themselves to be so good.

If you have made yourself a good salesman you can count on being retained, even in the dullest times. Strive to be somebody and do your work in a creditable way. Strive to climb up in your position and become the head salesman in your stock. There is but one time to climb up and that is the present and as early as possible in your business experience.

After you have been clerking a number of years you are very likely to be set in your ways so that it will be much harder to put push and enterprise into your work than if you began right when you were new in the business.

Be Careful.

Do not waste. Many of the things which you carelessly throw away cost a good deal of money. Twine, scrap paper, envelopes, pasteboard boxes, and all such things, are a great expense, and clerks can either add to or take from the profits of the house a great deal each year by the way in which they handle their goods.

Show the people whom you are working for that you are looking to their interests, and that you appreciate the fact that they are in the business to make money, and show this by being careful of things in your charge, and it will turn to your good, as it will, no doubt, be appreciated by your firm and you will be the one to whom they will feel like entrusting new duties or a higher position when opportunities come.

Do not be a kicker about any duties which you may have to perform. If you receive an order to do such and such a thing, although it may not be exactly as you wish to do it, go ahead and do it. Do it as carefully and as nicely as you can, and then if you have any grievance to make, or feel that you should not be required to perform such duties, then go to the proprietor and do your kicking. This will relieve you from having to repeat the performance and will at the same time show your employer that you are not kicking from an unwillingness to obey, but because you have really reason for making the complaint.

Know exactly the condition of your stock at all times. Do not do any guess-work in regard to what you have on the shelves. If you do not know just what is there, investigate. Find out. Do not let a customer come in and ask for a piece of goods and you be compelled to say to him that you do not know whether you have it or not. Always know what you have, so that you need not send customers away from the store when, had you been better posted, you could have accommodated them.

IMPROVEMENTS AT VALLEYFIELD

A large force of men are getting to work at the new power house for The Montreal Cotton Co. at Valleyfield. The hydraulic-electric power to be developed will amount to about 3,000 horse-power.

There are about 1,000 looms waiting on this power being developed. The company are very much pressed at present with orders, but expect to have about 1,000 extra looms making goods by July 1. This will have the effect of making quite enough piece-dyed lining goods to suit the wants of the country. Indeed, it will have the same effect as if a new mill of 1,000 looms had been started.

How to Run a Big Store.

Arrangement and Management of Henry Morgan & Co., Montreal.

AN inspection of the large establishment known far and wide as the Colonial House, or perhaps equally well under the name of Henry Morgan, is an education in itself. Canada's big departmental needs no introduction; but there are many aspects of such a concern which are of interest.

In 1844, Mr. Henry Morgan started a dry goods business on Notre Dame street, Montreal, and was followed a year later by his brother James. The firm originated as Smith & Morgan, and carried on operations thus for some years. Subsequently the establishment was transferred to Victoria Square where it remained until nine years ago, when the present site was selected as offering splendid advantages for up-town trade.

At first, as has been remarked, dry goods was the sole or at least the chief line; but it is now 22 years since the firm began really as a departmental store. The present tremendous concern is simply the result of a measured and legitimate development, one department after another having been added, year after year, till now there are about 33 separate departments, in which are employed some 500 people. Almost anything required can now be purchased at the Colonial House. Such various goods as drugs, furniture, china and glassware, ladies' and children's boots and shoes, stationery and books, boys' ready-made clothing, kitchen utensils, wall paper, etc., in addition, of course, to all the staples and smallwares, millinery, carpets and men's furnishings which are usually seen in such a store.

The first thing that strikes the visitor is the systematic arrangement of the different departments as to relative situation. You merge from one to another in the most natural way possible. That is to say, you don't find mantlings between glassware and carpets; so that there is not the slightest difficulty in ascertaining whereabouts any article is to be procured. A brief summary of the arrangement on the different floors is perhaps to the point. There are four floors and a basement. Starting at the top there is the workman's department. This is quite a feature and a characteristic one of Morgan & Co.'s establishment. They go in strongly, as will be seen, for what might be called the active side of business, not restricting themselves to the handling of goods. Here there is a room 60 x 75 feet with the floor spaced off into foot squares, and smaller, so that any size of carpet can be measured. In this room is an automatic carpet sewing machine which will sew 1,500 yards of carpet in 10 hours. This was the first in Canada, and there is only one other. Here is also an electric apparatus for pressing the seams when sewn.

In the adjoining compartment may be seen wire mattress making—a comparatively simple, but very interesting process—the different qualities of mattress being made from the same wire, but finely wove or coarse, according as the coil comes from the machine small or large.

In another part is the room where mattresses are stuffed and made. A new teasing machine is now working, which is an immense improvement on former ones, in that there is no dust caused. An electric fan, which acts as a ventilator, draws all the dust up through the roof, and makes the operation of the machinery much easier and pleasanter. Colonist outfits are here produced, and sold in large quantities to railways and others. Other departments upstairs are the furniture polishing, and the engraving and embossing. The two men in the former are said to be the best in the city. Mr. Morgan has an eye for such men, which is one reason for his success. The engraver was formerly in business for himself, but was bought out and engaged for the firm. The convenience of this department is well recognized. Mantle making and tailoring, with several minor divisions, take up the rest of the top floor; and it will be admitted that things are not idle.

On the third floor are carpets, curtains, furniture, and, in an enclosed room where the dust will not penetrate, parlor furniture. On the second are the offices of the company, quite spacious ones, and Mr. Morgan's private office, which, for the present, while building operations are interfering somewhat with one or two departments, he has given up to the accommodation of optical and photographic supplies. Nearest to the offices are china, glassware, pottery, silver, and Japanese goods. It is in this range that the proprietor takes especial pleasure, and anyone with an appreciation of the artistic cannot fail to note the excellence of taste here displayed. A fine set of pictures helps to adorn the whole. Further on are ladies' boots and shoes, and then millinery.

Directly in the front of the building, and looking out on Phillips Square, is an almost luxurious room where ladies try on their fearfully and wonderfully made headgear. Most ladies seem inclined to regard this as a purgatorial task; however, everything is done to alleviate the agony in this instance. The room is indeed used as a rendezvous, chairs and tables are provided and writing material, so that the busily inclined may make good use of their time. A beautiful mantel and mirror stands at one side, which cost $3,000. After the millinery come the mantles and other goods, and around near the elevator in a private corner is a Japanese tea-room.

On floor No. 1 are the staples, smallwares, men's furnishings and innumerable articles which go to make the departmental, and down in the basement are kitchen utensils baskets, etc., the shipping department and engine-rooms.

It is, perhaps, premature to say much about the new annex which is nearing completion. It is one storey higher than the main building, and will have two thirds as much space. It is purposed to have a restaurant in the annex which will be modeled after the New York and Philadelphia style. This will fill a great want in Montreal. Art rooms, where cut glass, bronzes and marbles will find display will also be a feature. A great part of the new building will be occupied by the spreading out of departments, like furniture for example, which are at present much cramped. Men's hats and boots, and trunks and valises will be among the newer lines. Two floors will be reserved for furniture. Three "plunger" elevators are in course of construction, which are sunk into the ground to a depth of 90 feet.

Employees in Morgan's are proverbially well treated. Their regular hours are 8.30 to 6 o'clock, with an hour for dinner. There is no late work, except before Christmas. The consequence is that there is always an extra good class of hands. Higher salaries are paid than elsewhere; and applications from other stores are constantly coming in. The result is that customers are courteously served. A few years ago the firm made an appropriation from its profits for rewarding long service, which, needless to say, was highly appreciated. For the last twelve years a good round sum has been divided as a gratuitous bonus at the end of each year. The head of each department has an interest in it, in addition to his salary, and gets a percentage on sales.

A CHARLOTTETOWN WINDOW.

The fact that window decoration has become one of the arts of the age was brought out in a window of Mr. Arthur Alley's boot and shoe store in Charlottetown recently. The work of decoration was performed by Mr. Herbert Sprague. In the south window a large lattice work, trimmed with yellow and white, rested on two white pillars in the background. On this was displayed the firm's famous Bell shoes. The base was covered with white, and white pillars supported handsome palms and geraniums. The trimmings were all yellow and white. In the north window was a large lily, driven by a golden-haired fairy with silken cords, and surrounded with an array of Slater shoes. In the foreground a fountain played, the water falling on a mound of shells and rocks. The bottom was covered with green grass, through which calla lilies were interspersed.

WINDOW DISPLAY FIXTURES.

The developments of recent years which have made window dressing a distinct art have given a great impetus to the designing and manufacture of window display fixtures. A. S. Richardson, manufacturer of wax and papier mache figures, 425½ Yonge street, Toronto, has kept closely in touch with these developments, and now has in stock all the various styles of models used by expert window-trimmers. He has lately issued an illustrated catalogue of the figures, forms and appliances manufactured and sold by him. As this catalogue is the most complete of its kind that has been offered to the Canadian trade in recent years, it should be secured by every merchant interested in window dressing, a subject just how that is attracting much attention throughout the Dominion.

❁ WINDOW AND STORE DECORATING. ❁

Conducted for THE REVIEW by H. Hollingsworth, an Expert Window Artist.

TO DRY GOODS REVIEW READERS.—We shall be glad to receive photographs and descriptions of window displays that have attracted special attention in their own localities, and which would be considered helpful to trimmers generally. Any inquiries or questions on the subject of window dressing will be answered cheerfully, and any information given that may be desired by readers. Queries should be addressed: "Window Dressing Department."

THE DRAPING OF DRESS GOODS.

IN draping dress goods, great care should be taken in draping the material so as to show off to the best advantage. This tests the trimmer's artistic ability to the utmost.

New designs are coming out every day, and THE REVIEW here (No. 1) presents some of the latest and most artistic ways of draping the skirt forms.

The stands used in these effects are patent stands, but similar ones can be made by any trimmer. They can be lowered or raised to any desired height. The ordinary height is 36 inches.

Fig. 1 is made by pleating the goods three-fourths around the stand with $2\frac{1}{2}$ or 3 in. plaits. Take bottom of last plait, draw same to top of stand and form folds as illustrated. Hold the end in place by pins.

Fig. 2. Same stand as No. 1, only cardboard is tacked top and bottom, so as to form skirt shape. Tack goods to bottom of stand and draw goods up, tacking at top, and drape goods about the top loosely in folds 12 in. wide. Goods remaining can be draped in the rear, as seen in illustration. Avoid creasing the dress front and pull it tight.

Fig. 3 is same as Fig. 1., with the addition of lap folds, which are made by beginning at the bottom and working upwards, decreasing gradually the length of the folds.

Fig. 4 is same as Fig. 2, except in the increased length in folds of front and train.

Fig. 5 is same as Fig. 3, except the lap folds. The front of this figure is formed with shoulder drapery.

Fig. 9 is made by using triangular bottom and top stand (see illustration); take goods and plait two sides of stand in 4-inch plaits, leaving sufficient material to drape loosely around the bottom. On top, drape some contrasting material, same as shown in figure.

Fig. 10. Same stand, only a narrow strip tacked on a slant from the front points of triangle on which to shirr the goods, then, after shirring, plait goods on both sides, same as in Fig. 9, only leave enough goods to drape loosely on top.

Fig. 11. A form of drapery, simple, and exceedingly favorable for showing patterns and designs.

Fig. 12. Same as preceding one, but with double arms, draping to be done from centre, and then caught up in butterfly effect on top.

It is desirable that all stand draperies should be formed, as far as possible, with dress lengths of say six yards. Pins should be the only things used to tack the goods with, and care should be taken not to take them from the mouth, as the pin rusts and consequently injures the goods.

HOW TO DRAPE.

Unless a window-dresser is thoroughly conversant with the art of draping he will not be recognized as accomplished, yet there are many professional trimmers who create wonders in their line but who are unable to hang up a drape.

This statement may be denied by many and it surely sounds very strange. Nevertheless, it is true. If a man in the smaller towns who looks after the show windows is not acquainted with this branch of trimming you need not feel surprised, as he has little or no chance to see or learn. It is naturally easier for him to learn to plait or puff or make wooden fixtures than to put up an artistic drape, simply because he can acquire great skill and ability in these lines without being instructed, while many men will never learn how to drape until they are shown.

Draping is the foundation of the art of window trimming. It gives the window an artistic effect and is always appropriate. Draping is as old as the history of decorating itself, and must never become old-fashioned. Draping, while simple in itself, is difficult to learn and is only accomplished by perseverance. The illustrations convey as near an idea as it is possible to explain.

The drape shown in the drawing is made of cheesecloth, and is constructed in the following way: Take a thin bendable strip of wood, say $\frac{1}{4}$ by $1\frac{1}{2}$ inches. Fix the lengths according to size of your window, puff it with cheesecloth, bend it to the shape of a semicircle, and place it in centre of window. Place it slanting, vertically or horizontally, to suit your fancy.

If your window measures 3 yards, take from 9 to 12 yards of cheesecloth or other material, allowing 1 to 2 yards of extra material to hang down on the sides. The festoons as shown in sketch require about $3\frac{1}{2}$ times as much cloth as the distance from one rosette to the other.

If you desire to drape deeper, allow about 4 times as much

Mr. Merchant:—

Have you ever considered for a moment the advantages to be gained, the time to be saved, and the increase in your profits to be made by handling Skirt Bindings made from Velveteen manufactured specially for the purpose, evenly cut and smoothly joined, put up on reels all ready to hand to your customer?

Moreover, have you considered that the trade mark

If YOU have not, possibly YOUR COMPETITOR HAS, and is thereby reaping the benefit of much trade that should come your way. Turn this over in your mind. It is of importance to your business.

for the festoons. Take the goods, divide it into two equal parts, or find the exact centre of it and pin it there by the outer edge of goods on the centre of the semicircle; after this form the rosettes one after the other, one to left and other to right. Rosettes are made in this manner: After the cloth has been pinned in centre to semicircle, continue the pinning every two feet or so. After you have it all divided up evenly, take hold of the goods about 10 inches below the pins, gather it in with your fingers

The sections Nos. 1a and 1b are made of separate pieces of cloth thrown over a short piece of curtain pole, which is projected about a foot from the background. These sections are more adaptable to silk drapery, and require a square piece of very wide cloth, not narrower than 36 inches.

To construct No. 1a, this piece of cloth is laid upon the counter in diamond shape, like a napkin, and the cloth turned over from either end into wide pleats to and fro until the extreme points are thus folded.

No. 1b is the same, with the only difference that the diamond-shaped piece of cloth is folded or cut into triangle shape and folded from one side only. These pieces thus prepared are folded again in the middle and thrown over the pole, showing only one-half of their entire length.

If you wish to have them hang down lower, take a longer piece of cloth, cut the ends into diamond or triangular shape, and proceed the same way. The effect of this style of draping is greatly increased by trimming the edges with tassels or fringes.

Drape No. 2 is one of the most effective, and consists of two pieces of cheesecloth, silkaline or light silk. Two contrasting or harmonizing colors are very desirable in this style of drapery. It is the plain rosette drape projected from the and tie a piece of twine tightly around it. Then lift the cloth up to the pin and put a second pin in where it is tied, thus pinning it to semicircle. This leaves a bunch of cloth for a rosette, which you turn inside out and form into shape of rosette.

After you have made the second rosette the first has formed itself almost perfect, and, by working your fingers through the different folds so as to get them even and graceful, one festoon is completed. Proceed through the rest in same way. The other part of drawing No. 1 is like the No. 3, and will be explained later.

wall by heavy knitting needles. You drive these in first, and start by pinning up your cloth at one end (right end first) and continue with it until left end is reached. When commencing with the second bolt of cloth, do not unroll any more of it than is necessary to push it alternately through the loops of the first piece. After you have thus covered your background, proceed to form the rosettes; pull, push and pat the folds into their proper places, and you have then produced an artistic and effective drape.

Drape No. 13 can only be made with heavy plushes or velours or rich drapery silks or any goods with two right sides —as both sides are shown unless you cut the goods. It consists, like No. 2, of two pieces, and an endless variety of designs can be made with this style of drapery. The sections No. 1a and No. 1b are very appropriate with this drape, and separate rosettes, heavy silk cords, tassels and fringes will greatly enrich it.

More skill is required to put up this drape than the former two, as, unless it is executed to perfection, it is unattractive. Throw the goods over a curtain pole projected from the background, and let the first end drop down to the floor, then fold the goods carefully into about four to seven folds, and form the loops, as shown in the illustration, without ever letting the folds become uneven or irregular, something which is more difficult to avoid than the sketch exposes.

In brief, drapery is easily learned, and no ambitious amateur will rest until he has acquired full ability to put up an artistic drape.

MERCHANT TAILORING DISPLAYS.

Displays of tailoring goods are usually unattractive, owing to the sameness of colors of tweeds, etc., but, by careful study beforehand, inviting trims can be made from goods of the merchant tailor.

One thing that a display of this sort requires is a rich, bright background, lighter in color than the goods shown. The reason that trims of this kind are not attractive on the average is because the backing is not lighter than the goods shown.

The illustration (No. 2) on page 20 explains the right idea. The background is made by covering it over with cheap white cotton, and then pleating white cheesecloth over it. A drapery of purple, or some nice contrasting color, is formed over the top. (See explanation of draping in preceding article.)

Two shelves or steps are utilized, to raise the two rear tiers of piece goods. The goods are draped over the stands (see drawing) used for this purpose. This stand should be used by all merchant tailoring houses as it is inexpensive and effective. The steps and floor are covered with light yellow silesia. Furnishings, such as umbrellas, canes, etc., are laid on top. Every piece of goods is ticketed similar to this :

The ticketing is one of the principal things to be remembered, and I consider a trim of this kind useless unless well price ticketed. Every price of goods shown should be placed well apart. Don't crowd. Show a few at a time and change often.

Fashion plates, framed and shown on easels, always look well ; a large mirror or two well placed at angles will help a display a lot.

While the illustration shows a good practical idea of a tailoring trim it is only one idea and should not be used every time.

Any clerk or merchant with any ability at all ought to be able to work out novel window trims. Introduce anything and everything into the windows that will stop the passer-by to look in the window. A few potted plants in bloom placed here and there will help the trim considerably.

One thing to be remembered is to avoid placing the dark colors together. Mix in the light tweeds with the dark ones, one light color between two darker ones. By observing the different backgrounds of the various photos of trims shown in these columns the merchant tailor can carry out the same or similar designs in his tailoring trims.

There is no illustration shown but from it some idea can be gained that can be carried out in the merchant tailor's window as well as in the dry goods or other lines of merchandise.

The Queen's Birthday is almost round again and it behooves the merchant tailor to get up a creditable display for this event.

Dozens of different ideas can be thought out in which flags, electrical mottoes, maple leaves, etc., can be used.

A suggestion that will prove profitable is this : Purchase a gent's wax form. Make up a nice stylish suit to fit it and place it in centre of window with a card at the bottom of it, reading similar to this :

Drape suitings in with it at $20 00 a suit and this will sell them. This idea conveys a better idea to the intending purchaser and will be found to pay for itself. The suit made specially for this figure can always be disposed of after it is used, without any loss whatever. While these figures cost considerable, some of them as high as $60 and $75, yet a very nice figure can be had for $25.00 and can be used over and over again for showing suits, overcoats, etc., on, and in the end it will be found a good investment.

A SPECIAL ESSAY ON WINDOW TRIMS.

Window decoration is a subject which should be given just as much careful attention as any other branch of the mercantile business. It is the best advertising medium a merchant can have, providing his store is so situated that the majority of people pass by every day, and this is generally the case with drygoodsmen as they usually occupy business houses on the main thoroughfare of the town.

Window decoration is an art in itself. The taste and knowledge of a skilled man in this vocation are seldom questioned and in large stores they enable him to draw a large salary. There are also many devices for the attractive display of goods to the passer-by, for instance : Cornice fixtures, metal standards, brackets, projecting arms, wax figures, mechanical appliances, electrical appliances, etc., all of which are essential to window decoration.

As a matter of fact, window decoration is never learned, there is always something new being brought out, some advanced plan of arrangement and construction produced, and these are not the result of one person's study, but innumerable heads all working in the one direction. To be a successful trimmer, one must think night and day and even dream over it, for constant thought and sound hard work is the price of success.

I have always found that the secret of successful windows is to have an attractive background that will instantly command attention, and then the placing of goods in such a manner that in looking at the display people will note the print them more satisfactorily and to better advantage. In summing up there are three things a trimmer should remember :

1. A thoroughly clean window.
2. A window judiciously and artistically arranged.
3. An endeavor to trim so as to make it easy for the customer to part with his or her money.

SPECIAL WINDOW IN VICTORIA.

An illustration appears in this number of a tasteful display at "The Westside," The Hutcheson Co., Limited's, store on Government street, Victoria, B.C. The general appearance, which is due to the skill of Mr. C. W. Hills, is well indicated in the picture. The background was of white puffed cheesecloth in the form of a doorway, the edges being finished with mauve puffed in the same way. The top part of the back-

The paramount idea in window decoration to date is concentration, simplicity and force, all three combined to create an impression on the passer-by. This is a busy world and people have no time to stop and study out the meaning of a window. Another important factor and one which is essential to window decoration is card writing. Every merchant expects this, and even in large places where a man is employed for this work alone a decorator can print his own cards or should be able to

On the sides, which were pleated with white cheesecloth, were hung emerald-green Irish harps (which have not come out in the photograph). Emerald-green ribbon was hung from the top of each window. Good Advertising

For Wide Awake Retailers

By F. James Gibson.

Our "Good Advertising" department is to help our subscribers to do better advertising. The gentleman whom we have selected as its conductor is well-known as one of the foremost advertising specialists of the day. Any of our readers who desire the benefit of Mr. Gibson's criticisms on advertisements or advertising methods, or his advice on any advertising subject, can have it or both entirely free of charge by writing to him in care of this journal.

If correspondents so desire, fictitious names or initials may be used for publication. But all requests should be accompanied by the subscriber's name.

HEREWITH I reproduce an advertisement each of John White & Co., of Woodstock, Ont., and Starr & Sutcliffe, of Kingston, Ont., reduced in size. I refer to them here because the Woodstock advertisement is a good one—a particularly good one—and because the Kingston advertisement narrowly escapes being good.

A Bright, Busy Store.

Fine spring weather opened many doors yesterday that were closed Tuesday. The bright skies brought many bright eyes to view the very practical display of beauty at White's Easter opening days. Spring is here, and less than a week till Easter. We're very busy these Easter times but very well prepared.

EASTER MILLINERY

You have a more practical way of indorsing a store than to merely utter words of praise—you give your business to the store that serves you best. Measured by this sure standard, a standard wherein favoritism and flattery have no part, this is quite the best millinery store in town because it is the busiest. Plenty of sales people and lots of helpers busy as bees with the Easter work. Has your order been given? We can still promise promptness. The hats at $5 and $6 are chiefest attraction. Then, some for more and some for less. Children's Millinery receives greater attention here than ever. There are some very prettily trimmed hats as well as hats for play-time and school-wear.

BUSY SILK AND DRESS GOODS STORE

The increased sales in these two departments prove the rightness of the goods we have gathered for this spring and summer's business. No silk or dress goods store Woodstock ever had travelled so far, worked and studded so hard to have silks and dress goods right, because no store ever had so much business to care for. In the broad way of satisfaction-giving you are sure of the goods we sell. The dress goods and silk-selling of Woodstock is centering here because we most fully meet the daily demands and there is safety in the prices.

If Starr & Sutcliffe are so anxious to be put to the test regarding their prices, why don't they quote some of them? The fact that their advertisement, except in one lone and solitary instance, carefully refrains from mentioning prices, and deals almost entirely in glittering generalities, weakens a well-written and well-displayed business announcement. I have no doubt that Starr & Sutcliffe, buying and selling goods for cash only, can easily, other things being equal, undersell stores doing business on the credit system. And probably they do undersell these other stores. But why do they not give point to their advertising by some striking illustrations of the way their store "outsells and undersells every other store" in their section, and yet "sells only reliable goods of a high-grade character?" If they had done so, their advertisement could not be very much improved, except in the headline. This headline is pointless. The headline of the White advertisement, on the other hand, is a "winner."

Another point of superiority about the White advertisement is the fact that there is no waste space about it. The matter is closed up good and tight, and yet there is quite enough white space about it to give the proper type effect. The Kingston advertisement, on the other hand, appears to have been made to fit a certain space. The result is that this advertisement has a "loose," unbusiness-like aspect.

The practice of contracting for a certain space to be used daily or weekly or otherwise is all wrong. It is particularly wrong in the case of a store. In the case of a store, the advertising requirements vary from time to time. To-day one may need a whole page. Yesterday, a half-page may have been needed. To-morrow, a quarter-page or less may be quite sufficient space. If it be necessary to make a contract, let it be a contract for a certain space, to be used as required. Then make the advertisements be as economical of space as may be done with advantage.

* * *

This advertisement of Finley & Son, of Meaford, Ont., is a horrible example of an advertisement trying to fit a space instead of the space fitting the advertisement. The publisher who allows this kind of thing to appear in his newspaper is doing himself an injustice as well as allowing the advertiser to waste his money. The impression the onlooker gets is that space in that paper is not worth much.

* * *

The trouble with the average publisher is that he really knows next to nothing about advertising as an art. All publishers know the importance of getting advertising, and most of them proceed to get it by hook or by crook. But whether the advertising will ever do anyone but themselves any good is a matter that the great majority of publishers never bother themselves about. They remind one of the man who, with great difficulty, secured a lucrative public office and then refused to do any work. When remonstrated with his reply was: "Hadn't I enough difficulty to get here without doing any work, now I am here?" The publisher who gets an order for the insertion of an advertisement is responsible to do all in his power to make the advertisement pay the man who pays for it. If space in The Meaford Mirror doesn't cost Finley & Son anything, they may perhaps be excused for wasting it. But, to have the impression abroad that Mirror space is valueless, is certainly not to the advantage of the publisher of The Mirror.

Advertisers in great city newspapers are, as a rule, careful not to waste space. Yet, in proportion to the number of readers to be reached, it probably costs less money to use The New York Herald at 50c. a line than to buy space in The Mirror at its regular rates or even at half its regular rates. In other words, an advertiser in The Herald can better afford to waste space than can the advertiser in The Mirror or other country weekly. Yet, take up almost any country weekly and numerous examples of wasted space can be found in its advertising columns. In a great metropolitan daily nearly all advertising pays the advertiser. In a small country paper not half the advertising pays anyone—not even the publisher—and one of the main reasons for it is that a very large proportion of the advertising columns of the latter is wasted. If there is anyone who should be careful of his advertising space it is the man who uses a paper of small circulation, and, therefore, a paper with a small advertising rate.

* * *

Is it good advertising to use the flag of one's country for business purposes? Most national flags are handsome, and one of the handsomest is the good old Union Jack. As a filler up of space in a circular or newspaper or other advertisement the Union Jack is certainly very handy. But the question is: Is it in good taste to drag the flag down to the level of a drummer for business? When one thinks what the British flag stands for; of the thousands and tens of thousands who have gladly fought and bled and died for it; of the many thousands who are fighting and bleeding and dying for it now, the effect, I am sure, is to cause one to turn away from someone who tries to harness it up to a selfish interest. Mr. McMaster is, no doubt, very much attached to the flag in more ways than one, but I am sure that I would not feel impelled to go into his store to make a purchase merely because he appears to be "truly loil." I think that Mr. McMaster, however good his intentions may be, will agree with me that he is making a mistake in assuming that the British flag is his to so great an extent that he is justified in placing his name on it. His neighbor merchant has, doubtless, just as much right to the flag as Mr. McMaster has. The fact that this neighbor has too much respect for so gloriously sacred an emblem to use it for catch-penny purposes will not, I am sure, drive trade from his store to Mr. McMaster's.

THE PROCESS OF MERCERISATION.

THE original process of mercerisation invented by William Mercer, in 1850, was chiefly a mechanical one, and was applicable to short-stapled cottons only. Mercer discovered that a solution of strong caustic soda, with added friction, produced a remarkably lustrous effect upon cotton, but the defect was that the lustre vanished after washing, bleaching, or dyeing. However, a little over three years ago, Dr. Liebmann perfected his process, which is a chemical one, and is applicable to the finer longer-stapled cottons; in fact, the finer the staple the better the mercerisation and the silk-like effects produced. Under Dr. Liebmann's process the cotton, when in the chemical solution, is stretched at high tension—a tension of 2,000 lb. to 3,000 lb. to every pound of yarn. In a few minutes the transformation is complete. What was formerly a dull-looking grey yarn has had imparted to it a lustrous, silk-like appearance, which is even heightened by subsequent washing or dyeing. After its caustic bath the now mercerised yarn goes through another simple process, under which all traces of the soda are removed from the tissues, which are then ready for bleaching or dyeing. The high pressure referred to is for the purpose of avoiding shrinkage in the yarn, as well as to produce, under the action of the caustic, the lustrousness or mercerisation of the staple. In short, under the present system, once this lustre is secured it is absolutely permanent. In the mercerisation "bath" chloride of zinc is sometimes used, as this chemical enables deeper colors to be obtained when the yarn is required for subsequent dyeing; and, besides, these deep colors are then obtained with the use of a less quantity of dyes than would otherwise be the case. Indeed, a noteworthy fact in connection with the mercerising process, in addition to the consideration that, after treatment, the yarn is actually stronger than before, is that the staple displays a greater affinity for colors—and especially black and certain bright colors—than in the unmercerised state.

THE B. & C. WRIGHT BUST FORM.

THE B. & C. Wright bust form, to which reference was made in the March issue of THE DRY GOODS REVIEW, is now being supplied to the trade by the makers, Brush & Co. The good points of this form are so pronounced that it is not surprising it is already being received with much favor.

The stylish low bust, which is this season being introduced, is generally obtained by padding, which is so frequently injurious to the natural bust, but with the B. & C. form the low bust effect may be obtained in graceful lines without the discomfort of padding.

Another strong feature of this form is that there are no heavy steels in the front or at the sides, which, in corsets, are so often condemned by physicians as being injurious to the wearers' health and comfort on account of the constant pressure at the pit of the stomach, causing, in many cases, indigestion and other stomach disorders, especially to delicate women. As there is no pressure with the B. & C. form on the stomach and lungs a woman can breathe as freely as when wearing nothing but a loose wrapper. The back, too, is free from steels, which so often flatten the back and heat the spine thereby preventing the wearer from standing in a natural position, which is one cause of women having a high abdomen as they so frequently rely upon the corset, and depend entirely on the stays to hold them up.

These advantages detract nothing from the symmetry of the form, for the latter presents an even appearance from shoulder to waist form, with a beautifully curved waist line, and short over the hips. Owing to its pliability and firmness the waist of the wearer can be reduced without injury. Slender women often find that the corset simply braces them about the waist, while this form is particularly adapted to medium and slender women and gives a beautiful and natural-looking form, also a longer waist effect. With this form, slender women can wear to advantage tailor-made gowns.

By the use of featherbone in the cross-bones, which makes it impossible to cave in the bust, and prevents heat and pressure on the natural bust, and of suspender straps fastened by hooks and rings, a perfect fit is given by the form, which, at the same time, acts as a shoulder brace, giving the wearer an erect position without any sensation of pulling at the shoulders.

It is claimed by its makers, Brush & Co., that this form is much more durable than a corset, because of the different construction and the quality of the material used, and that it is lighter in weight and more pliable, yet stronger, because of the absence of heavy steels.

FEATHERBONE AND THE PULLEY BELT.

In conversation with Mr. Reid, of the Canada Featherbone Co., who has purchased from Koch & Co., New York, the patent on the Pulley belts and collars which are having such a record run in the United States, he said that Featherbone had made this belt largely a possibility since, without some such pliable stiffening which offered no rough ends like steel or whalebone that would have a tendency to protrude through the belt, the Pulley belt would never be the success it is. While the Pulley belt is a tightening of the sash belt (one of the great features that commend it to the dressy lady), the very tightening of the sash or belt would "string" it in a way that would lessen its utility; but the combination of the two seems to be successful in producing a belt that every lady wants, giving support and enabling her to feel the pressure of the belt.

Mr. Reid stated that many merchants were under the impression that the Pulley belt is only a fad. But the many points that commend it to the well-dressed woman is bound to make it permanent. It is surprising to find the number of uses to which featherbone can be put. As an article for boning waists it has no equal and wherever stiffening is required in ladies' garments it must commend itself to all successful dress-makers. Its component parts being constructed from turkey quills it can never lose its qualities through change of climate or contact with the person. The Canada Featherbone Co. are sure that the many uses featherbone might be put to are only beginning to impress themselves on the minds of the average person.

W. H. Otto & Co., general merchants, Elmira, have found business in such a healthy condition that they have been obliged to secure more room, and have procured same in the adjoining premises to the south, connected by an archway. This new addition will be utilized for ready made clothing and gents' furnishings generally. Mr. Otto speaks most confidently of the future of their rising town.

The premises of the George Caudwell store, Brantford, which has attained such a high reputation under the able management of Mr. M. Beckett, is being extended by a large new addition to meet the pressure for more room in the house-furnishing line. Mr. Beckett is a very busy man, and is sure to get for his establishment the best goods on the market. The premises will in future be lighted with the Luxfer prisms.

BUYING AND DELIVERIES.

TRAVELERS are now out on their respective routes with samples for Fall. The demand is strong for tweed skirtings just now, but for Spring there is only a limited number shown. On the other hand, for Fall there is quite a variety, both in plain effects with plaid backs, and others showing plain colors on both sides. Tweeds are unusually heavy as a material to be used for skirtings; and they will, of course, be unlined, with a view to counteracting this circumstance. They will also be cut so that they will not be of more than ordinary weight. The shades are, for the most part, in blues. Oxfords are prominent, as also brown mixtures with light colored backs to contrast.

Most of the buyers have been abroad for some time. This year they are earlier than usual. They were forced to go earlier because of the fact that orders were being placed in view of advancing prices. The trade seem at last to be waking up to the state of affairs, and the result is that the wholesalers have had to hustle.

"Order early; forget to do everything else, but, for goodness sake, remember to order early, or you will not get anything at the price you are willing to pay," has been the cry for the past 12 months. Now the trade are ordering early, and the result does not appear to be quite satisfactory even yet. It is very seldom that the travelers have started out so soon with Fall goods as they have done this season.

The deliveries from the Canadian mills are improving; that is to say, for Spring, they are now at length getting out the stuff which was looked for two months ago. Some lines, however, are still scarce. The same cannot be said of Fall deliveries. The outlook for them is not at all promising. Most of the mills are filled up, and it is going to take them so long to fill their Spring orders completely that they will be late in starting at Fall work. The necessitated early buying on the part of the wholesale men has made this feature more speculative than usual. They cannot tell so soon what the exact or proportionate requirements of their customers are going to be, and in this way there are certain drawbacks to an otherwise favorable situation. Though they are pushed just now, when they would like to be doing something else, they will have a breathing spell later on when they are generally breaking their necks trying to ship orders which have crowded in together.

A PLEA FOR CANADA

WHY is it that Canada has not held a more prominent place in the minds of the people of England, and we might say of world, than she now holds?

The question is easily answered, and thinking people recognize Canada's weakness. It is disloyalty to herself. As far back as the writer can remember, all things Canadian have been looked upon with coldness by the people of Canada. One only has to enter into commercial life to find this exemplified to a degree. The manufactures of the Dominion have been coldly pushed aside, as holding a place of very little importance in the estimation of the Canadian people, and this without any knowledge as to their comparative merits. The question is asked when goods are offered for sale: "Are these Canadian?" and, if so, they are laid aside for further consideration and are bought only if they are cheaper than articles of the same standard manufactured in the United States and other countries.

When a people has so little confidence in its own, it is no wonder that outsiders take Canadians at their own valuation, and yet there is nothing that is made in Canada that is not equal in every way to the same article manufactured in other countries, and in many instances superior.

Less than a year ago this same want of loyalty was extended by the Canadian people and by the Canadian Government to her volunteers. There are few Canadians but are well aware that the volunteers were underestimated and given little credit for any efficiency unless by those intimately connected with a corps. Governments, both Conservative and Liberal, have given to Canadian volunteers the most meagre encouragement, and, on days of parade, invidious comparisons have been made by onlookers in regard to their marching, accoutrements, etc., with English regulars which were most unfair, but, to-day, these volunteers whom many people of Canada believed would never see action in the Transvaal War, and if they did, would acquit themselves in a doubtful manner, are found to be made of the finest material for soldiers.

An extract taken from an English paper says: "Exhausted by a week's marching and fighting (many of them without food or drink since the previous afternoon), perhaps the most reckless bravery was shown by the Welsh, the Cornwalls and the Canadians." This year should be a turning point in the history of Canada and all things Canadian should take precedence in the hearts of her people. A nation can only be built up by loyalty to herself and this is what Canada has lacked heretofore.

ADDRESSING LETTERS.

WE have been requested so call the attention of the smaller merchants to the mistake so frequently made of addressing their business letters to representatives of firms, instead of direct to the firm.

This mistake does not seem to be made by the larger houses, and it suggests the idea that perhaps in the smaller accounts a more social standing between the representative and the dealer may exist. If a country merchant wants goods, it is most likely he wants them at once, when he writes for them, and with the idea of helping the representative, writes to him (and, in parenthesis, it is pleasant to note how many dealers hold in high esteem representatives of firms), but the letter lies waiting his return, as he is nearly always on the road.

So the goods don't come; a good customer is probably disappointed, a sale and profit lost, and probably an order gone to the rival house.

We would certainly advise always addressing the firm on the envelope anyway. The letter may be headed for the representative if he is to be shown that he gets credit for the sale.

TAXATION OF STOCKS.

The Ontario Government are appointing a commission to inquire into methods of taxation. This is, on the whole, a practical way of dealing with a very difficult question, and, although we are not much in favor of Royal Commissions as a general thing, this one is probably justified.

The question is one of importance to merchants. They are feeling more and more every year, especially in towns and cities, that the assessment is not fair to them. It is now recognized that to assess the value of the stock is not a good basis for taxation, and that a tax passed on rental values would be a much better way to raise money for municipal purposes.

We hope the Government will appoint the right men to the commission. They should be men who know what is being done in other countries and be impartial enough and capable enough to apply this knowledge to our local conditions. This will place us in an intelligent position as regards taxation, a position we are not in now.

Unless we evolve a really sound and practicable policy, which can be safely applied in Ontario, and probably copied by other Provinces, no good will come out of the commission.

FASHION'S LATEST DICTATES.

Accounts from Paris show that the Exposition is going to be a great occasion for the display of costume and fashion.

Some of the fashions at present, while especially suited to the Spring season, also give indications of what we are to have during the coming season. For instance, tailor-made costumes are the great feature this year, and when the day is a little cold ladies are not to wear a heavy jacket or a fur coat if they want to be fashionable. Grey serge is a very fashionable fabric, as well as others in plain subdued colors.

The appearance of fruit on hats advances in favor as the season goes on. All sorts of small fruits, such as cherries, peaches, green almonds, etc., are made up in velvets to resemble the real fruit. Nearly all the milliners cover the flowers with a trailing of maiden hair or tiny ferns, and this effect is particularly popular over pinks and carnations. Paris ladies are also wearing muffs made up in flowers, which they wear when out driving. Violets, wall flowers, roses, etc., are employed for this purpose, and gloves are not worn with the muff.

In jewelry this year, pearls are having a great run. In ornaments for the hair, a number of novelties are shown, and the fashion of wearing them has not disappeared in the least. The designs include flower clusters and foliage, small serpents, dragon flies, and other oddities.

THE AUSTRALIAN TRADE.

A LONG report is sent to his Government by the United States Consul at Sydney on the value of the Australian trade. We have begun to push trade in that quarter ourselves. We doubt very much if our commercial classes as a whole realize what a valuable connection it may become.

The shrewd Yankee consul in question goes over the whole ground, and he appeals especially to cotton manufacturers, reminding them that the million and a quarter of inhabitants of New South Wales import every year $8,000,000 worth of drapery, and that the whole Australian population import as much cottons as the United States exports. This is satisfactory testimony for our Canadian manufacturers, and should encourage the movement in this country for closer trade relations with Australia.

One or two points mentioned by the consul may be stated here. He says that bad debts in Australia amount to a lower percentage than in other countries, and that there need be no losses where business is done on business principles.

One difficulty connected with pushing Yankee goods is, that the people out there are English in their ways and preferences. The samples of prints submitted by other than American manufacturers give the Australian buyer great latitude in ordering, as the samples are made before the goods are run off. Consequently, the Australian draper can buy as many of one color or of any two colors or three that he thinks fit. This, according to the consul, is not the American practice, and loses orders for the American goods. The English manufacturer will also vary the width of goods to suit Australian buyers.

The system of discount comes in for a complaint by the consul. He says that one Yankee exporter offered to sell certain goods "with 30, 10 and 10, and 2½ and 4 per cent. discount." "This," he says, "seems to many practical men striving to increase American trade abroad a useless and confusing custom which ought to be abandoned for a plain statement of prices and terms."

We, in this country, may well take the following remarks of the consul to heart: "Our people have been overlooking the importance of the Australian market for this commodity. It should be remembered that the 4,500,000 Australians are among the wealthiest people on the globe; that Winter, as we know it, never puts in an appearance, it being almost eternal sunshine here. Cottons are worn all the year around by a majority of the people; lawns, muslins, and such light fabrics are more extensively and universally used than by any other people of the European races; and in no market must taste and fashion be more studied."

CANADIAN INSOLVENCY LEGISLATION.

A recent number of The London Drapers' Record discusses the Canadian insolvency question, once more showing the keen interest which the English trade take in this subject.

One would imagine that, as times are good and British losses in this market exceedingly low, the subject would drop out of notice. But this is not the case, as the English commercial interests cannot understand how we let time slip away without rectifying this crying abuse in the eyes of outside traders. Our London contemporary has a practical article upon a prize essay, written for the Bankers' Association, by Mr. T. G. McMaster. Apart from the merits of Mr. McMaster's plan, it should be remembered that the banks are supposed to be one of the principal obstacles to the passage of an insolvency law, because, when the question comes to be discussed, the clauses they want are always found to be incompatible with the interests of the general commercial community.

How far this may account for the present deadlock in insolvency legislation we do not know. But the fact remains that there appears to be little chance of the bill introduced by Mr. W. F. Maclean passing the House of Commons this season. A number of commercial bodies have spoken with no uncertain sound. The merchants, as a rule, while they differ on details, are willing that a law of some kind shall pass. But the politicians, who are able to decide what measures shall get through Parliament, exhibit no interest in the subject, and we doubt the prospects of any legislation until another forcible demonstration is made to impress both political parties.

A CUSTOMS CASE.

THERE have been some brief references in the press to action by the Customs Department with reference to a consignment of millinery to Messrs. Caverhill & Kissock, of Montreal, wholesale importers of millinery.

The facts appear to be that an invoice of goods was presented to the Customs house in Montreal in January covering a lot of goods then coming in, and that, owing to a mistake of the firm's clerk, the total amount on which duty should be paid was understated. The error was not discovered in the Montreal Customs house, nor were the firm themselves aware of it, but when the papers were forwarded in due course to the Department at Ottawa, and reached them, the error was discovered. The firm at once showed their books and deposited a sum of money to cover all possible shortages of duty, and the authorities at Ottawa have now the case under consideration. It is understood that there is no charge of fraud in the matter, and that on payment of whatever duty was short on the original invoice the matter will terminate. There has been a great deal of reticence about the case on the part of the Customs authorities, and as the firm have frankly and clearly stated the facts this has tended to relieve the transaction of any suspicion.

Once again we repeat the view we have taken before, that the Customs Department ought not to make seizures and settlements in private, but, in fairness to the firms involved and the public, the whole matter should be ventilated in open court. Here is a case where the importer would benefit by publicity, and the public have a right to know at all times what is being done in these matters.

EXTRAVAGANT EXPENDITURE.

A trade contemporary directs attention to a point of some importance. It warns merchants who are enjoying a period of prosperity from indulging in extravagant living. It points out that when creditors come to examine an unsatisfactory estate that they do not fail to notice in what respect the insolvent's personal expenditure has contributed to the result.

A note of warning of this kind comes with peculiar appropriateness just now. Finding themselves doing much better, it is a temptation to the average merchants to increase their scale of living and enlarge the comforts of their families. This is right enough if the business is not starved in order to carry it out.

Now, there can be no doubt that the merchant, either in a small or large way of business, who indulges in extravagance is bound to go to the wall. If the present season of good trade should be followed by a slight reaction, which is not at all improbable, these merchants would be the first to feel the change, and perhaps to be forced into deep water.

Besides that, a man whose honor stands high is as careful of his creditors' interests as he is of his own and will avoid anything which is likely to bring him down and lose their money. There are always causes which a man cannot control and which sometimes force him into insolvency. But extravagance is a cause which he can control and we doubt very much if in the annual statistics of insolvency the item extravagance figures as largely as it ought to do.

Hat, Cap and

Fur Trade.

The Hat Trade.

The retail hat season has only just opened because the absence of warm weather interfered a good deal with the usual Spring sales. It is, therefore, somewhat difficult to know how Spring trade will turn out, as stocks are not yet much broken. But dealers are fairly well satisfied with the outlook and the hat trade will be pretty certain to get its share of what is going.

The sales of black felt hats are large, but not so many colored stiff hats are being sold. There is no particular reason why this should be so, because colored hats in fedoras still sell quite freely, and, as the warm and dusty weather comes nearer, a light colored stiff hat is exactly suited to wearing on dusty days. If dealers will push these they should have no difficulty in selling all they have ordered.

The Fall samples of English hats are expected in by the wholesale importers in the next few days, but they will not be shown until next month. The travelers of wholesale houses are now entirely occupied with fur samples. A few sorting orders for hats are still coming in, but in the main the orders booked are for Fall furs and in this line the business done is quite satisfactory.

The Fur Market.

The orders already taken in Canada for Autumn and Winter delivery indicate, what is generally acknowledged, that this is going to be a season for small furs on the American continent. This is the indication so far, although doubtless the large stuff will be called into requisition later on. Grebe, in combinations, will do well in Europe this season, so that it may be expected to continue here. As to sealskins, there has been a great business done notwithstanding the high prices. One house has sold more sealskins already this season than ever before during the whole season. These sales were made at a reasonable advance on the price of 1898, and not at quotations of to-day which have been sent sky high by a number of influences, including the foolish legislation of the United States Government. THE DRY GOODS REVIEW, in conversing with Mr. Jas. D. Allan with reference to the fur market, was informed by that gentleman that the results of the March sales in London were more favorable to shippers than before, and advances even over the prices of January were recorded. He stated that while prices were high in some cases, for perfectly good reasons (such as the mortality among the animals, which had affected Persian lamb), yet there was a feeling that the talk of higher prices had gone far enough. Figures had been already reached which, if they were demanded by jobbers in this market for instance, would be apt to frighten customers away. Mr. Allan stated that he was not a believer in extreme high values, because there always came a point where the consumer found the price prohibitive. The principal causes for the present unusual prices were, as far as one could see, the high bidding of French buyers who were ready to think that the Paris Exposition would necessarily mean large purchases by visitors at extravagant figures. Then, there was the extreme buoyancy of trade throughout the world in all lines, and this was affecting furs. Then, the disposition to wear dark colored goods was also affecting the market. As far as Persian lambs were concerned, Mr. Allan reports that his firm's far Eastern brokers have recently reported their inability to place orders for lambs at less than a 25 per cent. advance.

Skunk Skins in the Mail.

The postal authorities at Washington have come to the conclusion that the skins of polecats are offensive, and do not hesitate to say so openly. Skins which recently came to the Chicago office through the mails led to the institution of the inquiry, with the result that the fur of the malodorous little animals has been declared unavailable. The ruling of the Postmaster-General is as follows: "Complaints having been made to this Department of the shipment through the mails of skunk pelts, which gave out and transmitted to the mail, which was in the sack with them, a very offensive odor, making it impossible for the clerks in the office of destination to distribute it until it was exposed to the air for some time, attention is called to that section of the postal regulations prohibiting the mailing of offensive articles."

Superintendent Jampolls, who happened upon the skunk skin from Ligonier, Ind., in the inquiry division, says it was the third "unavailable article" of the kind received during the past month. —New York Cloaks and Furs.

The United States Fur Trade.

Taken altogether, the past month, says New York Cloaks and Furs, while lively from the standpoint of the gossip, was rather dull as far as the manufacturer of furs was concerned. The figures, more or less correct, of the various advances scored at the London sales, have been hashed and reshaped by the alarmist, who sees ruin staring in the face of the fur trade. In the meantime, jobbers of furs placed orders for regular quantities, and a fair number of those firms making a specialty of catering to that trade were kept occupied. Other concerns completed their advance lines and sent their men on the road.

True enough, prices are ruling higher for furs than any time during the past two or three years. However, there are but two or three furs of which the price in the finished article is at all startlingly advanced. It will be difficult to find a single article of luxury, and but a single article of necessity, that has not taken part in the movement toward higher prices. The great fallacy that cheap materials make opportunity for the manufacturer has seemingly never applied to the fur trade.

Buyers of furs who have been in New York, coming from all sections of the country, have bought collarettes, which they find are selling almost as well as the fancy neckwear. The demand is for the better grades of furs. In these, a radical departure has been made from the elaborate linings used so largely in the past. Heavy brown and black silk or plain satins are wanted, while, for medium-class goods, as well as for the cheap goods, linings can hardly be gorgeous enough. Short jackets appear to have the call, and the foreign models seen so far are of the shortest kind. The enormous flaring collars seen on boleros and Eton jackets, with tight-fitting sleeves ending in wide turn-down, cuff like extensions, characterize very nearly all the garments brought from abroad. In capes, other than short models, nothing of any account has as yet been brought over. A few of the short garments differ little from former ones. Flounce effects, tails, and combination of two or three furs, cover them all. Tab effects in neckwear of long haired furs are longer than ever, some of them reaching almost to the ground. Silver-tipped, brown-eyed fox and lynx, taped-blue wolf, silver-tipped sables, and their imitation, and sea otter imitation, with inserted fur points, are about all that have been seen so far.

Notes of English Trade.

The war has had a remarkable effect upon the hatting trade of Stockport, says an English correspondent. Business has never been so brisk as at the present time, and overtime is being worked in most of the principal hat works of the town. So numerous and of such extent have been the orders to the well-known firm of Christy & Co., of Stockport and London, that the workpeople, with an extra staff, have been employed day and night upon the work of turning out khaki hats, many thousands of which have already been made for the City of London Imperial Volunteers, the yeomanry and others. This particular style of hat is largely worn at the Cape, and large numbers are still being sent out.

As indicating the effect of the war on the trade, immediately following upon the relief of Kimberley, and now the relief of Ladysmith, a great order for hats was wired from Cape Colony to Messrs. Christy & Co., at Stockport, and upon this the workpeople are at present engaged. As the war progresses and our successes become more frequent the trade is expected to still further increase, and even now enterprising firms at the Cape are preparing for the rush of trade which will ensue at the close of the war.

The khaki colored hats of the colonial shape, with side turned up and broad band sell well. There is likely to be a big demand for them among draymen, drivers, and country folk generally; also for seaside and garden wear, but there are doubts about their becoming popular headgear. On inquiring among the wholesale, considerable surprise was felt at the demand which has sprung up for this class of hat. Messrs. T. & W. Walker, of Denton, the makers of the "Baden-Powell" hat find a large demand, and have had to get large stocks in to meet it. The "Baden Powell" is somewhat of a similar type to that seen in the photos of that most popular defender of Mafeking, but with the side smartly turned up and retained with a clasp similar to those seen on gloves. A smart pugaree band of mercerized stuff is round the hat.

In spite of the attacks of Lord Ronald Gower and the dress reformers, the top hat continues to flourish, and bids fair to reign for as long as the wit of man can foretell. The glossy silk is still popular; in fact, it is more than holding its own, and I hear that manufacturers are receiving larger orders than ever. The trade is, indeed, making headway. The correct styles for the season vary but little from those of last year. The shape favored in Pall Mall has rather a more pronounced bell-crown than that worn in the "House." The city style is 6-in. full deep; 1 7/8-in. full by 1 1/2 in. full; brim, roll, curve, slight bell. The west end hat measures 6 in. in depth, and has a medium bell; in every other particular it measures the same as the city shape.

The Fur Sales.

The London Canadian Gazette says: "We last week reported the result of the important sales up to the time of going to press, and we may give the further advances in price: Lynx, 173 per cent.; wolf, 131 per cent.; skunk, 34 per cent.; beaver, 31 per cent.; brown bear, 25 per cent.; musk ox, 53 per cent.; hair seal, 61 per cent.; badger, 215 per cent."

"The Hudson's Bay Company's sales were followed by those of Messrs. Lampson & Co., and the prices continued to rule very high. A raw Siberian silver foxskin was sold to Mr. P. M. Grunwaldt, of Paris, at a record price of £580. The measurements of the skin are: Length, from the nose to the tip of the brush, 48 inches; and breadth, 8 inches. The fur is two inches long."

Pugaree Hat Bands.

Our friends across the border fly off the handle each year about this time on some article in men's wearing apparel. This Spring will apparently prove no exception to the general rule. The craze is on for men's pugaree hat bands. These are being shown in checks and stripes, but principally stripes, folded in three narrow folds, and these are now considered to be the correct thing for both men's and women's wear. When made in bold stripe patterns, in the popular shades of purple, blue and navy, relieved with white, or white grounds with stripes of dark, they certainly look very well, and as they have the merit of being a new idea, there is no doubt they are in for a big sale for the coming Summer trade.

WHERE KHAKI IS USED.

The rage for khaki, which has rapidly spread in England, promises to travel to other shores. According to the manager of the Manchester Khaki Manufacturing Company, the demand for it is growing rapidly in Italy and Belgium. The Italian troops have already worn it in Africa and the Americans in Cuba, whilst there is a slight demand for khaki in France. The Dutch, however, will not have it all, preferring their blue serge. Khaki has not been introduced into any of the Paris fashions yet, but it is sure to arrive, for the demand in England alone is sufficiently great to force its introduction. The French say they can manufacture khaki, but they have not a fast dye. There is a likelihood of khaki being adopted by Continental military nations. The Turks already have taken a liking to it, and are giving fair orders for it. In Asia, it is fast growing in popularity. India, of course, used it first, but now the Chinese and Japanese have taken it up to a considerable extent. The King of Siam is expected to clothe his police force in it before long. At the present time the people in the Philippine Islands and the Straits Settlements use it.

D. R. Brown, of Bateman & Co., general merchants, Mount Forest, has taken a position in the dry goods specialty branch of The Gault Bros. Co., Winnipeg.

A. M. Payne, Canadian representative for Faudel, Phillips & Sons, arrived at Halifax, per Allan SS. Corean, on April 16, after a two months' stay at the headquarters of the firm in London. A permanent office and sample-room will probably be established in the near future in Toronto.

NEW GOODS IN WHOLESALE TRADE.

JOHN MACDONALD & CO.

THE woollen department of John Macdonald & Co. report several clearing lines this month. There are some 6.4 tweed suitings, some fancy worsted trouserings, some 40 inch fancy and several special lines in 32-inch and 54-inch mercerized italians, black and colored. Two clearing lines of 27-inch in Canadian tweed suitings are being offered at low prices, while several lines of black and blue worsteds and serges are being shown at the old prices. The range of samples for Fall is now complete, and is in the hands of most of the travelers. So far, most of the orders have been fully up to last season. In men's wear, the range comprises the newest fabrics in Scotch tweeds and Canadian tweed suitings, in worsteds and serges, overcoatings, in beavers, meltons, naps and chevots. They have a new feature this season in a range of "Belwarp" fancy and worsted trouserings, very handsome styles for high-class trade. The range of costume cloths for ladies embraces a large variety of homespun effects, checks and plain cloths. There is also a large range of mantle beavers, curls, naps and frieze effects.

The Fall line of carpets which John Macdonald & Co. will show consists of a few new novelties and the best-selling patterns for Spring. Trade in linoleums this season is exceedingly good. There is also a good business in China mattings, in which orders are all filled, and there is a nice stock for the trade in medium and high-priced goods.

The buyer for the men's furnishings department, Mr. W. A. Denton, has just returned from Europe, where he picked up the latest novelties. These include khaki colored silk handkerchiefs with small flags worked in silk in the corner. Newest effects will be shown in the flag and shamrock designs in neckwear. Chatelaine purses are going to have a big run. They are hooked into the belt or bodice, and are now being worn extensively in New York. Beauty pins and blouse sets of pearl are still selling very well, and braids are used for trimming of skirts, etc. The department are showing a full assortment in Summer underwear, balbriggans, light natural wool, mercerized cotton, etc., and in men's half-hose, black cotton, fancy cotton, and black cotton with natural wool feet are being shown to retail at 25c. A job line of men's silk cashmere socks to retail at 25c. at a good profit is shown, while a special line of men's rubber coats, tweed effects, should be noted.

Lace-bordered handkerchiefs are going to sell very fast this season and some very nice new goods are coming to retail as low as 15c. up to 75c. Buttons are not very much used, except plain gilt.

Hot-weather muslins are shown by the dress goods department, in checks, spots and organdies, and the range of Summer silks for blouses and dresses is very large. These include spots and figures in the latest colorings, Liberty foulards, blue and white and black and white, etc. There is a special line of black peau de soie, to retail at $1. In cotton hosiery, ladies' and children's cotton and Lisle thread hose include fancy embroidered fronts, navy blue cotton with white spots and Lisle thread with embroidered ankles. A new shipment of 24-inch black satin is just in and a complete range of ladies' cotton vests. Ladies' gloves are shown in fabric gloves and silk gloves, black, white, and cream.

The staple department announce that they are showing several lines of tablings at the old price, and that a stock of English prints are also being sold at the old figures. Early in June a shipment of Crum's prints in the new designs is expected. The standard numbers in their crash towellings are being sold at the old prices, although there will be an advance on some lines. Some pretty new samples of Magog prints, including printed flannelettes, Salisburys, costumes and suitings of various kinds all suited to the Canadian trade.

NOVELTY SHIRT WAISTS.

Messrs. Boulter & Stewart have just received a further lot of novelty cloths. These are being made in the new sailor collar styles, and also one-piece backs and fronts, with tucked and insertion trimming. These will be ready for immediate shipment, as stock is being rushed through for May 24 trade. Prices range from $12 to $27. Messrs. Boulter & Stewart state that orders will receive best attention.

WHITE PIQUE SKIRTS.

The Summer season, as usual, brings the demand for white skirts, and, from style indications, the pique and crash skirtings will have a large run. Although prices in these goods have considerably advanced, Messrs. Boulter & Stewart are quoting at last season's figures, having secured considerable stock in advance. They are showing about 75 designs, made in all the new pleats at side and back.

ENGLAND AND GERMANY.

The preferential tariff on English manufactured goods may be hard on some German textile goods, but, as Germany claims to manufacture about 25 per cent. cheaper than England, if the German manufacturer curtails his profits a little, German goods can well compete with England for the Canadian trade. M. Markus, 30 Hospital street, Montreal, expects to sell more German goods than before, as this firm give German textile goods their special attention, and show the latest novelties in dry goods, etc.

AN ENGLISH VIEW OF INSOLVENCY.

For the sake of the London houses doing business with Canada, I sincerely hope that the new Bankruptcy Bill introduced into the Canadian House of Commons will pass. Our trade with Canada is large and increasing, but much hampered by the protective nature of the various insolvency laws in force in the different Provinces of the Dominion. By these, in cases of bankruptcy, every Canadian creditor has a preferential claim to the full amount of 20s. in the £ before an English or other creditor can touch a penny. This is manifestly grossly unfair to the English trader, who, consequently, does not care to risk his goods by exporting them to a country where such a system prevails. — London, Eng., Outfitter.

I have it hung over my counter and use it for Hats, Collars, Ties, Gloves, etc., and I think it has paid for itself, as I have sold goods off it simply because they were in front of my customers' eyes while they were buying other articles, and what they would not likely have bought if they had not been on display.

OUR CORRECT METHODS OF DYEING
DRESS GOODS AND OTHER FABRICS.

It requires a high degree of skill, scrupulous care, best appliances and methods, and long experience to do correct trade dyeing.

We know we have all these qualifications, as the record of our business among the trade for a score of years has proven, coupled with the many letters received from merchants in all parts of Canada telling of the satisfaction secured when their stocks are sent here.

Every merchant has on his shelves goods that have become unsalable, because shelf-worn, faded or off-color. We can give these back to you carrying the appearance of new goods that might come from the manufacturer.

In a special sense we have been successful in the dyeing, cleaning and curling of feathers. We can add substantially to the profits of your millinery department, if you will go over your stocks and send to these works a parcel of feathers and plumes that you have likely discarded as unsalable.

CONDITIONS IN THE UNITED STATES.

SPEAKING of conditions in the United States, The New York Carpet Trade Review says: "The Fall wholesale season will open later than usual. W. & J. Sloane will show their new lines about June 1, instead of May 1, as heretofore, and our advices indicate that manufacturers, generally speaking, will not be ready for Fall business until May 15, or some time between then and June 1.

"Prices will be higher. Brussels and wiltons will be advanced materially, and it is practically certain that the Fall lines of extra supers will be $2\frac{1}{2}$ cents a yard higher. The rise in the cost of cotton has made it necessary for every manufacturer of cotton carpets to raise the prices of his goods. Further advances have been made in prices of linoleum, floor and table cloth.

"Retail trade has been dull in most of the large cities during the last fortnight, but in the small towns and country districts, especially in the West, business has been quite active, the cut order trade being particularly noticeable in this respect. Reports from city retailers indicate that the business of January and February was much ahead of that of the same months last year. March and April were not so satisfactory, the reasons being unsettled weather and a late Easter. There is little doubt that retail business will open strongly after Easter if the weather is at all favorable, and there will then be more than two months to cut up goods and round up the season satisfactorily."

A PRETTY BIG ORDER FOR CANADA.

Mr. Haas, of Messrs. Geo. H. Hees, Son & Co., who has been in Europe for the past two months, writes home that he has purchased over 80,000 pairs of lace curtains for their Fall trade. By purchasing such enormous quantities, this firm secure control of the most desirable patterns for the Canadian market. Many of our Canadian merchants, who have heretofore imported lace curtains direct, find it to their advantage to buy these goods of Messrs. Geo. H. Hees, Son & Co., who carry in stock immense quantities of them, so, when they find a run on a particularly good pattern, they are able to at once have their orders repeated from this big stock right here at home. Travelers will soon be on the road with these goods, and it is advisable to see their attractive offerings.

CANADIAN CARPETS.

Probably in no other branch of textile manufacture has there been such rapid progress made in Canada during the past four years as in that of carpet-weaving. The ingrain manufacturers have all more than doubled their output, and now we hear of very extensive additions being made in the brussels line. The Dominion Brussels Carpet Co., of Sherbrooke, Quebec, have recently completed arrangements with a syndicate of English capitalists whereby they will be enabled largely to augment their plant and extend their productions to include other weaves. The present brussels plant will be extended to cover the production of all grades of brussels, and wiltons, in body goods, as well as in mats, and rugs of room sizes will be added to their line.

An entirely new departure will be the instalment of a complete tapestry plant, the buildings for which are now about completed, and within a few months a full range of Canadian made tapestry carpets will be put on the market by this company. An ingrain plant will also be added within a year. It appears to be only a question of a few years until all the carpets required in Canada can be manufactured on the spot.

NEW WINDOW SHADES FOR STORES.

Nothing improves the appearance of a dwelling or shop so much as new window shades. How quickly you notice a shop or any other building that is freshened up by these necessary fittings; how quickly your eye is attracted to them! A few dollars invested in a set of shades for your home, will do more to improve its appearance than ten times the investment in any other way. Spring is the season when new shades are adopted, and as Messrs. Geo. H. Hees, Son & Co. are the acknowledged leaders in this line, we would advise the trade who are not already handling their goods, to send for their catalogues, etc. Shopkeepers, especially at this season, should improve their premises with new blinds, and this firm furnish them in plain, fancy or lettered, ready to hang. See their advertisement on another page.

INGRAIN CARPETS.

Owing to the great improvements in the production of wool and union carpets which have been made by Canadian mills during the past few years, the demand for this popular line of floor covering has greatly increased, and the mills have, as a consequence, been obliged to increase their capacity to meet this demand.

The Empire Carpet Co., of St. Catharines, have more than doubled their capacity in the last year, and, as the prospects point to further activity, they are adding more looms and other machinery to be ready to meet the requirements of the trade during the present year. This company have always endeavored to keep pace with the improvements being made by the leading manufacturers of the United States and England, and, as a consequence, their plant is now composed of the very latest appliances for the proper production of their popular brand of wool and union carpets and art squares. The past year has been the most successful in their history, and "there will be no turning back" in their efforts during the present year to make the "Empire" one of the most popular and profitable for the retail trade to handle. Their motto of "Standard Goods at Correct Values" will be strictly maintained throughout all grades. Their selection of designs and coloring effects for the sorting and Fall seasons will be the largest they have ever brought out, and will, in all respects, compare favorably with anything produced in this country. They are now in a position to give prompt delivery on Spring repeats, and the trade will have the advantage of making selections from the advanced designs and color blendings of the Fall lines.

That ingrain carpets are every day becoming more popular with the consumer is evidenced by the announcements of the larger departmental stores of the principal cities, which are now not only carrying liberal stocks of the various grades, but are recommending them to the user as the most desirable floor covering in popular-priced goods. The Empire's repre-

THE WALL PAPER SEASON.

Notwithstanding the late Spring weather, the wall paper season opened exceedingly early this year and has continued in a most satisfactory manner. Manufacturers report repeat orders as coming in more freely than usual. Last Fall, many merchants who were usually in the habit of not getting in Spring goods until February had large shipments made to them. This was done in anticipation of a good business during the month of November and immediately after the holidays, and their anticipations were not disappointed, judging by the fact that manufacturers began to receive numerous "repeats" early in January.

We have always thought that wall paper dealers make a mistake in not having their goods shipped from the factories as soon as they are made, as is done in the United States, as it gives them an opportunity to fill orders which they otherwise could not do from their previous year's stock, which is still fresh in the minds of customers who have been through the retailer's samples in the Spring and recognize them as old patterns, while many are induced to paper in the Fall if they see new designs. Then, when the Spring trade opens up, the previous year's goods can be sampled with the new goods and sell readily when there is a larger demand.

One good feature of last Fall's and this Spring's business is the increased demand for medium and high grade goods. This is a step in the right direction, as there is no economy in buying cheap wall papers. It costs as much to hang and does not give the same satisfaction. It is far better for the consumer to pay 25c. per roll for a nice paper than to buy an inferior article at, say 15c. The cost of hanging is the same, and the average room would only take from 12 to 14 rolls, meaning a difference in cost to the consumer of only $1.20 to $1.40 per room, which, when one takes into consideration the beautifying effect of an artistic design, well colored, on all the surroundings of a room, it is cheap, indeed, at this cost.

We wish to draw the attention of retailers in general to the error they make in being afraid to put in a good stock when samples are first shown, and before any withdrawals have been made in the patterns. It is better to have a little surplus stock than to disappoint customers by allowing them to make a selection from samples of goods sold out, and then trusting to the manufacturer to supply them, as the manufacturers make as close as possible only what papers they have sold, and the stock is very limited after April 1. Another thing, dealers for years past have been afraid to buy ingrains liberally, being under the impression that the sale of this class of paper would die out, but there is no possibility of ingrains ever being out of the market. They are appreciated more each year, and justly so, as they are not only serviceable, but harmonize better with the furnishings of the average room. This year, the sale of ingrains has been phenomenal, and repeat orders have been so heavy that they have completely depleted stocks held by the manufacturers, and the majority of retail dealers are, to day, completely sold out of ingrains, with no possibility of procuring them except in a few colorings. Dealers should profit by the experience they have gained this year and stock ingrains more heavily the coming season.

When samples are submitted for inspection, many dealers put off buying wall paper until the Fall or Winter. This is a great mistake, they have nothing to gain by it, and a great deal to lose, as in October the manufacturers withdraw fully half of the combinations which they have sampled, which spoils the selection for the late buyer. Add to this the fact that Fall year, even dealers who had early shipments began sending in supplementary orders before dates seemed to justify it. The result is, our stock to day is so depleted that combination orders are difficult to satisfy; in fact, many of our numbers, even at this early date, are sold out, for though we invariably overprint our best selling patterns, yet once finally exhausted reproduction is impossible. Of course, nothing pleases us more than to know our goods have been appreciated and sold, but we regret a shortage at this time more for our clients' sake than our own. A more generous ordering at first might leave a few remnants, but better that than the loss of good new business, carrying with it a healthy profit and retention of custom, and this can only be done by dealers having more confidence in the possibility of expansion, ordering larger quantities of medium and higher grades, which attract new trade and mean profitable returns, ordering and taking delivery orders are made late, and, consequently, they cannot get the sample-books in time to compete with their neighbors who have bought early. The dealer who has his sample-books in hand in October or November is in a position to show his customers the goods that he has bought, and frequently secures orders for the Spring for them. We cannot too strongly advise the trade to place their orders at the earliest possible moment.

TIMELY ADVICE TO WALL PAPER DEALERS.

Asked for information regarding their experience of the passing season, The Watson, Foster Company, Limited, replied: "Though the Spring was backward, the demand for repeats was, and continues to be, in excess of any previous early and taking the opportunity to interest a class open at all times to artistic effect.

"We have never yet seen an instance where a wall paper business has failed to respond to intelligent effort on the dealers' part with our line of papers. We emphasize our line because it is the largest and most comprehensive in the market, a line of entirely original patterns, and renewed every year.

"A good feature this year was the marked increase in medium and higher-priced lines, especially ingrains, in which dealers have for years expected a falling off. This year we have sold over double any previous record, which shows the public appreciate its useful qualities, besides, an ingrain lends itself to artistic effect beyond its intrinsic value, and, having confidence in a growing demand for ingrains, we purpose

Acting upon these suggestions, dealers should book more liberally next season in this and other standard grades which give profitable returns, and thus avoid the disappointment in many cases this Spring.

CANADIAN CARPET NOTES.

Since our last issue there has been a further advance of 10 per cent. in the prices of all makes of jute carpets, taking effect April 16.

Messrs. Thos. and Jas. Etherington, of the Empire Carpet Co., St. Catharines, spent two weeks lately with the carpet designers of Philadelphia selecting new designs for the Fall lines.

It is surprising how the self-color ingrain has "caught on" as an entire floor covering, with a few nice, bright smyrna rugs. The Toronto people make 14 colors, which are kept continually in stock, and for the convenience of the trade give cut lengths as short as may be required.

The ingrain carpet manufacturers are finding it difficult to procure cotton and jute yarns. Worsted and wool yarns are also scarce, and prices have advanced to such an extent that the mills are considering an advance in prices of both wool and union carpets and squares. The advance will likely range from 2½ to 5c. per yard.

The manufacturers of ¾-carpet will feel the competition of English manufacture very keenly under the extra preference in the tariff. The blue book returns show that Canadian manufacturers, under the 25 per cent. preference, lost to Old Country manufacturers enough business to keep 12 looms running steadily a whole year, and with the corresponding help the employment of 50 people.
