The "Maple-Leaf" all-wool ingrain carpet has now so thoroughly established the standard of a first-class carpet of this fabrication, that all other Canadian ingrain carpets take their ranking from it. Far surpassing the quality of stock and weight of the English ingrains, with the novelty and taste of the best United States designers, and in colorings to suit the newest furnishings, dealers may look for a choice selection in them for Fall. The "Maple-Leaf" has been now nine years before the carpet trade, and has always held the lead in every respect.

The Trade and Navigation Returns open a new bit of information which will rather surprise some of the Canadian manufacturers, namely, that Germany is making an all-wool ingrain that is being sold to Canadian dealers for less than the yarn is worth in this country, and then again, the returns show that Canadian buyers are willing to give makers of foreign union carpets more than they will give Canadian makers for their best quality all-wool. The compilers of the returns have been confused, surely, to offer such information to manufacturers and dealers and expect them to be accepted as reliable.

Most of the manufacturers have their travelers ready with their lines for Fall. The Toronto Carpet Manufacturing Co. will have their representatives on the road early in May. They claim they were never so well prepared in all their specialties. In "Acadia" axminsters are to be seen some very choice designs excellently colored. Mostly every Canadian manufacturer knows the difficulty with which he has to contend in the prejudice Canadians have to Canadian-made articles. But, even against this prejudice, Toronto axminsters continue to grow in popularity and demand, the "Acadia" leading.

THE LATE J. B. HORRELL.

THE late J. B. Horrell, who died a few weeks ago, at his residence in Midland, Ont., was a type of business man whose death can be chronicled with more than usual regret.

He was a successful business man, but his good qualities did not end with his business ability. He built up a career as a successful merchant; but he also built up a career as a good citizen and as a man.

Mr. Horrell was born in Callington, Cornwall, England, in 1845, and came to this country in 1870. He began his business career in Collingwood, but afterwards moved to Barrie and from there to Midland, where he carried on a general business. As a business man Mr. Horrell was very widely known and everywhere respected. His customers are numbered by the thousand, and some of them have been dealing with him since the inception of his business, and are patrons yet. To many he has been a real friend, giving them time when they could not meet accounts when due, helping others with the loan of money without the least security.

In November last, Mr. Horrell was taken suddenly ill with what was reported to be kidney trouble, and for many weeks was under the care of skilful physicians. At one time his life was almost despaired of, and Dr. Caven, of Toronto, was called in consultation with local physicians. During this illness a slight attack of paralysis was experienced. From this he rallied, and by sheer strength of will and unconquerable purpose, again took up the reins of business. While attending a meeting of the county council at Barrie in January, his eldest son, William B., was snatched from him by the death messenger. This was a terrible blow, but still he bore up bravely. After the funeral was over he again went about, and in a few weeks he, with Mrs. Horrell, went away for a brief visit. Since returning he has not been very well, but was at church on Sunday, March 18. Some time during that night he was again taken ill with a form of paralysis, and from that time continued to grow steadily worse, until the end came on Sunday, March 25, just eight weeks to the hour from the time his first born was laid in the tomb. Deceased left a wife and a son (Digby Horrell) to mourn his loss.

As a public man, Mr. Horrell had a somewhat extensive career. While residing at Wyebridge he sat in the municipal council of the township of Tiny, and for one year was reeve. The second year after coming to Midland, or in 1883, he was elected reeve of the village, and was returned to that position every year (with the exception of 1885) until Midland became incorporated as a town, when he became its first mayor, and occupied that position continuously until the close of 1897, when he retired from municipal life.

Deceased was for many years a member of the Methodist church, in which he held several important official positions.

We have engaged MR. J. H. WALDMAN, a skilful designer and thorough manufacturer, who will personally supervise the production of our line. His successful experience in New York has been supplemented by four years with the Cloak Co., of Toronto, and he is therefore able to supply not only stylish goods, but salable, practical values adapted to the shopping public of the Dominion.

—a little late, you may think—but, remember, it will reflect the very newest ideas—nothing old nothing stale. New York goods are never shown until the middle of June, and this will give us ample time to fill your Fall orders promptly.

Men's Furnishings.

WHAT will the month of May mean to the men's furnisher? The month means much to the average Canadian, be he young, old or middle aged. April, with its alternating showers and sunshine, has not failed in its work of reviving and vivifying nature. In the meadows and the pastures the grass has attained the beautiful green of Springtime; in the woods and the glen, everywhere, the mayflower is budding, and attracting to its haunts many who have spent their Winter months in a busy town or crowded city; even the country roads are comparatively smooth and inviting, and the fresh, invigorating breezes, attract young and old, who own or can secure a horse or wheel.

But what has all this to do with the furnishing business? Considerable: the same warm, luscious breezes which bring humanity out to enjoy the Spring air of country road, field or glen, necessitate, or at least make advisable, raiment suitable for such exercises. The colored shirt, knickerbockers, bicycle hose and outing cap are donned; the most comfortable collar and the gayest necktie is sought for and, generally speaking, humanity follows the initiative of Mother Earth and adorns itself in Summer garments.

The devotees of outdoor sports, too, began to gather together. Football, lacrosse, cricket and baseball teams are holding their annual organization meetings. Golfers and tennis players are getting out their caddies and racquets. All these people wear, and will consequently buy at this season of the year, clothes especially suitable for their exercise. Therefore, it behooves the furnisher during May and the succeeding month to keep a watchful eye for orders from individuals for sweaters, knickers, etc., and from teams for suits, caps, etc.

During this month, too, comes the anniversary of the birthday of Her Majesty the Queen, a day that every loyal Canadian (and who of us is not loyal?) takes pride and pleasure in celebrating. It is altogether likely that the martial spirit pervading Canada at present will make the celebration of the day more effusive than even in past years. This should mean to the furnisher an increased sale of flags, big and little, patriotic neckties, the national colors, etc.

Then, as the days lengthen and the sun increases in warmth, the furnisher may reasonably anticipate a good call for light underwear, straw hats, etc. If these goods are well pushed during May, a good demand for them should be created. Everything considered, May gives promise of much fruitfulness to the men's furnisher.

Pajamas are Triumphant.

In enumerating the unexpected issues that have arisen out of the war with Spain, says a New York letter, the contest between the pajamas and nightgowns ought not to be omitted. And while most of the other issues remain unsettled, this issue has been settled finally and forever by the triumph of the pajamas.

For years the battle between the "new fangled" pajamas and the old reliable nightgown of our forefathers had been waged with varying success, the pajamas gaining a strong yet uncertain foothold in the cities of the seaboard and making occasional incursions into the interior, the nightgown holding the interior, and keeping up a harassing guerilla warfare in the suburbs of the seaboard cities.

Pajamas are undoubtedly the most civilized possible night dress. In pajamas, a man is ready for anything. He is at once dressed for night emergencies of fire, strange noises in the basement or sudden descent of a foe, whether burglar or Filipino. In a nightgown a man is ready for nothing. In appearance he is "not in it" at all. In ability instantly to face his fellow-beings he is ridiculous. In feeling he is wretched.

Next to the habit of the daily bath, pajamas are the most valuable gift of the Orient to the Occident.

Summer Neckwear.

Early May brings the usual changes in the styles of neckwear in popular demand. People will not buy kerchief scarves and that sort of wear until the season approaches when they are going to wear their coats open, and divest themselves of their waistcoats. The reason, of course, is obvious, because the whole beauty of the handkerchief scarf is generally in the large end, which does not show at all unless on an open shirt bosom.

In past seasons the Summer neckwear has been cotton, in the different shapes and styles of washing ties, but this season, in the United States, where the trade opens much earlier than it does with us, cotton neckties are absolutely unsalable, unless in cheap staple shapes. The prevailing good times has brought the light Summer silks into great favor. These are made up into large kerchief and bordered ties at 50c., 75c. and $1, and are worn by everybody, men and women.

The character of pattern for this Summer in kerchiefs differs materially from last season. One style that is a great favorite is the bold cashmere effect in scroll and paisley designs. The other style, selling equally well, is dark ground in blue or purple, with a clear well-defined pattern of white.

Of course, the kerchief scarf will be the great article for the coming few months, but the other ties will sell well; for example, the new Oxford bow, so largely advertised in the New York men's furnishing journals. This shape is a boon to men and women who wear the high-standing turndown collar, it is so simply adjusted, and has all the appearance of a tied-by-hand bow. This bow looks remarkably well in all striped patterns in the latest purple and blue effects.

Khaki is having a great run. It is selling very well in flowing ends, made of khaki silk cord, slashed with red, blue, purple, or any good contrasting color, and a decided novelty for the swellest trade is being shown in a khaki kerchief tie of fine foulard silk, the groundwork being khaki shade, the border and centres being relieved with patterns in green, red, blue or purple.

Stripes are holding their own, and, in fact, are increasing in popularity, owing to their being so suitable for the flowing end scarf so much worn at present, as when cut bias and properly made it shows to much better advantage than any other style of pattern.

The Sale of Sweaters.

There has been in the last two or three seasons an unusually big increase in the use of and demand for sweaters, for both men and boys, and already this season evidences of the same tendency are not wanting. Though the Spring has been backward, athletes, bicyclists, and even pedestrians, are to be daily seen clad in the comfortable-looking sweater. In the cities and larger towns where bicycling and the more gentle sports, golf, tennis, etc., are popular, the fancy sweater seems to hold its own, and possibly win preference over the plainer garment, but in the country generally, and among devotees of the rougher sports, baseball, football, lacrosse, etc., in the city, the plain knitted and the quiet colored sweater maintains unquestioned sway. The colors which seem to be the favorites this year are navies, cardinals and black. One house told me this week that they have sweaters in the novelty in colors of the season, the genuine khaki. This should receive considerable attention. A prominent eastern Ontario lacrosse team decided at its annual meeting early in April to adopt this as the club color for their sweaters—an action likely to be followed by other teams and by many individuals.

In the city windows, sweaters are generally shown. Stripes are almost universal. If the body and arms do not consist of two or more colors in alternate stripes, nearly always the wrist and neck boasts some very pretty stripe effect.

It is noticeable, too, in the windows, that a feature is made of boys' sweaters. This strikes me as good policy, for the aggregate sales of sweaters to boys must be considerably greater than the total value of those sold to men, judging by the fact that nearly every boy one meets wears one of those useful garments.

Collars and Shirts.

This is the season when men's collars and shirts come to the fore, and ladies' too.

Perhaps, four of the most notable of these latter are those seen in Tooke Bros.' advertisement in this issue, i.e., the "Hebe," "Maxine," "Siren," and "Viola." The two first named have been mentioned before. They are made on the same principle as dress stock collars, being about 2 inches in front and 2¼ behind. The "Hebe" buttons in front, while the "Maxine" has the opening behind.

In men's collars, the most popular line seem to be in the round-corner with straight band, and the high banded lock-front collars. Among these, the best sellers are the "Hilo" and "Dewey." The ranges most frequently asked for are in 2, 2¼, and 2½ inch heights.

For shirts, colored grounds with figures in pink, blue and helio are having a tremendous run in the United States just now. Those with stripes have them running up and down the bosom. The open back and front, with short bosom—the only sensible shirt for the season—is having almost exclusive popularity. For Summer—that is for June delivery—the soft front will, of course, be in evidence. There is quite a good sale for the plain khaki shirt to be worn with white collars for bicycling and outing purposes in general. And for those who find khaki a trifle too too, even if it is patriotic in idea, there is a haven of security in the stiff shirt with khaki stripes, just the same as any other striped shirt. These latter are certainly rather preferable from an artistic standpoint, but the public are willing to wear anything these days so long as it is "Empirish." These effects will also be introduced in the soft fronts for June delivery.

Fashion Gossip From London.

Khaki colored "bowlers," for which the authorities of the hat trade anticipate a great demand, would not be such ugly things, but they would be likely only to look really well with a riding suit. And even then care would have to be taken that the suit was not made of one of the many grey sporting suitings which are now so fashionable. Grey and khaki make a very bad "mix." There is talk now of khaki-colored straw hats for the summer. This would really be "beyond a joke," and it is sincerely to be hoped that the manufacturer, who is said to be preparing to disfigure the hat market with such unbecoming goods, will see the folly of his ways at the right time, which is now.

Silk hats are losing a little of their straightness of crown, and becoming more bell-shaped. The change is a welcome one, for the curve in the crown of a silk hat adds greatly to the smartness of the article, without detracting from its qualities as a suitable accompaniment to the attire of strictly formal occasions.

Except for sporting or morning wear, the double collar is not likely to be so popular throughout this year as it was during 1899. This is clearly accounted for in the fact that there was a particularly large demand last year for bows and sailors' knots, which are the only kinds of neckties that look well and tie well with double collars; and that this year there is a great run already on large and full pin-ties, which are nothing unless arranged round ordinary stand up collars, with or without the points slightly turned outwards.

Dress bows are now very small, and although pulled in tightly in the middle, do not suggest the old butterfly pattern.

Lacing is quite taking the place of buttoning as a fastening for our attire. Not so very long ago it was considered anything but correct to wear laced boots with a frock coat ; to-day it matters not whether our patents are laced or buttoned so long as the boot is a light make. Then there came the laced riding breeches, and now a success has been scored with a laced waistcoat for sporting wear, which is made of leather stamped in imitation of the crocodile's skin. We may now look out for the coat with a laced fastening down the front, or the gloves which lace instead of button, or the shirt-front with laces in place of studs !

Quarter Size In Collars.

A London correspondent makes the assertion that in England the gentlemen of quality have their collars made to order, since no collars are made in quarter sizes and that a half size larger does not fit properly. This statement proves that the Londoners are considerably behind the times, says The Chicago Dry Goods Reporter, and that a Chicago correspondent should be on the regular staff of all foreign papers, in order that they may be informed as to the march of progress. One of Chicago's prominent haberdashers carries in stock a full line of quarter sizes in collars, and it is unnecessary here to have collars made to measure in order that a fit may be insured.

The Linen Shirt.

Many wondered why linen has almost ceased to be the popular material with the well-to-do for the bodies of shirts, as well as for the parts which are exposed to view, says a writer in Fashion, London. I confess to be at a loss to account for the change. Cotton has, in most cases, usurped the place of linen on the backs of men, though linen still maintains its ancient position in front, but in a somewhat limited form. To say that cotton has displaced it, owing to its comparative cheapness, would not be altogether correct, for I know of very many instances where it has superseded linen regardless of the question of expense, and, in these examples, at any rate, the change must be attributed to something else. It may be that in the latter days of the "linen age" makers introduced over-bleached linens into their shirts, and, in conceding to the demand for goods of "celestial whiteness," were so far impairing the durability of the linen as to render it a comparatively easy matter for cotton to displace it. On the other hand, if the linens used were of the proper strength and texture, the cause of its falling off must be attributed to the vagaries of fashion, because on every point of comparison linen proves its superiority.

A properly manufactured grass-bleached linen possesses a beautiful silkness of appearance and touch, and its whiteness increases with every wash. Some years ago, and when the all-linen shirt was still commonly worn, but when its hybrid rival was already established, a well-known writer delivered himself of the following: "The comfort imparted by the use of the shirt composed exclusively of linen can only be appreciated by those who have had the wisdom to make themselves familiar with the fact by personally happy experience. There are persons possessing something of an enthusiastically ardent temperament on this point, though eminently practical in other matters, who contend, and not without some show of reason, that the conception of a grand or happy thought would be an impossibility with him who ignores the use of linen—this may be merely a fancy, or, if a fact, one only existing in isolated instances. Certain it is that those who have become familiar with its use would not readily permit themselves to be divested of such comfort, or divorced from the enjoyment of such a luxury.

"We well remember the time when any textile fabric save linen was all but unknown in the composition of the shirt. Matters have now assumed a very different form. In the exercise of what we conceive to be a decidedly mistaken economy, linen has been adopted only for those portions of the inner garment that are subject to external observation. That our epithet, 'mistaken,' as applied to the pseudo economy of a merely partial use of linen in the composition of the shirt, can, we think, be fully and clearly justified. Granting that cotton suitable for this purpose would, in the first instance, be lower in price by even 30 per cent., only a seeming saving would thereby be effected by its adoption. It is by no means extravagant to say that a similar garment, made of strong and well-bleached linen, would be of double endurance to the one composed of the originally less expensive material, thus showing, in the comparison, a saving of say 40 to 50 per cent. by the use of linen, without taking into consideration the cost, trouble, and annoyance attendant on the repetition of the sempstress's vocation."

None of us are prepared to endorse the intimation that transcendancy of thought is impossible outside linen, or to expect to see an inspiration shirt in different qualities placed upon the market. Nor does "the repetition of the sempstress's vocation" any longer trouble us ; but on the practical considerations of comfort and economy the linen shirt continues to deserve all that the enthusiast has written about it. One of these days, perhaps, we shall hear of its revival, and with the improvements and increased facilities for the manufacture of flax goods the linen shirt will not fail to find as many ardent advocates in the future as it had in the past, and it is very improbable that cotton would supplant it a second time.

The best cloth for the body is a genuine grass-bleached, "sixteen hundred" (Irish-guage) linen, weighing about 21 pounds to a web of 70 yards ; and I make a point of specially mentioning this, because success depends so much upon the use of proper material, and owing to the diminished demand for linen shirts during the past two decades, many shirtmakers may not know what consistency of cloth to use for the purpose.

It is a pardonable mistake, perhaps, to insist upon having linen of intense whiteness when new ; but the tendency to favor this exaggerated bleach led to the use of lime, which, whilst producing the required effect, so impaired the strength of the fabric that its durability was very considerably diminished. Not only that, but lime-whitened linens do not retain their bleach, but become discolored in the course of use. The grass-bleached material is of a soft cream-white, and this faint yellow tinge is dear to the heart of the expert, because he knows the bleaching process has not been forced at the expense of the cloth, and that its whiteness will become more apparent with every wash, superseding anything obtainable by the use of chemicals.

I am afraid the drapers will not thank me for issuing this gratuitous information, for they have been the chief offenders in demanding hyperbleached goods merely for the sake of appearance, but the reason is explained why the durability of the contents of our grandmothers' linen chests is almost unattainable nowadays. However, I am one of those who think that the more accurate the knowledge possessed by consumers respecting the goods they purchase, the better it will be in the long run for everyone concerned, and there is really no reason why the linen shirt, properly made, should not again occupy its place as the indispensable luxury of a gentleman's wardrobe.

A Lively Firm. A correspondent sends an interesting letter about Messrs. Brill Bros., one of the leading outfitters in New York. They are what may be called a lively firm. They are always astir, and they never let the public mind become stagnant. Sometimes it's a big thing; then a little one, but always astir. Here is a card which they send out or scatter abroad. On the back side it says: "3/4 of your life, O man, is spent inside of a shirt. Why not have a fit?" Then follow prices. They also issue a circular, suggestively illustrated, which reads: "Watch the quickest election returns, which will be displayed on five large blackboards in front of Brill Bros., 211 Sixth avenue, shirt-makers and men's outfitters. Three electric arc lights. Place for 5,000 people. Free for all. Best returns. Direct wire. Western Union operator in window."

The other day Max Brill induced a big grey cat to pose as a window attraction. There was a placard which read: "—ch on to the special underwear." Tabby's head was thrust through a hole in the card, thus providing the c-a-t of "catch." The crowd in front of the panes grew so thick that the police had to disperse it. A little later pussy reposed comfortably in the window. Near her was a card with the picture of a smiling mouse-hunter, and the words, "I have caught on."

Advice to New York Dealers. The New York Economist has been giving advice to dealers as follows: "From this time people will begin to think of the Fall trade, and soon buyers must determine their choice of materials, patterns, and combinations, because so rapidly does the time pass and of such enormous magnitude are the interests involved that months are required to properly arrange and classify the products of the manufacturer so that they may attract and satisfy the demand of the consumer.

"Indeed, the most enterprising of large departmental store buyers have already largely anticipated their wants, and, being assured that there will be no retrograde movement in prices to harass them, have forestalled a possible advance by buying largely. There may be, however, a scarcity of materials.

"The furnishing goods trade is to be congratulated, because for the next six months it will be in the heyday of its prosperity. Outdoor amusements, touring, sport, the attraction of Summer resorts, excursions, picnics— all these contribute their quota to the perpetual demand upon the furnishing trades, and each signifies a circulation of currency, which must eventually redound to the benefit of the manufacturer in the prodigious movement of merchandise which it entails.

"We have already called the attention of our readers to the importance of the outing trade and to the advantageous possibilities which are involved in their proper appreciation, and again that every opportunity be utilized and no effort spared to impress upon each circle in the community the readiness and anxiety to properly meet all the demands of the most exacting.

"Of course, liberal methods are required, also constant attention to details, and a salesforce which is popular with the customers. This last item is frequently ignored by retailers with disastrous consequences to their departments. During the coming season, more than at other times, a salesman can make his influence perceptibly felt in many circles, and, if encouraged to do so, frequently attracts much additional trade to his department.

"There is more wear and tear during the Summer, the warmth of the atmosphere compels frequent changes of apparel, a greater variety of clothes is needed than at any other season, and all these contribute to a continual demand which brings profit and patronage and deserves liberal encouragement.

"Styles will not be much changed, although there is a sufficient departure from old forms to mark the inception of the new and to mark the man who wears his last year's suit and furnishings.

"In the neckwear trade novelties are continually being shown. It is the line which most retailers make money on if they give it proper consideration. No one, except those directly interested, can grasp the magnitude of the neckwear industry. If the millions of scarves sold annually were to be brought to one city, no place on the map would be large enough to hold them.

"The continual change of styles and patterns compels action on the part of manufacturers who are always seeking new accounts. Every day dry goods establishments are springing into existence, and a large proportion of the money invested goes to neckwear makers. The first sale held is usually a scarf sale, and the neckwear department comes in for a generous share of advertising. There is a demand at present for steel-grey shades in scarves. Possibly this has been caused by the introduction of grey overcoats, grey hats and grey gloves. Certain it is that grey colored scarves are very popular. If they won't sell in Summer, they will sell more in the Fall and Winter. No neater tie could be worn. There is also a tendency to flashy scarves, and rumchundas, now so popular, meet the demand.

"The Summer tie, which will be worn with the high-banded collar, will be very much like a batwing, only a trifle narrower, made that way so as to permit the wearer to draw it through the collar easier. The narrow four-in-hand has also been much in evidence, and it will be as popular with men as it is at present with women. The narrow scarves in high-banders look just right, and there is no reason why neckwear buyers should not dispose of large quantities of the scarves.

"Do not lose sight of the fact that reversible four-in-hands are in great demand. They are made of light and dark foulards and look attractive. A majority of those seen are being retailed at 25c. each. They sell at sight.

"We have written many articles about negligee shirts and more particularly regarding silk fronts. Do not miss the opportunity to dispose of a large quantity of soft shirts this season. There is money in handling the right kinds of shirts, and from now on it is the duty of shirt buyers to pay less attention to stiff bosoms and display negligees. Show good shades, ask fair prices and sell the kind will give satisfaction—the kind that will make friends for your shirt department.”

Brief Notes
Here and There.

Thomas Younglelaus, clothier, St. John, N. B., has been succeeded by M. Goudie & Co.

Simon & Adler have registered partnership in Montreal.

Fraser & Co., men's furnishers, Vancouver, have retired from business.

M. Markson, men's furnisher, etc., Vankleek Hill, Ont., has assigned.

Loftus Stark, tailor, etc., Seaforth, Ont., has admitted John Leatherland as partner.

The stock of John Aitken & Co., men's furnishers, etc., Montreal, has been sold.

The Niagara Neckwear Co. are showing handkerchief squares in rumchunda cloth with Union Jacks and tricolor flags.

Assignment has been demanded of H. Garayet, hosiery manufacturer, Montreal, who has, however, filed contestation of the demand.

Golub & Slomensky, wholesale clothiers, Montreal, are opening a branch in Ottawa, under the style of the Imperial Clothing Co.

Fraser, Fraser & Co., clothiers, etc., St. John, N.B., will retire from business on August 1. Henderson, Hunt & McLaughlin are starting in this business in St. John.

The Niagara Neckwear Co. are showing a good novelty in a line of silks in khaki ground, with soldier designs in both infantry and artillery to represent the Canadian contingents. They can be made in four-in-hands, imperials and squares.

McFarland, Gray & Southgate, wholesale dry goods dealers and clothiers; the Imperial Manufacturing Co., manufacturers of shirts, overalls, etc., and Keens Manufacturing Co., manufacturers of shirts and blouses, Toronto, have suffered loss by fire; insured.

The Dominion Suspender Co., Niagara Falls, Ont., are offering the trade "Soldiers of the Queen" suspenders, all in khaki. This should prove a great line for patriotic window displays, especially as a large showcard, printed in khaki, goes with every shipment. They can be retailed at 25c.

A very taking announcement on khaki notepaper has been issued by Matthews, Towers & Co. to the trade, stating that, owing to the increase of their business, they have leased for a term of years the warehouse No. 14 St. Helen street, Montreal, where customers will be welcomed on their next visit to town.

Rumchunda scarves are expected by many to have an exceptionally good run this Summer. Some firms who have made special arrangements are going to show these goods at $4.50 per doz.—to retail at 50c. This is quite a come down, and ought to meet with favor throughout the trade. Most of these ties will be worn by ladies as well as men.

Robt. C. Wilkins, Montreal, reports that orders for Fall are coming in very freely, particularly on his specialties in smocks, pants, etc., for the lumber trade. His line this year merits special attention containing as it does some entirely new features. "We have everything in khaki," Mr. Wilkins says, and "everybody wants something in khaki." The "Rooster" brand will add on 1,500 feet more space on May 1.

Probably the oldest merchant in the glove business in Canada is Mr. Henry M. Balcer, of Three Rivers, Que. The other day he issued a circular to his friends throughout the trade that, owing to advancing age, he intends to discontinue his business. Mr. Balcer has been actively engaged in the wholesale manufacture of gloves, mitts, moccasins, shoes, etc., ever since 1852, and had won the esteem of a large circle of business acquaintances.

Something good in the line of suspenders is always in demand. Matthews, Towers & Co., Montreal, have a new brace, which they claim is especially worthy of mention. It is their celebrated hand sewn English brace, which has the combined advantages of durability and of elegance and comfort. They have put on their own patent roller buckle and patent cast-off ends. This buckle, it is claimed, is the only one that will prevent friction with the leather ends, and is guaranteed as the best make.

The stock of the late Glover & Brais firm—now in the hands of Mr. F. F. Kelly—is selling very fast indeed. Foreign and Canadian manufactures in special lines were ordered in advance and left on their hands. Of course, these were bought cheap, and are being sold the same. It is said that they are being sold at 75 per cent. A large sale is going on in samples on the condition that the purchaser keeps all, or returns the parcel complete. Ties, braces, half-hose, golf hose, undershirts, etc., are among these lines of sample goods. Full lines of regatta shirts which were ordered by Glover & Brais, but not finished up, are being disposed of very rapidly.

THE QUESTION OF PRICE.

It is probable that prices have now reached the top notch. This does not mean that there may not be advances in isolated cases here and there. But in the main we think that the top has been reached, and any further advances would probably be of a speculative nature or due to some unforeseen calamity, such as a great war or other serious disturbances to the world's trade.

From what European buyers tell us, prices are firm just now in Europe, especially in woollen goods, and in some lines of cottons and linens. But they admit that higher figures are not expected. At the same time neither is it expected that prices will sag this season. It requires the knowledge of a mindreader to be aware of how much Canadian buyers have paid for their goods this year. There have certainly been higher prices paid all around in some lines, while in others contracts have been placed at the old figures.

HAVE STARTED TO MANUFACTURE FELT.

The Perth Woollen Co., Limited, have enlarged their mill and installed machinery for felt-making. They now manufacture all grades of felt, from the beautiful shades and textures used by ladies in making fancy table drapes, etc., to the thick stock utilized in piano factories. The process is a simple one, yet the machinery required occupies a large amount of space and is very expensive. At the present time the machinery it working steadily on a large order of padding felt, a material used by tailors in hiding defects in the forms of their customers, but other lines will be made when this is completed, such as felt for rubber and overshoe linings, felt used in the manufacture of refrigerator cars, felt for caps, beavers and meltons, felt for shantymen's heavy socks, and numerous other grades, all of which are at the present time imported. A number of experienced men have been engaged at the mill lately, and, although the manufacture of tweeds is continued as in the pass and is in a flourishing condition, the prospects of the felt industry are very bright.—Perth Expositor.

A MODEL DEPARTMENT STORE

IN A COUNTRY VILLAGE.

HOW IT IS LAID OUT AND HOW IT IS MANAGED.

THE store at present owned by Mr. J. A. Stewart, of Exeter, Ontario, is well worth an inspection. From the chief department to the slightest detail of business all is well managed and under the personal supervision of Mr. Stewart, who is a genuine business man, level-headed and up-to-date in all his ideas. Indeed, this place of business is a credit to a small country village like Exeter.

The store itself is 135 feet deep, with a frontage of 50 feet, and is commodious and airy. Every available space is utilized to the best advantage, and yet it is so well arranged that the appearance of crowding, so hurtful to the good display

As we enter the store we see, on our right, the space allotted to dress goods. This is well chosen because of the excellent light.

Facing us is the department for fancy goods. On our left is the men's furnishing department. Farther on to our left is the department for groceries, which is nicely placed rather at a distance from the other departments.

In the space fronting the men's furnishings and the fancy goods departments, and between the grocery branch and the dress goods space, are small tables on which are displayed furs, prints, or other goods, according to the season. Further on to our left is the clothing department.

Beyond the dress goods, on our right, we come to the staple department, opposite which are ladies' and children's shoes. Still farther down on our right are the mantle and lace curtain departments, opposite which is the china department.

At the extreme end of this long store, and made bright and of stock, is entirely avoided. A description of this up-to-date store, whose motto is "Cash and One Price," will, no doubt, be interesting to THE DRY GOODS REVIEW'S readers.

In the first place, the front is modern and up-to-date. The windows are excellent, three of them, large and well-lighted. The interior fittings of mirrors make a splendid background for a window display. They certainly are of great help in the business. By day the display is well shown, and by night, under the clear light of acetylene gas, one can see just as readily the colors, etc., as by day. The window display is always carefully thought out and planned, the owner fully realizing the advantage of fine windows.

attractive by light, curtains, etc., is the millinery showroom, beyond which again is the workroom. The millinery branch of this prosperous business is as well managed and as successful as even the enterprising owner himself could wish.

Upstairs we find an extensive display of carpets, and also of wall papers. Here, too, is kept all reserve stock. This outline gives only an insufficient sketch of the many branches of the stock, but it may serve to give our readers some idea of its many excellent points.

A few comments on noticeably good ideas in this business may not come amiss. One notices that the counters have, in many cases, glass tops, beneath which are displayed goods, which are easily discernible, and yet run no risk of being put in disorder by much handling.

At the backs of the windows, and facing the interior of the store, are placed large mirrors, which serve to heighten the attractiveness of the display.

The office desk, which is placed as nearly in the centre as possible, has a view of all departments. The "Whiting Cash Carrier System," as used in the city stores, is also in use here.

The three windows are usually utilized to advertise some different branch of the business. The window display is changed frequently, and thus does not become uninteresting to the possible customers.

Each department is under the management of a competent man, and, as the owner himself fully understands all the branches of his stock, we thus see that all the wheels of this business are well oiled and cared for, and consequently the success of the enterprise is not surprising.

A few words as regards the light. By day it is as good as possible, as the store is large and well lighted. By night, the whole interior from the windows to the millinery rooms, is lighted by acetylene gas, and the result is a bright, steady, and clear light, which is of no small advantage in the display of goods by night.

In short, one fully recognizes in this store a business nearly complete in its branches, and running in an excellent, and most successful manner, under its fully competent management.

CATALOGUE OF FANCY GOODS.

Nerlich & Co., Toronto, wholesale importers of fancy goods, have prepared a new catalogue for Spring and Summer of 1900. It is well illustrated, every line being practically set forth by cuts, and the prices of each line being given. The firm are making a special display of patriotic jewelry, hatpins, etc. A copy of the catalogue will be sent to any merchant sending a card to 35 Front street west, Toronto.

A "CRESCENT" BRAND WINDOW.

One of the large windows of The Cooperative Store Co., Limited, Queen street west, Toronto, was recently handsomely dressed solely with "Crescent" brand hosiery and underwear, making a very effective display. A good reproduction of this window will be found on page 82. These goods are well known to the trade throughout the Dominion. The Richard L. Baker Co., sole selling agents, report an increasing demand for the same.

Horn Bros., proprietors of the Lindsay Woolen Mills, since acquiring possession of the mills, have been making changes to improve their output and have shipped largely to the Northwest. New machinery is being added, the firm having purchased a set of wide English cards and a 240 spindle spinning mule. The three machines which comprise the set of cards are built in massive iron frames with polished steel arches, and are fitted with brass bearings and equipped with automatic feeding attachments which will effect a considerable saving in help to operate them.

ENGLISH LADIES' TAILOR-MADES.

THERE is, if anything, a more decided tendency in the fashions adopted this season by leaders of society to favor plainly-made costumes, and tailor-made styles are more firmly established than ever as an integral part of a fashionable woman's wardrobe. Indeed, we doubt if they will ever be displaced from their position. Even in Paris, which has held so long undisputed the sceptre of modern fashion, London tailor-made styles have been very generally accepted, and whilst the chic Parisienne may soften the correct and severe lines of the Englishwoman's outdoor costume, yet she does not disguise its unmistakable origin or inspiration; indeed, is proud to boast the possession of an English tailor-made garment.

The new styles are mostly built of chevots and tweeds, in light pastel tints of blue, rose, and greyish greens, but these light shades are best suited to tall and slim figures. The rough homespun and friezes have caught on, and are the novelties of the moment. They do not, however, displace the venetians, face cloths and covert coatings, which, with meltons and serges, are in everyday request. Cloth of a very fine texture is now being worn for fashionable evening gowns, white, grey, blue, and violet being the preferred shades.

The newest skirts are cut very long, and, whilst the leading houses find many of their clients are firm adherents to the more sensible fashion of short skirts, there are many more who have fallen victims to the charms of the newer, if more inconvenient, trailing garment. These are, as a rule, devoid of trimming beyond stitching, and, while the front part remains perfectly plain, the formation of the back is undergoing various changes and modifications.

One of the newest styles is a stitched and pleated skirt, with a plain front and a back and hip part of seven wide pleats stitched from waist to knee line, thus the back shows a wide box-pleat, with three large single pleats on each side that extend to the front breadth.

Some very new skirts shown in the West End are in rough tweed or homespun of a light shade, plainly made with a single box-pleat and having two stole-shaped bands of plain cloth in a darker shade stitched down the front. The short jacket or Eton coat to match has a deep flat fold of the plain cloth stitched around it, the cuffs and roll-collar being formed of the same.

The whispers heard of skirts and coats in different colors and cloths do not, as yet, amount to much. There are very few to be seen, but there are, as usual at this period of the season, a few check skirts to be noted. The coat and bodice styles now put forward include a very novel Eton coat, which is cut out in a round at the neck, and is fastened across the fronts with stitched straps of cloth and steel or gold buttons.

The most popular form of coat rever and cuff facings continues to be velvet, but this is usually ornamented with braiding in a lightly-traced design, worked with braid formed of silk, and either gold, oxydized silver or steel metallic threads. All costume coats continue to be cut with very short skirts, and the smartest have sleeves that come well down over the hands, those on tight-fitting bodices being usually finished with funnel-shaped cuffs.

Driving or promenade coats are preferred in three-quarter length, and are probably the smartest things shown in tailor-made styles this season. They are chiefly in light grey and fawn cloths, and are cut very full in the skirts. The most favored styles have high upstanding collars, the revers being cut very wide and full and finished with self-colored stitching. Large bone or mother-o'-pearl buttons are the sole ornamentation.

An extremely smart driving coat, in light grey boxcloth, made by an exclusive West End house, had each seam braided with three lines of narrow silk braid in self-color, one on the seam itself and one on each side. The peculiarity of this coat was that it fastened invisibly with hooks and eyes, and was finished without a single button. Another very smart driving coat, turned out by the same house, is stitched to cleverly imitate a double coat, the upper part being vandyked to fall over some 11 rows of stitching, and the same effect is also carried out on the collar and cuffs.

A well-known sporting tailor in the West End has just built for Miss Violet Vanbrugh, to wear in the revival of "Dandy Dick" at Wyndham's Theatre a most up-to-date short driving coat in tan box cloth, ornamented with large white pearl buttons. Mr. Pintero's instructions were, for this character, that the costume should be of the "most pronounced masculine style," and right well have his instructions been carried out. Under this coat Miss Vanbrugh wears a severely-cut well-fitting gown of black and white shepherd's plaid tweed, with a double-breasted buckskin vest, fastened with buttons of crocodile leather and set off with a white stock and high linen collar. She also wears a hard brown felt coaching hat and is a credit to her tailor.

Buttons are of considerable importance on the fashionable tailor-made gown or jacket, and the more exclusive houses are using some very choice, if costly, examples of the new enamels, cameos, onyx and hand-painted patterns, and for cloth gowns in light pastel tints, destined for the "Sunny South," a great number of large tortoiseshell buttons have been used.

When very small buttons are used they are sewn on in sets of three in triangle form. Very small silk-covered buttons are occasionally used to sew down the hip and back pleats in the new skirts.

When waist buckles are employed in the best-class trade they are of crocodile leather, or the new style known to the Parisians for some time past as "art moderne," in which enameled metal that reproduces the fashionable pastel tints is ornamented with insets of crystals and colored stones.—London Gazette of Fashion.

YOUR MONEY BACK.

H. Shorey & Co., of Montreal, have issued the following card to their customers. We commend its perusal to our readers in all lines. A wholesale house that is willing to back up their customers in following this advice seem to have the right kind of business courage and to feel pretty certain of their goods: "When a person buys something with which he becomes dissatisfied after he has taken it home and looked it over the second time it is the worst kind of advertising not to refund his money as soon as he speaks of it at the store. It doesn't matter whether he or the store is at fault—nothing in the world will give a store such a black eye as to compel a person to keep goods he does not want and with which he is not satisfied.

"There is only one thing that can happen to a store which does not make good an unsatisfactory purchase, and that is to incur the enmity of all the friends of the person who has, or thinks he has, a grievance. A business cannot afford to lose the confidence of even one person. Every purchase—whether it be a high-priced suit or a bone collar button—should be made a satisfactory purchase to the purchaser.

"The minute a customer comes in with a kick, the first thing to do is to give him his money back. Don't try to argue with him, and don't wait for him to ask for his money.

"Anticipate his question with a 'Do you want your money back?' Invariably the customer will ask the privilege of an exchange. If you approach him in this way, if he says 'yes' give the amount to him immediately, and then ask whether you might not be allowed to show him something which you think will be satisfactory, and you will find that you will make a sale.

"With such treatment as outlined above no man could become angry. If he were angry when he came in your willingness to make good his claim would calm him. You have heard that 'a satisfied customer is the best advertisement.' By giving money back you change a bad advertisement into a good one.

"When a store advertises 'Money back when you want it,' it shows that the store has confidence in its own stock, and if people think a store relies on the goodness of its own stock they are more likely to trust in that store and in its goods."

Mark Workman, Montreal, has had his tender accepted by the Imperial War Office for 30,000 great coats for the Imperial troops. The contract provides that the goods shall be delivered three months after the date of the arrival of samples and instructions, to the Militia Department in Canada. Mr. Workman is also ordered to make 20,000 jackets and 20,000 pairs of trousers of khaki, and the cloth is sent out and the samples also, in order to have them done. Mr. Workman says the cloth is splendid stuff. The orders came, it may be said, largely through the influence of Lord Strathcona. Mr. Workman's staff are hard at work on the uniforms, determined to make them a credit to Canadian tailoring.

A SPECIES OF BUFFALO NOT EXTINCT.

H. Shorey & Co., Montreal, have added a number of novelties to their Fall samples, among which is an overcoat which they call Cape Buffalo. It is the cleverest imitation of a fur garment that we have ever seen, and is guaranteed perfectly wind, water and frost proof.

It is said that two strong men with pinchers failed to tear the fabric, and the fur-like surface cannot be pulled out. The longer these Cape Buffalo coats are worn the brighter they look.

The fabric is Canadian, and the method of its manufacture is a secret. This garment will, undoubtedly, be popular for the coming Winter; its utility and strength will commend it to the country trade of Canada, particularly to that of the Northwest.

Mr. Alfred Taylor, for ten years manager of the Oak Hall clothing house in London, Ont., has been promoted to the management of the large branch of the establishment at Hamilton.

Khaki duck, drill and serges will be much worn for this Spring and Summer in bicycle and outing suits; also vests and juvenile garments. H. Shorey & Co., Montreal, have got up a very neat little ad. for these goods in the form of a Union Jack, printed on a card designed to be worn in the hatband, showing a small flag just above the band. The ad. is written on the reverse side of the flag.

Hughes Clothing Co., of Orangeville, have remodelled and redecored their place of business, so that it is now one of the finest stores in that section of the country, and in thorough keeping with the high-grade lines of woollens and furnishings in which they deal.

H. Shorey & Co., of Montreal, have distributed gratis to 460 of their customers this season specially written illustrated advertisements set up in electro, advertising their goods to the consumer. This should, if there is any virtue in advertising—and we are convinced there is—produce good results. These advertisements generally end up with the words: "Satisfaction or your money back." That way of talking certainly denotes that they believe in their own goods.

The Wiarnton woollen mill has been purchased, and will be put into immediate operation. The new owners are Messrs. Porter, Leith & Co., and the mill will be under the management of Mr. Ezra Hallman.

THE FRIEZE ULSTER.

If made of real frieze, is one of the most useful and economical garments supplied by the clothing trade for Canadian winter wear. Unfortunately the tendency to run down the quality of this fabric among certain clothing manufacturers, whose ambition seems to be in the direction of price rather than quality, has put a lot of worthless so-called frieze garments on the market. We would suggest to our readers in the clothing trade a perusal of an interesting little booklet on friezes, issued by Messrs. H. Shorey & Co., of Montreal. This booklet is mailed free by them on application.

Fraser, Fraser & Co., of St. John, N.B., intend to retire on August 1 from the retail business in ready-made clothing, men's furnishings and custom tailoring, to devote their whole attention to manufacturing. The premises at the corner of King and Germain streets, St. John, N.B., now occupied by their retail and custom department, will be taken over by Arthur Henderson, Donaldson Hunt and B. Blair McLaughlin, under the firm name of Henderson, Hunt & McLaughlin. These gentlemen propose to push the clothing, furnishing and tailoring business with great vigor. Mr. Henderson is a practical tailor and cutter, who has had charge of Fraser, Fraser & Co.'s tailoring department for a number of years. Mr. Hunt has been with T. McAvity & Sons for over 18 years, has had charge of their advertising department, and has also looked after Fraser, Fraser & Co.'s bookkeeping for several years past, thus gaining a knowledge of the retail business in their lines. Mr. McLaughlin is a practical clothier and furnisher, and has had charge of Fraser, Fraser & Co.'s Truro store for a number of years.

I. M. Mayell & Son, late of Kingston, have opened in clothing and furnishings at St. Thomas. It is a cash business.

H. Shorey & Co. report a very decided improvement in the class of clothing their travelers are selling for the Fall of 1900. THE REVIEW is always glad to hear that people are buying high-class goods rather than rubbish, as this is a certain indication not only of prosperity, but of sound sense.

We have always maintained that the best was not too good for Canadians. Our South-African record points in the same direction.

THE FALL DRESS GOODS SITUATION.

A BUYER'S REPORT ON STYLES AND PRICES.

MR. FRASER, of S. Greenshields, Son & Co., who has just returned from Great Britain and the Continent, reports that the dress goods situation is very stiff indeed. Prices are high. Stuff simply cannot be bought cheap. The trade may as well make up their minds to that. There is a difference, however, between the English and French goods. The Frenchmen lost their heads completely during the recent advances, and their goods are away up 40 per cent., whereas Bradford stuffs are only advanced some 15 per cent. The feeling of the trade is away from the French goods.

Plain effects are going well just at present, and will for some time; but for Fall there is no doubt at all that tartans and check tweeds will have almost exclusive hold on public taste. Of these, the variety shown is really wonderful. All shades of light and dark are blended, and the effects are rather new.

For blouses, the great favorites are going to be in printed opera flannels and striped opera flannels. These opera flannels are in many different styles, a prominent one being that with silk embroidery effect.

The separate skirt will be very much in vogue, and, with a view to this, special lines in camel's hair effects are shown. The shades of these vary considerably.

Fancy blacks with small chenille figures and blacks in boucle effects will be popular. There is, of course, always a good demand for blacks, whatever is going. For elderly ladies some extremely fine and suitable goods are among these new stuffs. Then, there are plain serges and Scotch tweeds, both plain and colored; also cashmeres. A very taking range is being shown in camel's hair spots. This line is expected to run especially well.

Velveteens and all other lines into the composition of which Egyptian yarns come, are up in price. The Egyptian crop has been a failure, hence the advance. Black broche silks are coming in again. Silks, also, are dearer. Just now printed silks are leading, and they are quite scarce.

For Fall, silk velvets will be in evidence, blacks and colors for trimmings.

To come back to the main point, the most noticeable thing in the whole aspect of the trade at present is that there is no possibility of any break in sight.

NEW BRADFORD MAKES.

Owing to the increase in the production of colonial crossbred wools, Bradford manufacturers have set up special machinery to deal with them and produce certain fabrics of good quality and the latest design at moderate prices. A Bradford correspondent says: "As every season brings with it some new fabric or modification of an old one in which the properties of this crossbred colonial wool have been successfully utilized, and the prices of the competing raw materials, such as cotton, linen, silk, and merino wool, are unusually high, whilst the quotations for colonial crossbred wools are within a penny of the very lowest point ever touched, there seems to be every reason to look for any alteration of price in the near future being in an upward direction. I am glad to find that in the dress goods trade there are some new and clever fabrics being shown made from these wools, which I feel sure will be well received, especially as they possess all satisfactory wearing properties of the Bradford coating serges, which have of late years become so popular with lady wearers all over the civilized world. To sum up the whole situation, there seems to be every indication that we are on the borders of a largely increased use of fabrics made from these crossbred wools, and this not only means that Bradford has a great opportunity before her, but also that the price of this raw material will be at least maintained—probably increased—and also that increased prosperity will ensue to the producers, who are largely British colonists, and whose increase of purchasing power will benefit Bradford. In confirmation of the view expressed above, I understand that a considerable quantity of the crossbred wools of the cheaper kind, which was withdrawn from the recent colonial wool sales in London, has been purchased by private arrangement, and there are also an increased number of offers for worsted yarns from the Continent, which would be fixed up if only a staple basis of prices could be established."

HAT AND CAP RACK.

Reference has been made in these columns to Kirk's patent hat and cap rack. It will be seen in another column that Mr. McDonnell, of Westport, who purchased one of these racks, is well-pleased with it, and has written the manufacturer his opinion. The rack is one of the most useful of modern store appliances.

NEW GOODS IN WHOLESALE TRADE.

THE W. R. BROCK CO., TORONTO.

THE W. R. Brock Co., Limited, Toronto, are just now having remarkable success with muslins, printed muslin lace effects and dimities, which they are selling at 40 per cent. under market values. A shipment of cardinal cashmere is just coming in. These goods are scarce and much in demand. A line of black and white shepherd checks, all wool, for 50c. retailing, are going well. They are also showing a line of black and white muslins, slightly goods, to retail at 25c.

This and next week they are opening up repeat orders of tapestry carpets, and will be, during the month of May, in a position to show a very desirable and select range of patterns. They have also a complete range of linoleums in 8 4 and 16 4 widths, and floor and table oilcloths. The curtain department is booming. Many new lines have been added, and the entire range is still intact, beginning at the lowest number. Art muslins are selling freely, and they have just added to stock a number of ranges at popular prices.

In fancy worsted suitings, the woollen buyer reports stock is still well assorted in all shades of greys, both checks and stripes, with a big demand for them. Also, a large range of homespuns, all shades of greys and fawns. These are scarce goods. The firm have just cleared out the balance of the stock of goods of two large Canadian mills, about 400 pieces, which they are showing at and below mill prices. The sorting trade in woollens has been exceptionally good during April.

In the muslin department, Brocks are showing good values in all lines of muslin. This is clearly demonstrated by the fact that three or four advances have taken place since present prices were marked on the goods. This applies to Victoria lawns, apron lawns, etc. A repeat order placed with a Manchester firm had to be cancelled, because their firm would not pay the price of to-day, preferring to be out of the goods rather than ask customers the necessary prices. They also show a large lot of fancy white muslins picked up in the Manchester market by Mr. B. B. Cronyn from a manufacturer who wanted cash rather than goods.

The fancy goods department have a large range of parasols, sunshades, black fringes and gimps, belt buckles in nickel, gilt, medallion, patriotic combinations, etc., also pulley belts, buckles and rings in large assortment, fancy garter lengths put up in attractive cabinets, chiffon neckwear, the latest novelties bought at a sacrifice from the Cookson, Louson factory. Fancy ribbons in large variety; all widths and combination of colorings are shown.

Wise merchants will this season lay in a larger stock of flags and patriotic decorations than for many years, on account of the great wave of loyalty that is spreading from Halifax to Victoria. The Brock Co. have anticipated this demand and can supply flags of all kinds and all nations in cotton at moderate prices, including Union Jacks, the British Ensign, Canada, Scotland, Ireland, St. George's Cross, Royal Standard, French tri color, and Yankee flag, etc. Also ribbon flags, patriotic pins, clasps and all such articles to suggest loyalty and patriotic feeling.

Waterproof clothing is a line many houses have dropped, but The Brock Co. have a very large stock of all kinds and styles in men's and ladies' goods, including Scotch, American and Canadian manufactures.

Plum and kangaroo are the names of two lines of cashmere socks that can be retailed at the popular prices of 25 and 35c. per pair. The Brock Co. claim that there is nothing to even equal them in value, and will send sample dozens on application. The firm have secured lately, in addition to 2,000 dozen of men's up to date neckwear, bought from the Cookson, Louson factory, 1,000 dozen of men's half-hose much below the cost of production; also several lines of underwear which will interest parties on hunt for trade stimulators.

The stock of ladies' and men's underwear is very complete in men's balbriggan, merino and natural wool, also ladies' ribbed in all kinds, sizes and prices. Fabric and kid gloves are a big line with Brock, every size, kind and style wanted for the masses can always be had, together with a good assortment of sensible fancy lines to tone up stock. A stock lot of ladies' blouses, recently picked up, to retail at 50c., are fully 50 per cent. below good value. They also show some white muslin blouses and dresses, put up one in a box, with sufficient muslin edging and insertion properly matched to trim the garment as it should be.

This is the month for sorting-up the hosiery stock, and the immense assortment carried by the Brock house would lead a person to conclude that anything that was wanted in any line of cotton or cashmere here could be supplied. They place orders for thousands of dozens where a short time ago they would buy ten, so a merchant can always depend on getting good value.

The wash goods department report a large demand for mercerized foulard, which is a very fine light-weight fabric in foulard silk patterns—pink, sky royal, harvest, navy blue, cardinal and black grounds. They have already had several large shipments that have not nearly met the wants of customers, as everyone who has had the goods finds that they sell like hot cakes. They expect another shipment about May 1, which will comprise over 100 different designs, repeats of the best selling patterns.

Mercerized brocaded foulards are having a tremendous run in the United States and Great Britain, and are impossible to get at the present time in the regular way. Brock's buyer very fortunately secured part of an American firm's lot. It is a nice soft, silky-feel, good firm fabric, in black and white, harvest blue and white fancy polka patterns.

Foulard satanas is a cloth with a very high satin finish, as bright as the highest priced satins, which has taken the trade by storm. Every lady who sees it is in raptures at once. A great difficulty has been to get deliveries. They have just passed into stock a lot of over 400 patterns, which are being picked very quickly.

Notwithstanding the heavy advances, the last shipment of two of their specials in towelings was bought at a special price when the market was at its lowest ebb, namely, m43, a 16-in. check glass cloth, retailing at 5c. a yard, could not be jobbed now in a regular way at less than 7c.; b18, an 18-in. wash huck toweling, pure white. This line retails at 10c. and bears a good profit, which is less than the regular wholesale price. B30, a 58 in. cream damask table linen, extra heavy weight, a line to wear like wire, to retail at 30c., and a leader at that.

WYLD-DARLING CO., LIMITED.

exclusive to themselves, and are showing an unusually fine range of dress gingham, both domestic and imported. An exceptional drive is offered in white pique, which they bought early and under such favorable conditions that they are enabled to offer them to the trade at less than manufacturers' prices.

In their dress goods department, special attention is being paid to a range including more than 20 patterns of blouse silks in the fancy attractive stripes so popular just now, which they are offering at such favorable terms that they could be retailed at 50c. per yard. These goods have had an unusually good sale. Another line which is taking well is 24-inch cream and white satin to retail at 50c. A large stock of these goods is being carried. This department also contains large and attractive assortments of serge in navy, black and cream, to retail at 50c., and of plain and fancy lustre to retail at from 20c. to $1.

An unusually good business is being done in the woollen department. The stock carried here is the largest they have had for some years, and is one of the largest carried anywhere in the Dominion, comprising all the lines that are proving popular this season. This firm anticipated the coming into favor of tweed and light-colored worsteds, especially in greys, for suitings, and of coverts in olive and green mixed, for over-coatings, and secured complete stocks before the advance in prices. As they still are selling at the old prices, it is not surprising that this department is very busy with orders for immediate shipment.

The Spring demand for men's furnishings is also proving exceptionally brisk. In underwear they are showing a big range in fancy striped balbriggan, mercerized cotton in various colors, and have some special values in natural wool in various weights. In Summer half-hose they have some neat and stylish effects in stripes, checks and plain royal blue, with a small white spot, the last of which is taking a big lead just now. In cotton socks, a black sock with natural wool foot is winning much attention. This, as all other black socks sold in this house, is dyed by Hermsdorf. By May 10 they will be putting on the market the newest style in gentlemen's collars for Summer wear, to be called "Wylde's Hi Hi." This, they state, will be just what the trade have been asking for, and will be a quick seller. In waterproof coats this firm have received large shipments from leading manufacturers of black coats with capes and single or double-breasted covert coats, which they are offering at popular prices. In sweaters, they have a full range of all goods, including the novelty of the season, the genuine khaki color sweater. To meet the requirements of many dealers for extra large belts, this house have had lines especially made in sizes from 42 to 48 inches.

In the fancy goods department, their stocks are complete throughout. They are showing the newest shapes in ladies' stand-up and turn-down collars at close figures. In belt buckles, many novelties are shown in steel, gilt and jet; also the new pulley buckle and pulley belt. The latest feature is the "Koch" pulley belt, with taffeta or moire ribbon stiffened with featherbone. In ladies' ties, they have a full stock of the newest thing—the brussels net tie, and also of the chiffon bow, and three lines of stock collars in fancy assorted colors, known as the "Zaza," the "Becky Sharp" and the "Sappho." In hosiery, their values are all A1, and are considerably below the market. They are showing one line of full-fashioned, fast-black imported stockings to retail at 12½¢. per pair. Their range of ladies' underwear is very large, and comprises sleeveless, short-sleeve and long-sleeve goods, bleached or unbleached, in all the latest trimmings, and to sell all the way from 5 to 50c. each.

In fabric gloves, their special line in black, tans, cream and white, to retail at 25c. per pair, is exceptional value. A complete range of silks and lises is offered, to retail at from 25 to 50c. per pair. This department has just received into stock a further shipment of black velvet ribbons, which have been scarce lately, and are now in a position to fill all orders in Nos. 4 to 50. For the Queen's Birthday, a full range of national ribbons in all widths, also national belt ribbons 2 in. wide, and of cotton flags, Union Jacks and Dominion ensigns, to retail at 5, 10 or 15c., is offered.

McINTYRE, SON & CO.

McIntyre, Son & Co. have put into stock new white goods in a variety of styles, patterns, and prices; also, white all-over laces and white tuckings.

In the dress goods are new ranges of black and white shepherd's plaids, in various sizes and prices, and a good assortment of black and fancy wool and silk grenadines.

KYLE, CHEESBROUGH & CO.

One of the best-selling novelties for this season is the chiffon and liberty silk tie with fringed ends. These come in white, cream, and black; also satin-striped chiffon ties in assorted light shades, which are very effective; also plauens. Butter-colored lace collars are the rage, made over white satin, or worn over white satin yokes. This firm have them in several pretty designs, and have just put to stock over 2,000 pieces of cambric and Swiss embroideries of the cheaper grade of goods. These were on order for them since last Fall. Therefore, anyone who secures them at present prices will do so without paying the big advance. These goods cannot be bought to-day at 15 per cent. advance on these prices.

They have a nice assortment of fancy lace all-overs, ranging from 25c. to $2.50 per yard, in white, ivory, cream, butter, ecru, and two tone; also, Swiss and cambric all-overs and flouncings in the ordinary and schiffli makes.

Their range of black and cream silk and various makes of cotton laces is quite large and complete. They want to be seen to be appreciated. As to price, they will speak for themselves.

Small buttons in jet, gilt, and fancy metal are coming in again—pleasant news to some. Kyle, Cheesbrough & Co. have been the largest house in Canada in buttons, and hope to retain this lead. The stock is complete in trimmings, jets, sequins, silk, wools, and tinsels.

BROCK'S, MONTREAL.

The linen department at the Montreal house of the Brock Co. have opened out five different qualities of art linen for fancy embroidery work, and are showing four different qualities of beautiful double damask tablecloths, and napkins to match, in all sizes, suitable for fine trade. The lining department are opening out many scarce shades in foulards, silesias, surahs, etc. In prints, novelties in wash fabrics, crash and khaki skirtings, are now much in demand. They are running a line of "job" honeycomb quilts in 9-4, 10-4 and 11-4 sizes at interesting prices.

There has been opened out a range of chiffons, crape de chine in all shades. These goods are now most popular, being used largely on hats, for yokes of dresses, as well as for scarves and fichus, and very pretty boas can also be made of it.

The men's furnishing department are showing many novelties, amongst others, low-priced unlaundered shirts, and a special flowing-end scarf, handkerchief patterns, both lines very fast sellers. Also felt in all colors at the old price. They claim it to be a star line.

Belts in "Pulley," "Dog Collar," "Beaded," "Kid," "Jewel," "Elastic," "Khaki," and "Pique," and, in fact, almost every kind known to the trade. Lace effect belts, for Summer wear, appear to be all the rage just now.

Brock's, Montreal, are making the present a special "waterproof and umbrella sale" month. They draw attention to the men's "wholeback" waterproof as a special.

The hosiery department have now moved into their handsome new quarters, where they are carrying a larger stock than ever of seasonable cashmere hose, taffeta, and pure silk gloves. Also blouses in white, black, and many dainty colorings—the fine qualities ranging to upwards of $30 per dozen.

BLOUSES.

With the advance of the Spring and Summer season, the demand for all kinds of blouses becomes wonderfully increased. The demand for white goods in ladies' blouses continues to increase. In these, the French back, dress sleeve, all-over fronts and stock collars constitute the favorite; but there is also considerable demand for all-over yokes, back and front. The white blouses with insertion up and down the front, are taking particularly well. Other lines that are selling largely are the colored cambric shirt waists in stripes, these with white yokes and also as insertion. The latter are made with short sleeves and laundered collar and cuffs, and pointed yokes.

The demand for silk waists is better than ever. These ranges are made in plain colors, with tucks and cords in front and back. The same is the case with fancy weaves and the better class of goods. They are made to retail as high as $15 apiece. A good many are taking up the New York style of bordered silk blouses, bandanna handkerchief silk blouses as they are called, with Persian effects. These lines are ready for present delivery, and will retail at $7.50 to $10.

The latest novelty of all in blouses is the khaki, in tunic effects, shoulder straps and all. Even the ladies are bound to imitate "Tommy Atkins" in dress as far as possible. Lawns and repp cloths will be utilized extensively, and there will be sure to be a big demand for them.

Mr. A. W. Grasett sailed for Europe April 28. It is said he will arrange to secure agencies for British and foreign firms in this market.

At a meeting of the Retail Merchants' Association of Sarnia, April 19, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, J. B. Watson; vice-president, James Fry; secretary-treasurer, M. A. Sanders; executive committee, J. R. Geddes, E. P. Battley, Robert Wanless, J. Newton and John Garroch.

Arthur Parks has gone to Montreal to enter the employ of S. Greenshields, Son & Co., says The St. John, N.B., Sun. He has been employed in the Courtenay Bay cotton mills as shipper. He will be very much missed by his large number of acquaintances and friends. Mr. Parks was presented before leaving with a dressing-case by some of his admirers. The military fraternity will lose a capable officer, Mr. Parks being connected with the 62nd Batn.

has quite outdistanced any other article, in the shape of a novelty for ladies' wear, that has ever been placed upon the American market, its peculiar fitness for the present day styles at once commending itself to the ladies, as it is particularly well adapted for wearing with the Eton coat, which is now so much in vogue.

The utility of the Pulley Belt and Collar was made possible by its bracing with Featherbone, the pulley arrangements permitting the tightening and the featherbone giving the shape and preventing the sash from stringing.

The many advantages to the wearer, in addition to the smart and comely appearance it gives, mark it as an article that will long be in demand and must be looked upon no longer as a "Fad," but as part of a lady's wearing apparel, which will remain in style as long as belts are worn.

We beg to advise the trade that we have purchased the Canadian patents for the Koch Pulley ideas, as applied to belts and collars. This is the only genuine Pulley Belt and Collar, and we advise all merchants to see to it, that the goods they buy have the Koch and Canadian Featherbone Company's label sewn thereon. We are prepared to supply the trade at the following prices:

ACCOUNTING FOR COTTON MILLS.

At a recent meeting of the New York Chapter of the Institute of Accountants, an address on "Accounting for Cotton Mills" was delivered by A. O. Kittredge, F.I.A., C.P.A., president of the Account, Audit & Assurance Co., Limited, of New York, and editor of The Accountics, the office magazine. The address was made attractive to laymen, and interesting and instructive to professional accountants, as well, by the display of samples of the raw materials used by cotton mills, and specimens of the product at various stages of manufacture up to the completion of the finest goods. There were also shown various charts and diagrams of special technical value.

At the outset, the speaker set forth the objects to be accomplished by a system of accounts when applied to any business enterprise. These, stated in the concisest terms, are a perpetual, or going, profit and loss statement, and a perpetual, or going, balance sheet. "It is no longer satisfactory to the enterprising and aggressive business man," said the speaker, "to learn at the end of a long fiscal period, say six months or a year, what the results are of the business that has been transacted. Instead, there is demanded a gauge of business, showing at all times its measure of profitableness and its condition of solvency, that is as available for reference and as correct in statement as is the thermometer that is employed to show temperature. A manufacturing enterprise is a complex problem compared with a merchandising undertaking. The latter buys and sells, with the costs of the goods handled on the one hand, and the selling figures on the other, constantly in contrast. In the mill or factory, there is first required of the accountant a going statement of the cost of the goods produced, comprised in the three divisions of materials, labor and general expense, and then a corresponding statement of the selling or commercial expenses of the establishment.

"Costs of making goods have nothing to do with the expenses of marketing the goods. Nor is the outlay for distribution of the goods any proper part of the cost of production. However cheaply goods may be made, all chance of profit can be sacrificed by extravagance in selling expenses, and however well the sales department may be manned, and however economically it may be conducted, profit will not follow unless the costs of making the goods are reasonable in amount. The manufacturer then has all the problems of the merchant confronting him, and, in addition, a long list of those which are peculiarly his own.

"Modern manufacturing consists of a series of operations. A well-regulated mill or factory departmentizes to an extreme degree. The product of each of the several departments is the raw material of the next in succession, and therefore the costs of the goods in process must be shown at every stage.

"Cotton is first picked and carded and then slightly twisted, resulting in 'rovings.' Rovings, under certain conditions, are marketable, and frequently, in the case of associated mills, are transferred from one to another, and therefore their cost, including the cotton consumed, the labor applied, and their pro rata of general manufacturing expenses must be shown, as though they were the final result. This is necessary in order that transfers from one mill to another may be properly recorded. More especially is the cost record necessary, because in the mill in which the rovings are produced they become the raw material for the yarn which next follows. Yarn must be similarly treated because it is the raw material for the weaving or cloth department, and so on to the end.

"By 'costs' is meant actual costs day by day—not estimates, nor yet general assumption—but, instead, an ascertained result, so nicely and accurately determined that the total of the costs of all the articles finished in a given period shall exactly balance with the total charges to the mill or factory during the same period."

By way of summary or recapitulation, the speaker said that the adequate system of cost accounts, whether applied to a cotton mill or to a factory in any other line, would show, among other results, the following:

1. Either daily, weekly or monthly, according to the time schedule employed, the cost value of the raw material on hand both in gross and in as fine detail as desired.
2. At corresponding periods, the cost of the work in progress, either as a single unit, or preferably in each of the several departments in which the mill is operated.
3. At corresponding periods, the cost of the finished product on hand, both in gross and in as fine detail as desired.

In the sales department, the speaker declared the showings would include among others a perpetual showing of the gross profits on sales, in contrast with the commercial or distributing expenses. This results in a "going" profit or loss statement. All these results, he assured his audience, are quite easy of accomplishment and really cost less in the way of clerical labor than the usual plans of bookkeeping. Besides this, their value to the business man is almost beyond estimate.

The general system of accounting referred to in the address is one that has recently been put into operation by two very prominent cotton mill corporations in the northern part of the country and by another in the south. The same system has been adapted to the requirements of various other industries, and is in use in many of the largest establishments throughout the nation from bicycle factories to engine works and from publishing concerns to department stores.

DOMINION COTTON CO.

At the 28th annual meeting of The Dominion Cotton Co., April 12, Mr. A. F. Gault, presiding, the directors submitted a proposition to issue preferred 5 per cent. stock to the amount of $1,000,000, the same to be allotted to the present shareholders in the ratio of one to each share already held. The idea appeared so popular that there is no doubt about the entire issue being taken up in the manner devised. The proceeds of the issue will go to repay heavy advances which the banks have made on improvement and machinery account.

The annual report was read, and considered eminently satisfactory. The sales for the past year exceeded those of the preceding year by $500,000. The report was adopted, and the authorization of the stock issue was unanimous. The old board was reelected, and Messrs. A. F. Gault and Jacques Grenier were reelected president and vice-president respectively.

H. A. Anderson, of Lunenburg, N.S., who has been with C. & W. Whitney for 11 years, has opened a business for himself in staple dry goods, ready-made clothing and men's furnishings. Mr. Anderson is a live and intelligent young man, and intends to conduct his business on the cash basis. He is a reader of THE DRY GOODS REVIEW.

MILLINERY OPENING METHODS.

THE Spring millinery openings of 1900 are over, and the milliners are settling down from their "rush" to the remaining months of steady work at trimming and repairing. Yet, as the experience of the past is a good teacher for the future, it is opportune to make a study of the methods observed by successful milliners, in the hope that such study will be useful in providing suggestions for future openings.

As all connected with the trade are well aware, the days of opening are preceded by days of preparation. Not only have the goods to be bought, and often a milliner secured, but the people desired to reach must be made acquainted with the date of, and, if possible, interested in the opening.

This problem of advertising has received considerable attention in the past, and it is now a general rule for milliners in a town or a village to unite in holding their openings on the same date—thus attracting outside buyers who might not be tempted to any of the displays if each merchant held his own separately. This is generally accepted as especially good policy in a district where several towns are contesting for the trade of the farming community adjacent to them. In such districts it is frequently customary for the merchants to advertise their opening not only in the local paper, but in the papers in adjacent towns. This policy has been followed by A. F. Hawke, Grimsby; Hodgens Bros., Clinton; D. J. McKinnon, Blythe, Ont., and others, with excellent results. Advertising in the local papers is done by practically all the up-to-date milliners. General merchants devote from one half to the whole of their usual space (and sometimes use extra space) for a week or two before the opening to their millinery department. The advertisements of those devoted exclusively to the millinery business run in size from a single eighth column to a double-quarter column, and I feel sure the best proportionate results have been obtained from the larger expenditure.

While the advertisement goes a long way towards making the date and features of the opening known, nothing helps so much to create interest in it as good window displays. These were made by the majority. The patriotic feeling was reflected in such stores as Abell & Ortwein, Seaforth, and Bricker & Diebel, Waterloo, who had their windows beautifully decorated in red, white and blue. As a rule, in stores whose doorway was so placed as to give them two windows, one was devoted to millinery and the other to some line that would likely appeal at this season to millinery buyers. The window decorations of Miss Kavanagh, Prescott, were very quaint. One was artistically dressed with shirred silk, with a base of English violets showing in the centre "1900" in lilies of the valley. The other window was devoted to nice things for the baby, which made a very pretty show. C. F. Ellis, Sarnia, made a good hit with his windows. One was devoted to dress goods, trimmings, gloves, and millinery. The other was arranged as representing a reception-room, with curtain draperies, and showing therein an attractive variety of shirt waists. W. Pickard & Co., Seaforth, displayed in one window picture hats, flowers, laces, chiffons, ribbons, silks, etc., and in the other carpets and rugs, which were very suitable at this (house-cleaning) season. The opportunities for fine effects offered the window-dresser by the soft, delicate materials so popular this season were made the most of by such stores as E. McFaul, Seaforth, who used these most effectively to show picture hats, sailors, fancy belts, parasols, etc.

All the stores decorated their millinery showrooms for the opening. Here, as in the windows, some excellent work was done. The patriotic spirit was manifested by the arrangement of flowers and ribbons in national colors, national flags, bunting, pictures, etc., in such stores as G. G. Gladman's, Parry Sound; J. S. Richardson, Tilbury; Mrs. J. G. Dobson, Moncton, and Robinson & Stork, Brampton. Others made a bower of beauty of their showroom by the use of natural flowers and foliage in addition to the artificial ones and the millinery creations on sale. C. W. Hendershot, Kingsville, had his millinery department tastefully draped with curtains and had a table banked with flowering plants. The floral decorations of the store of Youell & Wrong, Aylmer, Que., were described by the local papers as "striking and appropriate, particularly two floral hearts secured by a true lovers' knot in beautiful ribbons. This seemed very apropos, as no less than four young ladies from their millinery department are to be married this Spring."

In many stores the other departments were specially decorated that buyers would not fail to be impressed with the lines other than millinery in stock. In Geddes Bros.', Sarnia, the millinery department was, of course, the primary department during opening week, but a great deal of interest was aroused in the suit, cloak and shirt-waist department, while the dress goods department was left unnoticed by very few buyers. Miss Coon, Grimsby, had a large showcase artistically draped in white lace and satin, and containing a pretty selection of dainty little children's hats. Miss F. Armstrong, Ridgetown, decorated all her store in the new shades of gauzes, mousseline de soie, silk, etc., with flowers intermingled throughout. Many merchants had their stores specially lighted for opening week. The Peter McSweeney Co., Moncton, and A. Bristol & Son, Picton, gave special attention to this, and found it an excellent feature.

Good preparation generally means good results. This year, however, the reports from the majority of houses show that the sales have been especially large and gratifying—a condition anticipated in these columns early in the season.

A PRACTICAL TALK ON STYLES.

"We presume you want to know more about styles than you do about trade," was said to our representative when he called at S. F. McKinnon & Company's. "There is so much to say about both that one must take refuge in hesitancy. The trade this year has been beyond all expectancy, and everything points to an almost abnormal season in Summer goods.

"A deal of this is due to the general prosperity of Canada, but a deal, still, is due to the great variety that is justified in millinery. There seems to be no one prevailing style in millinery, in either shape or trimming, but we have managed it so far, though we have had to carry at times over 300 styles of hats—don't mean 300 colors, but 300 styles, and of each style a full range in colors.

"Women, this year, have the rare opportunity of selecting exactly the kind of hat that is most becoming, and finding themselves quite in style.

"The milan and leghorn and chip and the tuscan straws are all popular, but the best-liked seems to run to the rough, satin-braid, light-weight and flexible.

"Then, again, come in those hats of tucked or corded or accordion-plaited stuffs, of satin, chiffon, silk muslin, maline (silk illusion) and brussels net. You will find them made over wire frames, in toques, turbans or picture hats, and trimmed with all sorts of things—flowers, fruits, lace, feathers.

"You will even find the sailor trimmed with tucked taffeta. All-white hats will be seen on young faces, but you will find that the more artistic hats will be in the delicate pastel shades. As a rule, these pale-hued confections will be trimmed with gauzy stuffs and flowers that are an exact match in color.

"There is much more in this than you will be apt to take note of in the mere hearing. Take a white or black gown, or a Summer silk or lawn, have the hat and parasol to match, and, where the color is carefully selected, imagine the effect gained by surrounding the face in a mass of one color.

"Truly, the wholesaler has much to think of, and little chance for dreaming; he must have what daily whims call for and have that daily and in constant readiness.

"Readiness—that's our point, and ready we are and ready daily for daily needs, even in the scarce goods—look around you."

THE D. McCALL CO., LIMITED.

"Since you were here last," said Mr. D. McCall, president of The D. McCall Co., Limited, to THE REVIEW representative, when asked for the latest millinery news, "there has not been much change in the way of materials. A greater demand for chiffons and mechlins is noted, particularly in black, white and cream, while there is the usual strong demand for all the leading shades. We have found an unusually good demand for gauzes, the more so, probably, on account of the exclusive patterns and novelties we have been able to secure in these lines. Black velvet and satin ribbons have also been very much to the front in the past few weeks, there being dashes of this material shown in knots, bows and various ways on the greater number of hats trimmed for present use. Oriental satins are still in strong demand. We have also done a good business in taffeta ribbons in wide widths, and, no doubt, the run of these goods will continue as the season advances. All-over laces have also been selling exceptionally well, necessitating the placing of large repeat orders which are coming to hand this week. There has also been a decided feeling for all-over nets for millinery trimmings. We are having, too, a considerable call for national ribbons, the demand for which is due, without doubt, to the patriotic feeling in the country.

"In our flower and feather department the popularity of foliage in all the newest tints has been increasing daily, while roses and violets hold their places as favorites among the flowers used this season.

"Turbans and dress hats have been exceptionally good sellers all season, a condition which we have not experienced for some years, and which has likely been caused by the coolness of the weather. However, we are still running the Amarita, Troubadour, Coliseum and Vernon (turbans) and the Rehan, Talford, Fairmont and Tabor (dress hats). We are now getting considerable call from the trade for sailor hats, which demand will doubtless in the course of a week be at its height, and will continue to run through the balance of the season. We have laid in an exceptionally large and varied stock of these goods, which we think will meet the requirements of all classes. At present we are running the Kearsage and the Regatta in white rustic straw, which makes a very desirable everyday hat. For a better hat we are offering the Navahoe and Knox in fine split straw. In ready-to-wear hats we have an excellent range, as you may see, and are meeting with considerable success in placing them."

SUMMER MODELS IN ENGLISH FASHIONS.

The new models, says The London Millinery Record, are very Summerlike in effect and show much use of soft Italian plait and crin, used in conjunction with folded tulle, crepe de chine, taffetas metallic and some chiffon, but there are other materials now to share the favor so long shown this latter trimming. The colors affected beyond white, creme, and tuscan, which are a long way in the ascendancy, are pastel tints of light blue, pink, mauve, and dead-leaf tones.

In the feather departments, shaded ostrich tips and flats are once more favored, as are also black, white, and creme three-quarter flats. Fancy wings, mounts, and quills of net, straw, and spangle, in white, tuscan, and black, with black jet, gold or steel beads, and edges of fancy straw, are the favorites of the moment, but these in their turn may be displaced as the season advances. Flowers are in great demand, and, curious to say, here, as in other things, the "old order changeth." The flower departments have begun at the other end of the season, and are experiencing a demand for Autumnal tints and foliage, while Autumn berries, velvet cherries in black, red, or red and white, full-blown poppies and large roses are amongst the first favorites of the hour. Exquisitely delicate-hued muslin blossoms and foliage in pastel tints are much used in the West End trade, and a new idea is a toque composed principally of large begonia leaves.

There is some considerable use made of ribbons in the Summer models, but one great thing against the interests of the ribbon trade is the persistent use by the Paris milliners of piece-silks, taffetas, brillantes, mousseline, chiffons and various gauzes; and where Paris leads London must follow. The lace departments are evidently going to do big business with Cluny, Luxiel and Chantilly laces in black, white, creme and a greyish tone of creme color. Fringe is applied to some of the new pattern Chantillys, also to some of the more exclusive patterns in wide all-overs.

SUMMER AND SUMMER GOODS

Summer trade was fairly opened by our display of trimmed millinery and of millinery goods the last week in April.

To do a good thing once in a while and then fold one's hands content is not the policy of leadership.

Our opening was a success, but that success has produced no lethargy here. Our attitude is that of daily and constant readiness.

That attitude will be maintained and your daily wants will be met out of the largest and, we believe, the best bought stocks in millinery goods ever assembled for a Summer season in this Dominion.

OUR NEW FACTORY AND WAREHOUSE.

Our present home is a new building and a good one. The main building, running south from York Street, has an annex running west to Wellington Street. In the rectangle formed by these two buildings, at the corner of these two streets, the nine-storey structure now building by our President, and nearing completion, is intended for us. The events of the past few weeks demonstrate our need of it, and we will be in occupancy before the close of May. We are glad to share our prosperity with you.

THE COTTON AND WOOLLEN MARKETS.

THE COTTON AND WOOL MARKET IN CANADA.

PRICES are steady, and the demand is at present more than the mills can supply. Nothing very striking in the way of advanced prices for some time past. However, in the normal condition of business, if the mills could supply during January, February, March and April the demand of the trade, they would have either to shut down or accumulate large stocks in the Fall months.

The Canadian market is essentially a wool goods market for six months in the year, probably more so than Europe, Britain or the United States. Our long season of cold weather accounts for this. All the reports from the dress goods and clothing trade confirm the opinion that prices are very stiff, and that no change is to be looked for yet awhile. What result the cotton crops will have on the situation remains as yet in doubt. They are expected, perhaps, to modify things a little; but this cannot be counted on surely.

CANADIAN COTTON NOTES.

April 12, The Montreal Cotton Co. advanced H. J. interlinings and other goods about 5 to 7½ per cent.

April 17, The Dominion Cotton Co. issued a circular drawing attention to the fact that the price of packing cases of various sizes and kinds had gone up 50 per cent.

April 10, The Merchants Cotton Co. issued a booklet containing their price list on all lines. The figures show a rise on an average of 7½ per cent. since October last.

April 12, butter and cheese cloths up about 5 per cent.

Wm. Parks & Son, St John, N.B., have withdrawn some lines of flannelettes and skirtings, having sold as many as they can make during the next three months. The price of carpet warps has been advanced 1c. per lb. by this mill.

In future the cotton companies intend to charge for freight, casing or baling on all Fall goods.

All the Canadian cotton stocks are quoted high just now. On April 26 the Montreal quotations were:

WOOLLENS IN THE UNITED STATES.

If a careful diagnosis of the market for manufactures of wool is gone into, says The New York Daily Dry Goods Record, the actual situation will be found as unprecedented in the history of the trade. Not even in war times was the output of wool blankets so well sold ahead or for the remainder of the year. That of worsted and wool dress goods is even better conditioned, as some orders extend into next year. Since the introduction of knitting mills in the forties, the productions of such factories were never so well conditioned as to oversales and nominal, if any, stocks. And it is the same with wool and cotton hosiery. For clothing house woollens the mills were never so well occupied on advance orders, and yet there are annoyances of some frequency in the way of reducing or the cancellation of quantities that the mills willingly concede if such orders are not too far advanced in the process of execution. It has been an exceptional season in all respects, and in a number of instances manufacturers have provoked cancellations by much tardiness in the delivery of sample pieces. And yet when considered in the entirety it proves the best one to the mills since the Autumn of 1865, when it was only necessary to show them to insure ready and large sales from stocks or very near delivery, as then it was very easy to sell 28 inch heavy-weight goods at $2.50 to $3 per yard, although in six months one half those prices were regarded as good values, owing to prices for wool having shrunk more than correspondingly.

THE ENGLISH MARKETS.

The next series of wool sales begin on May 8. Meantime the market is steady, but dull. Prices for English wools continue low. Advices from Australia show that there is practically nothing doing in wools. Supplies are short.

The deep-sea exports of wool from Sydney and Newcastle since July 1 last now total 470,067 bales, as against 574,128 bales shipped during a similar period in the preceding season, or a decrease of 104,061 bales. There are now four months before the end of the statistical year comes around, and in order to reach last year's total of 646,000 bales, shipments during this period will have to run up to 176,000 bales, which they are not at all likely to do.

"Everything points," says a New South Wales letter, "to wool being very scarce again towards the end of the year, for it is now estimated that the South American decrease reaches 40,000 bales, a quantity equal to 80,000 bales Australian. The effects of the drought are plainly visible in the wool export returns of our own colony. By coast and borderwise the decrease in the quantities despatched now amounts to 112,612 bales. Not only will the output for the current season show a heavy decrease of probably over 100,000 bales, but the ensuing clip will be of only moderate dimensions. A large area in New South Wales is still suffering from a continuance of the drought, and in many places there will be no lambs, and in others only an indifferent lambing this Autumn. In Central Queensland a very severe drought is raging, and sheep are dying in thousands, a factor which will assist in curtailing the quantities of wool available for sale in London in July and September."

The Manchester cotton market is steady. Cloths and yarns are quiet, with a moderate inquiry. The Liverpool cable report of April 27 says: "Cotton—Spot—Moderate demand; prices higher; American middling 5 15-32d. The sales of the day are estimated at 7,000 bales, including 500 for speculation and export. Receipts, 1,000 bales, including 700 American. Futures steady at the advance. The tenders for delivery at to-day's clearings were 500 bales new docket.

IMPROVEMENTS AT HAMILTON.

R. McKay & Co., successors to McKay Bros., Hamilton, are to have a fine new store. The plans call for a new front, with a large entrance in the centre and two large show windows. The interior walls are to be pulled down and replaced by iron pillars on both first and second floors, and the building is to be extended in the rear the full depth of the lots, thus giving two very large floors. Both flats will be fitted up with low fixtures, and the rear will be largely of glass, so as to make the store light and bright. The windows are to be fitted with prism lights, and plate-glass mirrors will be largely used. The floors will be of hardwood and the ceilings of metal. It is expected that the work will be completed in two months. The new business will be run by the new firm of R. McKay & Co., who will open out with a fine new stock as soon as the improvements will allow.

MUST KEEP AT IT.

In the opinion of a magazine writer the man who aims to sell to people whom he cannot reach personally is the man whose advertising must be most carefully planned and the most thoroughly executed. He must have a perfect system of following up inquiries. He must never let a man forget him after that man has once shown an interest in his proposition. Orders rarely come with the introduction. They are the result of frequent visits. The more frequent, the more likelihood of the reception of an order. It works in the same way in advertising as it works in selling through salesmen. A very good advertisement may catch at once; same way with a salesman; but more often the frequent visit of an advertisement, a little different each time, like the persistent salesman, gains the permanent trade.

THE LOCAL CLEARING HOUSE.

In the average community there is a sort of clearing house of experiences, and every inhabitant knows from his neighbor's tales of troubles just the manner of the conducting of every store. These exchanges of views are a mighty power in the making or unmaking of a business, and just so much as the people find against a store and the salesmen connected with it that much greater is the fight for trade to be made by that store, and just that much more difficult is the drawing of new customers who are always asking of the reputation of a store before they begin their trading there.

Look out for the spirit of exaggeration among your salesmen, warn them against making any statements which can be taken wrong end first by your customers and don't allow your place of business to get the rogue's stamp attached to it.

NOVEL BRACELETS.

The arm of the fashionable woman will undoubtedly twinkle with one of the very new butterfly bracelets this season. Just a perfectly plain tight-fitting band of flexible gold it must be, clasping the arm above the elbow and set with a gold, jewel-besprinkled butterfly. The long, lovely and large wings of the glorious insect are so poised that at every movement of the arm the gleaming pinions tremble, open and shut.

Another equally curious and beautiful armlet has a mere gold thread to fasten above the elbow. Across it is fixed a thin enameled lizard, which, at a short distance, appears to have climbed so high on the white round member that gives it support. Not one of these new bracelets is clasped at the wrist or below the elbow.

BOTH ORNAMENTAL AND USEFUL.

The Spring fashion plate, gotten up by the D. McCall Co., Limited, this season, has won for that firm many letters of praise from their customers, as it is undoubtedly one of the finest plates ever offered to the Canadian trade. In point of utility it is fully up to the former plates, for it contains designs of all the correct shapes of the season, and as it is a veritable work of art, it will not fail to prove a fit ornament as well as a useful work of reference in any millinery establishment. The McCall Co. offer to send one of these plates to any of the trade who have not yet secured one.

F. A. Crowell, of Sydney, N.S., has formed a copartnership with Prowse Bros., of Charlottetown, P.E.I. They expect to be open for business on or about August 15. Their new departmental store, corner Prince and Charlotte streets, has a floor space of 16,800 square feet.

Speaking of Our Wednesday Five Corner Sales

we simply ask you to call and see the lines therein displayed. Life is too short and newspaper space too expensive to catalogue in detail the oddities, bargains, cut-prices, job-lots and snaps we are showing; a peep at these corners will tell the story, and an object lesson is worth volumes of talk. These corners are full of real money value to those who require the goods they contain.

We Are Winning on New Lines which are uncommon energy and industry—searching the markets of the world for special values and manufacturers' overmakes—keeping our stock clean by clearing all odds and ends at reduced prices—commencing every season with new, fashionable goods that are in demand—by every possible means keeping our stock well assorted—selling on the smallest remunerative profit, and giving liberal cash discounts.

Having Incorporated the Golden Rule into our business rules, the small retailer can buy from us as advantageously as the large departmental store. We do not believe in making special prices for a favored few more than we do in class legislation. We find "the truth, the plain truth" the best business-bringing axiom. As you are passing drop in and see our five corners. It is satisfactory for us to know that

Hermsdorf Dye made black hosiery bearable for summer wear

Until the virtues of Hermsdorf dye became known and popular, people wore bleached and unbleached stockings during the warm weather; they were afraid of black—it crocked, stained, did everything but stay fast. They shunned black hosiery because it wasn't reliable. Now it's different. Fast black hosiery of Hermsdorf dye has a sale every day in the year; it isn't a matter of seasons; the great mass of hosiery wearers trust Hermsdorf dye for Summer wear, and their trust is not misplaced. Hermsdorf dye is not affected by perspiration; it can hang on the line exposed to the hottest rays of the sun and not lose an iota of its color—the washtub has no terrors for it. Keep your stock of Hermsdorf Dyed Hosiery constantly before your customers; their eyes need only to catch this trademark

Do Your Whole Duty.

Do the best you can at all times. Don't let the weather or the times or anything else lead you to do slipshod work or to forgetting your duty to yourself and others around you. If you do your best and then fail you can hardly be blamed, but there are very few cases where anyone has done his best at anything and failed. It is usually the one who has gone to work in a half-hearted way and who has shirked part of his duties who fails. If we would all do the very best that we know how there would be very few of us who would not be pretty nearly right in what we are doing.

Little Wastes.

Why is it that so many stores are so careless about little things and so particular about what they think are bigger ones, when, in reality, the little things all together would probably make up a larger bulk than all the big ones put together?

Some storekeepers are always kicking about the heavy expenses they are under, about the amount of money that it costs to run the business nowadays, and yet they would find, if they looked around in their own business, a good part of the expense could be saved.

It is these little leaks that cause so much trouble and drain out all the profits. The store that will watch the little things, the little expenses, the things wasted here and there, and see that they are kept in reasonable bounds, will be very apt to save a great many dollars in the course of a year.

Many clerks think very little of wasting a yard or two of twine or a sheet or two of paper in many unnecessary ways, when they might just as easily have saved that amount. They forget that while a yard or two of twine does not amount to much in itself, yet, when repeated day after day by a great many clerks, it soon amounts to a great many dollars.

When Buying Goods.

It is always well to be prepared for the worst, whatever that may be, and then one is in a position to enjoy the best if it comes, or they are not apt to be disappointed if it doesn't come. And, while I say to be prepared for the worst, do not be so prepared that you are forgetting about striving for the best. The only way to reach a goal is to aim for it. If you are anticipating the worst in the sense of expecting it, or doing nothing to prevent the worst happening, then you are very apt to get just what you expect. By being prepared for the worst I don't mean anything of this sort. I mean to be on the safe side of every question. Don't put yourself in a position that when it comes to the worst you are going to be seriously hurt.

Remember this when you are buying goods. Don't buy so heavily that, if the season turns out to be a little dull, you are going to be overstocked.

Remember this in employing help. Don't employ so many that, if you find trade not what you expect, you are going to have a lot of employes standing around doing nothing.

Always try to shape your course so that if you don't get as good as you expect you are on the safe side, and are not going to be very much put out in your business affairs.

Leave Style To Customers.

Don't allow your salespeople to be putting on airs. Don't have anyone in your store who is too good to wait on the humblest and most ragged customer which you may have. This is something that would be very quickly noticed by persons buying of you, and it is very often that some of your real good customers may not be dressed quite as finely or quite as stylishly as they could if they wished to.

Don't allow your clerks to make the mistake of thinking they can hold themselves above anyone who wants to buy from you. The poor deserve just as good, just as prompt, just as pleasant attention as the richest person who may come into your store.

Hints From Customers.

You can get lots of friendly and very good advice from your employes if you will only cultivate the habit of getting from them what they have learned by contact with the customers. This really is the most accurate information which one can have from a business. It should be your ardent desire to find out as near as possible what the customer thinks of you and your goods. If you could get the confidence of your clerks, and every once in a while have a private conversation, you can likely get out of them a great deal of valuable information, which will enable you to correct any bad points which your business may have, or which will point out to you how to improve your store service.

Don't hold yourself so far above your employes that there is no unbending to come down to them and to be friendly enough for them to desire to tell you anything which is to your advantage or for the improvement of the store.

Old and New Goods. Use the new goods to help sell the old. But, of course, you want to be discreet in mixing them. You don't want to place the new goods alongside of goods that are so old that the two will show up in violent contrast. But it is often well to mix fresh goods with old that you have already on hand, as the new will help to sell the old without injuring its own sale.

The Dissatisfied Clerk. A dissatisfied clerk is of very little use to the store, no matter what may be the cause of dissatisfaction. It is well to either try to satisfy or to reason him out of his dissatisfaction or to get rid of him. A person who is dissatisfied with his life, with his pay, with his surroundings, cannot take the interest or the care that is necessary for him to take in order to make the business successful.

If you find for any reason that your employes are dissatisfied, it would be well for you to either do what you can towards satisfying them, if they have just cause for their dissatisfaction, or argue them out of their wrong way of thinking, or get someone else in their place. It must necessarily be that dissatisfaction is a thing that will cause a great deal of annoyance and loose work in any store.

Trials come upon us all at some time of life. The chief thing is to remember what will help us during the remainder of our lives. If we do not learn anything by trial, then we are in a bad state, indeed. But, if we can get valuable lessons from the troubles we have gone through, then we are better prepared to make a success of the good times now in existence.

A WELL-ARRANGED STORE.

G. R. Ashwell & Son, of Chilliwack, B.C., are making some alterations in their store, which, when finished, will be thoroughly up-to-date. It having a frontage of 60 feet affords ample window space for displaying goods, and is 40 feet deep. The second storey of the store has been used as a hall for concerts, but now it will be devoted to men's furnishings, boots and shoes, crockeryware and wall paper. There will also be a waiting-room with a piano in it, so that the ladies may amuse and rest themselves without leaving the building.

The dry goods department takes up half of the ground floor, while the remainder is given over to groceries and hardware. The stairway runs from the dry goods and grocery departments and joins at the first landing. This saves customers from walking from one department to the other in order to go to the second storey.

Reid & Co., of Cranbrook, B.C., have built a fine and up-to-date store. It is about 50 feet long and 35 feet wide, with a wall in the centre, dividing the ladies' ware from the men's, and an arch for communication in the rear between the two departments. The stock is very neat and prettily arranged, which adds greatly to the tone of the place.

SOME "DON'TS" ABOUT GLOVES.

MOST women do not realize the importance of the glove. An ill-fitting or inappropriate glove can mar the effect of an entire costume. It is unfortunate that there should be so much carelessness in connection with that article of dress which has held so revered a place in romantic history. Gloves have been the symbol of power, the gage of defiance and the token of love, and now they have dwindled to a necessary adjunct of dress, which, in the majority of cases, is treated with the same consideration as a poor relation—anything is good enough! But women's carelessness of detail in regard to hand covering is noticed and commented upon to an extent which, if the fair wearers only realized it, would create a revolution in glove wearing.

There are many "do nots" which are applicable to glove wearing:

Do not buy cheap gloves. If your income is limited you might better don neatly mended, correctly cut, good quality gloves than a new pair of poor shape and quality.

Do not wear evening or dress gloves except in the evening or on dressy occasions. It seems to have become a custom to wear a fresh pair of delicate gloves on some important occasion. When they become slightly soiled or have been cleaned they are used for less important times, and a thoroughly soiled glove appears to be "good enough to run out in or to wear shopping." This is thoroughly bad taste, if not bad form. For traveling, walking and shopping, wear a medium heavy glove matching the costume, or a stout English glove of some neutral shade. This will prove more economical than always purchasing dress gloves, which, when once soiled, are hacked out so quickly and look so slovenly.

Do not try to make the hand look small by wearing a tight glove. In selecting a glove be sure the fingers are long enough and that the button or clasp fastens at the juncture of wrist and hand and not on the palm. It is best to purchase from different dealers until gloves perfectly suiting the hand of the wearer are discovered, and then give that dealer all your trade. Promiscuous glove buying is as bad as promiscuous shoe buying.

On the other hand, do not wear gloves too large. The baggy backs, wrinkled fingers and slouchy wrists do not give that refinement of appearance which all women covet.

Do not wear a glove with a button off, or a rip in some seam, thinking it will not be noticed. Such a defect is glaring to strangers and friends. Almost any store will have any gloves which have been bought from them properly mended for a trifling sum, and the gloves look much better than when mended at home.

Do not put a new glove on carelessly. The first wearing moulds the glove to the hand and decides its future appearance. Be careful to get the fingers straight and work them gently on, little by little, each in turn. Then put one finger in the palm and, by pressing outward, adjust the hand part. The thumb follows, and when the seam on the outside of the hand is even and smooth the glove may be buttoned or clasped.

Do not wear kid gloves without sprinkling powder in them if your hands are inclined to perspire.

Do not take a glove off carelessly if you desire it to last well. In taking gloves off turn the wrist over the fingers and draw until the fingers are half uncovered, then the finger ends may be loosened by the tips. This makes it an easy matter to readjust the glove right side out. It is a good plan to breathe in a glove after taking it off. It preserves the softness of the kid by quickly drying any slight moisture.

FEATURES OF MAY TRADE IN WINNIPEG.

*A Change in Millinery—Rumor of a New Firm—White Dresses in Vogue—
The Military and Patriotic Fashions.*

From the DRY GOODS REVIEW's special correspondent.

WINNIPEG, May 26, 1900.

AS previously noted, the agency of The D. McCall Company in this city has changed hands, and Mr. John McRae, who has been in charge of the agency since its inception, is devoting his energies to another line of industry. Mr. White, who previously looked after the British Columbia branch is now in charge. He has been with the house for many years. Business is reported exceptionally satisfactory. The season opened fully three weeks earlier than usual and the demand has been very extensive for white and all classes of light goods. The present demand is principally for white sailors and leghorns, of these latter it has been found difficult to square the supply with the demand. Pastel shades in shapes have not proved as popular here as elsewhere, although the sale has been large.

Turban effects have been very popular. For country trade the sailor par excellence has been the rustic jumbo braid, but in the city there has been more call for the fine white split straw. More and more dealers find the demand for American hats, indeed, few lines of English hats are salable here. This is especially noticeable in sailors. The English sailor is lower in the crown and has a more squat effect, which the American and Canadian women will not have at any price. Short-backed sailors with draped brims and crowns will be popular for midsummer. The sale of khaki ribbons and chiffons has been large.

It is rumored that one of the representatives here of an eastern millinery house is about to open a large retail millinery and ladies' tailoring establishment, but the report could not be verified up to time of writing.

Clothing houses report the sales of Summer wear for men very satisfactory so far. The unusually warm weather so early in the season has, no doubt, helped this along.

Among drygoodsmen this has been a white season sure enough. For the first time in its history the streets of Winnipeg were lined with white dresses two weeks before May 24. Winnipeg has such long Winters, as a rule, that the ladies are fond of getting all they can out of their Summer clothing, and muslins and piques have been the order of the day for the whole month. Business is reported very good.

R. J. Whitla & Co. report an enormous sale of blouses and white dress goods of all kinds. Among blouses the Sorosis waist seems to have found special favor. A good trade has also been done in khaki suits for ladies. This house is showing a wonderful range of ladies' ties. In fact, as previously reported, it would seem that your neck is the most important part of your anatomy these days, judging by the endless variety of dainty neckwear. The bandana ties have been and are a great rage.

Whitlas also show a very handsome range of regimental ties, such as the Rifle Brigade, Royal Fusiliers, Duke of Corn-wall's Light Infantry, Army Medical Corps, 13th Hussars, Gordon Highlanders, Royal Marines, 42nd Highlanders, Royal Dragoons, Argyle and Sutherland Highlanders, Inniskilling Dragoons. The ties are in rich corded silks and the colors are the exact counterpart of the colours of the various regiments. These goods are sure to be popular.

Judging by the incoming samples, navy blue will be more popular than ever, while the rage for khaki seems rather to increase than diminish. In dress goods, blacks are going to be much worn, and some of the new lines are extremely beautiful.

Mr. Stewart, manager of the shirt and smallware department of W. J. Peck & Co. is off on a holiday trip to Scotland, and his friends are looking forward to his return, as it is whispered that Mr. Stewart's bachelor days will be a thing of the past when he returns.

Mr. Binns and Mr. Campbell, buyers for R. J. Whitla & Co., have returned from Europe. They report the feeling of trade unusually strong in the Old Country. On their return trip as they came up the St. Lawrence the pilot brought on board the news of the relief of Mafeking. There were a number of Royal Marines on their way to Esquimalt, and Marines and passengers went wild together.

Speaking of celebrating Mafeking, the demand for bunting of all kinds was tremendous and many houses are entirely sold out. The amount of decoration for the Queen's Birthday was larger than usual.

FALL LINE IN DOWN QUILTS.

THE REVIEW was kindly accorded an "advance" view of the Alaska Feather & Down Co.'s Fall samples of quilt and cushion covers, and those readers who are interested in that line will find that a treat is in store for them. The line comprises over 25 different designs of figured sateens, sikolines, and silks, all selected with taste and beautifully executed by the converters of the cloths. All of these designs were printed exclusively for the Alaska Feather & Down Co., and any dry goods buyer who obtains control of some of these designs for his town will have the undisputed possession of them. Some of the company's down quilts this year are "braided" on the seams in the same way as is done by English makers. This much enhances the effect without adding to the price.

Mr. V. Dowker is at present visiting the European markets in the interest of The Gault Bros. Co., Limited, haberdashery department, and is picking up all the very latest ideas for the benefit of the patrons of the firm.

A. F. Gault, president of the Montreal Cotton Co., accompanied by Messrs. Grenier and Stevenson, directors, have held a long interview with the Valleyfield, Que., Town Council, where they propose to erect a new cotton factory to employ about 400 hands. It is understood that certain proposals were made which, if accepted by the council, will cause the cotton company to immediately commence the erection of the proposed factory.—Montreal Herald, May 7.

CLOTHING IN THE YUKON.

SUPERINTENDENT WOOD, in charge of the detachment of Canadian Mounted Police in the Upper Yukon, reports to the Ottawa Government the kind of clothing required by the men. The report will contain some hints for merchants doing business with the north mining country. He says :

"A good quality of boot, like the Elcho field boot, is the article required for either walking or riding ; they stand the water well, whereas the long, black boots go to pieces in a short time, when used on river work, the long tan boots sent up for issue on repayment, should take their place. The red leather ankle boots are a strong, comfortable boot, and wear well.

"Underclothing—The present issue is inadequate, especially the socks and stockings. The issue should be increased. Men on the trail can wear out about 20 pairs of socks in the Winter alone; this applies also to moccasins ; the issue should be increased to four pairs. I would strongly recommend that a mitt with a large cuff, lined with some cheap fur, be issued, the regulation buck mitt being worthless on the trail, though good for barrack work.

"The last consignment of Stetson hats are a great improvement on the other shipments. The Yukon fur cap is a first-class article, combining lightness with warmth, and could not be improved upon. The lately-arrived brown duck "Parkas" are very serviceable, and will answer the purpose. The coyote robes received from Regina are the best for dog-driving, being light and warm. They wear fairly well.

"The last consignment of sweaters are very thin and very large in size. Instead of fitting closely, as sweaters should, they sit loosely on the largest men. I would strongly recommend that pea jackets be made a free issue in the Yukon. One every two years would be sufficient, and they are the most serviceable and smartest article of clothing in use."

PIQUE SKIRTS.

Owing to the many letters and repeat orders for white skirts, Messrs. Boulter & Stewart have decided to carry stock of same in 12 designs, made with new pleat back. The insertion trimmed lines are the most popular, and can be retailed from $1.50 to $5.00. Samples sent on application.

Arthur Morrice has been appointed Toronto representative of D. Morrice, Sons & Co., selling agents of the Canadian Colored Cotton Co., in succession to the late Mr. Muldrew.

Mr. M. Markus, of Montreal, left last week on a business trip, and will visit all the principal manufacturing centres in Great Britain, France, Germany, Austria and Switzerland. He expects to return in a couple of months with samples of all the latest novelties that are on the market, and said he was going to look out for the best specialties that could be bought, as he thoroughly believed that "nothing was too good for Canadians."

The manufacturing industries of Dundas are to be added to by the establishment of a factory for the making of cotton batting. The Dundas Pad Works have built a large brick addition to their works to be used as a picker house, and have amalgamated with the Toronto Cotton Batting Co., and the latter are now moving their plant there. The product of the works will be mattresses, stair pads, and cotton bats, and the concern will be known as the Canada Cotton Batting Co.

THE POLICY OF RETURNING GOODS.

IN a conversation with a well-known silk waist manufacturer not long ago, I had occasion to refer to the matter of returns in connection with the miserable weather conditions that prevailed during March.

"We don't have any returns," he said. I looked astonished.

"No," he continued, "we actually are not annoyed by that evil—strange as it may appear to you."

"Tell me how you have escaped it?" I said. "Simply by taking a firm stand against it," was the reply. "Now, I'll just show you a letter—" And he called to his stenographer to bring in a letter.

"This is to a house which sent us back ten waists." And I read a letter which stated briefly that upon investigation it had been found that the order was filled accurately, that unwarranted returns were not accepted, and that the waists went back by express that day, ending with the conventional assurance to the retail firm that the silk waist house was very truly its.

"Now," resumed the manufacturer, "the fundamental policy of this house is to fill all orders just as given. We are particular about that—very particular. We never substitute colors, and if we can't send the buyer what he orders, we simply write and tell him so. Consequently I always know that there is no excuse, under average circumstances, for any retailer returning us goods. Furthermore, as valuable as my time is, I make it a point to investigate personally every case where anything is returned; and find out if anything is wrong. In ninety-nine out of a hundred there is no visible cause."

"Then this last instance represents merely an arbitrary return."

"That's all."

"Well, your action was all right," I ventured, "but what would you have written to one of your big up-town accounts—one running up into the thousands?" And I thought the question was a knock-out blow to his theory of independent attitude.

"Precisely the same," he fired back. "In fact, it was only last week that a big New York house—one we do quite a business with—attempted to return less than a dozen waists. I simply refused to accept them, since there was no adequate excuse for the return."

"Aren't you afraid to lose their business by such a refusal?"

"No. They know, or at least I have explained it, that it is a principle of ours not to accept returns. Such knowledge does not make them think less of us. On the contrary, it increases their respect for us. No buyer can have the proper sort of business opinion of a firm that will allow itself to be imposed upon."

"But have you never lost trade through this policy of yours?" I asked.

"Well, in days gone by there have been estrangements—brief ones. Buyers have declared their intention never to do business with us again because we wouldn't take goods back; but if the next month didn't see them again in our salesroom the next season did. In fact, I could point out to you some of our staunchest supporters and best customers who have been 'offended' in the past at our so-called independence."

"So-called independence?" I repeated.

"Yes—for it is really not independence. When an order is placed with us we look upon it as a bona fide agreement. We live up to our part, and we expect the buyer or merchant to live up to his."

And I went away deeply impressed with the fact that there was at least one sensible, courageous, manly manufacturer in the trade, with enough respect for himself to assert his rights, and enough confidence in himself not to be afraid to say "No" to the unreasonable request of even a large customer.

There ought to be more like him—they'd make reputation and substantial profits, and the business would be elevated.

* * *

It was raining in torrents when I walked into his office. He grunted a half-hearted greeting as he turned from his pile of mail and took a fresh cigar from me with only the most perfunctory acknowledgement. I could see he was rattled.

"Well, how's the skirt business?"

"U-m-m-m-p-p-h-pg!" was his reply.

"As bad as all that?"

He rummaged through his letters, and finally pulled out two sheets pinned together.

"This makes me hot!" he exclaimed. "Just look here: we got a letter this morning; envelope addressed to us, letter addressed to another skirt house. The other skirt house got our letter. Naturally I sent them theirs, after making a copy of it, and they sent us ours."

"Nothing serious, I hope," I said, scenting interesting developments.

"Nope," he chirruped; "nothin' worse'n a case o' blankety-blank returns; but it shows you what excuses these buyers'll resort to when they want to get rid o' stock. Read the letters."

I read the first:

MESSRS. SO & SO: Dear Sirs.—We are returning one lot of skirts because the quality of material is not good. We think you told us the $4 skirt was made in the best goods; it is nothing like the quality of goods we are buying for $3.75 and retailing for $5. We shall be obliged to ask $6, when we are selling a better quality for $5.

Yours, respectfully, C. ANTUSEM & CO.

The other letter, addressed to the manufacturer before me but received by his competitor, read as follows:

MESSRS. ETC. & CO.: Dear Sirs—We have returned to you one lot of skirts, for the reason that we do not consider them good value at the price. We have some in stock for a very much lower price that are better, and we feel that it would be impossible for us to put these skirts in stock and sell them for a price that would pay us for doing so.

Yours, respectfully, C. ANTUSEM & CO.

"They are only plainly trumped-up excuses," said the manufacturer when I handed him back the letters. "The buyer simply hasn't nerve enough to carry the stock he has bought through this period of enforced dull business."

"Well, what are you going to do about it?" I asked.

"What can I do? Make him take them and lose the account? I guess we'll have to stand it."—Crerand's Cloak Journal.

IT IS A WELL-KNOWN FACT that certain materials are made for certain purposes, and, while they may perform admirably the service for which they are intended, are absolutely worthless for other uses.

A better illustration of this cannot be taken than in the case of Velveteens manufactured for millinery and trimming purposes only. Such Velveteens are not suitable for any other purpose, and if used for skirt bindings generally fail to stand the wear and tear to which the edge of a dress skirt is subjected. A specially-made Velveteen is needed for binding the skirt edge, and it is such that is used in the which are made by a Company engaged exclusively in the manufacture of Skirt Bindings. The S.H.&M. Bindings are cut on a true bias, evenly and smoothly joined, fit the skirt edge to perfection, and the trade mark “S.H.&M.,” stamped on the back of every yard, is a guarantee that they are the best skirt bindings it is possible to produce. They out-wear all others and give perfect satisfaction to all who use them.

WINDOW AND STORE DECORATING.

Conducted for THE REVIEW by H. Hollingsworth, an Expert Window Artist.

TO DRY GOODS REVIEW READERS.—We shall be glad to receive photographs and descriptions of window displays that have attracted special attention in their own localities, and which would be considered helpful to trimmers generally. Any inquiries or questions on the subject of window dressing will be answered cheerfully, and any information given that may be desired by readers. Queries should be addressed: "Window Dressing Department."

WINDOW DRESSING IN SMALLER TOWNS.

A LOOK into the windows and interiors of many of the stores in the small towns will convince one that everything is wrong as regards displays.

The window trimmer's lot in the small towns is not a happy one, as he is generally salesman, stockkeeper, bookkeeper, manager, window-trimmer, and everything else. The city trimmers are apt to view with too critical an eye the work done by the window-trimmer in the smaller towns. No one but himself knows what he has to contend with.

There are many who strive to make artistic and elaborate displays in their windows, which are generally too small to give the proper effect. They are frequently too elaborate for the resources of the stock, and, in many cases, as soon as the window is trimmed he is compelled to disarrange the display, by having a customer ask for some of the goods in the display.

The interiors are generally uninviting. Above the dress goods counter there is a pole suspended by a string or wire from the ceiling, on which is hung dress goods, laces, and everything. And on the back of this is a ledge which is piled up with boxes and bundles. These detract from the appearance of the store, and the poles, to an artist's eye, look like clotheslines; all of which shows carelessness and lack of decorative knowledge.

A DISPLAY OF FURNISHINGS.

Would it not be to this merchant's advantage to have his store looking neat and attractive?

Why not have all these boxes, bundles and poles taken down; have the ledge cleaned after the store closes, so that the covers can be put up, and then go to work and make your display?

The interior trimming is not supposed to be as elaborate as the window trims, and is only intended to make the store inviting and attractive. It would be a waste of time to put a great deal of work on any one piece of interior trimming, but one should rather make a great many tasty little trims throughout the store, and utilize all available space without going into extremes.

WINDOW ARRANGEMENTS.

Your windows should be incased with a solid background of wood, at least six feet high, and above that you can have glass to the ceiling. This arrangement will allow the light to come into the store, and still make a foundation on which to work out displays, and, at the same time, keep the dust from the store from getting into the window.

BACKGROUNDS.

Backgrounds are one of the most important things. If a window is not properly backed, no matter how artistic you may be, it will be a failure. In some of the large cities the backgrounds in the windows are works of art. Some are handsomely finished in oak. Others have gold-leaf frames with mirrors. These are permanent, and cost many hundreds of dollars. Very many window-trimmers construct their backgrounds in windows, which, of course, take considerable time, and gives little opportunity for the goods to be displayed, all the time having been spent on the background. To overcome this, it is advisable to have portable backgrounds. Make them when you have some spare moments.

They are easily constructed. A few frames of light strips of wood, covered with any white material, form an excellent groundwork. This groundwork can be covered with any cheap material, which can be plaited from top to bottom, or diagonally forming a sunburst. There are a number of ways by which they can be plaited or puffed. The frames can be made same measurements as the back of window, so as to fit nicely. These can be used in different ways and are easily handled and put up.

SIMPLICITY.

Simplicity, that is the word, in the dressing of a window as well as in color.

If you display a variety of articles in the one window, it will make it look complicated. The object is to display the goods in such a way that the passer-by can understand at a glance the object of the display.

Where color and form are considered, simplicity is the rule, and few articles should be used, but they should be displayed artistically.

Take, for instance, a silk window. If you have any forms to show waists on, use them; if not, get a corset form. On it display your talent in draping a waist, not by cutting it, but by draping the goods on it so as to approach as nearly as possible the waist you intended to copy.

Those who, from lack of experience, or others who cannot drape, will find it very interesting and simple. Dozens of original styles can be thought out.

When you have made a few of these, along with a few skirts on forms or stands, place them in the window well apart, and, although you have gotten up a display somewhat old, yet it is ever a pleasure to look at.

Do not allow your goods to overlap each other, as the outlines become confused, and each article loses its individual effectiveness. Therefore, don't crowd the windows. Don't crowd the floors. Be careful to have each article clearly defined against the background, and don't put in front or at the side of another article the same tone or color.

MECHANICAL TRIMS AND THEIR VALUE.

During the holiday seasons and on special occasions the mechanical window is in great demand as a drawing card.

It not only arrests the attention of those out shopping, but catches the little ones, and it soon becomes a subject of comment in nearly every household.

"Interest the little ones" with something movable, and it is only the matter of a short time until every parent in the city is induced to accompany the little folks to see just the nicest window in so-and-so's store. After enjoying the sights and

Formerly, only dry goods houses made a study of window trimming, but now the practice extends throughout all branches of trade. It is beyond question that there are few things so attractive as a beautiful and artistically dressed window.

It is also the cheapest advertisement that the dealer may indulge in. Its real aims are to show the people what is kept to sell and the price at which it is sold, to attract the attention of people to the store, and to show goods which will excite in the public the desire of possession.

The principal object of the most successful window-trimmers is to do something that will cause the people to talk, excite their curiosity and admiration, which will be followed by patronage.

An attractive window is a silent salesman appealing for trade. Goods should be so displayed as to force people to mechanical effects of the window, their curiosity is aroused and they start on a tour of inspection, and the other windows connected with the store are viewed closely, which otherwise might only have received a passing glance.

The object of this sort of advertising is to bring the people to your store, and to hold their attention long enough to impress on their minds the exact location of your business, and what goods you keep, thus receiving advertising which no newspaper can give, as it attracts the attention of many who do not or cannot read the papers.

WINDOWS THAT WIN TRADE.

The art of window trimming is at present recognized as the most important factor in increasing trade and building up a good lively business.

feel that they really wish to possess them, as this feeling ends sooner or later, in purchases. The result of such a display will be an instant sale to people able to gratify their wish. Those who have to plan and contrive before investing will remember the store and the goods displayed long after they have been taken out of the window.

By others, the attraction will be communicated to friends who intend making purchases. In some of these three ways the window will create business, as it is a constantly changed advertisement. The wants of many people will be catered to and all lines of trade be covered. To keep abreast of the times, it is necessary for your windows to have your utmost attention.

There are different ways of arousing the interest of passers-by. By displaying an immense stock of one article, people will stop and look at it, as they would at a big man, a big horse, etc.

Another method is the peculiar and unlooked for arrangement of goods. In this style of window the skill of the decorator is best displayed. To attract attention by massive displays requires but slight power; to attract it by delicate adjustment of light and shade, by skilful imitation of objects, by pretty combinations of fabrics brings into play the artist's best skill and intelligence.

There are many ways of making the windows attractive, but the first and the principal thing is cleanliness and neatness in arrangement. Windows should be changed often, at least once a week, and cleaned from top to bottom each time the display is changed.

Then see that the background will be suitable for the goods to be displayed. This is one of the important parts of the trim. The background is provided for a double purpose: to exclude light from the rear, and to sharply define the outlines of the articles displayed. Such a background, if

One principal necessary to be followed is: never to display goods for sale which you do not keep in stock. When the attention of the customer is attracted by a feature in the window, she wants to see the same thing in stock. If you display a bargain in the window, be prepared to duplicate it on the counters. Use every legitimate means to get people into the store, but once inside do not deceive them.

When the window is arranged for a special sale, it is necessary that there be a liberal supply of those goods inside on the counters, with plenty of price cards and sale announcements.

To produce a good display in the window, simplicity in arrangement, as well as in color, is desirable. It is a safe rule not to display a great variety of articles in the same window, as a complicated arrangement usually appears confused.

In arranging a window for the purpose of getting as much of a show as possible with a few goods, the surroundings should be carefully considered, that is, the background, the light and the distance from the front. As a rule, a thinly-dressed window should be arranged well back from the glass, and, in that case, it must have a strong background to bring it out. A window dressed entirely to the front has no effectiveness as judiciously selected, can be made to supply an important color element in itself. No matter what the line of business may be, there is nothing mars a window as much as to merely place the goods without some sort of a background.

In many cases mirrors act as effective backings. They concentrate the light, sharpen the outlines of the articles shown, and greatly increase the size of the window.

Some firms have fitted up their windows with backgrounds of paneled oak, highly polished, at a great expense, and they will not allow the trimmer anything else for a background. To these firms I wish to say they have made a mistake, and it will be well to rectify it. Let the trimmer make his own backgrounds. Natural wood for backings looks too bare. It is like a room without a carpet or with unfinished walls, which mars the effect of nice furniture. It's the same with the window. You may place the finest of goods in such a window and the stationary background will depreciate their looks and values, and will look as if the window had been half trimmed, or that you had not goods enough to finish it.

a whole, but depends for its effect wholly on separate details, for the reason that it has not the necessary distance to give the eye the proper focus. When the trim is withdrawn one or two feet from the glass, the proper focus is obtained, and the eye takes in the display with pleasure, the light being softened and diffused. All the light must come from the front and top, as admission of light from behind completely ruins the effect.

MERCHANT vs. WINDOW-TRIMMER.

Of the greatest importance to the merchant of to-day are his windows, and how they are trimmed. Many merchants persist in hampering the window-man in different ways.

One way is in not giving him a free hand in planning and carrying out his displays. They seem to think the trimmer is not competent to judge what should be shown in the window and how it should be shown. They give him an order to show a certain line of goods and expect him to get the present trim out, the window cleaned and retrimmed in the space of an hour or two, and then, after the display is in, find fault and criticize the bad points of the trim. Is that justice to the man who is constantly racking his brains for ideas in order to advance the window trims?

In many cases, if the trimmer asks permission to purchase a few nickel stands, he is met by the merchant with a blank refusal. The merchant possibly thinks that as they have got along without them in the past that they can do without them in the future. These merchants do not realize that as their business advances so must the window trims. What is it makes the biggest impression on the public? The windows! Then, why is it these merchants cannot, or will not, see for themselves that they must encourage and not discourage the window-man. How many merchants are there to-day who will come to their window-trimmer and say: you did well? Is it for fear that the trimmer will ask for more pay? Perhaps so.

Would it not be much better for the merchant to have a chat with the window-trimmer now and again as to what to display, etc.? Give him reasonable time to plan and carry out his displays. Keep away from him while he is in the window. Tell him when he has put in a creditable display, and let him know directly or indirectly that you are perfectly satisfied with his work. Point out to him your idea, and if it conflicts with his, do not force him to carry out your idea, as he is supposed to know better what is required (if he doesn't he should not be there)

Lay aside a fund each year wherewith to carry out the window trims, and leave it to the trimmer's discretion what to purchase. If the trimmer knows his business he will use it economically and within the limit. Make him feel you have confidence in him. If every merchant followed out these suggestions I am sure the trimmer's lot would be made easier and it would give him greater encouragement to do his level best towards his employer's interests and the advancement of the business.

QUEEN'S BIRTHDAY WINDOWS.

The window of Mr. J. F. Clark's store, Port Hope, presented a very gay and patriotic appearance. Flags were innumerable, while pictures of Lord Roberts and Lord Kitchener were displayed. In the centre was a cannon with two soldiers keeping guard, the Canadian and the Irish Inniskilling, the latter only being distinguishable by his face. The dressing of the window was due to the good taste of Mr. James Clark.

The recent holidays did not pass unnoticed at Whitehead's store in Walkerton. One of the windows showed that somebody in that store possessed considerable originality. It was Empire Day, and the window looked like an armoury. There were eight or ten guns stacked up in the centre, as many swords, large portrait of Her Majesty draped in the national colors, and, back of all, the most attractive display of goods. The window attracted much attention.

A patriotic display made by A. & W. Wilson, Broad street, Victoria, B.C., is worthy of note. A stalwart soldier clad in khaki gazing with a fixed but very defiant expression was the central figure. His right arm was in a sling, while his left hand grasped a revolver. His rifle and several unexploded shells lay at his feet, while a little on one side was a very real-appearing representation of a cannon made from stove pipe. In his rear was the entrenchment, with the barrel of a rifle peeping through an aperture. Altogether, the arrangement was an excellent one, and as original as unique.

A FINE WINNIPEG WINDOW.

The gents' furnishing window, which is reproduced from a photo of a display in the N. R. Preston Co. Limited's store, Winnipeg, has a background of light blue and white-cheese-cloth, pleated and edged with light blue puffing. The diameter of circle is seven feet, and diameter of projection five feet. The projection is dished in the centre, and the display on same is of neckwear entirely, over a groundwork of white and light blue. At each side is a display of men's attire. This tasteful window was designed by Mr. W. Edwards, who does all his own lettering and sign writing.

Another window, showing millinery, proved one of the best ever placed in the store. The background and top were white cheesecloth, pleated and edged with pink, puffed. A harp in the centre was done in white puffing, edged with pink and backed by a revolving sunburst of heliotrope satin. Four large pillars with slab on top, and also an arch, were in white, edged with pink. The window was then filled in with a large basket of artificial flowers, trimmed hats and millinery-trimming materials. This proved most effective. Very few goods are required in a display of this character, and the same background and general arrangement may be used for showing many other lines of merchandise.

LACE FASHIONS ABROAD.

The latest novelties in fancy millinery laces are much sought after, says Nottingham advices to The Drapers' Record. Guipure and cluny nets, laces, and insertions are in favor, and there is a good demand for valenciennes of various kinds—Victoria laces, torchons, point de Paris, and malines. American and heavy warp goods sell freely at enhanced prices. The silk departments do not show much improvement. A few special lines are selling, but there is nothing like the former demand for these goods.

The machinery producing bobbin nets, fine tulle, and mosquito nets remains fully employed, and prices do not show any tendency to recede from the high level hitherto attained; in fact, if anything, they are inclined to go higher. Large quantities are required for export, and there is a fairly good demand for millinery purposes. Stiff foundation nets are very high, with a falling off in the inquiry for them.

Lace curtains, window blinds, antimacassors, and lappel scarves, are moving extensively. Finishers are full of work, large quantities of goods coming from outside places, and prices are higher all around.

Makers of fancy goods, such as caps, collarettes, aprons, blouses, ruffles, and other fancy articles are well engaged, and find employment for a large number of hands. A good business is being done in plain and fancy veilings. Prices are, however, brought to a minimum consequent on the strong competition. A moderate inquiry is experienced for Irish embroidery and everlasting embroidery trimmings. Honiton braids, beadings, and purls are in full average request in white, ecru and butter.

H. C. Cook, woollen buyer for the W. R. Brock Co., Toronto, was married at Brighton, Ont., May 28, to Miss Proctor, and the newly wedded pair left for England the following day. Mr. Cook makes his regular buying trip at this season. Before leaving Toronto he was presented by his colleagues on the staff with a handsome case of cutlery, and addresses of congratulation and good wishes were made by Messrs. Jermyn, Smallpeice and Catto.

NEW GOODS IN WHOLESALE TRADE.

THE W. R. BROCK CO., TORONTO.

THE W. R. Brock Co., Limited, Toronto, are showing a most complete and varied stock in their print department; comprising novelties in patterns, materials, finish and qualities, these are all meeting with a very ready sale, and as none of them can be repeated merchants interested should take an early opportunity of inspecting or writing for samples, which will be supplied promptly. In the same department they are also showing six qualities of black satanas just received, which, being very scarce in the trade, and in great demand, are selling rapidly.

During the month of June, in order to reduce stock and make room for Fall goods arriving in July, The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, Toronto, propose clearing out a number of odd lines at a very considerable reduction in price. Amongst these are included several ranges of prints, sateens, Canadian and Scotch zephyrs, linen suitings, tartan dress goods, fancy printed muslins, fancy dress goods, etc. All of these lines are new and purchased for this season, and comprise only small quantities of any one pattern or color, and all those who are likely to be interested should see them as early as possible, as they are sure to be picked up quickly.

In their dress goods department, The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, are showing a very large range of the newest styles in fancy blacks, which are meeting with great success, and a very ready sale. They have also lately received a shipment of cardinal, four shades, cashmeres, which are very scarce in the trade, and in good demand. Plain colored sedans are quite active, and of these they have five qualities and complete assortment of colors in each. Colored Japanese silks are asked for daily, and the company are able to supply the demand. Printed foulard silks are very desirable, and the three qualities they are showing cannot be surpassed for value or appearance.

The firm received about two weeks ago a clearing line of printed dress muslins, numbering a little over 1,500 pieces, and of these they have not 500 pieces left. The assortment of patterns and colors is still not badly broken, and it is, undoubtedly, the cheapest lot of the kind offering in the trade to-day; any requests for samples will be promptly attended to.

In linens, they have some interesting lines in cream and bleached damask tablings, napkins, towels and towellings, which can be bought to-day from them to great advantage. They are showing a 32-in. indigo and white, and black and white drill, a heavy domestic cloth, just the beau ideal for boys' summersuits, being a perfect washer and wears like wire. It has been hard to get deliveries, but now they can fill back orders and show a nice range for immediate delivery.

In decoration buntings for July 1, self colors are shown in every desirable shade, which are guaranteed to stand sun and weather—a full range of fancy stripes in a great variety of combinations of colorings. Tricolor buntings in four different cloths to fit every person's purse; plain and fancy styles both for inside and outside decoration. A special line to retail at 5c.; also a range of wool buntings in red, white and blue, and a big assortment of flags by the piece—Union Jacks, Canadians, etc.

They have just secured a few stock lines, which are nicely made and good lookers, to be sold at a tempting price. In bright-finish waist lining, an American cloth to retail at 25c. all staple and fancy shades has proved a quick seller.

Merchants requiring cashmere hosiery will not be fair to themselves if they do not inspect the samples of The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, Toronto, no matter whether they import direct in large quantities or not, as this company placed contracts two years ago for staple lines in plain and ribbed goods, both in hose and half-hose. Consequently, they are in a position to quote prices which will astonish close buyers.

Black and colored fringes are now getting very popular for dress trimmings. This firm have just opened out in black and all colors some of the newest goods at popular prices. They have also just opened out new arrivals in all-over laces and nets, bobbin nets, valenciennes laces and insertions, fancy cotton laces, chenille and plain spot, chiffon and silk gossamer veilings, featherstitch braids, fancy neck ribbons, including a large lot secured by Mr. B. B. Cronyn in the London market at a great sacrifice; red, white and blue ribbons in four widths, also belting.

In cream silk and taffetta gloves there is bound to be a famine, and the merchant who is short can send a post card to the W. R. Brock Co., Limited, Toronto, or inspect samples with their travelers.

As to embroideries, as everyone in the trade knows, they have advanced out of sight and further advances are said to be as sure as Roberts' advance to Pretoria. The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, are able to quote most interesting prices.

The month of June always creates a demand for parasols and sunshades. The assortment shown is all that can be desired, the handles being all the latest novelties and fads, the cloth durable and good value.

In men's furnishings, never have this firm shown such a large assortment of regatta and negligee shirts. They are offering them at interesting prices, having bought early. This also includes working shirts, overalls, smocks, etc., for which they placed orders, fully 3,000 dozen, in June, 1899, for Spring delivery. White shirts, dressed and undressed, can also be supplied on the same favorable terms. There is now in stock a full line of plain and fancy jerseys and sweaters for men and boys. The merchant should see that the municipal by-law, to prevent men and boys bathing in Nature's robe, is enforced. The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, have a supply of trunks and bathing suits, and you will find a good demand for them.

K. ISHIKAWA & CO.

K. Ishikawa & Co. now have in stock a good assortment of 20, 23 and 27-inch Japanese silks in all colors. They have just added a new stock of 23-inch goods in all the latest colorings. Their black and white silk stocks are now complete, as they have received two shipments from Lyons, France. They state that sales of black and white silks have materially increased since Easter, and that they have sold an unusual quantity of white and black Habutai silks. Their stocks of tuscan, the leading millinery color, is well assorted in different grades. This firm have also received a shipment of khaki silks from Yokohama, which will be very suitable for blouse and dress purposes. Fancy corded stripes and plaids are included in this new lot.

THE COMING SEASON.

MERCHANTS are naturally anxious to know beforehand what the tendencies are likely to be both in style and in price. We have had a conversation with a careful buyer, of long experience, who crosses the ocean always twice a year and whose opinions strike us as well worthy of reproduction. He spoke very candidly on the subject of price. He pointed out that the Canadian buyer must not allow himself to be affected too much by any reports of diminished prices for high-class wools at the English sales. The Canadian buyer, he pointed out, was not being asked to pay for the finished fabric anything like the price which the wool quotations would justify the wool manufacturers in asking. In other words, the market could still sag a little without the slightest effect being produced on the market for made materials. Some English authorities, he went on, believe that the May wool sales would show a return to December prices, others again anticipated a slight decrease, but a well-posted man on wool felt positive that prices, after the May sales, would stiffen and remain firm at least until the end of 1900.

The Bradford trade has been very fair this season, and dress goods manufacturers are well pleased with their sales to the Canadian market, for, although our market is a small one, there can be no doubt that the lower rate of duty is going to considerably augment the exports of the new fabrics to Canada. These new materials, for instance, which are being made from colonial cross-bred wools, are not only fashionable abroad, but are likely to do well here.

"In London, in the West End shops and in the parks, it is tweed effects everywhere. I noticed in fashionable places like Peter Robinson's, Swan & Edgar's, Jay's, and other places of that kind, that tailor-made costumes run mostly to tweed effects, which are, of course, mostly seen in the new pastel shades. One of Robinson's windows, for instance, was a Wedgewood window. The word Wedgewood was brought out in the same effect that is shown in the famous china of that name, and the whole window was a mass of blue of that particular shade. But the pastel shades, fashionable as they are for high-class and city trade, cannot rule in this market to the same extent as they would in centres of fashion like London and Paris. Speaking of Paris, what strikes a Canadian buyer is the startling and bright fabrics now being shown, such as zibelines, which you will find in all sorts of combinations, in enormous checks, etc. The less pronounced of these fine goods will probably make their way to Canada, but the more brilliant patterns would never do here. These fabrics are of the camel's hair variety. The more hairy the effect, apparently, the more popular, and they are quite heavy enough in weight for Canadian Autumn and Winter trade, providing the pattern suits. They are made both in plain and fancies. If one can predict in exact words the general trend of affairs it will be both a plain and fancy season. I think fancies are recovering their ground and that next Spring it is quite possible they may resume their former position. As to color, you see cardinal everywhere, and it is quite possible that cardinal, or some other shade of red with a new name, will be the prevailing color for next Autumn and Winter. I would be disposed to rank blue, purple, etc., after red in the order of precedence. Green seems to have subsided for the present."

We learn from the same authority that the linen market has been extraordinarily firm and that Canadian buyers, except in a very few instances, have been unable to get their favorite lines repeated at old prices. This is deemed due to the great scarcity of flax. One Canadian buyer told our authority that he had been trying to buy some Russian crash and was assured that if he wanted any it had better be bought at once, as there would be none in the market next season, because the Russian peasants who make it found they could do better by selling their flax this year than making it into material, and, in consequence, very little would be produced.

PROTEST FROM THE WOOLLEN MEN.

DURING the past month, two deputations representing the Canadian woollen manufacturers have waited upon the Dominion Government at Ottawa with reference to the duties on woollens.

On July 1, the new preferential clause of the tariff takes effect, reducing the duty on all British woollen goods to 23½ per cent. This, the Canadian manufacturers feel, is an inadequate duty considering the present state of the industry and the prospects of competition from low-class British fabrics made largely of shoddy. This class of stuff is not produced in Canada, the machinery and labor in use not being adapted to its production. It is not, in fact, considered a class of material which should be used, because the quality is poor and the fabric not durable. It is against the shoddy goods, and not the finer classes of woollen fabrics made in such perfection in Great Britain, that our manufacturers protest.

The advent, during the past 20 years, of cheap, durable Canadian tweeds made a revolution in the clothing trade. Formerly our clothing manufacturers imported cheap shoddy fabrics which put the clothing industry on a certain basis. To-day that is changed. Our clothing-makers are using durable Canadian cloths and their clothing is in much vogue and of excellent standard.

The woollen industry in Canada is an important one. There are said to be $15,000,000 of capital invested in it, and the number of people employed in the various mills throughout Canada is about 12,000. Upon the invested capital, it is said, not more than 2 per cent. has been earned for years past. Internal competition, as everyone knows, has been severe, and any combination to maintain prices has been impossible. The welfare and maintenance of this industry is purely a business question, and from that standpoint alone it should be dealt with.

The Government, it is understood, decline to move from their intention to apply the extra preference to the woollen industry, which may suffer in consequence.

LONG HOURS AND QUICK SHIPMENTS.

The strike of the cartage companies' employes in Toronto during the past month has drawn forth some criticism of the long hours which the men complained of. They said it was long after 6 o'clock in the evening before they could get their drays loaded up at the various wholesale houses, so that by the time they reached the freight sheds and discharged their loads half the evening was gone. Those who are aware of how business is conducted at wholesale warehouses in the city know fully well that it is no fault of the firms in question if work is not promptly suspended. These concerns, as a body, set a notable example in the matter of short hours to employes. In shipping goods, however, they are dependent entirely upon the hour at which their customers come into the warehouse to buy. One merchant will visit the wholesale warehouses in the morning, complete his purchases, and the parcel is easily despatched the same day. Another merchant will keep going around the warehouses the best portion of the day, and then, about 4 o'clock p.m., he will fix upon his choice, and demand that the goods be despatched without fail that night. Then, there is always the disposition amongst travelers to promise goods at the earliest possible date. This is right enough. But it means that the wholesale houses are detained very often to a late hour in obliging out-of-town customers.

EFFECT OF A FAILURE.

MANY traders seem to be unable to grasp the real significance of the recent failure of Price, McCormack & Co. at New York. Because the firm in question were largely interested in raw cotton, they assume that their difficulties will be apt to affect the actual market price of the product.

There is absolutely no ground for this reasoning. The insolvent firm were brokers, who were dealing speculatively in cotton, and, far from their trouble leading to a drop in the market, one of the main reasons for their failure was the fact that they were heavily short of the market, and found it impossible to cover their contracts before the price had run up to a figure which caused their suspension.

As a matter of fact, speculative dealings on the Stock Exchange, for strong reasons, cannot affect the price of cotton for some time to come. Chief in this respect is the absolute unreliability of any estimate of the new crop until the end of November at the very least. Accordingly, prices in regard to new crop of raw are largely guesswork, and can have little or no bearing on the market for the finished material until information of a definite character is available.

Then, all reports agree that the mills not only in the United States, but in England, have orders booked ahead for cotton fabrics for at least four months, and everything points to the maintenance of stability in values.

BRITISH GENEROSITY.

The interest and concern shown by British houses in the disastrous fire at Ottawa last month is very gratifying to the people of Canada. The calamity has been a very serious one, but its features have been alleviated by the generosity and kindness of the people all over the British Empire.

For example, the great English silk manufacturers, Lister & Co., Limited, have written to their Canadian agents, H. L. Smyth & Co., in the following terms:

"We were extremely sorry to hear of the disastrous fire in Ottawa, and, as the mayor of Bradford has opened a fund in aid of the sufferers, we have shown our sympathy in a practical manner by subscribing £100." This handsome donation is a practical evidence of the real sympathy felt by Englishmen towards our Canadian people.

Thomas Adams & Co., Limited, of Nottingham, who are also represented in Canada by H. L. Smyth & Co., have given £100 sterling to the Ottawa Relief Fund. This is gratifying proof that the sympathy of the Old Country expresses itself in something more practical than words.

THE EXCHEQUER COURT CASE.

WE consider the settlement of the case of the Crown vs. Fitzgibbon, Schafheitlin & Co. a serious mistake. Due regard must be had, of course, to the opinions of the judge and the legal advisor of the Crown (the Deputy-Minister of Justice), who appear to have thought the settlement a satisfactory one.

From the legal standpoint their views may be sound, but we have also to consider such matters as these from a much broader view; namely, as a matter of public policy and of the highest commercial morality. It may be right enough for lawyers to give weight to considerations of cost, of time, of the uncertainties of proof, etc., but the commercial community believe that where fraud is charged in Customs cases the question should go into open court and be carried on to the end.

A Government is not in the same position as a private litigant. It is not obliged to stop a lawsuit for monetary reasons. A man often submits to injustice, because to fight it out would run him in law costs. Not so a Government. In this case the honest importers had a right to count upon the proceedings being carried on until the whole evidence came out and the full penalty could be either inflicted, or not, as the facts would warrant.

As the question stands now, we do not find that the result has given satisfaction to anyone. The following view of The Montreal Gazette may be said to voice the trade feeling:

The arrangement of the case of Fitzgibbon, Schafheitlin & Co., which has been taking the time of the Exchequer Court this week, will not do what counsel claimed—"meet the ends of justice and be satisfactory to all persons concerned." Not for years has any legal case attracted in mercantile circles the attention drawn to this. The amount which the revenue would appear to have been defrauded out of was of less consequence than the trade interest in having the example made of those guilty of obtaining through Customs undervaluation an improper advantage over their competitors. Considerations of broadest policy required that the case should have been pushed to a conclusion, whatever it might be.

STOCKS AS SECURITY.

THE bank suspensions of last Summer have suggested the wisdom of amending the existing Canadian Act, and a bill is now going through the House of Commons with that object in view. The measure is one that should receive the attention of all commercial men, who are much interested in banking legislation of any kind.

Some suggestions were made in committee which interest woollen manufacturers as well as others. It was pointed out that banks now can, and do, make advances on goods in a maker-up's hands that the manufacturer has not been paid for. There is no official record of this transaction that the manufacturer can get at. If the customer happens to become insolvent the bank claims the goods as security, and the manufacturer is out.

It was pointed out that a clause might be inserted in the banking law by which the bank in such cases should be obliged to notify the original vendor, so that he would know the financial position of his customer. This does not seem an unreasonable proposition. Supposing the boot was on the other leg, and the manufacturer could seize a bank's security without the bank being able to know of it, would there not be a demand for a change? The suggestion was also made that in such cases the original vendor could pay off the bank and take its place as holder of the security. The first proposal was offered as an amendment in committee by Mr. B. Rosamond, M.P. for North Lanark, who thoroughly understands the whole question. The committee, however, did not adopt the motion.

It does not appear that any single commercial interest has the weight with Governments that the banking interest has. The latter is, without doubt, a very able and valuable factor in our financial system, and its well-being is a matter of concern to all. But that is no reason why the merchant and manufacturer should not also secure a fair hearing from Parliament when amendments to the existing law are under consideration.

BRITISH IMPORTS BACKWARD.

The fact that the new tariff goes into effect on July 1 is having a deterrent effect on the importations of British goods at Montreal. All the houses that can do so are only bringing out what goods they are actually compelled to bring in, as they naturally want to get the benefit of the three per cent. additional that the new scale of duties on British goods is equivalent to. This condition of affairs is likely to prevail throughout June also. Montreal travelers, it may also be remarked, will go out on the 1st of June with samples of Fall goods.

MAY TRADE IN MONTREAL.

According to the Montreal houses, the movement of business has been seriously interfered with by the cold, unseasonable weather that has prevailed throughout May. At many points in Ontario and Quebec, according to mail advices, stocks of Summer stuffs have not been broken into at all, whereas this time last year trade was progressing quite actively. This backward condition is also reported to a great extent in the Maritime Provinces, but in Manitoba, the Northwest and the Pacific Coast business has been, if anything, more active than it was last year. It is satisfactory to note, however, that payments in May were very good, all the Montreal houses called on reporting returns of from 80 to 85 per cent. which is quite a high average.

ONE AGENCY FOR LINEN THREAD.

Before the end of the present year it is understood that all linen thread sold in Canada will have to be bought through one agency in Montreal. This decision on the part of the British Linen Thread Combine naturally means that several well-known Canadian manufacturers' agents will lose their linen thread business. The intention of the syndicate, which has recently bought out all the British linen thread factories, is to sell their goods under the same system as cotton thread. There is to be a central agency with a Canadian manager, and travelers covering all districts in Canada.

Hat, Cap and

Fur Trade.

The Canadian Trade.

Now that warm weather has come the sales of Summer headgear will come with a rush, as so far retail trade has been moderately active. The straw hat is in favor this season, as can be seen by the number already worn. According to importers, good orders have been placed for black stiff hats for Fall trade, and fair orders for colored hats.

The Canadian manufacturers are showing Fall styles modelled after both English and American shapes, embodying some of the features of both. One complaint made by large hat dealers is that the Canadian makers do not show a sufficient range of prices. The Canadian hat is usually neither a very cheap nor a very expensive one, but of moderate price, and, on this account, it is claimed by some, they miss some trade they might otherwise do, because in actual values and finish no complaint can be made.

The Situation in Furs.

There is a lull, for the moment, in the upward tendency of skins, and shrewd Canadian buyers are watching the situation closely to see what it portends. It is doubted in some quarters whether prices of skins will go higher, and one buyer reports that in a specific case he paid a small advance for astrakhans, where the European holder wanted a very large advance. The Canadian buyer stood firm, however, and finally got the stuff at a reasonable advance. It is, therefore, questionable whether the small dealer will find it safe to load up too heavily with skins at the present high figures, when, by waiting, he may take less risk. But he is the best judge of his own local trade, however, and doubtless knows how much he can handle. With a continuance of prosperous times in Canada this Fall, no doubt the fur trade in garments will be excellent.

Pelagic Sealing Catch.

The Canadian seal fishery in the Pacific Ocean, in the season of 1899, according to the official reports just issued by the Canadian Government, was of so successful a nature as to warrant the authorities at Ottawa in protesting against the adoption of stricter precautions in connection with the seals of Behring Sea.

The total Behring Sea fleet of 1899 consisted of 26 vessels, representing 1,894 tons register, with crews of 213 white men and 587 Indians, with 68 boats and 285 canoes, and the total catch was 34,454 skins, augmented by an Indian catch of 892 on the coast. This total Canadian seal catch of 35,346 is larger than that of 1897 and 1898 when 41 and 35 vessels, respectively, were engaged in it.

Of the 26 vessels engaged in the industry last year, 20 operated on the British Columbian and Alaskan coasts, while these same 20 and others operated in Behring Sea, and only one on the Asiatic side.

The coast catch was 10,471, the Behring Sea catch 23,284, the Asiatic catch 689 and the Indian catch 892.

From 1892 to 1896 there was an average of over 60 vessels annually engaged in the sealing business. In 1896, 64 vessels secured only 53,234 skins, whereas in 1891 51 vessels secured 50,437. In 1897 the fleet dropped to 41 vessels, securing 29,342 seals, and in 1899, as already stated, 26 vessels secured 34,454 skins, exclusive of the Indian and shore catch. The statistics show that in the whole history of the Canadian pelagic sealing business the average catch per vessel of the year 1899 has been surpassed only twice, namely, in 1890 and 1894, and in no other year has it been at all closely approached. In 1890 the average catch was 1,357 per vessel, in 1894 it was 1,533, and in 1899 it was 1,325. The phenomenal catch of 1894 was principally taken on the Asiatic side, and its high average cannot, therefore, be attributed to what has been called the Pribyloff herd of seals. Nowadays the sealers have almost ceased exploiting the Asiatic waters, and are confining themselves to the North-American waters of the north Pacific Ocean.—New York Cloaks and Furs.

Australian Fur Skins.

With reference to Australian furs, Wilcox's Review of recent date contains several interesting particulars. It states that rabbit skins, which have been on the downward grade as to price during the last few months, with the approach of Winter are taking a turn for the better, and fairly high rates may be looked for, especially as supplies are likely to be small from New South Wales.

The skins which interest the Australian fur trade most are kangaroo and wallaby skins, sheepskins, opossum, rabbit and bear. The report states that moderate supplies of grey kangaroo and wallaby are available, and that Queensland is supplying a fairly large quantity of reds. The prices of these skins show no present upward tendency, as they have to be exceedingly well taken care of to fetch high prices. Only very large kargaroos with skins weighing seven pounds per dozen and upwards, and wallaby of four pounds per dozen and upwards, should be shot, while the animal should be killed by either ball ammunition or trapping.

Electricity in Hat Making.

Following the perfected process of forming, the work of making a finished hat consists of alternately sprinkling and ironing the felt, at the same time shaping it to the form of a finished hat. It is in these processes of shaping and ironing that the electrically-heated tools have been found of such great advantage. In the factory of The Berge Co., New Jersey, a plant for utilizing electricity in hat-making has been installed.

The installation is one in which a combination is made of electrical and other systems of heating and power transmission, so as to enable the greatest possible utilization of all the heat units of the coal burned under the boilers. The power plant consists of three boilers, each of 225 horse-power capacity, and a main engine of the Corliss type, of 420 horse-power. A supplementary engine of 75 horse-power is directly coupled to a direct current dynamo of 50 kilowatt capacity, while a larger dynamo of 150 kilowatts is belted from a shaft driven by the main engine. An elaborate system of hot-water heating is installed all over the factory.

The machines for pouncing or grinding off the surface of the finished hats with fine sandpaper, for drying, shaving, ironing, curling the brims and sewing hats, are all driven by electric motors from the main current supply. About 800 incandescent lamps and 20 arc lamps are also attached to the same mains, while over 300 electrically-heated tools are also fed from the electric current supply. So accurately has the balance been established between the power supplied and the heat demanded that the exhaust of the engines is used the year around in heating water-drying furnaces, etc., and the heating of the building itself during the Winter is accomplished by means of live steam from the boiler.

The manufacture of stiff or derby hats is practically identical with that of soft felt hats, except that at a certain stage when the felt has been given its finished form it is saturated with an alcoholic solution of shellac, dried and baked at a high temperature. This produces the hard, elastic form of felt which is so familiarly known. Electric heating has also been applied with great success to the manufacture of straw hats.—New York Electrical Review.

A Hatters' Union.

The convention of the United Hatters of North America, in session at the University Settlement building, New York, reelected the officers that have been at the head of the organization for the last four years. Secretary Phillips has held his office for 20 years.

The convention decided to hold conventions once in three years, instead of once in four years.

The national assessment of one-half of one per cent. was increased to one per cent.; one half of the amount is to be laid aside as a defence fund, to be used in cases of strikes, turnouts, lockouts, etc. One hundred and fifty dollars was denoted to the striking cigarmakers of New York City.

It was decided to keep a certain number of men on the road, traveling from point to point, agitating in favor of the union label.—N.Y. Hat Review.

A Good Sealing Season.

With the return of the last sealing schooners to British Columbian ports from seal-fishing in the Pacific waters, complete reports of coast-hunting are secured. The total catch for 34 schooners was 15 000 skins. Last year's total was 10,472, with but 19 vessels engaged. There have been no serious mishaps this season, and owners are so confident of good prices that all will ship to England, taking chances on the results of the big London sales.

NEW GOODS IN WHOLESALE TRADE.

JOHN MACDONALD & CO.

JOHN MACDONALD & CO. report that the May trade in carpets has been very good, and that travelers are now on the road with their new range for Fall. Imported goods will be delivered in July and Canadian goods in June. The Fall range contains several novelties in each price, and is, on the whole, superior to last year's; not so large, but more select. The department is showing a large range of linoleums bought for Fall at the old prices, a quantity of which are already to hand. Their present stock of linoleums is well assorted, from the cheapest to the newest inlaid.

In Swiss curtains, quilts and covers the stock is fully assorted, repeats of all their popular selling numbers of lace curtains having been made at the old prices, notwithstanding the 25 per cent. advance in these goods.

In Summer underwear, John Macdonald & Co. are conducting a big sale at present of every kind and quality for men. This includes balbriggans, merino, natural wool, mercerized cotton and plain union. Every line is shown at the old prices, and there is a full range as to size, quality and price. A big sale of black cotton half-hose with natural wool feet is now going on, and the trade will find an inquiry of value to them. A big range of handkerchief ties for ladies is being shown. A new special line of bathing suits in blue, with balbriggan finish, is one of the current attractions.

The range of belt buckles in enamel, jet, gilt, steel, etc., and pulley belts is very large; the latter are shown in silk, satin and leather. Mercerized cotton handkerchiefs, hem-stitched, with small Union Jacks on the border are very good for present trade when the patriotic feeling is on.

The dress goods department of John Macdonald & Co. is showing a splendid range of pique and welts, plain and figured, to retail at popular prices. A line of piques, to retail at 10c., can be had. Also a range of embroidery and insertions, a supplementary shipment of which was received not long ago. A job line of embroidery all-overs, which are so much in demand this season, are now being sold. A further shipment of valenciennes lace and insertions has been received.

In silks, the house are showing a magnificent range of Summer silks in plains and stripes, for blouses, etc., to retail at 50c. A further shipment has been received of white and cream Japanese silks which are always scarce goods when the warm weather sets in. The stock of Summer-weight cashmere hose is complete. Mention is also made of the range of prices in black and white satins, plain and figured, taffeta silks in white and cream, which are all the rage in New York for blouses; also a special line of white lawn blouses trimmed with white insertion, to retail at $1. There is a complete range of white and cream taffeta gloves.

In woollens, a number of clearing lines, of great interest to the trade, are as follows: 54 inch tweed suitings, 54 inch blue and black serge, 27 inch Canadian tweeds, several 27-inch colored italians and 40-inch fancy silesias, and several clearing lines in fancy worsted trouserings. Regarding Fall trade, orders to date are fully up to last season, and the firm are showing a large range in fancy worsted suitings and trouserings in Scotch, English, and Canadian goods. Also a range of Belwarp stripes, suitable either for trouserings or suitings. The range of overcoatings comprises the newest fabrics in naps, meltons, beavers, and grey chevots. Quite a feature in this trade now are ladies' costume fabrics, and a large range is being shown in homespun effects, cheviot makes; also plain boxcloths and broadcloths. For ladies' mantles, a large range of beavers and curl serges and black figured effects are shown. For ladies' skirtings, a nice range of checks and 54-inch colored friezes is being shown. The new khaki shade in serges and worsteds, either in ladies or men's wear, can be had.

WYLD-DARLING CO., LIMITED.

In their staple department Wyld-Darling Co., Limited, are offering some extra good values. They have a special line of black brocaded mercerized sateens; also plain and twill sateens to retail at 25 and 30c. In light-ground Summer prints and navy and red drillets, they are showing a big range of choice goods. They have some grey and white cottons for present delivery at prices which cannot be offered more than a month. In shirtings, two lines are shown at old values which will only be maintained while present stocks last.

In the woollen department, a large business is being done in light materials in light colors in worsteds and homespuns, which are preferred to linen and duck by shrewd buyers, as they are porous, which is not the case with the latter goods when starched. There is also a steady demand for blue serges in light weights and light shades.

In the dress goods and curtains department, the demand for lace curtains is specially good. They have in stock at present a large and well-assorted range, including some excellent values to retail at 25c., 35c., 50c., 75c., $1 and upwards. The dress goods in present request are Victoria lawns, spot muslins, organdie muslins, India linens, nainsook muslins, etc. Black lustres are selling freely, both in plain and figured. In coating and pirlle twill serges, in navies and blacks, they are showing some exceedingly good values. The principal feature of the linen department is linen crash suitings suitable for skirts. These goods were very popular last year, and are likely to be much used again this Summer. They are shown in tints and natural colors, and in plain and fancy weaves. In this department there is also a magnificent range of samples of fancy handkerchiefs for Christmas trade. These were bought last November at 15 per cent. below last year's prices. The sales of these goods to date have been exceptionally large. In fancy linens, a large range of 5-o'clock tea covers, sideboard drapes, tray covers, pillow shams, etc., are offered at prices of interest to early buyers.

In the smallwares department, many specials are offering. In ladies' collars the great seller of the season is the "LX," a stock shape, scooped in front, being comfortable and of stylish appearance. A job line of chiffon bows is offered in assorted colors to retail at 20c. Lace ties are the fad this season, the most popular being lines to sell at 25 to 50c. each. Some exceptional values are offered in Hermsdorf dye, full-fashioned cotton hose, to retail at 25 and 50c. Two of the most popular lines are No. 20, black, with Maco split soles, and No. 30, black, with natural wool split soles, both to retail at 25c. The latter line is meeting with great favor. In cashmere hosiery this firm are still able to offer their customers values below the market, as they placed large contracts before the advances. Their most popular lines are Nos. 35, 37 and 72, all of which have extra spliced knees.

In ladies' underwear, their stock is completely assorted in all prices, to retail at from 5 to 25c., with half sleeves or sleeveless. In fancy goods, their pulley belts, pulley buckles and dog-collar belts are having a big run. In ribbons, black velvets, with either cotton or satin backs, are selling freely.

IDEAS FOR SUMMER TRADE.

IN furnishings for Summer houses everything must be durable to withstand the wear and tear that comes during the Summer more than during the other seasons of the year. And lastly, as many of the furnishings as possible must possess the qualification of being good washers, because of the dust.

Dainty embroideries and filmy laces are totally out of place in the Summer cottage. One of the imported novelties for use during the Summer combines the three essentials. It is an embroidered table cover. The material used is thick bolton cloth that much resembles unbleached sheeting, only it is heavier and firmer. On it is traced the design of a conventionalized sunflower, with leaves and scrolls, the total effect being decidedly Oriental. The flower used in the design varies in different cloths, just as do the colors used in the embroidery. The colors are but three, a deep red, a navy blue and a cadet blue. One table cover may be embroidered in the red alone, another in the darker shade of blue alone, or even in the lighter shade. Most of them show combinations of these colors. The work is all done by Hungarian peasant women, who have for years been in the habit of fashioning these cloths for their own use. Now they are proving acceptable for cosy corners as well as for Summer houses. Every detail of the work is done by hand, from the tracing of the pattern to the putting on of the cotton embroidery.—Upholstery Trade Review.

CANADIAN WALL PAPER IN THE UNITED STATES.

We notice the following in Wall Paper News, of New York, with regard to a well-known firm: "The Watson, Foster Co., Limited, of Montreal, Canada, had a very successful season; no dried color boxes, no material for which they had not immediate use. Meritorious designs, and a straightforward, business-like treatment of its clients have placed the company among the most progressive manufacturers of wall papers, and the line offered last season was phenomenally large, containing 136 new designs, selected and colored with judgment and ability. It was a strong line, full of character and individuality. The equipment of The Watson, Foster Co. is such that an export business is necessary to fully employ it, which is one reason why they are friendly invaders of the American market, where the line has been offered with results that seem to have been satisfactory to the company and their customers this side of the line.

"The management promise a strong line for 1901, and look for larger sales and a higher average. An increase in the staff on this side of the line is in prospect."

ALL ALIKE.

If you wish to sell goods, you must, of course, appeal to the selfish interest of your customers. Show them how to make money and you interest them. Show them the goods that they feel that their customers require and must have, and you are sure of good fat orders. This has been the principle acted upon by Messrs. Geo. H. Hees, Son & Co., who offer to their customers quick-selling goods, the pick of the market, and their customers find it to their interest to handle goods that are either manufactured or controlled by them. Messrs. Hees, Son & Co.'s travelers are now starting out for Fall orders, and to let their travelers show you their lines would probably be the means of your placing orders with them. They manufacture a large line of goods that afford to the retailer large profits. See their advertisement on page 43.

MATTINGS ARE NOW STAPLE GOODS.

The trade in Japanese mattings continues to grow. There are two houses in Toronto which make a special feature of importing Japanese and Chinese mattings, R. J. Mitchell and K. Ishikawa & Co. The latter house inform THE REVIEW that the call for these goods this season has been considerably larger than ever before. A number of wholesale houses also carry mattings, and have done a very satisfactory trade in them this year. The use of these goods has, in fact, been so extended that now well-to-do people use mattings for their houses for the Summer, while for general use they are growing in favor. They can well be counted a staple article in the carpet business, and dry goods and carpet houses should all carry a range of them.

THE CARPET TRADE IN THE UNITED STATES.

In its reference to the Autumn trade in carpets, The New York Carpet Trade Review remarks, "The Fall lines of tapestries, velvets, moquettes, etc., will be ready for buyers May 28. Prices are firm and advances are probable in some grades.

"Some of the manufacturers of brussels and wiltons and all the ingrain makers have their new lines on view now.

"The Fall price list of Lowell extra supers is 57½ cents, and the Fall prices of Hartford and best Philadelphia makes of extra supers will, doubtless, show a relative increase.

"The Fall season opens later than usual and this seems to suit the trade, the general opinion being that it has hitherto begun too early. This year the backwardness of retail business has also had much influence toward delaying the opening.

"Whatever ideas buyers may entertain through present conditions of retail trade may as well be dismissed from their minds, for they cannot affect the price situation. That is due to the increased cost of making goods. Manufacturers were kept very busy last season supplying the demand for goods, but the prices secured were far too low to be satisfactory. Now at the opening of a new season they are compelled to recognize in their price lists the higher cost of all the raw materials used in the making of floor coverings."

IN THE MONTREAL DISTRICT.

The popularity of the warehouse and offices of Messrs. Geo. H. Hees, Son & Co., at No. 43 St. Sacrament street, Montreal, is shown by the constantly increasing business done there. This warehouse was established for the convenience of dealers in upholstery goods, lace curtains, etc., so that their orders could be filled promptly right on the ground. And, furthermore, as their new upholstery plant at Valleyfield is in such close proximity to Montreal, and, as new ideas in goods are being constantly put upon the market, it is the right thing

If any of our eastern readers who are interested in the various lines of goods manufactured by Messrs. Geo. H. Hees, Son & Co. have not already visited their warehouse at 43 St. Sacrament street, we recommend them to do so.

A NEW PURCHASE.

The Excelsior Stamping and Plating Co., of Richmond street, Toronto, have just sold their plant and business to Geo. H. Hees, Son & Co. It was only a few months ago that Geo. H. Hees, Son & Co. purchased The Flock Metal Co.'s business, and now these two plants are to be merged into their already extensive metal-manufacturing business. The metal plant of Geo. H. Hees, Son & Co. manufacture curtain pole trimmings, picture hooks, stair plates, drapery pins, shade pulls and many other metal goods that are connected with their business. If our readers have not already one of Geo. H. Hees, Son & Co.'s illustrated catalogues, they should write for one.

TRADE IN ENGLAND.

A Kidderminster report of May 20 says: "Carpet manufacturers are busy, and the demand covers all makes and qualities; in no case is business slack, and in places it is very brisk. The local yarn trade is hardly so busy as the carpet trade, spinners having just about enough to do without being at all pressed. The demand for hosiery yarns is very good, and that for clothing yarns is fair. In carpet yarns consumption is considerable, but new business comes in slowly—so slowly that prices are not at all tested."

NOTES.

The Ontario Legislature, at its recent session, passed the bill authorizing the loan of $10,000 by the town of Milton, Ont., to the Port Hope Carpet Co.

Sherbrooke has passed a by-law discharging the mortgage held upon the Dominion Brussels Carpet Co., Limited, as the factory has been sold to English capitalists, who will enlarge the plant and greatly increase the operations of the company.

Mr. Herbert Bright, of John Bright & Brothers, carpet manufacturers, Rochdale, Eng., is visiting the Canadian markets.

NEW CANADIAN PATTERNS.

Mr. Cochrane, representing The Colonial Bleaching and Printing Co., Limited, has shown the trade this last month a new line of colored cottons just turned out for the market by this company. The lines include fancy tartan flannels, kopje flannels, flannel suiting, salisburys, foulards and a line of flags and buntings. The patterns are the most striking and artistic which have ever been shown in this market, and the trade are delighted with them. Large orders have been placed, and there can be no doubt that a large sale will follow amongst retail dealers. The prices are the same as those of similar materials made by the other mills in Canada so that there is no disposition to cut prices.

ACTION ABANDONED.

The action brought by Levison Bros., of New York, against the chairman of the dry goods section of the Toronto Board of Trade (Mr. John Macdonald), and the secretary of the section (Mr. Edgar Wills) has been dropped.

COBOURG, ONT.

EDITOR DRY GOODS REVIEW,—We enclose copies of some of our ads. as well as a couple of reading ads. (and comment by editor on window display). The latter was voluntary. We have found these reading ads. draw a good deal of attention. What do you think of them, and ad. matters?

Yours truly,

HEWSON & CO.,

Per A. J. H.

HERE is one of the Hewson advertisements and a pretty good one it is: There are, however, two faults in its get up. In the first place it occupies too much space; that is,

Direct From Japan.

WE hunt the world over, like the biggest of the big fellows, for the goods that will suit our trade. In this way we get things right, and we get them a season in advance of buyers with less enterprise and industry. We now have invoices, and are expecting to arrive to day or to-morrow, a consignment of Japanese Art Squares direct from Japan. Our Chinese and Japanese Mattings are already to hand, and the designs are new and exclusive. What you get here is not to be had in every shop that you visit. These goods are very seasonable and fit in with our large stock of Curtains, Furniture Coverings, Curtain Muslins, Cretonnes, and the many other lines of goods so much in demand at the beginning of house-cleaning.

A few particulars will interest you.

MATTINGS are 25c., 30c., 35c., 40c., and 45c. a yard. 40 yards in piece, but will cut any length. Quality above regular values. The new blues and greens are pictures.

ART SQUARES Different sizes, prices run from $5, $7.50, $10.50, $15.00.

LACE CURTAINS

Spring imports. Prices per pair, 25c., 50c., 75c., $1, $1.35, $1.50, $2 and up to $4.50. Never had such values before.

Millinery Opening

still in full swing. Everybody delighted. Come early.

HEWSON & CO.

"If you get it at Hewson's, it's Pretty and Stylish."

it is not "closed up" enough. The headline, "Direct From Japan," is somewhat misleading, as not even half of the goods enumerated are Japanese. Besides these two faults, I am inclined to unfavorably criticize the use of a border in an advertisement the size of this one of Hewson's. The typographical display is good and the advertisement is quite striking enough without a border, and the space occupied by the border could have been saved.

The reading advertisements referred to are also good—away ahead of the average. I herewith reproduce a portion of one of them. I have no doubt that the women of Cobourg read both of these "readers" as well as Hewson & Co.'s other advertisements with much interest and profit both to themselves and Hewson. I judge that these reading notices would have been quite as effectual as well as much more business-like if there had not been any attempt to make it appear that they were the production of the editor. Any newspaper fortunate enough to have a large advertising patronage doubtless find that its advertising pages are as interesting to buyers of goods as are the news pages or the editorial section. In other words, the news of the stores properly presented is more read and studied than the news of the day, so called. For my part, I fully believe that the great majority of the women of any given locality do, or can be made to, take a much greater interest in how they are to spend their money to the best advantage than in either the news columns or the editorial columns of the local newspapers. Most of the goods sold retail, nowadays, are bought by women. Not one woman in perhaps 1,000, residing in Cobourg and

Hewson's Millinery Opening

AN EVENT OF GREAT INTEREST TO THE LADIES.

If anything were needed to banish thoughts of winter, the beautiful display of Spring Millinery that the ladies have been crowding Hewson's store during the past week, to view, must have had that effect most completely. Lovely women, eager salespeople, smiling, obliging proprietors, piles of silks, flowers, velvets, feathers, ribbons, trimmed hats and bonnets—ornaments, laces, buckles, pins and what not—all these spoke of spring in its freshness and beauty, and said good bye to the long and dreary winter. Year by year millinery materials appear to become more elaborate, and at Hewson's they appear to possess a genius for selecting from the immense varieties which the manufacturers show, the goods that are artistic and beautiful, and to do so with so much judgment as to make the most harmonious and tasteful combinations. Their richly beautiful display of pattern hats this spring gives expectant buyers a hint of the possibilities contained in the materials with which Miss O'Dell is surrounded in such great and novel profusion. In hats, the demand for the early trade will be strong in the line of turbans and toques, the Spanish turban being the favorite model. Toques are rather larger and will be worn more on the face than usual. Sailors are a trifle higher in the crown and slightly wider in the brim. Tam crowns are in children's goods, and some of the fancy shapes have a fluted or pleated brim of straw showing two colors. The tints in straw goods are very beautiful, and the Leghorn for dress wear will be very popular. The variety of trimmings is extensive, including straw braids, all-over nets, malines, mousseline de soie, horsehair, sequins, sequin spanglet nets, etc. * * * Altogether, Messrs. Hewson & Co. have reason to be proud of their Spring Opening, and it is no flattery to say that the people of Cobourg have equal reason to be proud of such an establishment as this. The opening has not been confined to millinery, but includes also a superb stock of spring dress goods, dress and house silks, satins, and all the various lines which go to make up the equipment of a dry goods house that leads in fashion and rivals the best city stores in the style and taste of its buying. The importance of such an emporium to a summer resort like Cobourg cannot well be over-estimated, and the ladies of the town are to be congratulated upon the proof that their patronage gives that they are proud of it. If you have not already been in, take the advice of THE SENTINEL-STAR and make a visit to Hewson & Co.'s at the first opportunity. "If you get it at Hewson's, it's all right in every respect."

vicinity, has so much money that she does not need to exercise discretion in spending it. It follows then that the advertisements are very interesting to the female and better part of Cobourg. The hand that rocks the cradle is the hand that rules the stores, as well as the rest of the world.

Marmalade Oranges.

Fine Bright Stock. Now is the time to buy, as the early fruit is generally the best.

WM. BURNET

I don't know whether or not Hooley & Son are better grocers than Wm. Burnet, but they certainly know more about advertising, judging by those two advertisements. I don't doubt that Mr. Burnet knows the price of his oranges quite as well as the Hooeys know the prices of their canned goods, coffee and tea. And why not tell the price to the people? Home-made orange marmalade is certainly not better than the best brands of the factory-made article. It follows then that housewives make their own marmalade for economy's sake. Naturally, therefore, the price they are to pay for the oranges to make out of is a matter of considerable consequence to them. The inference Mr. Burnet has left the readers of his advertisement to draw is, that either his price for the oranges is too high or that there is some other good reason for not quoting it. This sort of thing is not likely to inspire confidence among those who have no other way of judging Mr. Burnet's grocery store except by Mr. Burnet's advertising.

I have before me an advertisement of Messrs. W. W. Wilkinson & Co., clipped from The Galt Reformer, of April 6, 1900. The advertisement is six columns wide and occupies a space of considerable depth at the bottom of a page. It is a kid glove advertisement, well written and well displayed, but the name of the firm is in type twice the size of the title or heading which consists of the words "New Kid Gloves." There seems to be a weakness on the part of many advertisers to see their name in large type. Wilkinson's advertisement builder, in this case, seems to have gone on the theory that the readers of newspapers turn over the pages looking for the advertisement of some particular firm—that, in fact, they look for Wilkinson's announcement rather than for advertisements of kid gloves, or dress goods, or corsets, or what not. This is a mistake, but it is probably the main reason why so many merchants give their firm name such great prominence in their advertising. Vanity (we all like to see our name in print) is doubtless another moving cause. If Wilkinson & Co. had printed their firm name just half the size they had it printed and the words New Kid Gloves twice as big as they were, the proportion would have been about right. I have also before me another advertisement. This advertisement was inserted in The Sentinel Review, of Woodstock, Ont., by Robinson, of Ingersoll. At the top, in large type, is the word "Robinson's." This is followed by the title of the advertisement in type less than half the size of the head. After this comes the introduction and the details. At the bottom, "Robinson's" is again repeated in type nearly as large as the same word at the head. Apparently, the most important feature about this advertisement is Robinson. Incidentally, as it were, it is mentioned that Robinson sells men's clothing to order. Contrast this advertisement of Robinson's with this one of Rogers, Peet & Company, of New York.

THE LONDON WOOL MARKET.

THE third series of the 1900 wool auction sales at London closed May 25. The series opened with an average depreciation of 10 per cent., being most pronounced in inferior and faulty stock. Merchants, considering the statistical situation favorable, would not accept the reduction, and withdrawals were small. Upon the announcement of heavy curtailments, competition became more animated and widespread. Medium coarse crossbreds throughout were in better demand. This grade opened $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. cheaper and later, upon the resumption of American purchasing, hardened and closed firm, five per cent. below the March average. Fine crossbreds followed merinos. Cape of Good Hope and Natal started $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. cheaper. Inferior greasy and poor fleeces were hard to sell until refused an additional five per cent. Of the offerings during the series, the home trade secured 70,000 bales, the continent 50,000; Americans, 3,000; and 167,000 bales were held over.

The next series will begin July 3, and the amount of wool available is 273,000 bales, including 167,000 bales held over from the sales just closed.

Advices from Australia say that prospects for the next season's wool supply are still by no means brilliant. Whatever happens the ensuing clip can only be another small one, owing to the large number of breeding ewes which perished in the dry times and to the serious extent to which the constitution of the sheep in many flocks was impaired during the exceptionally lengthy and severe droughty period.

AN ENGLISH VIEW.

The London Drapers' Record says that the increased price of mill stores and dyeing, and some advance in the price of crossbred wools will cause a gradual increase in the cost of the production of such dress goods as serges and similar fabrics which are made from crossbred colonial wools; and, further, that when the stocks of goods made from merino wools (such as cashmeres and fine coatings), bought at the lowest rates are exhausted, that it will not be possible to replace them at bottom rates. "It will, in fact, be very unsafe to assume, because there has been some decline in the price of wool, that we are going back again to the unprecedentedly low prices which were ruling some two years back, as nothing but some disastrous political complications could possibly create such a situation as would be necessary to bring about those very low prices."

BELFAST LINEN MARKET.

Belfast advices say that the linen market is quiet. Buyers seem satisfied that top prices have been reached, and are, accordingly, only purchasing to cover immediate wants. There is no change in any department, values being firmly held to everywhere. Prices continue unchanged and untested. The manufacturing branch is steady; old orders are still fairly plentiful, but fresh business is restricted, makers finding difficulty in getting paying prices. Trade with the United States shows but little further expansion. Cuba is a little more active. The colonial trade is quite satisfactory. Other markets are unchanged.

THE DRESS GOODS MARKETS.

The reports of easier prices in French dress goods, as well as in a few lines of Bradford makes, do not appear to affect this market, as the prices paid by leading importers were not the top prices by any means, and only the higher prices are affected.

THE COTTON MARKET FIRM.

The cotton market has held extremely firm throughout the month, and any class of goods into the production of which Egyptian cotton enters is certain to continue so for many months to come.

In some quarters there exists an impression that Canadian cottons will decline in the next few months. There is no sign of a break in prices yet, and a large buyer states his firm conviction that the market will be firm for the next six months.

Pasch, the well-known cotton statistician of Havre, in an elaborate review on the cotton situation, says that Liverpool is drifting quietly into a terrible corner which may push up prices to a point that cannot now be foretold, if any big operator should take hold of a few hundred thousand bales, and that such an operation might now be engineered with comparatively small danger.

The New York report for raw cotton, dated June 2, gives middling uplands 9c., middling gulf $9\frac{1}{4}$ c. This is a high price.

The prices of Canadian cotton companies' stocks show an upward tendency, the quotation for June 1 being (buyers) Montreal cotton, 141; Canadian colored cotton, 85; Merchants Cotton, 125; Dominion Cotton, 98; Montmoryncy, 110.

THE SILK MARKETS.

The general impression seems to be that the recent continuous decline of prices in the Lyons silk trade has been checked, though no definite symptoms of reaction can yet be recorded; indeed, some irregularity seems to have been still observable during the week under review. No important change has been discernible in the market for the fabrics. The commission merchants still hesitate to place such orders as they have in hand, except when they are of a pressing character. Satisfactory telegraphic reports on the cultivations in China and Japan have been received from Shanghai and Yokohama, but in both markets and in Canton the trade has continued lethargic. Dullness is also reported from the Rhenish centres of the silk trade.

Men's Furnishings.

AN authority on neckwear tells THE DRY GOODS REVIEW: "The great seller for the present hot weather is the kerchief. Last year, anything by the name of kerchief sold well, and quantities of ordinary silk with a fancy border stitched on sold freely; also fancy silks without any border sold when made up in the kerchief shape. But this season the consumer knows exactly what is right, and will only buy the genuine article. It must have a border, and it must be woven, and not stitched, on.

"The demand is greatest for white patterns or spots spaced well apart on a ground of navy or Yale blue, with a border of the same color, but the pattern being sufficiently different to make the border well defined. Other good sellers are of the same colors and patterns, but with borders of multi-colored Persian designs.

"The demand for the kerchief may possibly be hard to fill, not because the manufacturers cannot make enough of them, but, as the silks have to be woven specially for this tie, it will necessarily take a long time for tiemakers to get repeats. It may thus come to pass that buyers will be forced to buy last year's makeshifts, kerchiefs without a border or with a border sewed on.

"Flowing ends are selling very well, and, as everyone now is able to tie a flowing end, it has come to be looked upon as a staple shape. A surprising demand has suddenly arisen for string and lombard ties. As these are small-shape ties, it is especially needful to have them cut bias, when wanted in the bold stripes so much worn, as it is only when biased that the pattern is properly shown."

The Outlook For June.

June should be a good month with the men's furnisher. May has not been sufficiently warm to induce buyers to don hot-weather clothing, so, a week or so of really warm weather should cause a big trade in these goods. It is true a few duck trousers, linen vests and straw hats have been seen, but the great majority have neither started to wear or to buy them. There ought to be a big business in light underwear for the same reason.

Another demand which may be expected to follow close on the heels of hot weather will be for two-piece bicycle suits. Last year, the big trade in these goods was in July, but a good share was done in June, too. With these, caps and, if boots are carried, bicycle shoes.

I consider it good policy, too, to push silk-front shirts vigorously in June. These garments, if well made, wear excellently, and can be depended on to keep in good condition all Summer, no matter how soon bought. I would not like to say this of many fancy Oxfords or zephyrs, but whatever shirt is pushed there should be good movement in fancy ties, especially flowing ends. There is no question but that the patriotic spirit has "caught on" here in ties, yet not everything that is red, white and blue, or green, or khaki sells. There must be something of neatness and attractiveness as well as patriotism about the tie before it takes. But attractive effects are possible, especially on a khaki ground, with the design in red, white, blue or green.

This patriotic spirit is causing an unusual demand for a line that furnishers might well carry—for flags. The sale of these emblems of British glory and British honor has been unprecedented in the last two or three months. The relief of Ladysmith, the relief of Mafeking, the Queen's Birthday, and, lastly, the flight of Kruger, have each been the cause of an outburst of Imperial enthusiasm that necessitated an amount of flag-wearing and flag flying that has never before been experienced in Canada. Is it likely that the 1st of July, the birthday of our Dominion, the anniversary of an Act which has done much to unify Canada, and, therefore, the Empire, will be forgotten? It seems reasonable to expect to sell a few flags for the occasion. As the 1st comes on a Sunday, Canada will spread her celebration over from Saturday till Monday night. There should be enough of the proper spirit on Saturday to start the flags selling. There is money in flags if they are bought and sold well. If you would sell flags, don't be afraid to dirty a few by displaying them. Make your store the neatest and most attractively decorated in your district. Not only will that help sell flags, but it will be a good ad. in a general way. Money spent in this manner generally brings good returns.

Combination Window Displays.

Some retailers make unusually effective displays by showing several different lines in combination. I do not mean to put a general assortment of furnishings in the window at once, but rather to put a number of lines that show and sell well in combination. This is frequently done in showing collars, ties and pins. In one store a large display rack, with about eight arms or shelves, was arranged with stand-up, turn-down collars with a flowing-end tie attached on the top, third, fifth and seventh shelves and stand-up collars with bow ties attached on the second, fourth, sixth and bottom shelves. As the flowing-ends hung from the one shelf considerably below the next lower one they were shown to good advantage. On each of the flowing-end ties was a neat pin. Flowing-end and four-in-hand ties arranged on the floor also formed a beautiful background for a further exhibit of tie pins.

An even better effect is produced by showing shirts in combination with these goods. A window which has attracted much attention lately shows on a rack a number of stiff-front white and colored shirts. Attached to these are collars and ties of various styles. As good care was exercised in making the combinations the beauty of the tie was enhanced by the somewhat quieter design of the shirt front and by the pure whiteness of the collar. As the shirt was not opened and as neither the collar nor tie was soiled in attaching them to it, the amount charged to "damage in display" would be light. In another window bicycle sweaters, hose and belts were displayed. At the back, sweaters, all fancily striped, were displayed in rows of three each. These were priced at $1, $1.25 and $1.50. Between each sweater was a leather belt suspended from the arm of the display rack and holding a pair of hose. In the centre of the foreground was a small stand holding eight or ten pairs of bicycle hose in such a way as to show the neat, bright design at the knee. At either side of these were belts. Price tickets told that the hose were 75c., $1 and $1.25.

The Holiday Shirt in England.

Whether it be for yachting, fishing, golfing or cycling, or for any other kind of amusement, in which a certain amount of exertion is involved, sportsmen of all orders are agreed that the less starched material there is to crumple or soil the better, writes a London fashion authority. The reasons are too obvious to mention, and the only point of interest is the question of material. In recent years the soft-fronted shirt has been very popular in India-gauze, or "Oxford," as it is sometimes called, and it is pre-eminently the best cotton fabric for the holiday shirt. It is soft, and, for cotton, very absorbent; whilst its substance is sufficient to insure a cleanness of fit about the front, where it is exposed to view. The cuffs are usually starched and cut the same as a dress shirt, but for sport round corners are preferable. The centre box-plait in front is generally fastened with three pearl buttons. Signs are not wanting, however, to show that this kind of material has been superseded, and among the smart set of the sporting world there is a demand for very fine all-wool flannels. Now, of all materials that are a vexation and a snare, it is flannel. When it comes from the shirt maker nothing could be nicer, but the laundress—well, upon her head some dreadful imprecations have fallen when a shirt has been taken from the drawer reduced to liliputian dimensions. The unlucky person who starts to earn a livelihood with soap and water, and endeavors to keep society in immaculate attire, has unwittingly placed many an effective barrier between the soul of a man and the gates of Heaven, but of late years the treatment of flannels has been better understood and complaints are much less frequent. If a good laundry is requisitioned, one need have no fear, and flannels will look quite as good when washed as when new. Our manufacturers have been busy, and they have enlisted the skill of highly-paid artists and designers of practical ability, with the result that some really beautiful flannels are now to be obtained. The patterns supersede anything possible in cotton materials, because wool lends itself to artistic treatment in a greater measure, but some discretion must be used in the choice of colors. All sorts of shades are shown, but, generally speaking, there are few art or "pastel" tints that are fast colors. Anything in the nature of china blue is safe, so are reds, pinks, greys, and black-and-whites. All colored fabrics are sure to become lighter in shade in the course of wear, and pale shades are consequently little in demand. Green will not stand at all, and browns of some shades are not at all reliable. The best qualities of flannels are the cheapest in the end, because the best and longest stapled wool is exclusively used, and shrinkage is less in these goods than in many of the so-called unshrinkable textiles composed of part wool and part cotton. In the strict interpretation of the term, nothing in the nature of wool, or where wool forms a part, is unshrinkable. There may not be any perceptible shrinkage in some of the best goods, but shrinkage there is, and it is anything but straightforward to affirm otherwise. Cotton will shrink one inch in 30 and sometimes more, but it only shrinks once and remains there, and if cotton will shrink it is obviously puerile for any vendor of a cotton-and-wool-mixed flannel to say the stuff will not run up in the wash. I am aware that there are many people who are not above misleading their customers wilfully, which is a scandalous and very short-sighted policy to say the least of it, but a great deal of the misrepresentation is also due to ignorance on the part of the seller, who has been misled, maybe, by some unscrupulous merchant. But these cases must be very rare, for our manufacturers are above suspicion as a rule, and implicit confidence may be placed in the word of any respectable shirt-maker. Cheap flannels are dear, and if the best goods are not procurable, it is safer to get India gauze, or what is a well-proved and most-excellent go-between—Anderson's Ceylon. This cloth has stood the test of ages, and is the best in the world to-day. It is half wool and half cotton. The flannel shirt of 1900 will be largely worn with links, and in this matter there is room for indulgence in sporting designs. The buttonholes are worked smaller to prevent links from falling out, and the links themselves are made in bar-like designs with the same view. Some I have seen were composed of golf-clubs, one in gold, and one in platinum or silver, and joined by a small gold chain. These commend themselves to enthusiasts of the game, but let no absent minded one call at the estate agents and inquire for golf-links. The kind these people dispose of could hardly be accommodated up one's sleeve. Other patterns included a cricket bat and wicket, an oar and gaff, and a pair thoroughly up to the day's topic was a linked rifle and cartridge. A very pretty design was shown in the oar pattern of gold and enamel, one of the blades being in dark blue and the other in the college colors. The idea may be carried further, and at Henley we may see studs in flannel shirt fronts of gold, with the badge or crest in colors of enamel, and they would certainly make a smart and becoming addition to the holiday shirt.

Duck and Linen Goods.

The city furnishers are already devoting considerable attention to white duck trousers, linen coats, yachting hats, etc. Many good displays can now be seen. One of the best I have noticed was a general display of these goods. At the back of the window, which was a deep one, were duck trousers in plain white and white with a light blue stripe; yachting caps with white canvas crown and black patent or tan leather or linen peaks and white and tan leather belts. The foreground of the window was devoted to white and dark grey linen coats, and duck and flannelette trousers. The display was, in many respects, ordinary and easily arranged, but, as the goods are seasonable, and as it is the most complete display of these goods shown in the city, it will not fail to attract trade. Linen vests are shown even more generally than duck trousers. The favorite effect seems to be a moderate stripe or polka dot on a quiet ground, though there is a good proportion of small checks, of which black and white is the most general. Single-breasts and double-breasts seem to be in about equal favor. Pearl buttons are generally used, though a few black and dark brown ones are also to be seen.

Attracting and Keeping Trade.

While it is good policy to attract as much new trade as possible by means of advertising, window display, etc., this feature of the business should never be allowed to have consideration before the retention of what trade has already been secured. He who tries to keep his customers gets more than he keeps who tries to get them. There have been several furnishers start in business since I started to write for these columns who seemed to be doing an excellent business. They frequently had special sales that attracted much attention and sold a great many goods, yet they have gone under. After studying the matter carefully, I have come to the conclusion that what each of these stores lacked—and what every one of the most successful stores possess—was regular customers. They depended on a transient trade to buy enough goods to pay heavy charges for rent, light, help, etc. To win this transient trade they found it necessary to adopt the cheap, bargain tactics of the departmentals. This necessitated a margin of profit too small for a new business to cover its expenses, and the result was failure. I have come to the conclusion that the bargain system of advertising does not appeal to a man as it does to a woman. The average man is willing to experiment a little, but he is more a creature of habit than a woman, and once he is satisfied that he gets fair value for his money, and feels that his furnisher knows his business, he can, as a rule, be depended on as a regular customer. As such he should be treated. Many men have preferences for certain colors or styles. To know these little things is to give the furnisher a good grip on his customer. But, above all things, a dealer should never treat a "regular" with indifference. For if a regular feels he has been slighted or treated meanly, he is not only likely to stop dealing with the dealer he feels has so treated him, but to tell his friends of his "injuries." If a furnisher could win one new customer every week and keep what he won, he would do a big business in three years.

What the Troops are Wearing.

The Imperial army clothing factory in Pimlico, London, is now sending out weekly to South Africa Winter clothing, such as serge suits, jerseys and woollen shirts and drawers, as fast as the hands can make it. Of full kits, 15,000 go out per week. Each man when he leaves England takes three suits—one for use on the passage out, one of khaki drill, and a third of drab serge. The serge will be worn during the coming Winter, when the nights have a touch of frost. Woollen drawers are a new item of outfit altogether. Up to the beginning of March 200,000 pairs had gone out, and now 15,000 to 20,000 go each week. Of drab serge suits, 140,000 will form a reserve stock to be drawn upon as the men may require them. Socks and warm woollen jerseys and cardigans are going out in vast quantities, and orders are increasing rather than showing any indications of slackening.

It is Easy if Done Correctly.

The high-band, turn-down collar which sets on the shirt as it should is sometimes objected to on the ground that its very perfection of "set" makes it a troublesome thing to deal with when fixing a tie around it. It is often complained that the closeness with which the outer part stands to the inner makes it difficult to pull the tie around for adjusting. I have never experienced this difficulty myself, and, I conclude, therefore, that the "struggle to get the tie around in front" is due to the wearer allowing the tie to slip up behind into that part of the collar which grips the tightest, and then trying to wrench it around by pulling downwards. If the tie is placed beneath or on a level with the stud behind, and the collar then closed down, the wearer, if he pulls gently and evenly, can bring the tie around as easily as if he was fixing it to an ordinary stand-up collar.

Lounge Suit Styles in London.

The variety in materials for lounge suits this season is more in the pattern than the color—indeed, it is nearly all in the pattern, seeing that the predominant shade in every sample is grey. A favorite kind with the patrons of the best West End tailors appears to be a grey check, the pattern being very small, and not brought out with any clearness to the face of the cloth. Another kind that ought to make up into smart lounge suits is a slate grey checked with a slightly lighter shade, with a "thin red line" check, larger than the ground check, faintly showing up from behind. Among the patterns are many of the herring-bone family; and there are numerous variations of striped designs on whole shades, all of which are very distinctive and yet quiet, and, consequently, specially suitable for lounge wear, upon which same "wear" one is apt to try so great a variety of Spring and Summer fancy waistcoatings, and so wide a range of color in ties. The man who is fickle in the matter of ties and fancy waistcoatings must not allow his affections to wander over a wide field of cloths, or he may envelop himself, literally, in alarming complications. A rich slate grey lounge will stand an almost boundless diversity of accessory treatment.

The lounge suit may be single or double breasted, so far as fashion is concerned, but, considering the choice from the standpoint of comfort, there should be a preference for the single, by reason of its being cooler for Summer wear. Then, again, its front construction is better suited for displaying the fancy waistcoat. The lapels of the single-breasted lounge should be small and cut somewhat low in the step, so that when the coat is worn open, and rolled back, they do not stand up at each side of the wearer like a couple of wings. The bottom of the single-breasted lounge should have rounded corners, and although the garment itself is not made to reach down further than usual, a suggestion of added length is given to it by there being but three buttons in front, between the last of which and the bottom of the coat there is a conspicuous space of untouched material. It is this plainness from the waist downwards that makes one think, at first sight, that lounges are two or three inches longer this season than they were last. Three patch pockets in the ordinary positions, with buttons, and without any clearly-marked stitching to denote their size, look well; but there is no hard and fast fashion as to the nature and number of the pockets, and the purchaser is far from likely to divorce himself from style in the process of freely exercising his own choice. There is a centre seam down the back, but no slit; neither are there side slits. The three or four buttons on the sleeve must, of course, be made to button (it is only in cheap goods that the buttons are sewn over a dummy buttonhole), and the sleeve from the elbow downwards should be a little close, so that the cuff, made to touch the shirt-cuff all around, may not appear to have been considered and planned out apart from the general design.

The double-breasted lounge looks best with two side pockets with flaps, and a handkerchief on breast pocket without flap. In other respects, deducting the fact of its being double-breasted, the coat is the same as the single, having centre seam down back, no slits, and sleeves close in the forearm.

Matthews, Towers & Co.'s New Warehouse. Matthews, Towers & Co., wholesale mens' furnishings, are now established in their new warehouse, 14 St. Helen street, Montreal. It is a commodious four-storey structure, the increase in the firm's business necessitating the move to the new premises. Entering on the first flat from the street, are the private offices of the members of the firm, the general business office, and a large sample-room. The three other flats above this are utilized for the large stock of goods which this enterprising concern carry. The basement underneath the sample-room and offices is utilized entirely for shipping purposes, being connected with the upper flats by a large hoist. The situation is a central one in the heart of the dry goods district and convenient to all the street car lines.

A New Idea in Umbrellas.

An Australian has taken out a patent on a new device for retaining the tips of umbrellas in a closed position which can be more easily applied and released than is the case with the ordinary ring and slide. It is proposed to fit the slide upon a tube fixed to the umbrella stick and to place at the upper end of the slide a spiral spring which tends to push the slide down so as to engage the umbrella tips. The barrel of the slide is formed with a small bayonet slot, and the tube carrying it is provided with a pin adapted to engage in the said slot. The arrangement is such that the umbrella tips can be released by pulling back the slide against the pressure of the spring and turning it slightly, so that the pin engages in the end of the slot. The slide is thus held clear of the tips, but springs into engaging position on a slight turn.

Shirts for Midsummer.

The change from early Summer to midsummer is hardly less gradual than the change it brings in the styles of goods shown by furnishers. Yet, there has been a change in the furnishers' windows in anticipation of the very hot days. This is principally noticeable in shirts. Soft bosom cambrics, zephyrs and silk fronts are to be seen everywhere. In undershirts, light silk and balbriggan are generally shown. In showing these goods the dealers make a point of impressing buyers with the early approach of hot weather, and with the fact that these goods are conducive to comfort in such temperature as we shall soon experience.

Bright Notes Here and There.

About eight months ago Messrs. Gillanders & Parsen opened a men's furnishing store in the Masonic block, Chilliwack, B.C. The stock of men's furnishings, clothing, boots and shoes is very tastefully arranged, which, as every one knows, has a great effect in selling goods.

The Niagara Neckwear Co.'s travelers will be out about June 15 with their full Fall line which will consist of many exclusive and special confined novelties and patterns. Graham Bros., men's furnishers, London, Ont., have secured the contract for supplying the 22nd Oxford Rifles and the 26th Regiment with shirts, collars and hats. The contract calls for 600 grey flannel shirts, with collars attached, and the same number of broad brimmed straw hats. As these are to be worn while the men are drilling at the annual camp of instruction, it looks as if the military authorities intend to give the men some degree of comfort while drilling.

The Dominion Suspender Co., Niagara Falls, have just placed on the market an entirely new idea in braces, "Our Defender," a double back-action elastic cord, so easy that the wearer is unaware that he has a pair of braces on. It is one of the many good novelties that this leading firm have produced. Show-cards accompany each shipment, with the picture of Baden-Powell, "Our Defender."

Wyld-Darling Co., Limited, are showing a fine assortment of goods for the holiday and sporting season. In shirts, they have some leading lines in zephyrs and cambrics, which they are offering to retail at 50 and 75c. Owing to the considerable rise in the price of these goods, these lines are of unusual value. In Ceylon flannel shirts with silk stripes, they have some very neat effects. These goods are in much demand for the boating season. The latest Summer collar is Wyld's "Hi-Hi," which is a stand-up turn-down shape, which sets and fits perfectly, yet allows any shape of tie to be worn without interfering with the effect of either, making a very dressy effect with negligee wear. In men's fancy half-hose, a large range is shown in all the newest colors in stripes, spots and checks, to retail at 25c. The kerchief tie is largely in demand with this house, where they are shown in the latest shades of blue, etc., in fancy checks, bandana effects, etc., to retail at 25 and 50c. This house is still offering the leading lines of fancy and brown balbriggan and natural wool underwear at old prices, as they placed large orders very early in the season to protect their customers.

SMALL DEBTS IN MANITOBA.

A delegation composed of merchants and representatives of the press association waited on Hon. H. J. Macdonald, Premier of Manitoba, lately, asking that legislation be enacted providing for a cheaper and more expeditious way of collecting small debts. A number of suggestions were advanced, and, in answering, Mr. Macdonald said he could see nothing unreasonable in the request made, and that the suggestion seemed perfectly fair. He asked time in which to consider the matter and consult with his colleagues.

The numerous friends and customers of Mr. George R. Joseph throughout the Lower Provinces will be pleased to learn that he has again associated himself with Messrs. Herman H. Wolff & Co., Montreal, and will carry, as in the past, their extensive and well-known lines.

PATRIOTIC DISPLAYS.

AS an example of what can be done in the way of ornamental decoration with flags and bunting, the warehouse, inside and out, of the W. R. Brock Co., Toronto, was a pleasing sight for several days during last month's patriotic celebrations. Inside, the smallwares department had been trimmed tastefully under Mr. Smallpiece's direction, and Mr. Catto had the business office embellished with flags arranged about the walls and desks, the whole presenting a taking appearance. Outside, long streamers of innumerable small flags were stretched about the two street sides of the warehouse so that it was a conspicuous sight in that part of the city.

The variety of flags aids decoration as well as sales. There are Union Jacks, Canadian flags, tricolors, St. George's Cross, and white, blue, and red ensigns. To these are added make-up flags, streamers, etc., so that a very fine decoration can be arranged in a short time. The advantage of small flags is that they require so little time to hang out. The coming Summer will see a great deal of decoration. The holidays on which we may expect displays, include the following :

COLORED COTTON MILLS CO.

At the annual meeting of the Canadian Colored Cotton Mills Company, held in Montreal, May 25, the financial statement and annual report were presented, and found to be highly satisfactory. The following were elected directors for the ensuing year : Senator Geo. A. Drummond, D. Morrice, C. D. Owen, E. J. Clouston, T. King, and D. Morrice, jr. At a subsequent meeting of the directors D. Morrice was reelected president, and C. D. Owen, vice-president.

A VICTORIOUS MOVE.

Moving to Victoria Square has been a truly victorious move for the Alaska Feather & Down Company, of Montreal. Their previous office on Guy street was not as central as it might have been, but their new office, being in the heart of the dry goods district and very prominently situated, attracts buyers from all over Canada. The sample-room extends the full length of the building on St. James street, while the secretary's private office overlooks Victoria Square, the general offices and storeroom being on the south side of the building.

A splendid array of brass and iron beds serves to show off the springs, mattresses, pillows, comforters and cushions, which are the company's leading lines of manufacture. The bedspreads and down quilts are displayed on long tables, and large cases full of "jobs" in the quilt line await the bargain-hunter. The company's new factory on the canal bank, St. Henri, is also a satisfactory investment. Over a ton's weight of raw feathers are converted there daily into "Alaska" brand bed feathers and downs for quilts and cushions.

THE STANDARD SHIRT CO.

The annual meeting of the shareholders of The Standard Shirt Co., Limited, was held last month at the offices of the company, Delorimier avenue, Montreal. The statement presented, showing the progress of the company during the past year, was considered very satisfactory. The present board of directors was reelected for the coming year. At a meeting of the directors, held later, Mr. Samuel Bell was reelected president, and Mr. Charles B. Gordon managing-director.

The company issued, May 17, a circular to the trade in the following terms: "We beg to advise you that, owing to the continued advances in prices of many lines of goods which we handle, present prices cannot be accepted for any goods made by us, until orders sent us have been confirmed by us or our agents. A copy of all orders received will be sent you at the best prices we can accept at date of receiving same. All goods sold by you in excess of orders now placed with us will be at the risk of your having to pay advanced prices. The above applies to all goods made by us, viz., collars, cuffs, shirts, blouses, overalls, pants, etc."

S. H. AND M. 24-INCH VELVETEEN.

That there is in Canada an ample field for the sale of good specialties has been abundantly manifested, but seldom in a more marked way than the growth of the Toronto branch of the S. H. & M. Co., New York, etc. This firm make a specialty of skirt bindings. This is a small article, but the

S. H. & M. people make good goods, and their business has already become a comparatively large one. The methods of this company are largely the cause of the success they have had here. They are now devoting much attention to a 24-in. velveteen for blouse, waist and skirt binding. As for these purposes velveteen must possess qualities of strength and durability which are not found in millinery velveteens, the S. H. & M. Co. had the goods converted expressly for the purpose they are intended for. They are, furthermore, made in from 18 to 20 ft. lengths, are made in 40 shades, and are kept in stock all the year around. It is not surprising when this firm put their goods on the market just as conditions make most advisable that they find the demand for them constantly increasing throughout the country. It always pays to suit goods to the market.

HOSIERY, GLOVES, AND UNDERWEAR.

These are goods that merchants want at once when they order them at this season of the year. For several years back the W. R. Brock Co., Toronto, by carrying an immense stock of all three lines have been able to execute almost every order sent them for any size, any kind, or any price of staple goods. This season is no exception to the rule, and, while many large importers have not yet got their Spring orders to hand, the W. R. Brock Co., have their warehouse filled up, and can furnish samples and quotations, besides being able to ship goods on receipt of order.

SETTLEMENT OF THE EXCHEQUER COURT SUIT.

Queen vs. Fitzgibbon, Schafheitlin & Co.

THE case of the Crown vs. Fitzgibbon, Schafheitlin & Co., Montreal, was tried at a sitting of the Exchequer Court, in Montreal, before Mr. Justice Burbidge, on May 7, and following days. The charge was one of fraud in valuation of goods for entry, and claims for $23,000 and $144,352 against the firm were made.

The position of the defendants was given by Mr. Schafheitlin. The firm contend that they acted throughout in good faith with no intention of defrauding the Customs. All the entries were made in a regular way and the practice followed by importers generally adhered to. The charge was laid against the firm in December, 1897. Mr. Fr. Schafheitlin formed a partnership with Mr. Fitzgibbon which succeeded to the firm of Thouret, Fitzgibbon & Co., importers. Mr. Schafheitlin made the purchases in Europe from the manufacturers and reconsigned the goods from Berlin to Montreal. Mr. Schafheitlin had experience as a buyer, while Mr. Fitzgibbon knew the Canadian trade and practically sold the goods which his partner bought. They did a large business. The two firms in six years' time paid $469,000 in duties to the Government, and the present firm in three years paid in $230,000. In an elaborate defence submitted to the Minister of Customs in April 1898, Mr. Schafheitlin explained that, in making up invoices for the Montreal house, he deducted trade discounts, as well as the cost of carriage of goods from the manufacturer, on the invoices. This deduction explained any discrepancies in figures. The invoice sent to Canada showed the true price of the goods chargeable to the firm at the ordinary terms of credit, and represented the fair market value of such goods sold for home consumption in Germany and in other parts, and purchased on the spot by a prudent and watchful buyer.

Mr. Michael Fitzgibbon, another member of the firm, gave evidence, stating among other things, that the firm had a large number of keen competitors, who, being jealous of the large business they did, laid complaints against them at the Customs. These complaints were inquired into, and the goods submitted to a keen test, but everything had been found regular. To the best of his knowledge, the firm had always paid full value for all their goods, and sometimes more than the Government was entitled to receive.

Mr. R. S. White, collector of Customs, gave evidence that was largely of a formal nature, as to the method followed at the Customs House in dealing with invoices. He testified that the collector had to follow the Orders-in-Council and the Departmental instructions issued from time to time. In 1889 the Department decided that charges for inland freight in Europe were not dutiable. The matter of trade discounts was left to the appraisers largely. Samples of no commercial value were not dutiable, but otherwise they were. Some firms imported from their own agents and handed in invoices from them, and not from the manufacturers.

The chief witness for the Crown was Richard Kannengiesser, formerly in the Berlin office of the firm from 1885 to 1896. He swore that the original invoices—the manufacturers' invoices—were kept in Berlin, and to Montreal were sent invoices from "Fr. Schafheitlin to Fitzgibbon, Schafheitlin & Co., Montreal." The manufacturers' invoices were entered in a journal, and also the amounts debited to the Montreal firm, and these amounts were subsequently transferred to a ledger. The goods were debited to the Montreal house, at a cheaper rate than shown on the original invoices, according to a scale prepared by Mr. Schafheitlin. On some goods the difference would run from 5 to 15 per cent., but in some special lines of fancy goods the difference would be as much as 20 or 25 per cent., as it was more difficult for Customs officers to appraise the real value. The witness went into great detail with reference to the value of invoices, and the system followed in the Berlin office.

In cross-examination, questions were asked witness to show that, while in the employ of the firm, he had taken away, for the use of the Canadian Customs authorities a copy of the scale for the reduction of values on importations and other documents, and that before his dismissal from the concern he had begun to prepare a book of memos, in case Mr. Schafheitlin should not treat him well. He had brought this evidence before the Canadian authorities in revenge, and, if he had had his salary increased, he would not have made the revelations. The Canadian authorities were paying him $1,000 for his services during two months' absence from Berlin and one-third of the net proceeds received from the penalties.

THE SETTLEMENT.

On May 16, when the court opened, the counsel for the firm, Mr. Latchford, said he and his colleagues had been consulting with their clients, with a view to making a proposal for a settlement of the case which might meet the ends of justice and be entirely satisfactory to the different parties concerned, under the circumstances. The defendants, taking into consideration that the litigation extended over ten years of business; that an appeal would certainly follow to the Supreme Court by one party or other in the suit; the heavy costs; the uncertainty in which the firm was placed, preventing it from carrying on its business, with certain other considerations, had led the defendants to admit technical infractions of the Customs laws as regards at least one member of the firm, though there had been no wilful violation of the law. Under all these circumstances, the defendants in the case of Fitzgibbon, Schafheitlin & Co. were willing that judgment should be entered against them for $2,000 for Customs duties, and $8,000 for penalties, with costs, and the firm of Thouret, Fitzgibbon & Co. for $10,000 for Customs duties and costs in full settlement of the claims of the Crown. This, he thought, would satisfy the ends of justice.

Speaking for the Crown, Mr. Newcombe stated that he and his brother counsel had considered the remarks made by the judge as to the small difference in the invoices, showing that fraud could not have been intended in the way of undervaluation. They also appreciated the remarks of their friends on the other side as to the difficulty of securing exact correctness, owing to the time which had elapsed. They had also taken into consideration the length of the case not yet commenced, and the time which the Government officials would be called upon to devote to that case. Of course, the interests of justice had to be looked to, and the Government was satisfied that a grave wrong had been done, and it was necessary that the rights of the Crown should be recognized. Under all these circumstances, they had come to an understanding which was acceptable to the Government, if it met with the full approval of the court, and he was now authorized to leave it to the court to decide whether or not judgment should be pronounced in accordance with the terms just mentioned by his friend on the other side.

In opening his remarks, the judge said that the primary object in cases of this kind was that the law should be upheld, and that irregular methods should be replaced by proper methods. There appeared to have been no complaint against the defendants since 1895, and the object above mentioned had been attained in that respect. Another point was that those who break the law must suffer the penalty incurred and serve as an example to deter others from similar violation. The judge has no discretion in the matter of the money penalty in such cases, which must be fixed at double the value of the goods. But, counsel for the Government has the power, under the law, to remit any portion of the penalty, and, consequently, can agree to such terms of settlement as he may think proper. In the present instance, the court had no reason to suppose that the settlement arrived at was not fair. On the contrary, he considered it fair, and was disposed to give it full effect. The case accordingly came to an end.

DISSATISFACTION IN THE TRADE.

The opinion of the dry goods trade is unfavorable to the settlement. The dry goods section of the Toronto Board of Trade adopted a resolution (for submission to the council of the board), regretting the settlement, and complaining of the injustice to honest importers in compromising any case where fraud is charged. The resolution says that the law should be allowed to take its course.

MR. BRUSH IS NOW SOLE PROPRIETOR.

Mr. S. B. Brush, who has been general manager of Brush & Co., Toronto, since that firm succeeded Clinton E. Brush & Bro. as manufacturers of Ball's and B. and C. corsets, etc., has purchased the entire business.

The business will be continued under unchanged style, and Mr. Brush will continue as active manager as well as proprietor. It is needless to say, therefore, that the same energy and enterprise which have characterized its management, and the same up-to-date and practical value that has been a feature of its output in recent years will be manifested to an even greater extent in the years to come.

As Mr. Brush is personally popular in retail as well as in jobbing circles, this evidence of his prosperity will be noted with pleasure in very many towns in Canada.

The Schofield Woollen Works, at Oshawa, are in operation again, and, notwithstanding the fire, the output of manufactured goods this year will be much larger than formerly. This will be accomplished by the addition of a number of new and improved machines.

Mr. R. J. Inglis, the well-known merchant tailor of St. Catherine street, Montreal, has decided to put up a fine new building adjoining the one he now occupies. He has purchased the four stores immediately east, and, as soon as the present leases expire, and the tenants get out, he will start the work of pulling down. The lot is 50 by 102 feet. The building, which will be of stone and brick, will be three storeys high and will consist of two stores, one of which will be occupied by Mr. Inglis.

WELL-DRESSED MEN'S FASHIONS.

SAYS a high authority in New York : In the evening coat there is hardly any perceptible change in cut or finish from the fashions in vogue at the beginning of the Winter season. It is true, the velvet collar, never much worn in this country, is now rarely seen, and the roll collar on a long tailed coat seems to be a thing of the past. There may be the merest suspicion of extra length to the tails and a narrow waist line, but nothing worthy of being called distinctly new. The fashions in evening clothes change less rapidly and far less radically than is the case with most other styles of garments ; in consequence of this, if it is in good condition, a man may wear to-day a coat made one, or even two years ago, without fear of looking old-fashioned and out-of-date.

Unfinished worsted is, perhaps, the smartest and best material, although a good dress worsted has some advantages, notably that of not so readily catching the dust and picking up the small particles of lint and wool from the upholstering of furniture. On the other hand, unfinished worsted being less smooth in finish than dress worsted, and of a slightly duller appearance, is likely to wear longer without traces of the shine that comes from the friction caused by the rubbing of materials.

The evening coat should be made to fit the figure perfectly, without, however, being in the slightest degree tight or drawn; it should be snug setting, and, at the same time, easy and comfortable to wear. This is the tailor's art, and in applying it the man who thoroughly understands his business studies the individual characteristics of his customer's figure, bringing out what is good and concealing what is bad. The man, for instance, with a round back and prominent shoulder-blades, should have his coat hang fairly straight behind, rather than cut deeply in at the small of the back, and the clever tailor should be able to do this without destroying the side waist lines. The man with round or sloping shoulders should have them made square and straight looking by the cut of his coat or even by the use of padding, if necessary. The narrow-shouldered man should have the shoulder seams of his coat made as long as possible, and the collar made narrow, so as to give an effect of breadth.

The dinner coat suit may be made of dress or unfinished worsted. It is advisable to have it of the same material as the evening suit, as, in that case, the waistcoat and trousers may be worn interchangeably, or one may even get along with only one pair of trousers and one waistcoat. I have noticed lately on several pairs of evening trousers black braiding nearly three-quarters of an inch in breadth. It is not a detail governed by any strict rule of fashion, but rather by a man's individual ideas, or more frequently by the ideas of his tailor as to what looks best. Personally, I prefer the one-quarter of an inch broad braid, and it certainly is best for a short man.

The dinner jacket should hang almost straight from the shoulders, exactly as a sack coat hangs ; it should not follow the lines of the figure closely, although, of course, there is some spring to the seams. In length it should fall to the bottom of the sleeves, when the arms are dropped by the sides in a natural position. The rolled collar should be faced with silk to its entire width, and should extend about half way down the front of the jacket. Notched lapels are sometimes made on dinner coats, but the roll or shawl collar, as it is sometimes called, is most usual and correct.

In the window of one of the clothing shops there has recently been exhibited on wooden models a number of sack coats and dinner jackets of an exaggerated type, cut to fit very tight and with a decided waist line. They give one the impression of being exceedingly uncomfortable, and, I am sure, must make the man who wears them look something like a caricature. In the same window is shown a grey frock coat, with silk facing and a black velvet collar, which is, of course, decidedly bad style.

Notwithstanding the advent of the pointed-end bow-tie, several of the smart haberdashers are still selling a great many of the old bat-wing shape ; with a dinner coat the square-ended bow of black silk, tied in a small knot, with short, broad wings, is most usually worn. With morning clothes the pointed-end bow, made narrow in the middle, which comes at the back of the collar when tied, and gradually broadening out to the ends, is rather the most smart.

With the coming of mild, Spring weather, tan shoes have, in a great measure, taken the place of black calf boots for day wear, and in a few weeks the derby will give way to the straw hat. There will be very little change in the shape of the Summer hat ; we seem to have gotten rid of the ugly broad brims for good, and to have settled on a happy medium most becoming to the average man. Rough straws have, for the past few years, been most worn by smartly-dressed men, and in this respect it looks as if there would be no change. The fine, smooth straws are rather the lightest and most comfortable, but the coarse weaves, with thick, double brims, have the most style, and are the most popular, especially with the younger set, who also wear with them colored silk bands. These bands may be bought extra at all the good hatters, in various stripe designs, so that one may have several and change them at will.

For wheeling or knocking about the country it is better to wear a dark Norfolk jacket or sack coat than one of the same material and pattern as the knickerbockers. So many entire bicycle suits are sold by the cheap tailors and ready-made clothing shops that they have become common by much use, and are little worn by the best-dressed men. A Norfolk jacket of dark tweed goes very well with short trousers, and this style of coat seems to be again coming into fashion. All summer trousers, whether of flannel or other materials, should be made with loops at the waist for a belt. During the warm weather waistcoats are very generally discarded, and it looks exceedingly bad if the trouser band or suspender buttons show above or below the belt.

It is not possible, as yet, to say definitely what style of belt will be considered the most fashionable, if, indeed, there is one style better than all others. I have seen some made of grey suede, some of black, and some of white leather; one may find light and dark shades of tan leather, plain or stamped, with or without rings at the side, and with more or less fancy buckles of nickel or brass, judging from past years and general principles of good style, it would seem that the belt about one and one-half inches in width of plain tan leather, with simple nickel or leather-covered buckle, would be the most correct. Personally, I prefer a belt with side rings, as it has more give and is less stiff than the unbroken strips. Cinch fastening belts have never been much worn by men.

Few better evidences of good times in Canada are to the fore than the fact that this is the busiest Spring season the merchant tailors have ever known. For some weeks tailoring establishments have been working hard to get out orders. In most of the shops the merchants stopped taking orders for work that was required by May 24, and some establishments refused orders a month ago, owing to the congested condition of their cutting tables and workrooms. Many striking patterns in suitings for Summer are in vogue, and the demand is good.

John Mackenzie & Co., Summerside, P.E.I., have moved their store and tailoring establishment to the building formerly occupied by Rogers & Rogers. The store is very conveniently arranged and nicely adapted for the furnishing business. Mr. John Mackenzie, as a cutter, is well-known in the locality.

The Sanford Manufacturing Co., of Hamilton, have received an order for 30,000 khaki serge uniforms for the Imperial troops now fighting in South Africa. The contract calls for the delivery of the uniforms in four months, in lots of 2,000 per week. The material is now in stock and consists of 550 bales of goods. The business of the contract was done through the Dominion Government, and an inspector has been appointed by the Government.

Some years ago the present Emperor of Austria received the gift of a suit of clothes, the wool used in the manufacture of which had actually been growing on the sheep's back 11 hours before the garments were completed. At 6.08 in the morning the sheep was sheared; at 6.11 the wool was washed; at 6.37 dyed; at 6.50 picked; at 7.34 the last carding process was finished; at 8 it was spun; at 8.15 spooled; at 8.37 the warp was in the loom; at 8.43 scissors and needle. At 5 o'clock the suit, consisting of a hunting coat, waistcoat and knickerbockers was finished and ready for the Emperor's use.

Clothing manufacturers in Germany appear to be losing their hold of foreign markets. In 1896 the exports of ready-made clothing from Germany were £4,720,000, in 1897 they dropped to £4,415,000, whilst in 1898 they only amounted to £3,265,000. Thus there was a decrease within two years of £1,455,000, or nearly 31 per cent. To England alone the exports fell off to the extent of £715,000, to Holland £205,000, to Switzerland £165,000, to the United States £110,000, and to Canada £45,000. This decline is attributed to "the exorbitant Customs tariffs of foreign countries" and to the Canadian preferential treatment of English manufactures as against German.

Messrs. E. Ripley & Son, Limited, of Bradford, Eng., are now dyeing and finishing Irish homespun for some of the leading Dublin houses, and the latter are quite satisfied with the results attained. The finish is described as infinitely better than that hitherto obtainable, and, of course, the goods are dyed in the latest fashionable shades.

The fact that the Sanford Co. have been awarded the contract for 30,000 khaki serge uniform suits for the British soldiers in South Africa to be turned out at the rate of 500 complete suits a day is creditable to Canadian enterprise. It should also be an object lesson as to what may be accomplished by Canadian manufacturers in supplying ready-made clothing for South Africa after the war is over. Already United States manufacturers are preparing to look over the field, and have asked the Canadian manufacturers to share the expense. There will be a demand for other articles as well as clothing which Canada can supply quite as well as either Britain or the United States.

BIG DRY GOODS INCORPORATION.

The Siegel, Cooper Company has been organized to take over the business and property of Siegel, Cooper & Co.'s stores in New York and Chicago and to introduce a plan of profit sharing with employes. The company has been incorporated under the laws of New Jersey with a capital stock of $24,000,000, divided into $14,250,000 6 per cent. cumulative preferred stock and $9,750,000 common stock. The par value of the stock is $50. After the payment of full dividends on the preferred stock and 3 per cent. per annum on the common stock, all additional dividends are to be apportioned on the basis of one third in amount on the preferred stock and two thirds in amount on the common stock.

The new company offers for public subscription 200,000 shares ($10,000,000) of the 6 per cent. preferred stock at par. The money required to pay dividends on these shares has been set aside and will remain for deposit with the Central Trust Company of New York and the Illinois Trust & Savings Bank of Chicago respectively, to secure the dividends of 6 per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually, for a period of five years from July 1, 1900, on all such preferred stock as may be allotted. Under no circumstances will any of the preferred stock not so allotted, nor any of the common stock, be sold.

MILLINERY AT THE PARIS EXPOSITION.

ONE of the features at the Paris Exposition is the interior of a millinery establishment as it was in the period known as the Directoire. The furniture of the place is all of the period, and the models of the hats, caps, etc., are all those in fashion at the time. Some would bear reproduction to-day. One of these is a broad, flat turban of gauze with a trimming of pearls and a brush aigrette which is not at all unsuited for the present fashionable styles in toques. This particular model had its origin in a turban made in honor of the Turkish Ambassador's visit to Paris.

Other curious but striking shapes shown include a helmet-shaped bonnet, and a poke-shaped bonnet with a high crown that is strapped with black ribbon velvet in exactly the same fashion as on some models shown at the present time in London. The forty tableaux are of historical interest and portray the fashions of the past and present, ranging from a group clothed in skins—arranged in a rude hut in a Druidical forest—down to the most recent revelation, as it might well be called, of a lady in evening dress, where one is lost in wonder how the wearer keeps the weight of the cuirassed bodice on by means of the very narrow shoulder straps—or rather apologies for straps—provided.

MOURNING STYLES IN ENGLAND.

Mourning styles show considerable novelty in make and material, says The London Millinery Record. For very dressy, slight mourning toques, black tulle, crepe de chine, lisse, net and chiffon are largely used, and dull effects are greatly aimed at. Glistening jet does not seem so much used at present. For deep mourning style, English crape has returned to general favor and is now dressed with the utmost softness, so that it can as easily be adapted to the fashionable draped effects as the softest mousseline or chiffon.

LONDON MILLINERY NOTES.

The new models evidence a liberal use of flowers, tulle, crepe de chine, lace, aigrettes and ospreys; very few feathers.

Elongated turbans of black coarse fancy straw or jet-spangled net are new and appear to find favor. They are low-crowned, and are draped on the one side of the turban brim with butter-colored lace and on the other with black ostrich flats.

Another variety shows a black crin shape with the flat top covered with rows of black and tuscan straw lace, and the whole brim draped with tuscan-colored luxiel lace, having the addition of a black feather on the left side and a strass ornament in front.

Pale blue, mauve and rose-colored soft satin ribbons are all blended in one large knotted bow as the front trimming on a white fancy chip hat that is lifted on the left side in Gainsborough fashion and has seven pale pink roses disposed on a black velvet bandeau from back to front.

Very quaint shepherdess shapes, with low crowns and wide gracefully-undulated brims, are entirely covered or draped in soft-toned crepe de chine and wreathed with a number of roses in graduating tones of one color.

An instance is a model covered in flat wide folds of pale blue crepe with a double undulated brim, each edged with panne crossway binds. The crown is covered with a shape piece top, and a headband of folds in the crepe is wreathed with open roses in soft pastel shades of light and dark mauve. The brim is slightly uplifted in the front with a knotted bandeau of blue panne.

Another model in the same shape is covered with lilyleaf-green crepe, which is further used to form a wide, outspreading bow across the front, each loop and end being ornamented with an inset and edging of butter-colored guipure insertion, a small bow and ends of the same being sewn to a narrow band across the front to slightly uplift it.

The feeling is strong for roses, and, in addition to the large open varieties, there are many small, tightly-made patterns and quantities of unopened buds used in the new models.—London Millinery Record.

THE MILLINERY SITUATION.

When a representative of THE DRY GOODS REVIEW called on the firm of S. F. McKinnon & Co., Limited, at their new warehouse, corner of Wellington and York streets, he was met by a member of the company.

When asked how they liked their new warehouse, also about the size of the building, the answer was: "We are thoroughly satisfied with it in every respect.

"As you see, it is nine storeys high including the basement, every corner well lighted—the great essential to a millinery warehouse.

"You ask of the May trade. In our opinion it was quite satisfactory—the reply does not need consideration. In all our departments, including mantles, costumes and skirts, our orders and output for the month were in excess of the corresponding month of last year. Yet, we do not believe that the trade generally throughout the country came up to expectations. The unusually cool weather militated somewhat, not only against millinery, but trade in general.

"Generally speaking, the April trade was good, so, that taking the season up to this date, the millinery trade of the country has been satisfactory, while, from the June orders so far, we are encouraged to believe that the present month will show good results.

"As you know, the country was beginning to suffer from drought; but the fine rains of the first two days of this month were worth millions to the earth, and will do much to stimulate present trade and encourage buying for Fall.

"In speaking of the leading features in trimmings, as far as the season has gone, and the likely leaders for June, this firm say that, for the first time in a number of Spring and Summer seasons, flowers have had to take a second place, chiffons claiming the first.

"The demand for chiffons has been, is now, and will be, great. Mechlin nets, laces, taffeta silks, plain ribbons, mousseline de soie, velvet and satin ribbons, black, cream and white single tips have all been leading features in hat-beautifiers for the season.

"Chiffons will hold the balance of power in this class through June. So say we, and we have made large provision along this line.

"Other leaders for June will be flowers, black, white, and cream single and bunch tips; black, white and cream nets; black satin and velvet ribbons; black, white and cream plain silk ribbons.

"There has been a great demand with best trade for all-over dress nets, and we feel confident that they will retain their popularity, and we have made provision to meet a big call.

"You were asking about the factory. They are as busy as bees, we have full sail on, running almost every night, the principal push being on Winter jackets, but we have also a large number of machines turning out Summer skirts. Our skirt trade has developed to large proportions. The large sales being made in pique, crash, linen, duck and denim skirts show the popularity of these goods all over the Dominion. We have given special care and attention to this branch of our business, and find that it is the same in this, as in the cloak department—correct styles, perfect fitting and good workmanship bring satisfactory results."

THE VOLUNTEER HAT.

The representative of THE DRY GOODS REVIEW called on The John D. Ivey Co., Limited, the other day and was shown through the different departments. All through the big warehouse, the stocks were much lighter than when he last saw them. White goods were in much evidence, bespeaking preparation for midsummer business. In conversation with the head of their ribbon and silk department, he learned that, as this firm predicted months ago, chiffons are the strong article in that department. "There has been a tremendous run on black chiffons," said the department head, "but we have been able to keep our stocks well up to the demand. In fact, we have kept our stocks up so well that at no time during the season have we been out of black chiffon for more than two days. We are now looking for a big sale of white and cream chiffon, as well as colored silk and black velvet ribbons."

In the hat department, THE REVIEW man found Mr. McKinley and his staff busily engaged. Here it was learned that the trade in hats just now is in white dress hats, leghorns and sailors. A new hat is the "Ladysmith," a rustic knock-about, the brim of which can be twisted in any way. This hat is very similar to the helmet worn by British soldiers. The hat, however, which this house takes most pride in is a hat called the "Volunteer." This is the khaki felt worn by the Imperial Yeomanry. "As far as we know," said Mr. McKinley, "we are the only firm in Canada handling this hat, and its sales are unusually large. It is undoubtedly the proper hat for midsummer wear."

Passing up to the flower and feather department, the representative found business there about over for the season. "It has been a bad flower season," said the head of this department, "but, as I have kept my sales up and my stocks down, I cannot complain, though it has been a hard season to cater to, and we had to have the right goods to do the business."

Before leaving, THE REVIEW man asked Mr. Ivey about Fall goods. "You are rather early for that information," answered he. "The only feature of the season that I am in a position to make a statement regarding is colors. There are two new green tints, the 'Exposition' and the 'Universelle,' which are not only beautiful, but likely to be leaders. Purples and blues in new tints will also be strong; at least, the latest advices from Paris are to that effect. As our samples will not be in for some days, I cannot say more, but if you come again in two weeks or so, I will be able to show you the first of our samples of Fall goods."

MILLINERY PROSPECTS FOR JUNE.

The cold weather during the month of May has so curtailed the demand for jumbo sailors that The D. McCall Co., Limited, expect June to as a consequence be a busy month in these goods. One of the novelties in outing hats will be the "Lady-smith." This is a soft braid hat, made in the helmet shape, though it can be twisted into other shapes to suit wearers. It is trimmed very effectively with a large scarf in dark material with light stripes or spots. As anticipated by the wholesale trade, the demand for leghorn hats has been very large, but it is expected that it will be well maintained through June, and houses having large stocks of these goods will be fortunate.

In materials, chiffons in white, cream, tuscan and black still hold favor with the trade in general, and, notwithstanding the large quantity of these goods that have already been sold, the demand is still general, and will undoubtedly hold good throughout the season. Mechlin nets and other gauzy materials still hold their place in trimming effects along with black satin and velvet ribbons, which have had an immense sale during May.

J. F. Robinson, of West Lorne, Ont., has assigned to Gibbons & Harper, London, and the stock will be sold.

Mr. W. R. Smallpeice, of the W. R. Brock Co., Toronto, and Mr. W. P. Slessor, of the Montreal warehouse, are visiting the principal business centres and manufacturing towns of the adjoining republic in the interests of the company.

Messrs. Millichamp, Coyle & Co. have moved into the fine warehouse forming the east portion of the new McKinnon building, corner York and Wellington streets, Toronto. The offices of the new Canada Woollens, Limited, of which Messrs. Millichamp, Coyle & Co. are the selling agents, are in the same building.

As a result of the early-closing movement in Moncton, N.B., among the millinery establishments, all, with one exception, have agreed to close two nights in the week at six o'clock. The closing nights will be Tuesdays and Thursdays. It was originally intended to close at six five nights in the week, but, as the movement has not been unanimously favored, two nights have been agreed upon by those deciding to close.

Mr. Oulett has been in Toronto completing the purchase of the stock for the new store, and as soon as the building is completed the store will be opened for business.

A building site on the west side of Main street, Winnipeg, between Bannatyne and McDermot streets, has been purchased by The Imperial Dry Goods Co. The site has a frontage of 40 feet, and the company intend to erect on it a large business block, the greater part of which they will occupy. The property was purchased from William F. Alloway, who sold at a substantial advance over the price he paid for it a year ago.

Matheson, Townsend & Co., one of Sydney, C.B.'s, oldest and best known firms, are selling out and preparing to retire from business. Mr. D. Matheson, senior member of the firm, has been 37 years behind the counter, and Mr. Townsend, the junior partner, has been in the business for about 14 years. The firm has been always noted for the high character of its business methods.

The Dominion Suspender Co. are now occupying their new offices in the large and handsome addition just completed to their building at Niagara Falls. The firm have kept abreast of the times, and now enjoy an immense trade from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and do a large export trade with other countries as well.—Niagara Falls Review.

AN ENTERPRISING FIRM.

Mr. John Piercy, of the firm of J. Piercy & Co., wholesale dry goods, has arrived at Victoria, B.C., from an extended visit to the large Eastern cities, where he purchased immense stocks for the concern's rapidly increasing business. Orders amounting to upwards of $50,000 were placed with large manufacturing concerns, and the first shipments are commencing to arrive. The manufacturing branch of the establishment is a most important one, and the concern generally is the largest one of its kind west of Toronto. It is Mr. Piercy's intention to shortly incorporate a branch which will handle exclusively toys and fancy goods.

FASHIONS.

THE CHANGES IN MEN'S AND WOMEN'S COSTUMES DURING THE PAST FEW CENTURIES; WITH A BRIEF ACCOUNT OF HOW THEY HAVE BEEN EVOLVED FROM THE ORIGINAL MODES.

Specially written and illustrated for THE DRY GOODS REVIEW.

FASHION'S CHANGES—the bane and the boon of the dry goods merchant—are not peculiar to the present era, but have existed ever since our Mother Eve adorned herself with the leaves of the fig tree, and discarded this costume for a more pretentious one of skins and furs.

THE differences between one style and those preceding and following it were more pronounced than they are in today's fashions; but changes in dress came at far greater intervals—sometimes years apart—and not tumbling over each other as at present. In England, from the Norman Conquest till well on into the 15th century, the long flowing robe of the women suffered very little change. A few minor alterations in the girthing of the dress cover it nearly all.

COMMERCIAL and social intercourse with foreign nations, however, was destined to create a change in this. Trade with Oriental nations brought into the more civilized countries the jewels and rich materials of clothing and furnishing used by the great potentates of the East. The French court, characterized from its earliest times by a love of display, adopted many new ideas of dress, and used newer and richer materials for them. England, which, until very recently, invariably modeled her fashions after those of Paris, soon followed, and, in the reign of Henry IV., we find the simple caul of gold net that adorned the heads of the ladies of the higher class in Britain giving place to an enormous head-dress introduced into the country from France. This, in the reign of Edward IV., became the tall steeple-like cap we have so often seen in prints of this period. Toward the close of the 15th century a number of innovations started the onward march of fashion, which has arrived by gradual, sometimes almost imperceptible, development to the present dress of nearly all civilized peoples.

DURING this period the merchants had not the vast variety of materials and colors to show their customers that can be seen now on our dry goods counters.

ALTHOUGH the court ladies and gentlemen wore more brilliant colors than at present, the materials were mostly of woollen cloth and coarsely woven, except in the case of the sovereign or some very wealthy noble. Indeed, the laws permitted none but the King and nobles to wear rich materials. Goods brought from foreign countries could not be worn by the "common people," who were also compelled to buy cloth costing not more than two-pence a yard. Purple, in this period, became a mark of royalty, Edward IV. passing laws to that effect. About 1470, the tall head-dress went out of fashion and a sort of velvet cowl took its place, which, in turn, became the small black velvet cap of the Tudor period.

THERE were many widely different male costumes, the only part common to all being the long hose of cloth, ending in shoes of the same material. An undergarment of finer cloth, covered by a doublet or jacket, with sleeves sometimes reaching nearly to the ground, composed the most common dress of the gentlemen of this time. Long hose and boots reaching to the knee enclosed his limbs. The large sleeves of this costume a little later we find disappear, and in their stead a cape, fastened to the sleeves of the coat at the shoulder and elbow, is used. The practice of slitting the doublet at the elbow so as to show the undergarment began at the close of the 15th century, and this gave rise to the fashion of slashing the whole suit in almost every direction which became so much the rage in the Tudor period.

BRITISH DRESS IN 1450.

IN the reign of Henry VII. the great variety of fashions would render verbal description almost impossible. The one great innovation, which later became so important a part of the dress of a lady of quality, was the laced corsage. From the earliest Norman times the loose robe of the ladies was girdled around the waist with a heavy sash, or, in a few cases, by a small, leathern belt. This was abandoned and the dress, instead of being composed of one piece of cloth, was divided into a skirt and waist, the latter of which was at first laced very loosely and did not attain the length of later fashions. A great velvet hood with a sort of cape hanging over the shoulders was worn frequently at this time. In male costume there was not much change, although the quality of goods made and those imported into the country greatly improved. The trunks, which were developed from the skirts of former times, were made in this reign of two, and sometimes more, colors.

AS in these times the sovereign's taste for finery affected the fashions a great deal, we will not be surprised to find in the reign of the gay Henry VIII. some very radical changes. The costumes became much more elaborate and the materials richer. Travel and education had done a great deal for this, and all the newest fashions of the French court were brought to Britain. Very soon, the costumes of royalty and nobility came to be of great magnificence, and the "common people," who tried to vie in splendor with the court, also improved in their dress.

THE KING, however, was not willing to have himself and his nobles equalled in apparel by the "lower" classes, so he passed laws placing a limit on the dress of all subjects. Black jennets' furs, for instance, were permitted to the use of none but royalty; the nobility were given certain marks of distinction in material and color of costume which the "lower" classes were prohibited from using, and many other small privileges kept the commonality from becoming too gorgeous in their dress, and the merchant from making too much money.

BRITISH DRESS IN 1617.

THE drygoodsman in Henry VIII.'s reign had to conduct business in a very much more humble manner than he would to day. He peddled his wares, and had to content himself with small profits; for the nobility, to whom he looked to buy his goods, were not only hard bargainers, but apt to pay the merchant in promises, which he had to accept for fear of his noble customers' displeasure.

The court looked upon English made goods as inferior, and not fit for any but the laboring classes; while foreign goods found a ready sale. Foreign goods, however, were brought in at a great risk to the merchant in those days. Each merchant was his own importer, and with the continual warfare and piracy, so prevalent at the time, as well as the risk which his small, frail ships ran on the sea, his importations caused him great anxiety and often great loss,

THE male costume of Henry VIII.'s reign was a radical change from all the previous dresses of gentlemen from the time of the Norman Conquest. The hose were lengthened from the knees to the hips. The trunks were lowered to almost half-way to the knees, and continued from this time to be gradually elongated until the Stuart period. A short jacket, with cape-like sleeves reaching nearly to the elbow, was very often worn, from under which the sleeves and trunks, both of the same material and color, protruded. These were slit to a very great extent, showing the undergarment through each slit, and giving an appearance of padding to the whole suit. The female costume underwent almost as great a change. The short waist lengthened, and we find the very long narrow bodice, so often seen in Queen Elizabeth's reign, making its appearance here. The whole dress was much more elaborate, and the beautiful patterns of a later period had their beginning in the last part of Henry's reign.

PROBABLY no court in the history of Great Britain was as brilliant in the way of dress as that of Elizabeth. Being a woman, it is but natural to suppose that more attention would be paid to dress and display than if a male sovereign led the court. Elizabeth herself was most careful about her personal appearance, and, with all her masculine ability as a sovereign and diplomat, she was a woman in the matter of fashion. Trunks and stockings of woolen cloth, which had hitherto been worn by all, were now used by none but the poor people, the nobles and gentry abandoning them for silk and thread garments. The wide ruff which came in toward the last of Henry VIII.'s reign, became still larger at this time, and was worn by the gentlemen as well as the ladies. Although the costumes of this time did not change radically in design, they underwent a great reformation in regard to material. But, even with all the notice given to fashion, there remained the same style practically throughout the whole period, with very few alterations, until the Stuarts came to the throne.

BRITISH DRESS IN 1740.

THE first part of James I.'s reign (from 1603 onwards) produced no new styles, the dress being the same as worn in the time of Elizabeth. It is not until the middle of Charles I.'s reign that any great change is found in costume. A large number of new materials and patterns came in under James' rule, and gold cloth, brocaded silks, velvets, satins, tissues, etc., were used for the first time in Britain. The female costume was much the same as in the previous reign, with less padding and of still better goods. The wide, felt hat, adorned with a feather, was worn by the gentlemen of the last part of James I.'s reign, and the trunks, which by this time had been lengthened to the knee, were brought just below the knee and fastened to the leg with a tight band around the bottom. They soon lost the baggy appearance of former times, and in Charles I.'s reign had become knickerbockers. Although loose at first, they were gradually made tighter until the Hanoverian period, when we find them fitting the leg closely.

THE Commonwealth had a costume of its own. The staid Puritans, despising show, affected the simple, dark cloth suit we so frequently see in pictures of this period, and, although the Royalists continued to dress in the fashion of the court, the costume of the Puritans is the most conspicuous of the time.

FASHION again reigned supreme at the Restoration in 1666, and various minor alterations were made in dress. The long riding habit which is used to-day came in at this time, and has altered but very little since. Many beautiful laces are seen in the dress of this period, and these formed a large part of the costumes. Charles II. invented the original of the cutaway coat of to-day. It was at first a long, close vest of black cloth or velvet, reaching to the knees and cut square in front. The corners were pinned to the back in the Georges' time, and finally the turned-over portion was cut off altogether.

IN Anne's reign hoops first made their appearance, attaining enormous proportions, and were not finally abandoned until the French Revolution, when they gave place to the "Empire" gown. From this time the great radical changes in fashion in Britain disappear, and each new style is an alteration of some previous one. The high caps and huge head-dresses went out as the hoops came in, and the hair was done up more like it is to-day. The laced corsage was shortened to almost half its former length; ruffles and flounces made their appearance, and many other faddish variations of costumes were adopted.

THE close of the 18th century witnessed the only real innovation of the time. This was the introduction of frock coats, with loose trousers reaching to the ankles, and short boots underneath them. Although this is an entirely different style from all those previously in vogue, it still grew out of the knickerbocker costume of the first George.

BONNETS, too, are seen first at about this time, and, though small at first, it was not long before they were brought to the extreme in size that most new articles of apparel attained in those days. Until about 1830 the usual female dress was a long, short-waisted gown, a development of the Empire gown, generally accompanied by a high bonnet. This disappeared, however, and hoops became the fashion again, first narrow, and finally until 1870 wider even than in the days of Queen Anne. They were made smaller again and in 1876 went the way of all other styles and were seen no more.

SINCE Queen Victoria ascended the throne the different fashions would be almost innumerable. Quicker and safer means of transportation, cheaper manufacturing facilities, the prosperity that came with peace, and many other causes tended to produce the present large number of styles, materials and designs. The leaders of fashion, whose sole occupation is with their dress, cannot be satisfied with the same costume for two months in the year, and those of us who can afford it must follow their lead. The demand for something new is incessant and as long as the demand exists the supply will be found. We have, perhaps, reached a point where radical changes in dress cease, but variations in design, color and material, and fads and fancies of all degrees of absurdity will always be found to have their admirers. We must submit to the faddists, and can only wonder what next!

How to Train Young People.

The German Example which Canada Should Note.

OVER 24 years have elapsed since the movement having for its object the manual training of boys was inaugurated in Germany. In this space of time, over 2,000 teachers have given their cooperation to the movement; nevertheless, both the internal and the external conditions connected with this new branch of tuition leave much to be desired. The original training in home industries and home occupation has almost entirely disappeared; it is carried on at present only in a few places in Holstein and in 17 institutes for the blind. Most of the other educational establishments in Germany, including 18 orphanages and 46 deaf and dumb institutes, have already introduced manual training into their curriculum. But the endeavor to prepare the pupils in the schools direct for the eventful handicraft has obtained importance in only two of Germany's institutions of learning.

There exist at present in Germany, distributed in 605 places, 861 schools and institutes wherein manual training is carried on in 1,514 workshops. Of this number 836 schools and institutes conduct the training on a pedagogical basis. Prussia has 570 manual training schools, spread over 435 places and distributed among 596 workshops. Industrial centres take the lead, as follows: Prussia, Upper Silesia, the Renish Province, and the Kingdom of Saxony.

The 1,514 pupils' workshops comprise 286 independent manual-training schools and 238 public schools, of which 16 are auxiliary schools where the work is obligatory, 17 middle-class schools, 41 high schools—made up of eight gymnasiums, six technical gymnasiums, 12 technical and technical high schools, and 15 boarding schools—seven preparatory institutes, 26 teachers' seminaries, and 93 boys' asylums, while the remainder is made up of various kinds of private establishments. Sixty-nine institutes have adopted the whole curriculum as recommended by the German Association for the Dissemination of Manual Skill, while 16 dispense with the preparatory work; of the rest 177 schools and institutes confine themselves to three branches, 261 limit themselves to two, and the remainder to one branch only. Five hundred and thirty-five workshops are devoted to wood carving, 527 to working in cardboard, and 356 to the carpenter's bench; of these, 68 are closely connected with wood carving, 77 with preparatory roughing-out work, 35 with metal work, 28 with country timbering, 11 with turnery, and 11 with modeling in clay.

Pedagogical manual tuition has branched out in three directions: The practical formal method which regards handicraft as a means to general culture; the direction advocated by those who aim at the so-called school-manual dexterity, and the system which would make the manual training serve as the basis of individual branches of teaching and utilize these in order to influence the method of instruction in school. The first two are becoming more and more amalgamated. In the third direction, Professor Kumps, at Darmstadt, School Inspector Scherer, at Worms, and Rector Bruckmann, at Königsberg, Prussia, are at present engaged in making thorough experiments in public schools.

The participation of German teachers in the efforts of the German association is steadily increasing. Over 2,200 German teachers have up to now been taught to become instructors in manual training. Of these, 954 were taught in Leipzig and 1,250 acquired training in 33 places in other parts of Germany.

How to Meet Department Store Competition.

Prosperous City Houses Not Afraid of Big Stores—How Dry Goods Business is Built Up To-day.

Specially Reported for THE DRY GOODS REVIEW.

THE big department store is answerable for a severe competition in business during the past 10 years among dealers in different classes of goods throughout the country. But no one has been more affected by this competition than the dry goods merchant. Failures in city, town and hamlet have been ascribed to the trade of these stores. While some men, however, doing business far removed from department stores, have not being able to hold their trade, others have opened up business and prospered close to them and in spite of them. Why is it that some merchants are adversely affected by them? Is it the fault of the merchant, or is it impossible to combat the department store unless under certain conditions? This is a question about which there is more than one opinion, as may be seen in the answers of a number of prominent drygoodsmen of Toronto, who have done and are doing successful trades almost within sight of large department stores. THE DRY GOODS REVIEW has sought opinions with a view to solving the problem.

How One Firm Has Succeeded.

Mr. Walker, of Walker & McBean Co., whose well-trimmed windows and attractive place of business at 450 Spadina avenue, Toronto, draw the attention (and the trade) of any passer-by, did not know that he could say exactly what had made his firm so successful. The department stores did not have the influence over his business they once had; they had reached their limit in trade and would not grow any stronger. He claimed that he sold on the whole considerably lower than the department stores. "Look at that shirt waist," he said. "We sell it for 75c.; down town in one of the department stores they are advertising the same article as a good bargain at 90c. We sell this," indicating an English print, "for 12½c., while they ask 18c. for it, and on most of their bargains it is the same. We can undersell them on all but what they practically give away, and still make a fair profit. We do a strictly cash business both in buying and selling; buying from the same firms as they do and selling lower. A great many merchants want too much profit on their goods. The time is gone by when men make a big per cent., but many people don't realize that, and until they do they will have a hard time to get along. By selling close and keeping a carefully assorted stock we keep our customers' trade. We have people who have dealt here ever since we've been in the business (and we are an old-established house) and they say they can do better in bargains here than at the department stores. We have people come from the department stores to us to get suited, after failing to get what they want there. We suit our stock to our trade. Many merchants fail on account of their stock. They don't carry a proper assortment for their locality. I think if a man goes into business with a determination to succeed, and works hard toward that end, he is bound to get along."

To see Mr. Walker himself work in and about the store is to realize that he "practises what he preaches." There are 12 assistants in the store and they are kept busy. This indicates a pretty prosperous place, and when we consider that the firm has built itself up in the face of the department stores we must conclude that Mr. Walker is right in his closing sentence.

Value of

The Cash Basis.

Mr. Chas. E. Coatsworth does business at 310 Parliament street, Toronto, in a well-stocked and wide-awake-looking store. When the subject of department stores was mentioned, Mr. Coatsworth remarked that, so far as his business was concerned, he would not know that they existed. At one time they deprived him of a large part of his trade, but now he has the local custom well in hand. This he puts down to his prices more than anything else. He can sell closer than the department stores. Having greater expenses, it costs them more to sell an article than it does him, and they must sell for a higher price to make the same profit he does. A great many men are ruined by the department stores, he believes, because they are not fully up to their business. They want to do business in the old way, instead of keeping up with the times and competing with their fellows on an up-to-date basis. "They buy an article for 50c. and want $2.50 for it. If it happens to be worth more than its cost to him the merchant considers that he must make a certain per cent. on its value instead of on its cost to him, and, if he cannot get it, he thinks he is having a poor bargain." Not dealing in cash, too, is one of the reasons for a great many merchants giving up business. Especially should they buy for cash. "The man," said Mr. Coatsworth, "who can't take his cash discounts from the wholesale people had better stay out of the business." Some merchants, he thought, do not watch their trade closely enough, and, consequently, do not keep salable goods. Prices have to be low. Mr. Coatsworth sells reasonably low right along, and his customers know where to get what they want and what price they will have to pay for it. The bargains in the department stores do not always come when people have the ready money or the time to take advantage of them, but they know that at his place they can get the same article at any time at a fair bargain. Speaking of prices brought Mr. Coatsworth to remark that the advertisement that did not quote prices, no matter how excellent it may be in other ways, is not worth very much to the advertiser. People are interested in advertisements when the prices are printed with them, but a long list of goods advertised as being sold below cost is not as effective as an advertisement that does not claim so much, but shows in prices just what a customer can do at that store. Mr. Coatsworth has great faith in ticketing goods on the counters and in the windows with prices. People come in for a certain article and notice these prices on other things, taking the chance to get a good bargain; whereas, if the goods are not labelled, only those who were looking for such would think of asking the price, and anyone else would go out without them. Prices on goods not only attract notice, but give an appearance of a good bargain. The store with ticketed goods, in fact, looks as though its owner was not ashamed of his prices. Mr. Coatsworth finds his best results in advertising come from a small local paper. Keeping the stock out for inspection is another way in which he manages to sell so large a quantity. A great many men, he thought, made the mistake of keeping their goods under cover until asked for. When people buy an article there is always something else they would like to get with the change. If this something is out before their eyes they will likely purchase it. It is the change from bills that the wide-awake merchant looks after. Mr. Coatsworth started in business with big opposition, and good judgment in buying and managing has made his store a successful one. He does entirely a cash business.

Advocates the Cooperative System.

Mr. Chas. S. Botsford, the manager of the Cooperative Store at 524 Queen street west, Toronto, did not think it possible for a country merchant, unless under very favorable conditions, to compete with the department store. The biggest curse the merchant in the country had to put up with was the cheapness of the post office order. For practically nothing the department stores could ship their goods all over the country. It was useless to speak of people not getting good bargains at the big stores. There were many good bargains to be had there that no ordinary merchant could afford to sell. There were many things almost given away as with $400 a year purchase, if we suppose him to be paid 10 per cent. dividend (and many cooperative stores pay from 13 to 18 per cent. dividend), would double his money in three years." Mr. Botsford thought that the people would support a store in which they were financially interested. By investing in the company's stock they become part owners of the store, and naturally would try to help it along. He mentioned that the Seigel-Cooper Co., of New York and Chicago, large department stores had been recently turned into cooperative stores.

Two More Thriving Firms.

Mr. T. S. Lobb, 778 Queen street east, Toronto, who is the proprietor of a flourishing dry goods store, has built up his business during the past few years in spite of department stores. He attributes his success to his training as a buyer for a large English firm. A merchant should learn to buy well and the rest is not so difficult. "Buy little and often" was Mr. Lobb's motto. He advertises in the local paper in preference to a large daily. At certain seasons of the year, Spring and an advertisement, and the loss made up on something else. These bargains ruin the smaller merchant. The only remedy Mr. Botsford knew of for this state of affairs was that furnished by the cooperative store.

"I think," said he, "it is the solution of the difficulty. It has been in England, where a few years ago the merchants of the smaller places were hampered by the big department stores just as they are here to-day. Of course, the cooperative store will not do away with them altogether, but it will limit their trade. I think it would be the best thing for country merchants to do to keep the local trade. We have not been running long, but we have not much fear of the final result. We allow anyone to buy shares in the company, and at the end of a year he gets a dividend on the stock, and, besides, 5 per cent. of his year's purchases, in cash or goods, is given to him. A year's purchase for a fairly good customer would amount to about $400. A man with $100 stock in this company

Fall, he gets out hand bills, from which he claims to get good results. He does business on a close margin and never hears the prices of the department stores quoted to him. A good deal depended on a man's own individuality, Mr. Lobb believed. He thought the failures had about stopped and that the department stores had ceased to grow.

Mr. A. A. McKay, 292, 294 and 296 Queen street east, Toronto, was very busy when THE REVIEW called, and could only stop to say: "Of course it's all in the buying. We buy for cash and make whatever there is to be made out of discounts. We advertise in a local paper and get good results from it. We just keep pegging away, doing our best, and get along all right." Mr. McKay is going into the department business in a small way himself, several kinds of stock having been added to the dry goods. The windows of this store bear the significant sign: "The money-saver," which provides a reason for all customers who trade there once to go again.

The Trend in Colors for Fall and Winter.

Paris Ideas and Their Probabilities.

IN dealing with the color charts or cards issued every month by leading French syndicates, The Dry Goods Economist says the color card should influence the buyer of materials to a certain extent, and to a certain extent only. He may judge from it what the style card calculates upon as being the most useful and the most likely to be demanded. He should not think that the card affords any guarantee as to which of these tints will have extreme popularity. Colors are presented in certain depths and tones in order to prevent confusion in dyeing and manufacturing.

And there is another thing. With our drygoodsmen and, in fact, with those of all the world, the leading tint in dress goods, silk fabrics and other goods will be black. Black does not appear on the color card, but black will appear on the shelves of the leading houses in the greatest quantities during the coming season. The Economist's opinion, drawn from experience, is that the gums, browns and greys will have the next place in popularity. What anyone may care to do in reds, greens and helios is his own business, and should depend entirely upon the opinions, feelings, habits and character of the trade which he supplies.

THE KHAKI TINTS.

In two of the ribbon, silk and velvet and the woollen and dress goods cards this season there are several indications as to the colors that are likely to prove leading features of the Fall and Winter work.

Among these is the dominance of khaki tints. That brown cloth of cotton, first worn in India, and more recently transported to almost every quarter of the globe by the armed forces of America and England, evidently occupies a prominent position in the French mind. There was already a tendency, however, to adopt the beaver and gum shades as a leading, safe and satisfactory line of nuances, into which every variety of material known to the trade could be safely dyed with an assurance of popularity with distributors and wearers. Khaki in its lightest and its darkest tints is apt to be extremely popular and very welcome.

AMUSING NAMES.

There is an element of the amusing in the names which have been given to the various tints in this scale of color. In the silk card, starting with the light tan and proceeding to the darker shadings, we have (when translated) such names as tow, flax, hemp, then khaki, Transvaal soil and Cape of Good Hope. Then follows a second range in a little more yellowish tint, which includes giraffe, then khaki, kopje, mule, Midas and ermite.

In the cloth color card the khaki tints are still more emphasized, a special line being drawn around them to show that they are prominent in the construction of the season's shadings. Again the names suggest the derivation, from the lightest, Boer, passing through Natal, mine d'or (gold mine), Roberts, Pretoria and finally Le Cap, or the Cape.

BEAUTIFUL SILVER GREYS.

As a contrast to this line of brownish and yellowish brown and beaver shades, which are suited especially to brunette wear, the cloth card shows a beautiful range of the silver greys which usually appear as a foil to the line of tans whenever it is prominent.

The colors here are pure, and range from a very delicate pearl, called bastille, through silver, platinum and very delicate greys, called by the Exposition names of Luxembourg, Trocadero, Vieux Paris, chatelet and louvre.

There is, however, a second range of tan shades in the cloth color card, which bear the impression of the outing idea. These are the automobile tints apparently, and suggest that these colors—which are pinkish in hue—are to be worn for a variety of such wear. However, that does not necessarily follow. Putting guesswork on one side, they simply stand as another range of tan and gum shades, provided with a view to supplying the variety necessary to a choice.

These tints are called, from the lightest to the darkest, veloce, touring, chauffeur, chacal, verre, fume and ruine.

STRIKING POINTS.

In the cloth card appear two striking and important assortments, complements of each other. A line of reds, starting from a vivid sanguine, or blood red, and passing through a range of these shades to a dull, rich grenat—which in this instance is called campeche—is a marked hint as to what may be expected in the reintroduction of red, both as a contrast and as a color for whole gowns.

The greens, which are characteristically and humorously named, are also a reintroduction—a coming back, if you will—of a color which has been very frequently in the style world the greatest of all favorites. The tints are of the grass and verdure class. There is no suggestion of the brownish or yellowish olives in this particular line, which is very aptly named, from the lightest to the darkest, Erin, Gael, Dublin, Kildare, Patrick and Paddy.

There are both humor and appropriateness in the names of these colors, which are very apt to be extremely popular in Paris, since with the French people sympathy and enthusiasm have much to do with style vogue. Having exhausted the Russian craze, the French people, ever eager to go wild over something, are very apt to carry the English khaki and the Irish green tints to an important position. There is also method in the combination, as, though the British are not particular favorites with the French, the general disposition at this moment is to forget old scores in the interests of the Exposition.

The only tints not accorded a strong position are the olives and blues. While the latter are present to a considerable extent in the lighter tints, and, of course, a range of blues is invariably present in a French list of styles, blue is not likely to obtain any great prominence, and olive greens not at all.

THE LIGHT SHADES.

The light shades are divided between two ideas, which, in the last analysis, are very near approaches to the popular pastel tints of the last season. In both instances, however, they are modifications.

In the cloth card these are named the "Nuances Trianon," by which are probably meant the shades used in the decoration of the rooms of the villa erected at Versailles by Maria Antoinette. These are the delicate blues, pinks, greens, purples, roses, lilacs, and other faint hues which are commonly noted in Sevres and other delicate French chinass.

The colors are shown in about 30 or 40 tintings, and bear the names of artists, statesmen, musicians and soldiers of the period of Marie Antoinette. These tints are delicate and transparent, and are less chalky and whitish than the pastel colors.

In the silk card the light tints intended for ribbons, the contrasts in panne, long plushes and other delicate fabrics are a trifle different from anything shown for some time. They are called "Nuances Dragees," or sugar-plum shades, and have the tintings which usually appear in fine French bonbons—light, delicate, yet firm and opaque. They are, indeed, absolutely free from transparence. The color seems to be on top of the fabric and not seen through either a misty or faded surface, as in either the pastel or the trianon tints.

No particular tint has prominence, unless it is the bluish casts, which are closely followed by the pinks, then the lilacs, then several greys, and an occasional green or cerise.

OTHER TINTS.

The silk card leads with khaki, followed by a series of delicate roses and pale-blue faded effects which are supposed to represent moonlit water. Then, there is again a line of blue-water tints, of a more greenish cast, which are supposed to represent sunlit water. Again comes a very vivid and peculiar line on the turquoise order, the names of which seem to be wholly arbitrary.

It is important to recognize that at least three differen classes of blues, each ranging from light to the medium tints, are to be utilized in the season's silk production.

There is a line of bluish-purples and one of helios of a very reddish cast.

Quite distinct from anything seen in some time is a line of green colorings of the grassy variety, following very closely the greens in the cloth card, but in lighter hues. They are called osier, Erin, shamrock, trefle, Irlande and espoir. Germanium reds, with a coral tendency, strengthening into a very vivid red of the coquelicot cast, are the last leading division of colors in the silk card. There are, of course, many varieties of every shade—dull roses, old greys, aster tints in peculiar blues, etc.—necessary to a full assortment of the shadings demanded by the mercantile world as adjunctive to the main tints of the season.

W. C. MACDONALD,
 Actuary

J. K. MACDONALD,
 Managing Director

From Dry Goods to Soldiering.

The Early Career of General Hector Macdonald.

THE brilliant career of General Hector Macdonald in Africa, both north and south, is doubly interesting from the fact that he began life as a clerk in a drapery, or dry goods, store in the city of Inverness, Scotland. This was the establishment of Mr. Mackay, now retired from business.

It appears that young Macdonald took to soldiering from the love of it, and that he went off suddenly, leaving his employer in the lurch. For this he was afterwards very sorry, in case he might have put that gentleman to inconvenience, and, in 1880, when colour-sergeant, and, therefore, still in the ranks, he wrote Mr. Mackay a letter.

It was a long one, and in its opening passages Hector expressed the utmost contrition, and begged his old employer's forgiveness "for an act committed nearly 10 years ago." That act was in getting drill lessons without his employer's knowledge and enlisting without his permission, thus breaking his apprenticeship agreement. Hector wrote: "I regret the duplicity I exhibited then, and the want of confidence in you might have occasioned had given him "many a pang of remorse." He adds:

—you who were always an indulgent—I fear too indulgent—always kind, and ever a cheerful and gentle master."

Hector, writing after that interval of 10 years, uses very harsh language towards himself for not frankly telling his employer that he wanted to be a soldier, and says that in the intervening years the thought of this and the possible embarrassment to business which his sudden and unannounced departure

"Many a time have I been on the eve of writing you to ask your forgiveness for my delinquency, but I became faint-hearted and feared being snubbed, and, to tell the truth, I might not have had the courage to do so now had it not been for a cutting which I saw from a newspaper a few days since, in which it was stated that eight years ago I had served as an assistant at another draper's establishment. Now, I know (and you know from my signature) that I was in your establishment—Mr. William Mackay, Association Buildings, Inverness.

"Of course, I have no wish, and your own good, strong and sound common sense will lead you to see that no end or good can be had by contradicting the report. Nevertheless, it opened a way for me to address you, for I felt not a little nettled—vain man—when being put down as Mr. ——'s production, whereas should anyone be credited with knocking sense into a stupid head, it should be you, and you alone.

"Now, you will please observe that any strides I made in my profession, or any more I may make, are due in a marked measure to the observance and initiation (so far as could be applied to a soldier's life) of your methodical and business-like manner of conducting your establishment; for I may add that what you taught—punctuality, order, cleanliness, method, and here I fell with you and received a lesson) implicit faith and obedience—are the main attributes of a good soldier.

"I need not say what caused me quitting your employ, yet it may be a good turn to you to say—never let your employes lodge with soldiers, or with those who were soldiers, for as sure as you do you may look out to losing some of them."

TROLLEY CAR AND THE MERCHANT.

STATISTICS giving the number of miles of electric railroads built during the past few years, as well as the number of lines in course of construction and projected, is something enormous. It is a wonderful showing of the progress of science and the energy of private enterprise, but back of it there is an economic condition that is worth looking into.

A trolley line between two towns or between a city and its suburbs brings each into a closer relationship with the other, in a business way as well as social, than the railroads do. It is much easier to get into an electric car than it is to go to the station and wait for a train. In Summer especially, a ride in an open electric car of eight or ten miles or more is a pleasure. It is reasonable to expect that a woman in doing her shopping would be more inclined to take a ride and do her shopping at a distance, especially if by taking the ride she would be enabled to reach a larger town and, perhaps, have a greater number of shops to select from. The expenditure of 10c. for an agreeable street car ride would certainly prove no obstacle in her visiting a neighboring town to do her shopping, and she would be very apt to avail herself of the opportunity. This would not only be the case with the women, who presumably have more leisure time than the men, but men, after working hours, would in all probability do the same thing. They would take their families to the neighboring town ostensibly for the ride, but some shopping would naturally be done. The merchant in the larger town, appreciating the advantage he would have, would in all probability take greater pains to advertise his store in the towns from which he would likely draw business on account of the electric road, and merchants in the smaller centres would find competition harder and keener than ever before. The trolley car is an important factor in business in many localities, and its influence cannot be safely ignored.—Chicago Dry Goods Reporter.

The superintendent of The Fair, Chicago, says every one of their 1,500 employes who have been with the concern one year gets a week's holidays with pay. Most of them get away between July 1 and September 1. Extra help is employed whenever necessary to supply the places of absentees. "We do not limit the length of the vacation to one week. Employes take more if desired, but we cannot afford to pay them for the time they are away over one week. I decide on all special cases, that is to say, employes who want to stay away over the regular week consult me, and I give them, so nearly as possible, the time they may desire. Many of our employes have gone abroad and been away four and six weeks. In order to stay away this length of time, however, they must have been in our employ three or four years at least."

DEPARTMENT "C."

The whole of our second floor is given up to this Department. It contains Dress Goods, Silks, Satins, Velvets, Velveteens, Costume Cloths and Costume Tweeds.

Very many times have friends from all over Canada and elsewhere said to us: "This is the handsomest and the best Dress Goods Department in the Dominion," to which we are sometimes tempted to add, "And in it are the handsomest goods in Canada."

You will naturally want to know what it will contain for the Incoming Season. We answer: All the leading novelties and best goods to be had.

You know we have always made Black Dress Goods a strong feature of our business. The ever-increasing support given us by the Trade warranted our doing so. For Fall, 1900, we made a special effort to do better than ever. It is for you to say if we have.

Nothing is so universally worn to-day as Black Dress Goods. The combination of black and white suits everyone. We have Black Dress Goods to retail from 15cts. to $7.00 per yard.

The British manufacturers, appreciating the Canadian trade, are now producing Black Dress Goods equal in value to the best foreign goods made. They are really producing better goods, because they understand the requirements of our country better than the foreign manufacturers. In the higher grades of British goods we are enabled, assisted by the change in our Tariff, to sell goods equal in style, and better value, at lower prices than can be procured in the foreign market.

We cannot describe in this limited space our Coloured and Fancy Dress Goods. We have the leading novelties in the latest productions, from the best makers, in the fashionable styles now in vogue. We have the greatest confidence in our goods being right, and have no hesitation in asking the Trade to place their orders with us.

We have an immense range of the latest novelties in Costume Tweeds, in both domestic and foreign manufacture, in plain and fancy effects, to retail from 20cts. to $2.50 per yard.

Plain Coloured Silks and Satins will be largely used in combination with plain and fancy Dress Goods. Some of our high-class Fancy Silks are the handsomest we have ever shown.

Velveteens—our old standard numbers, well-known to our friends, at old prices.

Corduroy Velveteens and Embroidered Velveteens for Blouses. Fancy Figured Velvets for high-class trade.

Lister's Black and Coloured Silk Velvets in over fifty shades. Lister's Sealettes.

Lister's White Bearskins for Infants' Coats. Opera Flannels in self colours, Silk Embroidered and Fancy Printed, extra value.

The Policy in Advertising.

Many shrewd advertisers are in the habit of saying that advertising does not pay as well to-day as it did 10 years ago. If true, this is a very sad state of affairs. Advertising is certainly better understood to-day than it was then, and is certainly done a great deal better, and there is no reason why it should not pay better.

It is a fact that advertising is received with a great deal more skepticism than ever before, and this is undoubtedly the reason of its failure in bringing results. If it does not pay now, it is because people have become disgusted with it through having been deceived before; business does not back up advertising, and therefore weakens it.

In the practice of advertising it is more important to do what you advertise than it is to advertise what you do.

Exaggeration is lying. To say that merchandise is worth two dollars when only worth a dollar and a half is just as much a lie as if you said it was worth fifty dollars when only worth a dollar and a half, though in the first case the lie is not quite so apt to be pointed out. In the last case everybody would call you a liar, but in the first case they would only think it. In the long run, one of these things may be just as bad as the other.

The reaction following deceit undoes the work of a great deal of good advertising. An advertisement that costs one hundred dollars may be lost by the deceptive advertisement of a five-cent article.

I have made these lengthy remarks on store honesty in advertising because I believe that the first underlying principle of successful business and successful advertising is absolute honesty.

FROM HAMIL'S POINT, LAKE JOSEPH, MUSKOKA LAKES DISTRICT.—Published by courtesy of the G.T.R.

Honesty is a great policy to follow, even if you do not care for it from principle.

The Truthful Store.

The store that wishes to succeed to-day, and expects to be more successful in the future, must, first of all things, be honest. Have nothing that you are ashamed for the public to know. You may have many things that you will not talk about in your advertisements, for there are many things in business which do not concern the public; but do not have anything that would hurt you if the public should find it out.

Be honest through and through, and not just where you fear you will be caught. The most important of all features of an advertisement is that it shall be absolutely truthful.

Lies Are Found Out.

In order that your advertisement may pay, it must be truthful. I do not believe that any store or business ever made a permanent success through deception. For a short while deception may pay, but no strong, permanent business can be built that way.

Three Ways of Advertising.

The advertising of a store may be divided into three parts: First, that which you may say about your business in print or otherwise.

Second, your store itself, its attractiveness in appearance inside and out.

Third, your business methods, or the way in which you treat persons who enter your store.

These three parts of store advertising are each dependent upon the other. All three must be good to make a great success at the present time. If any one of them is wrong it is apt to counterbalance the good of the other two to a very great extent. Advertising a store is a many-sided subject. It is just as important and just as good advertising to do business rightly as it is to make your business announcements to read rightly. In fact, it is better to have bad advertisements and good business methods than to have good advertisements and bad business methods, though there is no excuse why any store should not have both good. All that advertisements in the shape of printed or other announcements can do is to bring the customer to your place of business, or to induce him to send an order; when once he has visited you, or sent you an order, his future business depends almost entirely upon the way in which you treat him. It pays a store to be liberal in its business methods, to do anything that it can possibly do to please the customers.

The Customer's Good Word.

The more that you can please your customers, the more will be your success. Except in the case of perishable goods, which spoil to a certain extent in the handling, it pays a store to exchange or refund money cheerfully. When the customer finds that the article purchased can be exchanged or the money refunded, if desired, he not only buys more freely, but, at the same time, has more confidence in the merchandise which he has bought.

One class of advertising the merchant seldom counts upon is, in a certain sense, as important as any other—tongue advertising! If the people who visit your store go away pleased, they will speak a good word for you, and a good word from them will go a great deal further than a whole page of what you say about yourself. The more people you can have speak favorably about you, the greater will be your success.

Employees are a great factor in advertising. They can make or mar your success. The way in which they handle the customer, the politeness or attention they may give to those upon whom they are waiting, will do much toward making the customer come again. Perhaps the most important of all your business methods should be to see that the visitor to the store is rightly treated.

Gain and Loss of Customers.

The proprietor of any store can best study the public in two ways—either by coming into actual contact with them himself, or by gaining pointers from his employes, who do come into contact with the people. No employer should be a king who rules over his subjects at a distance. While it is not necessary that he should be on an equal footing with his employes, while he must retain their respect in all cases, he can come enough in touch with them to gain from them a thousand-and-one pointers which will be valuable in business.

It is comparatively easy to gain a customer who is in no way prejudiced either for or against you.

All liberal-minded people will be apt to give you a trial. If their experience is pleasant, they will try you again and again; but, if unpleasant, you cannot expect them to repeat their visit.

A customer once lost is hard to regain. How to recover a lost customer is the most difficult problem that the business man ever came in contact with. As a rule, a lost customer cannot be regained, except after long and patient efforts. The effort should begin by finding out why the customer is lost, and, if the fault lies with you or with your employes, the first thing to do is to acknowledge your error and make amends. If the fault lies wholly with the customer, the merchant has even then to sacrifice a great deal of his own pride, if he wishes to be successful in getting the customer back.

FINISH OF ENGLISH WOOLLENS.

There is no doubt that "handle" is the prime factor in the finish of all Bradford made textiles. It does not matter what class of finish is required, this is never lost sight of. The principal criticism which Bradford finishers make of American textiles is that the nature and weave of the cloth are not considered as they should be. The American fabrics, they say, appear to be too roughly and strongly handled while being finished. The vitality of the wool is considerably reduced; as one expert says, it is "done to death." The principal features in any marketable cloth due to the application of finish are a soft, full handle, a compact texture, a permanent lustre, and firmness, combined with solidity. Climatic conditions favor England. The atmosphere of England is damp, and this, it is well known, feeds the wool fibre, wool being very hygroscopic in its nature, readily absorbing moisture from the atmosphere, and retaining it with considerable tenacity. The moisture is removed in manufacturing, and the fabric restored by the finisher to its original state, something that is apparently forgotten by American finishers, says an English authority, who do not seem to comprehend that wool, when woven into a piece, can be easily and permanently spoiled.

WOOL FINISHING WORKS.

WOOLLEN GARMENTS MADE UNHEALTHY AND VERY EXPENSIVE BY SHRINKING.

Constant complaints have been made of the unsatisfactory character of woollen garments, both on account of the loss of size through their shrinking in wear and of the insuperable difficulty of getting them washed in such a manner as to retain their size.

Many medical men complained, and not without good reason, of the unhealthy character of woollen garments when they had become shrunken and matted up by wear and washing, as, instead of allowing the effete matter thrown off from the skin to be easily washed out, such matters became locked up in the fabric, and so were retained in contact with the skin in a most unhealthy manner. These defects are remedied by Delta Finish.

THE ADVANTAGES OF DELTA FINISH.

1. Delta Finished Goods will not shrink. This statement is borne out by some years' experience and many testimonials.
2. Delta Finish preserves the elasticity of goods until worn out.
3. Delta Finish preserves the softness of the wool, and so affords great comfort to the wearer.
4. Delta Finish permits the perspiration to pass freely from the body.
5. Delta Finish allows the matters which are exuded from the skin to be thoroughly and easily washed out from the garments.
6. Delta Finish thus renders underwear garments thoroughly healthy in wear.

WOOLLEN UNDERWEAR RENDERED HEALTHY AND ECONOMICAL.

DELTA FINISHED goods meet a long-felt need, as, by their elasticity, they are not only very comfortable in wear, but allow the free passage of the perspiration, which is so conducive to good health.

Not only so, but Delta Finished goods can be washed and well rinsed in warm water to clear out all the soap and unhealthy matters without causing the matting up of the fabric.

Thus, Delta Finish, by supplying a garment which is permanently elastic, affords great comfort to the wearer at the same time, inasmuch as garments so treated can be cleansed by washing and rinsing, supplying him with a really clean and wholesome garment.

These Two Undervests

Were taken from the same dozen and were exactly the same size. One was treated with Delta Finish, then both were tested in one operation for shrinkability. The result is shown to the left. Delta is as large as before testing; the other is 5 in shorter and 1 1/4 in. narrower.

The Famous Russian Fair.

Where Merchants and Consumers Meet to Buy and Barter.

ALTHOUGH the fairs of the world no longer possess that degree of interest which formerly attached to them, chiefly owing to the rapid development of the means of communication, yet the Russian Empire has retained many fairs, the importance of which cannot be too highly appreciated in connection with its commerce, especially that of the inland provinces. Of all Russian fairs that of Nijni-Novgorod always has been and still is by far the most important. In fact, this fair is the most important in the whole world.

It is a matter of extreme difficulty to specify exactly what is the turnover of these Russian fairs. Early in the present decade an attempt was made by the Russian Government to establish the number of fairs yearly held in Russia. The result of the enumeration showed that at least 2,825 were held yearly, and that their aggregate turnover amounted to over 600,000,000 roubles. About 82 per cent. of all the Russian fairs bear the character of village fairs (bazaars), in which all articles needed for rural economy are handled.

The geographical situation of Nijni-Novgorod is a most important factor in developing its magnitude. Situated at the junction of the Volga and the Oka, it is extremely convenient for communication by water with any part of the Empire. In fact, there is no other point in Russia which could be selected and would furnish the geographical advantages which Nijni-Novgorod possesses. This alone would explain why its fair has always held and still holds a unique position in the Russian mercantile world. The central industrial governments of European Russia send their manufactured goods to the fair; the Ural Mountains their metals; Siberia, its furs, skins, wax, oil, tallow and other agricultural products; the Kama, its salt; and the Lower Volga its fish; the Caucasus, naphtha products and wine; Central Asia, cotton and lamb-skins; Persia, its fruits; China, its tea; the Southwestern region, sugar; the Middle Volga Government, wheat, timber, and other goods; Little Russia, its tobacco; Western Europe, its manufactured goods, groceries and wines and spirits.

A vast number of people congregate in its fair. On an average there are about 200,000 visitors. Although, in general, the Nijni-Novgorod fair has the usual Asiatic coloring, yet the Russian element predominates, and the Asiatics form a relatively small percentage. The Asiatics chiefly take manufactured goods in exchange for their wares, although they sometimes prefer to make the exchange in coin. Many raw materials being dealt in at the fair, the operations are participated in by foreigners. The greater part of the dealings at the fair are done on credit, and the bills are issued for six, nine and twelve months, or even longer terms, and frequently coincide with the periods of the Irbit'sk fairs. In general, it would be impossible to mention any dealings which are not carried on here, from the largest to the most insignificant.

It has been asserted on many sides that the great Siberian Railway will alter the fair in many respects, and that it will cause the defection of several markets which have hitherto been more or less dependent upon the fair; but the place of these most probably will be taken by others. The most prominent Russian authorities agree, however, in stating that the attendance of merchants will go on increasing, and that the fate of the fair will only be doomed when we see an entirely new order of things, when Central Asia has its own exchanges, banks, and commercial business houses, whose staff shall have the same grasp of commercial knowledge as their confreres of the west. Had the fair ministered to Russia only it would have died out even in our day; but it must be remembered that it carries on an enormous trade with the East, where culture is at a low ebb, and where the habits and customs of the darkest ages of antiquity are still firmly rooted. For these reasons, therefore, the Nijni-Novgorod fair is still in its full vigor, and the time has not yet come for it to show any symptom of decadence.

The opening of the fair is held on July 15, with the accompaniment of the most religious ceremonies. At this time the fair gives the impression of emptiness; only a few merchants have arrived and these are busily engaged arranging their goods. By July 25 all the shops are in full swing and the great majority of the owners and managers have put in an appearance. The Siberian traders are the first to appear on the scene, and they hasten to satisfy their requirements so as to be in time to get home before the Winter sets in. Then, follow in succession Caucasians, Persians, the traders from Central Asia, and the Chinese. Western Europeans are generally the latest to reach the place. The working day commences very early in the morning. The shops open at about 6 o'clock and by 7 o'clock trade is already brisk. Important transactions are conducted in the upper private apartments, over a cup of steaming tea. At the beginning of the fair considerable tact and care are requisite on the part of the merchants and managers, for any ill-considered move in the way of too rapid a reduction in prices or the maintenance of too firm an attitude might spoil the market and cause the loss of customers; but once prices have become fixed, when the demand has been gauged, and the available supplies ascertained, things go on smoothly of their own accord.

The goods which are chiefly sold at Nijni-Novgorod are the following: Cotton and cotton prints, woollen goods, linen and flax goods, cordage of all kinds, silk and cotton-silk goods, furs, skins and leather goods, metals, hardware, cutlery, machinery, implements and tools, preserved fish, sugar, tea, Bokhara, Khiva, Chinese and Persian goods, groceries, wine and spirits from Western Europe, etc.

Trade Pointers of Various Kinds.

Sales of Fall Dress Goods.

Just what may be expected of plaids is not easy of detection at this stage, says The Chicago Reporter. Good lines of plaids have been put into jobbing assortments, and their reception is already encouraging in some sections. Plaid back materials are again enjoying some attention in the best retail departments, but the plaid is not an item of much prominence. Every buyer placing advance orders needs to give the black aggregation special attention. The staple nature of black is never lost sight of, but there are reasons to believe an exceptionally strong black season is about to unfold. Favor is likely to be distributed between an extensive collection of plains of all descriptions and very artistic fancies, showing bright-set figures and conventional designs.

Care of Silverware Stock.

The best way to clean such objects as are usually found on a silver table, is to wash them in a basin with soap and warm water, using a nail brush with some hair on it, not stiff and unyielding fibres, to remove any solid dirt which may have accumulated anywhere. Another good plan is to use warm water, to which ammonia has been added. There is nothing quite so good as ammonia on a wet sponge for removing the dark tarnish. Cloudy ammonia is one of the handiest and most satisfactory forms of this cleansing medium.

Dents or bulges on the sides of cups, or on flat surfaces, can often be removed by continuous rubbing or pressure from the other side; but, if the dent has been caused by a sharp instrument, or by something pointed falling on or knocking the silver, careful hammering by a chaser is necessary, followed by burnishing.

Opinions differ as to what is the proper hue for silver, and tastes vary in this, as in all else, some preferring the crude brilliancy of an absolutely fresh polish, while others prefer the semi oxidized appearance induced by the sulphides in the air.

Books for City Stores.

When properly managed, the book department has proved to be one of the most profitable of the many divisions of a great store. Few people realize how many considerations arise in the buying and selling of books. A great many stores have had an experience something like this: A fairly well-read man is selected to run the department; any available space is chosen, generally in some out-of-the-way corner which cannot be profitably used for some of the established departments; a stock of books is bought, and then it is left to take care of itself. In reality, the proper merchandising of books requires much thought and experience. Public taste is as hard to gauge in books as it is in silks; different localities require different styles; the seasons vary as much as in any of the other departments. Good bookmen are scarce, and generally hold positions at good salaries, which they are not likely to relinquish. In selecting a location for the book department, it should be remembered that a very large percentage of the sales will result from a momentary impulse of the purchaser. A lady entering the store to make some other purchase, passes through the book section; the chances are that she will stop to look at the display of new books, and a good salesman will generally sell her some volume. But the salesman must not intrude; the visitor must be allowed to "browse" among the books without interruption, the salesman keeping in sight to take the order when it is ready. Most unprofitable book departments are failures for one or both of two reasons: a poor selection of books or a poor location. For several years The H. B. Claflin Company have been making a specialty of books for department stores. Under the guidance of George E. Brightson, manager of the notion department, and a corps of carefully selected bookmen, this section has grown wonderfully. They now supply any book published anywhere in the world, and quote prices made possible only by the immense business done. They are now making a specialty of the installation of book departments—selecting the lines, overseeing displays, supplying experienced men to take charge of the stock. Thus, the department is built up and made to prosper under the personal supervision of the most successful men in the book trade. When everything is working smoothly and on a paying basis, the agents of The Claflin Company resign the guidance into the hands of those selected by the store management to take charge. This is a subject which deserves careful inquiry and consideration from every department store in the land.—Fabrics, Fancy Goods, and Notions.

Value of Advertising.

It occasionally happens that newspapers make a typographical error in printing an advertisement. It is within the writer's recollection that a figure "2" was left out in the advertisement of a big New York house, so that fine suits were advertised to be sold at $2.75 when the price was $22.75. That mistake cost The New York World quite a sum, even though the house itself did everything it could to prevent loss to the paper.

Efforts were made to explain the mistake to customers, but in many cases this was not possible. Numerous working women had given up their day's labor in order to obtain one of the suits at the extraordinary price, and if they had not obtained it they would have themselves been out of pocket. Then, too, many customers who did not understand English very well could not be made to appreciate the situation.

Of course, in the case of typographical errors it is not only necessary but customary for the newspaper to stand the loss. An instance of this kind was brought to our attention last week by John H. Taft & Co., Cedar Rapids, Ia. The Morning Republican of that city quoted 25c. French gingham as reduced to 2½c., the figure "1," which made the price 12½c., having apparently dropped out while the paper was on the press.

The firm inform us that their store was stampeded. The goods had been placed on sale at 8.30 a.m. in the wash goods section on the third floor. In spite of the fact that the advertisement read "10-yard limit," the goods sold so rapidly that it was necessary to remove the stock to the basement, and the sale continued until closing time, the basement being crowded all day. The mistake cost The Morning Republican $185.96.

John H. Taft & Co. express the belief that the sale was the greatest in the West, and one that will long be remembered by the people of their city.

This is a very interesting little experience, and one which suggests the thought, how many retailers would hesitate to spend $150 or more in selling a lot of goods at a similarly low figure in order to create a sensation and impress the store upon the minds of the public? The sale indicates that such a course would prove a profitable one. This sale, occurring through a mistake, shows what a low price will do. Of course, the loss on the goods should be charged fairly and squarely to advertising, and it should be considered as a legitimate expense. Why not try it once in a while?—Dry Goods Economist.

Seal Fishing off Newfoundland.

An Industry on our Atlantic Coasts.

By a Newfoundland Correspondent.

THE seal fishery is of recent date and not quite 100 years old. As one writer says: "It would appear that the attention of our people was so absorbed in capturing and curing cod that they neglected the oleaginous treasures which the vast icefields every year brought within their reach, and the great seal herds were left to bring forth their young amid the icy solitudes undisturbed by the muderous gun, club and knife of the seal hunter. But this condition of the seal was not to last forever. The day at last came when the hunters forced their way through the crystal ramparts by which nature had so long guarded the helpless innocents. The nursery of countless mother seals was transformed into a slaughter-house, red with the blood of their murdered darlings, slain in their icy cradles; and it became a scene of horror and death. Such is the seal hunt of to-day, involving each year a vast destruction of old and young seal life for the benefit of man."

In the early part of winter the seal is migratory in its habits, and the first attempts to take them were made with nets of stout twine set in narrow passages along the shore, but only small quantities were captured in this way.

Next, large boats were used, from which the seals were shot as they appeared on the surface, but, as these skiffs were not built to cope with ice, this was also abandoned, and the next important step was in the building and fitting out of schooners, from 50 tons and upwards, properly equipped with all appliances for encountering ice and manned with from 10 to 20 men. These first were so successful that others followed, and in the Spring of 1857 some 400 vessels, their united crews numbering nearly 12,000 men, took part in the fishery.

In 1863, the first steamers sailed for the ice fields, and these rapidly increasing, soon forced the sealing schooners out of the field. In 1866 there were 170 vessels and five steamers. In 1873 there were 18 steamers and in 1885 25 steamers. At present there are 22 steamers and 50 small schooners. These steamers are from 350 to 550 tons burthen and carrying from 200 to 300 men. The large ones can bring, when loaded, from 32,000 to 40,000 seals.

Harvey, in his article on the seal fishery, gives an instance of the largest trip ever brought in, 40,000 in the steamship Neptune, Capt. Sam Blandford, "Newfoundland's Greatest Sealer," the weight of the fat being 894 tons, value $103,750, or £20,000 sterling. Also, in 1885, the steamship Resolute brought in 34,628 seals, gross weight 772 tons, and steamship Ranger 36,112 seals, weighing 755 tons. Of course, these are exceptionally good fares.

Not unfrequently a ship returns to port "clean." That, in sealing parlance, means without a single pelt. In unfortunate years the catch does not exceed 160,000. The best year, 1891, 539,084 seals were brought in. In 1893, 129,081. In 1897, 126,500, the smallest catches yet recorded.

Steamers are prohibited from making second trips, and no seals are to be killed after April 20, and further, no steamer is allowed to leave port before March 10, and no seals are to be killed before March 12. These regulations are rigidly enforced, and any sealing captain convicted of a breach is fined in the sum of £2,000.

Young seals are born on the ice carried past the Newfoundland shores by the Arctic current from February 15 to 20, and, as their growth is more rapid and their yield of oil of a much finer quality than that of the old seal, they are more eagerly sought after by the hunters. They are at their best by March 16, and then the sealer is in his glory.

When the vessel reaches an icefield with seals in sight, the men are (to use another sealing term) "thrown overboard," and the slaughter begins. A smart blow on the nose kills the young seal, and the "sculpting knife" of the hunter is quickly at work, detaching the skin with its adherent fat from the carcass, which is left on the ice. After a few hours' work, each man "lines up" his pelts and turns them to the vessel, where they are hoisted aboard and stowed in the holds.

On the arrival of the vessel at St. John's the skins are landed and the fat separated from them after which process known as "skinning" the former are salted for export the fat being "vatted" for manufacturing into oil.

From 1858 to 1894 inclusive, the enormous quantity of 9,312,359 seals were taken.

In 1895 the number of steam vessels engaged in the fishery was 20, with a tonnage of 6,220 and crews amounting to 4,680 men. The seals taken by them were 270,000, tons weight 6,150. The greatest number for an individual ship was the Neptune, Capt. S Blandford, with 32,300, weighing 924 tons. From 1885 to 1892 inclusive, the value of seal oil and skins exported from Newfoundland aggregated $5,000,000.

In 1896 the following steamers sailed from St. John's and other ports: Hope, Vanguard, Greenland, Panther, Iceland, Mastiff, Ranger, Nimrod, Windsor Lake, Neptune, Aurora, Diana, Walrus, Kite, Leopard, Labrador, Wolf, Algerine, Newfoundland, Harlaw, Terra Nova and Esquimaux—twenty-two in all. Of these, the Newfoundland and Harlaw are not reckoned as Newfoundland steamers, being owned by a Halifax company.

The total number of seals taken by this fleet reached 187,000, the Neptune again leading with 22,500, weighing 504 tons. Two out of the 22 never returned, viz., the Wolf and Windsor Lake. Both these vessels were caught in the ice, crushed and abandoned, their crews being received on board other vessels. The Hope broke her main shaft and was towed into St. John's, while the Vanguard, Ranger and Walrus were more or less injured, but not enough to prevent them from finishing the voyage.

In 1897, 20 vessels of 6,227 tons, with crews numbering 4,800 men, took part in the fishery. This season was a very poor one, the total catch being only 126,500, weight in tons 2,737. The palm for the large trip this year was taken by the Aurora, Capt. Arthur Jackman, with 28,000 seals.

In 1898, 19 vessels of 5,720 tons, manned by 4,838 souls, prosecuted the sealing industry and brought in 243,000 seals, the Aurora again being high line with 25,660. The Spring of 1898 will be well remembered by the disaster which happened to the Green and Captain Barbour, whereby 23 men perished on the ice. This Spring also there was an increase in the number of schooners, owing to a bounty of $4 per ton being paid by the Government to the owners of every schooner engaged in the fishery.

In 1899, about 20 vessels engaged in the industry.

That the introduction of steam in the seal fishery has been the means of causing a falling off in the number of hands employed, is well known, and there have been agitators who want the Legislature to abolish them altogether, but, to again quote the words of our historian: "As well expect the abolition of the railway and the restoration of stage coaches." The steamer in the seal fishery is here—to stay.

Good Advertising

For Wide Awake Retailers

By F. James Gibson.

Our "Good Advertising" department is to help our subscribers to do better advertising. The gentleman whom we have selected as its conductor is well-known as one of the foremost advertising specialists of the day. Any of our readers who desire the benefit of Mr. Gibson's criticisms on advertisements or advertising methods, or his advice on any advertising subject, can have it or both entirely free of charge by writing to him in care of this journal.

If correspondents so desire, fictitious names or initials may be used for publication. But all requests should be accompanied by the subscriber's name.

Every now and then one hears of retailers in small towns making agreements among themselves not to patronize "fake advertising schemes." Why they cannot individually fail to patronize them without agreeing to do so is not clear to our mind; but, perhaps, there is a certain strengthening and buttressing effect in making the agreement. To know that if one breaks the agreement he will be the only ass in the town, probably prevents many a merchant with a paucity of will-power from taking the risk of securing such a distinction.—Printers' Ink.

A LARGE portion of country advertisers' appropriations is wasted on these "fake" schemes. By a "fake" scheme I mean a scheme that can't justify itself on its own merits as an advertising proposition. Many advertisers go into these "fake" schemes in order to please a customer or someone in a position, or a fancied position, to influence trade. These schemes are legion. They include schemes all they way from church-fair programmes to "fake" write-ups. A great many apparently well-intentioned people seem to look upon the advertiser as fair prey for any sort of old thing in the way of a scheme. If the Ladies' Aid of one of the village churches give an entertainment in the music hall or elsewhere, they must perforce have a programme printed. Of course, the programme is of no earthly (or heavenly) use as a programme, because no one reads it, or is expected to read it. But think of the chance it gives the "Ladies' Aid" to go around and "work" the local merchants and other advertisers! The church is supposed to need the money, and so the workers hustle out to get it. And the money so donated is charged to "Advertising," instead of being charged to "Religion." As such advertising is never, by any chance, of the slightest use as advertising, a distinct injury is done to the cause of advertising. Of course, it is quite right to give money to good purposes, and when it is necessary to raise money for such purposes, probably no harm is done to anything except, as just stated, to the cause of advertising. But let no merchant, or anyone else who spends his advertising appropriation in this way, deceive himself into thinking he is an advertiser. He is not an advertiser. Indeed, he doesn't understand the first principles of advertising. Advertising is publicity. Putting one's money in an advertisement where no one will ever see it, and where no one expects anyone to see it, is not advertising. It may be religion, or charity, or soft-heartedness, or downright foolishness, or what not, but it distinctly is NOT ADVERTISING. A merchant who appropriates a certain amount for advertising and then deliberately spends it in something else in the guise of advertising is foolish; and he is none the less foolish because he thinks he is an advertiser.

This custom of "working" the advertisers by churches, lodges, societies, and other associations has grown to such an extent that it is not surprising that advertisers, as related by Printers' Ink, are seeking to band themselves together in order to offer the better resistance. But why make any agreement among themselves? Why can't each advertiser be man enough to make a stand for himself? Unless there is this manliness the evil complained of will never be overcome.

But probably the most seductive and insidious of all the "fake" schemes is the "write-up." This is a "fake" game pure and simple. It is true that it does not, as a rule, masquerade in the disguise of charity or religion, yet such is the weakness of human nature, and the inherent desire to see one's name or photograph in print, that a couple of smart write-up fiends can go into almost any town or city and make a good thing out of it. The best way is to have nothing to do with any advertising that is not "straight goods."

I have noticed recently in Canadian advertising quite an outbreak of patriotism. There seems to be quite a tendency to use the South-African War, and scenes and circumstances connected with it, for advertising purposes. This course is certainly quite understandable even if not good business, which is to say good advertising.

The question is: Why should an advertiser work into an advertisement something that has really nothing to do with it? Does he strengthen the advertisement thereby or weaken it? I say that he always weakens it. He weakens it, because by so doing he admits that something extraneous is required. This truth is illustrated by a large advertisement of Messrs. Grafton & Co., of Dundas, Ont., that I have before me as I write. The advertisement is of several kinds of dry goods. A part is of wash skirts and is illustrated (?) by a picture of a bugler with military tents in the background. The picture, as will be seen by the reduced reproduction herewith, has nothing in the world to do with wash skirts or dry goods of any kind.

I will venture to say, without fear of even any denial, that the illustration that goes with the silks for June brides is much more likely to help sell silks than the bugler picture is likely to help sell wash skirts.

What would be thought of a person who attempted to work his religion into his advertising ! He would surely be condemned by everyone. Patriotism, though not so sacred as religion, comes very near the latter in the affections of most of the people in Canada. Let us then cease trying to use it in our very natural struggles for dollars and cents !

I think that the Canadian clothing men are doing better advertising on the whole than are the drygoodsmen. Two or three retail clothing houses in Toronto and Montreal are setting the pace for the whole of Canada. And it is a pace hard to keep up with. I don't know whether or not Gray, Cameron & Co., of Wiarton, Ont., are clothiers only, but this advertisement of theirs (reproduced on a reduced scale) reflects great credit for people in business in so very small a place as Wiarton. The selection of type is really excellent. And it must be remembered that to select suitable type from the outfit of a country newspaper office is none too easy. It seems to me that Gray, Cameron & Co., deserve a word of praise.

Talking of Advertising.

Our theory is that it doesn't matter half so much what you say in the papers as what you are and do in the store. Mercantile success is built up on store service—and that we've got to the point of absolute perfection. Of course, we like to talk about the service we give—to the child as well as to the adult—to all alike—to the customer with the unlimited wallet, just as to the customer of modest means. In short, we like to emphasize the fact that with us store service is not expensive but experienced—and to assure you that you'll profit in testing it. Test the matter—save the dollars. It's a truism that big value's a basis for big business. We are obliged to do a big business in our big store. What's the inference ?

Parasol Importations

We've gone heavily into Parasols and Sunshades, the newest fancies from the leading makers in the old land. Commonest to best, 50c. to $3.50.

We've no need to exploit our Dressmaking Department in the press. Our Miss Murphy's judgment, skill, and happy knack of executing commissions on time, has given lasting reputation to the rooms. The staff is busy, but we'll take your order and fulfill your commands to the letter.

New things in Summer Millinery are beginning to take precedence over spring showings. Our Miss Wright has her own way in this department, and we stand behind her every effort to keep abreast of the season. The past week has witnessed arrivals from the great millinery centres, which give the cue to what's to be worn the coming Summer. You are welcome to inspect, whether disposed to order or not.

Frawley & Devlin, Barrie, Ont., seem to have right ideas about advertising. I haven't the pleasure of being personally acquainted with this firm, but if their store is as good as their advertising it is all right. There is a "snap" and a vim about their announcements that are quite refreshing, as witness the clipping from a recent issue of a Barrie paper on previous page.

It is here of course much reduced in size. The main charm about this advertisement is its evident truthfulness. There is no loud bombastic talk or absurd claims. Not once is the claim made that their goods are cheaper or better value than those of other Barrie merchants. The adverse criticism I feel compelled to make is on account of the lines or rules that divide the advertisement into different parts. If these rules had been omitted and headlines for the dressmaking and millinery section put in it would have been an improvement.

Compare the advertisement of Frawley & Devlin's with John J. Weddall's, Fredericton, N.B. Both of these firms are in the same line of business, and Fredericton being a more populous town than Barrie Mr. Weddall has a better

I have received a copy of a reproduction in color of Mr. A. W. Cressman's advertisement in the Peterboro' papers. The reproduction is used as a dodger following up the advertisement in the daily papers announcing a special sale. I am asked for an opinion. In the first place, it is quite clear that Mr. Cressman has grasped all the essentials of good advertising, and that he knows it is useless to omit prices in making his announcements. The consequence is that this circular is crowded from top to bottom with valuable information about a great many lines which he is offering to the public. In several cases, also, he has illustrated his circular with neat little cuts, and the announcement in all its details shows that a great deal of time and trouble have been expended in getting it up. I should say that if it gets into the right hands it would bring results. In fact, I can't conceive of a properly circulated advertisement on these lines, providing the prices are right, not bringing ample returns to the advertiser. I do not know that the typographical arrangement of the matter on the circular is above criticism. In order to get a lot of matter into a short space there has had to be some crowding. This gives the announcement a somewhat crowded appearance, and as the description of each line of goods is set in a small space by itself, it is possible that some of the information might be overlooked by a casual reader. At the same time, the printer has not done badly, considering the fact that he was probably obliged to get a great deal of matter into a limited space. The reproduction in red print looks fairly well, although I am not sure that black would not be just as effective. As an instance of the apt character of Mr. Cressman's announcement, I quote just one small section of his advertisement for the purpose of encouraging others to go and do likewise.

A WESTERN MERCHANT ON TRADE.

Mr. Edward Brown, of the firm of J. D. Brown, Portage la Prairie, Man., was in Toronto a few days ago on a brief trip. Mr. Brown is one of the progressive wide-awake merchants of the West who impress the Eastern man greatly by their energy and acuteness. Mr. Brown thoroughly believes in trade papers and reads THE DRY GOODS REVIEW. He spoke warmly of store service in his own town, and praised his competitors for the excellent stores which they had. Mr. Brown said that part of his duty called upon him to deal with the advertising part of the business, and he found it difficult to get a good medium which went into the homes of the farmers. He believed newspaper advertising was the thing. He did not believe in circulars at all. Some years ago he had made an arrangement with a Winnipeg weekly. His firm paid the subscription price for sending the paper to all the farmers of their district, and took two pages in the paper which they filled every week with their announcements; this cost $3,000 a year. They sublet a part of the space, and in the end the whole arrangement paid handsomely. "We believe thoroughly," said Mr. Brown, "in doing as your large city stores do in clearing out goods. Some merchants have periodical sales. But we believe in daily sales. There is more money lost in keeping stock than in any other practice. Move out the stock as you go along, and, as the business continues brisk, you make money on regular sales which thoroughly justifies clearing lots. I find your big city stores are making just as good profits as we are. There are, of course, bargain counters, but apart from these the big stores do not sell any cheaper than we do."

STOCKS

Shelves Crowded With Goods But None of Them Will Move.

It is not the merchant who carries the largest stock who does the largest business. Goods must be right. You cannot expect people to buy old-fashioned, undesirable dress goods of yours, even if you cut the price below the cost mark.

What business you will do this Fall will depend on the character of the goods on your shelves, as much, if not more, as on the new goods you offer the shopper. There need be nothing but new goods if you consider what we can do to make your stocks fresh and new.

- Do certain lines of dress goods and other fabrics
- drag and hang because off color? Then send them to these
- works and have them dyed to the fashionable color
- of the season or some good staple color that is
- always salable.

Why should you cut down your profits for the year or losses in unsalable goods? We can make them the very latest and most popular shades. Cloths dyed by us never fade. Color never crocks, and color never shows through. The lustre is provided—no one can tell that they have been re-dyed.

There is no occasion for you to lose a single penny on a single yard of goods in your store. Send us your hosiery where you have struck bad selling shades—or your ribbons—almost anything.

- In the dyeing, cleaning and curling
- of feathers we are sure to give
- completest satisfaction.

Send parcel direct to the head office and works as below and the goods will be returned to you fit to count in with your newest Fall stocks.

CUTS IN ADVERTISEMENTS.

To catch the eye is the first thought in the construction of an advertisement, to bring trade the prime object, to convince the consumer is an absolute necessity.

The illustrating of advertising matter greatly enhances its value. Illustrations attract attention, make plain the idea, photograph the object itself on the mind, while the text tells the story. Few retail merchants in the smaller towns place a correct estimate upon the value of illustrations in advertising. Very seldom do you see a local advertiser embellishing his advertisements with attractive cuts, but, when he does so, his advertisement is by far the most prominent on the page. Almost any advertiser of experience is, or ought to be, aware that, in order to induce the buying public to read his advertisements, he must first make the advertisements capable of attracting attention. Where 10, 12, or more advertisers are clamoring to be heard in the columns of the newspapers, the only way to make one particular advertisement attract more attention than the rest is to make that particular advertisement stand out. The illustration, then, is a logical sequence. Use illustrations; use plenty of them; use them in illustrating everything that it is possible to illustrate. If you catch the eye, you catch the mind. Even those who cannot decipher a letter can read a picture. A cut makes one read the advertisement without really intending to do so, and is therefore of inestimable value.

The large department stores here and in the United States fully appreciate the value of cuts, and frequently in the great dailies, where space costs from $3 to $5 an inch, one-quarter to one-half of their space is occupied with attractive cuts. In the smaller towns, where newspaper space is cheap, at least one enterprising man should avail himself of the enormous advantages of the use of cuts. If your advertising has not been bringing the results you think it should, we would advise you to try the effect of illustrations. The cuts are cheap, and can be used in newspapers, dodgers, circulars and all sorts of printed matter for years to come.

A cut of yourself or of your store is a good advertisement. Every merchant can use profitably some illustrations, and to any who desire cuts of any sort we recommend The Standard Electrotype Co., of Wilmington, Del., United States, or their Canadian agents, The Pugh Co., of 67 Yonge street, Toronto.

THE LATE COMPROMISE.

The Montreal Wholesale Dry Goods Association held a special meeting the other week to consider the recent compromise by the Customs Department in the Fitzgibbon, Schafheitlin case. There was some strong talk against the action of the Government in the matter, and it was decided that President Rodgers should draft a strong communication to be sent to Ottawa, pointing out the injustice its course rendered to conscientious traders, and the low tone of business morality which settlements of cases in which fraud is charged was calculated to bring about.

SMALLWARES THEIR SPECIALTY.

A visit to the warerooms of Phillips & Wrinch, 5 Wellington street west, Toronto, furnishes proof of the growing business of this house as importers and manufacturers of smallwares. Every dealer will appreciate the necessity of timeliness in goods of this class. Specialties in ladies' belts, hair ornaments and jewelry, and articles of that kind, possess little salable value unless new and up-to-date. With a resident buyer in France, Phillips & Wrinch keep not only in touch with everything in their line, but are just a little ahead of time very often. If there is anything new in these lines they are sure to have it.

An important end of the business of Phillips & Wrinch is that devoted to the manufacture of hairpins and various ornaments in jewelry where the spirit of current events is utilized, and at this season, in Canadian, patriotic, and military designs in these goods.

This firm are sole Canadian agents for the celebrated needles made by William Woodfield & Son, Redditch, England. From the preparations made by Phillips & Wrinch, there is good reason to believe that they take an optimistic view of the outlook for Fall trade.

SPECIALS IN BOOTS AND SHOES.

While on a visit to Quebec, THE DRY GOODS REVIEW spent a very pleasant hour or so in the factory of the W. A. Marsh Co., Limited, boot and shoe manufacturers. This go-ahead and up-to-date house employ over 500 hands, and they are kept continually at it, which proves the popularity and demand for their different lines. Mr. Marsh said that the past season's business had been exceptionally good, and the prospects for a splendid Fall and Winter trade are extremely bright. This house undoubtedly manufacture the finest line of boots and shoes in Canada. THE REVIEW was shown a sample of their men's dice and willow calf boots, which are worthy of the particular attention of the trade. In women's goods, they have a specially fine line in plain and tan dongolas, showing several new lasts from the best makers in the United States. Those who intend visiting Quebec should, by all means, visit this wonderful factory, and we can assure them of a warm and hearty reception.

KINGSTON MERCHANTS ORGANIZE.

The retail dry goods merchants of Kingston have formed a retail dry goods association on the lines of a similar association in Montreal. The officers of the Kingston association are: Edward T. Steacy, president; D. G. Laidlaw, secretary-treasurer; and an executive committee composed of Messrs. D. E. Starr, R. S. Waldron, Edward Crumley, Robert McFaul, David Spence and Joseph Sutcliffe.

One of the main objects in view with this association is to try and find a remedy for the system of peddling that has gradually grown up in that city during the past few years. A low estimate places the number of peddlers of dry goods and notions at 150. They have been gradually sapping the retail trade of the city until it became a menace to the regular trader. The retail merchants are now using every effort to induce the city council to raise the license fee from the present low rate.

MONTREAL AND TORONTO, JULY, 1900.

THE DUTIES ON GERMAN GOODS.

WE have not heard the last of our preferential tariff and its treatment of Germany. The first thing the German authorities did was to cut Canada out of the favored-nation clause in her treaties. The same policy has been followed towards Barbadoes which has also gone in for a preferential tariff. The colonial party in the German Parliament has, it appears, been anxious to exclude Great Britain herself from the favored-nation clause until she could bring Canada into line. Last month this was brought up in the discussions in the Reichstag.

It seems that the German Government is now engaged in framing a new maximum tariff which the protectionists there hope will be higher than the present one. When the proposal to renew the favored nation clause toward Great Britain came up, the Government was asked why a provisional agreement could not be entered into with Great Britain so that she could secure reciprocal treatment for German goods, both from Great Britain and her colonies. The leader of the National Party in the Reichstag expressed fears that the preferential tariff policy would spread to the other British colonies.

Finally, the arrangement with Great Britain was renewed to the end of July, 1901, when we may expect a renewal of the disturbance.

Importers of German goods into Canada state that the tariff is no embarrassment to them. Perhaps not. But the principle at stake is what has attracted attention in Germany rather than the actual difference of duty which we charge upon German and British goods. And, as a principle is often a very important matter, even when its results are of no great importance, we are likely to hear more of this one.

LORD MASHAM AND BRADFORD.

AT Bradford last month, Lord Masham, the head of the great silk firm of Lister, laid the corner stone of the magnificent Cartwright Memorial Hall which Lord Masham has so generously presented to the town at a cost of nearly £50,000 or $250,000.

Lord Masham's speech on the occasion was characteristically modest and interesting. He said that Bradford owed its position to the man they were assembled to honor, namely, Cartwright, the inventor. He thought it strange that while in English Technical Schools there were professors who taught the use of many inventions, there were few who remembered their great English inventors. Lord Masham said that he himself, as a manufacturer, had for years used Cartwright's inventions, the comb and power loom, without knowing who the inventor of them was and only found out by accident.

He showed that the developers of inventions, rather than the original inventors themselves, had usually reaped the reward and no one had profited more by perfecting other men's work than he. This was shown in the case of the plush and velvet pile loom. In giving some details of his early experience he stated that neither he nor Dr. Cartwright had ever received any technical education, and that, although he had never been in a silk mill, he had afterwards built Manningham, one of the largest silk mills in the world.

The gift of Lord Masham to Bradford is one that does honor to himself and will be a boon to the people of Bradford. It is a very honorable action of Lord Masham and one that does credit to his generosity and public spirit.

THE CHINA WAR AND COTTONS.

There is some speculation as to the effect on the cotton trade of the disturbance in China. Next to India, China is the biggest market for English cottons. The United States also ships a good many there, and for some years the Montmorency mill in Canada has found a profitable market in China for Canadian cottons. For the year ending June, 1899, Canada shipped 3,328,000 yards to China. If the war in China should dislocate this trade there may be a certain effect in the markets of origin. As far as Canada is concerned, of course, the export item is not of sufficient importance of itself to affect prices. Besides, we may make up in one direction what we lose in another. For example, last year Australia took over 1,000,000 yards of cotton from Canada, and South Africa took 350,000 yards. There is no knowing what we may do in the future in both these directions if our manufacturers decide to push the trade vigorously,

THE DECLINE IN RAW COTTON.

THE decline which took place in the raw cotton market, between May 14 and June 14, caused some uncertainty among buyers of finished material as to whether it will be continued to such an extent as to affect values.

This, of course, no one can answer at the present moment to a dead certainty, but it is worthy of note that sales agents, instead of speaking of a decline, talk the other way, and predict an advance in prices before the end of July. As bearing on their stand it may be remarked that the decline in the actual spot cotton market has not been anything like that in futures, from which it is inferred that demand must be keeping up very well.

As will be noted also in the appended table, the greatest decline in the speculative market has been in the June, July and August options. The difference on the latter futures is not nearly as great, but it is, nevertheless, certain that the tenor of advices from cotton-producing sections on this continent are bearish rather than bullish. The Texas rains appear to have ceased, except to a moderate extent, the past few days, and there is little or nothing on which to bull the raw cotton market, so far as that important State is concerned.

The changes in detail are :

NEW COTTON MILLS.

Rumors of new cotton mills in Canada are often circulated. Doubtless, the reports are given in good faith, and are based upon the actual intentions of well-known people who could easily carry an enterprise of this kind to success. It is just possible, however, that the promoters on getting a certain distance on with their plans begin to figure closely as to the actual relations which profits will bear to expenditures, and that they are not wholly satisfied with the prospects.

In certain localities, where labor, power and other conditions were favorable, we can understand another cotton mill being made to pay. The mills now in existence have been greatly enlarged during the past three years. These enlargements show the increased demand in the home market. But another mill, which would mean fresh competition and a new rival for trade, is a different matter. It would probably tend to lower prices, and with the lowering of prices would vanish the certainties of profit.

We may be sure that these are some of the considerations that delay the establishment of a new cotton mill on an extensive scale. Beginning with the present month, the lower duties on British goods (23½ p.c. on colored and 16⅓ p.c. on grey cottons) will not tend to encourage the setting up of new mills here as might be the case if it were a more highly protected market.

IMPROVING THE CUSTOMS SYSTEM.

ATTENTION is called to the interviews elsewhere in this issue with Canadian importers who are disposed to view with some measure of satisfaction the proposal of the Minister of Customs to simplify and improve the system which governs importations.

There seems to be a disposition on the part of the Hon. Mr. Paterson to put things on a more satisfactory basis. A business man himself, he ought to be the best man in the Cabinet to deal with business questions. Of course we are well aware that he has not been able to see eye to eye with some of them on all questions. In this case, although the information of the intended reforms is somewhat slim, there is a general disposition to be satisfied if the changes encourage honest importing and equality of values.

There is always a certain amount of friction between importers and the Customs authorities. That is to say, there is a certain amount, not much perhaps, but a certain element of hostility between the one and the other. There is, we fear, too much tendency on the part of Customs officials to regard every merchant as likely to do the Department out of revenue if he possibly can.

We have an impression that, in the vast majority of cases, the merchant is as just and careful as the Customs official, and that if the Customs officials know their business they would never have occasion to trouble an honest importer at all.

The present Minister is not responsible for many of the difficulties that may have arisen under the new tariff. This tariff was framed by the whole Cabinet and the Minister must not be held personally responsible for whatever is the result of Government policy as a whole. No doubt the preferential tariff (satisfactory as it is as a piece of broad national policy) occasions some trouble to importers by reason of the certificates of origin and other papers which have to be filed in connection with imports.

Then, again, the almost entire abolition of specific duties in 1897 has thrown us practically upon an ad valorem tariff. This means that values become the whole basis for the payment of duties. Appraising is thus of the very first importance. Honest invoices greatly assist the officials, but there is always the extreme difficulty, even to experienced hands, of telling the values of goods. We do not say that a tariff should consist entirely of specific duties, but there are certain lines where the employment of those duties would greatly assist honest trading.

As to equalization of values at different ports, we do think the importers have a genuine grievance. The creation of so many small ports of entry is a mistake in policy. We cannot see who it benefits and it greatly increases the difficulty of imposing the same rate of duty on similar goods. If Mr. Paterson can do anything to remedy that evil he will indeed earn the gratitude of the whole trade.

WALL DECORATIONS.

THERE is probably no money sacrifice so quickly forgotten as that made in the use of wall paper. When one thinks of the contrast between a dull-looking room, made so by soiled and probably delapidated paper, no doubt illustrating the gloomy colorings and severe heart breaking patterns of years ago, and that effected in the same room by the hanging of a bright, cheerful, clean paper, it is astonishing that there should be anyone who requires reminding of what may be done by such small outlay.

If one considers the influence of bright surroundings on the mind, possibly strained and tired with the little worries of the day, it becomes a duty to consider this matter in which expense cuts little figure in proportion to results obtained.

Recent medical experiments have proved the quieting and beneficial influence produced on violently insane persons by confining them in rooms decorated in bright colors, such as reds, yellows, etc., while the very opposite results were obtained from such shades as cold greys, certain shades of blues, etc. The effect of color on the mind is therefore obvious and everyone is influenced by it, with or without their knowledge. A large percentage of people drift into a monotonous sort of existence, which they only realize by accident, and then wonder why it never occurred to them to change and brighten up their environment, especially that portion of it most important—the walls.

The artistic designs and soft colorings of modern wall papers are so varied and easily obtained that harmony with carpets, curtains and furniture is secured, and a pleasing and restful effect produced out of all proportion to cost.

Our advice is, therefore, to wives and mothers—make home attractive and bright in appearance, and you will be surprised how quickly it will become so in fact. To this end, we claim the shortest cut is wall decoration, which often means the removal of years of oppressive surroundings, and, when intelligently done, will influence the spirits and make cheerful the faces of the very children.

THE OUTLOOK IN THE UNITED STATES.

The buyer of a large Toronto wholesale house informs us that, in his opinion, there is no ground for anticipating any considerable decline of prices in the United States on account of the Presidential election.

Our informant has just returned from the chief points in the United States, and reports that he was only able to find one buyer who thought that cottons would be cheaper this Autumn. All the others told him that the mills were filled up with orders until December, and that the cotton crop was not good enough to warrant the view that plentiful raw material would affect prices. One New York buyer told him, speaking of speculative dealers: "Several fellows have got to deliver cotton at 7c. in August and you will see if they don't have to pay 9c. for it." Another buyer said that while cotton goods in the United States might go a shade off in price during July they would certainly go higher later.

We give these views as the result of private observation, and, while doubtless all these buyers would sooner see prices stay up than go down, the chances are that they speak pretty frankly to one another.

DISCOUNTS ON INVOICES.

There is said to be some discussion going on between the Customs Department and some importers regarding discounts on invoices. There are two kinds of discounts, namely, trade discounts and cash discounts. The importers could not, and do not, expect the cash discounts to be subtracted from the total cost of goods given in an invoice for dutiable purposes. But a trade discount is another matter. It is pointed out that a European exporter when selling in large quantities to large customers of long standing grants a trade discount. This directly affects the price of the goods to the Canadian customer. The importers who get these concessions in price naturally contend that the sum on which duty is paid is less than the Customs claim it is.

A CASE IN POINT.

HERE is a story illustrating the difficulties which occur from mixing business with politics. It happened some years ago, so that the feelings of men now in office need not be lacerated at the telling of the story.

A high official of the Customs had much extra work imposed on him. Being an energetic, capable man he put his shoulder to the wheel and got through the work. As time went on he asked for an increase of salary—not much, only $200 a year. The answer he received was this: "We cannot increase your salary, but we will give you an assistant." In other words, the authorities were not willing to pay $200 more, but were ready to pay $500 or $600 more. The extra man was appointed.

Why? Because, by adding a man to the staff they were able to give a place to a party back and thus increase the amount of patronage at the disposal of the party machine. This was not business, but it was politics, and a very useful brand of politics at that.

THE FALL TRADE NUMBER.

The present issue is our usual special number issued in connection with the Fall trade. In it will be found a number of interesting announcements and some valuable information of particular importance to the retail merchant.

It has become more and more necessary for the out-of-town dealer to keep his stock assorted up to the standard of the city stores, and it is, therefore, of much value to know all the specialties that are being placed on the market. This has led to the Fall Trade Number of THE DRY GOODS REVIEW being recognized as the medium through which manufacturer and importer make their announcements to the trade.

The outlook for Fall trade this year is exceedingly good. All the great commercial and financial interests are in a flourishing condition. The railways show greatly increased earnings. The banks, both through the discounts and the note circulation, show a very healthy condition of business. Failures have not been numerous. There is no reason to think that the crops, not being quite up to the highest mark in a few localities, will injuriously affect business to any extent.

WINDOW AND STORE DECORATING.

Conducted for THE REVIEW by H. Hollingsworth, an Expert Window Artist.

TO DRY GOODS REVIEW READERS.—We shall be glad to receive photographs and descriptions of window displays that have attracted special attention in their own localities, and which would be considered helpful to trimmers generally. Any inquiries or questions on the subject of window dressing will be answered cheerfully, and any information given that may be desired by readers. Queries should be addressed: "Window Dressing Department."

A NEW ART.

THE century soon to close has done more for the retail merchant than all previous ages put together. It has taken them out of a life of drudgery and hard mental strain to a life of, in nearly all respects, pleasure.

It is mainly through the success of the window that the merchant has brought himself forward. There is hardly a store in the country that has not its windows.

Twenty-five years ago it would not have occurred to anybody that window decoration as a profession would ever be a success. The making of displays is engaging the efforts of a constantly increasing army of men, who find in this career an occupation especially suited to their tastes and capabilities. With only a few exceptions, the windows are considered to be the leading advertising medium of the merchant.

Even the store in the country has its windows, and those hitherto supposed to be built for the purpose of allowing the daylight to enter have been admitted to be their only advertising medium. It used to be taken for granted that the windows were for the purpose of getting as much goods as possible into them, the merchant thinking it would make an impression on the public that he carried a large assorted stock. To-day, simplicity and art rule. It is not how much you can get into the window, but how artistic and neat that window can be made.

WINDOW FIXTURES.

The drawings will convey an idea of how a few good fixtures can be easily constructed at a very small cost.

Any man handy with a hammer and saw can get them up. Figure 1 shows stand made with a square about 2 x 2 ft. on top of a strip 1 x 2 in.

This fits into stand (Fig. 2), and can be raised or lowered any height by boring a series of holes and inserting a wooden pin through it.

Fig. 3 is used with Fig. 2 as a base, and is intended to be used as a dress goods stand. This also makes a splendid stand for merchant tailors' use. They can be made in different heights.

Fig. 4 is a column made from two 10-inch in diameter circles of wood, to which are fastened strips the desired height. Around this cheesecloth may be pleated. This stand serves to support arches, etc., and makes a very useful stand in numbers of different ways, especially in displays of rugs, handkerchiefs, dress goods, tweeds, etc.

MUSLIN UNDERWEAR TRIMS.

In making a display of muslin underwear, a neat showing might be made as follows: Use the columns (as described above), say, in three sizes—3, 6, and 9 ft. high. Arrange them at the sides and back of window. Cover them over with apple green or pale blue cambric. Across the top of each nail a strip of wood, and show a white skirt opened out its full width. Around each column show one certain line of underwear, and put a neat price ticket on them. Fill in the floor with same goods.

COTTON GOODS.

One method by which the trimmer can make up a show of cotton goods, such as shirtings, white goods, printed fabrics, etc., is to show in the centre of the window a negro woman engaged in picking cotton from a basket.

Have balls of cotton distributed about the goods, loose cotton on floor, etc. In front of window have a sign to read:

"BEFORE—THIS IS COTTON IN ITS RAW STATE."

On each side of display have a sign to read:

"AFTER."

If an arch is arranged across the window, then from the cotton balls print the lettering "COTTON DISPLAY." White cotton batting may be used as a substitute for cotton balls.

A NOVEL HOSIERY TRIM.

Make three frames about 6 ft. high and 3 or 4 ft. wide. Hinge them together similar to a screen (see drawing). The frames are then covered over with some light-colored stuff (white or manila paper preferred). Punch holes through the paper or goods.

Stuff each stocking with something that will give it a natural shape, and insert it through the hole so that it will show nearly up to the knee; fasten it on the crosspiece on the other side. Around each top show a piece of white lace or embroidery. I used cornmeal for stuffing the hose. It did not soil the stocking in the least, as it can easily be shaken out. It makes a perfect stuffing and shows the correct shape of the stocking.

AN EFFECTIVE FURNISHINGS TRIM.

A framework was constructed out of boards. The drawing (on page 76) will give an excellent idea of the structural work of the display.

Frame A should be made in two sections, and put together after being placed in the window, as it is too large to be admitted through an ordinary window door. Circle B is connected with frame A by the pieces C with screws. The height of legs, D, should be made to suit the ceiling, and circle B should be at an equal distance from the ceiling to the floor. After the frame is in position and properly braced, it should be covered on rear side with white or colored goods in order to prevent the back of the window from showing through the openings in centre made by the arrangement of suspenders.

The material and colors used in filling in the woodwork must be determined by the tact and ability of the trimmer. If incandescent lights are used (as in the trim) the wiring should all be done from the back of the framework, through concealed sockets.

To dress outer line, A, requires 16 shirts, 8 white and 8 colored, arranged alternately, and made up of ties and colors that match.

In addition, there should be 16 handkerchiefs, white or colored, and 48 pairs of suspenders.

The network framed by the suspenders may be made in a variety of ways, but in every case the rear ends of suspenders should be fastened on the outer edge of circle B, the front ends being stretched out at an angle of about 90 deg.

Circle B can be arranged according to the taste of the

DESCRIPTION OF MECHANICAL DISPLAY.

A framework was first built of 2 x 2 inch strips, over which was tightened black print with the back side out, which is the exact color of stone, and after being striped and crossed with a brush and paint made a perfect imitation of stone. An opening was left in the centre to represent a gun-hole. The framework was set out 2 feet from the wall, so as to give the warship distance and room to work in. An ocean scene, painted to represent stormy weather, was set on the back of the window. The painting was made twice as large as the gun-hole, so that on looking out through the gun-hole sideways

Union Jack is seen flying in the breeze on the top of the fort. A few select coats were shown on nickel forms, and well ticketed. The mechanical part was very simple and did not cost much, as I made the pulleys myself, and they have served me nicely in every mechanical trim I have had. The motor is just a little fan motor run by connection with the window lights. The speed of it was very fast, so I had to reduce it by the pulleys, viz., two 24-inch, a 6, 7 and 10-inch, which brought it down to a nice slow motion. The motion of the warship was very even and natural. Two other warships are seen in the distance, but the photo did not bring them out. I have made a rough sketch of the mechanism (see drawing), and if there are any of my fellow-trimmers who would like anything definitely explained, I shall be pleased to do so. Two ships could have been used by the addition of another support (see drawing), but one large ship worked better. The pulleys are made by taking four lids of candy pails and nailing two together. These do not cost anything, as they can be had for the asking from any grocer. These are attached to a shaft.

PLAN OF ABOVE.

Part of a curtain pole, 12 inches long, serves as a splendid shaft, and curtain-pole sockets make an inexpensive and splendid bearing after they have been oiled a few times. The ship I borrowed from the toy department. I painted the scene with ordinary house paint on cotton. The blue skyline made a splendid contrast to the stone, and toned the color up fine. The display was a trade-winner, which was the object to be attained, and it did not cost over $5. I also use the material over and over again.

A LACE STAND.

One of the puzzles of a trimmer's work is to find a new or different manner in which to display laces or embroideries. They are among the arbitrary things which seem to be capable of few different hangings. One way of draping them so that the display will answer for either window or counter is very simple. It is best done on nickel stands, but wood stands can be quickly made for the purpose.

Make an ordinary (T) stand with the horizontal bar two feet long. At the point where the bar meets the upright fasten another horizontal piece of the same size and a foot long at right angles to the two foot piece, thus making three equal arms. Cover the whole thing with white, puffing very closely. Fasten the end of a piece of lace or embroidery at the outer edge of one side arm, bring it in a long, low loop to the outer edge of the middle arm, repeat to the other side arm and then return, continuing thus back and forth until the stand is full, making each loop a little shorter than the preceding and placing the edge a little farther back each time. As many of these of varying widths and heights can be made as the window or counter may require.

WOMEN'S UNDERWEAR.

Warm weather brings a brisk demand for light underwear. A good window display of this class of goods will bring the demand to your counters.

Cover the background with plain white material, putting it on smooth, then with a string and pencil strike a large circle, say five feet in diameter.

Take women's ribbed vests in blue and pink and arrange them on the background in the circle, then take white vests and make a circle inside of the first, then another circle of the blue and pink and so on until the centre is reached.

Take a number of knitting needles and drive them in the background around the circle about a foot apart.

Cut the same number of small sticks about eight inches long and drive one on the end of each knitting needle, making a (T) bracket. On these brackets arrange vests, colored or white.

Take some flexible strips and arrange two from the centre and top of the background to either side of the window, so they bow out into the window.

Bend two longer ones from the same point at the top of the background to the base at either side of the window next to the glass. On these strips arrange vests, alternating the colors.

Cover the base with white material, puffing it loosely. In the centre of the base arrange a half figure dressed in a vest,

A PEMBROKE DISPLAY.

H. S. Bowden, of Pembroke, had a creditable patriotic window on the Queen's Birthday, and a cut of it appears in this issue. The back of the window was draped in red, white, blue and white, and the front pillars in khaki and red. The background of window comes out very plainly in photograph, and the following pictures were hung in the background: "Highland Regiments," "Indian Army," "British Cavalry," and "The Thin Red Line," and on each side of "Her Gracious Majesty" hung the pictures of "Bobs" and "B-P." "Her Majesty" stood right in the centre of the window, and above her was placed the first verse of the National Anthem, and below was placed the following:

VICTORIA,
Queen of Great Britain and Ireland,
Empress of India.
81st Birthday.
"Long may she reign."

The bottom of the window was in red, white and blue, and covered with war numbers of English periodicals and jubilee numbers. Rifle was draped in red, white and blue ribbon. The arrangement, as will be seen, was most artistic and appropriate.

A NORTHWEST WINDOW.

A recent attraction at E. A. Baker & Co.'s store, Moose Jaw, N.W.T., was a patriotic window designed by Mr. Stunt, and which contained much that appealed to the public feeling of the time, being tastefully draped with the national colors and a splendid photogravure of the Queen, the main feature being a map of South Africa, showing by means of flags the road from Cape Town to Pretoria, and at the seaboard Kruger in a Cape cart unable to decide where to go next. The last president of the Boers was humorously shown by placing a small silver boar upon a mourning card. Surrounding the map were the photos of the following generals now at the front: Lords Roberts and Kitchener, Buller, French, Warren, Macdonald, Methuen and Gatacre, the south window being devoted to the heroes of Ladysmith and Mafeking, Sir George White and Col. Baden-Powell, and draped in mourning were portraits of Generals Symons and Wauchope, who were killed, the former at Glencoe and the latter at Magersfontein. Last, but not least, the background was made with a capital copy of that popular picture, "What we have we'll Hold," surmounted by a trio of flags.

WHITE WAIST WINDOW.

To arrange a neat and effective window display of white shirt waists, take two half-inch strips about four inches wide. These should be somewhat longer than the width of the background.

Cleat these strips about two feet apart, cover this arrangement with heavy unbleached muslin, stretching it tight, and then with Nile green bunting.

Puff a white border about four inches wide along both edges.

Place this in the window at the top of the background, fastening the ends at either side of the background. Then cover the background with Nile green bunting.

Construct a series of three half circle steps and arrange them in the centre of the window against the background. Cover this with white material.

Pin back the waists you intend to show at the waist line, bringing the cuffs forward, pinning them also. Stuff the waists to show full front effect, and place a puff of green tissue paper in the collars.

Arrange these waists on the strip across the top of the windows and on the background and strips.

Cover the balance of the base with green bunting, puffing it loosely, and fill in with waists.

A price card on each waist shown will help materially in the sale of the waists.

New Customs Regulations.

Embodied in a Recent Circular.

ACCORDING to a circular just issued by the Department of Customs, the following regulations are substituted for sections 10 and 11 of Memo. No. 1007 B., relating to "General Regulations as to Invoices and Entries of Goods under the Customs Laws of Canada," viz :

10. The invoice produced for entry at the Customs House, in respect of goods purchased by an importer, shall be an invoice from the person, firm or corporation selling the goods to such importer. The invoice shall be properly certified and shall faithfully represent the transaction between the seller of the goods and the importer in respect of such goods, and shall truly exhibit the actual price paid and to be paid for the goods by the importer making entry thereof, including the cost of coverings of any kind and all charges and expenses incident to placing the goods in condition packed ready for shipment direct to Canada.

11. Goods bona fide exported to Canada from any country, but passing in transitu through another country, shall be valued for duty as if they were imported directly from such first mentioned country, subject to the following conditions, namely :

(a) The bill of lading for the transportation of the goods to Canada shall show the ultimate destination of the goods, from the place of original shipment to the port in Canada, without any contingency of diversion, and the goods shall not be entered for consumption or for warehouse, or remain unclaimed, or remain for any purpose other than their transshipment or transit in any intermediate country.

(b) The said bill of lading for the transportation of the goods from the port of original shipment to Canada, or a certified copy or copies thereof, and such further evidence as the collector may require to establish the direct exportation of the goods from the place of original shipment to a port in Canada, as hereinbefore provided, together with a proper invoice of the goods, shall be produced by the importer to the collector of Customs at the port of entry ; provided that a Customs certificate showing the transshipment of the goods in a British or foreign port, without entry thereat, for consumption or for warehouse, or for any other purpose than their transportation in transitu to the port of destination in Canada, may be required by the said collector as further evidence, in any case where he deems it necessary, in addition to the bill of lading ; provided also, that any original bill of lading when so produced to the collector, and marked with the Customs stamp, may be returned if a "Transitu Statement" (in a form approved by the Minister of Customs) containing the material facts set forth in the bill of lading respecting the consignment, including package marks and freight charges, be filed with the collector and be by him compared with the particulars in the original bill of lading.

(c) Goods subject to an ad valorem duty, not imported in conformity with these regulations, shall be valued and appraised at their fair market value, as sold for home consumption in the principal markets of the last country whence the goods were transported into Canada, as at the time when the same were exported from such country.

Note—Until 1st September, 1900, collectors may use discretion in respect of the production of original bills of lading when other proof is furnished establishing to their satisfaction the bona fide exportation of goods to Canada as above prescribed when passing in transitu through an intermediate country. (Signed), JOHN MCDUGALL, Commissioner of Customs.

DYEING FOR THE TRADE.

The business of R. Parker & Co., dyers and cleaners, of Toronto and Montreal, grows apace. A visit to their works at Toronto at any time in recent years would give every evidence of largeness in size and efficiency in equipment.

A year ago the premises were further extended so as to admit of the introduction of new machinery and the expansion of trade along distinctive lines. This month another increase in space takes place by R. Parker & Co. absorbing the premises adjoining, formerly occupied by the Canadian Bank of Commerce—the building is owned by the firm—fitting these up for private and business offices and store, and using the space formerly occupied for these purposes as an addition to their shipping-rooms.

This firm have been in business for upwards of 20 years, Mr. Parker himself being an expert in the trade. Business from the dry goods and millinery trades reach them from all parts of Canada, and the constant increase may be fairly attributed to the skill they exercise in the dyeing of dress goods, silks, hosiery, ribbons, plumes and feathers.

It can be safely said that R. Parker & Co. have been the means of adding very largely to the profits of the drygoodsman and milliner in making salable goods that had been put aside as little worth, because off-color, shelf-worn or faded.

TRADE VISITS TO OTTAWA.

Messrs John M. Garland, Son & Co., Ottawa, find a growing desire on the part of up-to-date merchants to make frequent visits to their new six-storey and basement warehouse, a cut of which we give herewith. Buying often from a well assorted stock, the trade find, keeps their stock well assorted in new and desirable goods, and prevents their piling up a stock out of proportion to their business, that will cost them packing, freight, etc., more than buying nearer home. This firm have their seven floors filled with new and attractive goods at right prices, and the premises and stock will be found well worthy of inspection by all intending buyers who may visit Ottawa.

Mr. John M. Baillie, of New Glasgow, N.S., has been appointed manager of The Eureka Woollen Mills, well known for their blankets and tweeds.

The New Canadian Dry Goods Tariff.

THE increased preference on British goods imported into Canada went into force on Monday, July 2, so that the duties are now one-third less than on goods coming from foreign countries. ## THE FALL TRADE OUTLOOK.

Editor DRY GOODS REVIEW :

"We go to your house first for anything we want in the way of novelties and nice goods." This compliment from one of the best drygoodsmen in Canada, backed up by a great big share of his trade, and similar kind expressions from many of our dry goods friends, has stimulated us to increased effort for Fall, 1900.

Our travelers have been out for a couple of weeks, and appreciation of our efforts, in the shape of good orders from all our travelers, is reaching us daily.

You, Mr. Editor, advise us that the Fall Trade Number of THE DRY GOODS REVIEW will be better, if possible, than any special edition you have issued in the past. This is good news. You have done well in the past; permit us to acknowledge the benefit that advertising in THE DRY GOODS REVIEW has been to our business.

We shall be able to judge of your Special Fall Number in a few days. Trust nothing will occur to prevent your having it out by the time promised, July 1. We would have been glad to see it out on June 15.

Yours, very truly,
BROPHY, CAINS & CO.

23 St. Helen street, Montreal, June 25.

TAILOR-MADE SUITS.

The name of tailor-made seems to be applied to all kinds and makes of garment, and it is well for the merchant purchasing same to examine the class of work and finish of goods. Goods properly called tailor-made should be man-tailored, and properly pressed by experienced men pressers.

The steady demand for better goods, which are always the most satisfactory both to the trader and consumer, has developed the suit trade in Canada rapidly. A good article advertises your department, and it is better to sell fewer good, satisfactory costumes than double the quantity of cheap goods. Boulter & Stewart, well-known for high-class goods, are showing a very large assortment to retail at $15 to $35, and report a very satisfactory season in these goods. It will repay you to see their line when down to the openings.

A PROGRESSIVE FIRM.

Dundas & Flavelle Bros., Lindsay, have planned extensive alterations in their dry goods premises and men are at work on a rear addition, 42 x 46 feet in size, which will take in all the spare ground between the present buildings and the Benson House lane. The front and west side of the block will also be remodelled. The cost of the improvements will be between $4,000 and $5,000.

PRECAUTIONS RE JAPANESE MATTING.

THE three leading matting guilds of Hiroshima, Kobe and Okayama, Japan, have been united into one organization and have formed a new cooperative association under a law of Japan enacted for the protection of the interests of manufacturers and traders, in April, 1897. They have been joined by the guilds in other localities, thus forming all the manufacturers of Japan into one guild.

The principal object of the new organization is to maintain the quality as well as the price of the Japanese product of matting and to promote generally the common interests of all the manufacturers, as well as their customers and the public consumers.

According to Article 5 of the association's laws any company or individual, whether a member of the guild or not, shall not sell or export any matting which does not pass the examination of the authorized committee of the guild. Every roll is to be carefully inspected by this committee and is to be branded according to its quality. Each grade of matting, of which there are a number, is to be classified into three qualities, each quality being designated by a special design of brand. All goods which do not come up to the standard set for the third quality are to be destroyed.—Exchange.

THE ENGLISH TRADE.

In England just now there is a demand for the "Dolly Varden" order of decorations in cretonnes and wall papers. Carpet designs still continue to be of a conventional floral style in form and color, or the various combinations of Turkish, Persian, etc., which one sees everywhere.

At the regular meeting of the English carpet manufacturers, which was held a few days ago, the reports on all sides were of a very satisfactory nature, and, generally speaking, all the carpet looms in the United Kingdom are now running fully. As yet, there will be no change in prices.

TRADE IN THE UNITED STATES.

The New York Carpet Trade Review says in its last issue: "W. & J. Sloane's prices to the retail trade on September 1 dating are, with two exceptions, the same as those announced at the time of the latest advance, in January last. It will be remembered that two advances were made after the special sale in November last, hence the regular prices for the Fall season maintain these advances.

"On the other hand, the special prices are much higher than the special prices of last November, the advance being from 4½c. a yard upward. These special prices have been a feature with W. & J. Sloane during the past three seasons, and are in force for a limited time only.

"The situation practically is that the wholesaler who bought most of his Spring stock at the special prices of last November, and before the advances were made, must now pay a price which includes those advances or even more.

"The fact that the special prices on Smith 4,000 velvets, as well as the Saxony axminsters were withdrawn after the first day of the sale, is interesting as showing that there is a strong demand for low priced velvets and axminsters.

"Those manufacturers of ingrain who endeavor to maintain a standard in all their goods, and who obviously have to ask a price commensurate with such a standard, should receive the support of buyers. The new price of best, all-wool extra supers is not relatively higher than the prices of other grades of carpeting. Any wider discrepancy in the prices of different makes of ingrain than exists in prices of the various makes of ¾ carpeting is due to the varying qualities which can be produced in ingrain.

"Retail trade has shown a marked improvement during the past fortnight and the closing of the retail season promises to be much more satisfactory than was its beginning."

CARPET MANUFACTURE IN ASIATIC TURKEY.

While in all Oriental carpets harmony in outline and color combination is the main point, this is especially the case as regards Anatolian or Asia Minor carpets, which are remarkable for their ideal combination of colors. A picturesque effect in the Anatolian carpet is obtained by tufts of wool being put in obliquely, thus producing wonderful color effects.

Among these carpets a distinction should be made between the Smyrna and the Konia goods. Ushak is the principal seat for the production of Smyrna carpets, and here more than 3,000 women find employment in this industry. The manufacture consists chiefly of the large rugs called "Sofrali," which have an ornamental rose in the centre; "Savali," with a striped design, and "Sedjades." The weft and chain of the Ushak carpets are of wool.

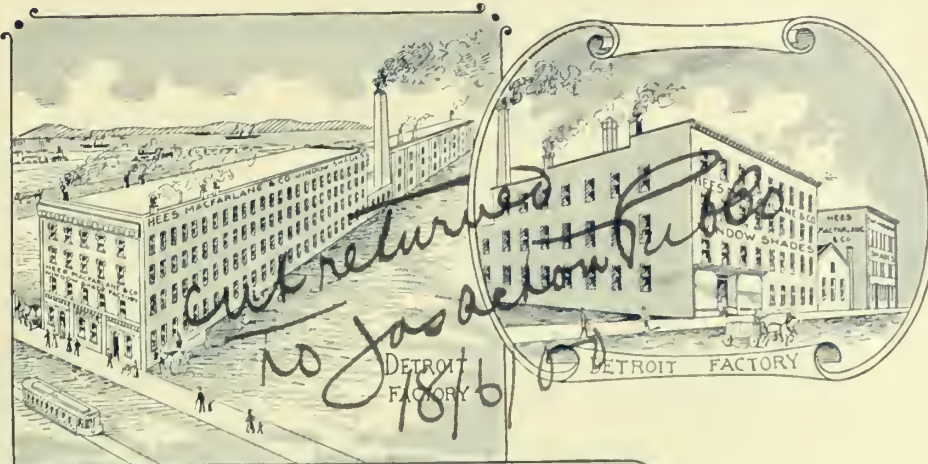

In Guerdez the manufacture is chiefly confined to smaller rugs of about two metres in length, especially "Sedjades." A cotton chain is used here. The Kula carpets have a hemp chain, while for the weft fine wool is used. The largest Smyrna rugs are made in Kula. In Demirji, during the last few years, great development has taken place in carpet manufacture, the carpet produced being close and thick and with a cotton chain. Other towns in which the carpet industry flourishes are Ak-Hissar in the Sandjak of Sarukan, Bolvadin, etc. The annual production of Smyrna carpets now represents a value of $1,300,000.

The Konia carpets are manufactured in Sparta, Kir-Chehir, Cæsarea, Sivas, etc. The best are made in Sparta, and are preferred by some connoisseurs to the Persian carpets. About 350 looms are in operation in this city and produce annually about 15,500 square yards. The company, "Societe de Tapis de Sparta," formed some years ago, stands at the head of the industry. The Imperial factory at Herék produces masterpieces, although just as fine pieces of work are turned out by the private works, as the Imperial factory is rather inclined to imitate the European carpets.

The Government having recognized that the success of the manufacture of Sedjades, or silk carpet, depends on the choice of beautiful and artistic designs, the use of unfading colors, the production of a fine and uniform weave and the absence of defects, has, during the past two years, taken measures to improve the dyeing, and arranged that all designs be done by a special artist. The use of colors has been regulated in dyeing, and a large dyeing establishment, where each manufacturer must have his raw material (silk) dyed, has been installed at Sinan-Eunu. Silk that is dyed elsewhere is confiscated. After being dyed at this factory the silk is boiled at a temperature of 100 degrees. The unalterableness of the colors is thus assured at a cost of 32 cents per ocque (2.8 pounds) of silk. If the colors are not fixed, or if they run, the owner is not only exempt from all expenses, but can claim from the dyer an indemnity of 88 cents per ocque.

The silk used in the manufacture of this carpet was formerly obtained from Europe and from Broussa, but although the silk from Europe is cheaper than that from Broussa, its use has now been prohibited in the manufacture of Sedjades, it being considered injurious to their quality and therefore their reputation. The Government, therefore, now confiscates and destroys all Sedjades in the manufacture of which European silk has been employed. All Sedjades made of other than pure silk must receive the seal of the commission as such, and any not carrying the seal are liable to confiscation and destruction. The use of the pure silk and that from pierced cocoons is prohibited in the same carpet. All manufacturers are obliged to present their Sedjades to receive, without charge, the official seal. There are two seals used, one representing three cypress trees and a distinctive sign adopted by the commission and the other representing two cypress trees only. The first is applied to Sedjades of pure silk and the second to those made of silk of pierced cocoons from Broussa.

Those manufacturers who violate the provisions of the regulations are considered by the Government as prejudicial to the industry and are liable to the penalties of the law, as well as being prevented from following their handicraft.

The Shah of Persia, in order to maintain the good quality of Persian carpets, has recently issued an edict prohibiting the importing into Persia of aniline dyes, dry or liquid, as well as all dyes in the composition of which aniline enters.—New York Carpet Trade Review.

GAINING IN POPULARITY.

No. 43 St. Sacrament street, Montreal, has been made popular since Geo. H. Hees, Son & Co. established their office and warehouse in that district. The trade appreciate the advantage of making their selections from stock right on the spot, and then having their goods delivered right at their doors soon after. They carry an immense stock of lace curtains and a general stock of upholstery goods, window shades, etc. People in the Montreal district who are not already buying of Hees, Son & Co. will find it to their interest to visit No. 43 St. Sacrament street, Fraser Building, Montreal.

ADVANCE IN TAPESTRIES.

Advices under date of June 16 report a further advance of ½ penny to 1-penny a yard in the price of tapestry carpets. The Canadian buyers for large importing houses have left for the British markets. Mr. Williams, the carpet buyer for Gault Bros. & Co., Limited, left about the middle of June; Mr. T. P. Williams, carpet buyer for S. Greenshields, Son & Co., left about the 20th, as did also Mr. T. A. Mitchell, buyer for John Macdonald & Co., Toronto.

THE CONSTANTINOPLE RUG MARKET.

The Constantinople correspondent of The American Carpet and Upholstery Journal says: "The transactions in this market in Oriental carpets and rugs during this season have been of a heavy character, and a great many shipments are now ready for all parts of Europe and the United States.

"A constant demand is experienced for Daghestans, and as a consequence the prices on these are daily increasing.

"A decided scarcity in small Karabaghs, Ghendjes, Kazatches and large Casaks is noticed, but shipments of these are expected shortly.

"There have been some big arrivals recently of Iran goods and more are coming in daily, but inquiry for these just at this time is somewhat slow. The call for Shirvans, which, as stated in my last letter, had been very slack for some time past, has picked up decidedly, and the month's transactions have been quite considerable. The demand for Smyrna carpets are numerous, Ghiordes having the principal call. These goods are very popular in Germany, and most of the lots are being ordered for the German market."

FALL BUSINESS SHOULD BE GOOD.

Anticipating a large demand this Fall for upholstery goods, lace curtains, window shade goods, etc., Messrs. George H. Hees, Son & Co. have been quite venturesome in manufacturing and importing to meet demands. They are keenly alive to the wants of the trade, and keep up their reputation of offering to the trade quick-selling goods that afford the retailer large profits. They claim that their new importations of over 85,000 pairs of lace curtains should interest dealers that handle such goods. Their new productions of upholstery goods at their plant in Valleyfield contain many lines that dealers will find profitable to put into stock.

THE COBOURG MATTING FACTORY.

The matting Factory at Cobourg, Ont., says a Cobourg contemporary, continues to receive large supplies of raw material, whilst equally heavy shipments of the manufactured articles go forward from it day by day to the business houses in the centres of population in all parts of the Dominion. For long has this manufactory kept up its unwavering business, giving constant employment to quite a large number of operatives, without ostentatious show, and without having received a dollar of subsidy from the town treasury. Mr. Mitchell has made it a successful venture, and long may it continue to yield him the profits of which he is so well deserving.

WILL SHOW IN ONTARIO THIS MONTH.

The Watson, Foster Co.'s travelers will open their selling season in Ontario early in July. The company have every confidence in the result of their efforts.

Ontario wall paper dealers, early this month, may count upon finding in the Watson, Foster Co.'s line for 1900-1901 the evidence of their promise to make it the most magnificent combination of original designs and successful colorings ever attempted in Canada. Dealers may safely reserve their decisions till they inspect it.

CANADIAN WALL PAPER TRIUMPHS.

If "there is inspiration in a drop of ink" it is only necessary to say to wall paper dealers, wait for the Watson, Foster Co.'s line of samples for 1900-1901. It is superior in extent, design and coloring to anything heretofore offered by this company. Most people will know what that means.

ENGLISH CARPET MAN DEAD.

The death is announced at Kidderminster, in his 76th year, of John Thatcher. Mr. Thatcher originally came from Yorkshire, and spent the best part of his life as a carpet weaver, chiefly at Messrs. Dixon's and H. R. Willis & Co.'s. At the latter firm some few years were spent in the yarn room attending to the many requirements of the weavers. This position taxing his patience rather too much, he returned to the loom for a brief time, and finally retired early in 1892. He had long been a member of the Carpet Weavers' Association. He leaves four sons and one daughter. The eldest son is a public designer; the next, James, of New York, was for many years carpet traveler for various American houses; and another is head of the designing department of Messrs. Harrison & Son, Limited.

MAKING SPECIALTIES IN CANADA.

ONE of the most noteworthy features of the Canadian dry goods business in recent years has been the development of the manufacture of specialties which, until lately, were imported. An interesting instance of this development is furnished in the rapidly attained success of The Laces and Braid Manufacturing Co., Limited, Toronto Junction. This firm started in business about three years ago, and have from the first done a large and constantly increasing business in fancy and plain braids, elastics, shoe and corset laces, and cords for furriers. About eight months ago they secured a foreign expert as designer and foreman of their manufacturing department, and installed new machinery of the most up-to-date type. This enterprise has enabled them not only to continue to produce the regular lines of laces, braids, etc., in great variety and at the lowest cost, but to put on the market many lines entirely original in design and exceedingly attractive in effect for trimming purposes.

The firm are now in every respect in a position to compete in the matter of quality and attractiveness with foreign goods and have the advantage of being close to the buyer in the matter of the range offered for choice, the filling of repeat orders and the price charged. Their travelers are now on the road with a complete range of the regular lines of laces and braids, as well as the many novelties which they are now manufacturing.

A NEW KNITTED UNDERWEAR FABRIC.

A new fabric, made of Egyptian cotton, has been invented for knitted underwear. The material has a coating of pure silk, and is called "Kotedsilk." It is warmer than wool, lighter in weight, and will not irritate the skin. Neither will it shrink in washing. Both the substances used in its manufacture are very durable, hence this fabric will be found to wear better than all wool or silk. Physicians say "body contact with silk allays nervousness." Silk being a non-conductor of electricity, warmth and vitality are equalized by the wearing of "Kotedsilk" garments, and the non-shrinking quality of the fabric recommends it to everyone.—New York Tribune.

BLOUSE WAISTS FOR FALL TRADE.

"The ever-popular blouse waist has come to stay." So say the experts of the American and European markets, and it is also remarked that the silk, flannel, and satin waist is having enormous demand for the Fall and Winter months. Merchants should keep full assorted stocks of these goods for Fall, but in most cases this important department is neglected in Canada as soon as the Summer season is over.

Taffeta silk waists and French flannel will be in large demand. It will pay all merchants to assort their stocks properly. The perfect fit now to be obtained in ready-made goods has won over the better class trade, and, to retain this, proper stock must be kept all year around. In Canada there are several makers catering to the Fall waist trade, and Boulter & Stewart are showing over 100 varieties of tailor-made waists with fitted linings. Pretty designs to retail $1.50 to $15 each. It will interest you and be profitable to see their line during openings.

FALL TRADE IN FANCY GOODS.

THERE should be a good Fall trade in fancy goods, and stores which carry these articles will be pleased to hear of some of the new goods. Looking over some of the new things at Nerlich & Co.'s, Toronto, the other day, a number of lines which are well suited to present trade were noticed, in addition to those for Fall trade.

For example, a line of Scotch ware will take. The articles include cups and saucers, teapots, creams, etc., and they are made of stoneware, half brown and half white, giving rather a striking effect. They will retail at 25c. up. So, too, are several lines of patriotic ware, including trays, plates, vases, cups and saucers, etc. These popular lines have the customary flag or coat-of-arms design. Another very noticeable line is artificial palms. This is a very good adjunct to the celebration season in which flags play so large a part. These flags, Nerlich & Co. report, are Canadian made and are printed on cotton, which is more durable than muslin, and therefore have the call. The sale of this patriotic stuff, including patriotic jewelry, is keeping up, and the chances are that it will sell right up to Christmas.

In addition to what has been referred to above for immediate trade, Nerlich & Co. have issued a catalogue, fully illustrated, which contains a great number of lines of every kind of fancy goods. Their stock of dolls is always, it is claimed, the largest and best in Canada. This year's dolls are to be found in soldier dresses, as a tribute to the passing military feeling. Also khaki dolls, and there is a continual demand for soldier suits, guns and swords. Toys of every description are in vogue, mechanical toys, pewter toys, tin toys, card and board games of every description, and a special range of iron toys which are practically indestructible and are having a great sale. These include fire engines, trains, scales, banks, stoves, and many other articles. The choice of toys in these days for young people is something wonderful.

Take the present craze for soldiering, the catalogue contains soldier suits, toy whips, guns, swords, trumpets, horns, cornets and every possible article connected with the military movement. Returning to general fancy goods, there is a perfect profusion of dressing-cases, glove-boxes, etc., and all that class of stuff, as well as albums, shown in leather, plush and celluloid, and fancy metal and ebonoid toilet articles.

It is clearly impossible within the limits of space to speak in detail of all these different lines. It would be well for the dealer to send for a copy of this carefully prepared, indexed, and illustrated catalogue of over 100 pages, which Nerlich & Co. will send out to any dealer asking for one by post card.

Mr. M. C. Drew, formerly of Burk's Falls, has opened a nice bright dry goods business in Grimsby, Ont.

P. & P. Griffin, Bloor street Toronto, are making large additions, preparatory to going into the manufacture of hair-cloth, a new industry in Toronto.

Mr. R. Mathews, grocer, Port Colborne, who, during the past year added the New York Dry Goods Store to his business, has now in his double store one of the finest stores in the boom town.

The Canadian Hat Trade.

The orders for Fall placed with Canadian wholesale importers are good thus far. Present retail trade is fairly active, especially in the cities, and is expected to continue so up to August. The retailers report very good sales, particularly since the hot weather set in. One large retailer reports sales of straw hats to surpass expectations. There is a greater demand for rustics, but a good article in plain straws also sells well. The Canadian straw hats this season are exceedingly well made, and our makers have turned out some very dainty goods in straw.

In conversation with a live retailer the other day, THE REVIEW was told that there was too much keeping over of old stock in the hat business. It happened with some men that sooner than clear out odd lines and sizes they would rather put them somewhere on the back shelves in the hope that they might be called for at some future time. He considered this bad business and believed in clearing out the hats that were left over unless the shapes were very staple and could safely be kept on hand. Another complaint he made against hat dealers, like himself, was that they were apt to order too many colored hats. For example, he would buy a certain quantity of blacks, the same quantity of greys, and perhaps the same quantities of two shades of brown. "Now," said he, "this order means that a man is stocked up with a great many more colored than black hats in spite of the fact that the black hat is the staple and the colored hat is always liable to rise or fall in popular taste. I believe there are dealers who have too many colored hats on hand now, and that they regret this as I do myself."

Still another grievance which this merchant referred to was the habit of the clerk to bring out at once the most saleable article. "Oh! I have seen them," he went on. "A man comes in and wants to see a certain kind of shape in black hats. The clerk brings out the newest thing, saying, that 'it is the latest style and is selling well.' The customer may be a quiet chap who is not particularly anxious to stick too closely to the fashion. Perhaps he does not know what the fashion is. In such a case, if there are a good many unsold colored hats in the store, the clerk ought, with some tact, try to push these. Of course, if the customer insists upon black, the clerk should acquiesce at once. But he ought at least get the customer to try on one, and if he looks well in it, say so. I know plenty of men who began to wear colored hats just in that way. They had always stuck to black, but one day the dealer got them to try on a colored hat, and, being pleased with their own appearance, they stuck to that kind."

A Fur Garment at Paris.

Dunlap, Cooke & Co., the Amherst, N.S., furriers, received an order from a New York gentleman for a fur-lined and trimmed coat that will probably be the most rare and costly garment ever made in the Lower Provinces. The shell of the coat is of English beaver cloth, lined with the finest Alaska pup seal-skins, with trimmings of selected Hudson Bay sable, valued at $500. This garment has been sold by the firm with the privilege of first exhibiting in Paris with other garments they are sending in connection with the Canadian exhibit from Toronto. As this is probably the finest article of Maritime Province manufacture at the great fair, it is to be hoped the garments comprising Dunlap, Cooke & Co.'s exhibit may merit even a share of the praise they were accorded at St. John and Halifax in September last, where their exhibits were generally acknowledged to be the finest ever shown in the Maritime Provinces. The firm received the highest awards at both Provincial Exhibitions last year, having been awarded a special gold medal by the Nova Scotia Exhibition Commission for the number of high-class garments shown, and the general excellence of their exhibit.

The English Hat Trade.

An English correspondent says: "The exports of hats of all kinds during April were 83,255 dozen, value £91,940, against 72,216 dozen, value £81,056, in April last year. For the four months ending April the exports were 378,614 dozen, value £417,292, against 381,475 dozen, value £393,403, in 1899. In the exports of furs and skins of all sorts there is, so far, a decline in value this year. The fur market has eased slightly of late, and good business has resulted. The shellac market has been fickle for some weeks; it now solely depends on the shipments, as deliveries are good and London stocks are bound to be considerably reduced this month. Present prices: Finest orange, £4 5s. to £4 10s.; second orange, £2 17s. to £3 15s.; garnet, £2 18s. to £3 3s.; button, £2 5s. to £4. 5s."

Fur Trade in the United States.

Travelers who left with small furs and fur garments, says New York Cloaks and Furs, have sent in fair-sized orders right along, and of late the expected decline in prices not realizing, as the jobbers and retailers expected, business has once more assumed its wonted aspect.

The universal cry about high prices has somewhat subsided, and an inspection of the various lines really shows little in evidence of scarce figures. There appears to be no scarcity of furs, and as such articles as opossums in the various shades in demand last season, and martens, for which enormous prices were asked, are no longer in senseless demand, and many articles have made their appearance which supplant these furs, there is really more crying done than the situation warrants. The much desired and expected decline, when it does put in an appearance, is hardly likely to affect in a very serious manner furs for which a demand has declared itself since the end of last season. One or two minor articles which, at the London March sales, were driven out of reach, may, or may not experience a decline, but nothing in the present outlook or situation warrants the assumption of any appreciable decline of such furs as foxes, martens, sables, chinchillas, seals, and American specialties, for which a justified demand exists.

Manufacturers and importers of furs, who, in the belief that furs would be cheaper, refrained from visiting the European markets early in the year and have done so since last month, have by this time found out that they were bitterly mistaken. The closest inspection of the Leipsic market has not revealed stocks of any account of such fine furs as persians, broadtails, fine astrachans, sables, and other Russian goods, and even country furs which may, in ordinary times, be bought after the Easter Fair, exist in only the lowest grades. As, with the exception of one or two items, the cheaper grades of all furs did not advance in the same ratio as the fine grades, for which an unprecedented demand came from French and English furriers, the very fact that important manufacturers and dealers, who expected to obtain their wants on the other side, will be forced in the American market upon their return augurs well for at least a strongly supported tendency.

While German and even French models of cloaks are as yet in embryo, sufficient indications exist that furs of all descriptions will form one of the principal items in their confections.

As advices reach this side from buyers of millinery goods, who have been or are at the present visiting Paris, the same powerful influence shows itself in the decoration of ladies' hats. In Paris the leading milliners, who last year brought out ladies' fur hats tentatively, are now preparing their model collections with fur ornaments, wings, fancy designs and even entire bodies of fur.

American manufacturers and importers of furs may remember the years of 1888 and 1889, when the same craze for furs made them popular on almost every article for woman's wear. We may consider the present period as the equal of that beginning in 1888 and culminating in 1893. Statisticians, or in fact anyone connected with the fur trade for the past 15 or 20 years, in looking backward, will find the lean and fat periods in the trade follow each other in almost mathematical precision in cycles of five years.

While for a time during the height of a Presidential campaign, the issue of which is hardly doubted, a slight setback toward the month of November may be expected, the general or universal prosperity and especial prosperity in this country cannot and will not permit our present "fat cycle" to terminate before its appointed time.

Everybody who by this time has not prepared himself with the sinews of war, and who would have to buy at coning prices, will either have to stay out of the race or find the handling of furs unprofitable.

Active Trade in Fur Jackets. Dealers interested in furs will note Brereton & Manning's advertisement in this number of THE DRY GOODS REVIEW.

They devote themselves exclusively to this line, and report trade as very satisfactory, particularly in the finer goods. For caperines and scarves, of which they show a variety of new designs, their orders are large. They also have an extra good demand for persian, electric seal and astrachan jackets.

The recent improvements in the Arbes interlining machine help very materially in manufacturing the last-mentioned garments, all of which they now interline with that machine. This, they claim, makes better work than the older and slower process of interlining by hand.

Judging from the amount of orders now placed with this firm, they anticipate an increased business the coming season.

Where Fur Garments are Made.

A Glimpse at Mr. Paquet's Quebec Factory.

TO inspect the fur and glove factory of Mr. J. Arthur Paquet, in Quebec city, is an education in itself, even to those who are practically ignorant of the processes through which the different fur skins and kids have to pass from the time they are received at the factory in the raw condition until placed in the sample-room for display, or in the shipping-room to be sent out to all parts of Canada and other countries. One engaged in the selling and handling of furs and gloves would, from such a visit, derive great benefit, and probably be more interested than the uninitiated.

The opportunity was afforded THE DRY GOODS REVIEW a few weeks ago to go through Mr. Paquet's factory, and a representative of the paper was not slow to take advantage of such an invitation. It would take volumes to thoroughly describe every detail of each department, and, unfortunately, space will only allow of a brief summary of the tour of inspection. Upon entering the factory, which is situated on a most advantageous site, and covers four or five acres of ground, the visitor was shown into the private office of Mr. Paquet, who was sitting at his desk busily engaged in perusing his correspondence. THE DRY GOODS REVIEW had the pleasure, the day before, of meeting Mr. Paquet, and he now received his visitor with the greatest cordiality. This gentleman makes a visit to his factory every morning, and in the afternoons is generally to be found in his retail store on St. Joseph street. During the conversation he stated that he had recently returned from the Paris Exposition, where a splendid exhibit of the different products of his factory is seen. Judging from the description of this exhibit, it is evidently a credit to Canada. As Mr. Paquet explained: "We have spared no expense or pains to attain this end." He also said that his firm's representative in Vancouver was now on his way to Dawson City with $12,000 worth of furs, etc., to be disposed of there.

The visitor was then placed in the hands of one of the head men of the factory to proceed through the different departments. It might be said at the outset that a striking feature of every department of this concern is the system and regularity with which everything is done. They have an electric plant in the factory which is up-to-date and complete in every respect. They employ over 500 hands, who are all proverbially well treated. The head of each department seems to be individually interested in each of his employes.

It will be convenient to deal first with the fur branch of the establishment, beginning at the room where the furs are received in their raw condition. Here there are piles upon piles of different classes of furs. When unpacked, they are handed in to the adjoining room to be stretched, dressed, washed, and hung up to dry and, in some instances, dyed. At times, when there is a rush order on, it is necessary to dry the skins by means of a machine, which is really a wonderful invention. The dyeing and curling process is also extremely interesting. This concern claim to be the only one in Canada dyeing their own Astrachan goods. They handle these furs in large quantities, and qualities range from 1 to 7. The visitor was particularly struck with the Thibet lamb stock, 3,000 of which had just been received, and they are really a specially fine-looking lot of furs.

After the furs have gone through their various treatments in this room, they are then placed in the fur skin stock department, and when wanted are sent into the cutting-room. This cutting-room is 225 feet long by 75 feet wide. Mr. C. Bessette, the foreman of this department, stated that at all seasons of the year they employ at least 65 cutters, 25 blockers, and also about 50 girls, who operate the fur sewing machines. In their busy season this number is often increased considerably. He said that during four months in the year the hands have to return at night to keep pace with the amount of work that has to be got through. Attached to the cutting-room is the fur finishing-room, which is 150 feet long. Here are employed from 90 to 100 hands. This is undoubtedly one of the most important departments in the factory. Adjoining this is the marking and inspecting room, through which all fur coats, caps, capes, collars, muffs, etc., have to be passed, inspected, and marked before leaving the factory or placed in the sample-room. In the sample-room, the many different lines are shown off in a most attractive manner, each line being systematically arranged. It was said that they now have for the various lines they manufacture over 300,000 orders.

This concern also manufacture many different kinds of gloves. Among the kids employed in the manufacture thereof are Napa kid, Suede imported kid, German imported, Arabian mocco, imitation mocco, domestic kid, reindeer, green buck, tan buck, cariboo, smoked deer, smoked horsehide, etc. During the last month they had cut 1,037 dozen pairs of gloves and mits. In the glove factory they employ over 114 hands. This branch of the business has only been in vogue now about 14 months, and Mr. Paquet is certainly to be congratulated upon the progress made. The foreman of this department told the interested visitor that before a pair of gloves are completed they have to pass through from 20 to 27 hands. In value they range from $5.50 to $42 per dozen.

WEATHER AND TRADE.

Felt hat manufacturers in the Manchester, England, district, are complaining that trade is very slack and disappointing. It is accounted for largely by the chilly weather prevailing so long, combined with the appeals being made all over Great Britain for the war and famine funds, which is having its effect upon the business done by the retailers. In linen hats there has been a tremendous output. Straw hats, too, have been freely called for in some parts of England; for the first four months of this year the imports of straw hats and bonnets into England were over double what they were during the corresponding period last year; and there is a big increase over a like period in the value of straw plait imported. The sailor shape in ladies' straws again holds undisputed sway this year.

The English wholesale hatters report a fair amount of business, especially in light shapes and straws. The white linen hats are found very useful in the hot weather. Large orders are being filled for stitched felts, and in drabs and Cubas. Light stitched hats, also, are largely replacing tweeds.

Advices to a Canadian fur importer, Mr. James D. Allan, are to the effect that offerings of Persians at the Nijni Fair next month will not be over 60 per cent. of last year's supply.

RETAIL PURCHASES OF KNIT GOODS.

SAYS The New York Wool and Cotton Reporter: "There is a phase of the knit goods business, which, while not new this season, has become particularly prominent and very annoying to the agents of knit goods, and also to the retailers who have been taken in by it. Not many seasons ago, some enterprising men conceived the idea that it would be an excellent plan to solicit orders for knit goods, both hosiery and underwear, from the retailers. To do this, they would make arrangements with some mill or mills, and secure a line of samples. Then they would canvass among the retailers, and their representations would appeal very strongly to the merchant. Of course, the agent would explain to the retailer that he represented the mill direct, and showed how much the said retailer could save by purchasing from him. This looked very plausible, and the agents secured considerable business.

Perhaps the first of this was done in good faith, and in a perfectly legitimate manner, though, of course, the best mills, and those having a reputation, would not allow themselves to be represented in that way. Since then, many other agents have stepped into the same field, some of them with honorable intentions, while others evidently do not intend to act "on the square." Last season this became a very strong factor in the market, and many retailers placed orders with these agents. The result, however, was very far from satisfactory. Some received goods, and some did not, and were obliged to exert every effort to secure lines for the season, and as it was then very late, they were usually disappointed, and unable to secure the grades they wanted. Where the goods were delivered, many of them were nowhere near the quality of the samples submitted, yet there appeared to be no redress. The agents were irresponsible, and the mills claimed that they delivered what they received orders for. The retailer is not likely to be bitten a second time, but this season irresponsible men have continued to carry on this style of business, and our attention has been called to several instances where much dissatisfaction has resulted.

This is merely intended as a warning to retailers. Of course, the primary idea is, that they can get the goods cheaper by saving a middleman's profit, but, as a matter of fact, it is usually just the other way. The "agent" must pay all of his own traveling expenses, and the mill charges more than it does to wholesale houses ordering enormous quantities. Besides this, the lack of responsibility is a feature not to be lightly overlooked. It means a great deal to be dealing with a responsible firm.

Galt dry goods merchants have agreed to close at six o'clock every evening, Saturday excepted.

Crumley Bros., of Kingston, have removed to other premises, pending alterations to their new store, into which they will move as soon as the building is ready. The store is being enlarged and improved, and will be ready for occupancy by August.

The palatial new Summer hotel at Burlington, Ont., which is being opened this month, has been furnished throughout with Ostermoor's Patent Elastic Felt Mattress and "Alaska" brand feather pillows. The contract was placed through Thomas C. Watkins, a prominent dry goods dealer in Hamilton, and the goods were manufactured by The Alaska Feather & Down Co., Limited, of Montreal, who are the sole makers of the Ostermoor Patent Elastic Felt Mattress for Canada.

OUTLOOK FOR TRADE, STYLES IN FALL MILLINERY, DRESS GOODS, ETC.

From the DRY GOODS REVIEW's special correspondent.

WITH the thermometer ranging between 97 and 100 in the shade and the pavements fairly melting your pneumatic tires, it seems incongruous to talk of "Fall Styles." Truly, Winnipeg has not been so hot and dusty in many years. The frequent showers of June, which have always been a feature of the West, have been painfully conspicuous by their absence this season, and, for one June at least, the fair dames of the western metropolis have aired themselves in snow-white costumes, without dread of coming home draggled abominations, fit only for the washtub. Never have there been so many white frocks upon the streets. Very fresh and dainty they look, especially when the effect is heightened by a geranium, pale green, or mauve parasol. The "Ladysmith" helmet, in white jumbo braids, has begun to supersede the ever popular sailor with white costumes.

The weather that has so admirably suited the white frocks, has not been so good for the wheat, and some anxiety is being felt at the continued absence of rain. The drouth is more difficult to contend with, owing to the very light snowfall of the past Winter. The reports from some sections of the Province are discouraging, but all west of Moosomin, in the Northwest Territories, the country is no doubt safe, as they have had plenty of warm rains. If Manitoba gets the greatly desired rain within a week, much of the damage will be averted. [Since the above was written rain has fallen.—Editor DRY GOODS REVIEW.]

THE D. McCALL CO.

It was a pleasure to step out of the glare into the cool dimness of The D. McCall Co's. showrooms, where all hands were busy arranging Fall samples. Of course, the trimmed goods are not here, but the ready-to-wear, the felt shapes, and the trimming therefor are here in abundance. There is a noticeable increase in the ready-to-wear goods, and among these of course are conspicuous the military effects. The "Strathcona," "New South Wales' Lancers," "London Infantry," "Volunteer" and "Baden Powell" are among the most popular. Of these, the "Baden Powell" is decidedly the prettiest and the most becoming. It will suit almost any face and has a jaunty grace about it without the least suggestion of being fast. In wheeling hats, the "Ilsworth" is a new style sure to be popular. It has a soft felt body and turns sharply up at the back, droops over the face, and is both comfortable and becoming, a somewhat rare combination. The walking hats have all low flat crowns and are not particularly pretty. Round crowns are very much in evidence, and though they are no doubt the proper thing they are not pretty, nor are they likely to suit many faces.

TRIMMINGS.

There is nothing very new in this line, but all the goods are pretty. Plumes, fancy quills, angel and cupid wings and fancy black mounts, jetted, spangled and sequined, are shown, and also feather bandeaux which are particularly pretty in the peacock effects. Bandeaux of mink, beaver and chinchilla also promise to be popular.

RIBBONS.

A very pretty line of black ribbons with white edges and white stitchings are shown, and also full lines of taffetas in all pastel shades. These will be used in combination with both plain and fancy velvets for trimmings. Among the early Fall trimmings, flowers will be used a good deal, especially large ragged chrysanthemums. These flowers will combine very well with velvets. In black flowers, for mourning goods, the lines are very handsome, some unusual effects being seen. In buckles, the gilt and rhinestone buckles, and those with enamel flowers will be the most popular.

Millinery business has been exceptionally good, and the outlook for Fall trade is very promising. Mr. White, manager of the Winnipeg branch, is at present in the West with samples.

STOBART & CO.

Mr. Wilson, European buyer for the house, kindly gave your correspondent a peep at the very latest things in dress goods. These are the "Zibilines." They are all-wool goods in plain homespun weaves with camel's hair spots and checks. The appearance is handsome and rich, without being too showy, and these goods are likely to be popular, as they are eminently suited to our Winter weather. The same thing is shown in tartan colors with camel's hair checks in black. Among the new goods also are mercerized wool brocades, in all kinds of pretty shot effects, and silk and wool broches with shell patterns. The most popular goods in the Old Country, and likely to be equally so here, are the rough Scotch tweeds, the rougher the better. These come in fawns, checks, browns and greens, but the most fashionable shades are bluettes and purple. Black and white combinations also promise to be popular, as also coverts in all shades. A very pretty line of fancy plaid blouse cloths was also shown. As woollen goods have advanced in price, cottons are made to take their place in many ways, and none more effectively than the cotton tartans that look so like wool that it is necessary to feel them in order to tell the difference. These will retail at 15 to 20c. per yard.

The fancy silk blouse seems just as popular as ever, and lovely silks are shown for its creation. Japan silks, in blues, pinks and mauves, with morning glories looking as if hand-painted; foulards, with dainty patterns of roses on a cream ground; tartan taffetas, and, in more expensive lines, satin broches in dainty patterns and exquisite pastel shades; Victoria gauffre silks for trimmings, and all shades of glace satin, which is again popular.

GAULT'S.

The Western branch of this firm is now comfortably settled in their fine new warehouse, on the corner of Bannatyne and Arthur streets. The building is 80 ft. wide by 100 ft. long, and consists of four storeys and basement. Two electric elevators are run through the entire building, and there is the best of light, air and conveniences of every description; in fact, it is a thoroughly up-to-date warehouse.

As the house here will combine their orders to manufacturers with those of the eastern branch at Montreal, they feel they will in this way be able to carry fuller ranges of colors, shades, and fabrics than have been known in the history of the wholesale trade here, and to meet this want will be the special aim of the house.

On the fourth floor is to be found a full line of house-furnishings; on the third, smallwares and men's furnishings. The latter, also, will be a special line, as the Gaults are manufacturers of these lines of goods. On the second floor is the dress goods department and hosiery. On the first floor, the staples and also the handsome offices. In the basement are a reserve stock of staples and the great receiving-rooms of the house. Mr. Belcher, the manager, who kindly showed your correspondent through the house, spoke most hopefully of the outlook for trade here, and said they were entirely satisfied with things so far and much encouraged for the future. They had been courteously welcomed by the other firms in the same line of trade, and were settling down to business and feeling quite at home.

report all travelers on the road with Fall samples. Business in placing orders has been very good. This house pride themselves particularly on the fact that their large range of blankets (some 5,000 pairs) were all bought before the rise of the wool market, and they feel that in these lines they can do just a shade better than anyone else for their friends.

A particularly fine line of dress goods is shown by this house; in fact, all their various departments are full to repletion with well-assorted goods. The increased space of the new building and the greater convenience for handling work has stimulated the house to extra efforts, and they feel prepared for a larger Fall trade than ever before.

IMPERIAL DRY GOODS CO.

This company are erecting on the west side of Main street a fine, new three-storey brick building on stone foundations. There is a 40 foot frontage on Main street, and the building will run back 212 feet to Albert street. When completed, it is expected to be the most up-to-date retail dry goods store west of Toronto.

HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY.

This company have moved their men's furnishings, cloth, and tailoring departments into ample premises on the ground floor.

CLOTHING.

The clothing houses have little to say at this time. It is too early to pronounce on the coming season. Large placing orders have been booked, but the final state of the crops will have some effect in saying whether any of these may be cancelled or not. In case of any failure of crops, the clothing and fur men will feel the grip first, as country merchants were well stocked in these lines last Fall, and, owing to a mild Winter, did not sell them.

Winnipeg, June 20, 1900.

THE VALUE OF A BRAND.

It is a noticeable fact that the large dry goods stores, which usually take off any tickets which betray the name or the whereabouts of a manufacturer, invariably keep the "Alaska" brand tickets prominent on all comforters and pillows made by that company. For the name has become, like that of Hartshorn of shade roller fame and Palmer for hammocks and Dents for gloves—the standard of excellence. For a large order for down quilts, just booked by Mr. J. H. Parkhill, the buyer is supplying his own label to be sewed into one corner of every quilt. The headline of this label reads, "Alaska brand, pure down," thus paying a compliment to the manufacturers while safeguarding his own interest.

LADIES' TIES, ETC., IN JAPANESE SILK.

K. ISHIKAWA & Co. are anticipating a big Fall business. They will carry an extensive line of ties for ladies, including drawn work and fringe ties, as well as their specialty—crepe de chine ties. In ties for boys and children they will have a large assortment of fancy plaid Windsor ties. In handkerchiefs, they will have a large assortment of printed border and embroidered silk handkerchiefs, ranging in prices from $1.50 to $8.50 per doz. They also have their specialty in these goods—initial handkerchiefs in plain and twill silks—at these prices. Mufflers they will have in black and white surah silk which can be retailed at 75c. to $1.50 each. These are 30 inches square, and are extra value. Chair scarves, table covers and mantle drapes in silk with gold embroidery, which are always popular for Christmas trade, will be offered by this firm at all prices from $2.25 to $30 per doz. In plain Japan silks, which are also popular for the holiday trade, they carry a large range in several different qualities and in all the different colors created by the Paris fashions. Black Japan silks, dyed in Lyons, will be extensively used for blouse and dress goods this Fall. This firm will have particularly good value for their customers.

THE NEW CENTURY STOCK-TAKING MEASURING MACHINE.

The above, a cut of which appears in our advertising columns of this issue, is an invention and innovation of highest importance to progressive Canadian merchants. It is pre-eminently a stock taking machine of the most approved type, and, if once seen in operation, will number every merchant as its possessor.

The New Century (whose dimensions are only 2 x 6 x 12 inches) is a marvel in its working capacity. One man, with a machine, can do more work in a given time than three or four others under ordinary conditions. It will measure most accurately and satisfactorily all classes of rolled and folded goods. In three minutes' time a web of 50 yards can be unrolled, measured, blocked, rerolled and placed ready for the shelf. It registers yards and fractions of yards without possibility of error.

This little machine is finding its place as an indispensable auxiliary in connection with modern storekeeping.

Circulars and catalogue may be had by addressing The New Century Manufacturing Co., Brantford, Canada.

J. B. Hill, dry goods merchant, St. Thomas, has entered the wholesale dry goods, staples, notions, laces and fancy goods trade in that city.

Northway, Anderson & Co., dry goods merchants, Tilsonburg, have enlarged their premises by a new addition which enables them to make a fine display of their large stock and allow their customers extra comfort in shopping.

"Can't you set a date for the payment of this little bill?" asked the collector. "I could, if it weren't for one thing," answered the debtor. "What is that?" "I want to sustain my reputation for truth and veracity."

THE SUCCESS OF THE "LAMSON."

IT was about 15 years ago that Mr. W. S. Lamson, of Lowell, Mass., invented the Ball Cash Carrier System, which is what is known as a Gravity System, with which the cash was carried in balls rolling upon inclined tracks to and from the cash desk. The success of the system was very great, and from this start by the invention of hundreds of other styles of cash carriers, Lamson Co. have grown to be the largest cash carrier company in the world.

They are doing business in every civilized country, and have a capital stock at the present time of $15,000,000, manufacture everything from the cheapest wire line cash carrier to pneumatic tubes for the transmission of merchandise in cities. At the present time they are installing a plant for the delivery of packages from the congested portions of the city of Boston to the surrounding towns by pneumatic tubes.

Their business in Canada has, within the last three years, through a more intimate acquaintance of the Canadian merchants with the Lamson Co. and their methods, so largely increased that it has become necessary to establish a factory in Toronto, from which headquarters the Canadian merchants can be supplied with what the company feel to be the best cash carrier systems in the world.

WAR VICTORIES AND HAT SALES.

One result of the recent military demonstrations in London, England, was a decided impetus to the hat trade. The DRY GOODS REVIEW'S London correspondent says: "When London 'mafficks,' and goes 'pretoring,' it does much the same as Toronto in the way of processions, flags, songs, etc., but there is not room in the streets for the bonfires. As much of it as there is room for goes up in front of the Mansion House, and up and down Cheapside, and there it shouts its throat out, and incidentally destroys its own hat, and everybody else's hat within arm's reach. Silk hats and bowlers were thrown in the air as if they cost nothing, and once off the head of the wearer, were gone forever. The official news about Pretoria came about noon on Friday, and I am sending you, herewith, two items of news which show that these war victories are very good indeed for the hat trade. The items herein refer to the Pretoria rejoicing, and when I mention that it was only a mere shadow to the Mafeking fun, you can imagine how the hatters coined money on that occasion. The items are that one Cheapside hatter kept open till 2 a.m. on the day of celebration and sold 1,110 hats by doing so, and that sufficient ruins of hats were picked up in the streets of the 'city' to fill a dust cart."

WINDOW AND STORE FIXTURES.

Clatworthy & Co., manufacturers of display fixtures, novelties, etc., Toronto, whose warehouse and stock was seriously damaged by fire and water on April 4, have completely recovered from the effects of that disaster. They have cleared out all their old goods, and have now a full stock of new goods of every description.

In addition to the regular lines, orders for which they are in a position to fill more quickly and satisfactorily than ever before, they have many new articles which are worthy of window and store trimmers' attention. Among these latter lines are glass showcase counters, which are being universally adopted by the best stores; two styles of lace racks, for showing various kinds of laces, which, because of their practical utility, are bound to win favor; new cabinets and racks for displaying hats and caps; a counter notion case, an ingenious arrangement for showing novelties on the counter; new mirrors of every description for outfitters, clothiers, milliners and dry-goodsmen generally. Illustrations of several of these articles will be found in this firm's advertisement on another page.

By their system of keeping in touch with the latest improvements in display fixtures, as well as keeping up their stocks of regular lines this firm have found their business a steadily extending one, the present year being the most remarkable of any in this respect, which fact seems to prove that Canadian merchants are keeping up to date in the matter of store and window display.

NEW CANADIAN CLOAK FIRM.

Although the samples of the Victor Manufacturing Co., Quebec, manufacturers of ladies' cloaks and suits, have been on the market but a short time now, this up-to-date and go-ahead house report that their various lines, as shown by the increased orders received from their travelers and other sources, are meeting with the general approval of the trade throughout Canada, and retailers report a splendid demand. These people sell largely to some of the most responsible retailers in the larger cities, and on all sides hear nothing but praise, and that their goods are equal to the finest and newest designs ever turned out in Canada.

The Victor Manufacturing Co. have engaged one of the most skillful designers from New York, Mr. M. J. Waldman, and all the hands under him, we are told, are also New Yorkers. This insures stylish goods with newest ideas. There can be no doubt but that large orders will be placed for their lines this Fall and that the trade will be delighted with the striking and stylish patterns.

COLLINS COLORED HOOKS AND EYES.

ONCE in a while something appears in the notion line that causes one to exclaim, why was'n't it done before? This is the case with the idea of making hooks and eyes in the various colors to match dress fabrics. The suggestion came to a hook and eye salesman from a dressmaker, and from him to an inventive friend. It looks very easy—simple "colored hooks and eyes"—but when you think that they are enameled and must be baked in an oven to get the proper condition for the hard service to which hooks and eyes are subjected, that hooks and eyes are very small articles to handle, it made the problem more difficult than at first it seemed possible, and it was only after months of experiment that the present product was made a success.

There is every reason to believe that colored hooks and eyes have come to stay and will soon be accepted as a matter of course, in the same way as dress bindings and other trimmings. Every dressmaker does her best to conceal the hook and eye fastening, but somehow they will always show, and every woman who wants a neat costume has always wanted colored hooks and eyes to match her dress whether she ever heard of them or not. A merchant need not buy in any larger quantity than with the common kind, and the best selling shades can be reordered in any quantity.

The manufacturers are doing a great deal of careful advertising, and the reception of the colored hook and eye has been very flattering. They are retailed at the same price as the best quality of the common variety, and a small order can cover a good assortment that will match all shades and colors of dress fabrics. For further information address the manufacturers, Collins Colored Hook & Eye Co., Grand Rapids, Mich., U.S.A.

Men's Furnishings.

LONG ago I decided that money and time spent in making the store attractive are well spent. To the average dealer I say: Be watchful of what other men are doing in this matter. The men's trade appeals directly to the male desire to be nicely dressed. How, then, can the dealer ignore the new methods of showing goods, the fixing up of the store so as to attract the young men about town, and the addition of every new "wrinkle" that comes in his way?

There are in Canada some very fine stores. Study these. To the town dealer I would say visit the city for the purpose of inspecting them. The other day I was walking along Yonge street, Toronto, and it just struck me that a few notes, with illustrations, on a modern, finely equipped establishment for men's furnishings might help the out-of-town dealer. So I turned into E. Boisseau & Co.'s. Now, Mr. Boisseau believes in doing a thing well, so that when he decided to add a retail furnishing's branch to his business he did everything in the best style.

The establishment not only attracts attention from an architectural point of view, but very favorably impresses the observer by its well-trimmed windows and the bright, up-to-date appearance of both its exterior and interior.

There are few store windows that present a finer display of goods than that in which the contents of the men's furnishings department are arranged; for, although a wholesale tailoring store, the ground floor, besides retailing the work of the tailors upstairs, also contains all kinds of men's furnishings. No section of this store is more complete than this department, which occupies a corner of the store, and takes in, with its counters, nearly one whole side and half of front.

The counters in the store are of glass, more than half-a-dozen being used in the men's furnishings section, reaching from the door nearly to the back of the store. The manufacturer's name for this kind of showcase is the "Silent Salesman," a very suggestive title. With the exception of the corners and base, the whole case is of glass, while two glass shelves placed in them, about half the width of the case, and fastened along the rear of it, make plenty of room for goods. Goods placed in these cases are shown as satisfactorily as though they were suspended in the air, with the advantage that they are kept free from dust.

Each case has a certain line of goods which, at any time, can be found there. The case containing leather goods never has collars or ties in it, but always articles along the one line: purses, belts, shawl straps, etc., while behind it on the shelves are valises, hat boxes, and all leather goods found in such a store.

The shelves in Mr. Boisseau's are about six feet high, so that boxes can be piled on top of them and be reached handily by salesmen. Fastened to the top of the shelves, behind each showcase, are the "shelf display fixtures," appliances for exhibiting goods which fulfil their mission in a way that leaves nothing to be desired. These can be raised or lowered, or turned from one side to the other in whatever way is best to show what they hold. Shirts, belts, suspenders, etc., are all displayed on these racks, each in its own department.

On top of the showcases are placed the tie and collar stands, made, like the "shelf-display fixture," of oxydized iron, and being, also like it, ornamental as well as useful. The cases themselves are extremely well trimmed, no matter what may be their contents.

Speaking of the dressing of windows and showcases, Mr. Saunders, the manager of the men's furnishings department, said: "We pay a great deal of attention to keeping our windows and showcases in a good, neat condition. We do not dress windows like most stores. You'll never see a lot of ties—red, black, blue, white and all colors in our windows at the same time. We make a point of putting one color in at a time, sometimes one style, though generally we show narrow, wide, and puff ties together, but all of the same color or pattern. We had a window full of wide, blue ties, and nothing else, a while ago, which was very attractive.

"When only one color is used the window will draw greater notice than if there were a dozen colors in it. It can be seen from a distance, too, and catches the eye of the man on the other side of the street just as easily as it does anyone passing down this side. It takes a lot of goods to furnish a window like that, but it is, in my opinion, far ahead of the ordinary window of all shades and descriptions of goods. If we have not enough of the same style and color to make up a window we show the same color and different styles, or one pattern in different colors. But one class at a time is always our aim in dressing windows.

Our motto in trimming either windows or showcases is 'individual display,' and we consider it the proper one.

"We showed, some time ago, a line of white and black ties, with a card in front reading, 'you don't know when you may need one.' At another time we made a window out of our leather goods department—nothing in it but purses, valises, belts, etc., from the leather-goods counters.

"There are times when, for the sake of advertising, it is advisable to put more than one kind of goods in the window at a time. For instance, the other day we displayed a line of negligee shirts. Now, with them we put into the window the duck trousers and coat and cap that makes up the suit. You can in this way not only advertise the whole suit, but, by a proper arrangement of the goods, make the shirts especially conspicuous.

"When new goods come in they are first put into the window. None are shown anywhere else unless there happens to be some left over from the window, when they are exhibited in the showcases. These we pay great attention to, both as to the way in which they are trimmed and their own appearance. The goods in them are changed sometimes two or three times a week—whenever new goods come in. After a new line of goods has been displayed in the window they are put into the showcases. These glass cases are away ahead of the ordinary counter. Their name, the 'Silent Salesman,' is an appropriate one. I have no doubt but that they have sold articles many times by simply holding them up to view in the splendid way they do. Each case has its own line and is never changed. You see on the 'shelf-display fixtures' above them the same line of goods is exhibited.

"Now, take that glove case. People who come in after gloves might easily miss the showcase, but the gloves on the rack above it can be seen from all over the store, and a customer on seeing it would naturally suppose that the glove department was there. This is one of its advantages. It draws attention to the showcase in the same department as itself. The boxes on the shelves behind the glove counter contain nothing but gloves.

"Every department is the same. Around the showcase where the ties are you will find tie stands, and ties on the display fixture above it and on the shelves behind it.

"The tie and collar stands are very useful in drawing attention to their respective showcases, as well as in displaying goods so attractively.

"In these cases we follow the same line as in the window, as regards exhibiting goods. We always try to keep things of a color together and avoid mixtures as much as possible. Over there you see a showcase of boys' shirts. Last week we displayed in it a line of jerseys; next week something else will probably be shown there; but we never put the boys' shirts and jerseys in together. One thing at a time, and that advertised well, is worth a hundred things shown together where each takes interest away from the other."

To anyone who has seen Mr. Boisseau's windows, it must appear that Mr. Saunders is not far from right in advocating the placing of one color of goods in a window at a time, and one has but to walk down the line of "Silent Salesmen" in the men's furnishings department of this store to admire the principle on which all goods are exhibited—one thing at a time, or, as the manager has it, "individual display."

New Store in St. John.

In their new furnishing store in St. John, N. B., Messrs. Macaulay Bros. & Co. have gone to great pains in fitting up the interior so as to embody all the latest ideas. The ceiling and part of the walls are of ornamental steel of a handsome design, and a hardwood floor has been laid. A particularly new feature is the style of counter. Instead of the wooden counter which is generally seen, counters of plate glass framed in curly native birch have been put in. These serve the double purpose of display cases and sale counters. Goods can be shown to much greater advantage in them, and they give the store a very light and finished appearance.

The wall cases for the display of such goods as bath robes, dressing gowns and traveling bags are made of curly birch, beautifully wrought and highly polished. They are fitted with sliding plate-glass doors and will be lighted from inside by electric light.

Access to the large front window is had by means of sliding panels of a new patent.

A large room at the rear of the store will be fitted up immediately for the special display of trunks, traveling bags and other heavy articles.

The new store will be devoted entirely to gentlemen's furnishings. The space formerly given up to this class of goods in the main store will now be utilized for extending a line of household linens and dress goods.

Entrance to Messrs. Macaulay Bros. & Co.'s new furnishing store is had from King street and also by a connecting door from the main establishment.

A Discourse on English Glove Fashions.

A London writer on men's fashions gives the following very valuable hints on gloves: "Of all the many small items of a man's attire there are none which require to be more constantly renewed than that of gloves; also, there are none which require more careful choice in order to be in keeping with the rest of one's clothes. One constantly sees the unities, so to speak, marred by a pair of gloves of some startling shade, the effect being that hands 'fair, large, and fine' are made to appear like shoulders of mutton, whilst those of the little man have their smallness exaggerated to effeminacy. There are some men who will persist in wearing gloves no matter how warm the weather, just as if a well-tended bare hand were not 50 times more pleasing to behold, on account of its cool appearance, than the same hand stifled in the stuffy embraces of a thick deer or dog skin glove.

"Generally speaking, three or four pairs of good gloves of different shades at a time will last their owner for a month (I am not speaking, of course, of those to be worn at weddings, garden parties, flower-shows, those fretful functions known as 'At-Homes,' and the like, in all of which one's gloves can never be worn more than three times at most) for afternoon in the Row, race meetings—except Ascot—walks about the 'little village,' and so forth. I say three or four pairs because these should harmonize with the clothes one is wearing at the time, the well-known proverb as to hats, boots, gloves, and linen being every whit as applicable to a man's appearance as to that of a woman, and often going far to atone for shabbiness in other respects. These four pairs, then, constitute a stand-by for all occasions other than the first-named, and should be of the best that money can buy, being made of specially-selected skins and cut with 10 times as much care as the cheap varieties. They fit perfectly, yet easily, with plenty of length in the fingers; the others do not.

"Hence, I counsel my readers to follow my example, and, by giving half-a-guinea a pair, to secure all these advantages and—nearly endless wear. With a grey or black frock coat, therefore, dark grey suede or deerskin gloves—the former for choice in hot weather—are in the best taste. If you affect a brownish or drab colored frock coat a most appropriate color for the gloves is the shade called 'smoke,' which I do not remember to have seen at all until this season. It is a kind of brownish grey—much the color of so many of the backgrounds in the Dutchman's pictures—and has the quality of blending with most of the cloths now worn, whilst actually out of keeping with none of them. Another thing, too: I do not fancy it would show the dirt, so inseparable from London, so quickly as a pure grey. Hence I recommend it to my readers. Both smoke and grey, however, and not tan, may be worn with the navy-blue double-breasted coat and trousers, with which also black, and not tan, boots should be worn. Concerning this coat, I may say that it should be cut fully long this year, and that while the sides should drop straight from below the insertion of the sleeves, the man who wishes to make the most of his appearance should instruct his tailor to 'tight 'em over the 'ip,' as did the hero of a well-known soldier-ballad. This particular cut adds length to the figure, so does the lapel when cut with a good straight sweep from the shoulder. There should be at least four buttons, in order that the coat shall fit closely round the hips.

"Harking back to the subject of gloves, I fancy I hear my reader ask: 'When should tan gloves be worn?' Whenever you wear a tweed suit, especially one of the 'heather colors' (unless that tweed suit be a grey one, when, of course, grey gloves are in the best taste). Then, too, are tan boots appropriate; black calf or patent with the grey suit. There is, however, one exception to all the foregoing anent tan gloves, and that is when driving or riding. Then, no matter what the shade of one's coat, tan gloves are not only permissible, but the most workmanlike. For tandem or four-in-hand driving, 15 years' experience of the subject has taught me that there is no glove equal to that made of stout buckskin, which, of course, may now be procured in any shade, a good coffee or cigar-brown being the least likely to show dirt. The great tip with all driving or riding gloves is to have them thoroughly pliable. That is why I prefer them to the smooth dogskin, which stiffens when wet. They also afford a firmer grip. Get them fully large, with the backs cut longer than the palms, plenty of length in the fingers, and with a closely-fitting wrist. I always have such gloves made with a third button, so that the pull of the ribbons shall not drag the glove all over my hand. All these gloves are best cleaned with a washball of their own shade, very lightly applied. It is sometimes as well to have a double thickness stitched on the forefinger and between the second and third fingers of the left hand. But with a good, stout pair of buckskin gloves even this is not necessary.

"Last year, a very cool glove for Summer wear came into vogue, and bids fair to be just as popular this year. This is made of very closely woven silk, so closely woven, indeed, as to be indistinguishable from one made of suede unless closely examined. I know from personal experience that such gloves are delightfully cool in hot weather. This year all the best glove-makers seem to have abandoned metal buttons in favor of those made of mother-o'-pearl or horn, and these latter are much neater in appearance.

"For evening wear, a faint shade of lilac, almost white, is most generally worn; but, like all such, cannot be worn more than twice at most, and is scarcely a success when cleaned, no matter how good or costly the glove may be."

The Dress of two Noted Men.

In a character sketch in The Globe, W. A. P. Byrch, Toronto, gives a good description of the dress of Hon. G. W. Ross, Premier of Ontario, and of J. P. Whitney, leader of the Opposition in that Province. In his description of the traits of Hon. Mr. Ross, the writer comments on his dress thus: "This person knows how to dress well without devoting too much attention to personal adornment. In the House he is generally attired in a black frock coat with silk lapels, a black vest of the same material and neatly creased dark trousers to match. His pedal extremities are encased in brilliantly-polished black shoes, which are the envy of rural members. His collar is of the stand-up turn-point variety, and a modest dark four-in-hand tie is worn without adornment. This almost total lack of jewelry is a striking feature. A gold ring is worn upon the little finger of his left hand. His cuffs are of the old-fashioned cylindrical variety, fastened with unpretentious studs. Attached to his watch and extending to the second button of his waistcoat, with the bar outward, is a long, plain gold chain with charm. But none of these are conspicuous."

Of Mr. Whitney, he says: "Though with the means to the end, he is not lavish in his dress, the clothes in which he generally appears on the floor of the House being a steel-grey suit with short sacque coat, cut more for ease than style. His shoes are black, and, like the gentleman opposite, he does not allow their shining glory to suffer an eclipse. His collar on this day was of the same stand-up turn-point variety as that of Mr. Ross. It is not high, though a rear view would make it appear that it was very much so, but, probably, that is due to the architecture of the hon. member's neck and shoulders. His tie, an Ascot puff of bluish color, suits the gentleman's complexion admirably, and at the same time hides—at least it is in marked contrast to—the Tory red four-in-hand sometimes worn. His link cuffs are immaculately white and not prominent. Like the Premier opposite, he is not given to display in the way of jewelry. A medium length gold watch chain with charm is about all the jewelry visible, for the fingers of his strong, full-veined hands are guiltless of rings."

Canadian Neckwear in Australia.

The new trade opened up last year in the export of Canadian neckwear to Australia is going on. Its results do not appear in the official returns yet, so imperfectly do they represent the actual results. Quite recently, Messrs. E. & S. Currie, Toronto, shipped a large number of cases of neckwear to Australia. Mr. Evans, who has been placing their goods in Australia for them, left Australia for Hong Kong on May 31, so that he has completed his second trip around the Australian colonies. He landed at Brisbane, Queensland, last December, and then visited Sydney, Melbourne, Adelaide, then to the principal cities of New Zealand, returning to Sydney by way of Tasmania.

The business he has done has been very satisfactory, and, already, the firm have received more orders than during the entire first trip which Mr. Evans made. They anticipated a handsome increase, which would have been much larger but for the plague which has flattened business out considerably in Sydney. Mr. Evans himself was quarantined once for 10 days. But, evidently, Canadian neckwear has met with a splendid reception, and those who placed trial orders have now renewed them. The trade there have apparently thorough confidence in the patterns and finish of Canadian neckwear. The other day the Toronto manufactory and warehouse of the firm were visited by Mr. Hawkin, of D. & W. Murray, Launceston, Tasmania, a large house with branches throughout that colony. He was well pleased with the conditions under which he found Canadian neckwear being made.

Mr. Evans will push business in Hong Kong, returning to Canada from there. If, as a member of the firm remarked, he can provide rope neckties for all the Boxers in China it would be a good thing.

New Suspender Idea from London.

A London correspondent says: "Coming through Old Bond street, some months ago, with both my eyes wide open to receive suggestions from the shop windows which are always so beautifully dressed in that part of London, I noticed a very attractive display of suspenders occupying the whole of a well-known hosier's window. I stopped immediately to inspect, and have congratulated myself for doing so many a day since, for the braces proved to be of an entirely new sort, and their good points impressed me so that I easily became a purchaser. The most noticeable feature of this 'Annular spring brace' is the absence of buckles, which alone is an immense improvement on old ideas. The shoulder webs end in small leather straps, which pass through tough hand-made rubber rings and fasten back on a small brass stud. The button-hole parts are secured to the rubber rings in the same way, the three rings thus utilized supplying the necessary elasticity. Adjustment to required length is simple and perfect, insuring equal length and equal wear.

"For nearly six months now, I have been wearing a pair, and find them most comfortable in every way. The rubber rings seem to stand any strain, and will last indefinitely. If I should break one, or should one become lax, I have only to fall back on a second set, which accompanies every pair of these excellent braces.

"I might add that this 'Annular' brace is made in both silk and cotton webs with white or natural leather straps to match, and I have it from a reliable source that the West End hosiers are supplying them to some of their most particular customers. •

J. M. McK."

The Latest London Ties.

An examination of the ties now being displayed in Young & Rochester's London house shows that the dark patterns are still in favor. Both flowing ends and narrow shapes (for bows) run largely in blacks, with grey silk diagonal stripe, or "all-over" brocade.

A new and specially attractive line is selling remarkably well at the moment, being specially suited for Summer trade. It is a mixture of silk and linen, and has a stripe or border woven at the ends. There is a great variety of shades, including the popular blues for boating wear, etc. These ties have the appearance of silk and tie beautifully. By no means the least important feature is that the material washes well, and the lining is stitched, so that it cannot get out of position during the process.

Patriotic ties are still shown in great profusion, and one which was specially designed to meet the Canadian demand was of maple leaf design. The effect of this pattern in the various brown and green silks is exceedingly pretty.

Individual Display.

The principle on which windows were dressed a few months ago is apparently becoming unpopular. Most of the leading city furnishers have adopted an entirely different and directly opposite one. The most attractive window to-day is made with one color, or sometimes with materials of different colors, but of one pattern.

This is not a new idea with one or two stores, but with the majority it is a decided change. One window is used to display blue-striped shirts and nothing else. They are placed on view in two rows, facing each other and meeting in an angle at the back of the window. Another store exhibits a line of white Summer suits with a belt and straw hat with each suit, while a third makes a display of blue sweaters with white stripes. These windows are wholly taken up with their respective lines of goods, nothing else that would be likely to destroy the effect they produce being shown.

A window trimmed in this way not only is in itself attractive, but gives the impression that a large stock of goods may be found in the store. If it is not possible to make up a whole window with strictly one pattern and color, the effect produced is practically the same if the styles of the goods shown are alike, and the patterns and colors somewhat similar. When one passes from inspecting a window display of this description to one in which all sorts and shades of goods are shown the difference is very noticeable, and the advantage is not by any means with the latter.

A Good Outlook for July.

There should be a good men's furnishings business done this month. The prevalence to within the last week or so of comparatively cool weather has kept back the usual large business in midsummer materials. If July proves to be as warm as usual there is bound to be an active demand for these goods. The lightest weights of underwear, socks, etc., the coolest of shirts, hats, etc., will be asked for more freely, while the sale of linen suits, duck trousers, men's and boys' blazers, etc.,

will become a good feature. There is no question but that trade in these lines can be greatly increased by active pushing on the part of the furnisher. The majority of people are on the lookout, especially on the hottest days, for garments that will increase their comfort, yet do not know what will serve that purpose most thoroughly. If, by advertising in the local press or by window display, these buyers are informed that you have ready the most suitable garments for hot-weather wear they are sure to be interested, and are likely to, at least, examine the goods offered. Picnicers' and campers' wearables are also worthy of attention during July. Emphasize the fact that only by the wearing of suitable clothing is it possible to most thoroughly enjoy a day, a week or a month by lake or stream, and you will win for yourself an increased inquiry for suitable garments. If there is to be a 12th of July celebration in your town, make some money out of the sale of orange ribbon, either for hat bands, coat-lapel streamers, or badges. Of course, there is a tendency to take things easy in July, and a furnisher is not to be criticized if he takes his holiday with the rest of the world. But the business is to be done, and the outlook appears good for the furnisher who goes in to do it.

Winning a Customer's Confidence.

The merchant or clerk who has the genius of winning confidence has a quality which is exceedingly valuable. It is important that buyers should be attracted to the store through advertising of one kind or another, but it is more important that their confidence should be won and retained. To win confidence, certain elements of character, as well as certain methods of doing business, are essential. The clerk or merchant must know his business and the value of goods so thoroughly that he can honestly and intelligently express an opinion as to the respective merits of various goods in any line he may be showing. The salesman must be, moreover, fearless in his statements—having fear neither of contradiction by the buyer, nor of criticism by his employer. If he does fear, he cannot have sufficient confidence in himself to win confidence from others. But a salesman may be honest, intelligent and fearless and yet fail in winning the confidence of buyers, because of wrong business methods. The merchant who misrepresents in his advertising, or who tries to sell inferior goods or imitations for first-class articles, places his clerks at a disadvantage which few clerks can overcome. Again, the merchant who makes sudden or erratic changes in his prices makes it hard for his clerks. His clerk may sell a valuable customer a straw hat on Monday at $1.75, and tell him that the price is rockbottom. But, on Wednesday, the customer passes and sees the hat in the window, conspicuously marked $1.50, or even as low as $1.25. This may occasion the loss of a customer. At least, it will certainly mean the loss of his confidence in the clerk who sold him the hat. If this is done frequently there is bound to be a great deal of loss due directly to this cause.

In addition to good business methods and the qualities of honesty, intelligence and fearlessness, the merchant and salesman who wins confidence must possess a good knowledge of men. There is, in both town and city, such a wide range of temperaments and opinion that the means which win the confidence of one will fail in winning that of many others. While it is always well to treat a buyer in a friendly way, there are some whose natural reserve makes it advisable to treat them with formal rather than friendly courtesy until they show a tendency toward greater freedom. The salesman should know how, and be willing to meet every advance of any buyer, rich or poor, in a confident, honorable manner. If he does, he will not only win but hold many customers.

The Use of Price Cards.

While grocers, hardware dealers, and even dry goods dealers find it advisable to make liberal and continual use of price cards, the general consensus of opinion among the large down-town city furnishers is that price cards are to be used with moderation and discretion. These merchants have found that the trade which is most satisfactory is the trade of regular customers, rather than transient trade, and so they direct their efforts to hold by reason of quality and attractiveness rather than by price or quantity. Yet there are times when, by reason of fortunate buying, a furnisher is able to offer a line somewhat below the market. Even the most conservative take advantage of this by not only selling at the low price, but to draw attention to the fact in his window by the use of price cards.

This policy of impressing quality all the time, and price when the conditions are favorable, is undoubtedly the best for a city where there is a large high-class trade. But, in the country town, the furnisher has to look for trade from all sorts and conditions of men. Here quality and price are of equal importance, so attention to both must be paid in advertising and window displays. Therefore, price tickets should be used freely, yet with regard to the effect they will create on buyers who look for high-class goods. To advertise price alone would be almost as bad policy in a small town as to talk only of quality.

One of the neatest window dressers to be found in the market this Summer is offered by Tooke Brothers, Limited, in the way of a diagonal pointed graduate. The accompanying cut shows this scarf in their new Razimire silks.

Notes Here and There.

Wyld-Darling Co., Limited, Toronto, state that the prospects for Fall business are exceedingly bright. In men's underwear they are showing a big range in fleece-lined and plain and striped wool goods. In plain natural wool special attention is being paid to their "Wolsey" brand, which is guaranteed unshrinkable and will not felt when washed. As such a garment has been much sought for by the trade, it is having a big sale. In men's half-hose this house are showing great values in black cashmere and worsteds, plain and ribbed, to sell at popular prices. They have also a good range of heather mixtures in all prices, which are meeting with great favor in the trade.

George Mackenzie, of C. S. Ellis' store, Sarnia, has gone to Petrolia, where he has entered the men's furnishing store of H. C. McDonald.

They have a full stock of men's collars in all the correct shapes. They report the straight stand-up will be the favorite for Fall wear.

Mr. Wm. Rigby, of Armitage & Rigby, Manchester, England, manufacturers of shirtings, towelings, flannelettes, etc., visited the Canadian markets last month.

Some firms are kicking because some cotton companies have increased the charge for cases in which goods are shipped. In one instance the charge was increased from 50 to 75c.

They also have a very large range of lined and unlined kid gloves. For early Fall wear their "Roberts" and "Lipton" kid gloves for walking and driving, shown in all the leading shades, are bound to have a good sale.

Fraser & Ross, of Brandon, Man., are building an addition to their west store, which runs 30 feet farther back than the present men's furnishing department. When the addition is completed this firm will have plenty of room to put in a much larger stock of clothing and men's furnishings.

A new trust, or combination has been formed in England called the United Bleachers' Association, with a share capital of $30,000,000 and power to issue $15,000,000 debentures. Mr. H. S. Cross, M.P. for Bolton, is chairman of the association, and Messrs. John Brennan, of Seedley, and John Stanning, of Leyland, are managers. The new combination is said to be a representative federation of the Lancashire industry.

W. J. Chapman, manufacturer, of Wingham, Ontario, has become well known for the making of special lines of gloves and mitts, especially suitable for the Manitoba trade. Mr. Chapman introduced into Canada the chrome tannage which has superseded the old tannage. Amongst his lines of gloves are buckskin, horse hide, moose, and full lines of sheep. Mr. Chapman is also devoting special attention to the "Klondike" brace, made of white horse hide. The advantages of this brace are that, while the ordinary leather will stain the clothes by reason of the perspiration from the body, the "Klondike" brace is made of a material which has no color from which the stain can be drawn. The brace is guaranteed for three years and will probably last ten. It is a continuous round, which is another advantage. The trade are invited to examine the qualities of this brace as a trade-winner.

The "Kerchief" tie is having a great sale owing to the warm weather of the past few weeks, and will, no doubt, be the best selling negligee tie for this Summer for both men and women.

A new bat's-wing bow, recently introduced in New York, is being asked for here and is selling very freely wherever shown. It has square ends with very puffy short loops and drawn in tightly at the centre. Its close resemblance to a well tied-by-hand bat's-wing is the secret of its popularity.

AMERICAN SILK WAISTS.

HEREWITH is an illustration of a waist shown by The American Manufacturing Co., and is one of the latest designs, made up of heavy black tafetta, suitable for Fall trade. A particularly striking feature is the up-and-down effect with one row of cord and fancy stitching in white. It is a very pretty garment, in both appearance and pattern, and is right up to date. This is only one of many other designs of this season's style.

The American Manufacturing Co.'s warehouse is situated on St. James street, Montreal. They are manufacturers of a high grade of silk waists. They claim to be the only ones in Canada who make American waists. This, they say, gives the Canadian dealers the opportunity of purchasing a New York waist on their own side of the line, both as regards work and finish. These people are makers of silk waists that sell as high as from $18 to $25. The wholesale trade, they say, are very well pleased with their goods, and, so far, have sold more of their line than of any other make. Their designer takes a trip to New York every three or four months in the interest of their house, and they are therefore able to keep in touch with the latest New York styles.

Said a Canadian buyer on a large scale to THE DRY GOODS REVIEW the other day: "One reason I have for thinking there will be no decline in prices this Fall is that reports of drops in prices apply to top prices which have never been paid in this market at all. Any advances that have taken place here are not going to be affected by a decline in what are practically speculative prices abroad. Our people have not been paying those top prices. Take hosiery, for instance. I am selling a line to-day at $2.25, which, if it had been bought at present prices, I would have to ask $3 for. The agents for German hosiery have, in a few instances, lately received their samples for Spring 1901, and their prices are so high that they hesitate to show them to the trade. All these indications show a pretty firm market in these lines, while, as regards cotton, it is well known that some wholesale houses in Canada can show at least some lines cheaper than the present mill prices."

THE FALL TRADE.

THE W. R. BROCK CO., LIMITED, TORONTO.

THE dress goods season for the Autumn and Winter has opened favorably, and The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, Toronto, report good orders to date. Their main business so far has been on their celebrated "Victorian" serges, cashmeres, velours, sedans, box cloths, poplins, vigoureux, estamines, zibelines, camel's hair, etc. This brand is their registered trade mark for Canada, and all goods bearing the mark may be depended on for make, dye, finish and durability. Another, and very important, feature for Fall is their extensive show of "Imperial Suitings" for skirts and complete costumes. In these they claim the largest range in the trade and the bulk of the cloths and designs being entirely confined to them for Canada, and, comprising the most up to-date novelties, makes their assortment a peculiarly attractive and exclusive one. They specially warn buyers to book early, as already such large orders have been placed that many patterns are sold up which cannot be repeated, and have in consequence to be withdrawn from the travelers. In fancies they set special store by their magnificent show of high-class checks in camel's hair and zibeline effects, also fancy backed goods, all of which are receiving favorable attention from the trade. Fancy blacks are as far from neglect as in the past few seasons, and this firm, by their increased assortment and variety, are doing more business from old clients and extra business from those who have not bought from them previously. Dress goods properly bought mean profitable business, and The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, only ask for a comparison, and claim that it will be time well expended.

The firm have just opened and passed into stock their first consignment of silks for Fall, consisting of 12 cases of plains and fancies. These comprise a great variety of novelties and staple lines, which are already in demand, and have been largely sold ahead from travelers' samples. THE REVIEW had an opportunity of examining many of these in the piece, and, from orders placed by many of the keenest and most extensive buyers in the country, would certainly recommend an examination of the following: Blacks—Peau de soies (including their celebrated "Jubilee" make), which can now be bought again for a short time at the old prices. Satins—In all qualities and extra values; surahs, including P330 at old price; mervilleux, in all qualities; special gros grains, bengalines, faille française, royals, broches, satin duchesse. Colors—Full ranges of shades and exceptionally cheap surahs, satins, moire antiques (a great bargain), tamoulines (to retail at 50c.), bengalines (also a drive), taffetas (to retail at 50c.), liberty satins (all silk). Fancies in numbers and variety impossible to describe, but which we can honestly recommend an examination of.

In arctic or fleeced underwear, The Brock Co. have never had such success with this line as this season. Their selection of styles and prices has caught the trade, and they are fortunate in having placed large orders, as, from all accounts, there will be a great scarcity when the season is once on. Their brands are just as popular as the values. A few of these are: "Bobs," "Kitchener," "Kimberley," "Buller," "French," "Milner," "Dundonald," "White," "Berlin,"

"London," and "Paris." Special value in many lines to retail at 50c, 75c., and $1. Also boys' in every size, from 20 to 34 inches.

In spite of the high prices in all classes of wool, the men's furnishing department can quote the same goods as last season's in almost every case at the same prices. Their 3-lb. grey mixed black cashmere and natural merinos can't be surpassed for value. In cashmere hosiery, they are in a position to supply the largest importers in the Dominion with every line of ribbed and plain black cashmere hosiery at prices far below the values of to-day. The large contracts placed in 1898 not yet being exhausted is the reason that they are in this happy position. Sample dozens can be had on application.

Since The Brock Co. purchased victoria lawns and swiss spot muslins, prices have advanced three or four times. They are thus able to quote prices far below those of to-day, and many large importers are availing themselves of this opportunity. In fact, they are supplying some manufacturers with victoria lawns, as Brock's prices are lower than those at which any manufacturer can import now from Manchester or Glasgow.

The men's furnishing and fancy goods departments have just passed into stock some of the latest fads from Gotham, including the new golf or finger purse with silver initial, wish-bone brooches, men's neckwear, flowing ends (including the "Broadway," "Central Park" and "5th Avenue"), patriotic belt buckles with maple leaf, Union Jack, Royal Ensign, lion and unicorn, yachting, etc., designs, retailing at 25c.

All-over nets and laces are much in demand, and a large, well selected stock is shown at good value, together with new veilings, valenciennes laces, etc.; also embroideries, insertions and edgings in regular and carton job lots. Amongst the latter are five or six ranges of 4½ ends, put up neatly, and are just the thing for the bargain-day counter or the "sell-on-sight" basket.

Knitted Wool Goods.—As intimated before, many houses have dropped out of this class of goods. This only stimulated The Brock Co. to offer a more attractive bill of fare, and each season finds their assortment larger, more attractive and better value, containing goods from Leicester, Berlin and our own fair Canada. Any merchant wanting knitted wool shawls, hoods, caps, tuques, polka jackets, mitts, infants, clouds, scarves, bootees, boots, gaiters, Shetland falls, etc., cannot find a better selection than in this house.

The demand for men's and boys' sweaters continues, and this firm's stock keeps pace with them and shows all kinds, sizes and prices in men's and boys' plain goods, and also a good sprinkling of fancies from Canadian mills, and also from one of the largest factories in Leipsic, Germany.

Gloves form an important branch of Brock's business, and this season finds the stock more complete than ever in ladies' and children's ringwood, cashmere and fancy gloves, also men's knitted wool, lined kid, mocha, etc. Amongst the latter is a special line of men's lined kid in black and colors to retail at 50c.—quite a snap.

At this season The Brock Co. import handkerchiefs galore in anticipation of a large demand for them during the Fall months. An inspection of their range for Fall, 1900, will convince the most sceptical that they are on top again this season in all lines of staple goods together with their fancy picture handkerchiefs, Swiss embroidered, lace edge, hemstich silk, etc.

The carpet department have for the Autumn trade a full stock of their best-selling patterns in tapestry, brussels and velvet carpets which should be of interest to merchants requiring to assort their stocks. In the same department, repeats in several new numbers of lace curtains, tapestry curtains, art muslins and cretonnes, have been passed into stock, and samples are in the hands of the travelers. The new season's floor and table oilcloths are in stock.

The linen business has probably been the most upset during the past few months, prices on all classes of goods in this line having shown the sharpest advance. The market at the present time remains firm with every indication of staying so. The W. R. Brock Co. draw particular attention to their special offerings in towels, crashes, table damasks and napkins. French canvases can be got from them to-day at prices which can only be maintained till present contracts are exhausted.

In cotton dress goods, the firm show two special lines designed and printed for themselves which cannot be bought elsewhere in Canada: 36-inch printed checks, 32-inch woven checks, double fold, in 30-yard ends, can be retailed at 15c., and they will be a trade-winner at that; nice bright effective designs for dresses and wrappers, children's dresses, etc., in Royal navy, cardinal, brown, green, purple and maroon grounds. This line has had a big sale up to date and promises to be one of the leading lines for Fall, 1900.

Samples are in the hands of their travelers of 18 different ranges of wrapperettes, comprising the choicest designs of German, British, American and Canadian cloths, the whole giving a most enticing assortment. One particularly desirable line is reversible black and red—black and white salisbury, which can be retailed at 10c. In flannelettes, over 25 cloths, from the cheapest to the finest, are shown. In domets and saxony, stock is fully assorted in both plain and twills.

In dress linings, the department make a specialty of keeping all kinds of lining, from the cheapest to the best. Many cloths are constructed and confined strictly to this firm. They also carry several cloths in all the leading high colorings; two lines to be specially noted are C1-36 linenette and B18 percaline, two standard cloths.

In tailors' trimmings, five special numbers of black Italians, which are offered at the old prices as long as the stock lasts. Five qualities in colored Italians and serges, Nos. H6, H750, H708, H800 and H900, in 18-yard ends, brown, fawn, olive brown, and slate colors, are all nice finish and good wearers. Four ranges fancy silesia, large variety of patterns, good heavy weights, low, medium and fine qualities—every one a special.

In the warehouse of The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, Montreal (late James Johnston & Co.), the preparations for Fall trade are complete and extensive. The staple department announces a special sale of wash fabrics containing a number of lines at clearing prices. They have lately opened up a number of beautiful novelties in printed goods. The department has lately much increased its space in order to meet the requirements of a growing trade. The smallwares and notion department aim to carry everything which the retail store needs, either in staple lines or the latest novelties. Among these may be mentioned a range of belt buckles in jet, steel, gilt and the latest fancy styles. Enameled patriotic pins are shown. Persian novelties in side, empire and pompadour combs are numerous as well as many fancy hair ornaments.

In hosiery and gloves, they are showing for Fall some special values in plain and ribbed cashmere hose, as well as an immense range of cashmere and ringwood gloves, including the new designs with the latest styles of fastenings. They are also showing some extra values in men's, women's and children's fleece-lined underwear. Of these, large quantities have been booked.

In men's and ladies' Summer neckwear, the latest shipments include new designs in the flowing ends and stock collar effects. Sample boxes of these will be sent to any dealer who inquires for them, and a sample assortment can be had in the same way. The range of ladies' and men's belts at popular prices includes plain leathers, beaded, jeweled, elastic pique, canvas, tinsel, khaki and numerous others, also dog collars and pulley belts.

The handkerchief department has just received a big shipment of fancy embroidered handkerchiefs, from 70c. to $4 per dozen, and is well stocked with every make from the cheapest lawn at 18c to the finest silk at $12 per dozen. They have a lot of 3,000 dozen lawns which are now in stock at 25, 35 and 45c. per dozen. These are being sold in large quantities, and orders should be in early. For Autumn trade, a beautiful range of gimps in silk, jets and steels, also applique, which is the newest trimming for Fall, are being shown. A large shipment has just been received of 22-inch guipure all-over laces in butter color, from 35c. to $1 per yard. These are all new designs and are being sold rapidly. A large selection of guipure laces and insertions are also shown at prices ranging from 5 to 15c. per yard.

The curtain department claims to have the largest range of curtains in this market, bought from the leading manufacturers abroad, and ranging in price from 17c. up to $12 per pair, in all makes, Swiss, Irish point guipure and Nottingham. Merchants are invited to look at the samples of these, as also of lace curtain nets, pillow shams, covers, and fancy renaissance doyleys, etc.

LARGE PURCHASE OF GINGHAMS.

S. Greenshields, Son & Co. advise that they have purchased 6,200 pieces of fine gingham. This represents the entire stock which the Canadian Colored Cotton Mills had on hand. The goods are going rapidly, so that orders will need to be in early to secure the best assortment.

THE SEASON IN MANUFACTURED FURS.

The firm of Edgar, Coristine & Co., 517-519 St. Paul street, Montreal, on being interviewed, report an exceedingly satisfactory state of affairs with regard to sales of manufactured furs, etc., for coming season, due, no doubt, to the excellent range of well-made and stylish samples carried by their various representatives. Their manufacturing department is working steadily in order to have the various lines ready for prompt delivery of orders. The range of skins being worked up comprise the very choicest grades of seals, Persian lamb, grey kimmer, astrachans, beaver, marten, raccoon, sable, electro seal, etc., all of which are fresh from the European and American markets, personally selected by one of the firm. There has been a brisk demand for staple furs, such as coats, jackets, caps and robes, and, in ladies' wear, the many natty conceits in cesy neck-wraps have proved splendid sellers. On the whole, the prospects for the Fall season are excellent, and the firm are preparing for a brisk sorting trade when the season opens. The trade will find this enterprising firm right up to the times in anything pertaining to the fur business.

FLANNEL SUITS IN LONDON.

IN London, says a high authority, the flannel suit for men in Summer has taken hold and promises to last. First, as to the dark flannel suitings. A neat kind is a dark blue ground with light blue double-line stripes running three-quarters of an inch apart. This is sure to be a favorite material for wear on the river and at the seaside; nor is it too holiday-like in appearance for town wear in the morning. This may be said, too, of the dark grey ground, with three-quarter inch white stripes, between which are faint black lines. This pattern can be had with the faint middle stripe in red.

A smart and sportsmanlike-looking flannel has a medium brown ground with thin white stripes. Others of the same ground have, severally, dark brown stripes, black stripes and green stripes. A rich-looking kind has dark green and dark brown stripes running alternately, the green stripes showing more prominently by reason of the contrast afforded by the ground color. The lines, however, are very thin in both cases, and the man wearing a suit of this material would be distinguished not by clothes striped with dark brown and green, but by a medium brown suit.

A dark brown flannel, with white dotted lines three quarters of an inch apart, alternated with hair lines in red, should make up into a smart suit for the country or seaside, or for mornings in Town, as also should a flannel with the same ground color striped alternately with thick and thin dotted lines in either red, green, white, blue or lighter brown.

There's a light grey herringbone with dark grey lines, and there's a dark grey with light lines—both exceedingly pretty yet quiet materials, which should make up well into seaside suits. A nice combination of color for country wear is a green-brown with dark green and medium brown stripes alternately placed about an inch apart. The same mixture of coloring is used in the case of a close arrangement of stripes—about a quarter of an inch apart; and there is also a green-brown striped with red, one with pale blue, and another with white. Of these the red-striped is the nicest-looking flannel, such color always mixing effectively, but not in any sense conspicuously with a green-brown background.

Another effective, if somewhat subdued, flannel is a medium grey striped with black (a favorite pattern now for cashmere trousers for frock coat wear); and this looks well with a double stripe made up of red and black. This, however, is not an entirely new flannel, although placed among the present season's selections, for I saw three or four men wearing suits made up of the material at Brighton last Summer, and noted then what a smart looking stuff it was.

Of olive mixture grounds there are several kinds, among the neatest of which are those severally striped with white, red, and black. One olive mixture is striped with double lines of red and white, the tints being chosen with so artistic an eye that the general effect of the combination, though unmistakable, is very far from loud. A dark grey ground, with jet black stripe, is an unusual flannel; but, except for men in mourning, I doubt if it will rank with the favorites of the bunch. This flannel looks lighter and more Summery with its black stripe thinly edged with white, or accompanied by a red line about one eighth of an inch from its side.

A rich navy blue ground with a double stripe of red and black running down it, is a smart combination, and so is the same ground with a double stripe of black and light blue. Blacks with double and single stripes (very fine) look decidedly neat, and will probably be in demand as mourning flannels. Then there are the following selections in silver grey: One with thin red stripes, another with stripes of a darker shade of grey, a third with alternate narrow and broad stripes, a fourth with double stripes of black and white, and a fifth with treble-line stripes of red, white and black. Three shades of greys bear upon them stripes of a darker tint so faintly defined as only to be observed by the inquisitive, the darker grey of the three seeming to be a plain flannel even at fairly close quarters.

The dark blues checked either with white, light blue, or red, or red and white together, should look well on men who are not "too stout on the watch-chain," though I fancy, on the whole, that large checks, such as these are, form a pattern a trifle too heavy for association with a Summer flannel. A kind that is more likely to go down on the Continent than in this country is a blue-grey flannel with thick slate-grey stripes. The shepherd's plaid flannel makes up into a capital single-breasted lounge for both town and country wear, and I can highly recommend it for its serviceableness as well as for its smartness.

For the rest, there are medium grey grounds with alternate single and double lines in red; lighter grey grounds with alternate single and double lines in green; dark greys with alternate single and double lines in black; mouse-grey grounds alternated with black and green stripes, and also with the same stripes done in double lines; light and dark grey stripes of equal widths; silver-grey grounds with blue-grey lines; and blue-grey grounds striped alternately with silver-grey and red.

In making a single-breasted flannel suit the coat should be so cut at the collar and lapels that when worn folded back the latter shall lay well to the body, and not stand up at each side to the height, almost, of the wearer's ears. To make this possible, the lapel must be small and have a shallow step—the step being cut low. The patch pockets may be with buttons or without; if without, the pockets should not be so large as usual, or they will drop open. There should be no lining to the flannel coat. The waistcoat may be either single or double-breasted. The trousers should be cut fairly full and long, and can be worn turned up or down, according to the wearer's taste. It is, perhaps, as well to have them made to turn up, for it may be taken as pretty certain that the best flannel in the world, if it is going to change its size at all in the course of wear or cleaning, will not get larger, but smaller.

Mr. Fred. Shorey, the Manitoba representative of H. Shorey & Co., of Montreal, who has just completed his Manitoba trip, reports that the recent rains have caused a very much better feeling throughout the country. His trade in Manitoba shows a very fair increase over last year, which is an evidence that the reports from that country of grasshoppers and crops ruined by the drought have not altogether discouraged the merchants, and that they are anticipating a fair trade, at least in Shorey's clothing.

Harris & Co., Limited, of Rockwood, Ont., have secured a marked success with their Canadian made homespuns, friezes, tweeds and yarns. This success, no doubt, is largely due to the fact that the quality put into the materials is of the best. Owing to the increase of business they have had to enlarge their mill and put in more machinery to keep up with the demand for their fabrics.

H. Shorey & Co., the wholesale clothiers of Montreal, explain to us that they attribute in a very large degree their excess of business this year over last year to two causes.

One is, the fact of their having made their contracts before the advance in cottons and woollens and having given their customers the benefit of it; and another is to the great success of their new patterns, having been greatly improved over last season. They are making use of some of the best talent obtainable in their line in the United States.

While we will not admit that Canadians, as fighting men, can get any pointers from our neighbors to the south of us, and would instance Paardeburg, Pretoria and other places in support of our assertions, yet we are forced to admit that in manufacturing an exchange of ideas at times is not altogether to our disadvantage.

The Merchant Tailors' Section of the Toronto Branch of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada have elected the following officers: Chairman, Thos. Bilton, Bilton Bros.; 1st vice-chairman, S. Corrigan; 2nd vice-chairman, J. J. Higgins; treasurer, A. Latore; secretary, B. Saunders.

Under the heading "The Proof of the Pudding is in the Eating," in their ad, Shorey & Co., of Montreal, ask their customers to demonstrate the perfect fit of their goods, which they make large claims for, by having their travelers' samples tried on. There is no question about it that ready-made clothing that fits is more than half sold, and that a larger profit can be made on goods that readily please the customer than on a class of goods that he has to be talked into buying, and if the statement in their advertisement can be demonstrated by the test they suggest to be true, it seems to us that their goods are the kind that people would naturally buy.

From the enormous growth of their trade in the past few years, it would look as if there were some considerable grounds for their contentment, at any rate the test is very easily applied and quite worth the trouble.

H. Shorey & Co., the well-known clothiers of Montreal, report that their travelers are back from the Lower Provinces, and will be starting in a few days on their trips through Ontario and Quebec. Judging from results from their eastern trips, they are anticipating a considerable increase over their last season's trade.

H. Shorey & Co., of Montreal, are showing a solid worsted Campbell twill cross-bred suit made and trimmed in a style to do them considerable credit, for which they are only asking $5.75 a suit. They say that their sales of these goods have been enormous, and that they are retailed readily at $9. This looks as if the retail clothing business was not an unprofitable one.

The military style khaki duck suits for boys, youths and children, sold by H. Shorey & Co., of Montreal, are an exceedingly smart and dressy looking outfit for a youngster. They are very reasonable in price, and very durable as a knockabout suit. They are made in exact copy of the service uniform as supplied by the Imperial Government to their soldiers in South Africa, with the exception that they have a Canadian brass button instead of an Imperial one. They are furnishing service caps made in regulation style with these suits.

CHALCRAFT & CO., IN NEW PREMISES.

Numbers 72 and 73 York street, lately occupied by the S. F. McKinnon Co., Limited, have been taken over by W. E. Chalcraft & Co., manufacturers of high-class ready-made clothing, to meet with the demands of their ever-increasing business.

This firm have done much to raise the standard of ready-made clothing in Canada. Their efforts have brought success to themselves and profit to their customers. Chalcrafts find the demand for really high-class ready-made clothing is appliances, will enable them to keep pace with the trade. "As good as custom made," no slop work, no skimping of trimmings or finish, backed up with the best materials from English, Irish, Scotch and Canadian mills, are their claims for business.

Their experience is that the retailer prefers to handle goods he can safely recommend to a customer—a satisfied customer being the best kind of an ad. Of one of their specialties, juvenile clothing, they carry a wonderful range. Everything the boy wants in clothing is here. Dress suits, fancy suits, and all the very best class of the small one's outfit, are manufactured on the premises.

We call attention to the values they are offering to clear out several lines in an announcement on our advertising pages.

W. S. Phillips, who has been connected with McCandless Bros. for several years, has taken the management of the Mammoth Clothing Store, Government street, Victoria, B.C., and intends putting in a first-class up-to-date stock of clothing and furnishing goods.

John Chiswell, clothier, will remove from Woodstock, Ont., to Stratford, Ont., about August 1, to open out a ready-made clothing store.

The G. A. Thorpe Manufacturing Co., of Toronto, have bought out the business of The R. Green Manufacturing Co., London.

NEW YORK LINING NOVELTIES.

E. S. Comstock, is just starting for a trip through the Canadian trade centres representing The Gilbert Manufacturing Co., of New York. This firm have been introducing novelties in linings and similar goods in this market for some years, and a sight of their offerings is always appreciated by the trade. This year they will show some special novelties in sultana satin, oriental silk and analyne silk, and in waist linings the "Commodore" fabric, the "American Queen" twill and a line of fast black twills and percalines. Samples will be sent to any merchant writing for them to The Gilbert Manufacturing Co., No. 380 Broadway, New York, and it is requested that their customers in Canada should save their orders for Mr. Comstock until they have seen the samples.

WOMEN'S FABRICS.

The satisfaction derived from tweed and homespun costumes has established their popularity with the dry goods trade and the demand for Fall is greater than ever. They have superseded plain cloths to a large extent, although there is always a good trade in venetians, broadcloths, etc.

Messrs Nisbet & Auld have had a record season in ladies' cloths and ascribe their phenomenal success to a studious following of trade requirements and fashions. In venetians, coverts, worsteds, serges, etc., they report very satisfactory results, but in plain and fancy tweeds and homespuns their sales were far beyond expectations. They introduced new designs throughout the season and their output of homespuns, etc., absorbed the entire production of several mills.

Their range for Fall is very extensive and orders already placed convince them of the correctness of their styles and colorings. Notwithstanding the run on plain goods the latter part of this season, checks and stripes are quite as popular as ever and the ranges shown by English and Continental houses impress one with the idea that they are the correct thing for stylish gowns.

ALL FROM A QUILL.

THE fact is probably not generally known that all the properties contained in whalebone are found in the quill of a bird. Upon making inquiries from the Canadian Featherbone Co. as to the construction of "Featherbone," we were surprised to learn that the foundation of all "Featherbone" is the quill, or the bone part of the feather of a turkey. This is cut in strips and wound together in a manner which makes it a most durable article, for the different uses for which it is recommended and sold. It combines all the good qualities of whalebone, but, its growth being outward, it has not the same tendency to dry out and grow brittle and useless, as so many merchants have found to their loss to be the great trouble with whalebone.

"Featherbone" is exceedingly light in weight, and is not susceptible to changes of temperature, neither moisture, heat nor cold having any effect upon it. It can be used in a score of ways, to great advantage, by every dressmaker, in addition to the ordinary staying of a waist, for which it is so universally used.

For the sake of exemplifying the use of "Featherbone," The Canada Featherbone Co. bought the patents for the Koch pulley belt. This belt has had the most remarkable sale of any article for ladies' wear that was ever placed upon the American market, and all these belts are braced and supported with "Featherbone."

For a further experiment, and as an exemplar of what "Featherbone" would do, they got out a "Featherbone" collar and tie, combined, made of taffeta silk, with hemstitched edges, and belts to match, having long sash ends, tipped with fringe. These seemed to catch the ladies, as ideal articles, being light and stylish, and the "Featherbone" holding them well in shape. While originally gotten out more in the way of samples, the sales became so large that they were forced to put in a number of machines for the purpose of making these collars and belts, and they anticipate a very large business on these articles for the coming Fall, when stock collars are so largely worn and are now so fashionable.

"Featherbone" has been used for many years in the United States and France, and is looked upon in New York, Paris and London as the only reliable article which will take the place of whalebone.

The Canada Featherbone Co. assure us that it will give them great pleasure to answer all correspondence regarding their wares, and would refer you to their advertisement, on another page, for further particulars.

THE LINEN THREAD AGENCY.

The selling agency for the new linen thread combination formed in England, and which consists of four noted Irish and one Scotch linen thread manufacturer, has been bestowed upon Messrs. Frank & Bryce, Limited, Glasgow, and they have appointed as their Canadian agents Thos. Samuel & Son, who have for so many years handled the Barbour threads in this market. A circular was issued to the trade in Canada last month notifying them of the change. The head office, under the management of Mr. Thos. Samuel and Mr. Wm. R. Samuel, is at No. 8 St. Helen street, Montreal, with branch offices in Toronto and Quebec. The five manufacturers are the following: Wm. Barbour & Sons, Limited, Lisburn, Ireland; Finlayson, Bousfield & Co., Limited, Johnstone, Scotland; Dunbar, McMaster & Co., Limited, Gilford, Ireland; Robert Stewart & Sons, Limited, Lisburn, Ireland; F. W. Hayes & Co., Limited, Banbridge, Ireland.

A Merchant's

STOCK IS NOT COMPLETE WITHOUT

FEATHERBONE.

FEATHERBONE is now acknowledged by all leading modistes to be the only reliable Dress Stay on the market. Being made of turkey quills it retains all the natural toughness and flexibility of that article. Different from steels or whalebone, it can be cut with a pair of scissors any length the user may require. It can be sewn into the garment with a sewing machine, and is light in weight, quickly applied and never breaks or rusts when in use.

It is made in various grades, from the narrow Skirt Bone and Duplex Bone used for flaring skirts and for stiffening and holding reverses and collars in shape, to the different grades of waist bone, which range in price from $4 50 per gross yards to $24 00 per gross.

“Kumfort’s” Secret

Every great success has had its “secret.” “Kumfort Mitts” have a secret and it has kept most of the trade guessing—some worrying.

We admit it’s hard to understand how it can have a muleskin palm, an oil-dressed sheepskin back, pure wool lining and wrist, knit to stay knit till worn out.

All those things in these days of top-storey prices, and it wholesales for $4.50 net—same as two years ago.

You get a straight third profit on cost when you sell it.

The secret of how it’s done is ours—one thing we will tell—we don’t lose any money on it and we give you a chance to make a good square profit on a fast seller.

Fair proposition, isn’t it ?

What's New in Wall Paper

FOR 1901

WISHING to give readers a little advance talk on wall paper for the coming season, THE DRY GOODS REVIEW'S representative called on M. Staunton & Co., Toronto, and was shown through the firm's new line of samples for 1901, which is now completed, and which will be shown to the trade by their travelers, commencing about July 1.

The manager expressed their satisfaction that the past season's business was far ahead of any previous year, the increase being particularly noticeable in the better grades of goods. The repeat orders during the Spring, after the goods started to sell retail, were enormous. M. Staunton & Co. think that there is no better proof than these repeat orders that their goods are popular sellers. Two trunks full of new samples were ready for our representative's inspection. The writer does not pretend to paint word pictures, or even to be able to appreciate to the fullest extent the artistic in the Staunton line, but a little art can be mingled with a good deal of commercial hard sense in presenting a few of the most forward features in this immense line from inspiration caught while the man in charge turns over the leaves in the almost innumerable books of samples.

Commencing with the better goods in the line, amongst the first books we had a peep into were the ingrain combinations. It is safe to say these will be a revelation to the trade of what this firm can do in artistic productions. The number of different colorings of ingrains has been increased 25 per cent. over last season, only six of last year's leading colors being retained, all the other shades being absolutely new. 9, 18 and 21-in. borders are shown with each coloring, every one of these being blended, and the silver and gilt fritters, and multi-colored bronzes add life and brilliancy to these goods. Matched ceilings are, of course, shown for each border, as is the case throughout the entire line. These very attractive goods will, undoubtedly, bring a large return in output to the firm. As an extra ceiling, M. Staunton & Co. show a five-point star design in flitter and gilt on suitable colorings for church or masonic hall decoration.

In speaking of ingrains, it may be proper just here to mention some new ideas that have been advanced in figured papers to take the place of ingrains. Many people are now asking for something different to the entirely plain ingrain ground, and are demanding small simple patterns, unobtrusive but neat and artistic; something that will make good backgrounds for pictures and art objects, and that will give a somewhat more furnished appearance to the walls. A hint was enough for Staunton, and this want has been carefully provided for. We picked three patterns for special mention in this class—one a very dainty narrow stripe, another a small empire wreath, another an all-over conventional leaf design in two colors. These are all shown in silk effects, as well as in plain grounds with appropriate ceilings and friezes.

Some beautiful new things are shown for parlors and boudoirs in a line of silk papers, the lustrous effect of the material being admirably reproduced. Half-a-dozen books of 22-inch papers were now brought forward. The splendid range in design and colored effects would seem to cover every requirement that the dealer can possibly be called upon to supply. In the colorings, there is a wealth of variety from white grounds through medium tones of ivory, pale blues, greens, etc., to the deep rich colorings of leaf and moss greens, holly reds, empire reds, etc. Looking through these goods makes one almost wish that they had a new house to decorate, one having two or three parlors, and as many halls, dining-rooms, libraries, etc., as possible, so that a fair representation of the beautiful things shown might be made use of. The line is strong in good bold florals. One large poppy design is particularly worth mentioning—bright, bold colorings in the artistic grouping of the massive bunches of flowers producing beautiful effects, and we miss our guess if this is not among one of the quickest sellers in the line.

Turning to the 18-inch patterns there is food for talk for a column or more description of the seemingly endless variety of gilt and embossed papers of all prices and styles. Every individual taste and desire of the prospective customer seems to have been carefully thought out in advance, and provided for in these goods.

A dainty French stripe of the Empire period attracts notice in many beautiful colorings for parlors, boudoirs and bedrooms. Other lines which the dealer will be quick to appreciate, and his customer after him, are the new canvas or burlap effects. The wonder is how the woven effect of the original can be so admirably reproduced in the groundwork of these papers. To day these goods are sold for a few cents a roll, where the hand-stencilled burlaps, which they portray, cost up into the dollars per square yard, and produce no prettier effects for the extra cost.

Last year's tapestry designs were very favorably received. The splendid range of them which the firm have to offer this year are sure to result in largely increased sales. Some of the Oriental blue colorings in these goods commend them as luxurious decorations for smoking dens, or Oriental rooms.

Their special heavyweight glimmers are again exceedingly attractive in their rich grounds and effective colorings.

Another turn and we face the standard lines of glimmer papers and white blanks. Naturally enough we have dwelt at a little greater length among the higher grades, but in the whole Staunton line there is not a pattern or a coloring shown but deserves attention. Starting right down at the cheapest grades of ungrounded goods the colorings and designs bear evidence, and show practical and workable ideas that are only born of long experience.

The writer would judge from a very careful survey that the whole line has been designed and colored with the object of placing before the Canadian trade a thoroughly representative line of goods that will find a ready sale and yield a good profit to their many customers, and the dealer who wishes to put before his patrons the very newest creation of the leading wall paper designers displayed in colorings that leave nothing to be desired for beauty and attractiveness will find it in this line.

Lister's sealettes are selling remarkably well this season, and there is likely to be a considerable demand for these goods a little later on. They make a handsome jacket or cape and are gradually coming into favor again.

Mr. Herbert Bright, the English carpet manufacturer, of John Bright & Bros, Rochdale, England, paid a visit to several Canadian centres of trade last month, and was well received. Mr. Bright is a nephew of the late John Bright, the well-known statesman. He reports the English carpet trade to be in a firm condition with prices steady.

JOHN MACDONALD & CO.

THIS extensive firm have made in every department complete preparations for Fall trade. The trade this season will appreciate the range of handkerchiefs which John Macdonald & Co., by reason of careful purchasing, are able to offer their customers. The range includes many lines of lace-bordered goods to retail from 10 to 50c. in cotton and linen. Then, there is a line of fancy boxes, also embroidered handkerchiefs as well as mercerized, and plain linen initialed handkerchiefs, etc. In fact, it is the largest range of handkerchiefs which the firm have ever shown, and the amount of business done is three times what it used to be.

There are some very nice novelties in belt buckles and patented hat pins, including enamel, jet and steel goods.

In men's furnishings, John Macdonald & Co. are showing two special lines of pants, an etoffe and a worsted, at prices that will interest merchants. In neckwear, they show a range of handkerchief ties with flowing ends, and a decided special is a mercerized cotton umbrella with silver top to retail at $1. Men's outing caps are shown in shepherd checks, large checks, navy blues and plain colors, for 25 to 50c. retailing. In men's hosiery three special lines in heavy wool are being offered at $1.25, $1.75 and $2.25 per dozen. These goods are controlled by the firm for this market and the values are considered to be unsurpassed.

The dress goods department of this house is, as usual, of great interest to the retail trade. In black materials their "Crescent" brand of black stuff comprises the latest products of the European markets, and includes plain and figured in all-wool, wool and mohair, silk and wool, plain cordette, crepines, zibelines, and plain camel's hair fabrics. In this wide range will be found sightly goods to retail at from 50c. to $4 a yard.

In colored fabrics there is a tendency to plain stuffs, and a range of cheviots, homespuns, box cloths, mixture cloths with pirlle finish, etc., include all the leading shades. There are several ranges of cheviots which are very handsome. Attention is also called to several lines of plaid camel's hair fabrics in the new combinations of color.

For blouses, they have done well this season with their line of plain opera twills, French flannels, in pinks, blues, cardinals, creams, heliotrope and mauve, which are going so well in the United States markets. Also a magnificent range of printed French flannels to retail at 50c., various sized dots, stripes and fancy figures in all the leading colors.

A German novelty is the persianna effect; plaid ground with a large over-check of black persian lamb. This makes a handsome Fall costume. The firm's "Seabelle" serges for costumes in black and navy are again shown in a full range of prices and qualities.

In silks, the buyer has been very fortunate in getting hold of two special lines of black peau de soie at 75c. and $1, which will be leaders. In black satins, 24 inch yarn-dyed satins of special value, to retail from 65c. to $1.25, will interest the trade. In colored satins, five ranges with the leading colors in each range, black mervilleux, faille, gros grains, and black taffetas, etc., are complete, and the values are considered unsurpassed in this market. In addition to these the department is showing the usual large variety of blouse silks in stripes, plains and figures. This is another velvet season, and the buyer has made provision for it by a supply of their celebrated "Imperial" brand of black and colored velveteens. There is in stock, this season, a large supply of their No. 120, to retail at 50c., which can always be had. A full range of Lister's black silk velvets is shown.

In hosiery and gloves, a fine range of ladies', misses' and children's cashmere hosiery, to retail at popular prices, will be found. They have made special provision for prompt deliveries of their No. 308, their two and one rib, eight-fold knee cashmere hose. In cashmere gloves, they are showing a large range of various qualities in plain cashmeres, taffetas, etc.

The skirt department has made provision for a big Fall trade in ready-to-wear garments. Special value is being shown in serge skirts, cheviots, box cloths, check cheviots, poplins and figured black, etc. In ladies' underskirts are shown a large range, also Winter blouses.

The staple department show printed velours, to sell from 10 to 20c. per yard. In linens, the range of 36 inch Irish apron dowlases, plain and bordered, are shown at scarcely any advance over last season. The same goods, with embroidered and tambour border, are very striking. The firm's range of toweling in hucks, crashes, and check glass toweling are shown in the firm's registered brands and 10 different numbers of these goods are offered at very reasonable prices.

A novelty this season is a 40-inch wide lace and insertion art muslin. This is shown for the first time, along with a line of lace muslins. Both have sold splendidly.

John Macdonald & Co. report good business in their carpet and housefurnishings department. Their stock of 4/4, 5/4, 6/4 and 8/4 floor oilcloths, both in patterns and prices, is fully assorted. Their assortment of chenille and tapestry table covers is excellent value and fully assorted in the different sizes. White and colored quilts are greatly in demand at present, and we know of no better stock to select from than theirs. They are showing a very extensive assortment of lace curtains, ranging from the lowest to goods that can be retailed at $6 per pair. Also tapestry and chenille curtains in great variety. Our attention was directed to 30 pieces of Japanese matting of superior quality they are clearing at reduced prices.

They are showing cocoa mattings in all widths. Rugs and mats in jute, axminster, moquette, plush and wilton are very much in evidence, and the assortment is easy to select from.

In woollens, all orders are very good to date and ahead of last year and no sign of being at an end. Worsteds and serges are selling very freely for men's wear, and when the season opens tweeds will be in larger demand than they have for several seasons. Stripes for suitings have been received with more favor than they have been, and in colorings it is going to be a grey year. In ladies' woollens, homespuns will be much in evidence, in plain colorings, herringbones and small mixtures. Khaki, when the soldiers come back, will, no doubt, receive attention. Large checks are not the free sellers they were a season ago. John Macdonald & Co. report that the demand for their Celtic homespuns has far exceeded expectation and they have made large contracts for the coming season in anticipation of repeat orders.

THE CANADIAN OUTLOOK IN PRICES.

LARGE buyers continue to disbelieve in any decline in prices of staples in this market. As they assert that neither wholesalers or retailers in Canada paid the highest prices of last season, they do not see how there can be any sagging away from the slight advances made in this market last year. Canadian importers, as a rule, especially the larger ones, claim to have renewed their contracts at figures still considerably below the highest prices prevailing abroad. This enables them to offer a number of staple lines at what are practically former figures, so that they refuse to believe in a decline in these markets. The cotton mills are busy, and no decline in prices is either expected or has been announced from them. Purchases of raw material, now being worked on, were made at high rates, and this, it is thought, forbids a cut in prices by rival mills.

Despite these facts, the reports of quieter trade in the United States, owing to the elections, the doubtful reports from the wool markets, and sensational crop reports from Manitoba, have produced a number of disquieting rumors, which have no special basis, as to Fall trade prospects. In reality, the outlook in Canada is favorable and trade for months ahead promises to be brisk.

THE ENGLISH WOOL MARKET.

Advices from Bradford the last week in June show no changes to speak of in the quotations for imported wools. Prices have not declined at all since the last London wool sales; in fact, the feeling is said to be somewhat stiffer. There is going to be a shortage from the Cape, especially in mohair, owing to the war, but no definite information on this point is yet (June 26) forthcoming. In English wool prices continue to rule low as before, except that the demand for bright yarns made from English pure lustre wools leads to some expectation of better prices for them.

THE RAW COTTON MARKET.

The market continues strong, owing to the crop reports and other causes. New York quotations of June 25 show: Middling uplands, 9 9-16c.; middling gulf, 9 13-16c., with futures in all cases above 8c.

SCOTCH LINENS.

Dundee advices say: "Linens in all positions are dull. The sharp rise in values has caused the home buyers to pause. It is evident, however, that owing to the increasing value of good flax, prices cannot be expected to fall. Indeed, one would not be surprised to hear that some of the leading firms may issue advanced lists. They are engaged on large orders for Government business; other foreign States also require heavy linens. In these circumstances, with the greatly increased cost of production, it would seem impossible to expect anything but higher price lists. There is again an active demand for the best classes of heavy linens, both on the Continent and in this market. True, the flax yarn market, owing to the absence of orders for the usual Fife and Forfar trade, has been stagnant. This week, however, orders are again being placed which make spinners who can produce the heavier grists independent of the orders for the lighter sizes."—Textile Mercury.

CANADIAN COTTON STOCKS.

The Summer months usually show a decline in Canadian stocks quoted on the share markets, and this often includes the whole lists, banks, railways, lighting companies and industrial stocks. The cotton companies' stocks, however, show little fluctuation, being usually bought for investment and not for speculative purposes. The quotations of June 26 were:

THE UNION JACK IN A LACE FRILL.

When the relief of Mafeking was celebrated in Nottingham the other day, a Canadian, who was present, was surprised to see lace on the flags. He writes to THE DRY GOODS REVIEW as follows: "Patriotic sentiment in Nottingham ran very high, and was not unmixd with business. Union Jacks, Ensigns, Royal Standards, etc., were edged, and sometimes frilled all the way around with lace (!) anywhere from 2 inches to 10 in width. It struck me as being very funny indeed. Nottingham is justly proud of the industry which has made the place famous. It is a clean, industrious place, but fancy a Union Jack trimmed with lace!"

NEW INDUSTRY IN CANADA.

The works of the Colonial Bleaching and Printing Co., Limited, at St. Henri, were visited by Mayor Guay and the councilors of St. Henri recently. The visitors were received by Mr. Alphonse Racine, vice president; Mr. W. T. Whitehead, manager; Mr. W. Herrick, mill manager; Mr. W. A. Cochrane, and Mr. W. J. White, solicitor of the company, who accompanied them through the splendid works of the company, which were minutely inspected. Afterwards an adjournment was made to the office, where the Mayor and several of the councillors extended their congratulations to the company on the splendid manner in which the plant had been constructed and equipped. Construction was only begun on August 1, last, but to-day it is in full operation, turning out a most satisfactory grade of goods with a large and increasing demand more than equalling anticipations.—Montreal Gazette.

An instance of late deliveries by Canadian cotton mills, owing to the heavy orders they have handled during the past six months, is recorded. A buyer placed an order in December, 1899, for one line of cottons, and received the goods June 25—too late, he thinks, for business purposes.

Nisbet & Auld are showing a very large range of their special 6/4 worsted suitings for Fall. They have made a specialty of this particular cloth, and it has acquired deserved popularity with the general merchant, being moderate in price, durable, and in select designs. Patterns will be mailed on application.

The hat factory of Craig & Mahoney, at Truro, N.S., was burned last month, the dyehouse and factory being destroyed. The loss is placed at $10,000 with $4,000 insurance. The factory employed 20 hands. The proprietors were not sure (June 25) about rebuilding.

The Corticelli Silk Co., have opened a branch in Sydney, Australia, and Mr. George Stewart, who has been in the head office of the concern for some years, at St. John's, Que., has gone as accountant to the Sydney house. He went by way of Vancouver, and was presented, before leaving St. John's, by Mr. Wyman, the manager, and his staff, with a purse containing a handsome sum of money.

FILLING LETTER ORDERS A SPECIALTY.

The

Millinery Season

— Mantles, Trimmings and Laces.

THE CANADIAN MILLINERY CENTRES.

FROM all that can be learned the Fall millinery openings in more than one Canadian city, at the end of next month, will be exceptionally brilliant and satisfying to the retail trade. It is early yet for any wholesale importer to even speak of the openings, as many novelties will not make their appearance in this market until the middle of next month. But year by year these openings gather in importance, and a visit to the markets at that season is considered opportune by buyers of millinery as well as other buyers. They are well repaid for the time and the cost of the journey. The big importers are making extra preparations this year. Buyers are now abroad. They will not be back for some time yet, so that the trade may confidently expect a fine showing of millinery this time.

NEW YORK JULY TRADE.

Broad-brimmed, sweeping, tilted, twisted hats, with medium-high crowns, the edges of the brim and sometimes the top of the crown bordered with an inch-wide band of black velvet, are the preferred hat forms of the moment for the better trade. Gainsborough, shepherdess, Rembrandt, coaching, picture, or whatever you may call them, are the hats of the Summer. Trimmed with big clusters of roses, outside and under brims with trailing foliage to match, is all there is to the hat at the moment. For beyond the braid, the velvet band and the flowers there is nothing else on them. Surely a milliner's ideal Summer season and precisely as we foretold it.

Roses are supreme, and pink roses at that. These hats have a beautiful and effective appearance that is sure to make good business for the milliner who sees her opportunities and pushes them forward.

Women who have waited to buy their Summer hats are sure to be pleased, as these forms do not cling to precise outlines in one direction. Styles are as broad and limitless as are the assortments of braids and the number of fingers that are used to put them together.—Economist.

PARIS STYLES.

In Paris this Summer the Exposition is creating a gorgeous display both in costumes and millinery. White hats trimmed with flowers, especially roses, are seen everywhere.

Straws trimmed with tulle and white feathers go with light Summer dresses of the muslin or foulard class. Small roses and marguerites are much in favor at the moment.

One model in a leading establishment is a black straw trimmed with roses and a black feather with aigrette. Another black hat, with a high crown, was set off by one large white feather twisted artistically around the crown. This went with a costume in black and white, and was a most stylish effect.

A black toque was trimmed with black feathers and an aigrette. A touch of blue velvet gave the necessary color, which would be that of the dress.

Sunshades, dome-like in shape, are worn on all sides, in carriages and by ladies on foot. They are made usually of a strong satin material, the prevailing colors being white, yellow (these go with some pretty yellow costumes) blue, cherry, rose and sage green. There is usually no lining, and linen tucks around the bottom are the chief adornment, except the handles which are various.

SOME LONDON IDEAS.

There is a great deal of black just now, partly due to so much mourning, but also occasioned by the popularity of black and white costumes relieved by color in the hat.

One costume seen was black, with a yellow scarf worn at the neck, and the hat, a richly jetted high crown, looked very smart with yellow tucked chiffon. There were lines of black chenille on the brim, which was raised at the side, over a cluster of black silk roses, and the trimming was completed by wings of black lace slightly jetted.

Another taking model was a mushroom shaped blue straw hat. The low crown was encircled by tufts of small flowers, perhaps primroses, in a light shade of mushroom brown, and made of velvet, and veiled in black tulle.

Yet another worthy of note is a hat of white fancy crinoline—the leaf overlaid with black silk net, hand-painted in curly lines of grey and white, to simulate ostrich feathers, which it did most successfully. Turquoise blue glaze, in small folds, covered the sides of the crown, and two tall loops of this made the sole trimming.

SOME CARRIAGE HATS IN NEW YORK.

A very dainty carriage hat, of medium large size, with the crown low but definite, and the brim somewhat depressed and projecting in front is made substantially of pink chiffon shirred on fine gold wires. The facing is of white tulle, gathered to leave a narrow ruffle at the edge; clusters of three pink crushed roses are set at the front and at each side of the crown; from the top of the crown, gathered up to a point in the centre of the crown, falls a flounce of a very delicate novelty lace, veiling the roses; over the centre is posed a bow of many loops made of taffeta ribbon in two tones of pink, the loops pointed forward, and under the brim at the back is a half-garland of black silk roses.

A large hat, with very full cap crown of several thicknesses of white tulle, veiled with delicate Russian lace, and

A toque of fibre braid in deep coral red, formed of a drooping plaque, and the brim, disposed in a triple roll, lifted high at the back by a knot and loops of miroir velvet in coral red, is trimmed with a garland of shaded red velvet cherries and green leaves, laid over the top within the innermost rool of the brim. A large carriage hat with tall, bell crown, of white fibre braid, banded half the depth of the crown with black velvet and then veiled with a flounce of a very delicate novelty lace, is lifted high at the front and faced with gathered white tulle, leaving a narrow ruffle at the edge. A bandeau of black velvet ribbons runs under the brim at the front, the bow resting against, and serving to hold three white ostrich tips, which are laid flat against the brim and curl forward.—Millinery Trade Review.

THE MCKINNON CO. IN NEW QUARTERS.

When a representative of THE DRY GOODS REVIEW called on S. F. McKinnon & Co., Limited, with a view to having a chat on the millinery situation, he was met by one of the company. Being the first time our representative had had an opportunity of looking through their new warehouse, he was escorted through the building, which is a model warehouse in every respect. It was erected for the company by Mr. S. F. McKinnon, the president.

The situation is first-class, being directly on the corner of Wellington and York streets, one block south and adjoining the warehouse which Mr. S. F. McKinnon erected two years ago, but which proved inadequate to the requirements of the business. The new building is an imposing structure, being nine storeys high, including the basement, thoroughly equipped and admirably adapted for the purposes for which it is being used.

The first four storeys are devoted to millinery. The four top storeys of the warehouse east on Wellington street are devoted to their manufacturing interests. One thing that must strike buyers very forcibly in going through this large building is the abundance of light in every corner, from the basement up, enabling every part of it to be used to good advantage.

Having returned to our starting point, we turned our attention towards the millinery situation as viewed by this large firm. Their mouthpiece said: "We would sum up the season drawing to its close as being in the main a satisfactory one. May, it is true, usually the best millinery month of the year, did not produce its usual results, a disappointment entirely due to the cold weather experienced almost from the beginning to the end of the month. Notwithstanding this slight drawback, we believe that the season will show good results, and at the close find millinery stocks low—the great point to be aimed at in these days when the character of goods changes so much from season to season.

"You appear a little surprised when I tell you that at this date a large proportion of our Fall importations have been sold. We have 16 representatives scattered over the different Provinces at this moment, and, from the orders coming in and experience generally, we are encouraged to say that in the main the business pulse is healthy and the outlook good. At the same time we would not be honest towards THE DRY GOODS REVIEW, the trade, or ourselves, if we were to say that, in our opinion, the outlook was bright in all parts of the Dominion. In fact, reports from some sections have been and still are gloomy, and the caution signal has already been raised in those sections. Facts are facts and cannot be pushed aside, but, in a country so large and so varied in climate and interests, we could hardly expect encouraging reports from every part of it in one season.

"We, therefore, do not think that there is any cause for alarm, but rather, to the contrary, think that in the main there is sufficient encouragement for liberal buying, at the same time feeling sure that where a little caution is necessary it will be exercised.

"You ask about the new Fall goods. They are particularly new in character, and give assurance that millinery will not be wanting in richness and stylish effect. You have neither time nor space to give a detailed account of all that is new and novel in the Fall importations, so that we must be satisfied just to add a few special pointers.

"One feature of the trade will again be ready-to-wear hats. This may not be with best interests of the millinery trade, but popular favor demands them, and we believe that they will be sold in large quantities as early as July and August.

"Another feature will be silk velvets; not necessarily all plain goods, but also in panne, beaded and broche effects.

"Still another pointer, and I would like you to make a note of this and see how it comes to pass. Black and white will, in our opinion, have a big inning this Fall.

"We also think that velvet and satin ribbons will meet with much favor for early Fall. These and chiffon are prime favorites with the trade at the present time, and will likely continue to be for the July trade. We have grand faith in both and provided accordingly."

"Have you anything to say with regard to the manufacturing interests?" was asked. "Nothing beyond the fact that McKinnon-made jackets, costumes and skirts for Fall are meeting with great success. Even with the doubled factory space, which our new warehouse affords, every hour will be required to get our orders out in due time. As conclusive evidence that McKinnon-made jackets are correct in every particular, they have met with favor in all districts from the Atlantic to the Pacific, not only giving proof as to their merit, but proving that the domestic goods are driving the English and German-made jackets out of this market."

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

The big importing houses are laying the basis for the Autumn trade. When THE REVIEW called upon The John D. Ivey Co., Limited, it was found that they were busy stock-taking, bringing everything from the shelves and corners into the middle of the floor, so that they could see just where they stood in every department. Said a director of the company, "It is the only way both for the wholesale and retail trade. If everybody went into the stock twice a year that would be a great factor in keeping buying in its proper proportions.

"We find business very good generally. It may be a little lighter in Manitoba than heretofore, but we have not yet felt it, as our orders to date are fully as good as last year. While there are several small failures, at present trade is in the most healthy condition in the history of the country. The weak are gradually being weeded out, so that those left are well established firms with ample capital for their requirements. We find business harder and harder to get, but now when an order is booked we can generally count upon its being accepted in its entirety, and need have little concern as to the financial part of the transaction."

Speaking of styles, Mr. Ivey said: "The season's shades, as previously announced, will range in greens, purples and blues. As to styles and trimmings, at this early date one can only talk of staple articles, but it is going to be a black velvet and black feather season, and the large picture hats will be more popular than ever. As to shapes, we are selling a lot of the new knock-about hats, including many of the military caste. Taking it all in all, we look for a bumper season, following as it will the best Spring trade in the history of the Canadian millinery business."

THE POPULAR READY-TO-WEAR HATS.

The travelers of the D. McCall Co., Limited, are now on the road for Fall business, and are experiencing a large demand for ready-to-wear hats, the favorite shapes for immediate delivery being of the Strathcona and Baden-Powell variety. They are showing a great variety of military effects, and, as they have large stocks, are in a position to fill promptly orders for any of these shapes. The comparatively high price of these novelties, however, is causing a good demand for straw sailors, the favorite of popular-priced hats this Summer.

In trimming materials, this house state that there is little change from last month. They continue to find a brisk demand for black, white and cream chiffon, and black velvet and satin ribbons in all widths, and intend to keep up their stocks of these throughout the month of July.

WELL PREPARED FOR TRADE.

A visit to the large showrooms of Charles Reid & Co., wholesale milliners, will well repay anyone who is interested in the business. This firm make specialties of different lines of millinery materials, and are in good position to fill orders for the Fall and Winter trade. They pay particular attention to the production of their own patterns in the very latest styles and goods, giving good ideas for the creation of new fashions or the coming season.

Mr. Reid, their buyer, is at present in Europe obtaining all the latest ideas in millinery from English, French and German markets, so that any orders placed with this firm are sure to be filled in the most satisfactory manner to the customer. In feathers, which are to be worn very greatly this Fall, Reid & Co. have a beautiful assortment in all shades, especially in black and white, as these colors are expected to predominate.

Wings and breast effects will be a feature of the Fall trade, and this firm exhibit a splendid line of them, as well as feather pompoms and fancy hackles.

In velvets, the usual Fall and Winter trimming and fancy crowns, which are to be worn in the Fall as much as last Spring, a complete line of goods and colors are shown.

Khaki is expected to remain as popular this Fall and Winter as it has lately been. In ready-to wear hats, Reid & Co. are doing a good business in the "Volunteer" and others of similar style, the hats being made in fawn or khaki and grey, trimmed with feathers in matching colors. A very pretty hat is their "Volunteer" or "Lancer," made of dark khaki and fashioned after the hats of the Australian soldiers in South Africa, that is, turned up at the side and trimmed where brim and crown meet with feathers of light and dark khaki.

Not only have Chas. Reid & Co. all the latest novelties out, but they are obtaining, through their buyer in Europe, everything in the way of new ideas in millinery that will be popular this Fall, and state that it will be to the advantage of anyone desiring the latest styles to place their orders with them.

Mr. S. F. McKinnon, of S. F. McKinnon & Co., Limited, sailed for Europe on Wednesday, via ss. Teutonic. Mr. McKinnon purposes taking an extended trip through the European markets.

A CRUSTY CUSTOMER.

A wholesale house, situated not a thousand miles from Toronto, report having received the following letter from a customer:

—, June 7, 1900.

In reply, we have never paid for cases, and you know it very well.

We have always retained the right of returning all goods not satisfactory to us; this is an understanding that we have with all people from whom we purchase, and we do not buy one cent's worth of goods except on these conditions.

If you do not wish to comply with this, you will have to keep your goods.

You tell an untruth when you say that you fill your order "according to orders," and you know very well that you tell an untruth.

Yours truly,

This is a very discourteous letter, and one that no retail firm should write. Business is not promoted by this spirit. As to "the understanding" that he may return any goods not satisfactory to him, the wholesale houses from which he buys must have a nice time of it.

THE DRESSMAKERS' FRIEND.

The "B. and C. Wright Bust Form," which Brush & Co. will manufacture for the Fall trade, will be greatly improved, and will, no doubt, meet with a very large sale, as it is the only garment made which will give to the slender figure the graceful effect of the fuller developed person. The demand upon Brush & Co. from the dressmakers especially will require a large addition to their already large output.

STRAW HATS UP-TO-DATE.

Townsend, Grace & Co., of Baltimore, Maryland, whose advertisement appears on page 99 of this issue, have the best and most completely equipped factory in the United States, for the manufacture of straw hats. The motive power used being entirely electricity gives them the opportunity of making clean hats. The hats turned out by this concern can be relied on as being up-to-date in style, finish, and all those little kinks that go so far towards making desirable, easy-selling straw hats. Mr. Charles Seattle, who will represent them in Canada this coming season, has been on the road for a number of years, and is well known in the United States and thoroughly understands his business.

B. Allen, Toronto, has relinquished the agency for Dunbar, McMaster & Co., Limited, of Gilford, Ireland, linen thread manufacturers, and Frank & Bryce, Limited, 22 Wellington street west, Toronto, have been appointed to the agency.

Halifax has a new ladies' tailoring establishment. Mr. DeNigris, formerly with Wallace & Co., Montreal, is the proprietor, and the new establishment is at No. 122 Hollis street, opposite the Halifax Hotel.

The trade report that the new lines shown in Canada for the first time by The Colonial Bleaching and Printing Co., Montreal, have caught the fancy of the retail merchants in a marked degree. The designs are praised for their saleability in this market as exceedingly new and sightly.

THE TRADE AND THE CUSTOMS.

PROPOSED CHANGES IN SYSTEM, AND THE VIEWS OF LEADING IMPORTERS THEREON.

Specially reported for THE DRY GOODS REVIEW.

EARLY last month it was announced from Ottawa that Hon. William Paterson, Minister of Customs, had in view several changes in connection with the Customs Department which would materially modify the present arrangements.

First. The monthly issue of trade returns, at present imperfect, is to be thoroughly reorganized and a better classification of the import and export trade promptly published each month.

Second. It was the Minister's intention to locate permanently a Board of Appraisers at Ottawa; this board to consist of five members, two of the members being already permanent officials of the Department at Ottawa, the Minister himself, and two others yet to be chosen. An official to keep the Department posted as to prices will visit the United States.

Third. A copy of the invoice accompanying each importation to be sent to Ottawa in addition to the invoice now furnished at each port of entry. It was announced that the object of these changes was to enable direct supervision to be exercised at Ottawa over the appraising and to secure a uniform system of valuation.

VIEWS OF LEADING MEN IN THE TRADE.

Mr. E. B. Greenshields, of Greenshields, Son & Co., did not consider that the requisition of a duplicate invoice would cause the trade any inconvenience, providing the Department allowed the business community a reasonable time in which to secure the documents from the shippers abroad.

"As to the centralization of the statistical work at Ottawa," said Mr. Greenshields, "that is a matter of detail which I am not in a position to discuss. If, as some represent, it is not intended to keep a record of the goods entered at the different ports, but lump the figures for the country as a whole, I think it is a mistake, for the small economy so attained will be hardly worth the trouble. Besides, it seems to me that it is desirable, for many reasons which it is hardly necessary to specify, that the volume of business at the different centres should be known. Possibly, the Department hope, by centralizing the work at Ottawa, to avoid some of the inequalities that now exist in the matter of assessing duties at the different ports of entry.

"This is most desirable, but at the same time I believe that a detailed record of the goods and the ports at which they are entered should be accessible to the mercantile community."

Mr. John K. Macdonald, of John Macdonald & Co., Toronto, thought it would be the right thing. The third invoice, if intended to make for equality of duty on the same goods at different ports, will not be objected to by the importers. The honest importer has nothing to fear from any improvements made in the machinery of the Customs. What we all want is to be able to do business in one port the same as in another. It is believed that you can import more easily at one place than another. If this change brings about equality in this respect it would please the trade.

Mr. McDougall, of Gault Bros. & Co., Limited, Montreal, remarked that the trade had no fault to find with the Department in the matter of the duplicate invoices, provided they were given a reasonable time in which to procure them, and the change was not sprung on them at short notice. He had little to say regarding the centralization matter, beyond remarking that if the Department really wanted to secure an equitable assessment of duties at the different ports they should have a traveling appraiser, like Mr. Brossard, the officer at Montreal, who thoroughly understood the dry goods trade.

Gordon, Mackay & Co., Limited, Toronto, say that at first sight the Customs changes strike them favorably. To be of value statistics must be correct, and a central Department under expert control will do better work than could be otherwise obtained.

Regarding invoices in triplicate, they think this most desirable. There are a number of small ports of entry where one official acts in every capacity (collector, computing clerk and appraiser, and this for all classes of goods), it is obviously impossible that he can always avoid mistakes, and the third invoice for forwarding to Ottawa will be a check upon his work.

They also think a properly constituted Customs Board, centralized at Ottawa, may be a benefit to honest importers, and is certainly most desirable if it puts an end to methods in vogue in the past. Customs authorities, armed with authority from Ottawa, have heretofore made a round of the importing houses, demanding access to their books, and, where this was granted, settled quietly for any mistakes they were able to find—their object being to put money in their own pockets, not to increase the revenue of the Government or to stop fraud.

On the whole, they see no objection to the proposed changes, but, on the contrary, think they may be of distinct benefit.

Mr. Morgan, of McIntyre Bros. & Co., Montreal, had not given the subject any great consideration. He did not see why the trade should make any objection to supplying duplicate invoices with their entries. It was a matter of detail that could be easily arranged.

The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, Toronto, said that if the arrangement proposed effected the objects in view it would be a good policy. But that remained to be seen. The complaint now made was that at smaller ports entries were made of the same class of goods at lower rates than at larger ports. The trade wanted this stopped. If the Minister's new suggestions accomplished that, then the trade would approve of them. A good deal depended upon the details of the plan. There were features of the Customs administration which undoubtedly called for alteration. Under the present tariff, while the classification of goods was simpler, the actual work about customs entries was more complicated than before. It would be desirable if the system could be simplified by the means proposed or by any other means.

Mr. D. Morrice, jr., of D Morrice & Co., speaking from the Canadian manufacturers' standpoint, said that if the Department did not intend to keep any record of the goods entered at Montreal, the trade should object. It was necessary to know, in his opinion, what volume of foreign competition there was to meet at certain distributing points, and, if the point of entry could not be traced, it would be impossible to do this.

Mr. R. R. Stevenson, of Stevenson, Blackader & Co., took precisely the same stand. It was necessary to know what quantity of foreign material was being turned over at particular points, and, if the Government did not intend to give this information, they should certainly be requested to do so.

Mr. Frederick Wyld, of The Wyld-Darling Co., Limited, Toronto, said that if the objects of the changes mentioned were to improve the system now in vogue, no objections would be raised to it.

But there were several things which had to be kept in mind. In the matter of triplicate invoices, for instance, there would be no objection to that provided sufficient time were given for the notification of European houses. If it was intended to apply the rule to shipments now on the way, Canadian importers would have extra work in making another copy of the invoices.

Then, in the matter of a permanent board at Ottawa, this would work well if experts were appointed. There would be no use in choosing politicians who had no expert knowledge of the dry goods trade or any other branch of trade. The same argument would apply to the appointment of an officer to visit the United States. If he was a competent business man, journeying there for purely business purposes, no objection could be raised, but it was desirable in these matters to avoid choosing party hacks.

While a uniform system of values was a good thing, care must be taken not to commit the mistake of enforcing uniformity of prices. If a large importer, as many did, got goods in large quantities at a certain rate, it was not fair to put him in the same category as an importer who bought a few pieces and, therefore, paid a higher rate for the same goods.

Mr. Brophy, of Brophy, Cains & Co., discussing the proposed changes in the Custom regulations, remarked that as he understood them they had both their good and bad points. At first he was given to understand that there was to be no detailed record kept of the volume and classification of the imports at Montreal and other ports. He now understood that this was not correct, but that the detailed information would be available at Ottawa. Of course, it was far easier for the trade, under the present system, to get the information they wanted from the Customs house here than to write to Ottawa for it, but that was not a very important objection.

One strong point in favor of the centralization of the work at Ottawa was that the Department would have a copy of every invoice from all the different ports of entry on which an entry was passed, and it could easily be ascertained if the same class of goods were being entered at a lower rate of assessment at one port than another. This would be a step in the direction of equality of appraising, which the trade tried to secure some years ago by urging the appointment of qualified traveling appraisers.

"The filing of duplicate invoices," said Mr. Brophy, "is a matter that may cause some trouble. For instance, there are houses that we deal with which have to make special extensions under the Canadian Customs law, and, if they have to make copies, it means so much extra work that someone will have to pay for. If the Customs people would accept a copy drawn up by the importer in cases of this sort the trouble would be avoided, and I may point out that, in the case of English goods, this is quite permissible. Under the British Trade Marks Act, payment on any goods on which a false declaration has been made cannot be collected. Sellers, therefore, if they are dealing with scaly customers, under this Act run a chance of not securing payment for their goods. In one case in London, Eng., that I know, a leading retail draper, who had bought what he supposed to be linen goods, found that they were cotton. He refused to pay for them, sold the goods, and turned the proceeds over to charity as an example to the dishonest seller. If there was some such provision in the Canadian law, it would be a strong check upon false declarations at our Customs houses. Dishonest importers would then be running a chance if they dealt with unscrupulous customers of not obtaining payment for their merchandise."

Mr. James D. Allan, of A. A. Allan & Co., Toronto, remarked that it was extremely difficult to reduce the business of appraising to a satisfactory basis. At present it often meant that a man who was well posted in pig iron had to estimate values on silk, and it was impossible in a country with such a variety of imports as Canada to have men as Customs appraisers who would be experts in all the different lines imported. In the matter of furs, for example, there was no person with any real expert knowledge, although the appraisers seem to have good common sense.

A reconstituted board therefore at Ottawa, such as was proposed, might call in expert knowledge and therefore evolve a satisfactory way of reaching fair conclusions. Mr. Allan said he was in favor of all measures which would tend to remove any unnecessary obstacles which hamper importers. He believed that the vast majority of traders in the country were doing business honestly, and while these should be as little hampered as possible, it was also advisable to withdraw any mistaken leniency in dealing with importers who did offend.

As regards the issue of statistics from Ottawa, he thought the plan proposed was a good one. It was a matter which could be best worked from a central point and in the value of such statistics speed and publication was everything.

THE FALL TRADE.

S. GREENSHIELDS, SON & CO.

IN black fancy dress goods, the range shown by S. Greenshields, Son & Co. in Priestley's goods for this season very much surpass any former collections of that firm's celebrated makes. All the latest novelties in makes and designs are being shown. They have also a very good range of plain goods in serges, soleils, sateens, eudoras, poplins, broadcloths, etc. A full assortment of above lines will be opened up on July 2.

S. Greenshields, Son & Co. report that one of the leading features for this Fall's trade will be the demand for printed opera flannels. They have already a great many sold, and, as the goods are now in stock, customers are buying for their seaside and country clients' wear. Besides the printed, plain and striped goods, they have also a line with silk embroidered spots, which is a good selling line.

S. Greenshields, Son & Co. will have a full range of their celebrated Stanley velveteens, in blacks and colors, after July 2. They have also a full stock of silk velvets, blacks and colors, black peau de soie, black damasse, black surah silks, black satins, etc. The firm state that there has been a big demand for black satins, and their second shipment is now in port.

In fancy dress goods, the taste seems to run to checks, both tartans and camel's hair effects for separate skirts, broadcloths, tweed effects, etc.

S. Greenshields, Son & Co. have just received a shipment of Crum's mercerized sateens in all the latest designs.

S. Greenshields, Son & Co. have just concluded a purchase of over 400 cases of job-printed cottons, including light, dark, fancy and indigo prints, costume twills and ducks. They will offer the entire lot to the trade at less than manufacturers' prices.

The firm have received a large shipment of Shiffli embroideries, insertions and all-overs, from $3\frac{1}{2}$ to $32\frac{1}{2}$ c. per yard.

S. Greenshields, Son & Co. have received a very large range of misses' and ladies' summer cotton vests for immediate use in bleached and unbleached goods.

A full range of valenciennes laces and insertions at all prices is shown.

NISBET & AULD, TORONTO.

The extraordinary activity in the woollen trade the past two years has tested the capacity of the wholesale jobber to meet the demands of his customers. The tendency towards centralization extends to every department of commerce, and buyers of woollen fabrics patronize those houses whose stocks are complete in every detail as well as extensive enough to meet urgent demands for large quantities. Nisbet & Auld have kept pace with the improved conditions, and to-day their stock comprises every woollen fabric required by the trade for the various seasons. The increasing volume of their business enables them to handle large lots of clearing lines, which are secured at job prices and offered to their customers on close margins.

In men's woollens their stock is very comprehensive, and they carry at all seasons full ranges of worsteds, serges, cheviots, vicunas, trouserings, etc., from the different well-known makers whose brands are established with the public. In the Spring and Autumn seasons they secure through their London agents the choicest effects in high-class novelties, and through this connection with the English centre of fashion they keep before their customers the newest fabrics and designs.

In trimmings they have established a splendid trade, built on a stock thoroughly assorted, carefully selected and of exceptional values.

Their "Premier" and "Humbert" brands of Italians, so well-known in the merchant tailoring and dry goods trade, are manufactured from the best raw materials, viz., Egyptian cotton and Botany yarns, and are unsurpassed for wearing qualities and finish. In high colors they carry a large range in 30 inch and 54 inch goods, the latter width being used more every season.

Nisbet & Auld report very strong demands for silk linings in the merchant tailoring trade, and they have made large purchases for the coming season in 27-inch, 30 inch and 54-inch goods, as they will be used to much greater extent for Autumn and Winter.

The outlook for Fall trade in woollens is very bright, and, with their increased traveling staff, they place their splendid range within reach of every buyer from Halifax to Vancouver.

THE LONDON DRY GOODS DISTRICT.

A very interesting publication has just been gotten out by E. & H. Tidswell & Co., Wood street, London, England, whose dainty creations in lace blouses and robes are well known in this market. Messrs. Tidswell have issued a pictorial map of the dry goods district in London, England. This district, as Canadian buyers are aware, centres about St. Paul's Cathedral and the General Post Office. The map is a perfect reproduction of the streets and the buildings with the names of the firms, and shows completely the shortest way to get from one place to another. On the reverse side is a glossary of terms used in the dry goods trade, while a dress chart for women is also a feature. A copy of this valuable and interesting little publication will be sent to any Canadian merchant who writes to the firm for it. The same firm have also issued a sheet of cuts and short descriptions with the leading numbers of their new lines in lace blouses and robes, muslin robes and skirts. This useful publication may also be had for the asking.

H. H. Sutherland, of Sydney, has admitted his brother, F. C. Sutherland, as a partner into his Sydney business, under the firm name of H. H. Sutherland & Co. The new firm have an immense stock in their fine store, of furnishings, clothing and shoes.

The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, Toronto, state that they have the best value and largest range in imported wrapperettes, reversible salisburys, and printed flannelettes ever shown by them. Most lines are entirely confined to them for Canada and are the season's novelties.

A NEW DEPARTURE IN CLOTHING.

THE clothing trade has experienced quite a revolution during the past season or two, and the demand of the consumer is now for a much higher class of clothing than has heretofore been offered to the trade. The Lowndes Company, Limited, of Toronto, have anticipated this want, and are now offering a grade of clothing not excelled in style, fit or finish by any of the large houses of New York, who have necessarily to charge much higher prices on account of the lower tariff into Canada on imported goods. We think it would be to the advantage of every up-to-date retail clothier to inspect this line when buying Fall novelties.

VANCOUVER AS A TRADE CENTRE.

A Vancouver merchant writes THE DRY GOODS REVIEW: "I would like to draw your attention to the fact that little more than two years ago Vancouver City had but one wholesale dry goods house, while now she can boast of six, all of which are being well supported. This seems very good proof of the growth of the dry goods trade. The firm of MacKay, Smith & Co., who started up here two years ago, have already built up a large manufacturing business in British Columbia. We also have in Vancouver a very enterprising young firm which opened up about December, 1898, with an up-to-date stock of men's furnishings, and in connection with same a first-class tailor-made shirt department. I speak now of The Sandell Shirt Co. Mr. Sandell, the proprietor, is a young and enterprising man, a manufacturer of men's furnishings all his life, having left Toronto about four years ago, engaged by a Victoria firm. After being for a time with a Vancouver house he went into the retail business for himself and is meeting with every success."

DETECTIVE MIRRORS.

A mirror may be regarded as something more than a promoter of vanity, since it is often set to do the work of a detective. By well-arranged mirrors merchants can watch their customers, even when they turn their backs on them. Thus they save their costly stock and avoid giving offence to honest buyers. One jeweler in the west end of London has caught several well-dressed culprits simply by the aid of the looking-glass. Owners of street-corner coffee stalls find the detective mirror very useful. Petty pilfering goes on briskly around such stalls. One London coffee-stall owner declared that he used to lose a dollar a week in this way. Now he has mirrors fixed to the back and sides of his stall, and when his back is turned he can still watch his customers and protect his interests. A bookstall clerk told a similar tale. The theft of magazines and books represented a serious loss to the firm until adroitly-placed mirrors proved an effective check.—Exchange.

SHORT-REELED COTTON YARN.

We are glad to learn that there seems every prospect of a settlement of the dispute between the Scotch and Manchester yarn manufacturers regarding the export by the former of short-reeled yarn to Singapore. The production and sale of such yarn was some time ago declared illegal by the Manchester Stipendiary Magistrate, but as the Scotch manufacturers were not affected by that decision they continued to export to Singapore as before, with the result that they entirely killed the Manchester trade to that place, for Singapore buyers were accustomed to short-reeled yarn, and would not pay more for that which was the full length. The Manchester Chamber tried to obtain a decision in the Glasgow Sheriff's Court on the legality of the Scotch procedure, but could not secure a hearing on a technical ground. The facts were thereupon brought before Sir Courtenay Boyle, who expressed the opinion that representatives of the Manchester Chamber and of the Glasgow Chamber or of the Scotch dyers should be invited to meet the board of trade for the purpose of endeavoring to arrive at a satisfactory solution of the singular difficulty which had arisen. We now understand that the suggested meeting will shortly take place.—London Drapers' Record.

TRIMMING NOVELTY.

The coming season will, from all indications, give the dressmaker great scope in adorning the costumes with trimming novelties. Even the tailor-made costume has now a suitable trimming in the form of taffeta, applique, passamenterie, skirt panels, revers collars, etc. This line is shown in great profusion in both black and colors by Flett, Lowndes & Co., Limited, of Toronto.

QUEBEC MERCHANTS ACTIVE.

A DEPUTATION from the Retail Dry Goods Merchants' Association, of the City of Quebec, called on Mayor Parent, to object to the adoption of a by-law which would allow persons within or without the city limits to sell manufactured articles on the markets on payment of a tax fixed by the market committee. The deputation's objection appeared to be against the number of peddlars now selling around the markets, but their chief objection was against a woman dealer selling stockings and mittens on the Jacques Cartier market place. This dealer formerly resided at Lorette, but sold her goods on that market, paying for that privilege a license of $120 to the city. A few years ago she removed to Quebec, leasing a store and paying a business tax to the city, and besides continued selling on the market, paying the ordinary peddler's tax. The market committee decided that she should pay a special tax, and a by-law was drafted to that effect. She agreed to pay the tax, but the retail merchants are against such a measure, alleging that she does an immense business in selling stockings and mittens and considerably injures the merchants, particularly in that locality. Consideration of the by-law was postponed.

WHAT ARE OUR MERCHANTS DOING?

The Merchants' Association, of New York, announce that they have received notice from the Trunk Line Association that the reduced rates from trunk line territory have been granted. This includes the territory as far west as Buffalo, and as far south as the line of the Ohio river. The tickets will be good to return 15 days from the date of sale. This action of the Trunk Line Association includes concurrence in action which may be taken by the other associations. Are Canadian houses equally active in securing similar concessions from the railways?

RESTRICTED PRODUCTION OF WOOLLEN GOODS IN EUROPE.

The United States Consul writes from Munich: "At a recent meeting of the United German Manufacturers of Worsted Goods in Leipzig (at which 1,400,000 spindles were represented), it was resolved to reduce production from June 1 to December 31, 1900, by 20 per cent. It is understood that the manufacturers of Switzerland, Austria and Russia have agreed to adopt the same course, in order to put a stop to further decline in prices."

CANADIAN DRY GOODS IN AUSTRALIA.

THE Corticelli Silk Co., Limited, have recently opened a branch of their business in Sydney, Australia. They feel confident that Australia can be made a good market for Canadian dry goods, as well as for other manufactures. At present they intend to confine their Australian trade wholly to threads; but, with the development of trade, braids, in which they expect to do a large business, and all other lines will be introduced.

The bulk of the trade in Australia in silks, etc., has hitherto been carried on by English firms; but, as they only export spun silk, and the Corticelli people intend to place neat silk, a much higher class of goods, on the Australian market, it is not likely that the English merchants can rule the market. "Though," said Mr. Milligan, of the Corticelli Co., "as yet the Australian merchants have not used neat silk to any extent, and the people will have to be educated into its use. Our manager there, Mr. Robt. McPherson, reports that the Australians appear to regard Canadian-made goods very favorably, a number of firms doing good business in many different lines. We intend to export only Canadian-made goods, feeling sure that the present cordial relations existing throughout the Empire will make these goods a success. Australian buyers have in the past done business with our American factories, but we do not think that we can make American-made goods as popular as those made in Canada.

"A great deal depends upon the fiscal policy of the new Australian Commonwealth. At present, New South Wales is the only free trade colony, while all the others have a protective tariff, so that it is likely that the policy of the majority will be adopted. We do not intend to manufacture in Australia for some time yet, even if business should warrant us in doing so. We find that we can manufacture in Canada cheap enough to cover the cost of the freight there. As yet, we have shipped all our goods from Vancouver."

Mr. Milligan thought that a good trade could be developed in all lines of dry goods, and that there would never be any better time than the present to introduce Canadian goods into Australia, so many things having tended during the past few months to interest the people of the Island Continent in Canada and Canadians.

FLAGS! FLAGS!! FLAGS!!!

A very complete assortment of flags will be found at P. Garneau, Fils & Cie's., Quebec—Dominions, Union Jacks, Ensigns and Tricolors, in 1 yard, 2 yards, 3 yards, 4 yards, 5 yards and 6 yards.

THE P. C. CORSETS.

A notice from the Parisian Corset Co., of considerable interest to the trade, has just been made. They announce that in future the only corsets having the patent safety pockets will be the "Empire" and the "Flora." The trade, therefore, will take notice of this and order by the correct names.

A SELLER.

Another novelty introduced by Brush & Co. is the "All-Ways Ready" skirt holder, which every well-appointed store should have in stock. It is surprising how a small novelty will attract custom to the store that introduces it, and at this season the "All-Ways Ready" skirt holder is just such a novelty. As its name indicates, it is all-ways ready, as no sewing is required, and the waist and skirt are always in place when worn. We were surprised to note the attention this little article—25c. article—aroused in one large departmental store where it was being demonstrated, requiring two clerks to serve the customers.

IMPORTED ELASTIC GOODS.

An interesting announcement in elastic goods is made by A. Stein & Co., 218 Market street, Chicago, Ill., in another part of this issue. They offer to send sample lines to any Canadian merchant who is desirous of seeing their goods, which include many numbers of fancy garters, ranging in price from $7.50 per gross to the highest priced goods of this class. The better grades are all put up in nice lace-edged boxes with glass covers.

They also show a complete line of hose supporters, of which the "Flexo-grasp" is one of the features. These and other novelties are brought to the attention of the up-to-date merchant who is invited to send for samples.

That Compromise Case.

Resolution of The Montreal Wholesale Dry Goods Association.

REFERENCE has been made elsewhere to the fact that The Montreal Wholesale Dry Goods Association considered strong resolutions in regard to the Fitzgibbon-Shafheitlin case. The result of the special committee's deliberations is the following strong statement which has been forwarded to Ottawa :

That this association has heard with very great regret that the Government has settled, out of court, the case of the Crown vs. Fitzgibbon, Shafheitlin & Co., for undervaluation at the Customs House, when that case was actually under trial before the Exchequer Court,—

That the Government took a long time to make an exhaustive examination of the evidence in the case, and, after doing so, placed it in the hands of the law officers of the Crown for prosecution. The evidence sworn to in the trial proved that the position the Government had taken was the correct and only proper one,—

That this Association, which has always demanded from the Government fair and honorable administration of the Customs Act, sent strongly worded resolutions to the Government in January, September and October, 1898; in June, 1899, and in May of this year; it also sent a deputation to Ottawa to personally interview the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Justice,—

That, notwithstanding the serious harm that was being done to the honorable importers who adhered both to the spirit and letter of the law, the protection of whom was the bounden duty of the Government—not their betrayal; notwithstanding the wrong to the Government itself, which has been defrauded of large sums of revenue for a period of 12 years; notwithstanding the earnestly expressed wishes of the leading Boards of Trade of Canada, that no compromise should be made in cases where repeated and glaring frauds were established, but that in all such cases the full penalty should be inflicted as a punishment and also as a warning to anyone who might wish to follow a similar course; notwithstanding that this case was one of right or wrong, and not in any event one for compromise; notwithstanding the clear fact that, having once placed the matter in the hands of the court, the judge should alone have settled the case, and without any interference; notwithstanding all the clear issues involved, the Government settled the case for a monetary consideration and the payment of costs incurred,—

That the true nature of the compromise effected is shown by the fact that the firm in question dared not continue the prosecution for libel which they had commenced against a prominent trade newspaper that had openly published an account of the whole case,—

That against this action of the present Government, and all similar actions of any Government, this Association indignantly protests, and places its protest on record. If undervaluation is proved to have been intentionally carried on for years, it is only right that the guilty should be punished. The offence should not be condoned,—

That the result of the very objectionable action of the Government is to hold out the strong inducement to all who desire to break the law that they may do so with impunity, and when found out may settle the case by repaying a small part of the undervaluation,—

That it is a matter for great regret that the efforts of this Association, and other Associations, in the cause of honest administration of the Customs laws, should have been so unsuccessful, and their petitions treated by the Government with such indifference and neglect.

"KABO" BUST PERFECTOR.

Brush & Co. will manufacture for the Fall the now celebrated "Kabo" bust perfecter, which is to be worn over the corset, giving a bust of faultless proportion and masking every imperfection. Tailor-made jackets and snug-fitting waists are made to set with a degree of smartness when it is worn, and its lightness and ease make it far superior to any padding or building up. It may be worn without a corset and prove a splendid bust support. Shirt waist and blouse effects look chic over it, and are distended to just the right degree.

NEW COTTON MILLS AT HAMILTON.

Plans have been completed for the buildings of the Imperial Cotton Company, at Hamilton. They will include a main mill, three storeys in height, a two-storey finishing room, a large storage warehouse, boiler, machine and carpenter shops. When in operation it is expected that the plant will give employment to between 300 and 400 hands. Heavy cotton goods of various kinds will be manufactured, including car and machinery coverings, awnings, tarpaulins, etc. Tenders will be asked for shortly for the erection of the buildings.

THIS IS an Alaska Down Quilt.

One taken from our immense assortment of designs, colors and styles. The English makers used to run us close in variety of styles and designs. This year we are far ahead of any and all the English makers. We affirm that we have a larger range of DESIGNS (twenty-five designs, all handsome and yours for the asking), and of COLORS (eight colors to each design, including those popular Sky Blues and Salmons, which are not found outside of our house), and of STYLES, bordered, ruffled, double plain border, plain back, braided, etc., etc., too numerous to enumerate.

You will not have the best and newest in quilts this year if you do not carry our line. You will have the cream of the trade this year if you show our immense line to the women of your town.

PROGRESSIVE STOREKEEPING.

A MONTHLY ARTICLE ON THE PROPER MANAGEMENT, SYSTEM, ETC., OF AN UP-TO-DATE
RETAIL BUSINESS.

Specially written for THE DRY GOODS REVIEW.

By CHAS. F. JONES, New York.

About Buying.

If "goods well bought are half sold," as is often said, then buying is a very important part of advertising. The biggest help that any advertisement can have is the fact that the goods were bought right; that the goods are suitable to the people to whom you wish to sell; that they are right in quality and bought so that they can be sold at a right price. Wrong buying is often the reason for unsuccessful advertising.

Do not buy too much. It is better to cry after goods than to cry over them. Overbuying is responsible for many of the failures of business.

Now, I am going to say something which I believe to be very important, but which many will not agree with.

Where a man buys his goods is often one of the reasons why he does not buy them right. Overbuying can often be avoided by buying your goods nearer home. If you buy your goods a long way from your location you must necessarily carry a much larger stock than you would have to carry if you bought nearer home. When you can replenish daily, or nearly so, those goods which sell out, your stock can be kept small. Unless a man has a large capital he should not buy very far from home. Even if he has to pay a little larger price, it will pay him better to carry a small stock. A man who buys less than $5,000 worth of merchandise a year has no business to buy too far away from home. The man who buys $25,000 worth a year can, perhaps, afford to buy farther from home. A man who buys $100,000 worth, or more, can buy almost anywhere.

Look Out for Jobs.

It does not pay the small dealer to fill his store with merchandise and have no money left to take advantage of special jobs which may come up later. Always reserve a part of your capital to seize opportunities which may be presented after you have laid in what you consider your full stock.

About Advertising.

There are still a few merchants who say that they do not believe that in their particular case they can advertise profitably. There is no business in existence that cannot advertise profitably in some way. No one kind of advertising will suit every business, and merchants might just as well make up their minds to this at the start. Again, there is not a store in existence that does not advertise in some way. Even the sign over the door, the paint on the front of your house, are, after a fashion, advertising. The question is not whether your store can be advertised or not, but whether you are using the right kind of advertising to make it successful. Perhaps it is the wrong kind you are using and the right kind you have neglected.

The small or medium-sized store can not afford to use anything but what is regularly known as legitimate advertising. Schemes of all kinds should be avoided. In the first place, ninety-nine out of a hundred schemes are "fakes." The one in a hundred which is a good scheme is the very one that the small or medium store will never come in contact with. It is only the big store that can find out or handle the successful scheme.

Special Sales.

They are sometimes an important factor in dull seasons as well as in other times. If you are going to have special sale, go about it right, make a success of it, or do not have it. Do not have a special sale unless you have something special to sell. The so-called special sale of regular merchandise at regular prices has been worn out long ago. Make the first day of your special sale a great success at any reasonable cost, and then those who attend this day will help the sale along with their tongue advertising, if they have been satisfied with the bargains offered, and can do much to advance your interests with their friends and neighbors.

First appearances go a long way. Do not start your sale until you are ready, then start it with a will. Decorate your store with merchandise; place price tickets on whatever goods you may have to sell; announce your special sales in whatever way you may deem best, so that the public will know to expect it. Special sales which you wish to repeat from time to time, such as semi-annual sale of any line of goods, will be found more profitable on second, third or subsequent sales than the first, provided the first sale has been a success. If this is your first special sale, be sure to make a success of it, no matter what the cost.

A Hint to Big Stores.

The larger stores in large cities suffer from one disadvantage that the smaller stores escape. The large store has so many kinds of goods that the customer has to go from clerk to clerk when making purchases in various lines. This going from clerk to clerk is sometimes annoying to the customer, and notwithstanding the efforts of ten polite clerks, one impolite one will turn the tide against the store and cause the customer to forget the impression that the ten polite ones have labored so hard to make.

If you have a large store, see that your employes are drilled in knowing as near as possible what is carried in other departments and in knowing accurately where these other departments are located in the store. It is very annoying to the customer to be sent from place to place seeking for goods when it is the business of every clerk in the house to know just where they are to be obtained.

Meet The Demand.

A store should carry that line of goods and that quality of goods which its customers want. The business way to build a trade is to have what the people are willing to buy. Many stores lose a great part of their trade by not really knowing what their customers do want. All your employes should be instructed to report to you, or to the one who buys the goods, anything that the customer calls for in your line that you have not in your store. Keep a record of these calls, and when you find that there is a demand for a certain thing which you have not got, go and get it. By following these rules for a length of time, you will soon have the things which are easiest to sell and which will most please your customers.

Avoid Freaks.

A great many stores think freak advertising is progressive advertising. They think that they must either be funny or odd in order to attract attention. The odd and funny things sometimes do attract attention, but they do not always hold it long enough to be of any benefit to you, and sometimes they even react upon the customers' minds until they work against you instead of for you. All the old ideas about turning advertisements upside down, using Bible quotations in advertising, filling space with a lot of rubbish which does not accomplish anything, except to fill the space, have all long ago been proven worthless for store advertising. As a rule, the people who laugh over your advertisements afterwards buy their goods where they think they can get them the cheapest. Some stores get their announcements so full of jokes that the public are inclined to believe their serious statements are a joke.

CANADA IN PARIS.

Mr. M. Markus, of Montreal, who just returned from a three months' trip through the markets of Europe, informs us that the Canadian exhibit in Paris does credit to our country and shows the people of the world what Canada can produce. The dry goods section is well represented and deserves great credit. Mr. Markus, who engaged many new articles in the dry goods line for the exclusive sale in Canada, shows for the Spring trade many new lines in silks, dress goods, laces, hosiery, gloves, linings, dress and tailors' trimmings. Buyers should not fail to see these lines.

TWO NOBBY WAISTS.

THE AMERICAN SILK WAIST CO., of Montreal, are placing on the market two styles of silk waists that bid fair to create a sensation. The accompanying cut and the other that appears in their advertisement present a fair idea of the beauty and style of these high-class articles. Their designs give them a natty appearance, yet the strictness of man's dress, which women, as a general rule, deplore, is relieved artfully and gracefully. The colors are varied and handsome.

Running on the bias all over, the first waist is a series of needle tricks. The back is of the tight-fitting style, while the front is half loose. The five pointed front is decidedly pretty, and, trimmed as it is with expensive buttons, is enough to please the most fastidious customer. It has a dress sleeve, is lined throughout and is of the best maker's finish.

The main feature of the second is the fact that two tucks run up and down the front, back and sleeves; one is turned to the right and one to the front, giving an effect like a plait. Between the tucks is a double hemstitch that is striking in itself. It also has a five-pointed front, with a close stitching, and is trimmed with an expensive button. A touch of beauty is added by the dress sleeve. It is lined throughout, and is dressmaker-made.

The travelers are now showing them on the road, and many a lady will have one in her wardrobe this Winter, and consider it the prettiest and neatest waist she has. Other American waists are imported; these are domestic-made, and, consequently, of decidedly low price.

The Beaver Rubber Clothing Co. state that the price of rubber has been raised again, and that they may have to raise their prices shortly.

By incoming steamers arriving in the first week of this month, Brophy, Cains & Co., Montreal, received a big shipment of Swiss embroidered handkerchiefs. Customers who have been waiting will be supplied at once. Inquiries for samples will be welcomed.

Williams & Bell, of Montreal, have a contract to supply 15,000 pairs of long stockings for British regulars, who, it is expected, will pass through Canada this month en route for China. This speaks well for Canadian workmanship and Canadian wool.

Nearly all the dry goods, men's furnishing, and boot and shoe merchants of St. Thomas have signed a contract with a local man for the delivery of their goods to any part of the city, 5 times per day and 7 times on Saturdays. The delivery will be an up-to-date one in every particular and a credit to the city. The drivers of the horses will be in uniform. The wagons are much larger than the usual dry goods wagons now in use.

When goods open up BETTER than the Samples, you have good reason to be satisfied, haven't you ?

Well, many lines of our dress goods are opening up much better than our samples.

It will repay you to go carefully through and buy our Black and Fancy Black Goods alone. Some of the largest orders we have ever booked were received in July.

Tweeds for Skirts, and Harris' Mixtures for costumes will be in good demand the next six months. We have a large variety of the novelties in these lines.

High-Class Fancy Checks and Stripes will be exceptionally good for skirts. We have just put into stock very choice designs and colorings that you will not find elsewhere.

Our old reliable Velveteens, twilled back, all colors, at old prices—thanks to the recent additional reduction in tariff—have been more appreciated by our friends this season than ever.

Corded Velveteens, Corduroy Velveteens, and Silk-Embroidered Velveteens for Stylish Blouses, Vests and Trimmings.

Plain Black Silk Velvets, full range of prices now in stock, Lister's Standard makes.

Plain Colored Silk Velvets, over 60 shades in stock, "Lister's Lisvel."

Fancy Silk Broche Velvets, for Blouse and Combination Fronts; these are in good demand.

WINNIPEG'S GREAT ANNUAL FAIR.

From THE DRY GOODS REVIEW'S special Correspondent.

THE Winnipeg Industrial Fair of 1900 is now history, and a dating point for the future. The weather, the number of exhibits and the attendance all surpassed previous years.

THE WEATHER.

It was Queen's weather (as was but just and right, considering that we had the Queen's representative with us), but then, Manitoba Queen's weather is just a little bit better than you get anywhere else. Each morning Winnipeg got up to cloudless skies and bright sunshine, tempered with cool western breezes; the evenings were clear, calm and starlit, and cool enough to render sleeping a luxury (that is, where you had anything to sleep on). Twice during the week a smart shower fell during the night, just enough to lay the dust, but not enough to stir up Winnipeg's all too affectionate and clinging mud.

THE VICE REGAL VISIT.

Winnipeg was really en fete on Saturday, July 21, for on that date His Excellency the Earl of Minto and the Countess of Minto were to arrive. All day the trains coming into the city brought hundreds anxious to join in the loyal procession. The city was gay with bunting, and from almost every building on Main street, and on all public and many private buildings, floated the Union Jack. The decorations were really very beautiful, and many of them costly. Main street was not arched, as it is no trifle to span its 100 feet of driveway, and it was also thought unwise to in any way obstruct the view of the procession.

The illuminations were nearly all in electric lights—red, white and blue royal crowns, rose, shamrock, thistle and the maple leaf being the most popular forms. On the city hall was a crown with "V.R." and a maple leaf on each side, while below were the words "Welcome, Minto" written in fire. Perhaps the most effective thing was the monument in the City Hall Square. The tall column supporting the figure of the soldier in full uniform was literally a pillar of fire (most appropriate, when it is remembered by what a fiery road the brave young soldiers it commemorates went home). The train bearing Their Excellencies reached the city about 8.30, and by 9 o'clock the procession had reached the city hall. Let the reader remember that Main street is 132 feet wide (100 feet of driveway and 16 foot sidewalk on each side) and 1½ miles long between the C.P.R. depot and the Assiniboine river. It is well paved all the way, and the City Hall Square is just midway. The last of the procession was barely formed at the C.P.R. when the first part was passing the city hall. It was headed by the fire brigade, their apparatus beautifully decorated and all the big steamers and hook and ladder wagons burning limelights. It is impossible to describe that procession in detail. It would fill pages. The carriage with Their Excellencies was drawn by four white horses, and the guard of honor was formed of Royal Canadian Dragoons, their brilliant scarlet tunics showing with fine effect, the Boys' Brigade and the 90th Regt., the latter being out in full force, their white helmets contrasting vividly with their dark uniforms. The military were closely followed by the Scottish Clans in Highland costumes and with a contingent of no less than 10 pipers playing for dear life, half a mile of fraternal societies in full regalia, bands, bugles, fifes and drums and thousands upon thousands of well dressed cheering, singing citizens, the light bright dresses of the women and children reflecting the light of the torches. As the vice regal party passed along, the electric light switches were turned on and a perfect blaze of colored light would stream across the street. The bands played "God Save the Queen" and the crowds cheered to the echo, they broke into the "The Maple Leaf Forever" and again and again the cheers broke forth, then "Soldiers of the Queen" and it seemed as if the whole city had suddenly shouted together. Viewed from the top of a three-storey building it was a most gorgeous pageant, and once seen not likely to be forgotten. Lord Minto was left in no doubt that he was welcome to the West (where he is looked upon as an old friend) and that the West is loyal straight away to the point "Where West is East Beside the Land-Locked blue," for there were scores of people all the way from British Columbia.

But all this is not the Fair. With so auspicious a beginning it was not wonderful that the whole week was a success.

EXHIBITS.

It has been already said that the attendance was ahead of anything yet recorded, so it is not necessary to say anything more, unless, perhaps, to quote the words of an American visitor who remarked: "Well, I'm blessed if I ever saw so well dressed a crowd. There must be 25,000 people on the grounds this minute, and I have yet to see one that is shabby, let alone in rags."

The exhibits were best in those features that really represent the strength of the country. The stock was superb. The judges in all classes could hardly be too enthusiastic about it. And, not only were the exhibits fine in quality, but they were so numerous that at the last moment new stables had to be erected. The horses, cattle and pigs were all strongly represented, the sheep were the weakest class in the stock, and even they were a very good exhibit. The dairy exhibit was excellent in quality and very representative. The best cheese shown was made by a young woman student of the Manitoba Government Dairy School, Miss Lokier, of Genela, in the Dauphin District. The display of dairy machinery was tastefully arranged, and the largest yet made. Speaking of machinery, the local implement dealers came to an agreement some time ago that they would not exhibit on the Fair grounds, but in their own warehouses, and they claim that from the standpoint of business and orders, it has paid them better. From the standpoint of the appearance of the Fair, there is but one opinion, and that is the loss is very great. The machinery hall was always a great centre of attraction, for the dealers made large displays and their goods are effective. Good machinery in motion is always a pleasant sight. It is to be hoped by another year that some arrangement may be come to for their presence on the ground.

Owing to the extremely dry weather of the month of June the horticultural exhibit fell far below its usual merit, though many of the specimens shown were very fine.

The main building showed many fine and very tasteful exhibits; those of E. L. Drewry and The Scott Furniture Co. being pronounced the most attractive. The art critics are still disputing over the merits of the art gallery, so it is best let alone. There were a number of pictures that looked good and pleasant to the eye of the unlearned. The British Columbian building, built of British Columbian native woods, was a new and most attractive feature of the fair, and was thronged all day long and every day. The mineral exhibit was most instructive, as were also the grain and grass exhibits from Alberta, which were given place in this building.

ATTRACTIONS.

These grow yearly a more important feature of our Western fairs until the more sober-minded are inclined to think the thing is entirely overdone. However, this may be, there was at least one very regrettable feature of the attractions at Winnipeg, and that was the introduction of a "Midway." It is to be hoped it will not be repeated. Attractions which have as their lure women performers, and are of a character no decent women may see, should have no place on the grounds of an Industrial Fair, which makes its proud boast of being educational as well as amusing. Education in vice can be obtained all too easily without the Exhibition directors making money out of placing it under the very eyes of hundreds, yes thousands, of youths fresh from country homes and eager for change and excitement.

One of the sights of the Fair always is the "stock parade" of Citizens' Day, and it is a sight worth going far to see. It is estimated that there were 12,000 people on the grand stand and in the paddock when it passed this year, and the crowd was quite as goodly a sight as all the glossy stallions, stately bulls and grunting, protesting pigs.

American Day was, as ever, a great success. Year by year more of our cousins come to see us and fall in love with our country and come back to stay, or fall in love with our pure-bred stock and pay long prices for them.

MERCHANTS IN TOWN.

It is estimated that there never has been as many merchants from outside points in the city at any previous Fair, and though in the dry goods and hardware lines but a small amount of business was done, yet wholesale men express the opinion that in the end the meeting of heads of departments and customers is a wise and profitable thing and is productive of much better mutual understanding. All travellers were in the city for the week and devoted themselves to the comfort and pleasure of their customers.

THE U.C.T.'S MAKE MERRY.

Some of the officials of the United Commercial Travelers of Minnesota and Dakota took the opportunity of the cheap rates for Fair week to visit the brethren here. Business being got through with by noon Saturday an adjournment was made to Edison Hall, River Park, where, after a pleasant run on the electric cars, the guests and hosts sat down to a banquet. The menu was choice, the service good, and it is safe to say that after the first course the repartee was as choice as the viands. Toasts and speeches followed the banquet, and from 10 p.m. until midnight dancing was kept up merrily. The wire screening sides of the great hall admitted plenty of sweet fresh air, the floor was good, and the music better. Outside was a perfect Manitoba summer night and a grove of cool rustling poplar with seats here and there in shady corners, and the Knights of the Grip and their lady friends found this a delightful spot to cool off between dances. Winnipeg was reached shortly after midnight by a tired but jolly crowd, the American visitors insisting to the last breath that the Winnipeg U.C.T.'s were in very deed "Jolly Good Fellows."

LAW, NEW AND AMENDED.

THE business results of the late session of Parliament embody several matters which the commercial community will find it useful to know.

FINANCE.

In the realm of finance, there is the measure providing that the whole or any part of the public debt may be inscribed and transferred in a registered copy in Great Britain. This is in accordance with the provisions of the Imperial Act which enables the debts of colonies to be admitted to the list of inscribed stocks in England. A more important measure is the Act amending the Bank Act. This law continues the charters of 34 incorporated banks, and provides that the Jacques Cartier Bank may change its name to the Provincial Bank of Canada, and the Merchants Bank of Halifax to the Royal Bank of Canada. A clause provides that persons holding bank stock in trust shall not be personally liable as a shareholder. Several other provisions growing out of the failure of certain banks of Canada during the last few years, and doubtless suggested by these occurrences, are made. For instance, arrangements are made for the appointment of a curator in the event of a bank suspending. Then, again, the Canadian Bankers' Association is recognized and its powers defined. The by-laws of the Bankers' Association are not to go into force until they are approved of by the Treasury Board of the Canadian Government. There are also provisions for the purchase of the assets of a bank.

THE TARIFF.

No tariff changes were made in detail at the late session, but, as is well known, the preferential rate on British goods was increased to $\frac{1}{3}$ of the duty. But this preferential rate does not apply to wines, malt liquors, spirits, liquid medicines, and articles containing alcohol, tobacco, cigars and cigarettes. Besides that, the reduction will only apply to refined sugar when the Minister of Customs is furnished with satisfactory evidence that such refined sugar has been manufactured wholly from raw sugar produced in the British colonies.

It is provided also that machinery not made in Canada and for use in beet-root sugar factories may be imported free.

RULES REGARDING FRUIT BARRELS, ETC.

The regulations of the Inland Revenue Department have been amended in several particulars relating to weights and measures. For example, it is provided that the barrels containing apples for export shall be of the following dimensions, viz.: 26 $\frac{1}{4}$ inches between the heads, inside measure, and a head diameter of 17 inches, and a middle diameter of 18 $\frac{1}{2}$ inches, representing as near as possible 96 quarts. These dimensions shall also apply to barrels when apples, pears or quinces are sold by the barrel. The penalty for disobeying this law is 25c. for each barrel of apples, pears or quinces offered or exposed for sale or packed.

Another provision is that when eggs are described by the standard dozen, the dozen shall mean 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ lb.

Every ball of binder twine is to be stamped with the name of the maker or importer, stating the number of feet of twine per lb. in such ball. The penalty for disobeying this section is 25c. per ball. This section relating to binder twine does not come into force until October 1, 1900.

COPYRIGHT.

The passage of an Act giving copyright to Canadian publishers of English books whose owners make an arrangement with local publishers has been passed without amendment.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier's Act restricting Chinese immigration also passed. This is a measure of considerable interest to people in British Columbia. The Government, by it, are given power to appoint one or more persons to administer the Act and engage interpreters at salaries aggregating not more than $3,000 a year. Under the Act, only members of the Chinese diplomatic corps or other Government representatives, with their suites and servants, and consuls and consular agents may enter without paying the fee. Others who escape the tax are Chinese children, born in Canada, who have left this country for educational or other purposes and establish their identity on returning; also merchants, their wives and children, tourists, men of science, and students who substantiate their status to the satisfaction of the authorities.

Any woman of Chinese origin who is married to a person not of Chinese origin shall come in free, being deemed to be of the same nationality as her husband.

The Act also contains provision regarding the landing of Chinese and certain regulations to prevent any introduction of disease. Another section prohibits the traffic in Chinese women. A penalty is imposed for landing the Chinese before the tax is paid. Rules are also given for the passage of Chinese through Canada in transit to some other country, and provision is made for the registration of those who leave Canada and wish to return.

Any Chinese who break the new law may be put in prison for a year or be subject to a fine of $500. The organization of Chinese courts is prohibited.

CRIMINAL LAWS.

The Criminal Code has received a number of amendments, the subjects dealt with being chiefly the publication of indecent books, photographs, etc., the offences of kidnapping, counterfeiting money, etc.

Slight changes are also made in the laws regarding theft, and certain procedure in the case of accused persons. The changes are more technical than comprehensive and of more interest to the legal community than the commercial classes.

ARBITRATION OF LABOR DISPUTES.

The last measure to which attention may be directed is the Act passed to aid in the prevention and settlement of trade disputes, and to provide for the publication of statistical industrial information. By this measure boards are established for the purpose of settling disputes between employers and workmen by conciliation or arbitration. The law follows the English Act to a certain degree, and provides for the creation of an arbitration tribunal when the disputing parties are willing. The Act is not obligatory, and has no power, therefore, to terminate a strike.

In connection with this, the Act sets up a Department of Labor which shall collect and publish statistical and other information relating to the conditions of labor, and issue, at least once a month, a publication known as The Labor Gazette, containing information regarding the labor market and kindred subjects.

As already announced through the press, the Government have appointed as editor of this new paper Mr. William Lyon Mackenzie King, M.A., LL.B., at present on the staff of Harvard University and a distinguished graduate of the University of Toronto. Mr. King is not a politician, but has been engaged in journalistic work and in special inquiries into conditions of labor for several years.

In connection with the work of the session, it might be mentioned that the Minister of Customs, Mr. Paterson, took a vote of money for the purpose of providing a staff to publish promptly and fully the trade statistics relating to imports and exports. This will be put into shape at once, beginning with the present month, which is the first of the new fiscal year.

WINDOW AND STORE DECORATING.

Conducted for THE REVIEW by H. Hollingsworth, an Expert Window Artist.

TO DRY GOODS REVIEW READERS.—We shall be glad to receive photographs and descriptions of window displays that have attracted special attention in their own localities, and which would be considered helpful to trimmers generally. Any inquiries or questions on the subject of window dressing will be answered cheerfully, and any information given that may be desired by readers. Queries should be addressed: "Window Dressing Department."

TRIMS DURING AUGUST.

AS August is considered the dulllest month of the year to the average dry goods house, the window-trimmer is generally puzzled at this time to know what to display in his windows.

Stocks are always run down during July and August and consequently it is difficult to make nice trims from broken lots and assortments.

But the fact that trade lags and stocks are low, etc., is no reason why the energy of the trimmer should be relaxed and nothing be done to increase the flow of dollars to the till.

Of course, displays now should not be on as elaborate and extensive a scale as in the months of April or May, but there are many departments that could be made to pay better during the next few weeks by some taking little displays in window and interior.

Certain lines of goods during the heated term will go all right if pushed.

Take the hosiery department for instance. There is always a good demand for Summer hosiery during the hot months. People are attracted to a hosiery bargain during August as well as in any other month, and where is the hosiery stock that hasn't got bargains to offer during the month of August? Odd lots and sizes—or a special lot or two picked up at a very low price. Here is material for forcing trade to the hosiery department. It isn't a difficult thing for the head of the department to get together enough hosiery to be averaged up at a popular price so as to make a display on which the price can be properly placarded. With a little newspaper ad, the goods ought to move quickly.

AN EFFECTIVE RIBBON DISPLAY.

Ribbons, wash goods, gents' furnishings, summer underwear and shirt waists can be subjected to the same treatment. These displays should be plain and the price made the important feature. In fact, the faculty of gaining the attention of people to that point where they see that you are anxious to have them come in and buy what is in the window and not merely look at it, is best exemplified in this sort of trim.

The goods must be neatly shown. Broken boxes and torn papering will not do. Give the impression that the goods shown are new goods and the little matters of detail should be as carefully looked after as in a more pretentious trim.

It should be clearly understood that every head of department is more than anxious to sell during August, and if the window-trimmer, advertising man and head of department work in harmony, there is no reason why they should not be entirely satisfactory in results in stimulating trade into whatever line of goods they choose.

A trimmer who succeeds in making business flow toward a certain department during these dull days is doing more good to the store and the department than he imagines. The problems of display, advertising and salesmanship are so closely interwoven that a weakness in one man may mean a weakness for all.

For instance, the display of hosiery may bring quite a fair number of people to the store, but the advertising man neglects to do the subject justice. While a considerable portion of the offer has been disposed of there is still much remaining and the department man puts the blame for the non-success of the idea on the window-trimmer who may have originated the scheme, while the advertising man is not thought of at all as being to blame in the matter. Many people read the adver tisement and don't quite reach the point of going into the store to look at the advertised specialties, but, passing the store windows, the very thing that was advertised in the morning papers catches the eye of the onlooker. The card "Advertised in this morning's paper" catches the attention still more when they remember the ad.

Another good idea to put into effect during the slow months is the 5 or 10c. window.

By that I mean a display made up of everything that can be found in each department to sell at 5c. A look through the notion department will reveal a hundred and one different articles that can be sold at 5, 6, 8 or 10c. A card in large type worded is sure to stop everybody, and in many cases a customer will go in to purchase some little 5 or 10c. article they saw in the window and before coming out will have spent a few dollars, "Big oaks from little acorns grow."

During the dull days people have to be almost coaxed to purchase, and if this suggestion of the 5, 10 or 25c. window display is tried it will be found a success.

Window-trimming in its early stages was regarded as a means of beautifying, but it has developed into what is known to-day as an advertisement that sells more goods than any other advertising medium known to the retail merchants and stands pre-eminently ahead of all others without a rival. Not only the retail merchant has sought this mode of advertising, but some of the greatest manufacturers have learned that good window displays have an unlimited capacity to sell their goods and have organized window-trimming contests and offered large sums of money for the most meritorious displays of their wares, knowing that it would sell more goods for their dealers than any other method known to them.

A great kodak manufacturer, of New York State, makes the following statement in one of his pamphlets:

"MAGAZINE VS SHOW WINDOWS."

"If we had a few hundred show windows we could cut our bill for magazine advertising in half. We would make those windows talk kodak every hour of the day. Magazine advertising can only plough and harrow the field and put in the seed. Then along comes the self-binding reaper, the window, and harvests the crop. Newspaper advertising with the merchant is just such a statement."

Twenty years ago almost any kind of a window was thought good enough, but, in these active days of competition, it is necessary to have all modern appliances.

In place of the small, dingy cramped windows which occupied the store fronts of a former generation and were of no value, stores of to-day have large roomy windows, well lighted, which show off their merchandise to the very best advantage. Such windows are the indexes of the store, and have proven themselves to be the mirror in which the public see the store doings of the day.

The development of window display has been simply phenomenal and the exalted position it occupies to-day has simply been won on its merits alone. The show window is created wholly for appropriate dressing, and if it be not properly arranged it is simply useless—a waste of space that cannot be used for any other purpose.

In this era of severe critical taste in store decoration, the merchant who neglects to keep pace with it will sooner or later find himself in the rear rank of success.

NOTIONS.

During the dull months there are no better paying displays than those of "Notions" (little necessities at little prices).

Many merchants think that the profits on little articles, such as pins, hooks and eyes, spools, hair articles, etc., are so small that the time and space given to a display of this kind is wasted. Such an idea is a mistake. I find that there are no windows that attract better than a good notion display well ticketed. Notions form a line that, as a rule, is let severely alone by the average window-trimmer, although occasionally shown in connection with other goods. While piece goods must necessarily furnish the trimmer with the material for the majority of display, still, notions, small and difficult to handle as they are, furnish possibilities in the line of trimming that have as yet been investigated by but few window-trimmers.

A GOOD ARRANGEMENT IN "NOTIONS."

Common, everyday necessities in notions are too frequently neglected or overlooked in favor of the more pretentious and stock departments; and, yet, any store which does not display of a little extra time and plenty of stock. As "time is money," displays of notions are usually put in during the "off season," when they greatly aid in attracting trade.

The stock, owing to the demand for such a staple line, is generally in a condition to afford an ample display.

The best plan in preparing a notion window is to leave all idea of an elaborate display out of consideration and concentrate all efforts on making a neat exhibition of everyday necessities, that, ticketed at drawing prices, will keep the department crowded from morning till night.

The various shapes of windows and diversity of lines carried in different localities make any set plan or rule for trimming out of the question. The illustration on page 22 occasional notion windows sadly neglects advancing the interests of one of its best paying departments.

While it takes more time and is far more difficult to make a satisfactory or artistic display with notions than with piece goods, still the direct results obtained from a well-trimmed notion window are sometimes far in advance of those received from the general displays of other lines, and this should more than compensate for the extra time and labor given to the display.

The object of a notion display should preeminently be to sell goods, and this should constantly be on the mind of the trimmer, who can accomplish the desired result by the outlay can be used to good advantage with alterations to suit individual surroundings and conditions. A good idea is to obtain a lot of baskets of a uniform size and fill one, say, with boxes of hairpins, another with dress shields (at one price), another with combs, another with safety pins and so on, and arrange them any suitable way to catch the eye.

Have a neat plain price ticket on each.

Price tickets form a leading feature of all notion displays. A fact necessary to remember when ticketing is that the cards should not be placed so as to hide the article marked, as is too frequently the case.

letters are preferable and the card should be no larger than to conveniently hold the price and description necessary.

LACES AND RIBBONS.

No goods carried by the dry goods house possess greater possibilities for decorative purposes than laces and ribbons.

The former are not only beautiful and interesting in themselves, but add very much to the attractiveness of other lines when used in combinations. The latter can be made into an infinite variety of fancy forms and designs and through their harmonious blending of colors are capable of giving brightness and life to any kind or size of window. The illustrations will convey an idea of a neat, attractive lace or ribbon trim.

H. H.

UMBRELLA WINDOW.

Nowadays people are thinking of umbrellas and mackintoshes and such like rain protectors, says the St. Louis Dry-goodsman. It is a good time to improve the opportunity and make a showing of them.

If you have no regular umbrella display racks, you can make holders of whatever shapes your fancy dictates, either semi circular, angular, or what not and fasten them into position against the background or on the base of the window.

To secure the umbrellas on these holders turn in two screw eyes, one above the other, about three inches apart for each umbrella, of a size that will allow the tip to drop down into them.

Put such a rack containing some of the best umbrellas in the centre of the base, dress two display forms in mackintoshes and place one on each side of the window, make a design of umbrellas on the background, put some partially opened umbrellas on the base and perhaps a few stands of them fastened together in the shape of a tripod (in which shape they can be held by a heavy rubber band) and you will have a window that will halt a person on a rainy day.

Never forget the price tickets, nor descriptive tickets where the curiosity of an onlooker can be satisfied or aroused so as to bring him into the store.

LACE CURTAIN WINDOW.

Probably the meanest things to show properly in the ordinary window are lace curtains, because of the space required to display the patterns. A simple way to make a display rack is to take a length of white inch curtain pole that will reach from the background to within 18 inches of the glass.

Fasten it about 42 inches from the side wall at right angles to the glass and background and at a height that will allow curtains to be draped as at a window. The end at the background is easily fastened, the other end can be held by a black thread or fine wire from the ceiling.

To the side wall fasten pieces of the same kind of pole about a foot apart, laying the outer ends on the top of the piece first fastened. They can be easily tied in place there by a cord.

On the outer end of each pole fasten an ornamental end.

Over the poles drape the patterns to be shown, bringing the one at the rear farthest toward the centre of the window, and, as they approach the glass, make each recede a little, so that the patterns of the borders can be plainly seen.

If the window is large enough the same thing can be repeated at the other side.

A curtain display can be made after a similar manner by fastening the lengths of pole at a central block on the background and making them radiate from the hub, like the spokes of a half wheel, using six or seven spokes. The outer ends should be held up by threads or wires.

The bottom of the window can be filled in with packages of curtains or drapings of upholstery goods.

SPECIAL DRESS GOODS WINDOW.

No doubt there are many dress patterns that should find buyers. The feature of a dress goods window at this time should be designed to create desire; hence must embody special inducement. This can be done by arranging a simple display of very special offerings.

Clear out a window and clean it. Then start by covering the background with dress goods, draping them. If the main color of the goods you have selected is dark, use light bright goods for the background. Then about every two feet along the top of the background fasten six-inch pieces of curtain pole so they will stick straight out. On these arrange a piece of bright red dress goods, gathering it at each bracket so that it will hang in fold.

Arrange the base in a series of two steps, or more, if the depth of the window will allow. On these steps arrange drape forms. Then drape a dress pattern on each form. With each pattern next to the glass, arrange the lining; that is, waist and skirt lining, binding and stays. Then on each pattern put a descriptive card, reading, "Regular price 75c. per yard. Price now for the pattern only $4.98 and linings free." Change the price to fit the goods shown. The yard price should be lettered in black and the pattern price in red. In the centre of the window place a large card reading, "To reduce stock—special offerings in dress patterns."

ATTENTION TO DETAIL.

The store in the smaller town, says The Chicago Dry Goods Reporter, is not expected to make the display of the city store nor can it do so, because of lack of materials, but the trimmer in the smaller store can do the best that his materials and ability for the work will allow, and he can give all of his work a finished appearance. It is the practice that makes the perfection in window trimming as in all other things, and the carelessness which shuns details, persists in loose ends and bare spaces, mussed draping and dirty glass develops into a habit which makes the trimmer a poor excuse and a worse excuser.

When you start in to trim a window do not make your plans so elaborate that you cannot carry them out and have to leave the work only partially executed. It is far more effective to put one article in the window and have the draping and position such that it will call people inside, than to put in a half-dozen in a slipshod sloppy manner that will not hold the attention of passers nor give them reason for caring to look at the stock, because there is no real attractiveness about the showing.

Be careful of the details and beware of the criticisms of the people who look at your windows and your interior decorations! There is no critic so observant nor so exacting as the public. Perhaps people cannot always tell exactly what is the matter with the thing, but they know that it is not right. To be sure, it takes time and patience to watch out for the lackings, but windows like people's faces are the exponents of what is inside—the best way of finding out whether things are done with care and close attention. A shabbily made background destroys all the good front effect and no well-built background can alleviate the lack of good draping in front of it. A window or an interior display will always tell whether the worker has done just enough to "skin through" the job and get out of it.

THE FUTURE OF SHIRT WAISTS.

Tooke Bros'. orders to date exceed by 50 per cent. those of last year for Fall waists. Only extended facilities have enabled them to keep up with orders. The demand has been very strong in velvet effects, followed closely by golf cloths and both fancy and plain mohairs. They think that the latter will be in chief demand for the "sorting up" trip of their travelers.

The most interesting question in the shirt-waist trade at present is: "What about 1901?" It was prophesied some years ago that the shirt waist had come to stay; time has amply proven the truth of the statement. It has also been demonstrated that it is the manufacturer who is ever on the alert for the "newest thing" that commands the trade. This is the aim of Tooke Bros., Limited. That the coming season of 1901 will see important and radical changes they are perfectly aware, yet the fundamental use of the shirt waist must not be lost sight of, and this is economy and comfort. So the manufacturer who shows the most effective waist, combined with simplicity, will be the winner next season, as in all seasons. That it will be another "white" season goes without saying, with the demand for high-priced goods stronger than ever.

Tooke Bros., Limited, have opened up another department to meet their ever increasing business. They will now have a silk shirt waist department called department "D." It is under the management of a competent designer and is provided with facilities for turning out orders within 10 days of receipt.

RETAILERS' "KUMFORT MITT" PROFIT.

33½ per cent. is a good profit. It is just what the retailer makes on "Kumfort Mitts." He buys them at $4.50 net, and sells them at 50c.

The raw material put in these mitts has risen from 20 to 40 per cent. since it was bought, and this is why a muleskin palm, oil-dressed sheepskin back, pure wool lining and wrist, can be put into a strongly-knit mitt for $4.50 per dozen. The retailer who handles an article like this does not need to worry about having a shelf loaded with moth-eaten goods to be shoved on his customer the following season—they sell out clean.

MONTREAL DRYGOODSMEN LOSE BY FIRE.

SUNDAY morning, August 6, was a disastrous morning to the retail dry goods trade of Montreal. About 1.30 o'clock fire broke out in the large establishment of Bernier & West, situate on the corner of University and St. Catherine streets, and in 30 minutes the entire building and stock were gutted and great damage done to Scroggie's stock across the street.

The Bernier & West building was considered an unsatisfactory one from an insurance point of view, and Mr. Bernier stands to be a heavy loser in consequence. Nothing whatever was saved. The stock was valued at $175,000, and the insurance does not amount to more than $20,000 or $25,000. Even that amount Mr. Bernier does not expect to collect, for the insurance was placed with an American company, and there was some hitch in the arrangements.

Mr. Bernier had lately been laying in stock very heavily for the Fall, and the house was full. The only thing left intact among the stumps of pillars was a Union Jack, which had been hanging in the store.

The intense heat damaged other neighboring buildings, among which was Scroggie's. All the plate glass windows on the St. Catherine street front were smashed to atoms, and, while the water did not do a great deal of damage, yet the smoke injured many fine fabrics, so as to considerably lower the value of the stock.

Mr. S. Goltman, a St. Catherine street tailor, will also have a large claim against the insurance companies for damages.

TILBURY BUSINESS MEN.

Mr. W. C. Crawford, general, or you might say departmental store, for you could scarcely conceive of any article he does not carry in his monster new premises in Tilbury, which for modern convenience could hardly be improved on. Mr. Crawford is a hustler, and has the tact to do everything in systematic order, and although kept so busy in superintending so large a business, has always time to see all callers, and dispose of them in a way which makes them feel they would like to call again. Judging from the fine premises and active business carried on there, the Tilbury merchants must be prospering.

Since I last visited Tilbury, Mr. J. S. Richardson, general merchant, has moved into his large new brick premises, 40 x 155 ft; with plate glass front, 14 x 37 ft. This is one of the finest stores I have seen. There is not a single pillar to obstruct the view over the whole floor, the ceilings being supported by steel girders. On the first floor, dry goods, boots, shoes, hats, caps, and ready-made clothing are tastily arranged, while, at the back, the grocery department is located. On the south side is a fine suite of offices of fine workmanship, finished in ash. The second floor is devoted to the millinery, carpet and housefurnishing lines. The building is heated throughout by steam, lighted by electricity, and cash carriers traverse the whole store.

Mr. Richardson is an active business man, and courteous to everyone. He reports business good.

MONTREAL RETAILERS' PICNIC.

L'Excursion de la Société des Marchands
Détailleurs de Nouveautés.

Reported for THE DRY GOODS REVIEW.

THE eleventh annual excursion of the Retail Dry Goods Merchants of Montreal was to have been held on Wednesday, July 25. Unfortunately, the heavens were watering the earth that morning in a manner which did not bid fair to make a picnic a success. So the management wisely decided to send the would-be excursionists back to work and to postpone the trip till the morrow. On Thursday the morning broke clear and fine; and all through the day the merchants enjoyed a cloudless sky and cool breeze.

It was the pretty little village of Chambly, on the banks of the Richelieu, that was chosen as the objective point for this year's invasion. A train of six cars was drawn up at Bonaventure station to carry the army to "the front," but the number of volunteers was so large that two extra cars had to be added to provide accommodation. There must have been 700 people in the party, an unexpectedly large number, considering the postponement. The train left the station about 9 o'clock and reached Chambly about 9 45. Then commenced a day of enjoyment that has not been surpassed since the annual affair has begun to have a history.

The people and civic authorities of Chambly had made elaborate preparations, and the crowd was provided with sufficient amusement and sightseeing to keep them interested all through the day. In fact, the place was so delightful that about 25 people nearly missed the train coming home. Howard Park, situated right beside the railway station, was gaily decorated with flags and streamers, bearing the suggestive word "Bienvenu." A large covered platform for dancing had been erected especially for the occasion; here Ratto's orchestra took up its position immediately upon the arrival of the train and dancing was continued throughout the day.

The games committee, under the presidency of Mr. O. Lemire, immediately set to work and had quite a number of the events on the programme successfully run off before the dinner-bell rang. Then everybody was hungry. Those who had not brought their eatables with them sat down to a huge banquet table, set in a shady part of the grounds, where body and mind were satisfied to the full. The "president honoraire," M. G. Marsolais, presided, and about him were the officers of the association and town officials. After the "Queen" was toasted right heartily, the "Mayor and Corporation of Chambly" came in for a good deal of merited attention. In replying to the toast, M. Chs. Durocher, mayor of Chambly Basin, welcomed the excursionists in a happy speech. Other speeches, appropriate to the occasion, were made by many of the orators of the day.

The afternoon was passed by many in the park, where the games and dancing were continued. The games resulted as follows:

150 Yards' Race—Open to the trade.—1st, M. Constantineau ($10 given by Le Journal); 2nd, M. Ad. Gagnon, traveling bag; 3rd, M. J. Lesage, box of cigars.

100 Yards' Race—For boys between 11 and 15 years of age.—1st, Leopold Ethier, punching bag; 2nd, Ovide Morran, lacrosse and ball.

250 Yards' Race—Open to excursionists.—1st, E. H. Cooper, fruit dish; 2nd, M. I. Burrows.

75 Yards' Race—Open to dry goods merchants.—1st, Ars. Lamy $15 (donated by Le Journal); 2nd, Ad. Lamy, $5 (donated by J. O. Trempe); 3rd, Bruno Charbonneau, $2.50 in gold.

150 Yards' Race—Open to members of the association.—1st, Ad. Daigneault, president's cup; 2nd, Ad. Fleury, one dozen photos.

Consolation Race.—1st, Rod. Audette, pipe.

An amusing game of football between sides chosen from the picnicing merchants closed the day's sport. No one knew anything about the rules of the game, not even the referee, so it soon became a contest between the resourcefulness of the opposing teams in inventing rules to suit their own conveniences. Several gentlemen demonstrated their ability to fall down a four foot ditch and climb out again in less than four seconds.

Chambly, itself, is of more than ordinary interest, inasmuch as its history dates back as far as any town in Quebec. Its historical data and landmarks have been well preserved by Mr. J. O. Dion, a respected inhabitant of the place, who has lately been honored by the French academy. The town derives its name from Jacques de Chambly, a captain in the famous regiment de Carignan Satiere, who arrived on the banks of the Richelieu in 1665. The old fort was built by the French in the days of their early struggles against the Iroquois, burned by the Americans in the incursion of 1776, reerected by Sir Guy Carleton in 1777 and abandoned in 1848. The visitors to the fort were numerous during the day. Other old places in the village were also visited. The immense dam in the Richelieu that was built to generate power for the Chambly Electric Power Company is also a piece of engineering that struck wonder in the minds of the excursionists.

Altogether there was more than sufficient to detract attention from thoughts of business. It was a day of rest and yet of profit. The people of Chambly are to be thanked for their cordial invitation and entertainment, while the committees who decided to take the merchants there, and who looked after them while they were there, earned the gratitude of all who had the privilege of enjoying that grand success.

The general excursion committee was composed of the following gentlemen: G. Marsolais, honorary president; O. David, treasurer; G. Labonte, commissaire-ordonnateur; J. M. Marcotte, secretary.

Among those whom were noticed on the train were: E. Labelle, Jos. Normandin, P. E. Paquette, A. O. Morin, G. Marsolais, G. Labelle, Jos. Ethier, P. Moisan, Alph. Moisan, O. David, M. David, B. Charbonneau, Jos. Filiatrault, S. A. Larose, A. Fleury, J. E. Robitaille, H. Viau, L. H. Desjardins, de Terrebonne; J. W. Moreau, E. Dupuis, E. P. Oakes, K. J. Fortier, Rouleau, M. Labrecque, E. Desjardins, E. Champagne, Alph. Boucher, O. Lemire, J. D. Couture, J. E. Lafond, F. Letendre, J. B. Paquin, C. F. Duranceau, F. J. Pelletier, Z. Jolicœur, J. A. Lecompte, E. A. Leclair, A. Lamy, F. Brouin, L. A. Dûbrule, F. Archambault, J. L. Turgeon, Nap. Marcotte, W. Lafrance, P. Lamy, E. Lamy, A. Dufort, A. Arcand, T. Masse, J. B. Lanctot, J. O. Genereux, O. Bastien, J. O. Gareau, E. A. Ste-Marie, Z. Turgeon, J. A. Delisle, Adam Lamy, A. J. Vallieres, T. A. Daigneau, Capitaine Theo. Grothe, G. Delorimier, T. A. A. Belanger.

NOTES.

The big crowd brought the management a surplus of about $200. This fact ought to reduce the price of tickets next year.

The association is noted for its successful picnics. This year's affair bore out its reputation. Isn't this fact due to the commonsense of the secretary?

THE TRADE OUTLOOK.

THE Canadian dry goods trade is, generally speaking, in a healthy condition. Perhaps the most outstanding feature is the amount of imports, which are heavy, probably the heaviest on record at this season. A good sorting trade, however, is confidently expected, so that stocks should be materially reduced. The exhibition season is at hand, when a good many buyers visit the principal cities in person and house trade flourishes. The Autumn wholesale millinery openings will be held the last week in August and the trade consider the outlook for Fall millinery exceptionally good.

There is a widespread impression in Great Britain and the United States, which extends to this country, that prices cannot be maintained at present level, and that when they break we shall be face to face with another decline in trade. It should, however, be borne in mind that Canadian buyers never paid top prices. Whatever may be said of woollens, buyers contend that there will be no fall in cotton prices. Some aver that wholesale houses have kept their customers supplied at the old figures, being protected by long contracts with the mills.

In Canada, at the moment, the most discouraging feature is the wheat crop outlook in Manitoba. It is, undoubtedly, bad. Owing to the want of rain, when there is usually plenty, it is the general estimate that the yield will be 40 to 50 per cent. short of that of last year. It was at one time thought that the crop of fodder would also be seriously short, but the rains, while not early enough to materially benefit the wheat crop, insured an ample supply of feed for the live stock. Oats and barley also promise to yield well, but, of course, the yield in those cereals cannot fully compensate for the loss in the wheat crop.

But mixed farming has developed a great deal of late years in Manitoba, particularly in the dairying branch, and the loss from the wheat crop will not be by any means so serious as it would have been a few years ago. It is serious enough, at any rate, no matter how we look at it.

Cereal crops in the Northwest Territories are about as promising as those in Manitoba are unpromising, all reports from there indicating a large yield. The dairying and stock-raising industries there are also developing in a satisfactory manner.

In Ontario, the wheat crop is not a heavy one, but it is a good one nevertheless, and particularly as far as quality is concerned. Other grains are most promising, while the fruit crop, taking it all around, is a bountiful one. Roots are also yielding well. The dairying industry of the Province is in a most thriving condition.

The hay crop of the Province of Quebec will be equal to, if not in excess of, that of last year. The grain crops are looking well and fair root crops are predicted.

Down in the Maritime Provinces the hay crop is a beautiful one, and the fruit trees are yielding liberally. An excellent crop of apples is assured in Nova Scotia, that important apple-producing country.

Out in British Columbia, the agricultural industry, which includes stock-raising, fruit-growing, etc., is making steady development. But, of course, mining is the principal industry in that Province. As everyone knows, the metalliferous mining there has been quiet, owing largely to certain mining laws passed by the Provincial Legislature in regard to labor, but recovery is being made from this, and it is asserted that in the precious metals the present year will be a record one. In the coal mining industry the activity is most pronounced. On Vancouver Island the demand exceeds the supply, and from the information that comes to us from Nova Scotia, much the same condition of affairs prevails there.

The lumber industry from one end of the Dominion to the other is in a healthy condition, and the demand for home and foreign requirements is likely to take care of all the mills can turn out.

The railway returns and the reports of the clearing houses are pretty reliable barometers of the present conditions of trade.

These do not show a steady increase from week to week, yet, they are satisfactory.

The gross earnings of the Grand Trunk for the first six months of the year aggregated $10,842,746, compared with $10,076,802 for the same period in 1899. Those of the Canadian Pacific Railway were $14,107,038 and $12,688,362 respectively.

The bank clearings some weeks show increases and others again decreases, but they are larger than they were two years ago. The clearings for the first six months of the year were 25 per cent. less than during the same period in 1899, the figures being $763,822,002 and $784,277,759 respectively. The monthly bank returns are, as a rule, of a favorable character, and an increase of nearly 6½ millions in the note circulation of June over the same month of 1899 is certainly indicative of active trade.

There is certainly nothing alarming in the situation as far as Canada is concerned. In fact, there is a great deal that should impart confidence. But it is well that business men should be careful and not hoist too much sail.

ADVANTAGES OF RELYING ON SALESMEN.

IS it not funny the way some merchants are so confident "they know all about it" and are such "keen judges of values?"

The writer has seen men who, from their years of experience, should be well posted in every line in their business, and yet who look wise, handle a sample of goods and declare it "too dear," when in reality they are simply losing the opinion of the salesman, be he either drummer or the employe behind the counter. If a merchant really does not know values it will be of advantage to engage good, reliable salesmen, pay them well and let them buy for him.

Want of confidence in their salesmen does more to add to bad stock than probably any other cause in business. A case in point: A representative of a wholesale firm called on a merchant in a northern town. Instead of at once referring to the man who sold the line, he was told to call in the afternoon. Then the young man was sent to the sample-room to make selections, which were sent to the shop, and duly criticized by the man of all departments. The poorest choice was chosen, and, in turn, submitted to the head of the house, who, eventually, went to the sample-room, made other selections independently of the other two and then kicked because the bulk of the selection was on the shelves at stock-taking. And there are merchants who can read this and, if they are not cast iron, benefit by giving it attention.

The country merchant in Canada thinks he is economizing by engaging poorly-paid assistants. The result being that the trade of his town gets away to the next large town. Smart salesmen will keep the business. Well-paid salesmen will take an interest in their business, and will not be looking for a change of situation. Any visitor to the United States (the title "America" is intentionally left out as the U. S.-landers have no special privilege to be called Americans), will be surprised if he cares to ask in any of the shops, if there are any Canadians employed there. He will find them from all parts of our country, and mostly from the small towns, where they would not stay on the small salary. These Canadians in the United States generally hold the best positions. The moral education of our people is a strong recommendation for an applicant for a position in the United States. The man may not be a success for the first six months, but Canadian energy and ability to get to the top is appreciated everywhere except by the merchant of the small town in Canada.

Place more reliance in your salespeople, let them know something and then if they are not increasing the sales and profits and reducing old stock you have the wrong man. A man may be no good in one store and a great success in another, and, if the reason be looked for, it will be found that in the latter place he is allowed the use of his reasoning powers.

PRICES OF RUBBER CLOTHING.

It seems probable that rubber clothing will soon be subjected to an advance in price. We hear that wholesalers are now paying more than they were a short time ago, but, as yet, the retail quotations remain as they have been.

This advance is traceable directly to the increased price of the raw materials. Rubber that was worth 3s. per pound last year is now worth 8s. per pound. This phenomenal rise is due to preparation for the demand likely to be caused by the laying of the Pacific cable. All cloths have advanced in price also, some to the extent of 50 per cent., and others as low as 20 per cent. So it seems reasonable to suppose that, when the present stock of raw material is exhausted, an advance in price of the finished article must ensue.

DEPARTMENT STORE ACTIVITY.

The local merchant, who has a right to his own local trade, should redouble his exertions to retain it. The city department stores are very active. They get the names of persons all over the country and thus distribute catalogues far and wide. Lately we heard of an ingenious method by which one Canadian store got lists of new names of possible buyers. A prize was offered to each man or woman who would send in a list of 10 names of purchasers of store goods not to be found on any existing list. The method was successful. Will it be believed when we say that about 10,000 names of buyers not to be got on any known list, such as voters' lists, etc., were obtained in this way? Yet, such we are assured is the case. The moral is that the local merchant, who has the advantage of distance, of personal knowledge of his customers, of equal facilities for getting at buyers, and other factors in his favor, should leave no stone unturned to hold and extend his trade. The city department stores have many useful expedients for getting business. Let us adapt these to our local requirements and avoid their errors.

AN ESTATE FRITTERED AWAY.

AS an instance of the way in which an estate can be frittered away under the present Insolvency Law of Ontario, our attention is called to a recent case in that Province.

The firm were in business difficulties, but refused to assign, and resort was had by the creditors to legal proceedings to effect this end. The statement showed liabilities of over $11,000, with assets nominally about the same. The assets, after the privileged claims and the assignee's commission had been paid, realized $3,000. From this had to be taken the cost of the litigation which had gone on for some time and amounted to about $2,500. There were also the expenses of a man to check the stock, about $25.

The consequence was that the creditors, when everything was wound up, only realized about 4c. on the dollar. This is certainly an evidence of the unsatisfactory state of the law, and creditors can hardly be expected to be satisfied with such a return. But, as the Ontario law does not provide for the forcing of estates into insolvency, it is clear that some provision is needed to effect a prompt and cheap winding up of bankrupt estates.

RETURNING GOODS.

WE have seen some extraordinary evidences of gross carelessness lately in the returning of goods. We do not believe that any capable merchant who conducts his business well would approve of such methods.

Retailers sometimes suffer from customers who bring back goods in soiled condition. It is most annoying. Perhaps, because you do not want to offend a good customer you overlook the matter, and—reluctantly—exchange or give the money back. But it is not fair. No customer has a right to expect either an exchange or the money back, unless the goods are returned in exactly the condition in which they were purchased.

This rule is equally fair when applied to returns to wholesale houses. In the instances mentioned, the goods were returned in a disgraceful state. One lot we saw contained some spot muslins. They were crushed and soiled, and could never be resold at their face value. In another case, we saw boxed goods returned with the boxes broken and shattered, and their contents all mixed up so that it would be hard to fold and sort them into shape again. In still another instance, hosiery came back crumpled, with the bands untied. They seemed to have been done up loosely in a bale with some heavy goods. On one occasion some patriotic goods were returned, after a holiday, just as if they were retained long enough to test the holiday demand, and then dumped back. What made these matters worse, no explanation, polite request or apology accompanied the goods.

We find it impossible to believe that any intelligent merchant is himself responsible for such methods. He would not allow them to be practised on him, and, consequently, he would not do it to others. The probable explanation is that someone in the store has been commissioned to attend to the matter, either a careless storeman or an incompetent boy, and the merchant believes it is done according to his instructions. No well regulated clerk would be guilty of the mistake, and no merchant we know of would defend it.

As such methods always injure the merchant in the eyes of the commercial community—because stories are often spread about in the trade—it is worth his while to see that his assistants do the work well, and do not earn for him (unjustly) criticism of his management and methods which he does not deserve.

MARITIME BOARD OF TRADE.

THE sixth annual meeting of the Board of Trade of the Maritime Provinces is being held this month at Kentville, N.S. This organization is a useful and progressive one. It has done much practical work for the benefit of the Provinces which it represents, and it is, in several respects, a model for our merchants in other parts of Canada.

The meeting last year at St. John—a full report of which appeared in these columns—must have convinced many of our readers that the Maritime Board is an active body performing really valuable work for the commercial community. During the past year, it is creditable to the energy of President M. G. DeWolf and Secretary G. E. Calkin to be able to record that new local boards of trade have been formed at Summerside, Souris, Canning, Yarmouth, Bridgetown, Digby and other towns, and that the representation on the Maritime Board is increasing.

During the year a feature of the work has been the co-operation of the mayors of the various towns where new boards are formed. There can be no doubt of the business value of such bodies. When the business sentiment of the whole Dominion becomes thoroughly organized many evils of which we merchants now complain can the more easily be got rid of. Many movements and reforms can be pushed forward by means of such boards which otherwise would hang fire. The subjects discussed by the Maritime Board are eminently practical and important. The programme for the Kentville meeting includes the following :

1. Preferential Trade within the Empire.
2. Development of Canadian Trade with the West Indies.
3. Curriculum of our Schools in relation to our industrial and commercial advancement.
4. What can be done to attract a desirable class of Immigrants to the Maritime Provinces.
5. Daily Mail Service between Digby and St. John throughout the year.
6. Better Hotel and other accommodations for tourists.
7. Rates of freight on apples.
8. Development of iron and steel industries.
9. Atlantic Mail Service on the basis of speed.
10. Legislative Union Maritime Provinces.

It will be noticed that the matters to be discussed are of national, as well as local, concern. We hope to present in the next issue of THE DRY GOODS REVIEW a complete report of the proceedings. The meeting, we trust, will be successful.

Hat, Cap and

Fur Trade.

The Canadian Trade.

Importers' samples of English hats for Spring trade have not been shown in this market yet, although they will be shortly.

No radical changes are expected, and this is borne out by the advices from London. In the United States an attempt is being made to vary styles by introducing the taper crown, but Canadian opinion is apt to be contrary to it, as it is not so becoming to the ordinary person.

Effects of the Chinese Troubles.

The great bulk of the Chinese goods required for the fur trade are shipped from China during the months of June, July and August, but during this season no shipments have been made, and it is now too late to ship such goods this year, not merely on account of the time having nearly expired, but owing to the more important fact, that the goods have not been prepared or collected in China, and, under existing conditions, cannot be made ready—in brief—do not exist; and it may, therefore, be stated that this year's business in Chinese goods suitable for the fur trade has been absolutely lost. These facts, says The New York Fur Trade Review, apply to goat rugs, dog robes, goat skins and sheep rugs, of which no supplies need be expected to come forward from China this year, and as stocks of these goods are very limited in our market, and manufacturers have only small supplies, it is evident that very great study will be required in working up and disposing of the robe stock to the advantage of all concerned; and it is, furthermore, plain that some substitute will have to be provided for the coming year, and unless very great care is exercised in the matter of prices on the few suitable articles, owing to very limited quantity, they will doubtless unreasonably advance in value. The facts set forth also apply to Chinese goods of every description, including kid crosses and skins, sheep crosses, Mongolian crosses and skins, Thibet coats, crosses and skins, various sables and "Chinese goods" of every description entering into consumption in the United States through the channels of the fur trade. Cheap fur goods, it will be observed, will be materially affected; but, if the condition results in the larger use of better furs, articles really of fur, the loss will not be so serious as we now apprehend.

The Fur Market.

This is the period of midsummer dulness and nothing is arising from present transactions to give any indications of the trend of the market, beyond the fact that Chinese imports, which are usually in London by this time, will probably be seriously affected by the war. The Nijni Fair is now in progress, as it generally gets down to business about August 1. Conversing with Mr. James D. Allan, Toronto, concerning the outlook, THE REVIEW learned that this fur buyer's advices, from conservative sources, were to the effect that trouble in China has been looked for during the past two years. From the interior of China a fair proportion of new furs have in previous years found their way to the Russian fair which is the great market for persians and astrakans. As to persians, their universal use at present naturally tends to firm prices, while, owing to the fact that only about 60 per cent. of the usual offerings are coming forward this season, the price is likely to be much affected. If, Mr. Allan stated, prices are forced much higher, it will be unfortunate, as they have about reached the highest point where the Canadian consumer will buy. As to astrakans, the Nijni Fair has not usually the same effect, as they are dealt in by certain dressers in Moscow, who usually take them there in the undyed state. The prices, however, for them will be no weaker, it is safe to assume. The probability also points to an advance of 50 per cent. in goat robes, which are a staple article in this market, and, as the imports of these robes was only one quarter of that of previous years, late purchases must be at revised figures.

Advices from Australia, where the Winter season is now on, go to indicate that supplies will be less and that prices will rule higher. This affects such furs as wombat, wallaby, and opossum.

Another curious result of the China troubles is the effect on the ginseng root trade, usually carried on by raw skin collectors. It is gathered in certain districts of Ontario, and in ordinary times brings $5 per lb., being imported by the Chinese, as some think, for sacrificial purposes. The price has now dropped to $1.50, and, as the root deteriorates if kept, it is hard to hold a supply for a rise.

The English Hat Trade.

Says a London correspondent, writing July 28: "The Summer has been fairly good for the cap manufacturers in the Manchester district; but with regard to the silk and felt branches at Ashton, Stockport, Hyde, and Denton, these are not characterized by any great amount of activity, except in the case of a few specialties, so far as the home distributing houses are concerned. Retailers of these classes of goods have made great complaints in the last couple of months of the difficulty of sales, the condition of the weather being one chief cause of the depression. As to straws, while 'ladies' sailors' have been a popular line, the sales of men's have been dull and disappointing, and show a considerable decline from last year.

"As many statements adverse to the hat trade have been made, in consequence of the China trouble, it may be well to point out that the exports from Manchester (chiefly Stockport and Denton) have closely approached in value £700,000 a year, the Far Eastern business being a mere trifle, while a very considerable trade has been done with South Africa and the Australian Commonwealth. The chief effect of the China trouble will be in the make of Luton straws. Canton plait, which is imported largely, went up £2 a bale on the outbreak of the disturbance. Most of the straws required for the current year have been made, however, and the comparatively slow trade has left makers in possession of considerable raw material.

"The present trouble in the Far East is likely to have a disastrous effect on the straw-hat industry of Luton, which imports large quantities of straw braid by way of Tientsin, the seat of the Chinese trade. No shipments have been made at that port for the last month. Canton plait, of which six tenths of the Luton straw hats are made, has increased £2 per bale on the London market."

English Fall Shapes.

There is very little change in shapes for Fall, says the London correspondent of The American Hatter. The felts are slightly smaller, but the public seem to cling to the larger shapes more than was expected. The silk hats run from $\frac{1}{4}$ to $\frac{3}{8}$ bell, with a depth of $6\frac{1}{8}$ to $6\frac{1}{4}$, and the brims are both roll and Anglesea.

"One of the most noticeable features of the trade is the increase in the Continental trade for fine silk hats, and in Paris, particularly, the change to London styles. Parisians used to have a style of their own in silks, and at such gatherings as race meetings, etc., straw hats would be considered correct, but it was quite a noticeable feature at the 'Grand Prix' this year that fully nine out of every ten men wore silk hats, and most of them were London make and style. The English manufacturers tell me that their French customers are buying more silk hats than ever, and, while Paris sets the world's fashion for ladies' wear, London certainly leads it for men's."

Messrs. Tress & Co. are now showing their Fall samples. The new silks are slightly straighter, running about $6\frac{1}{8}$ with $\frac{1}{4}$ bell, and bold brim, with $\frac{1}{2}$ -inch full Anglesea curl. The felts are slightly smaller, with full crowns. In ladies' goods, Messrs. Tress & Co. are showing a splendid assortment of walking hats. They run rather large, open-brim styles, with trimmings of ribbons, quills and wings, and among them are some decided novelties which, for various reasons, I must not specify. They are also showing the real "Baden Powell" hat, with a novelty in bands. The actual hat worn by Baden Powell was, I believe, made by Tress & Co., and there is a peculiarity about it which I have not seen on any imitations made by other firms. This hat is made in ladies' sizes.

"At Christy & Co.'s I saw Mr. Shattuck, who has just returned from his trip to Australia. He journeyed back via the Pacific and through the United States, where he met Emerson Wood. Both gentlemen have been very successful in placing the Christy hat with all the good houses. Emerson Wood and the Christy hat are both so well known in the United States, that it is unnecessary to speak of the merits of either."

TRIBUTE TO MR. ROBERT N. SMYTH.

A MARKED compliment was paid to Mr. Robert N. Smyth by the wholesale trade of Canada, in Montreal, August 1, as a testimony to his efforts and those of The Shareholder to put a stop to the irregularities that have been resorted to in the matter of undervaluation in Customs invoices. A luncheon was given to Mr. Smyth at the Place Viger Hotel, Montreal, and was attended by the following eminent members of the trade: Mr. James Rodger, President of the Wholesale Dry Goods Association (in the chair); Messrs. A. F. Gault, E. B. Greenshields, James Slessor, R. W. Macdougall, Geo. B. Fraser, W. C. Towers, Thos. Brophy, Jas. Gardner, S. C.

Matthews, F. E. Hodgson, A. W. D. Howell, A. D. Kyle, Wm. Agnew, Jas. R. Whyte, Geo. D. Harper.

The chairman, in a capital speech, expressed the views of the trade throughout Canada on Mr. Smyth's courageous and energetic conduct in seeking to break down illegitimate methods of conducting business, and concluded by reading the following address, signed, as will be seen, by leading firms of the Dominion:

TO ROBERT N. SMYTH, ESQ.:

Dear Sir,—We, the undersigned importers of Canada, desire to express our hearty appreciation of the valuable services you have rendered to the country by the fearless and outspoken manner in which you have discussed questions affecting the wholesale dry goods trade in the columns of The Shareholder.

We admire the public spirit you have shown in dealing with undervaluations at the Customs house. The stand you have taken has been for right against wrong. It has required no small amount of courage on your part, and has involved you in considerable expense.

We are pleased to know that in a suit lately taken against you in the courts, you have been fully vindicated in the course you have pursued. This result has only been obtained by perseverance and untiring energy on your part, and we feel sure that it will be of permanent benefit to the trade, as well as to the revenue of the country.

We feel that your action in these matters is well deserving of recognition, and beg your acceptance for yourself and Mrs. Smyth of the accompanying tokens of our respect and regard.

With best wishes for your happiness and success,

We are, Dear Sir,

Very truly yours,

Accompanying the address, which was illuminated and in itself a handsome compliment, were a gold watch and chain, scarf pin and diamond ring for Mr. Smyth, and a gold chain and diamond and emerald ring for Mrs. Smyth. Congratulatory remarks were also made by Messrs. E. B. Greenshields, A. F. Gault, James Gardner, Wm. Agnew, James Whyte, James Slessor and R. W. Macdougall.

In reply to address and presentation, Mr. Smyth stated that he could not find words to suitably reply to the great honor done him, by such a highly complimentary address accompanied by such handsome presents. He asked each one present to imagine himself for the time in his position and then he thought they could better realize how sincerely he appreciated such an address coming from so many of the largest and best-known wholesale houses in Canada. Mr. Smyth added that The Shareholder had always been, and would always be, run on the same lines; it had exposed many frauds, and would continue to do so wherever fraud was discovered. A paper like The Shareholder could not expect to have everyone a friend. It must hurt the feelings of some, and when people are denounced for practising fraud they are very sensitive and immediately threaten to take out action. The Shareholder was, however, always careful in securing reliable information before publishing exposures of fraud and thus fortified in its position would not hesitate to express its opinion.

PRICES OF CANADIAN OILCLOTHS.

BY an inadvertance, the list of prices of Canadian oilcloths given in our last issue did not embody the latest quotations in these goods. Thanks are due to a number of readers of THE REVIEW in different parts of Canada who pointed out the omission. Correction is duly made in this issue under our usual market quotations. The oilcloth market has been strong for some months, and the increase in the prices of Canadian goods has been fully warranted by conditions elsewhere. It is said that a large Canadian importer, when prices of domestic goods went up, tried the experiment of bringing in some United States makes. But, values considered, they could not be laid down here for the money, and further importations were not made. It is well known that Canadian oilcloths, more especially table oils, cannot be surpassed by any makers in the world.

THE ENGLISH CARPET TRADE.

English advices to July 28 say: "The carpet trade grows more quiet, though as yet few looms are idle. A good many are making trials of patterns, but, on the whole, deliveries of carpet, and the orders and inquiries that come to hand are fully up to the average for July. The yarn trade, too, is quieter, and, with less yarn going into consumption, spinners find particulars harder to get. Some few inquiries are made for new business, and, owing to the irregular state of the wool trade, yarn prices are very variable. Inquiries show them to be not so low as they have been said to be, for the increased cost of production, apart from the raw material, has had its effect."

TRADE CONDITIONS IN THE UNITED STATES.

The New York Carpet Trade Review, August 1, says: "The lull in business just now is entirely seasonable, and the trade situation as regards 3/4 goods is thoroughly sound and satisfactory, all our advices on this point being in full accord with the views expressed elsewhere in this issue by representatives of three leading manufacturing concerns. It is true that some buyers are still postponing purchases, but we have good authority for the opinion that comparatively few carpet retailers are carrying over large stocks, and those whose stocks need replenishing must soon place their orders, if they expect to get the goods in time for the Fall trade. At the present prices of raw materials, there is no inducement for manufacturers to run their looms ahead of orders, for the advances in prices of carpeting have been very small in comparison with those which have been made in most other manufactured goods, as, for instance, cottons. It is, therefore, illogical to argue that, because cottons and some other goods are not quite so high now, carpeting must drop also.

"The Fall trade in Oriental rugs is now well opened, and the activity in this line of trade is another encouraging sign, for such goods are not in demand when business conditions are not very satisfactory.

"It has been hoped that the trouble in China would not extend to the southern part of that country, from which straw matting comes, but the latest advices are not reassuring, and importers now regard the outlook as decidedly doubtful. A scarcity of China matting would result, of course, in higher prices for the Japanese product as well."

FOREIGN OPINION OF CANADIAN PAPERS.

PARIS, June 20, 1900.

GENTLEMEN,—In my last letter I told you I would write to you again about what I might find interesting in the wall paper exhibits of the Paris Exposition. The other day I was visiting the English Colonies, when I was agreeably surprised to see a beautiful display made by The Watson, Foster Co. in the section of Canada. They have a very large and splendid showcase where one can see a selection of the best samples of their line. I was not the only one to be attracted by their showing, for a whole crowd were standing around, admiring the richness of the colorings and the grace of the drawings. One of the company's best and most attractive samples is a large parlor paper in half-tapestry shades and with a heavy gold background. I have hardly ever seen anything of a more striking and artistic effect. I will not try to depict to you all the good things I have seen in their exhibit. A design is something that must be looked at; a description of it is hardly interesting. Still, I will tell you that their assortment is complete. Florals, heraldics, halls, scrolls, etc., are in great variety. Besides their central display, they have a number of panels, spread a little all over the rooms of the Canadian section.

Yours, most sincerely,

P. DARTIGUENAVE,

31 Avenue de la Republique, Nanterre, near Paris, France.

QUICK SELLING GOODS.

To furnish the trade with staple goods that are quick selling and, at the same time, affording the retailer large profits, is the aim of Geo. H. Hees, Son & Co. That they have succeeded in their efforts goes without saying; for their business shows a steady increase, and customers that once start doing business with them, stay with them right along. It was only a couple of years ago that they added to their old-established business of manufacturing window shades, curtain poles, etc., that of upholstery goods, furniture coverings, upholsterers' supplies and lace curtains, and, as they either manufacture or import these lines, they always have something new, attractive and of good value to offer the trade. They are now in the market with new lines for Fall and Spring deliveries, and, as they carry in stock immense quantities of these goods, it should interest the trade in being connected with this progressive house. Their looms at their Valleyfield plant are now turning out some new and very desirable goods. Their recent importations of over 80,000 pairs of lace curtains contained many specially good things which the foreign manufacturers confine in Canada exclusively to them. If you are not already dealing with Geo. H. Hees, Son & Co., we advise you to give them a trial.

THE OUTLOOK FOR SPRING TRADE.

The Toronto Carpet Manufacturing Co. are now preparing their lines for next season's showing. They purpose making the coming season a record-breaker. It will be the first season of the new century, and merchants are invited to wait the arrival of their representatives before ordering, as they will have a choice which will mean good business. And there will be a good business for the Spring.

Never has the country been in better shape to buy goods, and never has there been a better feeling for buying by the people — the consumer. And this feeling is not local, or only Canadian. The carpet mills to the south of us are all looking for a big season, and many mills are adding to their plant.

But will prices come down? There does not appear any reason why they should. Raw cotton is scarce and the price has gone so high that 25 mills in Lancashire have closed down. An impression may be had that, owing to the Chinese War, a lot of cotton will not be required for that market, but then, new mills are starting, and, in the United States alone, several hundred thousand new spindles will run this Fall that never ran before. Further, the crop in several districts of the United States has failed, owing to inundations and continuous rains. In addition to all the foregoing, several cotton fields have been turned into grain, the price of cotton being too low to pay for growing.

There is no reason therefore to look for a fall in prices wherever cotton is a part of the article. Dye stuffs, too, continue to hold a stiff price. Owing to the great demands on the coal beds of the United States by foreign powers, it is not likely any reduction will be had in that commodity, and though water-power may drive looms it will not make steam, so necessary for dyeing. At present prices of carpet wools, spinners are not too ready to accept orders at old prices.

It can hardly be looked upon as a grievance that prices should advance. Higher prices mean higher profits and less rubbish in the market. Possibly some makers may find it necessary, for the sake of making something, to produce cheap grade carpets, such as a six pair cotton chain, with only a three-quarter warp and two shots of jute in the filling, and about 20 per cent. of grease. There are merchants who may buy this class because the man across the street keeps it. Advanced prices of raw material will help to do away with all lines which bring carpet manufacturing into disrepute.

CARPET NOTES.

The plain ingrain terries continue in favor for nice carpet trade. The idea is growing in small towns, and, as the Toronto people keep several colors always in stock, from which they cut any length, dealers who would not like to stock them can get just what they require.

The beautiful new hotel, The Brant, recently opened at Burlington, Ont., has been carpeted throughout with Toronto axminsters, Smyrnas and ingrains supplied by T. C. Watkins, of Hamilton. It is really an eye opener to those who doubt as to whether carpets can be made successfully in Canada.

A visit to the leading carpet departments of Buffalo on Toronto's civic holiday (August 6) was interesting, though, at this time of the year, stocks are low and business quiet. Large rugs in Smyrna qualities are commanding big sales; also heavy, all-wool art squares. The favorite-weight ingrain carpet is barely 18 ounces to the yard. Canadians prefer the "Maple Leaf" quality, which weighs 21 ounces to the yard. All the Buffalo merchants sell the Smyrna rugs in large quantities. They find no rug that surpasses it for length of wear. Other makes of rugs are used by a small proportion, but the large trade in rugs is done in Smyrnas.

The carpet department of John Macdonald & Co.'s warehouse, in Toronto, has been finely refloored in hardwood. With its spaciousness and excellent light, it is an ideal place for dealers to call and see the new carpet effects.

Several carpet manufacturers expect to attend the convention of manufacturers to be held in Toronto on August 29 and 30.

ABOUT OUR PARIS EXHIBIT OF WALL PAPERS

The following letter from Mr. P. Dartiguenave, an eminent designer of New York, acting in Paris as correspondent for "Carpets, Wall Papers and Curtains," published by that paper, June 30th, will be of interest to Canadian Wall Paper Dealers :

PARIS, June 20, 1900.

GENTLEMEN:—In my last letter I told you I would write to you again about what I might find interesting in the wall paper exhibits of the Paris Exposition. The other day I was visiting the English Colonies, when I was agreeably surprised to see a beautiful display made by the Watson, Foster Co. in the section of Canada. They have a very large and splendid show case where one can see a selection of the best samples of their line. I was not the only one to be attracted by their showing, for a whole crowd were standing around, admiring the richness of the colorings and the grace of the drawings. One of the company's best and most attractive samples is a large parlor paper in half-tapestry shades and with a heavy gold background. I have hardly ever seen anything of a more striking and artistic effect. I will not try to depict to you all the good things I have seen in their exhibit. A design is something that must be looked at, a description of it is hardly interesting. Still, I will tell you that their assortment is complete. Florals, heraldics, halls, scrolls, etc., are in great variety. Besides their central display, they have a number of panels, spread a little all over the rooms of the Canadian section.

Yours, most sincerely,

P. DARTIGUENAVE.

poles and many other lines sold by dealers in this class of goods. Geo. H. Hees, Son & Co. made no mistake when they established a warehouse in the heart of Montreal for supplying the trade with their product, and, finding their present quarters too small for their growing trade, are contemplating moving into more roomy quarters. Dealers in the above lines in the vicinity of Montreal should not fail to see Geo. H. Hees, Son & Co.'s sample-rooms at the above address.

902, 904. These are the two numbers which The Watson, Foster Co. ask discriminating dealers to consider. They will be found in new 1901 catalogue, and there are others, new designs treated in artistic and progressive style.

LATE MR. THOMAS SAMUEL.

News was received in Montreal of the death of Mr. Thomas Samuel, one of Montreal's oldest and most respected citizens, which occurred at St. John's, Newfoundland, August 10. The deceased gentleman left the city some three weeks ago, accompanied by Mrs. Samuel, on a business trip to the Maritime Provinces. Though he had been in poor health for some time, the sad news of his death was entirely unexpected. Mr. Samuel was born in Leith, Scotland, in 1825, and educated at Heriot's School, Edinburgh. He came to Montreal by one of the earliest steamers, the Bellona, in 1840, and has been actively engaged in business in Montreal, with the exception of a brief period he spent in Hamilton, for about 60 years. He successfully represented Barbour Brothers, of Belfast, for many years, and recently, on the arrangement of the different thread firms, he was appointed agent for the entire thread business in Canada. For over a quarter of a century Mr. Samuel resided in Westmount, and took an active part in all the town's interests. He leaves a widow, one son and six daughters.

CANADIAN AGENT WANTED.

As will be seen in our advertising columns, a firm of British linen manufacturers are seeking an agent to represent them in Canada. It is understood that they want someone with a good connection with wholesale houses, and one who is well recommended. The concern is an extensive one, having won world-wide repute with their goods.

William Clark, of Newark, N.J., president of the William Clark Thread Co., died suddenly at his home in Rhode Island, August 6. He was a Paisley man, and well-known on both sides of the Atlantic.

A. E. Adams & Co., the sole patentees of the famous "Lockstitch" hose, have decided to protect their rights by the adoption of a trade mark. They hope by this means to guard against imitations. Messrs. Williams & Bell, of Montreal, are their Canadian agents.

On account of the great rush for "Beaver" brand of macintoshes, the Beaver Rubber Clothing Co. would kindly ask their patrons to give their Fall orders as early as convenient, as it might be impossible to deliver orders that come in late in the season. They have contracts now for between 800 and 900 per week.

Brophy, Cains & Co., Montreal, say that one of the best selling lines they have had for this Fall has been fur ruffs in mink, sable, bear, astrachan, etc., running from $4.25 a dozen up to $48.00. Anybody who has not seen these should write for samples, as they comprise one of the most profitable lines shown this season.

AMONG OUR RETAIL READERS.

THE T. A. Garland & Co., of Portage La Prairie, Manitoba, have one of the finest stores west of Toronto. It is a fine, solid brick three-storey building 150 x 50. One may enter the building either from Ann street or the main entrances on Saskatchewan avenue, through four large double swinging doors of solid oak. The ground floor is devoted to dry goods, men's furnishings, boots and shoes and clothing. At the rear end are two large mirrors, which show the store to the best advantage. Back of these is to be found the general office and Mr. Garland's private office. The second flat is reached by two stairways, at each side of the building. Here are to be found wall paper, carpets, housefurnishings and millinery. The millinery room is 25 x 50, and very prettily arranged. The posts are cased in with mirrors and on each wall is another large mirror, so that no matter where one looks one is looking in a mirror. This adds greatly to the effect produced by the room.

The tailoring department occupies the third floor, 80 x 50. The grocery department is down in the basement, a space of 50 x 50 being set aside for it. In tone and neatness it is not behind the other departments. In the rear of the grocery is a fine large storeroom, 50 x 100.

The posts and pillars of the building are finished in aluminum, while the metallic ceiling is painted to match. The warehouse is heated throughout by steam, a special solid brick house being built for the boilers, which adds greatly to the protection from fire.

F. C. Manning, formerly of Harrow, Ont., is now doing a fine trade in general dry goods and millinery in the bright town of Leamington.

Frank Layman, formerly of Layman & Wigle, general merchants, Merlin, Ont., is now representing The Kay Corset Co., London, on western ground.

Morse & Jack, general merchants, Blenheim, Ont., are having a very successful season in all lines. They carry a large stock of fine goods and know well how to turn them over to good account.

E. G. Thompson, general merchant, Blenheim, Ont., is well stocked with goods bought with care, well kept, and selling at a margin of profit which will enable him to retire from business while young.

G. S. Morse, one of the leading dry goods merchants of Leamington, is, this season, enjoying a splendid trade in fine dress goods and millinery, of which lines he carries one of the finest stocks on the southern frontier.

J. K. Dryden, of Rat Portage, has erected a very handsome three-storey stone building on Main street, 25 x 50 feet. The floors are all set in tiles. The Bank of Ottawa is to have the ground floor, and the balance is to be divided into offices.

One of the thriving stores of Rat Portage is that of Gardner, Rice & MacLeod Co., Limited. They have four stores all in one, making a total frontage of 95 ft. and 75 ft. deep. An archway connects the different departments. They are putting in a millinery and dressmaking department, which they expect will be in working order by September. At the present time they employ 14 clerks.

C. W. Hendershot, dry goods merchant, Kingsville, Ont., is turning over goods rapidly. He has a large stock of fine goods to select from and is an artist in the way of advertising his goods and believes it pays to advertise well.

J. M. Thompson, of Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., has been making some very good improvements in his place of business. He has taken the store next to him, and cut an archway between the two. This gives him a frontage of 75 feet, and 45 feet deep, and three windows for showing goods. This alteration gives over three times the amount of light the building previously had. Mr. Thompson calls his store the Arcade, which can be seen in fine large letters on his sign.

F. W. Batchelor, formerly of Batchelor & Co., Leamington, has opened out a fine new stock of dry goods, millinery and ladies' furnishings. In his fine new premises in the McSween Block he has one of the brightest and best stores in the town of Leamington.

I. B. Adams, general merchant, Harrow, Ont., was found with such a crowd of farmers and their wives buying goods that were it not for his quick eye to notice everyone and serve them, whether it be to take in or pay out money, that he will give each their turn, we should have had to stay for hours to get our business done. In answer as to how is business, he took time to say all right.

Stewart Anderson, general merchant, Wheatley, Ont., has, by push, energy and care, built up a fine business in the bright little village, surrounded as it is by a fine farming section. He enjoys a coveted location and knows a good thing too.

The business carried on by the late R. T. Morton, general merchant, at Ayr, Ont., is still being carried on by his sons under the name of The Estate of R. T. Morton.

Never in the history of Prince Edward Island have tourists gone there in such numbers. The Summer hotels are well patronized, and many strangers have located at quiet farm houses along the seashore.

Sir William Bailey, head of the Albion Works at Salford, says an English paper, has been telling a good story which will be of interest to gentlemen anxious to introduce mummies among their family curiosities. A certain merchant in the North of England saw a mummy in Egypt and brought away a portion of the cloth. This was handed to a buyer of a large Manchester warehouse, who was asked if he could tell where it was woven. After examining it carefully with his glass, he said he thought he could put his finger on the mill where it was produced if he could borrow the piece for a few days. Afterwards he reported that it was made where he had thought, near Oldham, and was called by the manufacturer his "No. 85." It is well known that in Egypt there are several manufacturing of up-to-date mummies which are sold to visitors at very remunerative prices. There are, as a matter of fact, more Pharaohs scattered over the world now than ever existed on the banks of the Nile.

THE FALL STYLES.

AS THE DRY GOODS REVIEW goes to press, advices received concerning the latest New York fashions for Fall and Winter, state that :

As to overcoatings, cheviots will be probably worn more than any other material by men, especially for "Chesterfields" and "Raglans." They will be generally in greys, and in plain and featherbone effects. Next in favor will come meltons, which promise to be much in vogue.

For suitings, cheviots will be popular for business wear, and will be employed specially in sack suits. The cutaway frock suits in fancy worsteds are likely to increase in popularity. Stripes are, perhaps, the most prominent thing that can be classified.

In trousers, stripes will predominate in greys, or greyish effects, but plaids (either distinct or mingled with checks or stripes, or both), are in trouserings for half-dress. As a material, worsteds will lead in this market, although cheviots are the favorite in New York.

Fancy vestings promise to be more in favor than ever.

ENGLISH CLOTHIERS AND OVERCOATS.

A Leeds, Eng., correspondent says: "The cloths being made up for the Winter season are all of medium weight. Very rarely is there to be seen a frieze, or anything approaching that kind of cloth. Of course, a certain number of garments are made in the heaviest stuffs, but the proportion to the other classes is so small as to be out of the run altogether. Again, we must turn to the weather for the cause.

"The past few Winters have been of exceptional mildness, with perhaps a few days of Wintery weather here and there, but not of sufficient duration to bring in buyers for heavy overcoats. The result is that the wholesalers, who at first were left with big stocks of most unsalable goods, grew wary, and only make up small quantities. One of the consequences of this is that more overcoats are sold.

"This appears paradoxical, but the way it is brought about is very plain after a few moments' thought. When a man bought a heavy overcoat he could only use it when the weather was exceptionally severe. A rainy day, unless very windy and boisterous, would see him in a macintosh, and only the bad, slushy, cold days brought out his overcoat. This naturally kept the coat in fairly good condition, not one Winter, but several Winters, and, the price also being high, he had to consider his pocket.

"Nowadays a man can, for a moderate sum, get a smart top-coat, which he will wear constantly day by day through the whole Winter almost, and it is, by the time Spring comes around, rather shabby looking; and as he has had a good deal of wear out of it, he thinks he has had his money's worth, and goes in for another coat the next Winter. So it is that the demand for overcoats is greater than ever, and this has caused the manufacturer to go in for smartly cut and trimmed garments in the place of the old style fit-where they-touch overcoats."

A TIP FOR TAILORS.

Some men have their Summer trousers made with brace buttons as well as belt-loops. The buttons are sewn on inside the tops of the trousers. This is no superfluous "tip," for I have known the best tailors to sew the buttons on the outside, and thus give the trousers and their wearer a negligent, undress appearance.

WILL KHAKI CLOTH PREVAIL?

A Londoner who thinks it won't writes in Fashion: "The worst symptoms of the khaki fever which has infected the British public during the war and seems to have picked off distinguished victims within the portals of the Public Departments, are evidently abating. Even the helpless idiot who took to wearing a khaki tie, with the Union Jack mixed up inartistically in its dusty yellow folds and creases, is ceasing to remain a common object of the Strand and the Embankment. Nevertheless, the War Office seems, one fears, to have got the idea of the paramountcy of the color so firmly fixed in its mind, that the danger to the troops who form that very mixed body the British army is very great. Ordinarily the W. O. head is a difficult thing to endow with a fresh idea; but its very woodenness and impenetrability to commonsense views make it difficult, once the nail of a notion has been driven home into its massiveness by the sledge-hammer of public opinion, to extract it by any means short of a surgical operation. The War Office understrappers have now been definitely khaki ed; and, whereas formerly they could only "see red," they now only see brown. Which accounts for the number of khaki tunics worn in combination with ordinary blue, scarlet-piped trousers, on the rolling grass-veltd of Trafalgar Square and the rocky kopjes of Tower Hill.

"Now, khaki has proved itself an ideal costume for the dusty plains of India and the sandy deserts of the Soudan. Endued with a faint greenish tinge it has been found to secure at a little distance a fair measure of invisibility on veldt and kopje in South Africa. The world, led by the ha'penny press and headed by Government employes, inspired by the secret commissions of the army contractors, has, therefore, jumped to the conclusion that it must necessarily be in future the 'only wear' for the devoted British soldier. Nothing could be more erroneous. Khaki in Europe is a thousand times more noticeable than scarlet in the Soudan, or rifle green in the Transvaal, or blue in India, or white on Cove Common. The soldier does not like it. He abhors himself in it when he is on home service, and in the field he jumps at every opportunity of discarding it in favor of a soiled and faded scarlet jumper, a pair of ancient blue overalls, or even one of the much-abused field caps."

CANADIAN BUYING FOR SPRING.

Canadian woollen buyers who have been abroad for Spring are beginning to return to this country. They are reticent as to the outlook in prices, and contend that, whatever the future may hold, Canadian trade not having paid top prices cannot expect any fall in prices for this season.

In conversation with Mr. R. Begg, who buys for John Macdonald & Co., he replied, on being questioned regarding Spring styles, that there is a prospect of green mixtures being popular, and materials are being shown in different shades of green with other colors. There is also a feeling for fine stripe worsted suitings in drab and slate mixtures, and also for vicuna makes in blue and black serges. Broken checks promise to be popular both for suits and trousers. There is also a growing demand for fancy vestings. The popularity of Scotch tweed suitings is growing and the principal makers are showing some handsome new styles, principally mixtures and small checks and a few large broken checks.

WHAT A WOOLLEN HOUSE IS DOING.

A look into a men's woollens department just now is instructive. That of Nisbet & Auld is complete in all lines, and they report sales to be 50 per cent. over last year, which was the banner year in their business. In overcoatings, their vicunas and soft-finished goods deserve special attention. Fancy-back overcoatings are shown this year much more than heretofore, and Nisbet & Auld state that their sale has increased proportionately. Beavers, meltons, montignacs and curls, of course, will be extensive sellers, as they have been in the past. For evening dress, unfinished worsteds and fine clay twills will be, as usual, correct, though there will be, perhaps, more old-fashioned broadcloths and venetians worn. In suitings, cheviots, domestic and imported, are selling better than for some time, but Canadians seem to prefer substantial, medium-grade, fancy worsteds, a line of which Nisbet & Auld have a large stock. A few years ago stripes were the only style in trouserings; now the styles are as varied as in suitings. A large number of suitings are made in striped patterns, that formerly would have been used for trouserings only, and vice versa. Checks and fancy weaves are being used extensively for trouserings, greys, in all shades, being the groundwork of all patterns, with more dash of color than before. Nisbet & Auld show a handsome line of vestings of Tattersal styles that are meeting with great success. They are all bright grounds with small and medium overchecks in the rich velours finish so popular with fashionable dressers in England. In all men's woollens, domestic and imported are shown in large quantities.

TORONTO WHOLESALE TRADE.

THE W. R. BROCK CO., LIMITED.

THE W. R. BROCK CO., LIMITED, Toronto, have closed out the mill stock of a mercerized silkatine, in black, navy, tan, brown, sage green, moss green, Nile green, helio, pale blue, pink, canary and cream, which can be retailed at 10c. a yard with a good profit. They ordinarily retail at 18c. This cloth is specially adapted for ladies' blouses, children's dresses, linings and fancy work.

A reversible salisbury in black and red and black and white spots, stripes and checks, to retail at 10c., is another line. This cloth had a very successful run last season. A great difficulty was to get it in sufficient quantities to satisfy their various customers. It has met with a ready sale already this season, and can't be repeated. A word to the wise is sufficient.

Mention is made of an A1 58-in. cream damask table linen, six different designs, nice mellow cloth, good heavy weight, to retail at 25c., and a leader at that.

B 18 is an 18 inch huck towelling, a last shipment of a purchase made 18 months ago when the market was at its lowest ebb, a nice, slightly cloth, to retail at 10c.; would be good value at 12 1/2c.

In French canvas, this firm were fortunate in putting on a heavy order just after the first small advance, and are in a position to offer some exceptional values in four or five numbers, all good heavy round threads, fairly stiff finish, just what is wanted by the tailoring and dressmaking trades.

P 127 is a 20 x 40 fringed huck towel, good heavy weight and nice fine finish. These are exceptional values to retail at 25c., and will capture trade for any live merchant.

In their carpet department this firm are showing a full range of tapestry carpets, beginning at the lowest grade. The patterns are repeats of the best selling Spring designs. A full line of brussels is also in stock. The stock of cretonnes, art muslins and lace curtains has been added to lately and is very complete in extent and variety.

In woollens, they have two stock lines of pure worsted trouserings being offered at actual manufacturer's price. They have also picked up a few lines of black and blue twill worsteds, stock lines, much below regular prices.

A big range of grey cheviots is being shown for overcoatings, both in plain and herringbone effects, all qualities. These are to be the fashion this Winter.

The W. R. Brock Co. have their Fall lines in hosiery, underwear and gloves in very good shape for early buyers, and, from the orders taken so far in the season, they expect an enormous trade in these goods. In cashmere hosiery, they are offering very special values in "Trime," "Mackie," "Needme," "898," etc. These goods were bought to sell on sight, and the values are A1. In wool goods, such as infantees, bootees, hoods, shawls, etc., they are showing many pretty novelties.

They also report large sales of lawns. In Victoria lawns, especially, their values are unsurpassed, as their purchases were very heavy, and they are now selling lawns bought over a year ago at the old prices.

In men's furnishings, the orders for mitts, gloves, heavy socks and cardigans, etc., are highly satisfactory; also, in waterproofs, on account of the extensive range they carry, they report good business. The sale of fleeced underwear, boys' and men's, still continues. A steady stream of orders testifies to the excellent value of these goods.

JOHN MACDONALD & CO.

In their carpet department, John Macdonald & Co. are busy making Fall shipments and are handling the third shipment of linoleums for season, and also a carload of floor oils and table oils, the second shipment of these goods. They are paying particular attention to the 4 yard wide linoleum trade, carrying 4-yard wide goods in six qualities; also showing a nice range of six patterns of Nairn's inlaid linoleums. Their carpet range for Fall is extensive.

A large quantity of lace curtains have been passed into stock, as also tapestry and chenille covers. A shipment of axminster floor squares has been received in the following sizes: 7.6 x 10.3, 8.8 x 10.10, 9.10 x 13.1, 10 11 x 14 3 and 13.1 x 14.6. These are woven in one piece and sell at medium prices. Photos of patterns are sent out to dealers writing for them. The department is making a specialty of velvet carpets.

The dress goods department have had a record season in black dress goods and are showing new and exclusive designs in figured stuff from 37½c. to $2.25 per yard, with all popular intermediate prices in plain cords, zibelines, barritz, etc. One line, a black poplin ground, with large over-design of colored flowers in helio, cerise, blue, brown, purple and a Turkish pattern, is a decided novelty. Large plaids, camel's hair in beautiful combinations of color, automobile, etc., are going well. The persian effect, plain ground with persian lamb overcheck, cheviot cloths, plain and fancy, etc., are shown in nice goods. In plain broadcloth, three lines in blacks and navies, etc., to retail at popular prices, are specially mentioned.

In silks, the stock is complete. They are showing a range of black yarn-dyed satin, for blouse and skirt purposes, from 37½c. to $1 per yard; also duchesse satins from $1 to $2.50; a full range of colors in five lines of colored satins, and a special leader to retail at 50c. A variety of blouse silks are shown, and three special lines of black taffeta silk at 55, 65 and 75c. Special value in black peau de soie at 75c. and $1 is a feature.

The stock of black hosiery is in excellent shape. Their No. 308 is having a larger sale than ever, and special provision is being made for it. The stock of all plains and ribs at popular prices, in ladies', misses' and children's, is complete. The ready-to-wear department is doing well, and has not been able to keep up with the demand for skirts. Good workmanship is the cause, as no cheap work is sent out. A variety of garments are shown in plain meltons and broadcloths, mohair figures, tweeds, etc.

Up to the present, the prospect for Fall trade in woollens is looking well, and sales for the season are ahead of last year. The stock of woollens for ladies' skirtings and suitings comprises the latest novelties in homespun, plain costume cloths, worsteds and tweed effects.

In men's furnishings a special line of etoffe pants at $12 a dozen is mentioned. So are a lot of khaki overalls, double fronts and double seats, for $1 retailing.

The smallwares department show a large range of hat pins, hat buckles, hair ornaments, hair combs, etc.

A special purchase of 1,000 men's waterproof coats, black, 24 in. cape, sizes from 36 to 48, to retail with a handsome profit at $2, is a feature. A mercerized cotton umbrella, silver tip handle, will retail at $1. A large showing of ladies and men's linen initial handkerchiefs is made.

NISBET & AULD.

A large assortment of women's fabrics for tailor-made costumes, jackets, capes, etc., may be found in Nisbet & Auld's. They show all lines suitable for the Canadian market as quickly as they are produced in the centres of fashion. They are in constant correspondence with designers and makers of women's cloths in all European centres as well as at home, and the domestic goods take no small place in their large display, especially the goods made by the Oxford (N.S.), Manufacturing Co. The sales of these cloths have increased to seven times their volume in that many years. Nisbet & Auld are extensive advertisers and strong believers in the principle of advertising, if the most important part is carried out fully; that is, to have everything in stock they claim in their advertisements to have, and a little more.

A large assortment of light and bright shades in women's wear are kept. These will be popular the coming season. Dark greys that have been lately worn greatly are not so much in evidence, but lighter shades will be worn more extensively, in greys, browns, blues, greens and bright red. Khaki is again showing itself in women's Fall wear.

Tailors' trimmings, which, until recently, have been noted for plainness and substantiality rather than good taste and style, have undergone a great change. Nisbet & Auld claim to have brought this about to a great extent themselves, and report a doubling up of sales in this department. In silk linings they have a splendid assortment in blacks and colors in the various widths, and their new designs for Fall are very handsome. Durability is an important consideration in the purchase of every line they carry, and this, allied with choice colorings and qualities, assures merchant tailors of an assortment which will please their customers.

K. ISHIKAWA & CO.

This firm, who have recently been obliged to enlarge their capacity on account of the growth of their business and the prospects for the Christmas trade, have a beautiful line of silks in stock, and are fully prepared for the Fall millinery openings. Their Fall goods are now in and they are busy with shipping. They have already received a number of repeat orders for silks and silk handkerchiefs. A large shipment of silk initialed handkerchiefs has recently arrived, which they retail at 25, 50, 75c. and $1. These handkerchiefs are in great demand this season. Old and new shades in plain silks are found in abundance in Ishikawa & Co.'s, including fawn, tan, Havana, steel grey, old rose, Oxford and khaki. Blacks in habutai have been selling in large quantities during the Summer months, and the demand still keeps up. They have these black silks in all grades, including 20-inch India at 18c.; 20 inch Japan and 23 and 27-inch Lyons dyed habutai silk. In Japan mattings, Ishikawa & Co. are doing a good business, and they have been able to cable to Japan for a number of large orders, while their travelers are booking quite a number of import orders. Freight rates overland and across the Pacific have advanced lately, and may be expected to have a bad effect on the matting trade, as the cost will be so much higher. To overcome this, orders are secured by this firm earlier than usual so as to come by way of the Suez Canal. It will be to the advantage of all, therefore, to place their orders with Ishikawa & Co. as early as possible, so as to get the low rates on vessels coming by way of the Suez Canal.

The

Millinery Season

Mantles, Trimmings and Laces.

THE FALL MILLINERY OPENINGS.

THE Canadian millinery openings are set down for Monday, August 27, and following days, and the principal wholesale importers are now getting their stocks in order. The openings promise to be more than usually brilliant this season. The reports given by several of the leading houses in this issue will be found to contain a good deal of advance information.

One cannot fail to be impressed by the expensive materials that are more and more in demand for Canadian millinery. Furs promise to continue in vogue for trimming Autumn and Winter hats, mink and chinchilla being the favorites.

In color there is no radical departure yet, the neutral tints prevailing to a considerable extent for very fashionable trade, with prospects of a change next season.

The taste for birds is again prominent, with larger birds in demand. The New York milliners use young eagles, but this patriotic touch may not suit this market.

The trimmings contain some novel effects, some revivals, but all very handsome, and, as a rule, costly. For example, maltese lace is coming in again. The old fashioned plush felt has another revival. Escorial laces in all tints are going to be used, and a pretty material used under the brims of hats is white crepe chine, nacre in effect. Silk shoelace braid, pulled out wide, is another novelty used for trimming.

Milliners who expect to visit the markets ten days hence, will find something to interest them in the reports of the leading importers given below.

PARIS NOVELTIES FOR THE AUTUMN.

We are promised a revival of the fancy feather toque, says The Millinery Record, and it is expected by some of the leading manufacturers that these will take the place of the fur toques which have enjoyed several seasons' run, and have been too generally imitated in the low-class trade to retain their position in the coming season. Large hats will have the underbrims of felt or velvet, lifted to show a lining of coq or other soft plumage. A white felt hat just brought out by a Paris designer has the wide brim lined with short white swan feathers laid closely one over the other. The brim is uplifted in front with a knot of deep yellow velvet, "Cleopatre," and a rouleau of the same velvet is laid around the crown and knotted in front with one of the new silver buckles, from which outspreads on either side gigantic angel wings of white swan, that encircle the whole hat.

There are many such indications in the Autumn models that fancy feathers and courteaux are to be much used, and singularly novel ideas are evolved in the new patterns now shown. Black courteaux that are broad and long are curled around the new red boleros in felt with excellent effect, and wide outspreading or undulated black angel wings are used as the principal trimming on low-crowned hats of peonyred felt, or fancy felt plait, over folds or drapings of peony chiffon.

Other novel courteaux are so shaped that their width and length permit them to be arranged on the outer brim of turban shapes, which they completely encircle and rise above the crown. The feathers meet in the front centre of the brim, under a chou of velvet or satin, this chou being repeated in a larger form on the crown.

Birds with outspread wings are used to ornament the tops of low-crowned draped toques or turbans, and for this purpose short winged and tailed birds have the addition of other feathers to make them sufficiently long. Combination aigrettes of osprey, coq feathers and other fancies are being shown in considerable numbers, and the fancy for courteaux and aigrettes formed of feather on gauze continues in an increased form.

Cut ostrich pompons, with brush ospreys or curved aigrettes rising from their centres, are expected to go well, and cross aigrettes will remain popular with the trade.

Birds' heads alone, or with the addition of wings, appear on some of the best models, where also paradise and ostrich plumes make their appearance again. It is thought that the three-quarter plume will be passed over for the flat or Amazon by the better class trade. Narrow bandeaux of small plumage such as "Paradisier," "Lophophore," "Impeyan" and Indian game birds are very new, and are intended for velvet toques and bonnets. Hand-painted quills, laid on leaves of velvet, are new and the successors of the quills on skeleton leaves, so long popular in Paris.

American buyers in Paris have bought freely of birds, wings and breasts.

Plain felts are spoken of as likely to be well taken up by the milliners, and we have seen some excellent styles in felts bound with velvet in the same shade and trimmed with large artistic bows of wide ribbon velvet to match, through which is passed a large couteau of natural or manufactured feathers.

Amongst the new shapes in these are several variations of the Spanish turban, or toreador; others have peculiar crowns that are very high at the back and slope off to nothing almost in the front. These have quaintly-blocked brims that are wide in the leaf on the right side and right in front, which is sharply uplifted, the left brim remaining flat to support the trimming.

Other very new shapes have extremely short backs, with low-blocked crowns and wide front brims, the whole brim being curled at the edge and much caught up at the back for the display to due advantage of large velvet ribbon bows laid across them.

Fancy toques of the new felt and leather plait are also spoken well of. The plait in question is formed of narrow strips of silk, undressed leather, velvet and felt plaited as in straw weaving. It is produced in all the new and standing shades, and looks particularly well in white, grey, fawn, red, dark blue and brown. Velvet ribbons are to be much used in addition to various novelties in embroidered cloth ribbons.

Exquisite things in richly-colored velvets, ornamented with chenille and metal thread embroideries, are shown, the purposes to which these can be put by the milliners being many. Nothing could be better or more effective for crowns for Winter toques, edged with fur or feathers. One of the designs is a beautiful amber velvet overlaid with a fan and scroll pattern of black chenille, outlined with fine silver cord and small black and silver sequins.

Silks in various soft makes also show chenille, sequin and jet embroideries, as, for instance, a delicate biscuit-colored silk that is covered with a lightly-traced design in chenille, fine cut black jet beads and very small black sequins. Wide insertions of chenille, crin and jet show many novelties.

S. F. MCKINNON & CO., LIMITED.

This company say: "In looking back over the past season, we believe, generally speaking, satisfactory results have been shown in millinery departments, and the season closed with stocks low.

"There have been some special features in connection with the August trade. This month, so far, in common with July, was marked by the great run on chiffons and black velvet ribbons, particularly the latter. When we had our last chat, previous to your sending out the July number of THE REVIEW, we then said that chiffons and black velvet ribbons were prime favorites, and would likely remain so for the balance of the season. This they have done, interfering, to some extent, with flowers, which suffered during July and August.

"Another feature of the July and August trade, like the same months of last year, was the big demand for ready-to-wear felt hats, which, to some extent, displaced sailors, usually worn so much during the two hot Summer months.

"As you see, our importations are nearly all forward and our entering department is running early and late in order that all orders on our books for millinery and McKinnon-made jackets, costumes and skirts may reach their respective destinations on time. We hope, with hard work, to get them all off before the end of the month.

"Our opening takes place on August 27. We would have preferred being a week later, but, as the Exhibition opens on that date, we do not think that a later date would have met with favor by the general trade. Many of our patrons are a great distance from here, on account of which they may find it necessary to make their selections even before the date fixed for our opening. We hope to have our collections so as to be able to accommodate such.

"When we had our last chat, about a month ago, we said that, generally speaking, the outlook for Fall was bright, at the same time reports from several sections of the Dominion were then gloomy. We are now encouraged to believe that the business outlook is better and more assuring than when we gave you our ideas last. And we firmly believe that you will see more millinery and mantle buyers in Toronto during the next two or three weeks than ever before.

"Your time and space are too limited to give a detailed account of the Fall millinery. You may, however, say that it will not be lacking in richness and ladylike effects.

"Velvets will be largely employed in the manufacture of stylish millinery in plain, panne, beaded and broche effects.

"French novelties, which count so much in high-class millinery, are very choice this season. Leading features in hat adornments are feathers, pompons, breasts in gull, pheasant and hackles, mounts, Bird of Paradise feathers, ostrich tip, three-quarter flats, buckles and fancy ornaments.

"In speaking of our manufacturing interests, McKinnon-made jackets, costumes and skirts have met with great success, having found favor in every section of the Dominion from the Atlantic to the Pacific. It is a common saying 'blood will tell,' but fit and finish are the telling features in the present day ladies' jackets, costumes and skirts.

"Even with the large extra factory space which our new building affords, every hour of time will be required to get our orders off on time and provide a warehouse stock to meet the many jacket and costume buyers who will visit the city within the next two or three weeks."

The trade in trimmed and untrimmed hats and novelties is a paying one, and milliners are always on the lookout for new ideas. Weber & Leopold, New York, as announced elsewhere in this issue, are showing a number of original creations, adapted from Paris and London styles, but specially intended for trade on this continent. They devote themselves particularly—and this is a point of considerable importance in millinery these days—to what will prove quick and profitable sellers. Pattern hats are ready, and Canadian dealers who want a few specialties are invited to communicate with this Broadway house.

THE JOHN D. IVEY CO., LIMITED.

The John D. Ivey Co., Limited, state that they expect a good millinery season from the fact that the outlook in Ontario was never better and that advance orders have been over 50 per cent. larger than a year ago, while payments have been particularly good.

As to the coming styles in millinery and millinery novelties and requisites, the keynotes are variety in shape and variety in color. Never before have more elegant or newer fabrics been used for Autumn headgear.

The indispensable materials are velvet plain, or miroir satin panne, liberty satin, and a decided novelty, known as "Fleur de Velours," which is similar to crimped satin, though a much finer texture, and employs beautifully with any of the above-named materials. All of the goods are necessary for the foundation of all millinery, and any of them may be used in unison with tulle, lace or gauze. The variety of these fragile trimmings gives the milliner full scope to display her artistic talent. Sequin trimmings are even more in evidence, and have the richness of chenille in their composition, or with velvet leaves applied on it. These, used as brim drapery, are most effective. Real laces again play an important part for Winter dress hats, the newest makes being cluny and lace de Luxembourg.

Ostrich feathers are used very freely on large hats, and wings, breasts, amazon quills, pompons, birds and osprey are the correct garniture for up-to-date hats. The novelty in millinery ornaments is the long narrow buckle which, in extreme shape, reaches from side to side across the front of the hat and is made of gun-metal with rhinestones inserted, cut steel or imitation of ancient Egyptian jewelry.

The leading color will be a repetition of the neutral hues known as pastel tints, wedgewood, crushed raspberry, apricot, browns, castor, greys and violet. Regarding the shapes of hats there is a decided change, as far as the trimming is concerned, for it must be arranged rather lower than last season, and not so massive nor broad, and much more of the outline of the shape is to be seen. Piece felt, or felt and chenille will be largely used in the ready-to wear hats to be worn with tailor-made costumes.

D. McCALL CO.

The D. McCall Co. are furnished with a full line of all the latest Fall millinery articles. Hats are to be worn rather large this season, with trimmings of all kinds. The most up-to-date styles in trimmings are long quills, pheasant quills and breasts, coque plumes and breasts, amazon plumes and feather bands. Black ostrich plumes and tips are to be used extensively. The D. McCall Co. have a large stock of toques, which will be much worn this season. They are in velvets, plain and fancy stitched felts, fancy chenille sequin and horsehair. They show also some feather toques, which are very pretty, in pheasant and coque. Velvets, as usual, will be used greatly for Fall trimmings. Plain and panne velvets are shown in The D. McCall Co.'s warerooms, and also plisse velours, plain and stitched felts, chenille and sequin and chenille and horsehair, galoons in widths from $\frac{1}{2}$ to 8 inches in sequin, chenille and horsehair. Ribbons are popular this year in liberty satin, taffetas and black and colored velvet ribbon from baby 2-inch. The latest novelties from Paris are polka-spot ribbons and polka-spot velours.

Colors are well assorted and very pretty. Black and white, black and gold and black and aluminum are the most popular combination colors. In plain shades, beige, castor, tabac, nationale, argent, turquoise, coquelicot and reine will be the most thought of for the season. Champ de Mars and trocadero are handsome blue tones, exposition and universelle in new green tones, congress and nations in old rose tones and Champs Elysees and 1900 in new lilac tones are expected to be the reigning fancy colors for the season.

CHAS. REID & CO.

A fine assortment of millinery goods may be seen in the showrooms of Chas. Reid & Co. They have been making thorough preparations for the Fall trade, and are convinced that early buyers will not be disappointed when dealing with them.

Mr. Reid has just returned from the centres of fashion in the Old World, bringing with him the latest styles and some handsome novelties in millinery articles. A splendid line of panne velvet, for made up hats, is shown. The shades are principally in trocadero blue, Champ de Mars, lumineux, universelle, a shade bordering on old rose, a new pink called "Nations," the lightest shades in khaki, gazelle, brown and beige. All these are expected to be worn this season. A new shade in heliotrope, called "1900," is shown, which will be a popular color this season. Feather trimmings will be frequently used this season; large feather bandeaux and breasts, large birds and quills similar to those worn last Winter will be the most worn. The cheaper grades are not so much in demand this season. Also, a large trade is expected in chenille galoons with sequins in black and gold and black and silver, felt applique galoons and woven horsehair galoons with sequins.

The black and gold sequin, Reid & Co. find, is popular with the best milliners. This firm anticipate a big season in ostrich feathers, and they have placed in stock some of exceptional value. Hats will run mostly on the toque order and large picture hats. Bonnets are not much thought of for the coming season. Apart from the ready-to-wear hats, this will be almost entirely a made up season. The "Strathcona," "Volunteer," "Baden-Powell" and "Roosevelt," in ready-to-wears, are good early-selling hats, also a grey hat with drooping front and back, called "The Link." In ornaments, Reid & Co. show a line of long, narrow buckles in steel or rhinestone, which milliners are using again.

NEW YORK PRESENT IDEAS.

The new shapes are all moderate, that is those that will be best in the season's work. A rather low crown and a broad, flaring brim are the average component parts of the hat of the season. Of course, built upon this outline of crown and brim, the shapes are seen in great variety. The tendencies, however, are toward broader, round, low-lying shapes. There are brims which flare at the right side, flare at the left or turn down in the back, but the general form is a flare on the left side with a moderately low crown. Upon this distinct shape are built at least a dozen varieties of form, according to the taste of the different manufacturers, and all of which are excellent and reliable.

The trimmings and materials for this season have been designed to fit hats of this class. Turban shapes are also good style, as are a limited number of ideas of the Amazon variety. Beyond this very little is necessary or advisable, except as staple stock.

A word about qualities and colors. Brown, blues, some purples, and possibly a few reds may be good, but black is the idea of the season. The stylish felt hat will, however, be white.

It is strange to record, but fashion clings to black and white tendencies rather than to vivid colorings. The best hats imported are confined to the combination of black and white. Not only is this true of imported goods, but also of the better class hats that are being taken by the stylish wearers in this section for early Fall use.

Good wool felts are better than cheap fur felts. It is, however, wise to know your trade's feelings on this subject. The best well finished Persian and Australian wools are the most satisfactory goods in wear, and should be taken, especially in ready-trimmed merchandise, in preference to low-priced fur felts.

The promise of fancy feathers and wings is stronger at this moment than even the most optimistic dared to believe in the early season. As we have remarked before, much depends upon how materials are used. Ingenuity and good taste, if worked together in creating a place for fancy feathers in the new styles, can insure popularity for those articles which are especially new.—Economist.

WHOLESALE FIRM SUSPENDS.

The wholesale millinery firm of G. A. McGillivray & Co., London, Ont., were unable to meet their paper maturing on August 4, and have suspended payment. A statement of affairs is being prepared, which will be submitted to the creditors at as early a date as possible. Heavy losses by the firm in the Northwest are given as part of the cause of financial embarrassment. Mr. McGillivray is a large property owner, both in London and near Petrolea, the latter of which he had been expecting to dispose of to a large English syndicate, which was negotiating for the purchase of the oil-producing properties in and around Petrolea, but which abandoned the scheme owing to the tightness of the money market in London.

Men's Furnishings.

THERE may yet be a number of warm Summer weeks before the Fall trade will actually begin, but travelers with Fall goods have been busy lately, and active men's furnishers have received a good part of their Fall stocks. This month and the first part of September should see the merchants get rid of their Summer stock, though, in men's wear, a number of articles that are selling well now will continue to move freely during the Fall.

The most salable things in neckwear are the batwing and flowing end ties. The latter are in many different patterns, but in each there is a fancy border across the ends. The batwings will be worn all through the Fall. The popular colors are blue and grey; the greys are very pretty and are having a good sale. In blues, the navy polka dots sell better than anything else.

The new high-band turned down collar is having a good sale. This is made for both sexes, and is popular with both. City furnishers say the demand shows no signs of lessening, and these collars will be worn through Fall and Winter. They are made in high, medium and low sizes.

Colored shirts may be expected to sell through the Fall fairly well, also, though they are having their best run now. The blue stripe is in greater demand than the others, though all colored shirts are selling well.

Leather goods (those who deal in them say), principally belts and valises, are going rapidly. The season of traveling should see every window have at least one or two samples of goods in this line. Traveling rugs, too, are being sold in good numbers. They look well in a window, when done up with carrying straps, thus showing both articles at once.

Seen in Dealers' Windows. Double-sole cotton hose, 25c. Single-sole cotton hose, 2 for 25c. Black cashmere socks, 3 for $1. New English stand-up collars, 2 for 25c. High standing lay down collars, 3 for 50c. Special balbriggan undershirts, 25c. Double-threaded balbriggan undershirts, 50c. Fish-net undershirts, 25c. Colored negligee shirts, stiff collar, 50c. Colored negligee shirts, silk front, stiff collar, $1. Unlaundered white shirts, 40c. Duck trousers, $1. String and batwing ties, 3 for 25c. Suspenders, narrow, 25c. Four in-hand, flowing end ties, 2 for 25c.

The Neckwear Outlook.

As intimated above, the best selling neckwear, according to city dealers, includes flowing ends and batwing ties. I spoke also to a high authority in this trade, because it is so important for dealers to know what is correct. He stated that, in shapes, flowing ends led, while the recent hot spell had revived the kerchief tie. Bows, especially the batwing, are coming to the front.

In colors, blues, all shades, sell well, and this includes purple blues. There are strong indications that red will be in favor for Fall trade.

In patterns, spaced figures large and small are correct, although stripes show as yet no sign of losing their popularity. In fact, there is a greater demand than ever. All figures should be brought out with a great deal of white. A great many of them are solid white figures on a plain ground in satin of different shades of blue black or dark green. In stripes, also, whites are used largely on dark ground.

New York Ideas.

The other day I saw Mr. G. W. Nixon, an up-to-date Toronto dealer in men's furnishings, who had just returned from New York. In conversation as to the men's furnishing business in the American metropolis, Mr. Nixon remarked that about the only thing he saw worn in neckwear was the batwing tie. "The flowing-end ties have not begun to sell there yet, but batwings, mostly in bright colors and in either silk or cotton, are worn by all. These are in plain ends and fancy—that is, the ends are shaped something like a violin, but with a square end, so that when tied together it makes a well-shaped bow. In collars, the high turn-down is worn altogether. The most popular shape in this collar is that where the turned-over parts meet at the top. Hosiery is worn in the 'loudest' colors they can get, and so are shirts. Large stripes running vertically are altogether worn in shirts; there are no cross stripes whatever this season. They have a new thing in white and colored shirts, with pleated pique fronts and pique cuffs, which are worn a great deal."

Mr. Nixon noticed that bright colors prevailed in everything, but did not think they would become popular here for some time, if at all.

The Well-dressed Man.

A well-posted fashion authority in New York, writes: "It really seems as if the looms have stopped their work as Dame Fashion sits dozing at the wheel, so little new is there in the styles of clothing and haberdashery. And yet I must still sing the song of the shirt. The notes are the same old notes, and there is scarcely a variation in the whole score, but, strange as it may appear, there are vast numbers of men who either never have heard the tune or who persist in whistling it abominably. It is, of course, too much to expect that every man should wear only a white tie with a long-tailed evening coat and a black tie with a dinner jacket, but it surely is discouraging to see men who certainly should know better, wearing any old thing in apparently cold-blooded disregard of all proper custom and convention. It is sad to see in the windows of good clothing establishments wax figures of supposedly correctly dressed men in shockingly incorrect costumes. What a dreadful example is set to the unthinking and ignorant by such a figure in a combination of dinner coat, double-breasted white waistcoat with gilt buttons, white tie, and high hat! One might almost expect to see tan shoes, and I dare say one would if it were not for the fact that most of these figures have imitation boots painted with good, black paint.

"The fact of the matter is that, notwithstanding all that has been said on the subject of masculine attire within the past few years, most men know extremely little about clothes and rely almost entirely upon the supposed knowledge of the tailor or the salesman. Only the other day, as I was looking over some ties which caught my eye in passing through one of the large retail stores, I overheard a man asking advice from a woman clerk behind the counter as to the proper style of gloves, and I lingered long enough to see him purchase a pair of bright-yellow kid with black stitching on the backs and patent buttons, after being assured by the saleswoman that they were quite the fashionable style. I suppose it never occurred to him to doubt her knowledge of what was correct, and it was with the greatest effort that I refrained from intervening in what was certainly no concern of mine, out of pure kindness of heart, and at the risk of brazen impertinence. This is but one example of what occurs every day in every clothing shop and haberdashery in the city, simply because men do not know exactly what they want, or how to get it.

"It is natural, on the ground of comfort, that gloves should be less worn during the Summer months than in Autumn or Winter, but because they are not so generally in use is no reason why they should be laid aside. Though not as necessary as a hat or boots, they are decidedly a requisite of a well-dressed man's attire, and even if not actually worn, they should be carried in the hands or in the pocket, so that the fact is apparent that they have not been intentionally left at home or forgotten. Even in warm weather, the cape, dogskin, or heavy, tan walking gloves are the best looking as well as the smartest. The backs should have three stripes or spears of self-stitching, and the buttons should be of bone or gilt, which actually button through buttonholes, instead of fastening with a snap patent clasp. Besides the dark shade of tan, there are one or two good light shades that are correct and good looking."

The Autumn Leaf Design.

The head of Young & Rochester's tie department in London, Eng., Mr. Maurice, is responsible for an exceedingly artistic window card which is now in preparation, and will doubtless be very much in evidence in the men's departments of the best shops before long. It is a photographic reproduction of a handsome tablet, modeled in clay, giving prominence to a new series of ties for the Fall trade, called "Autumn Leaves." The photo. is mounted on bevelled card with wide margin, free from printing, and shows one of the ties in a knot, with its actual colors and shading shown by means of the new colored photography. These "Autumn Leaf" ties are in 16 different colorings, and the effects in rich, shaded olive greens, golden browns, etc., are very attractive. The brocades are, perhaps, leaders, but the same idea is being carried out in foulards for handkerchief ties, the designs in the latter case being slightly larger than that in the brocades. Messrs. Wreyford & Co. will be showing these and they promise to be a very popular pattern during the coming season.

A Nice Range. The Gault Bros. Co., Limited, are showing a very handsome range of neckwear for the early Fall trade. All the latest styles of scarves are shown in the newest colorings, which include red in the Othello, pourpre, garnet and Richelieu shades, and blues in the Paris, Yale, royal, navy, marine and latour shades.

Just now, the most popular things in the United States are two new shades of green, nimrod and hunter; this firm have a large variety of designs in these lines. Wedgewood and eldorado are two other new colors that their travelers are showing in a variety of patterns.

A Crusty Customer.

In the neckwear department of a large store hung the notice: "We cannot exchange or send neckwear on approval." This had become really necessary, for it had been found that there were people with sufficient audacity to procure fine neckwear that they might wear it for a special occasion—possibly when having a photograph taken—returning it the following day. The rule had not been posted up long before one of the wealthiest and most touchy of the customers wanted some neckties on approval. "What!" said he, "not send neck-wear on approval? Why, I never heard of such a thing. In future, I shall go where they are more accommodating." And he thereupon left the counter very much annoyed.

Men's Fashions in London. Lord Ronald Gower has taken another "whack" at the silk hat in Summer by writing to The Times as follows during the hot spell which afflicted London at the end of July: "This torrid weather, and the oft-repeated presentations of Mr. Kruger in a tall, and generally seedy, hat, have, I rejoice to see, sensibly reduced the number of such hideous headgears in our streets. Of course, where the wearing of the frock coat (a most inartistic garment, as anyone who looks at our public statues must see) is a necessary evil, at those melancholy functions of garden parties and funerals—and even weddings—the tall hat will prevail; otherwise, we may hope that the day of the 'cylinder' as our neighbors call the top hat, are numbered."

During the heated term a certain number of people took his lordship's advice and went in for straw hats. London dealers sold an enormous quantity. Retailers report that, besides abnormal demand for straw hats, the alpaca coats were sought after, and even the white cotton umbrella, recognized in other countries as a valuable protection against the sun, is coming into favor. Light canvas crush hats were also worn, while the canvas helmet with green-shaded interior, was in demand. Many men going abroad took helmets of this kind with them.

The Summer ties, for variety of design and tasteful composition, compare with any previous year. The Briton's alleged love of sombreness and gloom is evidently a thing of the past—so far as his tie is concerned.

An "expert" writing in London Fashion on men's costumes for boating and other aquatic outings, says: "The ordinary coarse-plaited 'straw-yard' is undoubtedly more popular with the stylish river man than any other form of head-dress. Very few Panamas were seen at Henley regatta; and as to the horrifying top hat, it appeared to be strictly confined to the smart grooms of the riverside roads, who carried the lunch baskets of the well-to-do holiday-makers from dog cart to ralli car to punt, launch, or canoe. There is conspicuous absence on the Thames this year of colored ribbons, both as ties and hatbands. While there is no lack of color as regards loose fronted river shirts, made either of linen, of linen and silk mixed, or of silk entirely, hatbands and bows are mostly black; and the colored handkerchief as a means of supporting the trousers has been almost entirely replaced by the brown leather belt. The most fashionable flannel jacket of all is a silver grey with white stripe. It is cut single breasted; the buttons are covered with same material; and the patch pockets are double sewn, as are also the seams, and front and bottom edges of the garment. The white linen duck trousers to be worn with this should not be too thin, or they will crumple and crease, and generally get out of order in a very short space of time. The stout linen duck is almost as cool as the thin kind, and it keeps its shape quite as well as the best flannel. Although a cotton duck has not such a rich look as a linen duck, and is, in point of fact, an inferior material so far as price and appearance are concerned, it is often worn by yachtsmen in preference to the finer kind, by reason of its being a little warmer and less giving to creasing.

"To return to the get up of the riverman of to-day. If he prefers trousers of the same material as his coat, and the material be mainly dark blue or medium or dark grey, he should have brown boots, but with white duck trousers boots should be of white buckskin or white canvas with buckskin toecaps and lacehole fronts. A favorite color for the shirt, and one which certainly looks very well when the bow worn with it is black, is a faint heliotrope striped at two inch intervals with white and black hair lines. The white shirts of a canvas weave are also very stylish, and with these colored ribbon bows may be worn.

"I have lately been asked for information as to the latest fashion in dust coats. I have advised a drab Raglan of the very thinnest make. I would also draw the attention of readers to a natural color holland dust coat, made on the full ulster pattern, now very popular in Germany."

A man of note, who attended a swell dinner party the other night, says that the older men still wear their watch chains with evening dress, although the young man about town does not. Plain white studs are used in the shirts. The evening coat has four buttons. The white tie, of course, must be tied by hand.

News of the Trade.

Henderson, Hunt & McLaughlin have purchased the business of Fraser, Fraser & Co., St. John, N.B., and will carry on the clothing, men's furnishings and custom tailoring trade at the same stand. The members of the new firm are energetic men, well acquainted with the requirements of the community in their particular lines, and will make a big push for business. Their prospects for success are of the brightest.

W. C. Wood, of the firm of Closson & Wood, has purchased the men's furnishing establishment of W. G. Richardson & Co., Strathcona, N.W.T. Mr. Richardson joins the staff of W. T. Henry & Co.

Christie & Caron, Aylmer, Ont., have purchased the stock of ready-made clothing and furnishings of N. P. Finch, Paris, amounting to some $5,000. Mr. W. S. Caron went to Paris and cleared out part of the stock before taking it to Aylmer.

Guy Bros., the enterprising proprietors of the Cornwall Steam Laundry, purchased the stock of McArthur & Co., and will continue the business at the old stand.

Los Angeles papers note the death there of R. M. Glass, a well-known commercial traveler, formerly of Adrian, Mich., and more recently of Vancouver. The deceased was but 42 years of age.

Messrs. A. McArthur and J. M. Harper, dry goods merchants and outfitters from Kamloops, B.C., where the firm has been established for 18 years, catering not only to the general public, but also to the miners of Quesnelle and Cariboo, have opened a dry goods department in Rossland under the management of H. M. Fraser, formerly of the Hudson's Bay Company.

Extensive repairs are being made at the store of F. Simard, St. Joseph street, Quebec. To improve the light the upper parts of the show windows have been provided with Luxfer Prisms. This makes the back of the store as light as the front, and will do away with the skylight well which occupies so much space in the three flats. The well will be floored, and thus the second and third flats will be greatly enlarged, permitting the establishment of a dressmaking department in the building. New counters are to be provided, and the millinery department is to be greatly improved.

THE CANADIAN COTTON AND WOOLLEN MARKET.

THE reports (August 10) go to show that prices in this market continue firm. The decline in the prices of fine wools reported from London has affected some lines of woollen fabrics and dress goods there, but not here, as Canadian importers never paid the highest prices when the market was strong, and are not affected by the decline from top values.

As to prices of cottons, the Canadian mills keep up values, and we hear of no immediate change either way. As one evidence of the stability of staple cottons, it may be mentioned that early in August the prices of cotton yarns in New York for 3-8's declined $\frac{1}{2}$ c., to 13c.; 2-14's sold at 14 $\frac{1}{2}$ c., and 2-20's at 17c. The Canadian prices for these three numbers of cotton yarns are 18, 19 and 22c., our market being unaffected by the New York reaction. The English price for 2-14's cotton yarn is 10d. per lb., or 20c., in England.

FLANNELETTES.

The sales of flannelettes are said to be good this season. There is especially a good demand among retail buyers for the better grades. Repeat orders so far to the mills have not been heavy, because placing orders were heavy. It is said by those who profess to know that if any change in prices takes place it will be an advance.

TAPESTRY AND VELVET CARPETS.

Since our last issue a further advance of $\frac{1}{2}$ d. a yard on tapestry and velvet carpets has taken place. This is said to be due to a mutual decision arrived at by the different British manufacturers of these goods.

THE NOTTINGHAM LACE MARKETS.

Nottingham advices to The London Drapers' Record says: "The demand for fancy millinery laces, especially for export, remains steady. The ordinary lines, such as valenciennes and torchons, of which goods there is an extensive range of qualities, styles and prices, are selling well in edgings, laces, and insertions. Victoria, brabant and point de Paris laces are in good request for special markets. Crochet laces and warp goods are steadily inquired for. As the yarn market continues unsettled, buyers operate cautiously, and they are obliged in many instances to keep the price of the finished product sufficiently high to guard themselves against any loss through yarns going still higher. The silk lace trade remains comparatively languid, and few novelties are being introduced in this branch. Export orders for mosquito nets and finer goods for embroidery purposes monopolize a large amount of attention, even at the higher prices that are ruling, and the supply has not yet overtaken the demand. Tullies for millinery purposes still sell freely in cotton, but silk tullies and chantilly nets are not so much inquired for as formerly. There is only a limited inquiry for heavy foundation nets."

THE ENGLISH WOOL MARKET.

The result of the July wool sales was, on the whole, a decline in price. At first the bidding showed a reduction of 5 per cent. for common cross-breds from the values at the May sales, but toward the close the price recovered and, finally, the initial decline gave way to prices in excess of May values. Fine cross-breds at first declined from 10 to 15 per cent., but later on recovered about 5 per cent. The end of the sales saw steadily hardening prices, due partly to the decision of the Colonial Wool Importers' Association to have only five series of sales. The next and concluding series will begin October 9. Many buyers believe that this is an attempt to bolster up the market unduly.

MONTREAL WHOLESALE TRADE.

THE Montreal wholesale houses are just completing their Fall shipments and beginning to settle down to receive duplicate orders. Nor are the thoughts of the business men entirely confined to this year's trade. Next Spring's fashions are beginning to be troublesome, and the buyers are already leaving on visits to English and continental markets. Meanwhile the Fall stocks of the various houses are well filled up, and sorting orders ought to be filled satisfactorily. Many new Fall lines are also in stock.

GAULT BROS. CO., LIMITED.

That the taste of the man has a great influence upon the style of the dress of the woman is shown by the fact that The Gault Bros. Co., Limited, report a great demand for tweed costumes in their woollen department. Brighter colors and homespun effects are perhaps most popular. Golf cloths, for capes and skirts, also in bright colors, are receiving a fair share of attention. Ladies are showing some favor for drab beaver cloths.

In the cotton department, some new lines are to be seen setting off the staple lines. They have a range of fancy velours and a line of Parisian flannels, in stripes, small dots and fancy stripes, that are worth seeing. Varied styles are shown in wrapperettes, including a range of fancy Salisburys. They have a line of fancy 36 inch curtains of Venetian pattern that ought to take well. The assorted shades of 34-inch check dress goods, double width, are handsome and of good value. A special line of 27-inch eiderdowns, for children's wraps, has just come into stock. This firm have made a specialty of 72-inch woollen sheetings, in grey and white, a line not always carried by dry goods firms. Tweeds in small checks, stripes and twills are popular this year for boy's suits and ladies' bicycle skirts. Add to this a good range of cotton yarns and an interesting cotton department is complete.

The newest thing in dress goods is "Zibeline," in checks and spots. It promises to be very fashionable. French tweeds of camel's hair finish, satin finished crepons and repp-grounds are in best demand. Plaids, especially Scotch tartans, are shown in wide ranges, white poplins, in blacks and colors, bid fair to be worn a good deal this Fall and Winter. The predominating color of the season is not determined as yet; fawns, browns, blues and reds, with a few resida, appear to be taking best. In silks, there seems to be a feeling for black broche silks, but all the newest pastel shades, including wedgwood, will be fashionable. Velveteens are going to be extensively used for trimmings.

In the trimming department, some ranges of mecerized Italian cloths, in all colors, both plain and fancy, are being sold for blouse, skirt and jacket linings. Fancy vestings are stock in heavy lines this year. Gault Bros., Limited, have gone extensively into the silk trimming business this year, and are consequently showing good values.

Samples are now on the road for laces and embroideries for Spring. It will be well worth our friends' while to look at this range, for it is very extensive. Novelties in elastic web belts are shown for immediate delivery. This firm report a heavy demand for Shetland floss wool, used for various fancy articles. They have just put into stock a large range of black chiffon which offers exceptional value. Their customers would do well to see their soft finished colored quilts made of Egyptian cotton; pinks and sky blues are the favorite colors in this line. The popular "Crescent" brand of skirts and wrappers are selling so well that it is difficult to have the orders put through.

THE W. R. BROCK CO., LIMITED.

The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, are now showing, in their staple department, some very interesting lines in flags, flannel-ettes, wrapperettes, cottonades, grey and white cottons, linings and sateens. They have a nice assortment of linens, in damasks, table napkins and cloths, crash towelings, towels, butcher linens and canvas, at prices that defy competition. A large stock of flannelette and wool blankets is being carried this Fall.

In the smallware and notion department, as is well known, this firm always carry a good stock of staples and season's novelties. They draw special attention to the following this year: Pompadour combs and hair ornaments, belt buckles in all the latest styles, and jewelery in great variety. In elastics, they keep the famous "Lion" brand, and they say one trial of this line will convince the user of its superiority.

Mr. Brock states that the firm are in extra good shape this season to deliver promptly all orders for ladies', gentlemen's and children's underwear, hosiery and gloves. Merchants should see their ranges of whitewear, flannelettes, underwear, blouses and wrappers before buying, as their values are good.

In their dress goods department, they are making a specialty of blacks, but are also showing one of the most complete ranges in the market, in all the latest styles, including fancies, tartans and plain colors. Their "Sunbeam" velveteen still holds the cake as the leading line in the trade; the price is not changed, in spite of the market advance.

In the silk, ribbon and trimming department, the size and quality of their stock rivals any in the Dominion. They show black, colored and fancy silks and satins in every make, not to mention black and colored velvets. Large shipments of velvet and velvet and satin ribbons are coming in by every steamer. In trimmings, there is a large demand for beaded braids, appliques, steel sequins, swansdown, angora and lamb's wool, in all of which they are by no means sold out.

In "E" department, on the third floor, where muslins, laces and embroideries are shown in great profusion, a large shipment of pillow shams, bureau and washstand scarves has just been received. Valenciennes and guipure laces and some extra fine lines of swiss embroidered and hemstitched handkerchiefs are shortly to hand. The neckwear department is complete in all the latest novelties, both for ladies and gentlemen. They have a knot tie called "Sport," to retail at 25c. It's a cracker-jack. On this floor, too, is the curtain department, where there is a large stock from 17½c. to $12 per pair.

A special line of curtains, called the "Fitu" and "Patriotic," at $9 per dozen, is just arriving, together with a variety of fancy hosiery in hood clouds, mitts, and many sorts of fancy woollen goods.

S. GREENSHIELDS, SON & CO.

This firm are doing a hustling business in their large new establishment, and the customer that can pay a visit here and come away dissatisfied must be fastidious, indeed.

The cotton department is full and up-to-date. Just now they are showing special lines in white remnants, etc. They announce a couple of bargains in some low grades of bleached and unbleached canton flannels which they have had made especially for themselves.

In carpets and housefurnishings they are showing some special values in single and double-width cretonnes. The carpet stock is full and varied; one would think, to look at the large stock carried, that they were ready for the Spring rush; but they say there is a lot to be added before they are ready for the Spring trade.

The newest thing in the smallwares department is the "Zaza" pulley belt. This is the latest development of the belt craze. It comes in two styles, one in plain satin, at $6.50, and one in satin with sequin trimming, at $9.50. They have a new line of jet, and jet and steel pockets, to retail at 50c. Special attention should be paid to their large stock of fancy goods, including albums, photo. frames, kid dolls, glove and handkerchief boxes, blotting pads, scrap books, tea sets, writing desks, work boxes, necktie boxes, blocks, scrap albums, photo. holders, harmonicas, etc.—in fact, everything the Christmas and gift giving season demands. The stock of Berlin and Shetland wools is now complete, and every shade is in stock. Satisfaction in other lines is also assured. A new range of purses has just been received and it includes the finger purse in assorted colors, at $4.00 a dozen.

In the woollen department, S. Greenshields, Son & Co. are showing a complete range of mantle and costume cloths for ladies, and a fine line of serges, fancy worsteds, and Scotch and Irish tweeds for men's wear.

The dress goods department is too well known to require comment. Here are the newest things, and they are worth seeing; a line of French pointed opera flannels that are very pretty; a range of camel's hair checks in assorted patterns that give promise of being decidedly popular; a handsome array of silk and mohair figures which bid fair to displace creponnes among the tasty dressers; an assortment of fine cloths dotted with libertine spots of a high quality, presenting a new effect, and, finally, a camel's hair serge in black and navies.

KYLE, CHEESBROUGH & CO.

Attention is drawn to the advertisement of Kyle, Cheesbrough & Co. in this number, particularly to the corset vest represented in the cut. It is the newest thing in this line and will be welcomed by many of the feminine gender as the proper article to wear over a corset when being fitted for a new tailor-made gown this Fall. Also, the young ladies will find it a treasure when cycling, golfing, etc., as they can do without their corsets, the vest giving the required form and still does not curtail the freeness of action of the body. All leading merchants should see these and they will profit thereby. It is not a roughly-made article, but the best one made in this line, being perfectly smooth and of exquisite form.

They are also showing several pretty lines in new neck wear. The new corded ties, belt buckles and sets, also many other novelties, besides a full line in dress goods, hosiery, gloves, underwear, etc.

The travelers are also showing a complete range of silk, sequin, jet, mohair and combination trimmings. This season will be a leader in silk trimmings, as the leading modistes in Europe are using all silk galons very extensively in their latest creations. The Plauen market, from latest advices, reports a very large demand for these silk trimmings, particularly in ivory and black. There is certainly no more beautiful garniture than what is now turned out of Plauen in these silk effects. They are being shown in many beautiful designs and also the lower grades which come from other parts of the continent from 25c. dozen up to $10. These need to be seen to be appreciated.

The ten travelers of this firm are now out with laces and embroideries for Spring 1901, showing a range of between 6,000 and 7,000 numbers. Everyone who will favor them with a look through their range will not be disappointed. They will, it is claimed, see many novelties that no other range in Canada can show. The styles now prevalent in Europe and America will certainly demand much lace in their make up—particularly in all-overs. Of this line they are showing a most comprehensive range in silk and cotton effects, and of exceptional value. On this point the firm say: "We know that by making a specialty, as we do in this line, that we certainly cannot be surpassed by anyone in Canada, or by any middlemen in the United Kingdom, as we buy in as close markets as anyone in this line; our purchasing power warrants it."

BROPHY, CAINS & CO.

Brophy, Cains & Co., Montreal, have some special men on the road showing laces, embroideries and veils in all the various makes for December delivery.

They are also showing a special range of Christmas handkerchiefs in motto and in fancy box goods. These lines are confined to this house.

McINTYRE, SON & CO.

The Western Ontario representatives of McIntyre, Son & Co. will be at the Toronto office, 25 Colborne street, during the Exhibition, and will be pleased to see their customers and the trade generally.

The Ottawa district representatives will be at the Ottawa office, Carleton Chambers, Sparks street, during the Ottawa Exhibition. Customers and the trade are invited to call.

BOARD OF TRADE OF THE MARITIME PROVINCES.

A THREE DAYS' CONVENTION IN KENTVILLE, N.S., THE PRETTY LITTLE TOWN IN THE CORNWALLIS VALLEY.

THE sixth annual convention of the Board of Trade of the Maritime Provinces opened in Kentville, N.S., the pretty little town in the Cornwallis Valley, on Wednesday, August 15.

The sessions of the convention were held in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, which the local board had tastefully decorated for the occasion with bunting, while over the platform was a large streamer with the word "Welcome" printed on it in letters of blue and red. It was the first occasion on which the Maritime Board of Trade has met in a hall decorated in its honor.

The first session was held on Wednesday evening. It was 8.30 o'clock when the president called the meeting to order, with the remark: "Gentlemen, I think the hour has now arrived when we should proceed to the business of the sixth annual session of the Maritime Board of Trade. I will now request the secretary to call the roll."

Secretary Calkin read the roll and the following delegates were reported for their respective boards of trade:

ST. JOHN, N.B.—W. M. Jarvis, C. W. Bostwick, L. G. Crosby, F. C. Allison, R. B. Emerson, J. Wilard Smith.

HALIFAX, N.S.—W. A. Black (president), J. E. De Wolfe, Geo. J. Troop, C. M. Creed (secretary), E. G. Smith, F. C. Simson, J. A. Chipman, J. Taylor Wood, J. P. Longard, I. C. Stewart, E. F. Stevens, George A. Boak, A. E. Jones, Senator Power, George Mitchell, M.P.

WOLFFVILLE, N.S.—Dr. DeWitt.

ST. STEPHEN, N.B.—Fred Hain.

NEW GLASGOW.—John Underwood.

CANNING, N.S.—W. Rand.

Just preceding the calling of the meeting to order, the following were invited to seats on the platform: Ex-presidents of the board, George J. Troop, Halifax, and W. M. Jarvis, St. John; Mayor Loggie, Chatham, N.B., and W. A. Black, president of the Halifax Board of Trade. President DeWolfe had Mr. Troop at his right and Mr. Jarvis at his left, and as he took his seat between them he remarked facetiously, "We divide Halifax and St. John because it is not safe to have them together."

There was a general laugh amid which Mr. Jarvis arose and facetiously remarked that there would be no danger at all were he and Mr. Troop put side by side.

COMMUNICATIONS.

A letter was read from the Lunenburg Board of Trade, regretting inability to send delegates. "But we will be there next year," wrote the secretary. The Stellarton board also wrote regretting inability to send representatives. Mr. D. G. Smith, of the Chatham board wrote, "We expect to have the board meet here next year."

"I am glad," remarked the president, "that we have an invitation from at least one place."

Among other letters read was one from Mr. D. J. McLaughlin, of the St. John, N.B., Board of Trade, in which he regretted that as he was compelled to go to Minnesota he would be unable to attend the convention.

"OLD HOME WEEK."

In a letter which was read from Mr. W. S. Fisher, of St. John, was the following:

In connection with the subject of better accommodation for tourists, it has been suggested that along these lines it might be well for the gathering to discuss the question of "Old Home Week," such as they have been having this week in Portland, Maine. It seems this idea was first originated in New Hampshire, and has been gradually extending. I presume you are aware of what it means. If not, allow me to state briefly that the object sought is to induce all the former residents of the State or Province to visit their old home. For this purpose a week has been set aside and advertised well in advance, when the railway and steamship companies offer for that period extremely low rates and passage from every part of the Union. This naturally brings a large concourse of people back to their former homes, renews acquaintances and keeps them in touch with it, whereas otherwise they would gradually lose entire touch with it. This revival of interest is a good thing from many points of view which I will not undertake to discuss, but which are apparent on the surface, and the expenditure of money is an important source of income to the community.

Applying this to the tourist question, it would appear that considerable good might be derived from such a movement if once started in the Maritime Provinces, as it would awaken an interest in the minds of many former residents and be an effective means of advertising the country. The matter could be taken up more effectively by all three Provinces working together, for the very good reason that all the transportation companies would in that case be much more deeply interested and their hearty approval and assistance would be absolutely necessary.

Messrs. C. W. Bostwick, St. John, and Percy Bentley, Middleton, were appointed auditors.

THE PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS.

MANY IMPORTANT SUBJECTS DEALT WITH IN AN INTERESTING MANNER.

President DeWolfe, in rising to deliver his annual address, was greeted with applause.

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION :

In presenting this, my annual address, I venture at the very outset to bespeak your generous indulgence for its deficiency, and your benevolent criticism of its shortcomings. I am fully conscious of the serious disadvantages under which I labor in coming after the masterly, instructive and comprehensive address of my able and respected predecessor in office, Mr. Jarvis, at the magnificent convention in St. John last year—an address which I can neither hope nor pretend to emulate. At the same time I may, without presumption, add that while fully recognizing my own limitations, I yield to no man in the sincerity of my desire, and in my efforts, such as they are, for the furtherance of the work, the extension of the benefits and the enlargement of the usefulness of the Maritime Board of Trade.

MEETING OF COUNCIL.

The question of expense has hitherto been a bar to the holding of more frequent meetings of the executive of the board, and the same is true to some extent as regards the general meetings of the board itself. While the board was in the experimental stage no very definite regulation in this respect could well be adopted, but now that it has become so firmly established and has so thoroughly and successfully vindicated its usefulness and its influence, it is suggested that the time may be opportune for amending the constitution, at least as regards and Westville in Nova Scotia, and Summerside and Souris in P. E. Island, all of which except Summerside have become affiliated with the Maritime Board. I exceedingly regret being unable to report any new organizations from the important Province of New Brunswick, but much good work has been done there, in which your board was heartily seconded by the St. John Board and which will no doubt bear fruit in due season.

AMENDMENT OF THE BOARD OF TRADE ACT.

The Dominion Act "respecting the incorporation of boards of trade" provides that there must be a population of not less than 2,500 in any district in which a board of trade may be incorporated. In many cases we have found that this provision acts as a bar to the formation of a board of trade. There are many towns in the Provinces the population of which is less than 2,500 which nevertheless carry on a considerable business, and are none the less interested in the general welfare and progress of the community and in which the organized action of its best citizens working for the common good could not fail to be of great material and moral advantage. In all such cases I have recommended that towns with a less population than 2,500 should either form their board of trade without asking for its incorporation, or should take in sufficient of the county to form a district with the required population and thus secure incorporation. It is obvious, however, that neither alternative is quite satisfactory,

ANSWERING INQUIRIES.

A highly important feature of the work of your executive, and one calling for the exercise of sound judgment, experience and discretion, is the answering of inquiries and furnishing information on almost every imaginable subject connected with the business, trade, industries, resources, capabilities, transportation facilities, soil, climate, amenities and so on of these three Provinces. These inquiries are not merely interprovincial, as between the Maritime Provinces or as between the Maritime and the other Provinces of the Dominion, but to a considerable extent they may be said to be interimperial, coming as many of them do from the Mother Country and her other colonies, even so far away as Australia. This bespeaks a growing recognition of the community of interests, and a quickening of the pulses and the broadening of the aims of commerce within and throughout the Empire. In order, therefore, that the Maritime Board may be at all times in a position to furnish accurate, intelligent and reliable information in response to the inquiries which come to it, it is of prime importance, that, 1st—every local board should be affiliated with it and be represented on its council; and, 2nd—that every local board should file with the Maritime Board a copy of each annual report or address of its president, together with such other data as to the trade, progress, prospects, and requirements of its district as may be called fo meetings of the executive council. At present no provision whatever is made as to the holding of meetings of the council; and in order to facilitate the work of the board and to keep in touch with and abreast of the changing topics and circumstances of the times, it would appear desirable to provide for, say, regular quarterly meetings of the council, and additional special meetings when necessary at the call of the president. My personal experience and that of the secretary, during the year just closed, point to the necessity of more frequent consultation with the council.

WORK OF THE YEAR.

The work of the board during the past year has been mainly of an educative and organizing character, with a view to arousing public interest and stimulating the formation of local boards of trade in places which are not so represented. In this connection a number of official circulars have been issued giving such explanations and offering such suggestions and observations as seemed to be necessary for the information and guidance of those interesting themselves in organizing such boards.

A circular was also addressed to the mayors of incorporated towns in which there were no boards, with the view of securing their cooperation, and pointing out the advantages which, in many ways, would accrue to a town from the combined action and deliberations of its foremost business and professional men. This entailed a wide and voluminous correspondence with all parts of the Maritime Provinces and has resulted in the establishment of local boards of trade during the year in Yarmouth, Canning, Bridgewater, Liverpool, Digby, Stellarton and it is suggested that, in order to meet such cases, of which there are many in the Maritime Provinces, and to extend the usefulness and advantages of boards of trade, this board should respectfully petition Parliament to amend the Act by substituting a population of 1,000 or 1,500 in lieu of the 2,500 at present.

SOME STATISTICS.

Before passing on this subject, and as illustrative of the increasing interest that is being taken in, and the solid advantages that are derived from the active, intelligent and patriotic work of boards of trade, I may be permitted to quote a few brief figures as to recent progress. There are now 138 boards of trade in Canada, of which no less than 41 are in the Maritime Provinces, viz.: 27 in Nova Scotia, 11 in New Brunswick and 3 in Prince Edward Island. In Nova Scotia, Manitoba and British Columbia the number has doubled within the last four years. A year ago out of a total of 30 boards in the Maritime Provinces, 20 were affiliated with the Maritime Board, and 16 were represented by delegates at the annual convention. This year out of a total of 41 boards, 26 have been affiliated and no less than 16 are represented by the delegates at this meeting. It will be seen that at present Nova Scotia is largely ahead of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, probably because the matter has been more fully and consistently advocated there, but this is a disparity which will no doubt disappear in the course of time as the beneficial work of existing boards becomes more generally recognized, and the advantages of mutual cooperation more generally known.

from time to time. In this way the Maritime Board would be kept continually and continuously in close touch with every varying phase and development of Maritime industry and enterprise; would accumulate a fund of valuable information and statistics, readily available for any purpose; and would be in a position to efficiently and intelligently perform one of its most important functions, viz., to furnish authoritative information regarding any and all parts of these Provinces to the capitalist, manufacturer, the trader, the workman and the immigrant.

BUREAU OF INFORMATION.

I would go further than this, and would respectfully suggest for your consideration the propriety of instituting a Bureau of Information in connection with and under the control of the Maritime Board of Trade. If we would hold our own in the ever-growing, swiftly rushing tide of competition which confronts and envelops us on every side we must bestir ourselves and claim before the world that place and precedence to which our commanding geographical position, our temperate climate and fertile soil, and our splendid natural resources of the field, the forest, the mine and the sea entitle us. Less than ever nowadays is there justification for hiding our lights under a bushel or tying up our talents in a napkin. Therefore, I think that in addition to answering such inquiries as come to us, our Bureau of Information should take up the ground heretofore intermittently occupied by our respective Governments and prepare and distribute in likely quarters booklets and literature regarding the industries, resources, capabilities and prospects of our magnificent Provinces. To this end I would suggest that for the reason that we are a thoroughly representative non-partizan and non-political body, whose sole primary aim is to promote and foster the industrial enterprises, encourage the development of the resources, and aid the extension and expansion of the trade and commerce of the Maritime Provinces, this board should respectfully memorialize the three Governments for an annual grant to enable it to carry on this important and necessary work in the manner and on a scale commensurate with the magnitude of the interests involved. I venture to think, having regard to all the circumstances, that this board could perform the work more economically and to better advantage than it could be done separately by the three Governments.

TOURIST TRAVEL.

In view of the importance which attaches to the encouragement of tourist travel to these Provinces, it was deemed advisable to issue a circular on the subject embodying the resolution passed by the board at its last convention. The rapid and splendid facilities for intercommunication which are now available by rail and steamboat lines, induce, year by year, an increasing influx of summer visitors, to the manifest advantage, direct and indirect, of these Provinces. Concurrently with the expansion of this business, great improvements in many instances have been made in the hotel and boarding house accommodation. There is still, however, much room for improvement, and I would again press upon delegates the desirability of providing good and ample accommodation for this class of travel. Other things being suitable and in keeping, and the manifold natural beauties and picturesque scenery which abound in these Provinces, coupled with their historic and romantic associations, will attract still larger and larger numbers to enjoy the cool invigorating breezes of our shores. And it should be remembered that everyone who has been well treated goes away thoroughly delighted and becomes for the future one of our best and cheapest advertising agents. Besides which this frequent intercourse tends to make ourselves and our country better known, and explodes the idea that ours is a worthless and barren terra incognita.

COUNTY BOARDS OF TRADE.

Kings county Nova Scotia, is the only county in the Maritime Provinces, and, as far as I know, in the Dominion, in which a board of trade has been organized. This board has been doing very useful and efficient work, more especially in connection with matters affecting agricultural interests, and it has adopted the highly commendable plan of holding its meetings alternately at different centres in the county. Now, the agricultural, if not the most, is at the least one of the most important industries in these Provinces, and while the Fruit Growers' Association, Farmers' Association, the Stock Breeders' Association, and the Farmers' Institute have done and are doing much useful and valuable work for the advancement of agriculture and the improvement of agricultural methods and processes, still I think it cannot be denied that a live and energetic board of trade in each county holding frequent meetings in different localities would do much more to arouse and keep alive the interest and to stimulate the activity of the agricultural community. The stress of modern competition presses as heavily and tells as keenly upon the agricultural as upon any other industry, and accordingly it would appear that the formation of county boards of trade with the objects of improving the condition, protecting the interest, increasing the production, and enlarging the markets of the agriculturist, would be a step in the right direction, leading to large benefit results.

COLD STORAGE.

For instance, one of the questions which might very appropriately engage the attention of county boards and upon which their deliverances would be of importance and value is that of cold storage. The transport to and the placing upon the markets of the world of our unrivalled agricultural and horticultural products in a sound, fresh, untainted and attractive condition has become for us one of the most important questions of the time, on the proper solution of which will depend to a large degree the future development and expansion of our productive energies. What has been done for the products of distant New Zealand and Australia surely can be done, and certainly ought to be done, for the perishable and delicate products of our Provinces. The wide range and admitted excellence of our products and our proximity to the British markets, by reason of our favorable geographical position, should give, and, under proper conditions of handling and transit, would give us a commanding and remunerative position and lead to extraordinary development along the lines of agricultural and horticultural industries and enterprises. What is needed to secure and maintain this position beyond all question of rivalry and competition is a cheap and efficient cold storage equipment on our railways at our ocean seaports and on our trans-atlantic steamship lines. To attain so desirable and necessary a consummation, our best efforts should be directed.

FAST ATLANTIC SERVICE.

The subject of the establishment of a fast Atlantic mail and passenger service between Canada and Great Britain has been more or less under consideration and discussion during the past few years, and I observe that it is among the matters that are to come before the present convention. It is to my mind a question of the very greatest importance to Canada, and especially to these Provinces. Rapid transit for mails, passengers and certain kinds of freight has come to be an essential necessity of our times, and every consideration points to the policy, the wisdom and the common sense of passing our own traffic through our own magnificent gateways, which are among the most accessible, secure and commodious on the whole Atlantic seaboard, rather than divert it through and help to build up foreign and competitive ports. Powerfully established enterprises and rival interest, together with doubts as to the remunerative character of the undertaking have hitherto prevented the establishment of such a fast and perfectly equipped line as a rapidly developing vitality of our national life and the circumstances and exigencies of the times demand. I am

The President—Mr. W. S. Loggie,
Chatham, N. B.

of those who believe, that given the necessary facilities and accommodation, trade as surely and invariably follows the route as it follows the flag. We can all remember when the Canadian Pacific Railway was being projected, the chorus of pessimistic alarm with which the daring scheme was greeted and the prophecies that it would never earn sufficient to pay for its axle grease. I believe that the establishment of a fast Atlantic service equal to the best in point of speed equipment and accommodation would be equally successful and contribute equally to the advantage, development and up-building of the Dominion. It is clearly inevitable that such a line by the mere force of geographical consideration would command and attract an enormous and ever-increasing traffic and would form not the least important link in the world encircling chain which binds the Empire together.

PREFERENTIAL TRADE.

Among other subjects to which the attention of the convention will be invited, but not the least important and not the least far reaching in its consequences, if consummated, is that of preferential trade within the Empire. It is a subject beset with many difficulties and regarding which there are wide divergencies of view. It is a notable fact that of recent years the trend of public opinion, both in Great Britain and the Colonies, has been steadily converging towards this end, accelerated by the amazing development and rapidly-growing competition of foreign countries in every branch of commercial industry and production. It seems clear that we are on the eve of great economic and commercial changes, and it is obvious that the adoption of the principle of preferential trade within the Empire would lead to an enormous development in every branch of agricultural industry throughout Canada.

LEGISLATIVE UNION.

The question of a legislative union for the Maritime Provinces has at various times been a subject of public discussion, which, so far, has been barren of any practical results. The question will again be a matter of consideration at this meeting, and it is hoped that its ventilation will tend to forward the movement a stage or two. It needs little or no argument to show that such a union would lead to great and radical economy in legislative and administrative expenses, would tend to larger and better practical results by reason of the combination and concentration of public institutions, would create a broader conception and a wider recognition of the identity of our material interests, would allay petty jealousies which have hitherto clogged our progress, and would give us a solid and important political entity which would command no mean weight and potency in the Parliament of Canada and the councils of the nation. These are results that are undoubtedly within our achievement whenever the people of these Provinces make up their minds to have them. The progress may be slow, because the established interests and traditional associations to overcome are important and deep rooted. But we are not altogether standing still, and in various ways the Provinces are coming closer together. A very important step forward has been taken in the proposal for the establishment of a Maritime College of Agriculture and the Maritime Technical Training College, under the joint auspices and aid of the Maritime Governments. The successful and harmonious working of our own board is another encouraging instance of progress being made.

OTHER MATTERS.

Various other subjects will come up for discussion at this meeting which cannot be referred to now without overswelling the limits of this address, notably among which is that dealing with the amazing development of the coal, iron, steel and allied industries now in progress, which bids fair to convert the northeastern corner of Nova Scotia into a populous hive of industry, the future of which no man can foresee. It will be noted that none of the subjects are of merely local importance, it being a sound rule to leave all such matters to be dealt with exclusively by the local boards, reserving for the cognizance of this board subjects of provincial, interprovincial and national importance.

THE LATE MR. DWYER.

While we have reason to congratulate ourselves upon the progress which has been made, and the gratifying measure of success which has attended our efforts, we have, I regret to say, one great and irretrievable loss to deplore in the lamented death of the late Michael Dwyer, Esq., of Halifax. Mr. Dwyer was one of the foremost and most active promoters and founders of the Maritime Board of Trade; he took a hearty personal interest in all its business and proceedings, and his wide experience, acute intelligence and matured judgment were at all times freely, fully and cheerfully at our service. I therefore think it would be proper and becoming for this board to place formally on record an expression of its appreciation of the eminent services rendered to it by the deceased gentleman, and of the all but irreparable loss it has sustained by his premature and unexpected death.

SOUTH-AFRICAN WAR.

Since last convention the British Government was forced into a war with the Boer Republics, in order to repel an invasion of British territory and to redress the grievances and secure the rights and liberties of British subjects. The outbreak of the war gave the signal for a remarkable and significant exhibition of patriotic loyalty throughout all the colonies and dependencies of the Empire, each vying with the other in their offers of aid to the Mother Country. The Government of Canada equipped and dispatched to South Africa two contingents of over 1,000 each composed of volunteers from all branches of the service, and Lord Strathcona and Mount Royal at his own expense equipped and sent out a body of 500, known as Strathcona's Horse. We have all followed with keen interest their career in the field, and we have read from time to time with a glow of pride how with intrepid valor they sustained the honor of their country in many a desperate battle, winning the laurels of victory and earning unstinted commendation on all hands from the Field Marshal Commanding downward. But war has its dark as well as its bright sides. Our own Provinces furnished their quotas of gallant volunteers, and while we rejoice with the surviving victors we none the less remember with sorrowing pride that some of our best young blood was spilt and some of our noblest young lives went out on the far South-African field in defence of Britain and for the honor and glory of their native land. Their deaths will not have been in vain, but will, I firmly believe, be a shining mark for future generations of one of the most remarkable turning points in the long and glorious history of the British race and the British Empire.

CLOSING REMARKS.

Before closing this address, I feel it not less a pleasure than a duty to refer to the valuable services of Mr. Calkin, your secretary-treasurer for the past year. He has been not merely assiduous but indefatigable in the performance of the duties devolving upon him, which have now grown to be of considerable importance and volume, and he has brought a zeal and enthusiasm into the work which were both infectious and refreshing. I am indebted to him for much useful assistance and information; and in this respect my thanks are also due to many members of council, and to officials of the local board of trade. Nor must I omit to acknowledge, here and now, our obligations to the regular press and to the trade journals of the country for the copious space they have devoted, or, I might say, donated, and the prominence they have given to reports of the proceedings of your board and the several local boards. By this means a general interest has been created in and an impetus has been given to our work which has been of incalculable service and is bearing good fruit from day to day.

I feel that I have trespassed too much and too long upon your time and patience, and will now conclude by expressing the hope that the result of your action and deliberation at this meeting will mark another step forward in the history of the board, and will tend to still further broaden its scope and extend its usefulness; to still further justify its claims to represent the concrete intelligence, experience and judgment of our foremost practical business men on all subjects affecting the material interests, progress and prosperity of the Maritime Provinces and of the Dominion; and to still further illustrate the supreme advantage of working together in harmony, board with board and Province with Province, to foster and promote our common objects and our common aims.

The president was greeted with loud applause as he took his seat, and, on motion of Mayor Loggie, of Chatham, the report was received, and a hearty vote of thanks conveyed to Mr. DeWolfe for the excellent address delivered by him.

THE PRESIDENT'S REPLY.

"I may say," remarked the president, as he arose to acknowledge the vote, "that I am very much obliged, and I only hope that when I vacate this chair the work will be easier for my successor. The secretary and myself have spent many hours trying to work out what we thought would be for the best interest of the Maritime Provinces. I am very much pleased to see such a representative gathering. Mr. Jarvis in his annual report last year congratulated the convention on its representative character. I am much pleased to say that the gathering here to-day is even more representative than that which we had in the winter port last year. I am glad that the delegates have, by their presence, proved that the Maritime Board of Trade has come to stay." In conclusion, he expressed the opinion, amid applause, that a fast winter steamship service would only be brought about through the efforts of the Board of Trade of the Maritime Provinces.

THE SECRETARY-TREASURER'S REPORT.

Mr. G. E. Calkin, the secretary-treasurer, presented his annual report, and it was a most satisfactory one. He pointed out that there were 26 boards of trade out of 40 in the three Provinces that were affiliated with the Maritime Board of Trade. Last year 20 were affiliated. The number of boards represented at the present convention was 16, the same as last year. The reason the number was not larger was that some of the most important boards in the Maritime Provinces, and ones which had hitherto always sent representatives, were, through unforeseen circumstances, unable this year to send delegates. He spoke of the difficulty he had experienced in getting the officers of some of the boards to reply promptly to his communications, and urged a reform in that respect. Within the Maritime Provinces there were many men of marked ability connected with the board who could do a great deal to advance the interests of not only that part of the country, but those of the Dominion as a whole. He favored the appointment of a permanent secretary, although under no circumstances would he accept the office himself.

The finances, he said, were in a much better condition than last year. More money came in, and there was more on hand. Still, some of the boards had been careless in remitting their per capita tax. The receipts during the year totalled $117, which was larger than in any previous year. The expenditures during the year were $32.50. Taking the amount carried forward from last year, the balance at present in his hands is about $140.

There are in the Maritime Provinces 41 boards of trade, of which, as already pointed out, 26 are affiliated with the Maritime Board. There are 3 boards in Prince Edward Island, 11 in New Brunswick and 27 in Nova Scotia. The boards in the three Provinces, alphabetically arranged, are as follows :

SUBJECTS FOR DISCUSSION.

The following were appointed a committee to arrange the order in which the subjects for discussion should be taken up : Messrs. J. E. Woodworth, Berwick ; W. S. Loggie, Chatham ; A. J. Smith, Halifax ; H. Wickwire, Kentville ; J. Hubbard, Kings County ; Percy Bentley, Middleton ; W. M. Jarvis, St. John ; A. R. Munro, Westville ; W. J. Mills, Sussex ; H. W. MacKenna, Parrsboro' ; Dr. Muir, Truro ; J. W. Blanchard, Windsor.

The convention adjourned at 10.50 p.m. to meet on Thursday morning.

THURSDAY'S SESSION.

The convention met at 10 o'clock on Thursday morning.

The following telegram was read from Mr. E. C. Hanrahan, president of the Sydney Board of Trade : "Regret exceedingly that circumstances prevent Sydney being represented at your meeting. With best wishes and hoping to have you meet here next time, where our citizens will give you right royal greeting."

A letter was read from J. W. Bigelow, Wolfville, in which was enclosed the following resolution :

Resolved, that the Maritime Board of Trade urge upon the several Provincial Governments the necessity of immediately securing space and making arrangements for a creditable exhibit of the products of the Maritime Provinces at the Pan-American Exposition to be held at Buffalo.

The Secretary-Treasurer—Mr. D. G. Smith, Chatham, N.B.

NOMINATING COMMITTEE.

On motion of Messrs. D. G. Smith and T. C. Allison, the gentlemen composing the committee on subjects for discussion were delegated to also act as the nominating committee, with the addition of the names of Messrs. Fred Ham, St. Stephens, and J. Underwood, New Glasgow.

THE NEW OFFICERS.

The nominating committee retired, and after an absence of half an hour or more presented the following list of officers :

President—W. S. Loggie, Chatham, N.B.
 Vice-President for Nova Scotia—Dr. Muir, Truro.
 Vice-President for P.E.I.—Horace Haszard, Charlottetown.
 Secretary—D. G. Smith, Chatham, N.B.

The announcement was greeted with applause, and, on motion of Messrs. W. M. Jarvis and H. W. MacKenna, the report of the nominating committee was unanimously concurred in.

Amid applause Messrs. Loggie and Dr. Muir were escorted to the platform, and Mr. D. G. Smith to the secretary's desk.

"Before I take the chair," began the new president, "allow me to move a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. DeWolfe for his excellent work as president during the past year." (Hear, hear.) "I am sure Mr. DeWolfe will take the same interest and will lend all the help he can to the new president, and will do all he can, as in the past, to advance the interests of this board."

This motion was also carried by a standing vote.

Retiring President DeWolfe, in acknowledging the vote of thanks, spoke in part as follows : "I feel very grateful to you, gentlemen, for having extended to me this very hearty vote of thanks. I have left no stone unturned in trying to advance the interests of the Maritime Board of Trade. At the same time I realize that I have made a great many mistakes. As I said last year, I was following in the steps of old and tried veterans. I do not know of any position in the Maritime Provinces in which there is so much to gain or to which so much honor is attached as that of president of the Maritime Board of Trade." (Hear, hear.) "To see the way in which the representatives yesterday and to-day have worked for the good of the Maritime Provinces and for the good of the Dominion of Canada is something to be proud of. I have on my right the father of the Maritime Board of Trade. I have reference to Mr. Troop. He has never missed but one convention, and that was last year in St. John, when an accident prevented him putting in an appearance. The time has come when the Maritime Board of Trade is a power in the land, and the Government does not cast aside any resolutions or letters addressed to it from this board. I have much pleasure in resigning my position to the man whom you have elected, a man who is deeply interested in the Maritime Provinces. In your new officers you have the strongest team you ever had. I look for an earthquake." (Laughter.)

Mr. W. M. Jarvis, St. John, moved the suspension of the rules in order that he might introduce a special vote of thanks to Mr. G. E. Calkin, the secretary of the Maritime Board of Trade for the services he had rendered during the year and also that the sum of $50 be set aside for his use.

The motion was seconded by Mr. Percy Bentley and carried by a standing vote.

Mr. Calkin thanked the board and added : "I have, with all my shortcomings, always taken an interest in board of trade matters and I always shall." (Applause.)

CHATHAM THE NEXT PLACE OF MEETING.

Mr. D. G. Smith, the new secretary, had in the meantime been quietly sitting at his desk. "But a few remarks were now demanded from him. "I thank you," he said, "for the honor you have conferred upon me. I hope I shall be able to do as satisfactory work as has the late secretary. If I can make any improvement I shall try and do so. While I am on my feet I will take the opportunity of moving that the next annual meeting of the Maritime Board of Trade be held in Chatham, N.B."

Just at that moment, a telegram was handed to Mr. M. G. DeWolfe. It turned out to be from the Chatham Board of Trade, inviting the Maritime Board to hold its next convention in that town. There was a not devolved upon someone else. However, he felt that it was his duty to introduce the subject when called upon to do so. "I regard," he continued, "this question as the most important that looms up before the Canadian people and of this Empire. However little we may now think of the question to-day, as truly as we live of Canada, as truly as we have a great country in Australia, as truly as we have nearly one-third of the world's territory, this question will force itself upon our attention until it is an accomplished fact."

He then referred to the free trade movement in England as led by Cobden, and the difficulties the latter contended with. At that time Great Britain had no rivals, except France, Spain and Portugal. He referred to the progress of Great Britain under free Britain, but the material for the interchange of commodities between all nations."

The aggregate exports of the British colonies were, he said, about $1,500,000,000 in round numbers as far as his memory served him. The imports were somewhat larger. Of only about 14 per cent. was with the Mother Country. It ought to be, he declared, 50 per cent. at least. By a simple preferential tariff, foreign countries would be prevented from taking this trade from her.

"How indifferently this matter may be treated to-night or in the near future," he continued, "as sure as we are a living people we shall yet awaken ourselves and help to wake up the Australian colonies and laugh among the members at the coincidence.

Then Mr. W. M. Jarvis seconded Mr. Smith's resolution, which was carried unanimously.

The convention adjourned at 12.30 p.m. to meet again at 8 p.m.

In the afternoon, the delegates were taken by vehicles to "Look Out," as guests of the Kentville and Kings County Boards of Trade. Further particulars of this will be found elsewhere.

The evening session was opened shortly after 8 o'clock. There was a good attendance of members.

After routine, the first subject introduced was

PREFERENTIAL TRADE.

The subject was introduced by Mr. J. A. Chipman, Halifax. In doing so, he said he regretted exceedingly that the duty had trade, and he'd that up to 1882 no country had made greater progress. Then came in the competition of the United States and of Germany, and, not only in foreign markets, but in the British market itself.

Canada in the years gone by only had a small population, and

COULD SCARCELY FEED HERSELF.

Now things are changed. We have a larger population, and, with our minerals, timber and food products, it is possible for us to supply the British Empire itself.

Referring again to the competition of Germany and the United States in the home, foreign and colonial market, he continued: "Are we to open our markets of the Empire to the competition of the world, while they shut us out with high tariffs and obnoxious bounty systems? I have shown that we have not only the material to supply Great the West Indian Islands to the importance of this great question." (Applause).

He then read the following resolution:

Resolved, that in the opinion of this convention mutual preferential trade within the British Empire would greatly tend to cement the unity of the Empire, vastly assist in developing the material resources of the several colonies and dependencies thereof, hold a restraining influence upon immigration, directing it from foreign to countries within the Empire, and conducing to a more equitable system of commercial intercourse between the Empire and the several nations of the world.

Before taking his seat, Mr. Chipman said: "We hear sometimes that Great Britain is afraid of a mutual preferential trade between herself and her colonies and dependencies on account of her large trade with foreign countries. I tell you, gentlemen, that before preferential trade within the Empire was in existence five years the United States and other foreign countries would, to use an Americanism, be hustling to come in and get a share of the preferential trade." (Laughter and applause.)

Mr. W. M. Jarvis, St. John, said he had much pleasure in seconding the resolution. "It is a question of vast importance," he declared. "And it is when you find such a strong public opinion as now exists among all people in Canada for a continuance of the present preferential tariff with Great Britain." (Hear, hear.)

Without further discussion the motion was put and carried unanimously.

TRADE WITH THE WEST INDIES.

The subject of the West Indian trade was introduced by Mr. I. C. Stewart, of Halifax, who, early in the year, spent three months in the Leeward Islands. He said it was a subject which indirectly interests every merchant and every manufacturer in the Province of Nova Scotia, because "it involves one of our most, if not the most, important of our industries, namely, that of fish. It concerns the counties of Lunenburg, Queens, Shelburne and Yarmouth directly, and it concerns the supply houses and exporters of Halifax almost, if not quite, as seriously."

Continuing, Mr. Stewart spoke in part as follows: "The West Indian trade of Nova Scotia is

ONE OF THE OLDEST SURVIVING INDUSTRIES of our people. I am not as familiar with the early history of the trade as the majority of those present, but anyone who has lived in Halifax for any length of time during the past 10 years cannot fail to have heard of the

when the docks were alive with small shipping and money was easily made by Halifax exporters. We are not doing as large a business to day with the British West Indies as we did some years ago, and further along in my argument I shall have occasion to show why this is so. At present, however, our exports of dried fish to the British West Indies and British Guiana are worth about $1,250,000 a year. I estimate this from the statistics given in the Trade Returns, which show direct exports of $811,827. The balance I estimate to be sent to New York, as our exports to New York show a total of $540,000, much of which, I am informed, is resold to the West Indies. The total value of Canada's dried fish exports in 1899 was $2,737,000, of which the Province of Nova Scotia supplied $2,345,000; and of this a little more than two-fifths went directly and indirectly to the British West Indies and British Guiana.

THE SUGAR INDUSTRY.

"I had not been longer among the business people of the West Indies than a few weeks when I made up my mind that the successful extension of trade between Canada and the West Indies, particularly as regards fish, depends upon the prosperity of the sugar industry; but when I came to consider what Canada could do alone towards assisting the West Indies to put that industry on a sounder basis, I came to the conclusion that we could do but very little. The market for sugar and other West Indian products in Canada is,

UNFORTUNATELY, RESTRICTED, and it will be many years before Canada is large enough and wealthy enough to consume all that the British West Indies can produce; so it became apparent to me that it was useless to hope for a speedy development of a large trade between Canada and the West Indies. But, as I thought more carefully, more deeply on the matter, it occurred to me that we might by assisting the West Indies to find a larger market, if we could not give them the larger market ourselves. And, recalling the important place that Canada now holds in the councils of the Empire, it began to impress itself upon my mind that Canada might be able to bring to bear some influence upon the Mother Country to induce her to take the necessary steps to provide a market among her consumers for the sugar which the West Indies can produce, and would be producing, were it not for the unfair competition of the bounty countries.

HELP TO DEVELOP THIS TRADE

PREFERENTIAL TRADE

within the Empire would settle this difficulty at once, and if I could have my way I would make an arrangement whereby England would give the West Indies such a preference for her products as would insure them a market. In return for this the British West Indies would give a preference for the products of both Britain and her colonies. This would secure Canada the foodstuffs trade of the British West Indies. And, of course, as Canada should not expect to get something for nothing, she in turn would give a special preference to Great Britain."

Mr. Stewart dealt exhaustively with the history of the sugar in the West Indies during the last 200 years, and showed that out of a total of 8,321,733 tons of sugar (5,608,000 tons of beet and 2,700,000 tons of cane sugar) produced in the world in 1898-99, the British West Indies only contributed one thirty-fifth. "The cause of this," he declared, "is the iniquitous policy of the bounty system, which the British Government, whom we are all taught to regard with the utmost reverence, seems disposed to treat with indifference. Were it not for the United States, which in 1896 by enforcing countervailing duties on bounty fed sugars, the British West Indies would to day be hovering on the brink, if not already in the pit, of bankruptcy. Is it a position we should view with equanimity that one of the oldest and most loyal colonies of the Empire is now dependent upon the United States, and is asking the Mother Country in vain for that justice which it has from the hands of a foreign nation?

"We have practically lost our market in Porto Rico for our fish, and that of Cuba will soon follow. These, in themselves, mean $800,000 of a deduction from our fish sales. The British West Indies should have fair play, and Canada, as the strongest colony in the Empire, should see that they get it."

TRADE OF THE LEEWARD ISLANDS.

Mr. Stewart pointed out that the Leeward Islands annually exported about 20,000 tons of sugar and 4,250 puncheons of molasses, of the total value of $925,000, equal to a total value per head of $13.26. The total area under cultivation in the Islands he estimated at about 35,000 acres, less than 1-13th of the total acreage of the Islands. The present method of sugar manufacture in the Leeward Islands is and he had been informed that, with the vacuum process of manufacture, 15 to 20 per cent. more juice would be obtained from the cane.

The consumption of flour by the Leeward Islands is 37,000 barrels annually; of fish, 21,000 quintals; of lumber, 1,500,000 feet; of cheese, 40,000 lb., and of butter, 100,000 lb. He held that by increasing the production of the sugar crop the purchasing power of the Islands would be increased proportionately.

In Barbadoes, he said, the sugar production during the past 10 years had averaged 60,000 tons. The best year was in 1890 when 85,000 tons were produced. "I have been told by the planters," he added, "that although 90 per cent. of the cultivable land in Barbadoes is now under cultivation, that with the introduction of capital and new machinery, which will immediately follow a settlement of the sugar bounties, the Island can easily produce from 110,000 to 120,000 tons per year. So on through the different colonies of St. Lucia, St. Vincent, Trinidad, British Guiana and Jamaica, there is a possible output of 1,000,000 tons; and the same argument which I have made with regard to increasing the consumptive capacity of the Leeward Islands will, to a greater or less extent, hold good elsewhere."

In regard to Skirt Bindings, the letters stamped on the back of every yard, or printed on the label, indicate the BEST Skirt Bindings it is possible to produce. AND WHY?

BECAUSE they are manufactured from a velveteen especially made for skirt binding purposes.

BECAUSE they are made by a firm who make a specialty of skirt bindings and who manufacture nothing else.

BECAUSE the plant in which they are made is the largest of its kind in the world, and is fitted with the most modern, up-to-date improvements, and these facts, coupled with the S. H. & M. Co.'s extensive and exclusive experience in this line, is the reason why the S. H. & M. Skirt Bindings are far and away ahead of all others.

Speaking of the West Indian Islands in general, he said they bought from all sources 650,000 barrels of flour, valued at $3,000,000; 2,750,000 lb. of butter, valued at $11,560,000; 900,000 lb. of cheese, valued at $110,000. The value of the lumber was $800,000. The total imports of the British West Indies and British Guiana for the last fiscal year were $32,000,000, and the total exports $37,000,000. The total population of the British West Indies and British Guiana is 1,650,000, and the per capita imports about $19.50.

Before taking his seat Mr. Stewart moved the following resolution :

Whereas the British West India Islands and British Guiana are very important markets for Canadian products, and whereas anything which retards the industrial progress of these countries is of serious consequence to Canada ;

Therefore, resolved that this convention is in entire sympathy with and cordially supports the

to be raised equal to the amount of the duty. The result has been that our refiners, instead of being able to use West Indian cane sugar, have been compelled to go into the European market and buy beet sugar is cheaper than the United States can afford to pay. The duty in the United States is that much higher than it is in Canada. You can understand that this works to our disadvantage.

"Just as long as these advantages are given to West Indian sugars by the United States, just as long as Great Britain does not put on countervailing duty, and just as long as Canada does not, just as long will we be handicapped in doing business with the West Indies.

NO SUGAR, NO FISH.

"Our not being able to take West Indian sugar means that they cannot take our fish."

25 per cent. of the duty. And, I think, with the preference of $33\frac{1}{3}$ per cent. we shall next year do a better trade with the British West Indies. At the same time, I do not think it will do very much. It will still allow a preference to be given to beet sugar.

RAW SUGAR USED BY CANADIAN REFINERIES.

"At one time the Canadian refineries used only one third of beet-root sugar. Then it was increased to one-half, until to-day they nearly altogether use beet-root sugar for refining purposes."

He referred to the bad effect of the bounty-fed sugar on the refining industry in Great Britain, and, while it was claimed that the jam industry there had greatly benefited as a result of the cheap sugar, yet he did not think it was fair that European countries should be encouraged to put large representations made by British Guiana and the British West Indies to the Imperial Government in favor of countervailing duties on bounty-fed sugars.

Mr. A. E. Jones, Halifax, seconded the resolution. He said that, as the prosperity of the West India Islands depends a great deal upon the sugar industry, it followed that if there is to be any increase in our trade with them there must be an improvement in the condition of the industry. "The price of sugar," he continued, "has been unremunerative for a number of years, and its effect upon the industry in the West Indies has been felt in Nova Scotia. The United States, which are in the West Indies, saw at once their chance, and, while England stood aloof, they stepped in, and, by putting on countervailing duties, they caused the price of West Indian sugar

Mr. George Mitchell, M.P., quite agreed with what the previous speakers had said in regard to the importance of the West Indian trade. At any rate it could be made one of the most important. "However," he declared, "if an extension of the trade comes it must come largely from the Upper Provinces.

UPPER PROVINCES MUST HELP.

"Unless we get those in the Upper Provinces of Canada to take an intelligent interest in the West Indian trade we cannot expect an extension of trade. We want their cooperation."

He referred to the difficulties under which they, the business men of Halifax, had labored, and added: "It is useless to say that the Government has done nothing. It gave West Indian products a preference of bounties on sugar, and thus destroy the sugar industry of the British West India Islands.

Mr. J. W. Blanchard, Windsor, N. S. : "Would political union of the West Indies with Canada, in your opinion, be beneficial?"

A COMMERCIAL TREATY WANTED.

Mr. Mitchell: "I am very much afraid that political union with the British West Indies is not feasible at present. I believe it would be a good thing if we could obtain a commercial treaty with the West Indies. That is what we want."

POSSIBILITIES FOR BUTTER AND CHEESE.

Mr. I. C. Stewart, in reply to Mr. Dimock, said that he found that most of the cheese being sold in the West Indies came from New York, and that the cost of the cheese in New York was a little above the price at which similar cheese sold in Canada. The cheese was not as rich as Canadian cheese, but one difficulty with the latter was that it began to crumble after being opened up, while the cheese from the United States sliced nicely. With regard to butter, he said there was a large importation. A great deal of the butter they import comes from France. It is very yellow, is highly salted and comes in kegs. High-grade butter in 1-lb. tins comes from Denmark, France and Italy. "I do not," he said, "think there should be much difficulty in shipping Canadian butter to the British West Indies. In fact, one house in Halifax is already exporting fairly large quantities."

Speaking of the steamship service, he expressed the opinion that the service from Halifax and St. John was as good, if not better, than that from New York.

"The way to do business," concluded Mr. Stewart, "is this: We have got to take hold of the trade, study it out and make up our minds that perhaps for the first few years we will not make money."

The motion was then put and carried unanimously.

RECIPROCITY WITH TRINIDAD.

Mr. George Mitchell, M.P., introduced the following resolution, which, after being seconded by Mr. George E. Boak, was carried unanimously and without debate.

Whereas an offer was recently made by the Government of the Dominion of Canada to the Government of the Island of Trinidad, in the British West Indies, of a reciprocal commercial arrangement, which was declined by the Legislature of said island in favor of a provisional arrangement made with the Government of the United States of America, and

Whereas said provisional arrangement has since been cancelled, and the reopening of negotiations with the Government of Canada is again feasible;

Therefore, resolved that this convention, feeling that great benefit would result to the Maritime Provinces and to the Dominion of Canada generally by the consummation of such an arrangement as proposed, would strongly urge upon the Government of the Dominion of Canada the great importance of the matter, and expresses the hope that nothing shall be lacking on their part towards the bringing about of so desirable a matter.

DOMINION ATLANTIC CAR SERVICE.

Mr. J. W. Blanchard, Windsor, complained that manufacturers and others were put to a great deal of inconvenience through inability to get a proper supply of freight cars on the Dominion Atlantic railway. He knew of one manufacturer who had been anxiously waiting for cars since the spring, and another had told him that he could use 200 cars if he could secure them. He explained that the resolution he had intended submitting was not ready, as he had not expected the subject to be brought up at as early a stage of the convention.

Dr. Black, Windsor, declared the shortage of freight cars on the Dominion Atlantic railway was a long-standing grievance with the farmers, manufacturers and merchants. "And there appears to be whatever," he declared. "We thought that by bringing the matter to the attention of this board that the Dominion Atlantic railway might be induced to provide the necessary cars. I do not think there is anyone who wishes to be unreasonable in this matter. At times, when apples are being shipped, I think the public would be willing to put up with some inconvenience, but when shippers have to wait month after month for cars it gets to be pretty nearly unendurable. Of course, the Dominion Atlantic railway is the only line upon which they can depend.

THE MONEY OF THE PEOPLE

has gone into the D.A.R., and they naturally expect to have the necessary accommodation."

Mayor Yould, mechanical superintendent of the D.A.R.: "I admit there are times when there are some little delay, but I think the gentlemen who have introduced this subject have been misinformed. A good deal of the freight goes up to Montreal, and no other small railway like ours would dare to allow its cars to go long distances. With the number of cars we have, we have got to depend a great deal on the Government road, and the most of the delay spoken of is caused by the Government road not supplying sufficient cars. And then, in the 800 miles to Montreal, we are only allowed 32 miles of mileage. If we have got to supply more rolling stock we must ask for more despatch in the unloading of cars. But we have provided we get quick despatch. I can assure you that 25 per cent. of our freight cars are lying on the sidings waiting for something to do."

Mr. Yould stated that the D.A.R. had ordered more freight cars in order to increase the apple-carrying capacity of the line and also two new locomotives. Then, in Kentville, they were building six 30 ton cars.

Mr. Blanchard asked Mr. Yould why his company could not supply the 200 flat cars to which he referred.

Mr. Yould: "Where does he want to send the cars?"

Mr. Blanchard: "I cannot say."

Mr. Yould: "If it is to the I.C.R. we cannot send them."

DELAYS ON ENGLISH GOODS.

Mr. M. G. DeWolfe thought it was a serious matter, and he considered it would be well, therefore, to have the matter of the D.A.R., Mr. Gifkins, present, with a view of getting a statement from him. "I understand," he continued, "that it sometimes it takes as long as six days to bring goods from Halifax to Windsor. This is an important matter, especially when English goods were being brought in."

Mr. Blanchard: "It often takes five days."

Mr. Yould: "As far as English goods are concerned, I am not in a position to say anything." He moved that in the absence of the president of the D.A.R. further consideration of the questions under discussion be left over till the following day.

It was so decided.

RAILWAY FREIGHT RATES ON APPLES.

The subject was introduced by Mr. Peter Innes, president of the Kings County Board of Trade and also vice president of the Fruit Growers' Association of that county. In his introductory remarks he referred to the development of the apple-growing industry in Nova Scotia. "A few years ago the production of apples in this Province was very small; last year the production was 500,000 barrels."

He said the burden of his complaint was in regard to the classification. The classification was the same as it was when apples were considered to be a luxury. Apples were in the second-class while flour was under the fifth and eighth classes, a classification which was ridiculous, and made a difference, roughly speaking, of 25 per cent. in the case of carriage.

The quantity of flour brought annually from Ontario into the Province was probably about 30,000 barrels, yet, for export alone, 375,000 barrels of apples were shipped from the Province besides which there were, he estimated, about 125,000 shipped over the railways for home consumption. The question therefore concerned an important industry.

The only way in which they hoped to get redress was to take the matter before the Railway Committee of the Dominion Government, and there ask that the classification on apples be made the same as that on flour.

It was eventually decided, at the request of some members, to defer further consideration of the question till Friday when it was expected that President Gifkins of the D. A. R. would be present.

MAIL SERVICE BETWEEN PARRSBORO' AND WOLFVILLE.

Mr. H. W. MacKenna, Parrsboro', said that what was desired was a daily steamboat mail service between Parrsboro' and Windsor. The distance between those places was only about 20 miles across the Minas Basin, and yet a letter posted in Parrsboro, could not reach Wolfville or any other place in Western Nova Scotia until two days later. It had, for example, to go to Halifax, where it remained over night, going on to its destination next day. In this way it took four days to get a reply. The population of Parrsboro' was only about 200, but the mail matter of 10,000 people passed through there. The matter was also important from the tourist standpoint.

The further consideration of this question was also deferred for a later session.

FRIDAY'S SESSION.

When the convention was called to order on Friday morning the attendance was small, smaller by a great deal than during any previous session, a number of the delegates having returned to their homes by the early trains. At the same time, however, a larger number of delegates were present than is usual on the last day of the convention.

Mr. Jarvis, St. John, stated that the subject of a permanent secretary would probably come up during the day, and, as he would shortly be leaving for home, he wished to say that the constitution provided for the appointment of a secretary. "The secretary for the ensuing year," he added, "has already been elected, so that you cannot appoint a permanent secretary for the present year."

MARINE INSURANCE RATES.

Mr. W. M. Jarvis, St. John, presented the following resolution :

Whereas, the rates of marine insurance in connection with the Maritime Province ports, as fixed by the British marine insurance, are higher than those from the Atlantic ports of the United States of America, and whereas, no such discriminating rates are enforced by United States marine insurance companies, and in the opinion of this board such higher rates are not justified by any disasters which have occurred in connection with Maritime Province ports;

Therefore resolved, that this board, feeling that such discrimination is regrettable, would respectfully request the committee of Lloyds to reconsider the rates charged on risks to or from Maritime Province ports with a view to the modification of the present rates, and that a copy of this resolution be certified by the president and secretary and be sent to the committee of Lloyds.

In speaking to his motion, Mr. Jarvis said the present discriminating rates were of recent origin, and applied to all Canadian Atlantic ports. He did not intend to say anything in regard to the St. Lawrence.

The people interested in that route could look after themselves. "We have, however," he declared, "to point out there has been in connection with the Maritime Province ports, and leave our friends in the West to act for themselves."

THE VERY SMALL LOSS

He said that efforts had repeatedly been made to have the discriminating rates removed, but without success. "It is only by importuning like the widow we are told about in Scripture that we can hope to secure our rights," he declared.

The inspection of deck loads, he declared to be uncalled for, and as far as the Maritime Provinces were concerned, was unnecessary. The inspection was practically only done in the large ports, while most of the shipments of lumber in the Maritime Provinces were made largely from the small ports. In conclusion, he showed that the losses from steamers running from ports in the Maritime Provinces were practically nil. "And yet," he said, "our ports are being discriminated against in favor of United States ports."

The motion was seconded by Mr. Longard, Halifax.

LINE HAD TO BE DRAWN SOMEWHERE.

Mr. J. Edward DeWolfe, Halifax, said that when some time ago several gentlemen from the Maritime Provinces waited upon the secretary of the committee of Lloyds in London, to protest against the discriminating rates of insurance on the Atlantic coast of the Maritime Provinces, they had been told that the line had to be drawn somewhere, and it was drawn at the State of Maine. Mr. DeWolfe acknowledged that the shipping trade was small on the Atlantic coast of the Maritime Provinces, when compared with that on the Atlantic coast of the United States, yet, to double the insurance rates on steamers running from ports in the Maritime Provinces was beyond all reason.

"That it is unreasonable," he added, "is evident from the fact that marine insurance companies of the United States, who are on the spot, and know the condition of affairs, do not discriminate against the Maritime Province ports. We should keep up the agitation until lower rates are secured."

Mr. M. G. DeWolfe also urged that the agitation should be kept up until the discriminating rates were removed.

Senator Power suggested that a copy of the resolution should be forwarded to Lord Strathcona, the Canadian High Commissioner in London. "I know he is taking a great deal of interest in the question."

Someone suggested that a resolution be also sent to General J. W. Laurie, a member of the British House of Commons, who, it will be remembered, at one time occupied a seat in the Canadian House of Commons.

After the two suggestions made had been embodied the resolution was carried unanimously.

MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP OF ELECTRIC LIGHT PLANTS.

Secretary D. G. Smith moved the following resolution :

Resolved that the Maritime Board of Trade is of opinion that cities and towns should guard with great care franchises for the production of light, heat and power by electricity as applied to lighting, street railways, etc., retaining same under their own control wherever practical, in order that the public use thereof may be had cheaply, and householders' and other local users' requirements may be economically met.

In speaking to his motion, Mr. Smith said that with the reduced cost of electricity during the past 10 years he thought the time had come when municipalities, where feasible, should own their own electric plants for procuring light, heat and power. He contended that Glasgow, Scotland, was a striking evidence of the benefits to be derived from municipal ownership of electric lights. "If I have been rightly informed, he said," the electric system owned by the municipality of Glasgow has proved so profitable that the city is practically

FREE OF TAXATION.

Mr. M. G. DeWolfe said that municipal ownership of electric plants was a subject that had but one side to it, and he, therefore, had much pleasure in seconding the motion. Glasgow was certainly an example to the world. He thought that if there was any difficulty it might be in regard to small towns.

Mr. MacKenna, Parrsboro': "In reference to small towns, I might say that Parrsboro', which has a population of only about 200, established its own electric plant some three years ago. It has been very satisfactory. Our rates compare favorably with those in any other place. Domestic light is cheaper than in any other place that I know of, and our street lighting is very cheap. There was at first some opposition to the putting in of the plant, but the results have been so satisfactory that the opposition has disappeared."

Mr. J. E. DeWolfe, Halifax, said that he would like to have incorporated in the resolution a clause suggesting that where invested capital in private ownership of electric plants was concerned in to fix the compensation, if any, due.

ARBITRATORS SHOULD BE CALLED

Mr. M. G. DeWolfe, Kentville: "Although I shall vote for this resolution, I might say that I am a shareholder in our own local plant. But I believe in the principle that municipalities should own their own electric plant. He was glad, however, to hear Mr. DeWolfe, of Halifax, suggest that the rights of private capital should be safeguarded by arbitration."

Senator Power said that municipal government in Canada and in the United States was not what it was in the Old Country. Consequently he had grave doubts as to whether it would be desirable that there should be a general operation of electric plants by municipalities. "I think, however, electric plants should be operated by municipalities," he explained. He thought that in the smaller towns and in villages the conditions were more favorable for municipal ownership of electric plants as there were opportunities for closer scrutiny of the administration.

Mr. Longard, Halifax, pointed out that a few years ago the municipal authorities of Winnipeg put in an electric plant and it had since then obtained power from the Legislature to purchase the plant at present owned by private capitalists.

The resolution was carried unanimously.

D. A. R. QUESTION DISPOSED OF.

The question of the freight car service on the Dominion Atlantic railway traversed from the preceding day, was again taken up. Mr. Blanchard, who had introduced the subject said he was prepared to modify his resolution a little. He then submitted the following resolution:

Resolved that, whereas serious inconvenience has in the past been caused to the farmers, manufacturers, and other shippers by the lack of freight cars on the Dominion Atlantic Railway, that this board request the company to supply freight cars as speedily as possible.

The resolution as he originally drew it up called upon the D. A. R. "to speedily remedy the difficulty by the addition of more freight cars." The above resolution, it will be noted, merely asks the railway company to "supply freight cars as speedily as possible."

Senator Power referred to the delay caused by cars not being quickly unloaded, and considered it was a question which the Intercolonial would yet have to consider.

After Mayor Yould had spoken much along the same lines as on the previous day, the motion was put and carried.

HOTEL ACCOMMODATION AND TOURIST TRAVEL.

Mr. Frank C. Simson, Halifax, in introducing the subject of better hotel accommodation in relation to tourist travel, said he regretted that the gentleman, Mr. G. E. Faulkner, who was to have brought the matter up, was unfortunately absent. He read a letter from that gentleman, in which the opinion was expressed that the Commercial Travelers' Association could probably do more than the Maritime Board of Trade in bringing about better hotel accommodation.

Continuing, Mr. Simson said: "I, myself, was identified with the hotel committee for many years, and I trust that some good work was done. The drawback we found in accomplishing anything was that the parties who had complaints to make would not take the trouble to put them in writing before the committee, although strict secrecy was promised, and then we would have had something to work upon. In this work we have never asked the hotelkeepers for any better than the ordinary rates, but rather looked for comfort, cleanliness, and sanitary conveniences. The Dominion Travelers' Association now makes the list of hotels for all Canada, but they appoint a hotel in every town, whether the hotel is worthy of patronage or not, which, in my opinion, is a mistake. The travelers' association would hail with pleasure the aid of the merchants in the towns, for they can do as much as the travelers themselves. There is no doubt that the increased tourist trade in the Maritime Provinces must be a boon to the merchant. The more attractive the local hotels can be made, the greater number they can attract. A matter, perhaps, equally important is that of good roads. No doubt, to the large number of tourists who bring their wheels with them, the comforts of moving about are most important. I desire to make this motion:

In view of the large number of visitors who are among us during the summer season, it is advisable that the members of the local boards of trade take particular interest in the condition of the hotels in their vicinity.

Mr. M. G. DeWolfe, Kentville, said that more tourists were coming to the Maritime Provinces every year, and they wanted better hotel accommodation. The Maritime Provinces were being referred to in the press a great deal for what they were doing to attract tourist travel, and he especially complimented MacLean's trade journals for the articles which they were from time to time publishing in regard to the question. "It was," he declared, "imperative that better hotel accommodation should be provided. The tourist trade is a valuable one," he said. "It is all cash and no credit." He suggested that the subject should be referred to the council of the Maritime Board instead of to a special committee."

Mr. Simson said he was quite willing to have the matter referred to the council.

Mr. I. C. Stewart was of opinion that the solution of the problem was larger hotels, and where large hotels could not be made to pay it would be a good thing to have comfortable homes among private citizens to which tourists could be directed. Senator Power said he thought the question was one which scarcely comes within the province of the Maritime Board of Trade.

Mr. J. E. DeWolfe, Halifax, took exception to the remarks of Senator Power. In his opinion it was quite within the province of the Maritime Board of Trade to consider the hotel question in its connection with tourist travel. Tourist travel in the Maritime Provinces was a most important question and one which greatly concerned business men. In the State of Maine tourist travel was worth at the very least $14,000,000 annually. The delegates present at the convention should return to their respective towns determined to make them attractive to tourist travel.

"Over 3,000 tourists," said Mr. DeWolfe "are arriving weekly at Yarmouth by steamer, 1,500 at Halifax by steamer, while at least 500 are coming in by train. Here you have at least 5,000 tourists who are coming into the Province of Nova Scotia alone every week during the tourist season. Some idea of how valuable this tourist travel is may be gathered when one considers that each tourist leaves at least an average of $20 in the country."

Mr. M. G. DeWolfe urged continued agitation until the desired object was obtained.

The resolution was adopted and the secretary was instructed to send a copy thereof to every board of trade in the Maritime Provinces.

BETTER COUNTRY ROADS.

The question of ways and means to secure better country roads was introduced by Mr. Ralph S. Eaton, of the Kings County Board of Trade, who presented the following resolution:

Whereas it is recognized very generally that a decided improvement is needed in the condition of our public roads,

Whereas the present system of repairing and maintaining our roads under the direction of surveyors of small districts who are appointed annually, who, as a rule, have little knowledge of the best principles of roadmaking, who are usually unable to use to the best advantage the statute labor represented by the district, and are unfamiliar with the need and use of new road machinery.

Therefore, resolved that in the opinion of this board it is desirable that the public roads throughout the Maritime Provinces should be supervised by a competent permanent officer, who shall have the responsibility for the roads throughout a larger district, such as a county.

The resolution was seconded by Mr. J. W. Hubbard and carried.

MAIL SERVICE BETWEEN ST. JOHN AND DIGBY.

Mr. Percy Bentley, Middleton, presented the following resolution:

quate to the requirements of the business people of western Nova Scotia and of the traveling public ;

And whereas, it is the opinion of this board that a daily service throughout the year, with close connections with the C.P.R. trains, would prove a great benefit to all concerned ;

Therefore resolved, that this Maritime Board of Trade present a memorial to the Federal Government praying that a sufficient increase of subsidy be granted to enable the present company to establish a daily mail and passenger service throughout the year between St. John and Digby, with close connections at each of said ports.

Speaking in support of his motion, Mr. Bentley explained that during four months of the year the Prince Rupert made daily trips between St. John, N.B., and Digby, N.S., and during the balance of the year three trips weekly. During the eight months of the year when the steamer only made three trips weekly a great deal of delay was caused in the transmission of the mail, an important matter to business men. The only way to get the desired daily service caused the resolution last year to be withdrawn."

Mr. J. DeWolfe : "Before we can intelligently vote on this question we should have some statistics to show whether traffic warrants a daily service."

Mr. Bentley said that while the St. John delegates had, last year, influenced the withdrawal of the resolution similar to that then before the convention, Mr. Jarvis, of St. John, would have, this year, seconded his motion had he not been compelled to return home. As far as statistics regarding the traffic were concerned, the Dominion Atlantic railway had reasons for not desiring, at present, to give them publicity.

Mayor Yould said that a steamer must carry freight as well as passengers. "Let us," he said, "ask for a freight service before we ask for a passenger service. In saying this I am not speaking as an official

Mr. Bentley pointed out that not only did the want of a daily winter service cause delay in the transmission of the mails, but inconvenience was caused in the delivery and receipt of freight.

Senator Power regretted an ~~antagonism~~ antagonism had sprung up. At the same time he did not think there was any real antagonism. "We should," he said, "deal with this matter in a business-like way, and to double the subsidy would mean to increase it to $25,000. This, I think, it is unreasonable to ask the Government to do. The Midland railway will soon be open and when it is, the people in the western part of Nova Scotia will receive their mail just as regularly as those in the eastern part."

Mayor Yould suggested that Mr. Bentley, in view of the opposition which had was for the Dominion Government to increase the subsidy to the Prince Rupert, the Dominion Atlantic Railway Co.'s steamer.

Mr. M. G. DeWolfe, in seconding the resolution, said the subject had been considered at the last annual meeting of the board, but action had been deferred at the suggestion of the representatives of the St. John Board of Trade. "It is not a local matter," said Mr. DeWolfe, "and I am glad to see the Middleton board take it up. I think a strong resolution should be sent to the Federal Government."

Mr. P. Innes : "I would like to draw the attention of the meeting to the fact that a daily service all the year around would mean a large increase in the subsidy. The subsidy will have to be, at least, doubled. That will mean a subsidy of $25,000. At present it is $12,500 annually. The fact that the subsidy would have to be doubled was what of the D.A.R., but as a member of this board." He said it undoubtedly caused a great deal of inconvenience and loss of time when passengers had to go around by the Intercolonial instead of crossing over the Bay of Fundy to western Nova Scotia from St. John to Digby. He suggested that Mr. Bentley amend his motion to ask for a daily freight service. He declared that the D.A.R. was not anxious to run a daily steamer in the winter unless with an additional subsidy.

Mr. H. W. MacKenna, Parrsboro', contended that the question under discussion was on a par with that of the West Indian trade question. All parts of the country were not directly interested, and yet what concerned one really concerned all. He deprecated, therefore, the apathy of the eastern part of the Province to the needs of the Annapolis Valley.

developed, should withdraw his resolution. "The best ends will be served by withdrawing it," he exclaimed.

Col. Chipman suggested that the representatives in the Dominion Parliament of the constituencies interested be requested to investigate the subject. If they could make out a good case all right, but was not proper to bring the matter before the convention without furnishing statistics regarding the traffic across the Bay of Fundy.

Mr. Bentley eventually withdrew his resolution.

RATE OF FREIGHT ON APPLES.

Mr. Innes introduced the subject of the freight rate on apples, which had been deferred from the previous day. He read the following resolution :

Whereas, the freight classification of apples by the railways in Canada was fixed at a time when the crop was small and prices ruled high, and whereas, the production of apples has become the great staple production of western Nova Scotia, the crop now amounting to 500,000 barrels a year, of which 375,000 barrels were exported last year, and whereas, the freight classification has to be submitted to and approved of by the Governor-General-in-Council;

Therefore be it resolved, that the Maritime Board of Trade, recognizing the altered circumstances to our farmers and apple-growers of the present classification under which apples in barrels are classified in less quantities than carloads as third class and in carloads as fifth class, while flour, the staple product of the western Provinces, is classified as fourth and eighth classes, ask the Government to have apples classified the same as flour.

Mr. Innes, in speaking to his resolution, said the burden of his complaint was in regard to the local freight rates. For export the shippers got special rates. It was important that the local freight rates should be reasonable, for there was a large quantity of apples grown in Nova Scotia which were not suitable for export, and, therefore, had to be consumed at home.

At present to carry apples to Halifax, distant from Kentville about 75 miles, in less than carlots, cost 27c. As the barrel cost 20c. and haulage 10., this meant a total cost of 57c., while the amount realized at Halifax would probably not be more than 75c. to $1 per barrel, as a rule.

"If," he continued, "apples were put under the same classification as flour, the rate would be, say for 50 miles, 13c. per barrel, instead of 21c. for small lots, and per car $16 instead of $17; for 75-mile carriage, 17c. per barrel for small lots instead of 27c., and per car $21 instead of $22.

Mr. A. R. Munro, Westville, N. S., seconded the resolution.

Mayor Yould: "I most decidedly object to this question being brought up here. Why should the Maritime Board of Trade take this question up? It belongs to the fruit growers. We have nothing to show that the fruit growers, outside the mover of this resolution, have a grievance. Where are the fruit growers?"

Mr. Innes (pointing to himself): "I am here. I am vice-president of the Fruit Growers' Association of Kings county." (Laughter.) Continuing, he explained that last year he was deputed by the Fruit Growers' Association to go to St. John and bring the matter to the attention of the Maritime Board of Trade; also the matter of the appointment of a railway commission. "We have not got the railway commission," he continued, "and now we want this question of the classification of apples brought to the attention of the Railway Committee of the Dominion Cabinet. The Railway Committee could not interfere with freight rates, but it could with the classification."

Mayor Yould having expressed a desire that a vote should not be taken until the afternoon, when he expected that Mr. Gifkins, manager of the road, would be present, Mr. Innes said he was willing to comply with the desire.

Mr. A. R. Munro, Westville, said he did not support the motion from the standpoint of a fruit grower, but from that of a consumer in Eastern Nova Scotia.

"We want to take your apples," he exclaimed, "but, on account of the high freight rates on Nova Scotian apples, we get our supply from Ontario."

Further discussion of the subject was deferred till the afternoon session.

DAILY MAIL SERVICE BETWEEN PARRSBORO' AND WOLFVILLE.

Mr. MacKenna, in bringing up the question of a daily mail service between Parrsboro' and Wolfville, stated that he had some time ago waited upon the member for Cumberland, and that gentlemen had promised to secure a subsidy for a steamer to carry the mails, but so far no subsidy had been granted. He did not believe, however, any difficulty would be experienced if an agitation for it were maintained. He felt sure that with a daily mail service there would be an increase in the volume of business between his part of the country and the Annapolis Valley, and tourist travel would be stimulated.

Senator Power: "I understand there is already a daily mail service between Parrsboro' and Kingsport."

Mr. MacKenna: "There is, but it is not satisfactory. Wolfville is the head centre of the tourist travel."

Mr. J. E. DeWolfe wanted to know what subsidy would be required.

Mr. MacKenna replied that only a small one would be required. Before taking his seat, Mr. MacKenna read the following resolution:

Whereas, the communication and mail service between the town of Parrsboro' and other points of the Province of Nova Scotia is insufficient for the fostering of the trade;

And whereas, the granting of a subsidy by the Dominion Government for the conveying of a daily mail service between the town of Parrsboro' and Wolfville, touching at Kingsport, across the Basin of Minas, would induce the Evangeline Navigation Co. to give a satisfactory service between the said places daily throughout the year.

And whereas, such a daily service would materially aid in promoting trade between the Cornwallis Valley and the city of Halifax with the town of Parrsboro', and also aid in the development of the tourist travel in the Maritime Provinces;

And whereas, the board of trade of the town of Parrsboro' has memorialized the Dominion Government, asking that a subsidy for the mail service be granted;

Resolved, that the Maritime Board of Trade hereby cooperate and support the efforts of the Parrsboro' board to secure the granting of the necessary subsidy by the Dominion Government to secure the said desired service, and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Postmaster-General and representatives of Cumberland and Kings in the Parliament of Canada.

Mr. W. Rand, Canning, in seconding the motion, asserted that were the service in question in existence, a letter mailed in Parrsboro' could reach its destination in, say, Wolfville, 20 miles across the Minas Basin, in two hours, instead of two days as was now the case going via Halifax. As far as his memory served him, Mr. Gifkins, the general-manager of the Dominion Atlantic railway, had told him that a subsidy of $900 or $1,000 per annum would be sufficient to induce his company to provide a daily mail service.

The session adjourned at 12.30 p.m., and assembled again at 2 p.m.

Mayor Yould, resuming the debate on the Parrsboro'-Wolfville daily mail service, suggested that the motion be amended so that the D.A.R. be asked to carry the mails and leave the Government to work out the details.

The motion eventually passed as above.

THE FREIGHT RATE ON APPLES.

As will be gathered from the discussion of the apple freight question at previous sessions, some heat was developed. Since adjournment for dinner, however, it had all evaporated.

Mr. Innes' motion was then put and carried unanimously. Thus, after having put up a good fight for two years, Mr. Innes had secured the cooperation of the Maritime Board of Trade. And he was happy.

A PERMANENT SECRETARY.

At last year's convention in St. John, notice of motion was given by Mr. Teed, calling for the appointment of a permanent secretary for the board. Although Mr. Teed was not in attendance at the present convention, it was decided to take the subject into consideration.

Mr. P. Innes suggested that the question be delegated to the executive committee for consideration, a report to be submitted at the next annual convention. He moved to that effect.

Mr. Innes' motion prevailed, and the executive was instructed to report upon the matter at the next year's convention.

DOUBLE TRACK FOR THE I.C.R.

Senator Power submitted the following resolution:

That in the opinion of this convention it is desirable that the Government of Canada should at an early date take steps to double track the Intercolonial railway between Halifax and Windsor Junction.

Mr. J. E. DeWolfe seconded the resolution, which was carried unanimously.

REFORM IN THE ASSOCIATION.

Mr. J. A. Chipman, Halifax, ventured the opinion that the association had reached a stage in its existence when certain reforms in procedure should take place. He deprecated first of all the election of the officers at the early stage in the convention. "As it is at present," he said, "the president who has the making of the arrangements for the convention retires on the first day and the incoming president has to carry on the work which he had no hand in preparing. The president who had the preparation of the work should preside till the close of the convention." Another direction in which he advocated reform was in regard to the social feature of the convention. Instead of having it near the beginning, as was the practice at present, he would have it at the very end of the convention.

President Loggie: "I already have before me a resolution dealing with this very subject. It has been moved by Mr. J. E. DeWolfe."

Mr. J. E. DeWolfe's resolution read as follows:

Whereas, the executive officers of this board, after having 12 months' experience, are better qualified to officiate during the annual meetings of said board than newly-elected officers;

Therefore resolved, that in future the election of officers take place on the last day of the annual session, instead of on the first day as has been the custom.

In speaking to his resolution, Mr. J. E. DeWolfe said there was nothing in it which conflicted with the constitution of the board and it could be dealt with without a notice of motion.

Senator Power declared that he could not see why the board could not then and there decree that newly-elected officers should not assume office till the close of the convention.

Secretary Smith pointed out that there was nothing in the constitution to prevent the resolution being adopted there and then. There was nothing in the constitution and by-laws specifying whether the election of officers should be held on the first or last day of the convention.

Mr. J. A. Chipman seconded the resolution, which was carried unanimously.

AN EXHIBITION QUESTION.

On the first day of the convention a letter was received from J. W. Bigelow, of Wolf-

Whereas, the Act of Incorporation of Boards of Trade, section 2, chapter 130 of the Revised Statutes of Canada does not permit of farmers becoming charter members of these boards, and requires a population on of 2,500, and

Whereas, there is likely to be formed throughout these Maritime Provinces boards of trade for the various counties with members mostly engaged in agriculture, and

Whereas, many towns of less population than 2,500 may wish to form boards of trade and have them incorporated,

Therefore resolved that this board of trade deems it desirable that the law regarding the incorporation of boards of trade should be changed so as to permit those engaged in agriculture to become charter members of boards of trade, and to permit towns having a population of 1,500 to have their boards of trade incorporated, and

Further resolved that the secretary be instructed to forward copies of the foregoing resolution to the Ministers of Finance and Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Innes seconded the resolution.

Mr. M. G. DeWolfe believed in boards of trade in small villages, and held that a good live and useful board could be secured even with a possible membership of only five or six.

Mr. J. A. Chipman said he had had an experience of 30 years with boards of trade and did not favor small boards of trade.

Speaking in support of his motion, Mr. Eaton said that unless the Intercolonial and the Dominion Atlantic did as requested, such places in Eastern Nova Scotia as Moncton, Westville, Pictou and New Glasgow would get their fruit from Ontario.

Mr. P. Innes, in seconding the resolution, said he was surprised something had not been done before.

Col. Chipman sarcastically remarked that he supposed the railway managers would merely put the resolution in a pigeon hole, which would be the last of it.

Someone remarked that he did not think so, and then the motion was put and carried.

REPRESENTATIVES TO THE COUNCIL.

Secretary Smith complained that there was a good deal of laxity on the part of the affiliated boards of trade in regard to the election of representatives to the council of the Maritime. It was necessary that the affiliated boards should elect their representatives immediately after the convention of the Maritime Board. He read the following (clause 5) in support of his request:

A View of Kentville from Academy Hill.

ville, urging that steps be taken to induce the Dominion Government to arrange for a national exhibit at the Pan-American Congress to be held in Buffalo next year.

Secretary Smith, whose home is in Chatham, N.B., said he did not think the Government of New Brunswick would participate, its experience at Boston, where a Customs duty on the exhibits had not been refunded, having been so unsatisfactory.

After a brief discussion it was decided to allow the subject to drop.

THE ACT REGARDING BOARDS OF TRADE.

Mr. Ralph S. Eaton drew the attention of the board to the Act regarding the Incorporation of Boards of Trade. As at present constituted, farmers could not become chartered members of a board of trade. Furthermore, a village with a population of less than 2,500 could not organize a board of trade. He moved the following resolution:

"I think," he continued, "a board of trade in a town which has a population of less than 2,500 will lapse. Those of us who live in the larger towns know how difficult it is to keep a board of trade alive even there."

Ultimately Mr. Eaton's resolution was put and adopted.

LOCAL FREIGHT RATES ON APPLES.

Mr. Ralph S. Eaton submitted the following resolution:

Whereas, many towns in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island and Eastern Nova Scotia are demanding a large and yearly increasing quantity of fruit as well as other merchandise from the fruit districts of Kings, Annapolis and other counties in Western Nova Scotia, whereas the local freight charges on the two lines of railway—the Dominion Atlantic and Intercolonial—supplying these towns retard very seriously the shipment of such fruit and merchandise, therefore resolved that in the opinion of this Maritime Board of Trade it is desirable that the said lines should give a through rate of freight, and further resolved that the secretary forward copies of this resolution to the managers of said railways for their early consideration.

There shall be a council composed of one member from each affiliated board, who shall be elected by their respective boards immediately after the annual meeting of the Maritime Board of Trade, five members of which shall form a quorum. The president, vice-president and secretary-treasurer of the Maritime Board shall be ex-officio members.

MINOR RESOLUTIONS.

On motion of Senator Power and Mr. J. E. DeWolfe, votes of thanks were tendered the Kentville and Kings County Boards of Trade, the press and the outgoing officers.

On motion of Mr. M. G. DeWolfe, Messrs. W. M. Jarvis, of St. John, and J. E. DeWolfe, of Halifax, were appointed auditors for the ensuing year.

President Loggie, Secretary Smith and Past President M. G. DeWolfe were appointed a committee to revise and publish forthwith the by-laws and constitution.

This closed the sixth annual convention of the Board of Trade of the Maritime Provinces.

BUSINESS SUCCESS

Practical Help Given Every Merchant

The old adage that it is not so much what one makes but what one saves applies in the biggest kind of business, as well as in the smallest affairs of life. It is the little leaks that swell the losses of insolvents.

We would save these leaks and losses for the Canadian dry goods merchants and milliners.

Have you goods on your shelves that wont sell because they are off-color or that have become shelf-worn or faded? We can make these goods possess the lustre of the new goods, and give them the color that will make them as fashionable as anything you have on your counter or shelves.

We are merchant dyers, and re-dye and re-finish merchants' goods, silks, braids, feathers and plumes—about anything that needs refreshing.

Look over your shelves and promptly pack a case of goods, and, after they have come back to you from these works, you will be astonished how quickly they turn into good money.

Mr. Bach, Dry Goods Merchant, Queen St., says—"My experience is that Trading Stamps given liberally, honestly and without quibbling, are a boon to the public and an aid to the merchant."

Mr. Dent, Dry Goods Merchant, Yonge St., says—"Trading Stamps have immensely increased our trade, by getting customers that formerly went to the Departmental Stores."

J. P. O'Neil, Butcher, 520 Queen, St. West, says—"We have more than doubled our trade with Blue Trading Stamps."

E. J. Henry, Grocer, 781 to 785 Queen St. West, says—"I find Trading Stamps the best system as a discount for cash. Have been using them for nearly three years."

G. Fursdedon, Butcher, 128 Queen St. West, says—"Trading Stamps draw a good cash trade and is a first-class way of advertising. Have had them for nearly three years and am well satisfied with results."

R. B. Powell, Grocer, 440 Spadina Ave., says—"Trading Stamps are a very good means of getting trade. Keeps trade from going to Departmental Stores."

J. F. Cleary, Grocer, 409 College St., says—"I consider Trading Stamps to be the best means of drawing trade, encouraging the customers to pay Cash and also advertise my business. Have had them nearly three years."

Wm. Greaves, Grocer, 593 College St., says—"Trading Stamps are a good inducement for people to pay Cash."

A. Wright, Grocer, cor. Harbord and Robert Sts., says—"I think people are entitled to a discount for Cash, and the Trading Stamps are the best medium of giving same. Have had Stamps for over two years and am very well satisfied with the results."

F. W. Bastow, Grocer, cor. Brunswick and Ulster, says—"I think Trading Stamps keep trade from Departmental Stores, induces Cash trade and is a first class means of advertising."

Brown Bros., who have one of the largest Grocery Stores on Queen St., say—"Trading Stamps are all right. We will continue giving them, which mean they increase our business or we would not have them."

Trading Stamps are simply discounts to cash customers in a convenient form, and discounting is a recognized principle in every legitimate business.

TRADE AFFECTED BY ALARMING REPORTS.

THERE is a feeling in some centres of trade that daily papers, from a laudable desire to give all the news, occasionally hurt trade.

This is particularly true of reports concerning diseases or other factors which affect the health of the community. A few cases of an alarming disease may take place, and more is made of the episode than is strictly in proportion to the importance of it. But all these things affect people who visit the cities on buying trips. For instance, if it is persistently stated that scarlet fever is epidemic, although there is no danger to the casual visitor, people at outside points get to think there is.

This also militates against tourist travel, which is always a valuable business factor in Canada during the Summer months.

No one wants the newspapers to suppress facts. But, on the other hand, it is reasonable to expect that they shall be most careful not to overstate anything. We know that there is a feeling in the retail trade on this subject, and believe that if proper representations are made privately and in good faith to any responsible newspaper the protest will receive due support.

One of the most experienced and sagacious of retail merchants said to THE DRY GOODS REVIEW the other day: "This is a point of which too much should not be made, still I think it deserves attention, because retail trade feels the effect of alarmist reports which are not really entitled to raise any concern in the minds of visitors to the city." Our merchants, who are such good patrons of the newspapers, may have chats with the editors with confidence that their remarks will be well received.

WINDOW DRESSING.

WE are continually receiving letters from our readers with reference to the subject of window dressing, showing that there is a general desire to practise the most up-to-date methods in this branch of business. To such readers we would specially direct attention to the article on "Fall Preparations for Window Dressing," which appears in this issue, by Mr. Hollinsworth, the editor of the window dressing department.

The article will be found to convey in a plain and practical manner the most useful hints which a window-dresser requires. The directions are well condensed and must be gone over very carefully in order that inexpert window artists may profit by them. We are often asked to recommend a book on window dressing. To those who want a work of this kind we would also strongly recommend the careful perusal each month of the articles that appear in this journal, and that the reader should paste them into a scrap book and keep them for future reference.

There is a great deal to learn in window dressing. It is not all discovered yet. Nor is it work which can be learned out of a book entirely. The best way is to practise it, and, with the directions which are given by Mr. Hollinsworth in each number of THE DRY GOODS REVIEW, we see no reason why even those who trim windows under great disadvantages should not learn within a reasonable time to become experts in this business.

We have not seen anywhere a more valuable and clearly expressed article on window dressing than the one in this number to which we call attention.

TRADE AND THE ELECTIONS.

"I have no time to attend to politics, being altogether too busy." This was the remark made by a leading business man in one of the large cities of Canada the other day.

It is a good sign, when all kinds of reports about the possibility of a general election in Canada during October are being given currency to, that our business men should not allow themselves to be drawn away too much from their duties.

Of course it is a matter of vast importance to the business interests to have good Government. Yet, it does not take a man a month to make up his mind which candidate he will vote for. He can easily decide in a few days. If the country continues prosperous, and there is every indication that it will, business men will be better employed in pushing hard at their own occupation, leaving the politicians to fight it out amongst themselves.

We do not want in Canada to have our elections spread over such a long period of time as is the practice in the United States. There they give up months to what might be settled in as many weeks. Hardly any effect is produced in this country on trade during an election year. In the United States, however, they often feel a diminution in the volume of business, and a consequent shrinkage in prices.

We hope to see a good many merchants or persons with a knowledge of trade elected to the next Parliament, which has a number of very important business questions to deal with. Party issues are all very well, but, as every one in Canada depends upon agriculture or commerce for a living, questions bearing on these matters should take first place.

AUSTRALIANS VISIT CANADA.

The number of important Australian business men who have traveled through Canada during the last year or so is considerable. Mr. Brocksopp, of the firm of G. & R. Wills, of Adelaide, South Australia, one of the largest wholesale houses in Australia, passed through Canada last week on his way to England. In the short time at his disposal he visited several manufacturing places which make for the dry goods trade. There is no reason why a satisfactory trade between the Canadian Dominion and the Australian Commonwealth should not develop during the next five years, and personal visits here of large Australian buyers must prove a factor in the movement.

THE TRADE IN GINGHAMS.

The trade in Canadian gingham has now attained large proportions. One of the largest manufacturers of these goods, The Colored Cotton Co., did a considerable trade last year, and expect, from indications, to do an even larger one next year.

In consequence of this demand for gingham, a very wide and handsome range of these goods is being shown to the trade. New Jacquard looms have been put in the mills which make these goods, and the product of the looms is exceedingly satisfactory. They are using a large quantity of silk in order to produce silk effects, and, next season, it is the intention to show a line of dress goods in Jacquard effects.

It is understood that in future the gingham made by this company will be sold at fixed prices, and that an agreement is being entered into between the mills and wholesale trade generally to carry this out.

The new price list for Spring, covering over 20 different numbers, is the first result of this agreement, and the list will be found in another column.

EXPANSION OF THE READY-MADE CLOTHING INDUSTRY.

It is estimated that at least 1 000 machine operators could find employment in Montreal establishments that manufacture ready-to wear clothing. This is only a striking proof of the fact that the transference of the work of the home factory is still going on.

It is not so many years since clothing of any description made-up in a factory was abhorred. Our British conservatism would not allow us to think that the factory could make a good fit, or the sweat-shop turn out a healthy article.

Helped by improvements in the sanitary conditions of factories, and by increasing skill in the cutting of garments, our conservatism is fast wearing away, and the extensive manufacture of ready to wear clothing is branching out and expanding. There is no man now but wears a ready-made collar, or shirt, except probably the farmer, and even he is beginning to see the value of a 39c. shirt bought at the corner store.

Workingmen's suits of all kinds, including overalls, barbers' coats, bakers' coats and caps, are now all bought ready-made. Wholesale drygoodsmen tell us that manufacturing establishments, rather than retailers, are now the chief purchasers of cottonades and denims.

Particular and fastidious as the female sex proverbially are, the movement has gone more extensively into their clothing. It may be that it is a bargain-producer, and is thus popular with the ladies.

Be that as it may, there are few ladies now but buy their whitewear ready-made. Skirts and underskirts, shirt-waists and silk waists, good quality and poor, are all on the market ready to wear the moment purchased. And the movement is spreading.

As yet we are prone to think that a good article cannot be ready-made. Men of fashion would not buy ready-made dress suits in 99 cases out of 100; nor would he even buy a good suit of the sacque coat variety. Perfect fit is not assured in the article finished regardless of the particular physical features of the wearer. But the movement has successfully spread as far as semi ready clothing. And the best qualities of ladies' garments are bought ready-made. The science of fitting is winning its way.

And it seems reasonable that this movement should spread. The tendency of the day is towards centralization, consolidation and expansion. It means a saving of money and time. One can easily conceive how a concern that cuts off a thousand shirts at once can produce the finished article more cheaply than can the person who turns out only one or two at a time. The manufacturer can buy his goods more cheaply, can invest in machinery and can bring more skill into the business. This all means a vast saving in the cost of production. The most formidable objection to the pushing of this consolidation to the extreme is the difficulty of fitting the human body. It is small wonder then that many attempts are made to surmount this impediment. It is a movement that merits close attention.

EFFECTS OF TRUSTS ON BUSINESS.

It is announced that the formation of trusts in the United States has reduced the dealings in industrial stocks on the speculative exchanges. In other words, their being less speculation and, thus, less dealings recorded, it is not as easy as it used to be to determine the future course of the markets.

This, no doubt, is inconvenient, but we cannot see that it is an irreparable injury to trade, since there must be other means by which we can gauge the market. If this were the only objection to the formation of combinations, the promoters would never have much to fear from the pressure of public opinion.

The real objection to trusts is that they combine to squeeze out competition and unduly raise prices. Once let alone, they would control the whole situation. They would control it in their own interest, and not in the interest of the general public. Consequently, they have to be watched, and interfered with, and legislated against, as fast as legislative bodies can be pushed into doing anything.

Yet, there is much to be said, in a general way, in favor of trusts as against unlimited competition. By means of the latter condition, the markets get panicky, prices are unduly depressed and the individual consumer gets to think he should be able to buy his goods for next to nothing. He forms an entirely erroneous impression of the cost of manufacture, and imagines that the wholesale man, who distributes the goods in bulk, and the retail merchant, who handles them in detail, are getting an enormous profit. The consumer gets into his head a notion that he ought to buy goods at factory prices, and that everyone who stands between him and the door of the mill is robbing him.

Of course, this is most unreasonable of him. The wholesaler and retailer are not paid too well for distributing the goods. But the trust gives him an insight into the cost of manufacture, and in fighting the trust the average individual joins in declaring war against all the other agencies by which commerce is carried on.

Yet another objection to trusts is that they use a protective tariff to gain their ends. There are just as many trusts under free trade as under protection. They are not the fruit of protection. But they are more dangerous under protection. It is better, therefore, to be without trusts as far as commercial conditions are concerned.

SPECIAL TAX ON DEPARTMENT STORES.

A law has been passed in Prussia legalizing special taxation of department stores by municipalities. The new Act divides these stores into four classes.

One class may sell groceries, foods, tobaccos, smokers' articles, apothecaries' supplies, colors, drugs and perfumery. Another class may sell dry goods of all kinds, bedding, furniture, carpets, curtains and all articles for interior household decoration. A third class may sell household, kitchen and garden utensils and implements, stoves, china, earthenware, upholstered furniture and materials pertaining thereto. The fourth class may sell jewelry, bric-a-brac, books, music, bicycles, firearms, sporting goods, toys, sewing machines, and optical, medical, scientific or musical instruments. Any store handling more articles than are named in one class shall pay a special graduated tax, according to the total annual sales of the store, whenever the turnover exceeds $95,000. This tax would be about $1,000 on a turnover of $100,000; about $2,500 on a turnover of about $150,000; about $3,500 on a turnover of about $200,000, and so on. The big stores are given six months in which to prepare for the new law. It does not go into force until January, 1901. There is much speculation in Prussia as to the effects and working of the Act. On another occasion, we shall give our readers further information about the matter.

MERCHANTS AND ASSESSMENT.

THE unfair assessments which merchants' stocks in Ontario are often subject to make the assessment question a very important one to them. The commission which the Ontario Government has just appointed is therefore a subject in which they are entitled to be consulted.

The members of the commission are all good men and will doubtless act from a high sense of duty, but there is a singular, and to our mind an unfortunate, omission in making no adequate representation from the mercantile interest itself. Judges, as men and public officials, are above reproach, but they have no special knowledge of assessment, and we doubt their utility on an assessment commission.

Besides that, it may well be considered whether such a commission should not be composed of men who have devoted time and attention to the question of assessment; in fact, of men who are more or less experts on the subject. A commission of this kind would, we submit, reach practical conclusions much more quickly than a number of worthy gentlemen sitting to hear evidence, the value of which they are often incompetent to weigh.

We have no system on which the taxation of property is based, and so far the idea of grasping a sound principle for the purpose of assessment never seems to have struck the people. It is also a mistake to suppose that the important matter coming before this commission is the growth of new taxable properties, like telephone franchises and street railway companies. These are really small matters compared with the wider principles of assessment as a whole.

It is with the latter which the commission ought to grapple and we doubt if much will be done for the present by the newly-constituted body.

NOTES.

That stocks are pretty heavy at the present time, especially in the wholesale trade, is hardly denied. Of course, they are going out fast, but at the same time it is probable that this has been a record season as far as large stocks are concerned. It is said, for example, that more than one house doing an extensive wholesale business has put on insurances ranging from $800,000 to $1,000,000.

There can be no doubt but that sometimes the big department stores give undoubted bargains. One concern lately advertised flannelettes at 3½c. a yard, while the mill price of the same stuff ranged from 4½ to 5c.

PROGRESSIVE STOREKEEPING.

A MONTHLY ARTICLE ON THE PROPER MANAGEMENT, SYSTEM, ETC., OF AN UP-TO-DATE
RETAIL BUSINESS.

Specially written for THE DRY GOODS REVIEW.

By CHAS. F. JONES, New York.

An Eye to Small Expenses. Watch the little expenses. Remember the old saying of "take care of the pennies and the dollars will take care of themselves."

These little things that do not seem to count very much are the very things which are eating up some stores. Stationery, twine and boxes all cost money, and wasting these articles will be a great expense in the long run, although the individual cost of each piece wasted may seem to be so infinitesimally small as to be of no consequence at the time. The salary account of the store ought to be watched very carefully. Having two office boys where one would answer the same purpose; having four clerks where three would answer the same purpose, will swell your pay-roll much beyond what you can afford.

Disposing of the Force. Learn the secret of having only as much help as you can keep comfortably busy all the time. Learn to arrange the various duties which your people have so as to use all their time. For instance, instead of standing behind the counters during the dull hours of the day, have them up in the stockrooms marking goods or doing such other duties as can be taken up during leisure moments.

A Salesman's Duty. An intelligent salesman is one of the best trade helps that a store can have; a salesman that is not only polite and bright in his way of presenting goods, but who can give real information about the article which he is selling when asked to do so. The most irritating answer that a salesman can give a customer, when asked a question, is to say, "I don't know." In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the customer ought to reply: "Why don't you know? It is your business to know." Very often it is the salesman's fault that he does not know these things about his stock, but more often it is the fault of the buyer of the stock or the proprietor of the store. The one who buys the goods ought certainly to know all the interesting things about them, and, if he does, it is his duty to tell these things to the person who is to sell the goods. Buyers, as a rule, are either so wrapped up in themselves, or in their own knowledge, or are so ignorant themselves that they do not drill the salespeople as they should.

A customer comes in to buy a tool, and the salesman, in showing the tool, states that it is made of tempered steel. The customer then asks, "What is tempered steel?" It must be admitted at once that the salesman ought to be able to give an intelligent answer. If the salesman cannot answer questions of importance about his stock, how can he expect to inspire confidence in the customer, who, in many cases, is relying largely upon what he is told when he makes his purchases?

The Sales to Employes. Large general stores sometimes do not consider what an immense amount of goods their own employes buy. A store with a hundred employes usually forgets that in their employes they have a hundred customers in perhaps a hundred families, if they only see to it that their employes can be induced to patronize the establishment for which they work.

It will pay any store to be liberal with its employes and to do all that is possible to retain their good-will and friendship, and to show them that you are not only interested in their work which they have to perform for you, but also in every detail of their lives where you can help them. No matter whether you allow a discount of any sort to any other living person, you can well afford to allow a discount to your employes on the goods which they may wish to use personally. This discount need not apply any further than their personal wants nor the wants of those dependent upon them for support. If you do not offer to your employes some inducement more than the ordinary customer gets many of them will very likely do their trading at some other store. This looks very bad for you; the people will talk; the salespeople in other stores will talk. One salesperson will say to another: "I thought you clerked for Smith. Why are you buying your goods from Brown? Is it because Brown sells cheaper than your own employer?"

It is a bad reputation for your store to have, when many of your clerks buy their goods somewhere else.

The Kicker. How many there are of this kind, and how diversified are the things about which he will kick! Do not be unreasonable, do not kick just for the fun of kicking, but when you have cause to kick stand up for your rights and kick hard.

In the first place, remember that everybody else has just as many rights as you have, and do not expect everyone to give up all their rights for you; but in the competition of to day the man who knows his rights and insists upon having them is the one that is going to succeed. The fellow who never kicks about anything and the fellow who kicks about everything are one as bad as the other. Kicking when you have no cause weakens the effects of your justifiable kick.

These remarks apply largely to a store's dealings with newspapers. Usually the newspapers are just as anxious to give the store what it deserves as the store is to get it; if they are not, then the store has a right to kick.

Remember, however, that the newspapermen are just as smart as you are and are better able to get back at you, if you attempt to impose upon them, than you are able to get back at them.

Let your business dealings with the newspapers or other mediums in which you advertise be just as business-like as your dealings with the men from whom you buy your other kinds of merchandise.

It is not fair to expect the newspaper to sell you advertising space at the lowest rate and then keep you supplied with transportation, theatre tickets and drinks whenever you want them. Some newspapers, I am sorry to say, attempt to do this, but in the long run you will get the worst of it if you do not watch out.

TRADE CONDITIONS IN THE UNITED STATES.

IN the carpet trade the usual midsummer lull now prevails. but there is considerable activity in the straw matting and Oriental rug lines, says The New York Carpet Trade Review. The matting situation remains unsettled, and shrewd buyers are placing orders early so as to avoid as much as possible the danger of being unable to replenish their stocks in due season.

The indications of a large demand for Oriental rugs have become still more apparent since our last issue, and the domestic manufacturers of wilton, axminster, brussels, moquette and velvet rugs, especially carpet sizes, and art squares, also report, as a rule, a satisfactory business. All the large manufacturers of Smyrna rugs and carpets say that the demand for their product has been good. The complaints of dull business in this line of trade seem to come entirely from the small concerns, especially makers of low grades.

THE SPRING STYLES.

Said a carpet man to THE REVIEW: "For Spring styles in carpets the large or very small patterns will not be much used. The popular patterns and designs for Spring sales are all of a medium size. Designs are of all natures, Indian, Persian, sixteenth century, Roman, etc., all promising to have equally good sales.

"The coming colors and color combinations are more beautiful than ever. More care has been paid, especially to the harmonizing of colors that heretofore, if one is to judge by results. Green is one of the most predominating colors of all. It is found in the great majority of patterns, and in all shades. Reds, delft blues and soft greens will probably be the reigning colors of the season."

A NEW YORK WINDOW IDEA.

On one of the hottest days of last week the window-dresser of a large Broadway house made a display which was a gratefully cooling sight to the perspiring passerby. One window was devoted entirely to a display of olive green denim. Portieres and curtains, with Empire designs, in white embroidery formed the background. A green willow lounge covered with the denim was piled with cushions in keeping. A three fold screen and table covers, couch covers, etc., all in green denim, with white decorations, completed the show, and illustrated the many admirable uses to which a moderate-priced fabric can be adapted as well in city as in country houses. In another window a similar exhibition was made, the color scheme in this instance being blue and white.—New York Carpet and Upholstery Trade Review.

UNITED STATES DECISION ON MATTINGS.

Within the past few weeks an important case was decided by the Board of General Appraisers, touching the subject of duties on matting, which was of decided importance to the large number of small importers on the Pacific Coast who do not visit the Eastern markets, but have their goods purchased for them in Japan and China by agents. The appraiser at Portland, Ore., held that the 5 per cent. commission which was charged by the purchasing agent in Japan or China should be added to the cost of the goods in fixing the rate of duty in America.

While this did not make the surface appear to amount to very much, as a matter of fact, it was sufficient in most cases to place the matting under another classification and increase the duty to such an extent that the little dealers would be almost frozen out.

The tariff levied on matting which does not cost over 10c. per yard is 3c. per square yard, amounting to $1.20 per roll on rolls of 40 yards (which is the usual length).

If the commission charges of the purchasing agent were added to the cost of the matting, it would make the cost amount to over 10c. a yard, and, on goods of this class, the duty demanded was 7c. per yard, and 25 per cent. ad valorem, an increase of $2.65 a roll.

The dealers fought the matter hard, taking the case from the local appraiser to the general appraiser, and from thence to the Board of General Appraisers, who reversed all former decisions, and decided that the commission paid the purchasing agent in the East was a non-dutiabie charge.—The American Carpet and Upholstery Journal.

THE ENGLISH CARPET TRADE.

Kidderminster advices to The Textile Mercury, August 18, say: "The holiday influence is very plain in the carpet and yarn trades. Looms are busy trying patterns, buyers are on holidays, and travelers are at home. Still, there is enough business coming in to prevent anything like stagnation. The spinning trade is quiet, without much yarn going into consumption. Some little business has been offering from both local and foreign markets, but much of it is at impossible prices. Prices of carpet yarns have dropped to a low level again, especially the lower makes of two-folds, but there is now a distinct bottom to the market, and spinners will not accept contracts except at such advances as will cover the increased cost of wool and of spinning expenses."

VISITORS TO THE EXHIBITION.

When our readers are making their rounds among the manufacturing and wholesale houses, it would probably be greatly to their interest to drop in at No. 71 Bay street and see what Messrs. Geo. H. Hees Son & Co. have to offer. They are the leading manufacturers of window shades, curtain poles, and upholstery goods, such as furniture coverings, draperies, portieres, curtains, table covers, and the many lines in this class of goods. Their recent importations include the pick of the European market, besides the large assortment they are manufacturing at their new upholstery plant in Valleyfield. Undoubtedly they can justly claim to be the "Lace curtain headquarters in Canada," for they have recently put in stock over 80,000 pairs, and say they are making great inducements to the trade to help them unload these bulky goods. No. 71 Bay street is convenient, and the trade will receive a cordial welcome there.

INDICATIONS OF A BIG FALL BUSINESS.

There is employment for everybody who wants to work, and at good wages, too, so there will be more money floating and more demand for goods. The courageous merchant will be governed by these circumstances and be prepared to meet the requirements. Manufacturers have anticipated the situation, but none more so than Geo. H. PRACTICAL SUGGESTION RE TECHNICAL TRAINING.

Editor DRY GOODS REVIEW :

SIR,—Representing in a very large and extensive way the textile interests of this country, I choose your journal to put before this class of manufacturers a subject for their consideration which should receive considerable attention if our industries are to push forward to the front rank of renown among the manufacturers of fabrics of the world.

We are, in Canada, extensively engaged in cotton and wool weaving, a little in the worsted line, a little in jute, hardly worth mentioning in silk, and the linen is mostly home-made.

Were these industries given a means whereby they could readily find expert assistants, there is no reason to doubt they would make great strides forward.

It is, therefore, suggested that textile manufacturers of all kinds should take some measures to establish properly equipped technical schools to teach the methods of carding, spinning, dyeing, weaving, finishing; knowledge and values of fibres and filaments; designing, etc., and, in fact, all that goes to the production of textiles.

These schools should be under the charge of the Government, but the management should be drawn from among practical men who understand what they are doing. Probably many manufacturers would contribute part of the necessary machinery, I am prepared to give a Jacquard loom and a Cop winder.

Of course, mechanical drawing, the use of tools and loom construction, would have to be included in the curriculum.

As students are learning a competent trade, placing them in a higher grade than a smith or a mechanic, it might be quite within reason to exact an annual fee for attendance, more particularly as power would have to be paid for, and also the raw material that is to be worked up.

The product of the schools could always be sold, and, though the beginners may spoil some material, there is no doubt that the value of most would compensate for a good deal of the outlay on it.

If any readers of this are interested, and will take an interest in the matter, I will be glad to hear from them.

I might say I have not thought out as yet any manner of procedure or method of conducting the schools, but, if it receives the attention I hope for it, there will be no difficulty in soon having textile schools established in several districts.

Yours truly,

JAMES P. MURRAY,

A SUCCESSFUL MAN'S CAREER.

How Mr. Robert Muir, of Montreal, made a Million by Shrewdness and Caution.

NEWSPAPER readers will remember an item that appeared in the papers a few weeks ago, giving a detailed account of the distribution of the estate of Mr. Robert Muir, who was at one time a merchant in Montreal, but who died a year ago at Wimbledon, Surrey county, England. Although Mr. Muir had lived in England the last 18 years, and had passed out of the ken of most of the present generation of drygoodsmen, yet there are many, particularly in Montreal, who remember him as one of our early successful business men. At his death he left an estate valued at something over $900,000, most of which was invested in Canadian stocks.

The firm with which he was connected was W. & R. Muir. Their business was established first by Mr. William Muir, who came out from England to Montreal about 50 years ago and opened up a dry goods warehouse on St. Paul street. Later, he brought his brother Robert out to him and a partnership under the style W. & R. Muir was formed. The senior member of the firm died about 40 years ago, and the business was continued under the old title by Mr. Robert Muir. He moved into a warehouse on McGill street, where he did business till 1872.

The foundation of his fortune was laid during the prosperous times that prevailed in Canada 1862-66, when our Southern neighbors were trying to settle a trouble that is yet unsettled. During those few years, of course, a Canadian drygoodsman fairly coined money; many new houses opened out in business, and those who were established previously expanded their trade. Mr. Robert Muir confined himself to his former field and here showed his wisdom. He never did an extremely large business, and was content with the amount of his turnover. Cotton rose in price from 7d. to 2s. 3d. per lb., but the inflation in price did not lead him into wild schemes and bring him into the general catastrophe that followed a few years later; he maintained his old business, and salted down the profits. After the war, before the times of depression came, he withdrew from business, invested his profits in secure and rising American stocks and doubled his capital. He again withdrew and returned to Canadian stocks, where his wealth has since remained.

Personally, he was a man who was highly respected in the social and business circles in which he moved. He always refused to embark in any scheme that savored of a wild-cat nature, and his opinion was always highly regarded. He preferred solidity to bullish inflation, and his policy won, as it generally did. His friends, and there are still quite a number in Montreal, tell us that his sense of honor was admirable and that there were those in Canada who read of his death with profound regret.

Aside from the legacies to members of the family and other relatives in the United Kingdom, lawyer Robert A. Ramsay's children, of Montreal, were given £100 each by his will, and £200 goes to the Montreal General Hospital. Each of the daughters of David Shaw, of Longueuil, Que., is given £100.

The Perth Town Council has taken drastic measures in dealing with hawkers and peddlers occasionally doing business there. The fees to be charged traveling salesmen, are: With horse and cart or wagon, license per year, $50; with pushcart, per year, $30; on foot, per year, $15.

❁ WINDOW AND STORE DECORATING. ❁

Conducted for THE REVIEW by H. Hollingsworth, an Expert Window Artist.

TO DRY GOODS REVIEW READERS.—We shall be glad to receive photographs and descriptions of window displays that have attracted special attention in their own localities, and which would be considered helpful to trimmers generally. Any inquiries or questions on the subject of window dressing will be answered cheerfully, and any information given that may be desired by readers. Queries should be addressed: "Window Dressing Department."

FALL PREPARATIONS.

DURING the month of September Fall Opening displays predominate. All new Fall goods are being opened up for show. This is the month when the window-trimmer can show his ability. Competition is pretty keen at this time, and the ladies are waiting to purchase their new hats, dresses, cloaks, furs, etc. They are holding back from purchasing until they see the window displays of new goods.

The windows must now be the chief factors in introducing to the public the Fall styles. The trimmer should carefully study out his opening displays before getting to work at them. New goods displays require careful handling, neat, tidy arrangement and every attention given to little details so as to make the goods show up to the very best possible advantage.

Customers at this season will be seen going from the windows of one store to those of another before making up their minds at which house they are going to purchase, and the stores that have the neatest windows are the places that are going to get the preference and sell the goods.

Backgrounds must be arranged so that every article can be thrown into prominence by them.

Above all things: "Don't crowd the displays." There is a general tendency when there is a rush of new goods into the store to jam the windows up with everything. This is bad policy. Take one line at a time. Arrange it carefully, give a couple of days' showing, and then change it to some other line.

Show very few goods at a time, and change often. Instead of filling the window up with a whole mass of goods at once, which does not make an impression and only confuses the eye, why not use the same quantity of goods and make five or six displays? In this way every garment is shown to advantage, and customers seeing the change every day or so are given the impression that your range of goods is well assorted and extensive.

Some reader may think: "Oh, well, that is all very well and practical for stores that have eight or ten windows, but what is the merchant that has only one large window or only a couple of small ones to do? There are 25 different lines of new goods that require immediate showing, and if not all shown right away are going to remain unsold."

My answer to this is: "If good judgment is used, and the goods show properly in the windows and the interiors, and if they are stylish, up-to-date goods, marked at the right prices, there is no excuse for them remaining unsold."

Supposing you have only one large window in which to introduce the new goods, instead of crowding it up with everything, why not try it this way:

Say this is Monday morning. Take out your present window display, have the glass thoroughly washed inside and out, and all the interior cleaned to perfection. Then take a few mantle forms (as many as the window will allow without crowding), and on each arrange one of the choicest new coats, giving every detail attention, such as the hang of the sleeve, etc. Take a few pairs of white curtains (rich, heavy borders or design), hang them nicely up at the back of the window, and over the top drape a rich upholstering plush or silk or rich drape. If you have a large mirror or two arrange them on easels or in some position so as to reflect the back of the coats shown. Get a couple of rich rugs or one large one from the carpet department and cover over the window floor, place a form here and there with at least two feet space between each. See that every garment is placed in such a position that it shows up its finest points to the observer on the outside. Raise the blinds and take a look from the outside and satisfy yourself that they cannot be changed into a position that would improve them. Place a large card in centre of display, calling attention to the first showing of new Fall mantles.

Now leave this in for, say, two days. In the meantime you can think out a design for a background that will show up your new dress goods which are to be shown on Wednesday. Have it all figured out in your mind's eye, and, if possible, have it made in sections, or have it all ready to put up in as little time as possible, as every hour means dollars. Right here it might be stated that the arrangement of background is just as important as the arranging of the goods, and especially in opening displays. The main object in the background is to throw the goods displayed into prominence. They should be elaborate (not gaudy or trashy-looking) and the colors must be in perfect harmony with the colors of goods shown.

To come back to the trim suggested, say Wednesday is here. Out come the mantles. The background is changed, and a few of the prettiest dress-ropes are draped artistically on forms or stands. Now, in this display, there is a chance for a combination. In the spaces between the dress forms place a nickel hat-stand and on each place a neat trimmed hat or bonnet.

If you don't keep millinery place on them a pair of kid gloves, a belt, a lace handkerchief, a fancy collar, or something that would complete the costume. While it would be much better to have just the dress goods alone yet (we have only the one window), these combinations are not confusing and have their good suggestions.

Well, we'll leave this in until Saturday night, until about closing time, and as there are few goods in the window it can be taken out and the goods folded up in a very short time.

Monday morning comes and the window may, or may not, require a cleaning on the inside, but a cleaning on the outside is necessary. It can't have too many cleanings.

Well, this morning we have to make another showing of new goods. The background being quite new and effective, does not require changing, as it will come in splendidly, with perhaps the addition of a mirror or a drape for our displays to follow, of millinery, silks, black dress goods, etc., before it requires changing. Each of these displays should only be left in 2, 3 or 4 days, according to their results in sales.

Large cards appropriately worded must not be left out of every Fall display. Price tickets should be freely used also with discretion.

After the above-named goods have had a show and another background has been arranged, if you have your new furs in and have sufficient to make a display, now is the time to make it.

Design for a Millinery Window.

Many merchants think it unwise to show furs until after the first snowstorm. Here's a big mistake. Hundreds of fur garments can be sold by a showing in the month of September, even when it is still quite warm. Stylish dressers, especially the well-to-do class of people, always like to get first choice and generally like to buy before the finest furs are picked up.

After you have made an individual display of furs, dress-goods, millinery, etc., it is again time to show a few more mantles. In this second showing, a few furs could be shown in combination, care being taken not to have one placed in such a way as to conflict with the other. It is always better to place the fur, boas, collars, etc., on a nickel stand between the forms instead of laying them on the mantles. In many cases a fur collar placed on a coat to show it up might result in the sale of the collar but spoil the sale of the coat, as it hid the lapels or the cut of collar of the coat. Therefore, I think it better to place them on stands between the forms. If the rule that I suggest is borne in mind, viz., "a few things neatly shown and shown often" I know from experience that it is the wisest way.

Blankets and comforters and similar articles that will be required by the housewife in a short while should be given a showing during this month. Many sales can be effected through early display of such goods.

I would advise those interested in window trimming to file all their numbers of THE DRY GOODS REVIEW so that the illustrations to be found in these columns (of window trims) may be referred to for ideas in getting up future displays. Many an idea is thrown aside that if kept and referred to later on would help to make the way easy for some puzzled trimmer looking for an idea.

THE REVIEW'S illustration this month shows a beautiful "Millinery Opening" trim. A few choice hats are shown well apart, backed by mirrors. The background would do nicely without change for a dress goods trim, silks, mantles, gloves, laces, or almost any other line of dry goods. It is very effective and inexpensive.

Illustration No. 2 shows a neat arrangement for a Fall dress goods display. The parasols are perhaps out of place for a Fall opening trim, and something else could be substituted in their place. The draping of the dress goods is very simple and effective, and each piece is not robbed of an iota of its individuality, as the display is not crowded. A large card appropriately worded would have helped the sales part of such a good trim. Artificial Autumn leaves hung or laid throughout a display of Fall goods give the display a beautiful finish, and convey the idea that the goods shown are goods suitable for the Autumn.

BOYS' AND MEN'S FURNISHINGS.

As the modern dry goods store develops more and more into a place for the sale of everything, certain lines not before deemed of much importance come to the front and assert their claims for recognition. Among these are men's and boys' furnishings.

Goods for boys' wear, being usually purchased by the mothers, and consequently not at all out of place in an establishment whose patrons are principally ladies, have long been given considerable attention by dry goods houses.

Men's goods are, however, as yet a new and untried line in most dry goods stores, and have their way to win. It is only by giving a stock of this kind extra prominence and attention that it can get a hold on public favor. To that end it behooves every department store handling these goods to outdo the specialty stores in the beauty and magnitude of displays, and thereby attract more attention and effect greater sales. In later numbers of THE REVIEW we will illustrate some trade winning displays of these two lines of merchandise.

A Display of Dress Materials.

In displays of boys' and men's clothing, one thing to be kept in mind is not to crowd them. They are far more interesting than if crowded closely together. Take a few clothing forms, place a suit free from wrinkles or creases on them, put a collar, tie, and cuffs on each, and, after making a suitable background, arrange them so as to show their best from the front of window, put a neat card on each and you have a far better display than if you had five times as many suits shown arranged in some other way. Let enough be shown to give the impression of variety, but not too many, as one robs the other of its fine points.

The greatest mistake made in window trimming is the desire to show too much at once, thereby sacrificing quality to quantity.

H. H.

SHOWING BLANKETS.

As a rule we do not believe, says The St. Louis Drygoodsman, that the forcing of goods out of season, or rather before the consuming public is ready for them is of any advantage to the general retailer ; but the purpose of business is to sell goods—bring results. If goods can be sold in advance sales then make use of such sales by all means.

Have you ever tried a blanket window at this season for the purpose of helping along an advance blanket sale ? These blanket sales are very successful in the cities and are just now being pushed very hard. They are easy to build with piles and rolls. If your stock is limited one pile can be made in the centre and blankets of different patterns and prices can be hung from the ceiling by a cord tied at one corner, which allows the design and quality to be plainly shown. Don't leave such a window in too long. The attention of people who will buy can be quickly called, for those who are not ready you can make a better impression with a later display.

AN EASY BACKGROUND.

For soft wool goods or soft finish cotton goods of the satine nature a very pretty background can be made in the following manner : Across the background, about even with the top of the glass, fasten a narrow strip of wood—three inches wide. A small bracket at each end and one in the centre will hold it.

On the top of the board at regular intervals of nine inches turn in two screw eyes, one two inches in front of the other, just large enough to run a quarter-inch rod or wire through them. The rods should be cut a foot long, so they will stick out about nine inches beyond the board.

Cut dress patterns from the goods to be shown and fold them lengthwise in narrow back and forth folds of about five inches width. It is necessary to fold only enough of the piece to reach from the base to the rod and back again.

Put one piece of the folded goods over the rod nearest the wall, bringing it out to the outer end of the rod, spreading the ends on the base to a distance of a foot or more apart, depending on the height of the window. Fasten them to the base so that they will spread a little and show the pattern, but not close the space between them entirely.

Do the same thing on the second rod, but push the goods to the back edge of the rod and fasten the ends on the base at the points half way between those of the first piece.

Continue this plan, alternating the pieces and making contrasts in the designs and colors next to each other, until the background is finished.

Along the rods drape a piece of goods folded to nine inches width by dropping it in short loops from one to another.

In front of this background you can make any sort of form drappings that you please.

The advantage in cutting of full dress patterns with which to do the work is that short lengths are usually worthless for profit and it obviates the necessity of using the whole piece.

Use ordinary care with the lengths and the window service will not have injured them at all.

THE LAST SUMMER DISPLAYS.

The Summer season, from a retailer's standpoint, is drawing to a close. Summer lines need drawing to a close. Novel ideas that will interest the attention of passers in the goods and a suggestion that little money secures a good bargain prove most affective.

Here is a novel idea that is particularly appropriate at this time. Cover the background with almost any kind of plain material. Select a number of Summer lines in smaller articles, such as fancy Summer hose, light silk gloves and mitts, Summer neckwear, etc. Arrange these in rows across the background. This can be nicely done by using knitting needles.

On each article or pair fasten a small price ticket showing the regular price in black and the season-end price in red.

Take several more Summer lines, such as waists, skirts, suits, etc., also arrange these in rows across the base of the window. These also should bear a price ticket treated with a black and a red price. Have one large showcard reading : "The Last Rows of Summer," and place it in the window.

BRING LOOKERS INSIDE.

It is well to have always in mind, first and foremost, that the object of window dressing is to attract the attention of the passers-by, next to being so enticing and persuasive as to compel the looker-on to enter the store. It is very important that a good picture have a good frame. There is nothing which mars the effect of a good display so much as greasy glass or soiled, unpainted casing and woodwork.

There is no one inside the trade or outside who disputes the value of an attractive show window. The preparation of such a window, like the preparation of any other advertisement, is a matter of careful study. It must tell the truth, yet be attractive and inviting.

If a trimmer tries to place his work on a high standard with the public, it is sure to prove beneficial ; if he displays business tact and artistic taste, the windows will be remunerative. Opportunities increase, but the requirements grow in proportion.

Men's Furnishings.

TH E R E has not yet been much demand for Fall goods for the month of August. The weather has not been such as to warrant a change from Summer goods, and, as one men's furnisher says: "People won't buy Fall goods until they begin to feel cold, nor will they invest in umbrellas until they get caught in a rainstorm."

Although this may be all right for the customer, it will not pay the dealer very well to defer placing in his Fall goods until his customers "begin to feel cold." He must be prepared to offer them a fair choice of goods the moment they want them.

To the town dealer, who has not the advantage of being able to buy every day from the wholesale houses, and whose opportunities to obtain ideas from fellow tradesmen are not so great as in the large centres of trade, it is very important to know just what to place in stock, besides the latest fads of the day. Although it is difficult to tell what public taste will agree on, it may be helpful to know what the largest men's furnishers of Toronto, whose opportunities to gauge public taste are greater, are paying attention to, and placing in their windows and on their counters for Fall wear.

Ties that Sell. With the new collar, a batwing tie is almost invariably worn. Dealers are doing a large business in this line, both with ladies and gentlemen. Flowing-end ties are also largely worn with this collar, and may be even more popular for Fall. Plaids in flowing-end ties will be worn to a great extent for Fall and Winter. All combinations of colors may be seen in the plaids, and, although the patterns are mostly large, a number in grey, black and white, combinations are quite small. Grey effects will be popular, whether in stripes or checks. A few of the most prominent men's furnishers show some beautiful lines of flowing-end ties in dark green and white, and dark green and red stripes. The stripes are large and run diagonally. Blues, too, in different designs may frequently be found. The puff tie, although enjoying only a limited sale at present, may be expected to sell well for late Fall and for Winter. Most designs in these ties are in dark colors, with wide stripes or bands running diagonally across them. Colors and designs vary, however, and a few large checks may be seen. Patterns are all fairly large, though not "loud." A tie on the market is the "Windsor." It is in scarf form and meets at the throat by a new shape of ring instead of being tied. The rings are in gold, silver and oxydized. They are spherical in shape, with two openings at the top and one at the bottom, through which the scarf is drawn. Designs of different kinds are stamped on the rings. The scarves are of all patterns and colors. Some dealers are showing them in designs made up of Union Jacks, etc. These ties have recently been having a large run in the United States, where they originated, but their arrival in Canada is too recent to be able to tell whether they will be as popular here or not.

The Collar Trade.

In collars, it is hard to find anything but the new high turned-down variety. Besides the high makes, this kind of collar is made in very low styles, suitable for stout persons, and also more comfortable in warm weather. A noticeable fact in regard to collars is the almost total absence in windows of the ordinary stand-up collar with turned-down points. This is, of course, kept in stock by all dealers, but the popularity of the new high turned-down style has for the time almost eclipsed it. The all-around stand-up collar is also worn considerably.

Window Cards. The use of price cards in men's furnishers' windows is becoming noticeably more general. It is seldom that one passes any up-to-date store without noticing these little hand-printed trade-drawers pinned here and there on the different goods.

Over a row of ties we read: "You can tie these, but you can't beat them for 50c.," the price always being printed in large figures. "We know you come here for good bargains and we wouldn't disappoint you for 50c." "Stubborn sox, color can't be coaxed out for 25c.," and many others show where the wide-awake dealers do business.

A suggestive fact in regard to the use of these cards is that the large and prosperous stores all use them, while it is seldom that one sees them in the windows of the small and less progressive men's furnisher.

A New Thing in Shirts.

The shirt department of the Gault Brothers Co., Limited, are showing for the Spring, 1900, the newest thing in shirts. It is known as the "Spino" and its style can be seen in the firm's advertisement. The pointed effect is printed on the material. This shirt bids fair to be the swell thing for the Spring. It is made from Potter's Manchester shirtings. This company are also showing a fine general range of shirts, comprising about 400 lines, in negligee zephyrs and all the newest styles in stiff bosoms, long and short bosoms, and open front or back and front. Potter's English shirting and Anderson's Scotch zephyrs are used exclusively in all their fine goods. Their travelers go out about the 1st to the 15th of September and will carry all the latest ideas.

Striped Shirts in Vogue.

The colored shirt continues to hold its own, and may be expected to do so until well on in the Fall. Stripes, wide and narrow, and running vertically, are by far the most worn. Colors are nearly all in blue or black. The background of the shirt is usually white with the dark stripes over it, though some shirts are seen with the opposite pattern. Pink striped shirts may also be seen occasionally. A few shirts with small checks are being worn, but their sale does not reach that of the striped shirt.

Showing Goods.

There are ways and ways of placing goods before the public eye. Some of them are worth noticing and imitating. In the matter of ties, for instance, the design and color are the chief things to show. These may be shown by merely hanging the ties in a row out at full length, but the effect produced is not nearly so great as if some of them were tied and placed on collars, so as to let customers see how they look when worn. Ties with special or new designs should always be exhibited as they look when in use. It is often the case that a pattern or design, which is not especially attractive when the tie is unfolded, will look much better when it is done up. Dealers would profit by an examination of their ties before placing in the window or in showcases, to decide in which way the tie looks the better.

When it is possible to show a tie with a colored shirt, so that the colors may be enhanced by combination, this should be done. It may not always result in the sale of both shirt and tie, but it would help greatly to sell the latter, if a customer having a shirt like the one with which the tie is shown should see how well that particular tie looked with it.

A careless habit of many furnishers, who, otherwise, are not backward in showing goods, is the combination of collar, shirt and tie, in which, although the collar and shirt are all that could be desired, the tie is either some out-of-date variety that the dealer wants to get rid of, or else it is one of those very much up-to-date ones whose color does not harmonize in any way with the shirt. This is a mistake that many dealers make; and it is a bad one, too, because a tie that will be noticed only for its ugliness will spoil the effect of the whole combination. It is not done to show the tie as much as the shirt and collar, and, in consequence, many dealers seem to think that any tie at all will do.

A good way to show suspenders is with shirts, hanging the ends over the shoulders of the shirt, just as when worn. Gloves are frequently displayed with handkerchiefs. Some furnishers, who deal in canes, combine these with gloves, and get a good effect.

Canadian Neckwear in Australia and China.

Mr. F. P. Evans has just returned from another trip to the Antipodes, where he has for some time been placing Canadian neckwear in those markets, being the representative of E. & S. Currie, Toronto.

Mr. Evans, who returned August 14 from China and Japan, has had a very extensive trip this time. He went out to Australia last December, visited all the colonies there and New Zealand, and afterwards took a vessel north to Hong Kong, calling at the Philippine Islands on the way. Mr. Evans has no complaint to make of the results of this second trip in behalf of Canadian neckwear.

Australian buyers seem to appreciate the goods and were willing to place orders for more. They considered the goods well made, and in every way a credit to Canada. Up to the present time the popular taste in Australia has been for staple English styles and patterns, but the Australians are quick to appreciate anything stylish and new. The Canadian ties in bright colors placed the first trip sold exceedingly well, which resulted in greatly increased orders for "hot stuff." During his trip the plague was raging at Sydney, and, of course, every ship and every traveler which came out of Sydney was subject to supervision. He himself underwent, at various points no less than 13 medical examinations. He was quarantined for six days at Auckland.

Perhaps the most interesting portion of Mr. Evans' experience relates to his trip to China and Japan, which was the first attempt to place the Canadian neckwear in those markets. In Hong Kong, the retail trade seems to be principally in the hands of quick-witted Chinese merchants. There are several British firms, but, at the same time, the Chinese shops seem to do the larger portion of the trade. This seems strange in a British colony, because, when we go to Shanghai, which is not British, the best houses are British; in Hong Kong, one notices such firms as Tak Chong, See Woo, Chung Woo, and so on. These are not the names of persons, but names attached to the shops. For instance, Tak Chong (whose family name is Poon Su Poon) really means "Virtue and Glory," and, if one goes in to sell to the manager or owner of the place, you call him by his trade name, and say: "Tak Chung, I have some goods to show you." Fuh Lee means "Happiness and Profit." Foo Lee means "Continuous Profits." An American firm does business as Ki Cheong, "The Glorious Flag." They call the Union Jack: Ang mug-ki, "the flag of the red-haired devils." The bulk of the business is conducted in pigeon English, and one quickly picks it up after two or three days' practice in talking with the Chinese merchants. These shops in Hong Kong seem to cater principally for transient trade, as the local population would hardly be sufficient to maintain so many merchants catering, as these do, to European customers. The Chinese in Hong Kong look very peaceable, and the place has that air of order and safety which one associates with British rule. It might be said here that Eastern houses do their trade with the Chinamen through a "compradore," a sort of agent who is in heavy bonds but does all the selling to the right people, and who gets a commission on what he sells. Among the largest British houses doing business in the East may be mentioned Lane, Crawford & Co., with branches in Hong Kong, Shanghai and Yokohama, and Messrs. Hall & Holtz, of Shanghai, and T. Weeks & Co. These and other firms do an immense business all over the East.

"I do not find," said Mr. Evans pointedly, "that any particular effort is made to push Canadian goods in the East.

In fact, the only concerns which I could notice as having any direct representative in the East were the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Sun Life Assurance Co., of Montreal, and E. & S. Currie, Toronto. With these exceptions one may say that Canada and Canadian goods are practically unknown. Why, one of these big firms I have mentioned to you deal in MacLaren's 'Imperial' cheese, and yet it appears they buy it in San Francisco and do not connect it with Canada at all. There are, as far as I could discover from the buyers for big houses, no Canadian cottons and no Canadian flour. In both these lines the United States are doing a thriving trade. The Canadian Government is itself handling the sale of Canadian butter in these markets, and, while its quality is all that can be desired, I may just as well say that Australian butter is much better put up than ours. I mention this in no carping spirit," continued Mr. Evans, "but simply because I was impressed while in the East by the utter ignorance regarding Canada which prevailed there."

Mr. Evans also made a short trip to Japan on his way home. He found the Japanese were clever business men, and he did some business with them. The Japanese use European costumes for the most part, and all those belonging to the official classes do so. In neckwear, a great number of black stuff ties are used, but Japanese buyers looked with appreciation at the Canadian goods, and also wanted to buy the material in the piece.

Men's Neckties. Not for many seasons, said an authority on this subject to THE REVIEW representative, have the styles in men's necktie silks covered such a wide area. The demand runs from neat small effects to boldest designs and vivid colorings.

Spots are selling very well both in foulard and satin, and also neat, small patterns in the same cloths.

Large and medium-sized figures in white against a dark ground are amongst the newest effects for the Fall trade, but bold decided bars and stripes are still kings in the trade, where actual volume of sale is concerned.

Regarding color, it is blue, ranging from navy to the palest turquoise, with figures or stripes of white and black, while black ground with white or red, and the different shades of red with relieving stripes or figures in black and white are also very good for the coming season.

In shapes, the flowing end still leads in volume of sale, but the new batwing bow is pushing hard for first place, while graduate derbys sell as well as ever, and are in constant demand.

Niagara Neckwear.

The Niagara Neckwear Co., Niagara Falls, report that the shapes most salable for Autumn are batwing strings, imperials and narrow four-in-hands. These three will be leaders. In cloths and colors—anything that is new and novel and catches the eye of the purchaser.

This firm report a largely-increasing business, so much so that they have great difficulty in taking care of the great rush of orders. They make only up-to-date American shapes. Christmas lines will be shown the trade some time this month, and they are claimed to be both the most exclusive and the most expensive lines ever shown in Canada. They will have several hundred patterns of exclusive weaves, cloths and colors, ranging from $9, $12, $15 and $18 per dozen.

The Dominion Suspender Co., Niagara Falls, with their large addition to their factory, are now shipping orders for "Trade D Mark" suspenders very promptly, even considering the great increase in their business for the celebrated make. The "President" suspender, made by this firm, is still having a large sale.

Their Christmas line of exclusive novelties will be in their travelers' samples some time this month. Montreal office, 207 St. James street; Quebec office, 111 St. Joseph street, and Winnipeg office, 515 McIntyre block.

Men's Mufflers. According to the New York trade journals a great change has taken place in the style for men's mufflers. The old style, with satin or cotton quilting on one side, is no longer shown, while the manufacturers in New York are competing with each other for the trade by advertising the reversible muffler only.

There is, no doubt, a great deal of sense in the reversible muffler, as, it being an article of utility, the wearer wishes to get the double amount of wear that a reversible muffler affords, while one manufacturer claims to have a muffler that can be worn in four ways, each showing differently on the neck. As the made-up muffler is an American idea originally, we will no doubt follow them in their new style of reversible muffler.

Business Notes. The stock of the estate of H. F. Service, men's furnisher and furrier, St. Thomas, Ont., has been sold.

Felstern & Adler, tailors, Montreal, have registered partnership.

James A. Cox, tailor, Hamilton, Ont., has given up business.

J. B. Viens & Fils, tailors and clothing dealers, Acton, Que., have dissolved.

Vahey & Kerman, men's furnishers, Grand Forks, B.C., have assigned to Edmund S. Biden.

The stock of W. B. Gemmill, men's furnisher, Ottawa, was sold at 67½c. on the dollar.

The assets of E. McConkey & Co., men's furnishers, St. Johns, Que., have been sold.

Supplementary letters patent have been applied for by The Archibald Co., Limited, wholesale hatters and men's furnishers, Truro, N.S., increasing their capital to $50,000.

M. Rothschild & Co., men's furnishers, Rat Portage, Ont., assigned to J. G. Strong.

Alex. Neal, tailor, Moncton, N.B., is dead.

James Blauvelt, tailor, Windsor, Ont., has commenced business.

A Chat About New Ties. The Fall season promises to bring forth decided changes in neckwear. Every silk manufacturer has put forth strong efforts this year to make a great show for the Paris Exhibition, and, in consequence, numerous new ideas in cloths have been worked out. Buyers who have visited the English markets this year found plenty of scope to put an entirely new range of cloths on the Canadian market, and most of them have availed themselves of the opportunity. A representative of Tooke Bros., Limited, Montreal, has been on the silk market for about a month, and he says that Paris ideas will permeate the silk tie trade through and through this Fall.

The important point in the choice of neckwear is getting right color. For this Christmas the most important new color will be green, in the soft, dark, Hunter, Nimrod and olive shades. This appears to be the new feature in colorings and can be taken up safely by the trade. The new blues are Paris, Yale, Royal, Latour, Manne and Wedgewood. Several shades of red, including Richelieu, Othello, Pouppe, Gamel and Eldorado will also be prominent. A large number of grey and steel grounds, brightened up with highly-colored bar stripes, making a strong combination, will also be found. Bar stripes are undoubtedly coming in again, for they give much more scope for variety and striking effect, and show up well on the new Razinine, Baratheia and varied new armure grounds. The puff seems bound to come in again for Christmas in the form of a smaller shape than that last worn, as the Fall fashions are dictating high vests. In the best quality of goods some new ideas are being shown in large designs. There is a noticeable tendency toward Persian patterns, both in designs and bars.

FIRE IN A COTTON STOREROOM.

Fire broke out in the storeroom adjoining the St. Ann's Cotton Factory on Notre Dame street, Montreal, on Wednesday afternoon, August 29, and did damage to the extent of $50,000. The plant is the property of the Dominion Cotton Mills, of which Mr. A. F. Gault is president. The blaze was first noticed at 4.25 o'clock, flashing through the roof of the shed in that portion facing Harbor street, and it was not till 10.30 o'clock that the fire brigade gained control of the flames, which for a time threatened destruction to the mill property to the east as well as to the new wing that has just been completed on the south side.

The fire seems to have been caused by spontaneous combustion. The fact that the storeroom is divided into a series of compartments, walled with heavy planks, greatly hampered the firemen and salvage corps in saving the contents of the structure from fire, smoke, and water. Whatever is left of the stock has been spread in the adjoining fields to dry. There is sufficient stock on hand to keep the factory in operation. The loss is partly covered by insurance.

FALL WAISTS.

Boulter & Stewart claim to be showing one of the most complete ranges of waists ever offered for Fall trade in Canada. Their line comprises every cloth suitable for Fall and Winter trade. Their designs are a marvel for variety. They draw special attention to their extensive range of silk waists, from $2 75 up to $13 50 each. They box all their better lines one to a box, which gives an individuality not to be obtained otherwise.

PROTECTING THE LOCK STITCH HOSE.

Messrs. A. E. Adams & Co., the manufacturers of the famous Lock Stitch hose, have decided to protect their goods with a registered trade mark, as other goods have been offered as lock stitch.

As Messrs. Adams are the sole proprietors of the only machine that will make a lock stitch hose, it can be seen that any hose that has not Messrs. Adams' trade mark on is not a lock stitch hose.

The locking of the stitch prevents a hose that has been cut or worn in a stocking from "running."

The lock stitch is applied also in the manifolding of the knees and ankles in their great line for boys and girls. Messrs. Williams & Bell, who are sole agents for Canada, report that the demand in Canada for this line has increased so largely of late that Messrs. Adams have been obliged to increase their capacity to meet it.

WHITEWEAR FOR 1901.

The Gale Manufacturing Company, Toronto, manufacturers of white wear, shirt waists, wrappers and dress skirts are shortly to occupy their new large addition to their Mincing Lane factory. Mr. Gale reports a greatly increased Fall trade, and, from the many efforts being expended on the range of samples for 1901, and the present appearance of the novelties, looks for even a greater increase next season which will be handled to advantage in their enlarged premises.

F. ROBERTSON & CO.

The illustration shows a few of the newest things in handkerchiefs shown by F. Robertson & Co. for the season. There has been a very large demand for these goods. The tendency this season seems to be the using of lace insertions and footings for handkerchiefs, instead of embroideries, as formerly. Embroideries, however, have by no means gone out. There is still a good demand for them.

The Only "WATER TWIST" Yarn Made in Canada.

TORONTO WHOLESALE TRADE.

JOHN MACDONALD & CO.

THE well-known Wilton velvet carpet, of which the above firm have the control in Canada, is very much in evidence in their carpet department. It is still selling at old prices and seems to be as popular as ever. A full line of linoleums, 2 and 4-yard, are being sold at 2½c. per yard less than next Spring's prices. An assortment of tapestry table covers, a job lot, 8 4 8 10 and 12 4, for the Exhibition trade, are a good bargain at regular prices. A new medium-priced tapestry carpet, called the "Crescent," is likely to be in good demand for the next season. It is made by a well-known firm, and the patterns and designs are taken from popular Brussels makes. Special attention is paid by John Macdonald & Co. to browns, tans and crimsons, which, by all appearances, are to be the predominating colors in Spring carpets.

Shell hair ornaments and side combs are being largely bought for the coming season. A special line of these, as well as hat-buckles and slides in jet and brilliants are shown, which are finding a good sale. This firm find that the flowing-end ties are among their best selling lines of neckwear and their stock has been regulated accordingly.

Fancy black silk and wool broches and repp effects will be worn largely this season. They are shown in all patterns, and sell for $2.25 per yard. In satins, black will, of course, be greatly used, and a line of white, cream and colored satins are also expected to have large sales for Fall. Black velvet ribbons for trimmings, with satin back, have become a favorite with many buyers and will likely be worn to a considerable extent. In overskirtings, John Macdonald & Co. find that blacks and blues are their best selling goods, while, in ready-made overskirts, the trade is almost wholly in these colors.

They are making a specialty this season of some fabrics for women's costumes and skirtings, comprising plain homespuns, herringbone effects, diamond checks, covert cloths, whipcords, fancy tweed effects and fancy worsteds. Good sales are reported on all these. English and German beaver cloths for jackets are to be still worn a good deal in different colors.

They have a fine range of fancy worsted suitings; domestic and imported, which are good sellers. The favorite colors seem to be in grey checks and grey mixtures. Black and grey llama cloths will be probably more worn than anything else for Fall overcoatings. Blacks, blues, and mixtures in nap cloths will also be worn, with the usual demand for black and blue beavers and meltons.

The Belwarp goods, which this firm handle, are already prime favorites with buyers. In addition to their stock of blacks and blues, they are carrying this year a line of grey mixtures of various shades in Belwarp worsteds. A high class of goods in fancy Belwarp striped trouserings is having a good sale.

This firm give an opportunity during September to buy some job lines of 3 4 Canadian tweeds and 6 4 Canadian friezes, which they are going to clear out.

Some excellent towellings are being offered by this firm in Blarney, Killarney, and Russian crash. Over 40 numbers are shown, and they appear to be well liked. Attention should be called to two or three special lines of linen table napkins, on which they are having heavy sales. An assortment of imported underskirtings in flannelette, black and red stripes, with border, are being largely bought for the Fall trade.

THE STEWART, HOWE & MAY CO.

Skirt bindings are being made to a great extent with the well-known "S.H. & M." bias velveteen goods. These are manufactured from a velveteen made purposely for skirt bindings and used for nothing else. They can be had in every fashionable shade from season to season. The bias brush edge skirt binding is bought largely on account of its durable qualities and the fact that it has a natural curve, which fits the lines of the skirt so that there is no wrinkling.

These goods, it is claimed, will enable the retailer to make from 50 to 75 per cent. profit, and, as their sale is very large in all parts of the world, they should be a paying class of goods for him to carry.

The Canadian handlers of these skirt bindings, Stewart, Howe & May, apparently are firm believers in advertising. They are issuing a couple of pamphlets which are novelties in their way. One called "The Hammer," and used, as it says, to drive home a number of facts, is an up to date idea, and is printed and covered tastefully. Each has a sample of the bias brush edge skirt binding inside. These circulars are supplied to retailers for distribution among their customers.

Another good idea of the Stewart, Howe & May Co. is to supply advertising cuts to those who handle the "S.H. & M." bindings, to help the sale of these goods.

NISBET & AULD.

The stock of the Brookfield Linen Co., Belfast, Ireland, which was recently bought by Nisbet & Auld at reduced prices, is going rapidly. It consists of damasks, towellings, napkins, etc., and they intend to clear the whole out as quickly as possible.

In tailors' trimmings, silk, mohair and worsted Italian linings are in great demand now. These lines are being paid particular attention to just now by the above firm. They are also finding a large sale for mercerized linings, Rome satins, in black and colors.

Fashion reports show a larger demand than ever before in tailor-made costumes for this season. Donegal friezes will be especially worn in many shades. Nisbet & Auld are already receiving orders for their goods in this line. They have a special line of their own in 20 shades, which are in good demand.

Plain and Venetian cloths are looked upon still as good sellers for the Fall trade. The well-known Devonia serges, which this firm control in Canada, are well thought of for Fall. They are now being used a good deal by the British Admiralty, and will likely become steady sellers in the Canadian market this year.

For the popular suitings of the year, Nisbet & Auld show a line of tweeds and worsteds. Novelties in stripe effects they find to be bought in large quantities. Nothing will likely be more worn than Canadian tweeds this Fall and Winter. This department in the warerooms of the firm shows that they expect a heavy demand for this class of goods, in both suitings and trouserings. They are doing a good business in a large quantity of mill overmakes, which, at less than mill prices, are going out rapidly.

DRESS GOODS FOR NEXT SPRING.

THE Spring season does not give an opportunity for the introduction of fancy dress goods to any extent, as light-weight materials are wanted and fancy loop yarns give additional weight. Then, too, warm colors, which are seen to the best advantage, are for Autumn.

Plain materials are to have first place for the Spring season of 1901.

Soft effects in dress call for single yarn warps, and single yarn warps mean light-weight goods of a good quality. It is impossible to spin fine yarns from anything but high-class fine stock, and it follows that materials that are made right-will not be sold for a song. Some effects and single yarns suggest veilings, tamise, batiste, cashmeres, grenadines and other light-weight goods of the same order.

Supplementary evidence of an increased demand for soft effects in dress is seen in the growing popularity for soft-finished silks.

The foregoing is only a partial solution of the dress goods problem for Spring. Materials for the masses must necessarily possess the elements of economy in construction, durability and utility. All these requirements suggest heavier materials than veilings. Naturally, that means venetians, broadcloths, light-weight chevots, camel's hair, granites, serges and other materials suitable for tailor-made suits, for the reason that single-yarn goods are, generally speaking, too high in price for the masses to buy.

While plain goods bid fair to hold first place, there will be some fancies sold, as there always are. There is a general desire on the part of woman to have her tailor-made garments as mannish as possible in texture as well as in workmanship. For this reason, we may confidently look for a fair demand for such wool materials as men are favoring.

There is every reason to believe that the demand for wash goods will be unabated. This opinion is ventured after a careful survey of the field and after carefully noting the drift of fashion. If one pays a visit to the seaside or to a mountain resort, or, in fact, to any gathering where the well-dressed women assemble and is observant of costumes, the impression is immediately gained that cotton is the dominant material.

Taking their cue from the prominence that laces were given in toilettes at the Grande Prix, recently held in Paris, cotton converters who make a specialty of bringing out high-class novelties have prepared collections of fine cotton novelties in imitating lace work. It should be noted that these materials are manufactured from the very finest spun yarns; that they are highly polished, and that they give a strength to the material that will make it a profitable purchase for retailer as well as consumer.

There is nothing to indicate any marked change in the general scheme for cotton dress goods from that which has obtained during the season of 1900. The presence of costumes at fashionable gatherings that show hand-painted designs, give rise to the belief that printed effects will have a showing in the Spring collection.

It is to be regretted at present that designers are working along the lines of extreme novelties when it would be better if they would give their attention to bringing out new and original neat effects. It is the experience alike of cotton converters and merchants that, in bringing out printed designs in wash goods, out of five designs brought out only three will sell. An odd case sold now and then of an extreme novelty at a profit does not pay for the loss that one is obliged to take on a dozen cases which have to go on the bargain counter.— St. Louis Drygoodsman.

A NEW DRESS FASTENER.

The accompanying cut represents a new dress fastener which is offered to the trade by Kyle, Cheesbrough & Co., Montreal. It is made on the same principle as the fasteners used on gloves and is rapidly replacing the old-fashioned hooks-and-eyes, as it has a better appearance, is surer and more convenient. This article is known as the K. C. "Brand," and Messrs. Kyle, Cheesbrough & Co. are sole agents for the sale of it in Canada.

CHINA AND THE SILK MARKET.

M. Markus, 30 Hospital street, Montreal, predicts that the Chinese War will have an appreciative effect upon the silk market. Writing to THE DRY GOODS REVIEW, he says that "silkmen generally believe that this war will continue a long time and that, although the Chinese will be taught to respect other nations, we shall be compelled to pay, indirectly, for the giving of the lesson, for China is the great silk-producing country, and its output of silk is being restricted." It is, therefore, argued that it is advisable to lay in good stocks of silks, satins, velvets, etc., at once. As yet he has not raised his own prices, but knows not what moment he will have to do so.

A great auction sale of woollens was held in Montreal on Tuesday and Wednesday, August 28 and 29. The goods were all bread and cheese, i.e., everyday goods, and it is unaccountable how such staple lines should fall under the untender mercies of the auctioneer.

F. F. Kelly, Montreal, has thousands of dozens of the Brais brand of English collars yet in stock to clear at ridiculous prices in his September sale. He had intended to continue the tie business and his stock has been assorted with blacks, white and staple shades for the Fall trade, but all will now be sacrificed.

J. N. Currie, of Glencoe, Ont., has just had some extensive alterations and improvements made in his store. The interior has been thoroughly refitted with all the modern fixtures. The two large plate-glass show-windows have been wonderfully improved by sliding mirrors both back and side of windows. The store is 90 ft. long by 25 ft. wide. Attractiveness and practical utility are excellently combined. The attractive, up-to-date displays show good taste and splendid judgment in buying. The country merchant can hold trade from city stores by keeping the qualities and styles required at the proper time. Recognizing this, Mr. Currie has an establishment that would reflect credit on any city store, and thus secures the trade.

CANADIAN WOOLLENS IN GREAT BRITAIN.

THERE appears to be a general good feeling of prosperity among the makers of the best class of woollen cloths in Canada at present, and no mill seems to be pushing out with greater energy than that at Oxford, N.S., where the famous Oxford tweeds and homespuns are made. The treasurer, Mr. H. L. Hewson, returned a few days ago from Europe and reports a growing demand for his products over there. One Scotch manufacturer of long standing squarely acknowledged that the Oxford homespuns, considering their absolute purity of stock, were selling at prices with which he could not compete, and the fact of a large house having bought a good quantity in an adjoining city at once proved the truth of this. Some of the Old Country mills are very short of orders. One of the oldest firms visited by Mr. Hewson said they were now manufacturing for stock, instead of to order, for the first time in 30 years. Every season finds our own mills turning out goods which surpass previous efforts, and the facts above stated go to support the position THE REVIEW has always taken in regard to Canada being able to make her own cloths from wool raised on her own farms equal to any fabrics in their class made anywhere in the world. Canadian woollen manufacturers have not the reputation of earning very large profits, and certainly deserve ample protection in every way in order to encourage them to go on and develop the trade to such proportions as that they shall be able to enter into the export trade much more vigorously and at the same time maintain a satisfactory scale of wages to their operatives. With this protection, to at least the previous duties, one can easily see how the mill would feel more like investing in still further improvements without being in uncertainty as to what the future has in store for them. The Oxford people have a resident American agent, and we understand that they, as well as a number of other Canadian mills, export quite largely to the United States, notwithstanding the almost prohibitive duty of almost 110 per cent. It will be well if Canadian dealers and consumers encourage in every possible way the manufacturers who are laboring to build up a woollen trade which will stand at the front in competition with the world.

FASHIONABLE MEN'S WEAR IN NEW YORK.

Says a New York writer of the highest authority on fashions: "Last Autumn and Winter were prolific of outer coats which were marked by many changes in shape, cut and finish, some of which will doubtless again be in fashion, while others will give place to an older style or one distinctly new. Perhaps the most noteworthy of all these was the raglan, which came into favor with a rush during the early months and so far survived the onslaught of later creations as to hold its place during the entire Winter as a smart garment. Not that it remained in the very front rank of fashion, for it became almost too generally popular for that, but it kept its position as a good and serviceable town and country coat until the laying away of heavy clothes in late Spring. The question is what standing the raglan will have in the season to come? Will it be a fashionable evening coat as it undoubtedly was at the beginning of last Autumn? Will it be a day coat? Will it again fill its originally intended mission as a country garment? Will it be long or short, velvet or plain collared, cuffed or cuffless? There have been so many different styles of this overcoat, though all made upon one general type, that it is impossible to tell which will be the most in vogue, even granting that it is to be one of the Winter's modes. That it will be a great deal worn in all its forms there is little doubt, for the average man wears an overcoat at least part way through its second season, unless there is a decided change of fashion, and the large majority of raglans now in existence were made within the past eight months and have still to show any great signs of use.

"The most correct coat of last Winter was cut to hang loosely from the shoulders, and for a man five feet nine inches in height was about 48 inches long. It had a velvet collar about one and three-quarters in breadth, seams double-stitched a half an inch and edges to correspond; pockets placed vertically on the inside and reached through slits, which also enabled the wearer to get at his trousers pockets without unbuttoning the coat; the double shoulder seam running up to a point under the collar, and cuffs two and one-half inches broad with rounded corners. The distinguishing feature of the raglan is, of course, the shoulder seams, running up from each side of the arms to a point under the collar and giving a sloping, cape-like and somewhat round-shouldered look to the sleeves. The coat should hang full and loose, without the slightest suggestion of waist and without flare below. While, as has been said, the raglan of last Winter's make will, undoubtedly, be in evidence during the Autumn, it is by no means certain that it will be smart, or even much worn by the best dressed men, and I should not advise having one made at the risk of being exactly one year behind the fashion.

"As for the Inverness, a distinctly evening coat in vogue several seasons ago, its deathknell was sounded last Autumn, and during the entire Winter there was scarcely one to be seen on a smartly dressed man. Though hardly suited to rough and severe weather, it is a remarkably graceful garment, and in the inevitable turn of fashion's wheel it is certain sooner or later to be resurrected and restored to its high estate. This year, however, it is extremely improbable that such will be the case; fashions repeat themselves, but seldom with only one year's intermission.

"Coming to the Chesterfield, a coat which has always kept its place as a popular everyday garment, correct for afternoon or evening, but making no great claim to especial 'style,' I may say without hesitation that it will be as much worn as ever, and in much its old shape. As to its exact finish, however, I should not care to advise this early. There are matters of buttons, seams, pockets and cuffs which can only be determined by waiting until the smart tailors have begun to fill their Autumn orders. It is, for instance, rather doubtful, I think, if turned back cuffs are as much worn this season as last. Like most other coats, there are several different styles of the Chesterfield, varying in length and in fullness of back, one long and loose, which was particularly in fashion during last spring, another with a slight spring to the seams and slightly flaring skirts, another of medium-weight material, faced with silk on the lapels, and the older box-cut style. The last-named model is perhaps the most usual, or at least was so during the past Winter. It was cut single-breasted, with fly front, rather loose and full in the back, and reached about an inch, or possibly two inches, below the knees. The shoulders were broad and square, and the velvet collar was made to set closely around the neck, and was from 1½ to 2 inches in width. The edges were double-stitched and no piping was used. The close-fitting Chesterfield was cut to give a slight suggestion of waist, and the lower part of the garment had a slight flare to make it hang well away from the legs. The turned-back cuff was not, strictly speaking, correct on this coat, though many of the long spring coats had narrow cuffs with rounded points. Welt seams and double stitching were usual, as well as side pockets set diagonally. Except on the evening Chesterfield, however, a breast pocket was not usual.

"During the past Spring the most noticeable features about overcoats were length and looseness. The long, full-backed coat in light and dark shades of material and in varying weights, was a great deal worn, the types most in evidence being the long Chesterfield and the Thorndyke. Both were rather new styles and it seems extremely probable that they will be fashionable this Autumn in tan and sage green tones of covert cloth. The principal characteristic of the Thorndyke is its yoke, which forms two points in front and two in the back, the cloth from the end of one sleeve, up over the shoulders, and to the end of the other sleeve being cut from one piece, so that the usual and ordinary shoulder seams are lacking. The coat should be, like the raglan, about 48 inches long for the man of five feet nine, and should hang loosely from the shoulders. For a man of six feet in height, 50 inches, or even 51, would not be too great a length. The collar should be of velvet and the cuffs of the same material as the coat, two and one half inches wide all the way around, finished with rounded corners and without piping. The coat has no breast pocket and the side pockets are set vertically, like those of a raglan. They may be made with slits, if desired, and it is the better way, as they make it possible to get at the pockets of the trousers and jacket without unbuttoning the coat. The coat is, of course, single-breasted and has four bone buttons. Lapels are cut rather high and have the peaks pointed down. This, it must be understood, is the coat of last Spring. It will no doubt be worn during the early weeks, but the style may not last, or there may be changes in it as the season progresses. You must not forget the fact that I am not attempting to predict Winter fashions, but am simply reviewing the situation with respect to overcoats as it existed at the close of last season.

"Among the other particularly smart coats the Kneed needs especial mention. It differs from the types described in almost every respect, but principally in having a decided waist line, somewhat flaring skirts and a slit at the back finished much like the skirts of a frock coat. It has side pockets, set diagonally and covered by flaps, a small change pocket and a breast pocket without flap. The side pockets are large and deep and may show the stitching on the outside, though there is some latitude allowed as to finish. The seams, for instance, may be plain, double-stitched or strapped. The coat has a velvet collar and cuffs like those of the Thorndyke or raglan. It was extremely smart as an evening coat last Spring made of rather lightweight material in drab and greys, and will probably be again in vogue during the first months of Autumn. The garment has more cut, if I may use the word to express my meaning, owing to the waist and side lines and the flaring skirts, than other styles of overcoats, and on a man of good height and figure it looks exceedingly smart. With it a high hat is the only one possible. With the Chesterfield, the raglan or the Thorndyke one may wear a derby, but this coat is entirely too "dressy," to use a shop expression, for anything but a silk or opera hat, and with it a derby would look almost as much out of place as it would with an Inverness.

"The black or dark grey evening overcoat of moderate weight, cut single-breasted with fly front, was a good deal worn during the latter part of last Winter. Its principal characteristic consisted in the silk facing to the edges of the lapels; in fact, I know of no other overcoat on which facings might be correctly put, though, incorrectly, it is often used on light and dark covert coats. This coat is cut to hang straight from the shoulders, without any indication of waist, but still with no great fullness. The lapels are cut rather high, and the collar may be either of velvet, of silk, or of the material from which the coat is made. In length, it should reach a little below the knees. Pockets may be either vertical, without through stitching of the usual type, square and covered by flaps, except that at the breast. The seams may be plain or slightly overlapped, and there may be turned-back cuffs or not, as one desires. Perhaps the plain sleeve is a bit the more correct. The lining should be of satin throughout.

"It is difficult to imagine, with so many different varieties of outer coats already in the field, how there can be anything distinctly new this season, but still I dare say we shall see some type more or less novel, and a good many slight changes of detail. The early Autumn, when there is just a suspicion of chill in the air, is the time of all others for the short light covert coat, and it is to be hoped that it will be more worn by well-dressed men than it has been in the recent past. That it will be really smart, is, of course, too much to expect, but so easy, useful and comfortable a garment should not be sacrificed on the altar of fashion."

A GOOD EXHIBIT.

The exhibit of tweeds and homespuns made by the Oxford Manufacturing Co., Limited, of Oxford, N.S., at the Toronto Fair is on a larger scale than ever. An extensive buyer of woollens in that city remarked that it really surpassed displays in the same line which he had seen at the Paris Exposition. To the energy and good taste of this mill's selling agents,

Nisbet & Auld, is largely due the success of the displays. The ranges of ladies' costume fabrics made at Oxford are very attractive, and much admired by the ladies.

CANADIAN WOOLLENS DO WELL.

Prominently among the attractive lines for the Spring and Summer trade shown by H. Shorey & Co. was noticed a full line of the celebrated Paton crossbred worsteds. These goods were manufactured by The Paton Manufacturing Co., of Sherbrooke, Que., and certainly reflect a great deal of credit upon Canadian manufacturers.

They came into competition in the Paris Exposition with a number not only of Canadian lines but lines of French worsteds, and were awarded the gold medal over all competitors. These goods are made in the latest shades—blue, greys, fawns, drabs and some very artistic color mixtures in checks, and will be the popular cloth for the coming Spring and Summer trade of 1901.

H. Shorey & Co. have taken time by the forelock in securing an excellent range of these goods, and they are being very largely taken up by dealers in fine woollens for the tailoring trade.

THE CENTURY BRAND.

Clothing buyers interested in men's well-tailored, high-class clothing should inspect the range of samples being placed before the trade for next Spring and Summer by The Lowndes Company, Limited, of Toronto, under the name of "The 20th Century" brand.

It is, certainly, the most original line ever offered for inspection to the merchants of Canada. A specialty of this collection is that, in addition to the regular sizes, it includes such an exclusive range of slenders and stouts.

NEXT SEASON'S CLOTHING STYLES.

In wandering among the clothiers in search of forecasts for the Spring and Summer trade of 1901, THE REVIEW was shown by Shorey & Co., of Montreal, a few of their samples which were already in.

The four-button sack coat is still predominating for business and everyday wear. Coats are cut very much higher than last year, and the edges will generally be double stitched instead of single stitched as last season. The popular style in vests is to be without collar and cut quite high. The width of trousers has not varied much from last season. Fancy solid worsteds, stripes and checks predominate. Some lines of single-breasted sack coats will be worn with double-breasted no-collar vests, but the single-breasted no-collar vests will be the popular style.

The morning coat made with three buttons and worn with vests to match and striped worsted trousers will be the popular garment for dressy occasions when the occasion is not quite sufficiently important to wear the Prince Albert frock. These are made mostly in Clay twills and corkscrews—venetians are not nearly as popular this season.

Some very handsome lines are shown in fine worsted mixtures, drabs, browns, and Oxford greys with woven back in light weights, say from 14 to 18 oz. six-quarter, which were made up in raglan, Piccadilly, and single-breasted long overcoats, all Rigby water-proofed; the nature of the woven back, obviating the necessity of a lining, make these garments not only a particularly dressy, but a very comfortable waterproof coat for Spring and Summer wear.

For warm-weather clothing, the popular lines will be in light weight, fine cricket flannel in blue, grey and green shades, also in navy ground with white stripes, made unlined with wide facings; vests without collar—when a vest is worn. These lines will be worn chiefly with outing shirt and belt, and the vest will be omitted for extremely hot days.

A BOOK FOR CLOTHIERS.

H. Shorey & Co., of Montreal, are getting up a very complete catalogue for the Spring and Summer of 1901. It is printed on half-tone paper, and artistically illustrated. Their motto, "Not made to order, but made to fit," is printed across the top of the cover. They call it "A Handbook for Clothing Dealers," and as such it is quite complete. Opposite the different illustrations, showing their makes and styles, is a blank page for memoranda of requirements in each line for the Spring and Summer of 1901. If this book is kept, and the memoranda made use of, it will be of great assistance to the buyer in making his selections when the traveler comes around. It is one of the most perfect buyer's memorandum books that we have ever seen.

Across the top of each page is printed in red certain maxims which we commend to the perusal of the dealer in ready-made clothing. The advice is excellent if taken. Such maxims as: "It is easy to get a profit on goods that are well-known and asked for." "A satisfied customer comes again and brings his friends." "Keep only goods with a reputation, and your goods are half sold." "Nothing will give a store such a black eye as to compel a person to keep goods he does not want and with which he is not satisfied." "To hold your trade, keep your stock well assorted." "'We are sorry we are just out,' gets your customer to trade elsewhere." "Put down a memorandum of such goods as you are out of from day to day, so that it will not be forgotten." "The mother buys the children's clothes. A well-assorted stock brings her to your store, and often induces trade in other departments." "Buy your goods from a reliable dealer, and you have taken the first step on the road to success. "Improperly made clothing brings your customer back, but only to grumble." Etc.

There are 42 pages in this book, and every one of them is of interest to the dealer in ready-to-wear clothing.

A NEW TORONTO WAREHOUSE.

THE REVIEW visited the warerooms of W. E. Chalcraft & Co. and found them very busy with Exhibition visitors. They have paid considerable attention to fitting up their establishment with regard to the comfort and convenience of callers. On the first flat there is a reading room, where the best trade journals and other reading matter may be seen by customers who have to wait. On the same floor they have a sample room, with samples of every garment in the building, so that customers do not have to travel from flat to flat to see the goods. This is an innovation for which Chalcraft & Co. deserve credit.

They are having splendid success with a large range of Irish serges and tweeds imported from Athlone, Ireland. A number of clearing lines should be noticed by retailers, among which may be mentioned some fancy imported tweeds, which they are selling considerably below the regular price. A fine line of Scotch tweeds, with satin-finished lining, which they are clearing at much reduced prices, are of special value.

We Have a Proposition to Lay Before You:

It's an interesting proposition to every merchant who thinks he ought to sell more good underwear and make a correspondingly better profit.

In every town and city of Canada (excepting only a few of the largest), we are ready to give the agency and exclusive sale of the Dr. Deimel Linen Underwear to ONE merchant.

The Dr. Deimel Underwear is no longer an experiment. We have demonstrated and proved to the satisfaction of those who were most sceptical, both in England and America, that the Dr. Deimel Underwear presents the seeming paradox of keeping the wearer warm in winter and cool in summer. There are other points, but are you interested in our proposition? If so, write at once and forestall your neighbor.

It means getting control for your city of the UNDERWEAR OF THE FUTURE.

MONTREAL WHOLESALE TRADE.

S. GREENSHIELDS, SON & CO.

IN their A1 department, S. Greenshields, Son & Co. have a new line of "Kitchener" tweeds in assorted patterns, to be used like a lada. They ought to be a taking line. They also have some nice new lines of wrapperettes, fancy suitings, and costumes and flannelette skirtings, in the choice of which care and taste have been displayed. Tartan cotton dress goods are in large stock, ranging from low to high prices. They have some new designs in welt suitings that are striking, and their cheviot suitings in different colors and patterns ought to be popular. Quite a range of reversible goods in all colors and good contrasts have just been put in stock, and these include the famous "G & B" brand. They have quite a nice variety of jura fleece goods that are proving to be good sellers, while their jobbing lots include some chincilla goods that are worthy of note.

Spectal attention is being paid to the linen department, and results have already justified its being placed in the best corner of the warehouse. The stock includes full lines of Irish, Scotch and German manufactures, and the preparations for the Fall rush appear to be complete. A nice range of fancy linens, including runners, five o'clock tea cloths and napkins to match, has just come to hand, and will bear close inspection. Of course, one of the best lines in this department is that of J. & T. Alexander, of Dumferline, Scotland, for whom S. Greenshields, Son & Co. have lately been appointed sole Canadian agents. The range of samples is now complete. The damask goods that this firm turn out present an appearance that rivals satin.

In cottons, there are some special lines in white and grey remnants. This firm have cleared out a manufacturer's stock of overalls, and are now offering them at bargain prices.

The fancy goods department is spreading; never did this firm show a more extensive range for the Christmas trade than they do this year. Principal among their holiday goods is a large line of jet belts. Shetland floss is being shown in all colors, and the sale it is now enjoying marks it as the new wool. It is used extensively for capes, baby robes, hoods, jackets, etc. A new departure for this house is the importation of special lines of pipes and harmonicas, which are now in stock. Foreign perfumes have also been placed in stock lately.

Mr. Williams, of the carpet department, has just returned from the continent and brings with him all the latest continental news. Carpets, he says, are very firm, due to increased cost of production. The striking color for the Spring will be blue, which has displaced green almost entirely. Pile carpets are still much shown. The creton printers in and about Manchester have entered into a Printers' Association quite recently and are advancing prices. Curtains, too, are very firm; low-priced qualities being very hard to get, as the firms that have been producing inferior grades have turned their attention to more expensive productions. S. Greenshields, Son & Co., have a special drive in grey blankets just now, in 5, 6 and 7 lb. only. Jute carpets are on sale at old prices.

In their dress goods department, S. Greenshields, Son & Co. have some new French mixtures that present homespun effects, but which are heavy enough for Fall wear. Some venetians of special finish of twill face have been put in stock in assorted colors. Bon cloths, satin cloths and brockettelles make up the newest varieties of dress goods.

AMERICAN SILK WAIST MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

Encouraged by the success that has met their efforts to find a market for high-class articles, the American Silk Waist Manufacturing Company are placing a new waist on the market. This is No. 555. It is made of the best quality of soft, heavy British silk, and its style is the latest New York production. The main features of the front are its two tucks, forming a box plait, and its stitched pointed centre, forming a side effect. The back is neatly tucked in French style, with a waist band attached. There is a dress sleeve with a frill cuff, trimmed with a fancy stitching. The collar is tailor-stitched. The waist is lined throughout and is of best dressmaker finish. It sells at $2.35 in black; 15 cents extra for colors.

The travelers who are out on the road selling those waists described in last month's DRY GOODS REVIEW say that, although many merchants had already ordered their Christmas goods, yet they were so pleased with the style and finish of these waists that they added to their purchases.

KYLE, CHEESBROUGH & CO.

Kyle, Cheesbrough & Co. report that there has been an apparent demand for better goods all through their house. It is not "as much as possible for 25c. please," as it once was. This firm are continually adding to their extensive range of novelties and fancy goods. They are after the newest things as soon as they come out, and the merchant who visits their warehouse will always be able to freshen his stock. The firm do not claim to be always infallible in their determination of the "correct thing," but they do claim to generally have the proper things in their line. Their sales are increasing and dry goods merchants are more than ever recognizing this firm as a reliable authority. Their laces and embroideries for Spring, 1901, are worth seeing, while their stock of dress goods, hosiery, ("Queen's Gate") fabric gloves, silks, ribbons, knitted underwear and children's woollens, are full and complete.

THE GAULT BROS. CO.

The Gault Brothers Co., Limited, are showing a special line of silk rugs that are marvels for the price set on them; a visit to their cotton department, where they are kept, will soon reveal the fact. They have some new imported wrapperettes, in stripes and blockshades, that are the latest things. The other departments are full and up-to date.

Robert C. Wilkins is placing a new "Rooster" brand shirt that merits some attention from those merchants who cater to the trade of workmen. It is made of goods of good quality and is put together "strong and sure."

The Beaver Rubber Clothing Co. have taken a step which we prophesied last month they would take, that of raising the prices of their double breasted coverts. Yet they find difficulty filling orders.

F. F. Kelly, 196 McGill street, Montreal, is holding a September clearing sale of certain lines of goods. As Mr. Kelly had purchased largely in new Canadian Fall goods before he decided to clear, he will find it necessary to make generous cuts to sell all that he wishes. Those who have not purchased all their Fall goods can get bargains.

LINEN UNDERWEAR.

A great deal has been written concerning the influence that different kinds of underwear have upon the health of the wearer. Within the past few years physicians have been experimenting along this line, in an endeavor to discover what material is best for underclothing. Wool, cotton and silk have all been found fault with for different reasons. It is agreed by those best qualified to know, that underclothing should be worn, not as a means of warmth so much as to keep the skin free from perspiration and thus render the wearer less sensitive to colds, etc.

A German physician decided that the most healthful material for undergarments was linen. A method was found by which the flax fibre could be woven into a porous fabric, and this porous linen, or linen-mesh, was used to make the Deimel linen-mesh undergarments, which so many prominent physicians now endorse as being the best material for this use. Dr. Deimel's linen-mesh underwear has now become famous, and the testimonies of many well-known men, as to the benefits derived from wearing it, show that it deserves its good name. Among the most enthusiastic believers in the new system are those who, for years, have worn heavy flannels.

PICNIC OF EMPLOYEES OF TOOKE BROS., LIMITED.

The employees of Tooke Bros., Limited, Montreal, held their first annual picnic on Saturday, August 25, at St. Hilaire. The train pulled out of Bonaventure station early in the morning and carried about five or six hundred people to the picnic grounds, where, blessed by fine weather, the large crowd who generally meet under less delightful circumstances, passed an exceedingly pleasant day together.

The arrangements for the day were most complete. The various events on the programme of sports were keenly contested and entered into with enthusiasm. Flat races were in order for each department, and sack races, potato races, greasing the jug, and a number of other events were thrown open to the entire establishment. Dancing was indulged in to the fullest extent in spite of the excessive heat, and a prize was given for the best waltzing. A baseball match between the factory and warehouse was decided only in the ninth inning, the warehouse capturing the game by one run.

An hour before the return journey commenced, Mr. Tooke presented prizes to the various winners, and a good deal of surprise was evinced when the fine prizes were distributed. There was a beautiful selection of silver-mounted brushes, manicure sets, pipes, canes and jewelry of various designs. On the whole the affair was one of the most successful picnics of the season and it starts off well as an annual affair.

FRANKENTHAL BROTHERS' FLANNEL WAISTS.

There is not a buyer of fine shirt waists in the United States who does not appreciate the importance of the firm of Frankenthal Bros., the waist manufacturers, whose brands, the "Bee-hive" and "Geisha," have been household works in the trade for an age. This firm have met the demands of the public for flannel waists, and are now prepared to submit for the buyers' inspection a collection of stylish and fashionable models of the identical high-class manufacture and dainty appearance which has always marked their productions. The collection of models is sufficiently large in extent to permit confining of styles to large houses in large or small cities. A careful inspection of the flannel waists produced by this firm should be made by every buyer interested.—New York Cloaks and Furs.

Hat, Cap and

Fur Trade.

A Glimpse of Spring Styles.

Soon after this issue of THE DRY GOODS REVIEW reaches the hands of readers, the travelers for the wholesale hat concerns will begin to call upon them with samples of the English hats for Spring trade.

There is nothing very startling this season in the way of change in shapes, which seem to be pretty much on the same lines as before. If anything, they are a little larger, although some of the extremely small shapes are shown for the benefit of those who like that sort of thing. It is probable that the staple stiff hat will be about 5 inches in the crown and $1\frac{3}{8}$ brim, with a nice easy roll.

There are a number of new models in soft felts. For example, there are patriotic shapes, such as modifications of the Strathcona and Baden-Powell hats with plain and fancy puggaree bands. In these hats some new colors are shown this season, including Yukon, Victoria, Sumatra, vicuna and citron.

The range of English golf caps this season for next Spring's trade includes some particularly nice lines, and there are a good many large, showy checks which seem to be a prominent feature in this kind of cap.

Linen hats are to be pushed for 1901. They will be shown with fancy bands in models after the 20th Century pattern.

The importers are beginning to get ready their samples in straws, and the English hats of this material promise to be fully up to the average attraction. Chief among these, it is expected, will be the 20th Century shape, a regular fedora in straw. It would not be surprising if dealers have a very good trade with this next Summer, especially in the cities. Some of them have been sold by large retailers this year who confidently predict an increased demand next year. In straws, rustics are thought to have the call again.

English Fur Fashions.

Coats and jackets vary, according to style, from 27 to 42, or even 46 inches, and the loose sacque back will be worn almost to the total exclusion of the tight-fitting garment. The fronts will be either reefer or chesterfield, both will be worn, but at the present time it is impossible to predict which will be the favorite, and it is very probable that they will be equally popular. In regard to material, I have no reason to alter the opinion expressed last month that, for jackets, tweeds will be very popular with the best trade. They are made in browns, greys, and drab mixtures, a very good mixture being a sort of dark blue steel, or grey.

There is likely to be a good demand for capes this season, and in these velvet and lace, and also satin ribbon, will be largely introduced. These will be principally in black, or black and white. A new material introduced late last season is also being shown. It is called velutine, and is in reality a crimped brilliant. It adapts itself well to flounces and frills for capes, and is likely to be used considerably. For colored cap, box cloth and glace silks are being shown, with appliques and passementerie trimmings.

In regard to furs, it appears that necklets will again be worn very considerably, and I was shown a new design in sable, made of three skins. It is made in the first place similar to a two-skin necklet, with the wide ends of the skin joined, making the necklet wide in the centre and tapering to the ends. This is finished with the head and claw fastening on one end and a set of tails on the other. Under the tails is fastened the third skin, forming one long end, with another set of tails at the bottom. The same idea is also carried out in fox, in smoke, celestial, white, grey and black. For all styles of necklets, sable and fox will be the leading furs; racoon and skunk being used in large quantities for the cheaper trade.

There are strong indications that fur capes will be worn very largely. It is several years since these have been used to any extent in this country. Why, nobody knows. It is one of the most convenient articles made for this climate, and should be more staple.

Fur coats will be worn in the same shape as cloth—that is, 27 to 30 inches long, with loose backs. This is such a decided change from the short bolero jackets of last year that it will be necessary for all who desire to be "in the swim" to invest in new furs, and so the fur business bids fair to be a record one, and good in all lines. Caracul, Persian lamb, sable and mink will be the leading furs for coats, capes and mantles.—London correspondent of Cloaks and Furs.

Fashion in Wearing Hats.

Said a New York man of fashion the other day: "For years the Prince of Wales has been wearing Alpine straws; you will find one man out of a dozen who will attempt them in this country. They are stiff and they can only be worn by men with peculiar shaped faces, a bit round and even then not too broad. The Panama hats are as old as the hills, in the South; the man to wear them should be tall and have a rather long face. I think they are excellent hats, and the real Panamas are very expensive, but I see a cheap imitation already on the market. When anything becomes so distinctive as a Panama hat, the universal adoption of it decreases its chances of remaining long with us. I never have my top hats made in the very latest fashion, but I always have my block and I have the shape modified as I do that of my shoes. The principle is the same as that used by the tailor who cuts my cloth for my coats and trousers, or the haberdasher who chooses or assists me in the choice and the design of my shirts. I do not know how often I have spoken of tall men wearing vertical stripes and making themselves look like zebras, and ugly ones at that. Did I say zebras?—I really meant giraffes."

On Wednesday, August 29, Mr. W. H. MacGregor, traveling representative of James Coristine & Co., Montreal, was married to Miss Martell, of that city. As a token of the good wishes which they extended on this auspicious occasion, the travelers and employes of the firm assembled in the upper sample-rooms in the warehouse on the honoring of his wedding day, and presented Mr. MacGregor with a case of sterling silver tableware and another of silver-mounted carvers, accompanied by a fitting address. Mr. MacGregor's many friends, and particularly those on the Lower Ottawa, upon whom he calls frequently on business matters, will be pleased to hear of the happy event and the recognition of his popularity he has received. THE DRY GOODS REVIEW joins in wishing joy and prosperity.

Melekin Manis, merchant, St. Lawrence street, Montreal, has assigned on demand of Mrs. Rosa Simons. The principal creditors are A. A. Allan, Toronto, $823; A. Fred, Montreal, $291; Union Hat Manufacturing Co., St. Johns, $239; Royal Hat and Cap Manufacturing Co., $128.

TAILOR-MADE COSTUMES

During the past few years these garments as turned out by first-class manufacturers have reached such a state of perfection as to fit and finish that most ladies who wish a "swell" garment have worn nothing else. When one considers that the very best talent is sought after for the designing, etc., of these garments it is more readily understood why they should supersede those made by the average dressmaker, not to mention the much lower price quoted on account of the large quantity turned out. Boulter & Stewart show a very extensive line of these garments, and the large number of repeats received is surely an indication of the satisfaction they have given.

A BOOKLET OF CLOAK STYLES.

The Victor Manufacturing Co., Quebec, P.Q., are a "new house with a new policy." Their policy is to run their cloak manufacturing business on the same basis as the prominent New York houses. With this idea they have established themselves in the city of Quebec for the making of cloaks and suits for women's wear, and are turning out garments which are likely to make the new company successful from the start.

Their catalogue for 1900-1901 is just out and is a credit to the firm. The letterpress is neat and tasteful, and the half-tone fashion plates, with which the catalogue is fully illustrated, are better than the average Canadian publication in this line. Each plate is numbered, and on the opposite page is a further description of the garment illustrated. A price list for the use of the trade is enclosed in the catalogue. It would be to the advantage of any retailer who has not received a copy of this catalogue to send to the company's offices at 308 310 St. Joseph street, Quebec, and see what the Victor Manufacturing Co. have to offer.

TOOKE'S VIGORAL SHIRT.

This new cloth, confined to this firm for Canada, is going to test the destructive power of steam laundries. It is claimed to be the best value and most serviceable material ever offered in Canada, and the shirts should be bought early as they will be grabbed up by every merchant.

NEW CATALOGUE.

John Northway & Son, Limited, have issued their Fall catalogue showing some specially handsome designs in ladies' suits. The junior member of the firm has lately returned from New York, and is producing some very handsome garments. If you are interested in their catalogue, it may be yours for the asking.

NEW WALL PAPER DESIGN.

In this issue is illustrated one of the Watson, Foster Co.'s successes of the present selling season. Nothing can be more beautiful and artistically effective than this design in natural rose colors, applied to rooms in which muslin curtains, white enamel furniture, Japanese matting, etc., form the foreground, leaving to the walls the entire color relief. No doubt, this pattern will be much appreciated.

TOOKE BROS., LIMITED, ST. HENRY, QUE

The immense establishment of this firm is now in perfect order, all the difficulties (and they were many) connected with moving have been overcome. Perfect system and smoothness in the working of their several departments is apparent even to a reporter.

The superintendent informs us that all advance orders for the Fall trade will be delivered complete by September 10 or 15. The Fall output will be by far the greatest the firm ever experienced. Goods are now being cut and manufactured for Spring, 1901. As far as human experience can tell, orders placed when samples are first submitted will be filled complete early in the year. The firm freely admit that their customers and friends had much to contend with during the past season, owing to the late and broken deliveries. They desire us to express their regret that such trouble being the impossibility of getting iron, dimension timber, etc., for their new building; so difficult was it that the building was only handed over to them in January of this year, instead of September of last.

One of the successful morals in the Watson, Foster Co.'s new line, a most beautiful and natural rose, and, when shown on a white ground in yellows, greens and reds, is particularly Spring-like and refreshing.

F. F. Kelly, 196 McGill street, Montreal, has a stock of laces, belts and purses which are to be sold at discounts ranging from 25 to 50 per cent.

The gold medal of the Paris Exposition has been awarded John Bright & Brothers, Rochdale, Eng., for their plushes and carpets. J. Sproul Smith is the Canadian agent.

The Beaver Rubber Clothing Co., of Montreal, announce that next month they will commence selling rubber coats especially adapted for the use of drivers and conductors, or anyone who is outside daily. They are at work upon samples.

The

Millinery Season

Mantles, Trimmings and Laces.

THE MILLINERY OPENINGS.

THE millinery openings were well attended this year, and the weather was fine, although hot, so much so that visiting milliners found it pretty warm work looking over models and taking notes. They united, however, in pronouncing the displays of millinery, especially the trimmed hats, to be well worthy a visit to town, and good orders were placed at all the houses. Buyers came from as far east as Nova Scotia and as far west as British Columbia. THE REVIEW'S representative has visited the leading millinery emporiums, and has had some interesting chats with the managers of those concerns. There will be found in this issue some valuable information regarding the new millinery which will be of service to those who have not so far visited the markets in person.

S. F. MCKINNON & CO., LIMITED.

S. F. McKinnon & Co., Limited, held their millinery and mantle opening on August 27 and following days, and reported to a representative of THE REVIEW having had a most successful opening, and said that by 9 o'clock on Monday morning their large showroom was crowded with buyers who meant business, and that by noon the half of their large stock of trimmed patterns had been sold and taken from the stands.

"Usually on such occasions the first day is largely taken up in looking at and selecting patterns. This season good, solid buying was done all the way through from Monday morning until Friday night. One feature very noticeable to us and what we were pleased to see was the large number of buyers from a distance, both from the east and west, showing clearly that this is the great millinery and mantle centre of the Dominion. Buyers are in good spirits, and the great majority hopeful for a good season's trade. This is the last day of the month, and you ask how will it compare with the corresponding month of last year. To that we can only answer that we never had a month equal to this, being the most successful in our business history.

"Speaking strictly of millinery, ready-to-wear hats are in great favor with the trade, and promise to have a good inning. Dress shapes have been equally strong with us, having had a hot week second to none in our history. In the manufacture of high-class millinery, silk velvets, as we expected and hinted to you when we had our last chat a month ago, will be largely used. In fact, you may put it stronger, and say that it will be a great velvet season. Panne effects have done well, but plain silk velvets in black and colors will be prime favorites.

"Fancy braids in chenille and sequin effects are popular, running from 1 to 18 in. wide.

"Arriving at hat ornaments, breasts head the popular list, and include pheasant, gull, pelican, merle, hackle and grebe effects. Birds, in gulls, sea pigeons, merles and parrots will demand a first place. Other favorites in this class are feather bands, crowns and brims, feather pompons, paradise plumes, gull wings, eagle wings and ostrich feathers—single tips and three-quarter feathers.

"A few of the leading colors are: Colinette, vieux-rose, lezard, castor, reseda, fawn, blues and browns. Black and white have been in good demand, and promise to be a big feature of Fall trimming.

"You ask if we have had the same success in our cloak department. Buyers from all over the Dominion were attracted to our mantle department; many who had previously selected from sample adding new numbers to what they had already bought. Many who have not been handling our goods called, examined our stock, and were convinced that McKinnon-made jackets, costumes and skirts were simply indispensable where a first-class trade is to be done.

"With regard to leading colors in jackets, black, of course, has the first call. Fawn and castor shades come next, and promise to be very popular as the season advances. We also find navy good."

THE D. McCALL CO., LIMITED.

The result of the millinery opening in The D. McCall Co.'s establishment was the total depletion of many lines of their stock, which they have been forced to lay in again in a hurry. In trimmed hats, styles were all large. Breast effects and stripes sold particularly well. A line of toque hats, with turned-up face, and black feather trimming was bought up quickly. Sequins were also regarded favorably. The Russian turban, made with fancy material appliqued in felt, velvet side trimming and large black rose crown, was one of the most popular hats. Large black hats with colored facings, tan, cream, pink and blue velvet, with a narrow ribbon tied in large bows and tips, were also favorites.

Lace trimming was also bought considerably, Irish point, Battenburg and renaissance lace, in cream color, being the principal lines used.

Velvet trimmings ran mostly to pastel greens, pinks, browns and castor. There was a large demand for panne velvet in blues and serpent green. Plisse velours was largely used in all shades. Plain silk velvet for Winter millinery is still the leading trimming. A French felt, with rows of fine silk braid about two inches apart, is a popular trimming and was bought in all colors.

FALL STYLES.

The D. McCall Co., Limited.

Feathers, of course, were the leading trimmings. Grebe pompoms with paradise tuft in the centre, ostrich feather pompoms, with natural rose centre, and also plain ostrich pompoms were very popular. There was a heavy demand for large natural gull wings for ready-to-wear hats. Natural shades in feathers seemed more popular than colored. Pheasant breasts, guinea fowl natural feathers, and large fancy quill effects were favorites. The McCall people experienced a greater demand for birds, both for ready-to-wears, dress hats and toques, than they have for a good many seasons.

Large buckles, as long as six inches, in steel and jet, were also good sellers. Sequin and chenille trimmings, in black, and black and colors, had a large sale, the black and steel going especially well.

Although feathers are the principal trimming for the season, there has been a large demand for ribbons. The velvet and satin ribbons in all widths were the most popular. Wide Liberty ribbons, satins and taffetas, and a new ribbon called the "Chantilly," with a crepe effect, were all in good demand. The McCalls have a lot of the latest French importations in ribbons, which are of the shot variety. Their buyers in Paris say that this is being shown to a great extent there. It may be that the shot ribbon is to be revived. The feature of the ribbon trade, however, is the immense demand for the velvet and satin black ribbon mentioned before. This is being used for ladies' ties as well as for trimming.

In ready-to-wear hats the stitched-felt "Ladysmith" with polka-dot trimming, and other military hats, were the chief sellers. There was a pronounced demand for pure white stuff in the ready-to-wears.

JOHN D. IVEY CO., LIMITED.

The opening with The John D. Ivey Co., Limited, was very successful, and buyers thronged the warehouse and show rooms expressing great pleasure at the tasteful display of high-class millinery. In conversation with this firm we heard a number of very interesting remarks on the styles shown and which promise to be successful.

The large black hats predominate, decorated with ostrich plumes. One of these hats, in the extreme of style, drooping to a point at the left side, outlined with an ostrich feather, and with bell crown veiled with black tulle, trimmed with a barbe of escurial lace and six handsome amazon feathers confined to the brim with an alsace bow of black ribbon velvet and held with an Egyptian buckle.

Fur is much used in trimming hats, as was expected at the beginning of the season, and there is a touch of fur in the trimming of both toques and turbans, as well as large hats. Fur goes with real lace, Luxembourg or Cluny.

The Watteau is a novel turban effect, called so, because of the box pleat which falls flat on the hair at the back. The Tricorn is a clever toque effect, the rim being made of mink skins, and the draping of the crown a brown mandarin velvet, veiled with Cluny lace.

There are some exceedingly tasteful walking hats this season. A feature in them is the fact that they are so artistically draped that the rude outline is concealed. One of these has a draping of velvet raised high on the one side, held close to the brim with a cut-steel buckle, and the fulness of this draping narrows off on the right side until it goes into a point, the crown being made of a bandeau of chenille and jet embroidered. The decoration was of three black ostrich pompoms at the back.

Another pretty walking hat is black velvet with felt draped, the crown coming to a sharp point at the back and falling flat on the hair, with a cut steel buckle and a long steel quill at the side going the entire length of the hat. A handsome picture hat had a Gainsboro' brim with an almost flat crown, the rim draped with sequin net and velvet, the outside of the brim being an ostrich feather, black osprey and black ostrich pompoms. All the hats have the drooping effect at the back or else the mushroom design. Another picture hat with the new ostrich velvet (so called on account of its glossy black shade) facing and crown of black fur felt, draped and confined in shape with steel buckles. The decoration was three Amazon ostrich feathers falling softly over the brim and a bow of black satin ribbon. Yet another picture hat had a flat brim, drooped at the back, and made out of fine folds of black ostrich velvet and faced with white panne and pearls, the trimming being two large Amazon feathers and black and white Luxembourg embroidered lace.

A black velvet hat, made specially for a bride, was large in size with a Gainsboro brim and having a soft crown of black ostrich velvet. Another taking creation had a flat double brim of castor velvet drooping at the back, the crown of alternate folds of castor velvet and castor taffeta silk, the trimming with gold embroidered velvet and a knot of emerald green velvet holding in place two quills of humming-bird decoration.

The new sailor hats have the drooping effect both at the back and the front. One of them was prettily trimmed with the pastel effect, and held in place by a buckle and an Amazon quill. On sailor hats, milliners employ velvet along with felt.

The material noted last month as "shoelace braid" has sold very well, and is much sought after. It widens out in the working, and is used in frills around the brim. A model which was much admired was a large castor hat slightly rolling off the face and drooping at the back. The brim was made of handsome cream passementerie, veiled over and under with cream chiffon. The edge of the brim, over and under, is two shaped pieces of castor velvet to imitate a binding. The crown is a soft drape of castor velvet, the trimming is castor felt and velvet knotted, and the decoration is two Amazon feathers in castor, also. The under brim trimming on the bandeau is of mandarin velvet and an antique buckle. This same design, which was much admired, was also seen in a black hat.

Another model was a toque turban of castor and ciel velvet, overshadowed with castor and gold passementerie for the crown. The brim was first made of blue velvet, over which were very handsome knots of castor velvet. The only decoration was a castor and blue bow on the back of the hat. In one pretty toque the trimming was entirely of royal purple, and steel buckles prettily caught in the draping. The crown was just a succession of bows of ribbon of lighter shades, graded from large loops at the front to smaller ones at the base of the crown. The peculiarity of this style is that it requires no decoration of quills or wings.

One of the new materials is crimped satin. Two shades of green which employ together on a toque of green are Parnell and Penal Laws. Mandarin or burnt orange and lighter shades of yellow work together. Two shades of purple are also employed with effect. Two shades of blue, namely, wedge-wood and natural, go together. Black and white are as popular as ever.

A feature this season are very long handsome quills, both plain and decorated, some go right around the hat with some to spare, and are nearly a yard long. Gull wings and gull birds are much used, and the novelty in these are the combinations of grey and yellow, grey and pink, grey and green. Long buckles, as long as 10 inches, are a feature. The finer fabrics, such as tulle, nets and gauzes, both plain and embroidered, are used with velvet and felt. Silk, with polka dots, was much in evidence for trimming ready-to-wear hats.

THE CANADIAN COTTON MARKET.

THERE is a great deal of talk in the trade about the cotton outlook. Owing to the high price of raw cotton, there is general reluctance on the part of manufacturers in this country to admit that the prices of fabrics will fall, even for the Spring season. They argue in this way : That all Spring price lists are not yet arranged in Canada, that raw cotton promises to be from 2 to 2½c. higher for the new crop than it was last year, that the English cotton markets continue firm, and that, when prices are actually settled in Canada for the early months of 1901, they may be even higher than they are now. This is a manufacturing point of view. Due allowance must be made for the uneasiness entertained in case the fall should be supposed to presage a like fall in cotton. This is not probable. But there is no reason why the plain facts of the matter should be overlooked.

The outlook is favorable for firm prices in cottons in the main, although there are prospects of shading values for Spring, both in some lines of white and grey cottons and colored cottons. As the season advances, and the situation in the United States tones up, there may be an advance here. For the present, however, there are a few lines that are quoted lower for Spring, although the bulk of the quotations show a perfectly strong market. For example, in shirtings prices show a drop of from perhaps 5 to 10 per cent. in denims, some lower-priced lines are quoted 5 per cent. lower ; higher grade tickings are about 1c. per yard less, while there is recorded a shading in the prices of some lines of cottonades, galateas, oxfords and apron gingham. But, on the other hand, we hear of no lower quotations in a lot of stuff such as flannelettes, saxony, domets, shakers, eiderdowns, sheetings, blankets, yarns, etc. Any reductions reported in Canadian stuff are, doubtless, due to the recent changes in the United States, and to the necessity of meeting the prices of American fabrics when laid down here. If the situation improves here our mills are certain to follow suit, so that those who argue that prices will probably be firm for Spring of 1901 in Canada may not be far astray. At the moment, however, the reductions referred to are undeniable. It is just as well to be perfectly frank in the matter. The Canadian mills are turning out some beautiful fabrics for Spring.

CANADIAN WOOLLENS.

The woollen business is fairly active. The reduction in tariff, coupled with slow business in England, has produced rather an adverse effect on the trade generally. The low-priced labor of Yorkshire, and the extraordinary mixes put into men and women's wear there, are having anything but a wholesome effect upon the trade of the mills here. English goods have always come into this country, but the better class of Canadian goods now has fast dyes, and, as far as quality goes, cannot be beaten.

SPRING PRICES OF GINGHAMS.

Wholesale buyers are now looking at the new samples of gingham. As noted elsewhere, these goods will in future be sold by the mills to wholesale buyers, on condition that prices to the retailer are not cut, but that regular prices prevail. This condition lasts up to June 1, 1901. The quotations for Spring, just out as THE REVIEW goes to press, are as follows :

DECLINE IN FRENCH DRESS GOODS.

Reports of decline in the prices of French dress fabrics are again current. It appears that two great French centres of the manufacture of woollen goods—Roubaix and Tourcoing—are in the throes of financial disaster, due to reckless speculation. The wool gambling fever took hold of the business houses last Summer when wool rose steadily without apparent reason until, in August, the price reached the high-water mark of 6 frs. 70 centimes per kilogram. Speculators for a rise lost their heads, and there were daily purchases of a million or a million and a half kilograms. The manufacturing business was dislocated owing to the extraordinary fluctuations in the prices of material. Abundant warnings were given that the fictitious values would inevitably lead to a slump, but they were unheeded until the collapse occurred ; and wool stands at 2 frs. per kilogram below the August prices. The amount of wool bought blindly by Roubaix and Tourcoing firms reached the fabulous total of 40,000,000 kilos, which means a deficit of 80,000,000 frs. Thirteen firms are already in the hands of receivers, one house alone losing 8,000,000 frs., and several others are tottering.

PERSONAL MENTION.

Mr. B. Tooke has just returned from Europe, after visiting all the markets. His good taste and judgment is noticeable in samples for Spring, 1901.

SHIRT WAIST DEPARTMENTS.

So large has the demand been for Tooke's shirt waists that two distinct departments have been formed—one in which garments are made to be sold by the dozen and the other at so much each. In the latter department they have sold silk goods as high as $10.50 for a single waist during the past season. Good taste, good fit, and good workmanship will tell. Delivery will be all right from this out.

The Montreal Cotton Co., Montreal, have acquired the property which was once the Buntin paper mills, and have broken soil to erect a large cotton mill to supply the wants of their numerous customers.

J. F. Clark, Port Hope, has just completed the rearrangement of his premises, the main object being to secure more room to accommodate the larger stock of goods necessary to supply the rapidly-increasing number of customers. At the same time the lighting has been modernized and there have been added other improvements usually found in an up-to-date store. Mr. Clark is just now taking a few holidays before the Fall rush.

EIDERDOWN JACKETS AND GOWNS.

The season is now fast approaching when most ladies will require a warm and comfortable house jacket or lounging robe. In this connection Boulter & Stewart make all grades and prices of these garments.

SMITH'S ADJUSTABLE OVERALLS, GUARANTEED

PATENTED, AUG. 10, 1900.

A few of the advantages of this overall are as follows:

Having an open back it does away with the openings on the sides, which are not only a nuisance but are dangerous to those who work around machinery.

It is also self-adjustable to a corpulent or slight figure, as the size is regulated according to the customer's seat measure.

All seams are turned in and double stitched.

All pockets are tacked by a machine for the purpose, with linen thread, thus doing away with rivets which are very undesirable.

Each overall has a watch and pencil pocket, made so that watch cannot fall out, which is very desirable for engineers and others.

Front pocket is made so that it will not catch in anything the machanic may be lifting or handling.

All overalls are stamped on inside of bib.

When your customer once wears a pair he will always want them.

Be up-to-date and buy the latest and positively the best overall on the market.

THE R. J. SMITH COMPANY OF OTTAWA, LIMITED, have secured the sole right to manufacture and sell these overalls and are now ready to supply the trade.

P. S.—We manufacture and sell ordinary overalls.

NEW GOODS IN WHOLESALE TRADE

THE W. R. BROCK CO., LIMITED, TORONTO.

IN the woollen department special attention is called to a $\frac{3}{4}$ -tweed of mill stock which they are selling at less than mill prices in order to clear it out. Reduced prices are also offered to the trade on a stock of black twill worsteds in five special numbers. For ladies' costumes plain cheviots are now very popular. A large range of these is shown in three different qualities, which are in good favor with the ladies' tailoring trade. Fancy suitings in checks and stripes are shown in tweeds and worsteds. The striped, being the latest fashion, are selling largely, but there is a good demand for checked tweeds. A large range of beavers, meltons, cheviots, llamas, and fancy curls are being offered by the Brock Co. for Fall and Winter overcoatings. The greys are, of course, selling the best, but blues and blacks will still be used considerably.

In the way of housefurnishings the W. R. Brock Co. carry a complete line. Their stock of carpets has been well chosen, both as to beauty and durability. They offer some specials in tapestry carpets in new designs of various styles, and in bright, taking colors, to retail at 50 to 60c. per yard. They have placed in stock some floor and table oilcloths and linoleums. The designs are all new and many of them are very pretty. A special which should receive the early notice of retailers in the housefurnishing end of the department is a white quilt that can be retailed at $1. It is a large, double-sized quilt and is in a limited quantity.

They are doing a large business in Imperial suitings for tailor-made costumes. Sedans and poplins are also being bought to a considerable extent. A line of camel's hair plaids for skirtings is well thought of by buyers; also an assortment of frieze finished goods for unlined skirts. The Brock Co. show a fine line of granite plaids for ladies' waists and children's wear, in all combinations of colors, which buyers are rapidly picking up. Coating serges are also selling well. They have a large range of fancy cloaks, Zibeline finish, which they have found to be popular with buyers. These are all figured goods, and are a very fine lot. They are clearing a line of all-wool 42 inch tweeds, to be retailed at 50c., and have also on hand two or three clearing lots of silks, taffetas, tamoline and bengaline, which may be retailed at 50c.

A line of 36 in. American cotton dress goods in large nobby plaids for ladies' skirts and children's dresses, is a leader. These goods are an exact imitation of wool fabrics and can be retailed at 15c. They are confined to this firm for Canada.

A 34-in. heavy flannelette in light and dark stripes, extra weight of cloth, to retail at 10c.; worth 12 $\frac{1}{2}$ c. A white bleached honeycomb towel to retail at 5c. a pair—less than regular wholesale price. A lot of manufacturers' ends of stock of French canvas which can be retailed at 10c. This lot comprises about 50 different qualities, bought at a sacrifice price and are worth 50 per cent. over the price asked.

They have just passed into stock a range of foulards in every shade of color, which were brought from the United States, the firm being unable to get deliveries from domestic mills. They are offering them at the same price to keep their customers supplied.

The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, Toronto, have a number of articles to retail at 25c. which dealers should investigate.

Among them may be mentioned ladies' vests, Kraze and Brownie; ladies' cashmere hose, plain and ribbed wool hose, men's wool socks, suspenders, cashmere and ringwood gloves, men's knitted wool gloves, men and women's wool mitts. A large business is being done in plain and fancy sweaters for men and boys.

In the glove department this company have been branching out, and have added to their regular stock some new lines called "Ladysmith," "Minto," "Terry" and "Patti." One of these, in assorted khaki shades with red joints and stitching, is making quite a hit with the trade.

The Brock Co. carry a very large stock of ladies and misses' underwear. Special lines of these goods to retail at 25c., 50c., 75c. and $1 are good value. Flat and ribbed goods are both shown. In their fleeced underwear, they guarantee their goods to turn out up to the samples, which lately has not been done by some firms. Their lines are "Bobs" and "Kitchener," to retail at 50c.; "Southdown," "Buller," "White" and "Milner," to retail at 75c.; and "Mettle" and "Right," to retail at $1. In boys' wear, white "Dundermie" and "Kitchener," in 20 to 34 inch, are selling better than all others. These goods are expected to be scarce and higher in price soon.

A larger assortment of knitted wool shawls, fascinators and hoods is carried this season by Brocks than ever before. In toques, bootees, infantees, mitts, clouds, coats, etc., they also have a large stock. These goods are Canadian-made and also importations from Great Britain and Germany. The Brock Co. are increasing their assortment almost every season, and so well-made are their goods that in sending by mail, if the price alone is mentioned, the company feel sure that buyers will be satisfied with what is sent to them.

P. GARNEAU, FILS & CIE, QUEBEC.

P. Garneau, Fils & Cie. have passed into stock some remarkable values in linen towels. The range comprises a complete assortment of sizes and prices both in fringed and hemmed.

Their dress goods department is in good shape to fill repeat orders in their lines of fancy and plain stuffs, black crepons, figured brilliantines, mercerettas, plaids, checks, satin duchesse, cords and costume cloths in all shades. A black figured cloth to retail at 22 $\frac{1}{2}$ c., is a leader. In the Canadian section will be found a fine selection of patterns in the 56 in. woollen skirtings.

In the woollen department will be found first-class values in mantlings, kreimmers, sealettes, presidents, worsted serges, coatings, pantings, and tweeds. Their celebrated R451 blue and R452 black, heavy twilled serge has become a standard line, the sales being so large this Fall that it has been utterly impossible to keep up with the orders.

In low and medium-priced linen tablings their stock is well assorted and contains A1 values.

A line of union flannels in fancy checks, to retail at 22 $\frac{1}{2}$ -25c., is a staple article with them and will be found a good seller.

Besides a regular range of tickings in all prices, they have some special lines of extra qualities in full 36 inch feather ticks.

In plain and fancy flannelettes they have very best values. Also a printed fancy line selling at a low price as a leader.

In silks, smallwares, underwear, top shirts, blankets and carpets their departments will be found well assorted with everyday lines.

How to Avoid Losses.

This is a practical subject with every merchant. It is not so hard to make money if we can only avoid losing what is made. If all the goods bought would show a ready turnover there would be good profit in merchandizing.

The remedy for this trouble, whether a mistake in buying, shelf-worn or faded goods, is sending them to these works and having them redyed some staple or fashionable color.

This is the case with plumes and feathers and ribbons, as well as with dress goods.

We are helping hundreds of merchants all over Canada to escape losses that kill the profits of the year.

THE DRY GOODS TRADE IN THE WEST.

The Outlook in Winnipeg—Millinery Openings Well Attended—The Styles in Vogue—
What Retailers Say—Notes of Provincial Trade.

FROM THE DRY GOODS REVIEW'S SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.

Winnipeg, September 21, 1900.

THE state of trade in the West is a little difficult to define at present, owing to the unsettled state of the weather and the consequent doubt as to the quality of the crop, and until threshing is done it will be quite impossible to definitely determine this.

MILLINERY OPENINGS.

In spite of disagreeable weather, Winnipeg has been given over to millinery openings this month.

THE D. McCALL CO.

On September 4 and following days, The D. McCall Co. held their usual opening, they being the only wholesale millinery house to do so. The attendance of milliners from outside points was larger than it has ever been before, all parts of Manitoba, the Territories and many points in British Columbia being represented. Although everyone is talking bad crops and hard times, the sales were large and satisfactory in character.

In trimmed goods the display was excellent. Among the more noticeable hats was a helmet toque of tucked crimson velvet with black birds in front and black buckle drawing it down to the hair at the back. Another was a large picture hat flaring from the face, the underbrim entirely covered with tiny black ostrich feathers. The crown, in the shape of a circular fan, was of alternate folds of panne velvet and black taffeta; the outer trimming, a 12-inch steel buckle and three black plumes. Still another effective hat was a French toque with crown of embroidered black taffeta and brim of tucked panne velvet. A drape of Battenburg lace and a quill mount completed the trimming.

The range of trimmings was very large and well-assorted. Here was seen, for the first time in Winnipeg, the panne velvet so much in vogue, which, while resembling the crown of a beaver hat in pile, has the texture of surah silk. Mirroir velvet, a heavier make of the same pile, was also shown in all shades. In felt shapes for trimming, the favorites are those composed of folds of felt stitched. In "ready-to-wears," the new patent collapsible turban was shown. The sales of ready to wear goods proved exceptionally large.

RETAIL OPENINGS.

That long-established house, Furners' Arcade, was the first to announce a retail opening.

Miss Baldwin, who had just returned from New York, showed your correspondent through and chatted pleasantly of shapes, shades, styles and effects. The colors this house are finding the most popular are castor, old rose, and emerald green, while all pastel shades are in favor with their customers. Cluny lace drapes and mink bandeaux are much called for. The almost endless array of dainty headgear reminded one of the old couplet,

How happy could I be with either
Were t'other dear charmer away.

Among the few hats tipped over the face was a large one of castor coq feathers, with facing of panne velvet in same shade, large bow of velvet and 12 inch gold buckle under tipped-up brim at back, crown of velvet in shoe effect. Another pretty conceit was a colonial cocked hat of white felt, lined with black velvet, the edge bound with gold galloon—two 1900 rosettes, a demi-plume and scarf of mechlin completed the trimming.

JERRY ROBINSON & CO.

Miss Dingwall, and her chief of staff, Miss Hagan, gave your correspondent a cordial welcome, and, amid a multitude of conflicting calls on time and patience, managed to give a few hints as to what they found leading favorites. Castor is the leading color with us, said Miss Dingwall, though black, French grey and old rose are all popular. One unique effect noted was a toque with leather crown. Mink bandeaux, chenille turbans and stitched turbans were all shown in bewildering variety.

A lovely picture hat in black was noted—somewhat of a Gainsborough shape with double brim filled between with tucked chiffon, crown of chenille, three plumes caught with a 1900 rosette, and long ties to loop over front of dress bodice. Another hat was of corded silk with tucked chiffon facings and 12-inch buckle catching the plumes. This house also showed a line of white and black hats made of a braid covered with silk, held in place by irregular hand stitchings. The effect was both odd and pretty.

THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY.

The showrooms have been almost doubled since last season, giving ample accommodation for the large and well-selected stock. Miss Rogers just returned from New York in time for the opening.

A pretty way of showing the panne velvet was noted here—apricot, blue, reseda green, grey and pink in pastel shades were arranged in billows on the bottom of a long flat showcase, interspersed with gull wings and gull mounts.

Among the specially pretty hats here, was a French toque of three shades of old rose and gracefully drooping gull wings, and a charming black picture hat, a la Gainsborough, double brim of black velvet with interpleating of white chiffon; crown of embroidered taffeta and drooping wings of black caught with a large rosette.

GEORGE CRAIG & CO.

This opening is still in progress. The stock is well selected and all the newest trimmings and shapes are displayed.

THE COUSE OPENING.

The opening of a new millinery house is almost as attractive an event to the mind feminine as a fashionable wedding. Mr. Frederick Couse, who has been a traveler and buyer for millinery houses for the past 20 years, and, until recently, of the firm of Strachan & Couse, manufacturers' agents in this territory, a few weeks ago secured spacious premises in the McIntyre Block, and proceeded to convert them into up-to-date showrooms and parlors for the sale of the latest Parisian, London and New York millinery. The new house opened for business about September 1, with a choice line of "ready-to-wear" goods, and the public then had an opportunity of viewing the result of Mr. Couse's efforts in regard to fittings. The effect is charming in the extreme. Walls, showcase frames and counter bases are all painted a soft creamy tint, while, on the elaborately designed metallic ceiling, cream, turquoise and gold are used with exquisite effect. The front portion of the store is devoted to showroom purposes. The floor is covered with an English linoleum of tile design, the wall showcases and glass counters all being arranged to the best advantage for showing goods. In the rear of the showrooms, up a short flight of steps, is the millinery parlor, and off this again, two little French rooms, the effect of the cream walls and splendid mirrors being here heightened by the tones of the crimson velvet carpet.

The regular opening for trimmed goods began on Wednesday, September 19, and is still in progress. Miss Yoder, late of the well-known house of Johnston's, of New York, who is taking charge for Mr. Couse, kindly devoted an hour of a busy morning to your correspondent's enlightenment. "There is no color that can be called absolutely new this season," said Miss Yoder, "but the shades most sought after are castor, automobile red, seagull grey, green and black, and black and white. Crowns are all low, and in shapes the pompadour, tryphone and toque may be said to lead. In trimmings, breasts, wings, whole birds and pompoms are all used, while ostrich and paradise feathers hold their own places. Fur is extensively used in both toque and bonnet effects, cabochons, buckles and sequins have a prominent place, as have also Battenburg lace drapes. Silk, kid and embroidered and sequined taffeta are also among the favorite materials for crowns and brims."

Among such a bewildering array of hats and bonnets, each a work of art in itself, it was difficult to choose one or two the description of which might give an idea of the whole. However, one can only try and fail. One French design, in the form of a picture hat, showed a foundation entirely composed of alternate rows of black chenille and tiny sequins, the bandeaux trimming, soft folds of automobile red velvet, gracefully draped crown, caught down at the back with an oxidized buckle, and the beauty of the design further carried out by black and white ostrich pompoms, which is one of the much-admired trims of the day.

The pastel shades, although used extensively, are perhaps not quite so much sought as they were during the past Summer season, but one pompadour design carried out in pastel shades, is certainly worthy of more than passing mention. The velvet face trimming, of one of the many shades of Nile green, presented a massive effect of graceful folds. Close against the hair a very artistic rosette bow of pastel solid ribbon in helio and green—castor breasts caught on the edge of the brim by a handsome bow of the same shades, the ends being carried down over the crown of folded felt in paler shade of Nile green, and clasped through with a long buckle of cut steel. Perhaps the most unique hat was a design by Madame Pentony. The facing of the wide flat brim—nothing short of a work of art—showed folds of black and white velvet—alternating—the whole a strikingly handsome effect; the crown draped and caught to the brim in graceful folds, while falling from the centre of the crown-piece towards the back were three beautiful black ostrich plumes, each plume caught with an elaborate cut-steel clasp.

It is always delightful to talk to a master craftsman or an artist in any line, and it was with regret that your correspondent left this region of graceful forms and softly blended colors for the more strictly utilitarian fields of general dry goods. Looking over my notes it seems as though the palm was given to black hats. This was not intentional, but merely the result of describing what most frequently caught the eye.

R. J. WHITLA.

Your correspondent was fortunate enough to catch Mr. A. S. Binns with a few minutes to spare to talk dress goods, and was shown the lines of rough chevots now so popular, and for which this firm have had an enormous sale, especially in helios, wedgewood blues and greys. In silk and wool goods, some of the designs surpass anything previously seen, ribbed and shot backgrounds in salmon and black, crimson and black, green and black, helio and black, are covered with rich silk broche effects, closely resembling hand-wrought applique. In black silk and wool goods the number and beauty of the designs are almost incredible. The firm are finding an increased demand for black silk, their sales of which have been almost double that of last year. In colored silks, for evening wear, there is a greater demand for darker colors and richer effects—combinations of green and black, black and red, and the like, being popular. The beautiful brocaded silks in French grey have also sold well.

In blouse flannels, the 40 designs carried have all sold well. There has been a special demand for scarlet for the popular military blouse.

GAULT'S.

Mr. Belcher reports business better than anticipated. Their trade in men's neckwear has been very large, and, judging by the hundreds of samples of silk carried for this purpose, it would be difficult to imagine any reasonable beings not finding something to suit them.

The travelers have just started out with the Spring samples of shirts. This house have found it a good season for ladies' tweeds and golf cloths and blouse velveteens, of which they carry 28 different shades of the "Dream" brand. Mr. Rogers, the managing director from Montreal, paid a visit to Winnipeg during the month, and expressed his pleasure at the volume of trade done. Blankets and heavy underwear and men's Oxford wraps are other lines that have proved good sellers.

STOBART, SONS & CO.

Report trade quiet just now but anticipate a good sorting trade. Have had a specially good year in staples. There has been an unusual demand for velvet ribbon, and the supply is exhausted. This firm have found a large sale for ladies' cloth for tailor-made suits.

NOTES.

Mr. Wilson, buyer for Messrs. Stobart, Sons & Co., has left for his semi-annual purchasing trip to European markets.

Mr. Godfrey Parker, chief buyer for The Hudson's Bay Company, left this week for London and Paris.

The Imperial Dry Goods Company expect to occupy their splendid new premises about October 1.

W. H. Campbell, who for the past few years has been with N. S. B. Burley, of Portage la Prairie, recently bought out the business of H. M. Douglas, of Innisfail, N.W.T., and will carry on the business in an up-to-date style.

The N. R. Preston Company have sold out their business to E. B. Nash & Co. It is understood that Mr. N. R. Preston, head of the late company, is about to reenter business in Neepawa, Manitoba, being a member of The Neepawa Trading Company.

Myron McBride & Co., men's furnishings, are going into liquidation. Owing to the outlook for the next few months being unfavorable, the members of the firm consider it unadvisable to attempt to continue the business. The stock will be sold on the premises in the regular way of business. There will be no auction sale. Mr. Myron McBride will likely have charge of the winding up of the business.

Mr. A. D. Rankin, of the firm of Wilson & Rankin, Brandon, has been visiting the wholesale houses of the city this week.

The Fairley's, of Carberry, Man., have further increased the efficiency of their large departmental store by installing a multiple-drawer National cash register.

E. C. H.

Ladies' patent leather belts have proved to be the best sellers for the Fall trade. One of the most successful of these is the hip shape belt, which is cut from the leather to fit the body. The patent buckle which is being used with these belts is exceedingly neat and is quite a novelty—one that will prove a help in selling. The same belts are being made with the regular nickel and covered buckles. The popular widths are in the 1 inch buckles tapered to $1\frac{1}{4}$ to $1\frac{1}{2}$ inches at the back, thus giving support to the skirt. The Julian Sale Leather Goods Co., Toronto, Limited, are making these belts, and they will be pleased to send quotations or sample orders to the trade on request.

CATALOGUE OF FANCY GOODS.

The Fall and holiday trade catalogue just issued by Nerlich & Co. contains many new things in fancy goods, dolls, toys, fancy chinaware, etc. Their soldier dolls, dressed in khaki, should be particularly interesting this season. A fine assortment of celluloid, plush and leather albums are worthy of attention. One kind is made with spaces for either cabinet or the new 5 x 7 size photographs. Their palms for decorating stores, houses, etc., are a feature of the stock. The cut shows one kind, besides which different sizes and shapes of potted and preserved palms and grasses are shown. The catalogue, a large and fully illustrated one, is designed to make it easy for customers to order goods, each article being numbered, described and priced. It is gotten up subject to trade discounts, so that retailers may use it in making sales of goods they do not carry in stock.

AMERICAN WAISTS.

Floersheimer, Roman & Hahn, of 73 Wooster street, New York, produce a line of silk and satin waists that find a very extensive sale in the United States. The cut, fit, and style of an American waist are distinctive, and are recognized even in Paris and Berlin. The firm have a well equipped factory, turn the garments out in large quantities, and are in a position to give exceptional values in these lines. The firm are seeking to extend their business in Canada, and will send samples to any merchants who are interested.

THE MANUFACTURERS' SECRETARY.

T. A. Russell, B.A., has been reengaged as Secretary of The Canadian Manufacturers' Association at a largely increased salary. The great progress the association has made in the past few months has been largely due to his intelligent and energetic efforts, and the increase in salary is well deserved. The work he has done and is doing for the manufacturers of Canada has paid and will pay many times over the expenditure on his salary and other expenses.

A SIGN OF PROSPERITY.

The American Silk Waist Manufacturing Co., Limited, Montreal, is a growing concern. Their Fall trade has exceeded even the fondest expectations, and now they are compelled to refuse any more orders, reckoning that the filling of those already booked will leave them little enough time to get ready for next Spring's trade. This condition of affairs has necessitated an enlargement of the manufactory. Although new machines are being added every week, and the staff is being worked overtime, yet shipments have been behind.

An increased capacity is now to be secured. The stock and showroom and offices have been removed to the Glenora Building, 1886 Notre Dame street, where their patrons will always be welcomed, and the St. James street offices are being turned into an extensive factory. It is expected that about 75 machines will have to be added to give the factory the desired capacity, and then the firm hope to be able to comply with the least wish of their customers.

COMPETING WITH DEPARTMENTAL STORES.

MR. ALEX. SWEET, senior member of the firm of Sweet & Co., general merchants, Winchester, Ont., was in Toronto last week. Mr. Sweet is a man with ideas, and time spent with him in conversation is not lost. He is also a man with a sense of humor, for after we had been conversing a few minutes I asked him how long he had been in business.

"Well, I'll tell you," he said, with a twinkle in his eye. "I yesterday sold a pair of gloves to a young lady whose grandmother bought her wedding gloves from me in the same store."

I looked at Mr. Sweet, perhaps somewhat incredulously, for he is far from being an old man.

"Well, let me explain," he said, "I was clerk in the store of which I am now proprietor when I sold the grandmother her wedding gloves, while the young lady who bought gloves from me yesterday is only six years of age."

His explanation being satisfactory, I began to question him regarding crops and trade conditions generally in his neighborhood.

"We have good crops," he declared, "and harvesting is now pretty well over. But our chief industry is dairying, which has grown a great deal of late years."

Then we fell to discussing departmental stores and methods of competing with them.

"To my mind," said Mr. Sweet, "the best way to compete with them is to fight them with their own thunder. That means you must be able to offer bargains to the people and to advertise. We did not at one time keep ladies' underwear and dress goods in stock. But we realized that those were the articles for which a great many people chiefly went to the departmental stores in Toronto. And where they bought dress goods and underwear they usually went for other lines. We then decided to carry ladies' underwear and dress goods, and the results have been most gratifying. I do not believe there is now one order goes to the departmental stores in Toronto where there were formerly ten."

"Do you do a cash trade?"

"No, not exactly. Two-thirds of our trade is cash. At one time the proportion was the other way. A few years ago we undertook to do a strictly cash trade, but we found it would not work well. We were gradually losing good customers, and so decided to quietly and gradually go back to a system of cash and credit. On accounts over three months old we charge interest, and we seldom have trouble. Our customers have got to know our terms."

Sweet & Co. are liberal advertisers, varying the space they occupy in the local paper, but always having it of goodly proportions. "In advertising," said Mr. Sweet, "I believe in giving people some information about the goods we want to sell them, and the more interesting we can make the information the better. That is the principle the large departmental stores go upon."

A showcase that is attracting a good deal of attention among drygoodsmen and other merchants is the "Illuminated Silent Salesman," manufactured by John Phillips & Co., Limited, Detroit, Mich. The manufacturers are sending out a descriptive circular of this case which should be interesting to prospective buyers. A handsome colored photograph of the "Silent Salesman" is printed on the circular, with reading matter, describing its workmanship and advantages. The circular is sent to anyone who asks for it.

WINDOW AND STORE DECORATING.

Conducted for THE REVIEW by H. Hollingsworth, an Expert Window Artist.

TO DRY GOODS REVIEW READERS.—We shall be glad to receive photographs and descriptions of window displays that have attracted special attention in their own localities, and which would be considered helpful to trimmers generally. Any inquiries or questions on the subject of window dressing will be answered cheerfully, and any information given that may be desired by readers. Queries should be addressed: "Window Dressing Department."

SPECIAL DISPLAYS.

THE ability to accomplish, in a satisfactory way, a certain amount of routine work is the characteristic of mediocrity—the mission of the plodder. To break the bonds of conventionality, to get out of the ruts, to rise to the occasion and be able to take the fullest advantage of opportunity is the attribute of genius.

To be a successful window-dresser, something besides a talent for reproduction is necessary. The creative genius must be in evidence. The best field for the exercise of this quality about a store is the show window, and the reputation of its artist must largely rest upon the manner in which the arrangement of his materials keeps pace with the march of current events, and, as a consequence, enlists and arrests public attention.

In this respect the window-trimmer is, or should be, like the advertiser. Every event of great public interest should be utilized to attract the attention of the public to the wares which are to be sold and to give a freshness and interest to the exhibition which will be appreciated by the public.

PLANS AND APPLIANCES FOR DRESSING WINDOWS.

Not only should the anniversaries of the great national holidays be fittingly celebrated by appropriate displays, but local events should not be neglected. A cute turn given to a window display to illustrate a matter of passing interest will often times give the store a reputation which could not be acquired otherwise.

The window should be regarded as a stage for the exercise of the highest qualities of intelligence, imagination and ingenuity possessed by its trimmers, for the purpose of interesting the populace, to the end that the business of the establishment should be bettered thereby.

Originality should be the keynote in displays of this kind, and close attention should be given, as on the stage, to every detail necessary to "preserve the unities." It should never be forgotten that whatever is worth doing is worth doing well, and unless the display is given thought and time enough to make it creditable it should never be attempted.

The length of time a special display should be allowed to remain in the window depends entirely upon the attention which it arouses.

If it "draws well" it should remain in until attention begins to wane—not until it dies out.

If it fails to enthuse, remove at once and try something else.

Special displays should be brought out during the following periods: Christmas, New Year's, Easter, Queen's Birthday, Dominion Day, Labor Day, Civic Holiday, Thanksgiving Day, and during the Spring and Fall seasons, when new goods are arriving and opening trims are on the list.

BACKGROUNDS.

Every window-trimmer fully appreciates the importance of artistic backgrounds, which help so much in showing off the goods to the best advantage.

Many a good window is spoiled by a poor backing. So many trimmers construct their backgrounds in the windows, which takes considerable time, and, when completed, they hurry in the goods to be shown, not taking the time to show them properly, feeling they have spent too much time on the background.

Consequently, the window is not what it should be. To obviate this, the best plan is to make up portable backgrounds. Make them up during leisure moments so as to save much time.

Frames can be made of light lumber and decorated on both sides so that they can be changed hurriedly. Measure your windows and have these frames made same size when put together.

Every establishment where window-trimming is recognized as a big paying part of the business should always keep on hand for the trimmer's use a number of wooden frames like those in the accompanying illustrations. These should be made of boards 1 x 4 or 6 in. Cheap lumber will do, as they are to be covered over. These will save the trimmer many an hour's reflection, and through them countless numbers of pretty window trims can be conceived and carried out by twisting and turning them around.

These do not cost much. They can be turned out of the why the S.H. & M. Skirt Bindings are so vastly superior to all others, is that they are made in a factory built especially for the manufacture of this article, and no pains or expense have been spared in equipping it with the most modern and improved machinery, and making it in every respect the greatest plant of its kind in the world.

And not only that, but the S.H. & M. Bindings are made from a velveteen, manufactured expressly for skirt bindings, which withstands the wear and tear and at the same time gives that elegant and graceful finish to the edge of the skirt which so pleases and gratifies the customer.

Mr. Merchant, if you want to be up-to-date, do the leading skirt binding business in your town, and get away ahead of all your competitors, you should handle the S.H. & M. lines, for they are the best skirt bindings it is possible to produce, pay you a handsome profit and are one of the best drawing cards you can put into your stock.

factory in a very short time, and if the trimmer takes care of them a set will last for years.

THE REVIEW will illustrate in this and future editions some exceedingly handsome window-trims, gotten up in a very short time through having these frames to trim with. In putting these together, one thing is important.

Nails larger than are necessary to hold the structure together should not be used. Many novices spike their pieces together as if they were to endure to the end of time, and the consequence is that many pieces are broken and destroyed in taking the framework apart. Temporary security is all that is required, and by the exercise of a little care the frames can be kept in good order for years.

The illustrations will serve the amateur window-dresser to some advantage and show how, by arranging and placing certain fixtures in different positions, a great variety of designs may be obtained.

By puffing and pleating in different colors and by displaying different lines of goods on these fixtures, the effects will always be entirely new and your windows will never lack attractiveness and novel ideas.

Form your ideas first before emptying the windows. Work ahead to save time and labor. Do as much as possible out of the windows during your spare moments so that the trims can be arranged to save as much time as possible in changing the trim.

Before explaining the different drawings I might say that they are very roughly sketched, but I think the ideas they are intended to convey can be gleaned from them.

EXPLANATIONS OF ILLUSTRATIONS AND DRAWINGS.

No. 1 can be made to suit any sized window that has two ends with walls. The framework is made with 1 x 4-inch lumber (cheap stuff), cleated together with wooden cleats and screws at the back.

The background is set out about a foot from the wall. A few bendable strips and some white or colored tape for lattice work are all that is required to complete a very artistic effect for a backing for almost any line of goods.

No. 2 runs from the floor to ceiling, set about half way between the window front and the back wall. The 3-piece design can be made cheaply at a factory. It is nailed to the framework, and the ends are either shirred or pleated over, and white cotton stretched tightly over it. The dots indicate electric lights. Rows of colored puffing in a contrast or blend with the filling in on sides will give the backing a pretty effect. The wall behind it could be pleated or filled in some suitable way.

No. 3 does not require explanation, as the reader can readily see the idea, and can get several ideas from it that will help him in arranging a very effective background.

No. 4 is a millinery background made of cheap strips. The entire framework if covered in with flowers will make an artistic background.

No. 5. These are the kind of frames I had reference to before. A good supply of these should always be kept, the number of each to be determined by the number of windows you have to trim.

Nos. 6, 7, 8 are drawings showing how good fixtures can be made from ordinary barrel hoops. Dozens of different lines of goods can be arranged on these after they have been covered over with fancy crepe, paper or cloth.

No. 9 shows a method of arch construction which is simple and effective.

JACKET DISPLAY. •

We reproduce a mechanical display of the Northway coats, designed and decorated by Arthur W. Humber for S. W. Mason & Son, Bowmanville, Ont.

The window was not only small, but of a triangular shape, which proves that a very striking display can be placed in small windows.

The color scheme was light blue and white. Mr. Humber did all his own carpenter work, pleating, puffing, lettering, etc., in his workroom before placing the display in the window, thus saving a great deal of work in the window and also doing away with the need of keeping the blind down which is very often overlooked. The less the blind is down the better, as it gives the store a dead appearance.

One feature of this display was that there was not a great amount of goods shown but that each piece stood out prominently. The two side pillars centre one were supported on revolving stands, which were made to revolve from a motor in the basement of the store. The belt was attached from the motor to one stand and then connected to the other stands. Around the two outside stands were cheeseboxes covered with pleated cheesecloth spread open.

Some clerks say "we are not given time for this work." Make time. Work at it in every spare moment, put in a striking display, and, if your employer is an enterprising man, he will see the advantage of having this kind of displays and you will be given more time for this work. Mr. Humber started as a clerk. His displays proved attractive and he is now giving just double the time he was two years ago to look after this department.

Some say, "it does not pay in small towns." Try it. Your object is not only to draw trade, but you want to make the store attractive and the store will establish a name for itself. Mr. Humber used the same framework in connection with a display of Crompton's corsets which looked equally well.

NEGLECT OF SMALL LINES.

In planning to show the different lines, the smaller lines are apt to be crowded out. Notions, for instance. It is not just the easiest thing in the world to obtain a large enough quantity of notions to make a respectable window display, and, even if it is, the amount of work necessary to produce an effective display of these small wares is such that the window must be kept dark for a considerable period. It is perhaps more because of this time-consuming effort that notions do not as a rule receive the attention the stock is entitled to. If there is one line that really sells by exhibition it is notions. There are other small lines figured in your stock that will be slighted for the same reason during the rush of the Fall season.

Outside display cases have proven very beneficial to those departments which handle the smaller and more ornamental kinds of goods, and to the notion stock they are proving a veritable boon. Those firms that have invested in substantial outside cases have found that they have reaped their cost several times over within a year. The little lines of knick knacks which are really not numerous enough to make a respectable showing in a large window are much benefited by the outside showcase.

A store having but two windows will find two or more neat outside cases a very profitable addition to the store equipment. Even those stores with an abundance of window space have been quick to realize the value of outside showcases, not only as an introducer but an actual seller of merchandise. If these large stores, with every foot of frontage converted into window space, find these cases profitable, it is hard to see how those stores with limited window space can afford to get along without them. If these cases are properly constructed the displays may be changed frequently without much work, and with a little pains in preparing price and explanatory tickets beforehand it very often takes but a few minutes to effect an entire change.—Chicago Dry Goods Reporter.

CANADIAN WINDOW-DRESSERS.

At a convention in Buffalo of the National Association of Window Trimmers the following were elected vice-presidents for Canada: British Columbia, Edward A. Barker, Vancouver; Quebec, Charles E. Bernard, Montreal; Ontario, Arthur W. Humber, Bowmanville.

Mr. Humber would be pleased to hear from any Ontario trimmer wishing to join the association. On application he will mail to any trimmer a pamphlet explaining the objects and benefits of the association.

A WINDOW OF LADIES' CLOTHING.

In parasols for Spring, 1901, Brophy, Cains & Co. are showing a very complete range in carved and inlaid horn and ivory handles, also in sterling silver mounted pearls and the rarer natural woods; they show these samples put up in a manner that at once arrests the attention of buyers. Special attention is paid to the finish and minor details, and the goods will repay careful consideration.

How Canadian Prints are Made.

Visit to an Extensive Bleaching and Printing Establishment.

Written by THE DRY GOODS REVIEW'S Representative.

IT is only a little over a year since the first sod was turned at St. Henri, Montreal, toward the erection of a huge converting works for the Colonial Bleaching and Printing Company, Limited. And now the building is completed, the machinery installed, everything is running smoothly and the management have just issued their first price list of new Spring prints. Manufactured products have been going out of the mill since May, and the leading wholesalers have been selling "Colonial" fabrics for the Fall trade, but the catering for the Spring print trade is considered by the management to be the real beginning of business. That the samples of Spring patterns have met with the approval of all the houses is a fair portend that augurs well for the future of this important venture in Canadian industry.

It is a venture. Not that its establishment was a risk, but it is the only industry of its kind in Canada. Of course, it is not the only place where calico is turned out in Canada, but all other mills work from the raw cotton, whereas in the Colonial mills the raw product is the unbleached cotton fabric, bought either from English, Canadian, or American mills. Being concerned only with dyeing and printing, and having naught to do with carding and weaving, the Colonial Bleaching and Printing Company hope to give paramount attention to the quality of the dyeing, to the selection of patterns, and to the execution of the printing. They hope to gain from specialization, and so far their aspirations have been crowned with success. So successful, indeed, have they been in securing orders for their Spring goods that the mills are now busy turning out 40,000 yards of fabric per day, and the need of more additional space and machinery is already felt. The goods put upon the market this Summer have won a way.

EQUIPMENT IS FIRST CLASS.

THE DRY GOODS REVIEW spent an enjoyable afternoon at the mills not long since, at the invitation of Mr. A. W. Cochrane, the energetic sales manager. The visitor was surprised to see the smoothness with which everything was being run in the new factory. Each and all engaged in the enterprise seemed to have learned their duties, and if one feature is more outstanding than another, it is the zeal and energy with which the different employes are helping to make the business a success.

It is claimed that there is no better equipped print works in America to day. This statement is undeniable, for experienced and capable men are at the helm, they have plenty of capital at their back, and they have ordered everything to suit themselves. Most of the machinery and appliances has been built to order. No pains or expense was spared to make the works first-class in all respects.

The buildings form three sides of a hollow square, from the centre of which rises the massive smokestack. The engine-house, with its four powerful boilers, is thus separate from the mill itself. There is a main building and two wings—all of brick, and two storeys. The main building is 412x62 ft., the right wing 180x62 ft. and the left wing 150x64 ft. The area covered is five acres, with room to spread. At the ground door, at the end of the right wing, the raw product, unbleached cotton, is admitted. From the upper door, at the end of the left wing, the finished article is shipped. The calico goes through the whole building before it reaches its finished state. Let us follow it and make notes by the way.

Immediately upon its receipt, the cotton is unwound and the webs sewn together to make one continuous whole. Then the fabric is led through a hole in the wall into the singer, which takes anything fluffy or foreign off the goods, just as the cook's singeing of the fowl before cooking takes off the down. The singeing is done by gas, and the machine is run by a gas engine especially installed for the purpose.

THE BLEACHING PROCESS.

Then the cotton passes into the bleachery, the next room on the ground floor. This is supposed to be the most complete bleachery either in the United States or Canada, in that it is continuous, the material coming in at one end and going out at the other. There is no crossing and recrossing of the bleached and half-bleached cottons. In the bleachery are three charging kiers and six boiling kiers, each of which holds 48,000 yards. Five washing machines and eight squeezers complete the machinery. They are divided into three sections, run by electric dynamos, two of 50-horse power, one 50, one 30 and one of two-horse power. There are four brick, cement-lined tanks, of a very large size, to hold the cotton when piled away between the different treatments. Altogether, the bleachery is up-to-date.

Upstairs, the cotton is taken to the white room, where it is brushed, sheared and wound for the white stock-room. Great care is taken to clean it thoroughly, and there are two shearers and three brushers for the purposes. The goods are also thoroughly dried in a 30 cylinder double dryer, heated and driven by steam. The cloth is wound in rolls of about 3,000 yards and sent into the white stock-room. And now we are in the main building.

Down below is the color-room and chemical laboratory, where Mr. Thomas examines drugs and colorings, dictates as to what colors shall come into the establishment and as to how they shall go out. His laboratory is well equipped. In the color room are six copper kettles, heated by steam, and containing huge mixers, a strainer and a gas engine. Everything is modern.

THE PRINTING MACHINES.

Next comes the printing-room, containing the marvels of the establishment—three huge printing machines. Mr. B. W. Lockwood is the veteran printer of the place. Each machine has attached a double engine, and also has four huge copper cylinder rollers to dry the fabric after printing to permit its being handled. The room is well lighted by windows that run two storeys high and admit a well diffused northern light. This prevents any shadows from falling upon the machines to interfere with the printers. More machines will soon be added.

From thence the cloth is taken upstairs to the steam-room, where the colors are developed as a hot iron does the stamp on linen. It is left for a half-hour in the cottage steamer, where it is subjected to a ten-pound pressure of live steam. Another steamer has been set up to develop colors that do not need so much pressure.

The engraving-room comes next. The importance of having high-class engraving has been recognized by the management, and, while experienced and capable engravers and which includes the giving of the exclusive sale of the Dr. Deimel Underwear to one merchant in a city (excepting only a few of the largest) deserves the closest investigation by every merchant who has the trade which will appreciate a high-class article of exceptional merit. There is not only a most substantial profit on every garment sold, but the satisfaction of hearing purchasers praise the article and sending their friends for it is a feature which also appeals to the merchant who appreciates this commendation for the good it does the store.

We are ready to submit samples and terms, or send a representative where possible, in order that you may be made familiar with the Dr. Deimel Underwear. This puts you under no obligation to buy. Are you interested? If so, write at once and forestall your neighbor.

die cutters have been engaged, they have been provided with the best machinery procurable. There are both milling and pentagraph machines, together with complementary lathes. Already many nobby and neat patterns have been produced on the premises.

On the ground floor, on the other side of the main building, is the dye-house, in the charge of jovial Mr. Mullins. His chief pride is an open soaper, made by H. W. Butterworth Sons Co., of Philadelphia, the only one of its kind in Canada. An aniline black plant, made by The Rusden Machine Co., of Warren, R.I., is also an AI plant and is giving every satisfaction. Then there are four set of jigs, eight dye machines, and four rope soap machines. A beater washer and a naphthol machine for all kinds of ice colors, together with other machines make up a complete dye-house. There are necessary drying machines built in conjunction with the soaping and black plants, which make the operation continuous and increase the facility of the work. This completes the main building.

THE FINISHING ROOMS.

Now we go to the left wing. On the ground floor is the finishing department; upstairs are the folding, stock and shipping rooms. The finishing department is replete with up to-date starching and finishing machines, making a finish that will soon be celebrated among drygoodsmen. The drying machine consists mainly of 24 steam-heated copper cylinders. There are several calenders and tentering frames, one of which is the largest in Canada. Everything is modern and on a huge scale. Add to these stretching and pasting machines. The room is driven by steam and electricity, and each of the calenders has an independent engine of its own. This independent motive power is a feature throughout the building.

Upstairs in the folding-room are six folding machines that measure out the yards with precision. Here the goods are made ready for the stock-room. In one corner, samples of the goods are prepared for the wholesale firms. Before the goods are sent into the stock-room they are placed in a monster hydraulic press that exercises a 75-ton to the square inch pressure.

Already the stock-room is filled, and additional temporary quarters have had to be found in other parts of the building to accommodate the goods. But other buildings will be added.

And thus we have come to the door of exit. Taking it all and all, there is not much wanting and there is enough to admire. The entire plant is valued at $375,000, and the incorporated capital is $500,000. There are about 150 to 175 hands engaged continuously. The importance of the industry to the town of St. Henri is evidenced by the large number of dwelling houses being erected in the vicinity.

It should have been mentioned that the mill is situated between the Lachine canal and the River St. Pierre, and thus no difficulty is found in procuring the large amount of water that is necessary, and in securing ample drainage. A 16 inch main brings the water from above the Cote St. Paul locks.

The officers of the company are: President, H. S. Holt; Vice President, A. Racine; General Manager, W. T. Whitehead; Sales Manager, A. W. Cochrane; Mill Manager, Wm. Herrick. Board of Directors:—H. S. Holt, A. Racine, F. Paul, C. R. Hosmer, E. N. Heney, G. F. Hartt, and W. T. Whitehead. The down town offices of the company are in the Victoria Chambers, 232 McGill street. E.H.C.

Montreal Wholesale Trade.

THE wholesale houses report trade to be increasing in volume, particularly in cottons. A month ago there was a prevailing fear, almost amounting to expectancy, that the coming of the new crop of cotton upon the market would force down the high prices now set upon the manufactured article. Consequently, even the reduction in a few lines to meet American competition did not stimulate the trade. But now the public is better informed and buying freely. The Galveston storm, the publication of reliable reports confirming a shortage in the crop, and the closing down of several Manchester mills, on account of a scarcity of the new material, has forced the conclusion upon the minds of nearly all in the trade that prices must at least be maintained. The tendency of cotton prices now appears to be upward, even if all the crop grown is safely gathered, which is by no means assured. This year the crop is coming in three weeks late, and many fear that the frost may catch the third picking. If it does the damage will be serious. With all these facts the public are acquainted and are acting accordingly. The orders now being given the travelers are larger than sorting orders, and would indicate that stocks will soon be well filled. Wholesale houses are giving orders larger than the mills wish to accept. This all contributes to make a diminutive boom. The advance in the prices of bleached and unbleached cottons did not a little to convert more "bulls."

THE GAULT BROTHERS COMPANY, LIMITED.

The Gault Brothers Company, Limited, are busy in all departments, and report business to be considerably improved. The cotton department is particularly busy, and large shipments of both staples and colored cottons are being made daily. In the woollen departments, both domestic and imported, grey seems to be the popular color. Worsteds are selling well, but there is a noticeable tendency towards the Scotch finished goods. Travelers are now on the road with Spring samples of carpets, and, notwithstanding increased prices, have succeeded in securing good orders. The tendency of the market is upwards, and this firm consider themselves fortunate in having bought at the right time. They still have the leading numbers of last year's carpets in stock at old prices. A full stock of linoleums is to hand, and these also bear old values. The tendency in coloring is towards blue and crimson, but, of course, green is the staple. The assortment of dress goods is complete, as usual, and, now that Mr. Gault has returned from Europe, some new and attractive samples are being shown.

S. GREENSHIELDS, SON & CO.

S. Greenshields, Son & Co., have had to work their staff at night to keep up with orders. All grades of cottons and flannelettes, specialties with this house, are being disposed of in enormous quantities. The travelers will soon be showing new Spring prints and they will carry some lines that will "make a noise." These goods are being opened now. For the Fall demand they have a large range of staple and fancy lines.

The fancy goods department is spreading, pipes and mouth organs having been put into stock this month. Shetland floss is proving to be the popular wool, but any order in

ENCLOSED ARC LAMPS FOR STORES AND WAREHOUSES.

Double Globe Type of Enclosed Arc Lamp.

Good Light is as essential to the majority of stores as good salesmen, and for evening sales of some classes of goods it is an absolute requisite. While good effects have been obtained in the past by the use of oil and gas lamps, such methods of illumination are no more adequate to the present demands than the stage coach or horse car to the requirements of modern transportation.

A perfect lamp for store lighting must furnish an abundance of clear white light at a small expense. It must also be safe, healthful and convenient to light and extinguish even at a distance. The Enclosed Arc Lamp fulfills all these conditions. It is economical to operate: it requires no matches; produces no sparks or dangerous gases; it furnishes a light so like daylight that delicate shades of color are given their true values, and it can be controlled perfectly from any part of the store. The Canadian General Electric Co.'s Enclosed Arc Lamps for continuous current circuits of various voltages, alternating current of various voltages and frequencies, are unsurpassed in points of design, material and workmanship.

Write to us for Illustrated Bulletin, giving interesting letters and illustrations of some large and successful installations in large departmental stores in the United States. Mailed free on application.

Berlin wools, Andalusian, Baldwin or Canadian fingerings and imported Saxony can be immediately filled. The new thing in trimmings is gold braid. Patent leather belts are in good demand. A nice line of art silks has been put into stock for the holiday trade. A line of purses with silver corners is selling well. A nice range of ebonoid silver-mounted goods for ladies' toilet tables is to hand to retail at 25 cents. The agency for "Crown" perfumery goods, including soaps, has been secured lately, and some good values are being shown.

In the linen department Christmas goods are being given special attention. These include doilies, five o'clock tea covers and sideboard covers, hemstitched, open-worked, and trimmed with knotted fringes. Staple goods are in full stock.

The most popular lines of dress goods are those with a camel hair effect. A good demand has been experienced for grey debeiges, which are being used considerably for skirtings and suitings. For blouses, the latest things are printed French opera flannels and German flannels, in special Madras patterns. New lines of silk-finished velveteens and velvets, in all shades, are being shown.

R. C. WILKINS.

Mr. Wilkins informs THE REVIEW that he has waited for all the newest designs in fabrics and styles from England and America before completing his range for Spring, consequently his travelers will be a little late in starting out. Mr. Wilkins is making a special bid for the large cash buyers who use outing suits and negligee shirts and overalls in good qualities. He promises the latest designs of ladies' tailor-made skirts and the best assortment ever shown in Canada. About a year ago Mr. Wilkins made up his mind to pay special attention to cash buyers, and by so doing has not only increased his business, but has done fully 70 per cent. of his output this year on a 30-days' basis.

KYLE, CHEESBROUGH & CO.

Messrs. Kyle, Cheesbrough & Company are showing some entirely new designs in pulley belts of black and jet that are exceedingly handsome goods. These are of Austrian production, and this firm are the first to introduce this novelty in this market. They are offering them as a holiday attraction to be delivered in December for the Christmas trade. A novelty in Japanese glace silk, 27 in. wide, in all colors, at 45c. is another special offering. This line is procured first hand from the makers in Japan, and is of unusually fine finish, being glossy and soft. It is specially adapted for evening dresses, blouses or waists, as well as for art and drapery purposes. This firm report unusually large sales of brocaded matalassie cloak and jacket cloths. These are used in both light and heavy weights. They are brocaded in raised patterns of exquisite designs, the face of the goods being of silk finish, very rich and "distingue" in appearance.

M. SAXE & SONS.

In regard to styles for next Spring, M. Saxe & Sons say that in the general make-up of clothing for next season there will be but little change. The shoulders on the coats will be made up more square, and, in order to produce the desired effect, this firm have adopted the patent pad introduced by a large New York house. This will be the only material change in so far as the make-up is concerned, but there will be great changes in patterns and styles of material. This will be a marked improvement, to judge by the samples of this firm.

They claim that their travelers are now showing the most nobby line of samples of ready-made clothing ever set before the eyes of a Canadian customer. The Raglan coat, which came into Canada only a season ago, will be very popular next Spring. It will be made up in materials of light weight and shades.

BEAVER RUBBER CLOTHING COMPANY.

The Beaver Rubber Clothing Company have given the special coat we mentioned in our last issue the name, "Driver's Friend." It is made of duck, in khaki and black colors. The very best of rubber is used in its manufacture, so it should enable any man to stand in a heavy rainstorm for 36 hours and yet keep dry. It is strongly recommended for carters and others exposed to heavy weather.

The Beaver Rubber Clothing Co's. travelers are now out on the road, both in the Maritime Provinces and Ontario and Quebec. They are doing a good business, being helped, no doubt, by the rising prices of cotton and gutta percha.

A CHANGE.

In consequence of the very rapid strides which their business has made during the past two years, Boulter & Stewart have decided to make a change in their traveling staff for the future. Mr. Boulter has always gone to the Pacific Coast twice a year, giving the balance of his time to the buying and manufacturing, but, in view of the increase in trade of late, has decided to give his undivided time and energies to the manufacture of their extensive line of ladies' ready-to-wear goods.

They have secured the services of Mr. Geo. Strachan, who is well and favorably known in that territory, and bespeak for him a very successful business in their well-known lines.

GOLD MEDAL FOR SILK THREADS.

The Corticelli Silk Co., Limited, have received notice that "Corticelli" spool silks and "Brainerd & Armstrong" wash silks in patent holders were awarded the gold medal at the Paris Exposition, 1900. These famous Canadian silks have always won gold medals and first prizes wherever exhibited, which is a strong commendation of their superiority.

A JOB IN WRAPPERETTES.

S. Greenshields, Son & Co., Montreal, have just purchased over 4,000 pieces job wrapperettes. They are offering these to the trade at less than manufacturers' prices.

The Montreal Cotton Co., for whom Stevenson, Blackader & Co. are selling agents, have received the Grand Prix at the Paris Exposition.

Mr. B. L. Monkhouse, manufacturers' agent, who lately removed his office to the McKinnon building, Melinda street, Toronto, is at present in England visiting the principal markets of the various lines he carries, and promises to return in time for the Fall trade provided with a range of samples prepared under his personal instructions, which will insure a further accession to his already satisfactory business.

Canadian buyers who go to Great Britain are familiar with the Hope retail stores in London, the leading provincial towns of England and Glasgow. This concern, which was founded in 1876 by the late Thomas Peacock, of London, is being formed into a company with a share capital of $3,000,000. According to recent profits the company can pay a dividend of eight per cent. on ordinary stock. The new head of the business is Mr. T. H. Lowthian.

INSOLVENCY LEGISLATION AGAIN.

THE Montreal Chambre de Commerce is taking opportune steps to secure insolvency legislation from Parliament when it next meets. At the meeting held on September 19, Mr. Morin, in discussion upon the motion passed by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, suggested that pressure should be brought to bear upon the candidates for Parliament, pledging them to do their utmost to have an insolvency Act adopted. We learn from the President, Mr. Geoffrion, that the Chambre de Commerce is acting upon the suggestion, and that Mr. Parisseau, the member for Chamibly-Vercheres, has adopted this as part of his platform.

Opinion generally seems to favor the enactment of the bill introduced in 1898 by Mr. Thos. Fortin, M.P. Mr. Fortin, himself, has spent a great deal of time upon the preparation of the measure, and has had the assistance of several men of experience and ability to aid him. Consequently, the business men of Canada will be satisfied if Mr. Fortin's good judgment is approved and if his measure becomes law.

This measure ought also to appeal to the non-trading classes, for they do not come under the Act and cannot be forced into liquidation. With this provision contained in the bill, the country members have no right to prevent the business community from obtaining that which it needs—and needs badly.

One of the chief features of Mr. Fortin's bill is that it does away with official assignees. All bills introduced previously to that of Mr. Fortin provided for the appointment of officials of one kind or another. Sir Mackenzie Bowell's bill would have introduced official receivers, who would really have been assignees. Assignees are not wanted, for they proved themselves, under the old Act, to be plagues and scourges. Mr. Fortin's bill provided for no official, but, in order to place some person in charge of the assets, he advises that the sheriff, who exists as an officer in all Provinces, could be authorized by the court to take possession, unless the majority of the creditors designated another person, who could be appointed immediately. In the majority of cases this would result in the appointment of a person chosen by the creditors.

Another important feature of the bill is that the majority of the creditors—not in number, but in point of amount of debts—should be in absolute control of the estate. Mr. Fortin is acting on the principle that a man can dispose of his property as he pleases and when a man becomes insolvent his property is transferred to his creditors; therefore, they should have absolute control of it.

The bill provides for the granting of a discharge, but it contains elaborate provisions to prevent the granting of a discharge without giving the creditors ample opportunity to oppose the claim made by the insolvent. Only the honest shall get the discharge.

Perhaps the newest feature of the bill is that the discharge shall apply only quo ad traders. Non-traders are to be allowed to rank as ordinary creditors and to receive their dividend, but will not be affected by any discharge. They will thus be able to recover the balance of the debt if the insolvent comes into a position to pay. This applies only to non-commercial debts, such as the claims of farmers and professional men. Traders are the only persons to be allowed to go into insolvency and clear themselves of their debts by part payment.

Like other insolvency bills, Mr. Fortin aims to do away completely with the obnoxious custom of allowing secret preferences.

Two years ago when Mr. Fortin introduced his bill in the House at Ottawa it was set aside till the working of the new laws in the Maritime Provinces could be judged. These seem to have operated satisfactorily in some particulars. For instance, when a preference or security is given it is immediately registered in the Maritime courts. But a general law for the Dominion is sorely needed, and, if elected, Mr. Fortin purposes to introduce his bill next session.

The Chambre de Commerce is to be congratulated on the energy it is displaying.

DEPARTMENTAL STORE COMPETITION.

OWING to the agitation in Toronto to raise the assessment on the Eaton Co's. stock the whole question of big departmental stores has come up again for discussion. The Retail Merchants' Association, members of which conducted the inquiry and gave evidence, is now asking to be recompensed for the expenses. It was a purely municipal work they did and there seems no reason why the account should not be paid. The point is raised that the civic officials have no legal power to pay it. The municipal authorities all over Canada appear to have a good deal of power to do foolish things, but seldom assert their right to do wise things.

But the general discussion on big departmental stores is once more raising questions which we have often referred to in these columns. One is that the local merchants can often copy their best methods to his own advantage. The Oshawa Vindicator, for example, directs attention to one strange case of local apathy when it says: "There are 30 business men within the four blocks of the town who never say a word to the public from one year's end to the other, either through a newspaper or by hand bills. Can those men expect to keep trade in town?" This is one of the particulars in which the local merchant can afford to copy the policy of the big stores with their fresh, up-to-date advertising.

Another point of equal importance is that of giving credits. A correspondent of a Toronto paper says: "Make the store debts as the hotel liquor debts—uncollectable in the Division Court under $100. You cannot get any Government to do that, but the departmental stores are doing it without consulting any Government. How many good, honest merchants have "gone to the wall" through being not only too generous with other persons' goods, but with their own hard-earned money, only to keep up and encourage a class of persons who should not exist in any country that wants to be progressive and prosperous?" No doubt the cash system is a considerable factor in drawing trade away from stores that give credit.

We believe that the local merchant is entitled to his local trade, and that he is, as a Manitoba contemporary says, "the man who cannot be dispensed with. He is a man who takes great risks in the pursuit of his business. He comes unbonused, invests his capital, and puts in a stock of goods entirely at his own risk. He is obliged to stock his store before the goods are needed, and in doing so he has to anticipate the wants of the community. Hundreds of people never think of this, and have no idea of the amount of caution and fine judgment that are required in doing it."

MORE SMALL PORTS OF ENTRY.

The Dominion Government still continues a policy which has been in vogue in this country for many years of creating outposts of Customs at various points throughout the Dominion. As we have already pointed out on more than one occasion, this is not the right policy. It encourages different classification of values all over the country, so that no importer is sure of what rate his competitor is paying for the same goods.

It may be said that the local merchant is inconvenienced by these outposts, but, as a matter of fact, the equalization of Customs rates is of more importance than anything else. This is especially true where the tariff, as ours does, consists largely of ad valorem duties rendering necessary a very accurate knowledge of the qualities of goods before the correct sum can be collected.

Unless some very strong opinions are brought to bear upon it, it looks as if our succeeding Government would go on creating small ports of entry until the number of such small Customs houses exceeds all reasonable necessity.

AMERICAN METHODS IN LONDON.

THERE have been rumors for some time that a big departmental store would be opened in London, England, on the American plan, and the name of the capitalists who were engaged in the enterprise were said to be The Siegel-Copper Co. It seems that there is some truth in the statement.

In the opinion of that firm, whose large stores in Chicago and New York are conducted on the most up-to-date methods, the biggest city in the world needs just such an institution as one of these. The Americans consider that the big stores of London are inadequate to the immense area served, and they assert that the English store has never yet grappled with the mercantile policy of large volume and small profits.

We would be inclined to think the very reverse, but this charge is actually made by one of the managers for The Siegel-Cooper Co., and he ought to know what he is talking about. He says further that the largest London store only does an annual business of about $15,000,000, which, if so, is not a very large sum considering the immense field that London presents to such enterprise.

One of the chief requisites to the success of a new departmental store in London would be a proper situation, one which would be central enough to draw the trade from the principal avenues of traffic, and at the same time be not too far from the West End. It is said that the cash system is not worked out as perfectly as it should be in the existing London stores, and that the American institution would strictly enforce cash as they do in America.

THE KID GLOVE TRADE.

The country dealer should be careful not to lose the profits to be made in keeping his stock of kid gloves well assorted.

There is often trade lost in this way by the local merchant not caring to carry anything like a complete stock, either in colors or sizes of ladies' kid gloves. In this way the big city stores do a large trade by mail.

The wearers of kid gloves complain with considerable truth that the local store cannot furnish them with the kind they want. By this means the local buyer gets into the habit of ordering things by mail, besides kid gloves, and thus the local merchant loses his trade.

It would be well for town and country dealers to consider this matter very carefully, and decide whether it would not be worth while to announce his intention of being thoroughly up-to-date in kid glove stocks.

FLAW IN AN INSOLVENCY LAW.

It seems that Canada is not the only portion of the British Empire where the insolvency laws give the English creditor annoyance and cause him loss. It is rather surprising to find that one phase of the insolvency law of the colony of Victoria, Australia, is being construed to the disadvantage of the English creditor.

A case recently came before the High Court of Victoria, in which a firm had recently failed, and the trustee wanted to remit the sum of $3 000 to London to pay the creditors there a dividend equal in amount to what was being paid to the Australian creditors. It was decided, after some litigation, that there was no power in the Insolvency Act to make such an order, and the consequence is the English creditors will have to send out to Victoria the proofs of their claims and also to appoint an agent to receive the money.

It is very clear that such a law should be amended, for it is a plain omission. It cannot have been intended to deprive the English exporter of his undoubted rights. As mentioned elsewhere in this issue, we are not without hope that something may be done in the new Parliament of Canada to remedy the insolvency system.

At the present moment the issues of the general election are pushing aside all purely commercial questions.

COMMERCIAL BRIBERY.

The bill which has been before the British Parliament for some time, dealing with the question of commercial bribery, still hangs fire. The author of the bill, Lord Russell of Killowen, died not long ago. As he was the chief promoter of the measure it remains to be seen whether any other public man of the same eminence will take the matter up vigorously.

During the late session of Parliament the bill passed the House of Lords, but has yet to be dealt with by the House of Commons. It is often said that you cannot make men honest by act of Parliament. Yet, it appears as if the measure was along that line, because it defined as corrupt so many secret payments that it became necessary to exempt by a special clause the tips which travelers give to railway porters or to the servants in a house where he happens to be staying. The necessity of making these exceptions shows how hard the bill strikes at all gratuitous payments, and it would really look as if such legislation, when drawn stringently, would defeat its own purpose.

PAYING SMALL DEBTS.

An Ontario newspaper, The Orillia Packet, has started a very useful discussion on a point which nearly concerns the retail merchant.

The journal in question proposes that the best way for the average individual to celebrate the opening of the twentieth century would be to pay his or her small debts. "If," says our contemporary, "every individual would make it a point to pay as many as possible of his debts, and especially his small debts, between now and December 31, he could enter the twentieth century 'owing no man anything,' if that happy end be at all attainable." Apart altogether from the moral or sentimental side of this proposal, it is one that the merchant will endorse.

There is no greater grievance in commerce to-day than the difficulty of getting people who can well afford to pay their debts to hand over the money. There are so many persons who like to delay as long as possible for no other reason, as far as one can see, than the pure love of money and the hatred of parting with it.

If merchants who think well of The Orillia Packet's plan will draw it to the attention of editors in other towns, some practical headway may be made in the matter.

THE PARIS FIRE.

The fire which swept through the town of Paris, Ontario, last month was one of those calamities against which it is very hard to make provision. Had it not been for the tremendous and unusual gale which prevailed when the fire broke out, there is no reason to suppose that the fire could not have been extinguished. But the consequence was that a large number of merchants lost all their stocks, and have been put to the greatest inconvenience. Several of them, with characteristic courage, at once began to make plans for rebuilding before the fire was actually out.

We offer our sincere sympathy to those of our readers who have suffered by this severe fire. It is a matter for the greatest congratulation that the fine mills of The Penman Manufacturing Company escaped the flames. The buildings are situated in more than one section of the town, and it seems little short of marvelous that at least one building did not fall a victim.

The curtailing of such a magnificent industry as this at the busy season would have been not far short of a commercial calamity. Readers will join with us in congratulating the company upon its good fortune. There is no reason to doubt that the courage and resource of the people of Paris will prove equal to the emergency of recreating their town.

THE EXPORT TRADE.

The assistance which Governments are giving to the export of every kind of foodstuffs is a reasonable enough policy in the interest of the farmer. We have no fault to find with the assistance to the farmer, but it is questionable whether enough is being done to push our export trade generally with other markets.

True, we have subsidies to certain steamship lines, and the manufacturer is allowed rebates on the duties paid upon material used in making an export article, but, if all reports are true, these rebates take a long time to get, and the subsidies are not large enough to bring down the freight rates.

Is there any economic reason why Government depots should be established for the sale of Canadian butter in China or Japan, and not for the sale of Canadian cottons in those countries?

Hat, Cap and

Fur Trade.

The General Outlook in Hats. Retail trade in the cities is pretty fair, and September sales were quite up to the average. Some dealers, however, find trade a little slow, but look forward to a good October. That present conditions are not unsatisfactory may be inferred from the fact that wholesale importers report that retail orders for Spring hats are large, showing that the trade count upon a good season for Spring, 1901. Samples of both straw and felt hats are now being shown. In straws, rustics sell freely, as well as the turban shape of boater. The out-of-town dealer is also buying the "Century" style—the fedora shape in straws—which made its appearance in the cities last Summer. Linen hats, tourist shape, with fancy puggaree bands, shown both with soft and stiff bodies, are being bought for next season's trade.

Notes of Trade Interest.

There are no hat merchants in Mexico. Hats there are simply a line carried by the general dealer, who sells, usually, various styles and colors of the soft Alpine hat of medium quality, that is $3 to $3.50 a dozen. Some American hard felts are sold, and some straws in Summer. The duty on each hat brought into Mexico is 47 cents, regardless of the value of the hat.

E. D. Ross, of Hamilton, took advantage of the millinery openings in that city to have a "men's hat opening." In his two stores he carried a good range of the latest novelties, and called attention to new features in his stock through the local press. The experiment is a good idea, and may commend itself to other dealers.

L. N. E. Lafontaine, Guelph, has moved his stock of furs into new and improved premises. One of his novelties is slippers of Greenland seal, for house wear. These are sold at moderate prices.

James Coristine & Co., Limited, Montreal, say that they are carrying the largest range of hat and cap samples for Spring, 1901, ever shown by a Canadian house. They have secured the exclusive control of many prominent makers' hats, and with 15 energetic men on the road should make the hat trade hum.

The Fur Seal Question.

It is admitted at Washington, says The New York Fur Trade Review, that branding seals, as conducted on the Pribyloff Islands, as yet shows no satisfactory results, the plain inference from the statement being that the experiment has not yet run a satisfactory length of time to demonstrate its good qualities, if it has any. The practice of branding began in 1896 and has been continued to date, which we are to regard as too short a period to be effective one way or the other. How anyone should have supposed that branding seals would be productive of satisfactory results is more than we can understand, or have been able to even indefinitely apprehend from the very beginning of the practice. Canadian sealers, who business it was believed, not by business men, but at the Capitol, would be very nearly ruined by the cruel operation, looking at the matter from their point of view, note no satisfactory results, though we believe out of a catch of 27,000 seals, six skins presented very clear evidences of having been branded, and presumably only of partial market value. We may suppose that the branding will continue in the hope that in some mysterious way good results will follow, for, in this respect, as in all others, while there is life there is hope.

The English Hat Trade.

The felt hat manufacturers in the Manchester district report trade as being rather quieter than usual by comparison with other years. The disturbed condition of affairs in South Africa and China is beginning to have bad effects upon the shipping trade, while at home the increase in the price of coals and other commodities essential to hat manufacturing has hampered trade considerably. Notwithstanding the condition of trade, the day-wage men at Denton have given notice that from October they will require an advance from 32s. to 35s. Returns show the total exports of hats manufactured at home during 1899 to have been 1,071,315 dozen; value, £1,106,647; compared with 1,072,119 dozen; value, £1,059,739, in 1898. For the seven months ended July this year the exports of skins were valued at £882,879, against £861,473 during a like period last year.

The shellac market has been dull lately, but deliveries keep good. Present prices: Fine orange, £3 15s. to £4; second orange, £2 17s. to £3 10s.; garnet, £2 16s. to £3 2s.; button, £2 to £4.

The trade has received official intimation of the amalgamation as a limited company of the business of John Turner & Sons, hatters and electrical engineers, Denton and the United States, and that of Alderman Giles Atherton, hatting expert and engineer, Stockport. This firm of Turner, Atherton & Co. will, it is stated, shortly introduce new machinery, which will have an important bearing on the hatting industry.

The Story of the Panama Hat.

The United States Consul at Guayaquil, Ecuador, has sent to Washington an interesting report on the Panama hat. "Ecuador," he says, "can, with justice, claim preeminence in the production of cacao and the manufacture of straw hats and hammocks. Her cacao crop represents about one third of the world's supply; her hammocks, made in the coast provinces, notably those of Manavi, cannot be excelled by any made elsewhere; while her straw hats are the finest in the world. The Manavi (Panama) hat was first made in the province of Manavi, Ecuador, about 275 years ago, by a native named Francisco Delgado. The present centres of the industry are Monte-Cristi and Jipijapa, in the province of Manavi, and Santa Elena and Cuenca, in the provinces of Guayas and Azuay, respectively. They came to be known as Panama hats years ago, when that city was a distributing centre. In Ecuador, Colombia, and Central America, the hat is known by the natives as the "Jipijapa" (pronounced Hipy-hapa), but, as they are made elsewhere in Ecuador, principally in the province of Manavi (Mahn-ah-vee), and as the name is easy to pronounce, it seems to me it might take the place of the present misleading appellation."

The plant from which these hats are made is a native grass or species of cane. It is fanlike in shape, something like palmetto. When the plant is five feet high it is cut, boiled in water and then sun-dried.

In making the hats the straw is first carefully selected, dampened to make it pliable, and then very finely divided into requisite widths, the little finger or thumb nail being used for the purpose. The plaiting commences at the apex of the crown and is continued in circular form until the hat is finished. The work is carried on while the atmosphere is humid, from about midnight to 7 a.m. If the strand breaks, it can be replaced and so plaited as not to affect the work nor be visible to the naked eye. It requires from three to five months daily labor of three hours per day to make one of the finest hats. The business in its highest development is really an art, requiring patience, fine sight, and special skill—qualifications few of the natives possess. The plaiting completed, the hat is washed in clean, cold water, coated with a thin solution of gum, and polished with dry powdered sulphur. They are so pliable that they can be rolled up without injury and put in one's pocket; they will last for years and can be repeatedly cleaned. Natives of both sexes and all ages are engaged in this work at odd times, the business being a side issue. Children make from raw, undressed straw, about two of the common hats per day.

The Consul says: "The Cuenca hat wholesales at from 18 to 60 sucres ($7.92 to $26.40) per dozen; finest, at 12 to 15 sucres ($5.28 to $6.60) each; the Manavi hat brings 3 to 50 sucres ($1.32 to $22) per dozen; finer hats, 10 to 40 sucres ($4.40 to $17.60) each; fancy hats, 50 to 100 sucres ($22 to $44) and more each. The principal exporters in the city of Guayaquil are Messrs. Norverto Osa & Co. and Manuel Orrantia & Son, both houses of excellent repute. Considering durability, they are the cheapest straw hats in the world; their beauty and comfort should bring them into general use."

It appears that Peru has been taking a large quantity of the straw from which she manufactures hats, competing sharply with Ecuador and causing a decline in the industry; but the export duty imposed by the last Congress is reviving the business, exports in 1899 being 70,000 sucres more than in 1898. Since the Germans, with characteristic enterprise, have been running a line of steamers from Hamburg to San Francisco, some shipments are going to that city.

The finest hats ever made were by a native named Palma, and were exhibited at the Paris Exposition when Napoleon III was emperor. The two best were bought by a French gentleman for 1,000 francs ($193) and presented to the Emperor and Marshal McMahon. Palma is now dead, but there are two or three others who possess equal skill.

Monotony in shape has been, perhaps, one of the chief causes why the hats have not been more popular, but, if dealers would take up the matter, the natives could easily make any style desired. Ladies' hats may be worn a number of successive seasons. Cleaned and retrimmed, they appear perfectly new.

Toronto Wholesale Trade.

THE W. R. BROCK CO., LIMITED, TORONTO.

SEPTEMBER has been a good month for the carpet and housefurnishing trade. This firm are in a particularly advantageous position to do a good business in carpets, as they have on hand a wide assortment of imported carpets, bought before the recent advance in prices. Their travelers are taking orders, not only for immediate delivery, but also for next Spring.

Grey chevots are the leading sellers in overcoatings, with meltons next, principally in black. They are finding a large demand for grey, black and blue chevots and llamas, and meltons, beavers, kerseys, montenacs, curls, etc., in blacks and blues. Some special numbers of black and blue twill worsteds at extra low prices should be noticed, and two specials in black venetian worsteds. Worsteds are selling better than tweeds at present, but, as there is a great deal of cheap worsted being made, it is likely that tweeds will lead later in the season.

The Toronto house of the Brock firm are offering a variety of specialties in the staple department. No. 40, a 32-inch colored sateen, purchased about 12 months ago, in 40 different shades is a very fine cloth. It has a bright finish, and can be retailed at 15c. Another, No. 051, is a 28 inch reversible salisbury, in black and red and black and white checks, stripes and figures. This is a Manchester cloth, good heavy weight, bright printing, and is for retailing at 12½c. A full range of patterns is shown in 34 and 35-inch heavy, striped flannelettes, No. 180, to be retailed at 10c., which is about the regular wholesale price. A good bargain will be found in No. M38, a 68 inch cream damask table linen, in five different designs, with a fine mellow finish, that can be retailed at 40c., 25 per cent. below the regular price. In toweling, two specialties should be noticed, a honeycomb cotton towel, 14x26 inches, which is a stock line, secured at a cut price from Manchester, and can be retailed at 5c. per pair, or about mill price, and an 18 inch hickory crash, a dark huck toweling, to be retailed at the regular wholesale price of 10c.

A large quantity of odd lines of men's neckwear is being cleared out at very low prices. Flannelette, white and working shirts and overalls are offered at prices lower than they can be manufactured for to day, and these lines cannot be sold at another time except at an advance of 20 to 33½ per cent. A good business is being done in men's and boys' fleece-lined underwear, "Kitchener," "White," "Buller," "D" and "Kimberley" being especially popular. Ringwood gloves for ladies' and men's wear are offered at prices to retail at 25c. per pair.

In hosiery, they are offering some stock at 1898 value, which is being rapidly sold. Special value in ribbed and plain hose may be found, to retail at 25 and 50c. per pair.

They have two specials in ladies' vests, "Brownie" and "Kraze," which can be retailed at 25c.

The travelers of Brophy, Cains & Co., are on the road with Spring vests. They have their usual full assortment of staple lines in no, half and long sleeves, as well as an extra fine range of high-class white goods in lises and silks with novelties in trimmings.

Our Illustrated Catalogue of FUR GARMENTS, CAPES, NECKWEAR, etc., for season 1900 will be issued shortly. Send for one. You will find the styles are up-to-date and it will pay you to write us for prices.

Our travelers are now on the road with our full range of Hats, Caps and Straw Goods for Spring 1901.

A DRY GOODS LETTER FROM NEW YORK.

Our Special Correspondent on the Latest Phases of that Market—What Styles are Popular and What Goods Sell—The Outlook in Jackets, Suits, Skirts, Waists, Etc., and a General View of Trade Tendencies.

FROM THE DRY GOODS REVIEW'S SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.

New York, September 28, 1900.

THE dry goods market in general has not been as active as it might have been, had there been no disturbing influences to affect the course of events.

There are three causes principally responsible for the backwardness of the Fall season, namely : (1) a reaction from the last season when everything was on the boom, and overpurchasing was general owing to the fear of higher prices ; (2) an uncertainty as to styles which has made buyers timid, and made it practically impossible to place large orders with the assurance that the goods would not be passe before they could be delivered, and, lastly, (3) a speculative element which has forced prices to abnormal levels by means of manipulation, irrespective of the actual demands of the market, particularly in cotton. The coming election is also a disturbing element which makes everyone cautious and unwilling to take chances against a possible period of depression.

BUYING RATHER LIGHT.

On the whole, however, the greatest confidence is expressed in regard to the season's business and the outlook for fair volumes of sales. During the past six weeks the wholesale markets have been visited by buyers from all sections of the country as well a few from Canada on their way to or returning from Europe. Their purchases have been varied, but not as extensive as in previous seasons. The tendency to curtail has been evident in every line, without exception, so that the cause is more the result of general conditions than special considerations in the particular lines. Rapid changes in styles were so prevalent last season that they have induced a policy of hand-to-mouth buying that will change the complexion of the manufacturing business and incidentally force other lines that are closely allied with it.

Prices on woollens have receded, and for Spring are about 20 per cent. lower than the opening prices for Fall goods, which brings them back very near to the prices of last Spring. Present prices on Fall goods are very firm, but uncertainties in the cloak market will affect some classes of cloths one way or the other, depending upon factors that are not yet settled.

The cotton market is very unstable, with a tendency toward higher prices. The Galveston disaster was the occasion for a speculative rise in the raw material which has since been felt in all classes of cotton goods. The commission houses and mills are quoting only on the new crop, and long contracts are out of the question.

Silks are on a lower level, but the recovery was sharp, and the outlook is for firm prices, especially on the staples.

THE LENGTH OF JACKETS.

In the ready-to-wear field, the purchases of buyers in the market and on the road have been so much of the sampling order that they do not indicate the style tendencies of the season sufficiently well to admit of drawing general conclusions. The great question of the season is one of jacket lengths. For the past three years there has been a determined effort to bring in long garments. The attempt was unsuccessful, but quite a few long cloaks were sold last year. So far as th early purchases have gone, long jackets have been bought for the fine trade, and short jackets for the medium and popular classes. But it is still undecided whether the long jacket will supplant the short one entirely, or remain as it is, restricted to the better end of the line. The automobile, in the three-quarter length appears to be the most favored at the present time, but predictions as to what will eventually dominate the market are not in order. Buyers from the Northwest have been uniformly in favor of the long jackets.

SUITS.

The demand for tailor-made suits has been good, and indicates a continued popularity for these garments. There has been little choice between double-breasted, tight-fitting, and Eton jackets. The preferred length is about nineteen inches. There is a distinct inclination to favor revers, faced and stitched. The skirts are mainly of the seven-gore flare model, with the single inverted plait back, with a general preference for one or more flounces. The most popular materials are venetians, homespuns, broadcloths, cheviots, and pebble cheviots, of which cheviot is the most prominent. High-colored linings, so much in vogue last season, are not favored, but colors to match as closely as possible the color of the outside material. Blouse fronts are at present well in the foreground, but there is a good deal of uncertainty as to how long they will be in the race.

THE WALKING SKIRTS.

The rainy-day skirt, under its new name, the walking skirt, has dominated the market in the separate skirt business. The regular dress lengths are used, though shorter lengths are also called for. Plaid backs are the favored material, though homespuns and cheviots are also well represented. Rows of stitching, plain and in scolloped lines around the bottom, are used on the most popular models. Adjustable belts with various kinds of buckles are shown. Rainy day suits have also participated in the general popularity of this class of garments.

In the regular skirts, business has been backward, and Fall models have been held back by the unusual demand for walking skirts. Bell flare models are favored with wide sweeps at the bottom. The single inverted plait-back is most favored on everything except high-class novelties, on which the habit-back still holds its own. Plaited gores are shown on some of the finer garments. Bonnaz embroideries on the flounces are favored to the exclusion of appliques.

THE DEMAND FOR CAPES.

The demand for capes has been fair, but not up to previous seasons in volume. The general preference is for longer lengths in all materials. Golf capes have not sold as extensively as last year, but the volume of sales has been considerable. The grades above $7.50 (wholesale price) are the most favored. Velour capes have grown in favor, and are the single exception where larger sales have been recorded. In the cheaper garments, boucle capes have had a fair sale.

FLANNEL WAISTS.

In waists there is a very marked leaning towards flannels, particularly French flannels. Flannel waists have so much

Those Who Don't Sell Kumforts.

There may be here and there a dealer with a mitt trade who has not handled the "Kumfort."

But there cannot be many.

We want to say to those few who don't that they miss something good in the mitt way.

The "Kumfort" is a corking good 50 cents' worth of mitt.

The knitting will not ravel till it is worn out.

The stout muleskin palm will stand any amount of hard wear.

And the oil-dressed sheepskin back keeps out wind and wet.

overshadowed the market as to interfere with the sale of silk waists to some extent, and almost shut out the other materials in the medium and popular grades. The solid colors have the call. Striped effects are shown, but have not been taken up to any extent. The most popular models are blouse fronts with dress sleeve and ripple frills, vertical tuckings—single and in clusters—alone, and in combination with plaits, box plaits, hemstitching, pinking and velvet ribbon are favored. The pastel shades are the most popular. Fancy embroidered effects have been discarded. Embroidered polka dots and neat small figures are selling well. In cheap flannels and sackings the range of prices is from $7.50 to $18 per dozen; cheap French flannels, $16.50 to $24 per dozen; finer French flannels and novelty flannels, $24 per dozen up to $10 each.

Silk dress waists are as popular as ever, as are also the popular grade of black taffeta waists, but the medium grades are less popular owing to the interference of the flannels. Mercerized effects are in fair demand for the cheaper end of the line. Henriettas, broadcloths and cashmeres are in limited demand.

LADIES' NECKWEAR.

There has been a large enough demand for ladies' neckwear to constitute this a neckwear season. Tinsel effects are coming in. One of the most popular styles is the automobile tie, made of corded taffeta silk, with or without tassels, in all shades, plain or with polka dots. Jabot effects with stock collars, with Jube trimming for edgings, are also favored. Pompadour collars (boas as they are sometimes called), made of liberty silk, mulls, Japanese silks and similar fabrics with plisse ends, are prominent. For evening wear, Fichus in black and cream, variously trimmed with lace and side plaited ends have the call.

MILLINERY.

In millinery, it is essentially a feather season. There is a good demand for velvet hats, principally in black, exclusive of which the favored colors are beaver, castor and grey. Buckles are largely used, made of rhinestone, jet and steel. In the earlier orders, ostrich feathers are favored, though there is a more or less decided leaning toward fancy feathers at present. Single Amazon plumes are popular. In fancy feathers, the favored colors are baize, castor, turquoise blue, and silver grey. Tinsel edgings are well thought of. If there is any exception in flowers it is in favor of large roses, about 10 inches in diameter.

MEN'S WEAR.

In men's suits, there is a preference for worsted in stripes and checks, and grey and blue striped flannels. The four-button, round-cut sack coat is favored. The high cut single-breasted vest without collar is selling better than the double-breasted vest. In overcoats, grey meltons and friezes are prominent, with self cuffs, piped with velvet. The popular length is 40 inches. In children's clothing, vestee suits with a new shaped small collar and round cut sack are the most popular.

In men's neckwear, the batwing tie is the most popular, with the butterfly model a close second, in baratheia, peau de soie, and fancy figured silks. The whole range of colors is in demand. Narrow, pointed, reversible four-in-hand ties are also in the race, while in the finer grades imperials are not neglected. The popularity of high band collars has induced the movement in favor of the batwing ties.

There is a great deal of discussion in regard to men's shirt waists for the coming Spring. Many of the prominent shirt houses are preparing lines which include them. The favored materials are madras, silk madras, pique and percale. Stripes prevail, and plaits are very general. Yoke backs, plain and curved, are used. If the shirt waist does not go, it will not be the fault of the shirt makers.

A NEW STORE OPENED.

The opening of the new place of business of J. B. Hill & Co., St. Thomas, Ont., took place on September 26. An immense crowd thronged the store from morning till night, and all were well pleased with the appearance of the new store and its contents. The building has three business floors, each lighted with prism glass, and many new departments have been added. The entrance, large quarter-cut oak doors, is very handsome. The millinery department, in charge of Miss Sutton, was inspected by hundreds of ladies, who expressed themselves as delighted with the stock in this line. Mr. Frank Blood and Miss Muskgrove have charge of the basement, used for china, glass and graniteware, crockery, stationery, etc. The east side of the building, in charge of Messrs. D. Coyne and E. Howey, is devoted to staples, the stock being one in which J. B. Hill & Co. are noted. Mr. Eckert presides over the men's furnishings, and Mr. Cavanah, an expert in dress goods, has charge of that department. A counter, with Miss Stockton in charge, is given over to the latest hat trimmings. The smallware department is situated in the centre of the store. Miss Logg, who has charge of this, has five assistants, and shows a large assortment of hosiery, gloves and other articles. Miss Sutherland superintends the mantle department, which is an exceedingly complete one. "The New Ideal Store," as it is called, certainly deserves its name, and, if kept up to its present standard of excellence in all departments, will earn a still greater one.

H. F. Blatchley has gone to represent the Irving Umbrella Company in the Australian markets.

Perrin Freres & Cie., Montreal, have an exhibit at the Paris Exposition that is attracting a great deal of attention. They have just received word that the judges have awarded them the Grand Prix for the quality of their gloves, and a gold medal for the colorings.

A New Jersey tailor hit upon a novel device to attract attention to his business. He sends out a very well dressed young lady, arm-in-arm with a seedy looking tramp. On the latter's back is a card reading: "She looks better dressed than I, but wait till I come back from Jones' store."

Some English creditors of the estate of the Army & Navy Clothing Store, Toronto, are complaining of having received no dividend or communication from the trustee. Owing to the absconding of E. J. Henderson, the liquidator, the affairs of the estate have been left in a somewhat tangled condition. The Provincial Trusts Company have now the matter before the court, and a decision is being waited.

Mr. Geo. Reedy, managing director of the Crompton Corset Company, Toronto, has been in Ottawa. Mr. Reedy announces a rapid increase in the sale of the firm's different popular lines of corsets, which have secured a strong hold in Ottawa and vicinity. Mr. Reedy formerly conducted an extensive dry goods business in Barrie, Ont., which he disposed of to enter the larger field of operations.

Death of Mr. Joseph Wilson—A Nanaimo Firm Adopts the Cash System—Good Roads for British Columbia—New Warehouse for Vancouver.

Special correspondence of THE DRY GOODS REVIEW.

A CONVENTION has been called for October 27, at Kamloops, by the Inland Board of Trade, to consider the question of "good roads." This is a vital issue with many merchants at interior points.

Among the recent business difficulties are those of the Sandell Shirt Co., Vancouver, which is in liquidation; J. S. Stannard, dry goods, Nanaimo, who has assigned; and Vahey & Kerman, Grand Forks, where stock valued at $16,500 has been offered for sale.

Since August 15, the following men's furnishes in Vancouver have, by agreement, given up trading stamps: Allen & Co., W. G. Cameron, A. Holmes, Geo. R. Jackson, M'Candless Bros., Sea & Gowen, S. Reid & Co., Limited, H. Rutland, B. Williams & Co., W. & J. Wilson.

The British Columbia provincial fair will be held at New Westminster on October 2, 3, 4 and 5. The formal opening will be by His Honor Sir Henri Joly de Lotbiniere, Lieutenant-Governor. The officers of the exhibition include T. J. Trapp, New Westminster, president; Messrs. T. G. Earl, Lytton; D. R. Ker, Victoria, and J. D. Roberts, Vancouver, vice-presidents; G. D. Brymner, New Westminster, treasurer; and W. H. Keary, manager and secretary.

The other day C. E. Stevenson & Co., Nanaimo, received a shipment of ladies' capes and costumes from the east, and found that one of the cases had been newly nailed up on one side, and on opening the box it was discovered that the goods had passed through a scorching fire and were in some places burned to cinders and all totally useless. The side of the box had been burned away and the goods damaged, but, instead of reporting the matter, the railway authorities had put a new side to the box. The goods came via the United States.

Mrs. E. and Miss Russell have arrived from the east to take charge of the new dressmaking department of the Westside, Victoria. Mrs. Russell was formerly in charge of the dressmaking department of Peter Robinson, Oxford street, London.

The northern business has been satisfactorily heavy during September, and the imports at Victoria and Vancouver have been the largest on record. The business with the various mining regions within the Province has also been good.

J. W. Peck & Co., wholesale clothiers and furnishes, of Montreal, Winnipeg and Vancouver, find it necessary to move into larger quarters in Vancouver, owing to expanding business at the Coast. A large new warehouse is to be fitted up for the firm on Cordova street, and when completed will be one of the handsomest on the street. It will be ready for occupation by January 1, 1901.

Mr. W. C. Scott, manager of The G. D. Scott Co., Limited, Nanaimo, has issued a well-worded circular announcing the firm's adherence to the cash system. He says: "We have decided to institute the cash system entirely in our business. On and after Saturday, September 1, all goods leaving our store must be paid for. If the goods are on approval, or if, after examining the purchase, you would prefer to have your money back, you may have it at once by returning the goods. There are many people who are worthy of credit, but we find it impracticable to make 'fish of one and flesh of another.' We sell the best goods that are made anywhere, at as low a price as they can be honestly sold for. Bought for cash, sold for cash; no credit. Just good, hard cash, and a heap of satisfaction all round. The saving on bookkeeping and collecting accounts enables us to sell our goods at a closer margin than is possible under the credit system. While thanking you for past patronage, we hope to be favored with your esteemed orders in the future."

The death of Mr. Joseph Wilson, junior member of the firm of W. & J. Wilson, Victoria, removes a well known and respected man in commercial life at the Coast. Mr. Wilson, who was 60 years of age, joined his brother, Mr. William Wilson, in Victoria in 1864, having been in the service of a large silk concern in London, Eng. The two brothers began in the clothing business on a small scale at first, afterwards expanding to the firm's present large proportions in the building on Government street. Messrs. Wilson did not devote themselves entirely to the clothing business, their profits being invested in city and suburban property, wild lands and mines, all of which helped to build up the large fortune which the brothers controlled. At the present time they are among the largest Provincial taxpayers, owning considerable valuable agricultural land in the Fraser valley, and a large area of coal lands on Queen Charlotte Island. Mr. Joseph Wilson was very popular in social life, and was unmarried. The cause of death was heart disease. Mr. William Wilson, the head of the firm, has just returned from a trip to Europe.

Vancouver, September 21, 1900.

THE TRADE AT KINGSTON.

Mr. R. Waldron has purchased the three-storey store adjoining his present premises, and rumor has it that a handsome building, modern in every respect, is to be the outcome.

Messrs. Crumley Brothers, have opened their new store, and the formal opening was a great success, thousands of people attending. This firm deserve great credit for the large trade they have secured, and their new store is quite an attraction to Princess street, and up-to-date in every respect, having an electric cash railway system extending over two flats, also electric call bells and many other helps.

Mr. Edward T. Steacey, of Messrs. Steacey & Steacey, has just returned from an extended European buying tour. This firm carry fine goods and have a very heavy stock. Their dress goods and silk department would do credit to Montreal or Toronto.

One of the chief promoters of our annual Kingston Fair is Mr. D. E. Starr, of the well-known dry goods firm of Starr & Sutcliffe, who, through his energy and executive ability, contributed in no small measure to the great success of the fair this Autumn.

The dry goods firm of John Laidlaw & Son have secured the building adjoining their present store, and have completely remodelled both buildings, giving them a frontage of 50 feet and 120 feet deep. Five show-windows are now used. The new store has a most attractive front, and the firm report a lively Fall business.

The trade in Kingston is very much worked up over the report that the Kingston Locomotive and Engine Works are to close down. As this is the largest local industry the closing would have a most serious effect on trade, and the dry goods business would feel the effect in a most marked degree, as the skilled mechanics would leave the city, and, as they are nearly all married men, it would mean the removal of 200 families.

Spence & Co. have moved to larger premises and have particularly attractive millinery showrooms, and two flats devoted exclusively to mantles, millinery and ladies' wear.

SPRING HOSIERY

1901

WE are now showing these popular goods and booking orders for future delivery. We would advise the trade to place their orders now to ensure early delivery and avoid the disappointments which are sure to follow orders placed later in the season.

MATTHEWS, TOWERS & CO.

14 St. Helen Street, MONTREAL.

Men's Furnishings.

THE Fall trade is in full swing, and the first part of September was very favorable weather for the sale of a large quantity of Fall and Winter underwear, both medium and heavy weight. The warm weather which followed, was, of course, characterized by a slackness in these sales, but did not cause dealers to bring out any lighter goods, which had been relegated to the back of their stores. Fleece-lined underwear, although in fair demand, is not sought after as much as the natural wool goods.

SOCKS in black and heather color are the principal sellers, colors not being much desired. Heavy cashmeres are going exceptionally well this Fall.

COLORED SHIRTS are still in good demand, and, as we said last month, will continue so through the Fall and early Winter. The popular colors are blue, black and grey stripes. Nothing else is selling so well as these do. The colored shirts now being shown for next Spring's wear are considered to be the finest ever shown. They are mainly in blue and black stripes. All cuffs for colored shirts are made with round corners, the square corner having completely disappeared. White dress shirts are a good article to have in stock at this season of the year.

THE HIGH TURN DOWN COLLAR is still selling better than all others, for both ladies' and men's wear.

IN NECKWEAR, the batwing, which has enjoyed a large sale this summer, is thought by city dealers to be giving way to the string tie, though manufacturers find a large sale for it still. Flowing-end ties are having a large sale. The ends are not made so long or wide for Fall and Winter wear as for Summer. Derby ties show signs of being more worn this Winter than ever before. Dealers say it is to be a fight between flowing-ends and Derbys for the lead. There is little demand for the puff tie. The latest and best selling color in neckwear is dark green. With this background for a red or black and white stripe, flowing-end ties are probably the leading sellers at present. Most of the patterns are in stripes. A very pretty figured tie, however, is shown in both flowing-ends and batwings, with a white diamond spot pattern on a dark green background, which is a favorite with the city trade.

Ties for the Christmas trade are nearly all in this shade of green. The very few light-colored ties showing is noticeable.

GLOVES will be worn in slate and mocho colors mostly. The reindeer glove, lined with squirrel fur, will likely be the popular seller for the Christmas trade. For Fall, kid gloves with silk lining are being worn more than anything else. Good dressers are wearing the suede glove, in a slate color, extensively.

LEATHER GOODS are a legitimate part of the men's furnishing trade, though many do not handle them. Those who do, however, find it a profitable part of the business. Customers often come in for other things, and neat displays of handbags, hat boxes, etc., articles that every good dresser needs, frequently make sales themselves. The old Gladstone grip has almost disappeared and the dress suit case has taken its place. This does not wrinkle the clothes, and is more suitable for neat packing than the Gladstone.

A large Canadian retail house, E. Boisseau & Co., make a very fine display of FULL DRESS FITTINGS, in a case given up altogether to this line. Collars, ties, shirts, etc., are all tastefully arranged, and look much better than if scattered amongst other articles. This is one of the many devices used by this firm to make their store attractive, and their example could be followed by many men's furnishes to advantage.

City men's furnishes this month are doing a good business in PYJAMAS in Ceylons and silks, Rugby padded knickerbockers, smoking jackets, dressing gowns and bathrobes. The smoking jackets are expected to sell particularly well for the Christmas trade.

In regard to carrying a stock of LADIES' COLLARS AND TIES, a prominent men's furnisher in the city says: "We always carry a full line of ladies' collars, especially the high turndown variety, as it is very popular. There is no reason why men's furnishes shouldn't carry these goods. We deal in collars, so why not keep all kinds, men's, women's and children's? As far as ties go, the same batwing and string tie that the men are wearing, are worn by ladies also, and we do a good deal of ladies' trade in them. If there was a tie specially made for ladies we would carry it. I think it is part of the business."

What About Men's Shirt Waists? Men's shirt waists were put on the American market in the latter part of the Summer, but even in the short period of the season suitable to their wear it was found that the innovation showed signs of becoming a popular garment. The hot weather of the past Summer was probably responsible for their manufacture, but many dealers think they have come to stay as long as ladies' shirt waists. As yet, they have not had a fair trial, and whether really good dressers will adopt them or not remains to be seen. They are made something the same as ladies' shirt waists, but without the large sleeves or fancy fronts. The neck is made like that of the ordinary men's negligee shirt, suitable for the attachment of any kind of collar. A wide pleat running down the back is the only difference in this respect from other shirts. It is held around the waist by a band, over which a belt is worn, the blouse having a hang-over effect. How a New York

Man of Fashion Dresses.

Says a fashion authority: "The smart evening shirt is still of simple white linen, without a suspicion of ruffle, embroidery, or design of any kind; it has a high standing collar, and cuffs attached. The cuffs must, of course, be made on the shirt, but that the collar be attached is not at all necessary, even if somewhat more smart. It is no more comfortable or better looking than a properly fitting detachable collar, and it is exceedingly difficult to launder. There have been rumors of three buttonholes in the bosoms of evening shirts, but as yet two is the more usual and correct number. The bosom itself should be broad, and made to fit tightly, so that the edges are close to the body and will not bulge under the waistcoat. The shirt should open only in front, either to the bottom of the bosom or all the way down. Personally, I am much in favor of the latter style, although it is greatly less common. It sets as well, if not better, than the other, and is more easily put on and taken off. Every year the dress shirt with figured or embroidered bosom make its appearance, and is for sale at the fashionable haberdashers, but every year well-dressed men decline to have anything to do with it. Even the shirt with a line or figure of a most unnoticeable kind in white, or of white pique, is not considered good style.

"It seems scarcely probably that there will be any noticeable change for the coming Winter in the long-tailed evening coat. Unfinished or dress worsteds will continue to be the materials most used, of which the first named is a little the smarter. It is somewhat softer and without the fine twill of dress worsted, and will wear equally well, but it is, perhaps, harder to keep free from dust, which clings to the cloth more readily. The coat should be made to fit the figure perfectly, without, however, being at all tight or uncomfortably close; the shoulder should be square and broad, the side lines of the coat being cut sharply in at the waist to give it a slender appearance. These side lines are one of the hardest problems the tailor has to face, for upon them depends, to a great extent, the style of the garment; the set of the sleeves also gives the clever tailor an opportunity to display his skill, for they must not cause the coat to jump up or wrinkle across the back when the arms are raised. If you will observe the actions of the evening coat of an orchestra leader while he is conducting, you will understand more clearly what is meant by this, unless, indeed, the particular leader whose orchestra you are listening to has employed an exceedingly good tailor. The sleeves should set rather close over the cuffs at the bottoms, and should have only a very slight spring, if any. The velvet collar will undoubtedly again make its appearance, and it may even be worn by some smart men, but it has never found favor in this country and has been almost unflinchingly condemned by those who dress best. I may be thought somewhat prejudiced, but, aside from any question of fashion, it seems to me to be neither good form nor good style. The coat with rolled lapels, like those of the dinner jacket, will be little worn, and the notched lapels will be either faced to the edges with silk or faced only to the buttonholes. The latter is the older style, and it has lasted so long that it may almost be said to be a standard. Full facing may be the smarter, but the half facing will nevertheless be worn by many men, and if one's coat is so made, it will not look at all behind the times.

"Trousers will be cut straight and rather full, and they will have braid on the outer seams. This should be straight, not angular or serpentine, and about a quarter of an inch in breadth, although the latter detail depends somewhat upon one's individual fancy or the fancy of one's tailor. It is not at all unusual to see braid a half an inch broad, but I should not advise it, especially for a short man.

"There are no indications of change in the waistcoat, and either a single or a double-breasted cut may be worn. It would, I think, be rather better to have the waistcoat of the same material as the coat, single-breasted. White evening waistcoats will be as much worn as ever; in fact, at a dinner or a dance the dark waistcoat is decidedly the exception. The double-breasted style will have the Cairo buttoning and points, which became fashionable during last Winter. The gilt button will also, it seems, be again worn. White evening waistcoats bound with white braid will not, I think, become at all popular, and those bound with black are, of course, entirely out of the question.

"One must, as is perhaps needless to say, wear only a white tie with a long-tailed coat, but it is still a bit too early to predict with certainty exactly what the smartest shape will be, whether it will have square or pointed ends, or be tied in a very tight or a rather loose and broad knot. Many men still wear with full evening dress a high-banded turn-down collar, but the use is neither good form nor correct. The turnover has grown to be associated with lounging clothes—that is to say, outing dress, sacque suits and the dinner coat—and the combination of informal apparel with strictly formal dress is never good form. A high-standing or slightly poke-pointed collar is the proper one with the long-tailed coat, and with the frock or even the black morning coat it is much to be preferred.

"The morning coat, by the way, will, it seems, be as much in vogue this Autumn as during the past season, and with very little change in cut or style. The main features are a rather well-defined waist line and skirts that fall well around to the front. The coat may be of black or dark grey, and in the latter event may be worn with trousers of the same material. Full walking suits of brown and grey mixtures will also be rather smart. Scotch tweeds and cachemire or other materials, such as dark grey vicuna or angola, may be used. The walking coat should not fall so low in the skirts as the morning coat, and the sides should be as long as the back, the cloth hanging well around in front. Like the riding coat, which it somewhat resembles, the coat has a waist seam and rather large flap pockets set directly under it and well back. It may have two breast-pockets with flaps, or only one on the left-hand side. The buttons should be of bone. With this suit a derby is the proper hat, and a dark four-in-hand tie, tan gloves and buttoned calf boots look well.

We desire to thank our customers for loyalty and patronage that has enabled us to accomplish the most successful business year in our history. MEN'S FURNISHINGS—Continued.

"Flannel suits continue to be worn, and at some of the tailors I have seen a good many pieces of Winter flannel for sack suits in dark blues and mixtures of green and red. Browns and dark greys will also be fashionable. For the cool days of late Autumn brown and red is an excellent combination of colors and especially becoming to men of dark complexion. The days of the wearing, not merely the carrying, of gloves are approaching, and it seems that heavy tan will again be the smartest. The suede glove has almost entirely disappeared. The button should be of bone or gilt, and should actually button through a buttonhole, not fasten by a patent clasp."

The English Trade in Men's Goods.

It is noteworthy, says a London letter, that despite the popularity of the stand-up turned down or double collar, exclusive dressers wear a straight stand up collar with evening dress. Others use a collar that barely meets at the front, and with the points slightly rolled out.

Three different sorts of double collars are especially popular. The first meets in front nearly all the way down, and rounds off towards the bottom, because it has been specially cut for holding a bow in its place. As in most double collars of the day, the longer tab passes over the shorter one, and so holds the collar together neatly in front. As an extra precaution against the collar gaping open at the top, the bow should be tied pretty firmly just above the collar stud. To wear any other than a bow tie with this particular kind of collar is to push the bottoms of the front parts outward and to force the top against the neck.

The second collar will hold either a bow or a sailor's knot, and is built for a short neck. It makes a capital sporting collar, no matter what kind of a neck the wearer may have, and is worn a good deal on the river and the links. The third has a sloped opening all the way down, and is cut solely for wearing with a narrow sailor's knot, tied high in front, the knot being more than half way up. Out of the confusing and ever-increasing multitude of new styles of double collars, these three are the best, both as regards fashion and comfort.

A word about the new single-breasted frock coat, now coming into favor, may interest you. It is often made in medium grey shetland or in black; the lapels, which have silk to the edges, are in one piece with the coat, and the sleeves, like the front of the coat, have three buttons.

A white waistcoat can be worn with the new coat. This waistcoat is cut with two upper pockets, to facilitate the present fad of wearing the watchchain across the front.

Fashionable men, I notice, are wearing dark trousers for afternoon wear during the early Autumn. They are not as narrow as they appear; the crease gives a narrow look.

A Prince and Fashion.

Curiously enough, says Minister's Gazette, the late Prince Alfred, almost unconsciously, during his younger years, was, to a certain extent, an arbiter of fashion among great men in London. New ideas were often put down to the Prince of Wales which really emanated from his younger brother. For instance, the dark blue dress coat with brass buttons and velvet collar, which had a fleeting fashion for a few seasons; the braided morning coat; the now so popular "upstairs and downstairs" collar; the wearing of a silver bangle on the left wrist—all these and many more fads were originally started by the Duke of Edinburgh, although the Prince almost invariably got the credit. When he went to Russia to court his future wife, all the young officers of the Guards copied his coats, his trousers and his ties, and ever since that time two or three of the leading London tailors have done a large and regular business with the Garde du Corps at St. Petersburg.

A London Costume.

We reproduce from Minister's London Gazette of Fashion a style of Autumn overcoat now in vogue. It shows the general appearance of the English man of fashion at present.

"As represented, the coat is cut to reach a little above the knee joint.

"There is a back closing seam finished at the bottom with a slit and 'tommy.'

"The front of the coat is finished in the fly-front form. There are five pockets placed in the usual positions, the lower ones being protected by flaps arranged to go in or out. These coats are now being frequently finished with braided edges.

"The turns are lightened in appearance by the introduction of silk or satin facings.

"Needless to say that in good-class houses these garments are invariably lined throughout with silk.

"The material is usually a rather fine make of cheviot or black vicuna."

From Minister's.

Notes of the Trade.

Hughes & Howie have reopened the Two C's store in Brantford.

Thornton & Douglas, Guelph, have made many improvements in their store.

As mentioned before, smoking jackets and dressing gowns appear to be in unusually good demand for the Christmas trade. Caulfeild, Henderson & Burns are showing a fine range of these, the patterns being principally in large checks. Notwithstanding the popularity of flowing ends and Derby ties, this firm are having a heavy demand for batwing bow and batwing lombard ties. Caulfeild, Henderson & Burns are one of the first Canadian firms to take up the new men's shirt waist, which is referred to in another paragraph. They are about to make up samples of these, and feel sure of a brisk trade in them.

According to manufacturers, duck suits have had their day for a time, and flannels will be worn instead. The demand for flannel suitings has been steadily growing and indications are that they will be worn almost altogether next Summer.

Tooke's samples for Spring of 1901 surpass all efforts to show nobby goods at popular prices; the variety of patterns is not the only feature, special cloths for the different prices have had much consideration and certainly wonderful effect.

A Firm's Greeting.

The Williams, Greene & Rome Co., of Berlin, Limited, issued a trade circular of a high-class style. It was engraved on fine notepaper and enclosed like an invitation in an envelope. It read as follows: "We desire to thank our customers for loyalty and patronage that has enabled us to accomplish the most successful business year in our history. The enormous increase in our volume was not easily met, but new machinery and increased facilities recently added to our plant have placed us in a position to meet all demands and maintain our motto 'Always at the top.'"

"We also take this opportunity to thank you for liberality and courtesy to our travelers. They will start the first week in October with our full line of samples for Spring, 1901. We bespeak early orders to insure early and prompt delivery."

A USEFUL CIRCULAR.

The illustrated circular which E. & H. Tidswell, London, England, are sending out to the trade this Fall is a valuable one. It is fully illustrated with the latest fabrics in laces, silks, veilings, etc., which make up their stock. Shirt waists and blouses are shown in many designs and materials. The cuts are excellent, every detail of the designs being brought out fully, as well as the effect of the different materials. Some of the blouses are very fine, in chiffon, paisley silk and lace effects. Besides the large variety in collars, cuffs, ties, belts, etc., there is shown a range of aprons which are very handsome. Comments on their different articles, taken from well-known papers and ladies' journals, are given. Each cut is numbered so as to render it easier to order goods, and the price for everything is stated.

A FINE BUSINESS RECORD.

The millinery opening of Thomas Stone & Son, Chatham, Ont., was made one of the most attractive and best attended in the Province. This house has a long-standing and enviable reputation, being one of the oldest in the county of Kent.

The founder of the firm, the late Thomas Stone, went to Chatham in 1847, and, after clerking in a general store for five years, began in the business himself. In 1898 he took in as partner his son, Spencer, and the firm name was changed to Thomas Stone & Son. Thomas Stone's business career of 48 years is a record one in the Province of Ontario. He never was in financial difficulties of any kind, nor has he ever asked an extension of time, and always paid 100 cents on the dollar. He was esteemed very highly by all the wholesale men with whom he did business.

Montreal Wholesale Trade.

THE W. R. BROCK CO., LIMITED, MONTREAL.

A BIG business is being done this Fall in children's legging drawers, or overalls, with or without feet, at $4.50, $7.50, and $9 per dozen. A large assortment of Japanese handkerchiefs, plain white and fancy embroidered, and plain hemstitched, from 50c. per dozen upwards, has just been received direct from Japan; also, a very fine line of initialed handkerchiefs, embroidered corners, which are offered at $2.40 and $4.50 per dozen.

In all-wool serges, some special values are shown from 20c. upwards. There is quite a heavy demand this season for women's and children's flannelette underwear, and also ribbed underwear, in which they have some special values. A number of very good bargains may be had in cashmere and fancy wool gloves for both sexes. For silk trimming, the lambswool and swansdown trimmings are much sought for, and a large range has been placed in stock to meet the demand.

One of the leading sellers in the men's furnishing line is the "New Ways" muffler. The new samples of neckwear for Spring, 1901, are being shown, and are a well-selected assortment. Among the goods suitable for the Christmas trade may be mentioned fancy applique and tamboured Swiss sets of pillow shams, bureau and washstand covers, Renaissance doilies and covers, all of which are shown in different designs and patterns.

Advertising matter, in the shape of almanacs and circulars, are given to buyers, to be given in turn to their customers.

M. MARKUS, MONTREAL.

It would be well for the Canadian trade if more merchants would patronize such establishments as that of Mr. Markus, St. Sacramento street, Montreal, for Mr. Markus is one of those persons who carry nothing but high-class, reliable goods. The best trade is the best paying trade in the long run, and, if the merchant buys from the right place, he can secure the goods to cater to this trade. Mr. Markus has returned from a tour of the European markets, going as far as Constantinople, and now he is showing some of the richest samples for Spring that have ever charmed the eyes of the Canadian trade. For instance, he has some novelties in gold and silk-embroidered fancy goods, including doilies, five o'clock tea covers, piano covers, etc. He claims he has a line of fashionable lace collarettes that cannot be beaten. But his line of expensive Turkish goods for table and other use are particularly exquisite, and no merchant who has fastidious customers to please should fail to see the samples. His silks, satins, plushes and velveteens can always be depended upon.

Great regret is felt in the trade at the death in Toronto of Mr. Adam Oliver Bucham, the Canadian representative of the great firm of Arthur & Co., Glasgow. The immediate cause of death was heart failure. Mr. Bucham had been in poor health since last June, but was able to attend to business until recently. He was born in Jedburgh, Scotland, 61 years ago, and came to Canada when he was 18 years old, settling in Guelph, where he conducted a general merchandise business until 12 years ago, when he removed to Toronto.

CARPETS, CURTAINS AND WALL PAPERS.

A BUYER'S EXPERIENCE IN ENGLAND.

A BUYER for a large dry goods house, who has just returned from the Old Country, says that the carpet trade there was never better than this season. The advance of 1d. per yard on tapestry which was announced in a former issue of THE DRY GOODS REVIEW, has not yet extended to brussels carpets. Several meetings of the manufacturers, however, have been held with the object of raising the price, and it is expected that a meeting will be held before the travelers go out for next season, when the price will be advanced 1d. per yard. The cause of the delay is that the axminster manufacturers have, so far, refused to agree to an advance.

The gentleman referred to also informed THE DRY GOODS REVIEW of an advance of 25 per cent. in lace curtains. "Though it has been possible," he added, "to pick up a great deal of manufactured stock at old prices, and a number of Canadian buyers have done this.

"The oilcloth and linoleum trade is very brisk, too, and advances may be looked for in this line."

ENGLISH BUSINESS WITH CANADA INCREASES.

Writing to The New York Carpet Trade Review, an American visitor to Kidderminster, says: "Not a yard of ingrain carpet is now made in Kidderminster, brussels, wiltons, and axminsters and various weaves of rugs being the product. Mr. Reginald Brinton, of Brinton's, Limited, told me that even the few customers left to them in the United States wanted to cut down the limit of three pieces of a pattern to one piece. The report all around was the cessation of effort to sell any carpets in the United States, and a buyer from here would be looked upon as a curiosity. On the other hand there is renewed effort for Canadian business, the trade there being thoroughly canvassed from Kidderminster. The 10 per cent. differential in the Canadian tariff in favor of British goods has assisted in this activity."

ANOTHER UNITED STATES WALL PAPER COMBINE?

The dissolution of the National Wall Paper Co. of the United States is said to be in progress, but rumor has it that some of the strongest manufacturers in the trust will reorganize about January 1, next, and that at least five of the biggest factories are in the new arrangement.

NO LOWER CARPET PRICES IN THE UNITED STATES.

Our trade exchanges in the United States say that September is over and no changes in carpet prices have been made. That date was looked to by many retail buyers as the time when prices would show a change for the lower. No change has put in an appearance, however, and the trade now has the word of some of the best manufacturers that no price reduction will be installed this season.

The jobbing trade has already taken up the Spring matting season with results fully up to expectations. Prices are practically on last year's basis. The Chinese difficulties have not changed prices to any appreciable extent.

The point which seems to be troubling a good many of the American matting importers in connection with the troubles in China, says The American Carpet-Upholstery Journal, is the fact that the price of cheap mattings is advancing dangerously near to the 10-cent limit. Up to this point the duty is only 3 cents per square yard. Matting which is valued at over 10 cents a square yard must pay a duty of 7 cents a square yard and 25 per cent. ad valorem. An advance of a fraction of a cent. over 10 cents per square yard in the price of matting adds about 50 per cent. to its cost. For instance, matting which is valued at 10 cents, with the duty added, costs 13 cents per yard; whereas, if its value is 10½ cents, the cost, landed, amounts to a little over 20 cents.

Since the advance in cotton goods, all of the leading table oilcloth buyers in the market have looked for another advance, several makers having indicated that an additional advance will be made.

AN IMPORTANT CHANGE.

Three good traveling salesmen have just resigned from The Menzie, Turner Co., Limited, and gone over to Messrs. Geo. H. Hees, Son & Co. Mr. E. W. Turner was one of the promoters and vice-president of the Menzie, Turner Co., Limited, Mr. T. F. Corey is a brother of H. Corey, the retiring president of that company, and Mr. E. H. Owen, who was one of the owners of the Art Goods Manufacturing Co., and later with the Menzie, Turner Co., Limited. Mr. Turner will travel and represent Messrs. Geo. H. Hees, Son & Co. on the road in the Northwest and British Columbia, Mr. Corey in Western Ontario, and Mr. Owen in the Lower Provinces. These gentlemen are very popular and will influence a lot of business for Messrs. Hees, Son & Co.

MR. DUNCAN'S NEW STORE IN BRANTFORD.

Mr. Charles Duncan, of Brantford, has transformed the old Masonic Hall into one of the finest carpet and furniture stores in this country. The increasing trade of this successful firm now demands a floor space of 11,000 square feet, and the establishment has been fitted up in a manner that will interest every retailer.

There is a fine new front, comprising a large plate glass window in three sections, with a heavy border of prisms on the upper part, and fenced on the front with massive and handsome hand-rails. The window lends itself with peculiar readiness to window decorations. The entrance from the front door over a mosaic pavement lets the visitor into a spacious and charmingly decorated salon, 27 by 132 feet, devoted entirely to the office and curtain and carpet departments. The wall decorations are in a delicate blue. A score or more of incandescent lights shed their rays from the ceiling, while the large windows in the front and rear of the building let in a flood of light, making the premises unusually bright and cheerful. This commodious room is finished in oak, with a polished maple hardwood floor and dainty oak fittings. A very broad and easily graded staircase, built and finished in oak, rises from the central side of the room to the furniture department upstairs. Great ranges of carpet are massed along the main floor, and every accommodation has been arranged for its display and inspection.

The ground floor of the building, which has a floor capacity of 400 square yards, is devoted to the linoleum department,

ENGLISH CAPITAL AT SHERBROOKE.

W. S. Dresser, the managing-director of the Dominion Brussels Carpet Co., of Sherbrooke, Que., has recently returned from London, Eng., where he has been floating a company to take over the above concern. The new company have a subscribed capital of about $250,000, one-fourth of which is held in Sherbrooke. The buildings and sites of two factories adjoining their premises have been acquired and will be used in connection with the new business. New machinery is about to be added for the making of Brussels carpets and rugs of various kinds, besides which there will be a plant for the manufacture of tapestry and velvet carpets, which means that they will be the pioneers in this line in Canada. They have acquired a large water-power, and, as soon as the negotiations now going on for new machinery are completed, they will proceed with the extension of the works. The new company will be known as "The Dominion Carpet Co., Limited."

AN ENGLISH VIEW OF THE PARIS EXPOSITION.

Mr. Adam, of the firm of Tomkinson & Adam, carpet manufacturers, Kidderminster, England, has been giving his view of the carpets displayed at Paris. Asked for some explanation why so many of the English manufacturers abstained from sending to the Exposition, Mr. Adam said the candid fact was that manufacturers had come to the conclusion that financially it did not pay to specially prepare carpets for exhibition purposes. He spoke favorably of the samples sent by H. & M. Southwell, of Bridgnorth, one or two carpets being of excellent quality both in texture and design, and alluded to some exhibits sent by Messrs. Bright, of Rochdale. "I noticed a distinct departure on the part of the French in decorative art—at least as far as furniture is concerned. The French have hitherto worked on traditional lines in the reproduction of Louis XIII. and XIV. and the Empire styles. Of late they seem to have been very much influenced by the English school, especially when you examine the inlaid woodwork. There is a distinct English influence, and the French have adopted English ideas in their decoration. You might describe it as a French version of the arts and crafts style. In some of the textile exhibits you are conscious of a Japanese influence; and the Japs themselves have some lovely exhibits in silks and embroideries."

ENGLISH DEMAND FOR WILTONS.

There is plenty of life in the carpet trade at Kidderminster, and the volume of business is more than the average for between seasons. The popularity of wiltons is marked, and the inquiries made for next season show that this class of carpet is still gaining in favor. The yarn trade is quiet, with a few inquiries for contracts. Spinners are fairly employed, and lower prices do not tempt them; indeed, there is an under-current of strength in the yarn and wool trades, and it is plain that many spinners are not anxious sellers of carpet yarn at today's quotations.

ABILITY RECOGNIZED.

MR. CHARLES E. BERNARD, the artistic window-dresser at Scroggie's, Montreal, has been elected vice-president for the Province of Quebec of the National Association of Window Dressers, which met lately in Buffalo. Anyone who has seen Mr. Bernard's windows will not dispute him the honor he has won.

Mr. Bernard is a Russian, about 30 years of age, who has lived most of his life outside his native land. He has an eye for the beautiful, and he was early attracted by the possibility of making window dressing an art. The rudiments of the profession he learned in Berlin, Germany, but he has acquired most of his celebrity in America. For some time he was engaged at Macey's in New York, and later at Shoneman Bros. in Philadelphia. For almost five years he has been dressing windows at Scroggie's, St. Catherine street, Montreal. In this store he has ample opportunity to display his powers, for the windows are large and well lighted, and good fittings are ready to hand. There are eighteen large windows, but Mr. Bernard does very careful work and does not have time to dress this number, for all his designs are well thought out and carefully executed.

Mr. Bernard's greatest triumph was achieved last year, when he won the gold medal offered annually by the National Association of Window Dressers for the best trim during the year. The trim that took the prize was an Egyptian design, displaying handkerchiefs. In the window figured the Cleopatra needle, and an Egyptian minx. The background was an Egyptian wall. Hieroglyphics, a product of Mr. Bernard's own handiwork, were scattered about profusely to entrance the public eyes.

Mr. Bernard has a high idea of his profession, and his idealistic turn of mind has brought him great success. He believes that one-half the selling power of a good window display has not yet been revealed to the Canadian public, and asserts that half the window-dressers, who call themselves such, are not window-dressers at all, for to have the qualifications of a trimmer one must make a thorough study of the art. Till one realizes that he should not expect to make window dressing his profession.

Window dressing is the only form of advertisement which prevails at Scroggie's, and his trade has increased many times during the past five years. Mr. Bernard also makes a specialty of card writing.

JOHN MACDONALD & CO.

A SHIPMENT of 6-4 Scotch tweed suitings, the latest London novelties, which has just been received, are expected to be rapid sellers this season. They are also showing a special line of 3-4 Canadian tweeds, and one in 6-4 at less than manufacturers' prices. Black, blue, grey and mixed llamas and venetian cloths are their best selling overcoatings, and they are doing well with a range of black and blue Moscow beavers. For women's wear, they show the latest fabrics in homespun, plain venetian cloths, broadcloths and golf cloths.

In dress goods, one of the best selling lines now is French flannels in polka dots, stripes, checks and brocade. All shades of grey homespun are moving rapidly.

A large business has been done during the past season in the ready-made department, particularly in skirts, blouses and wrappers. Taffeta silks in colors and white and black, satins in white, cream and colors, and black velvet ribbons, especially the narrow widths, are lines that they are doing very well on.

Some very nice things are seen for holiday trade in fancy goods. Prices are moderate, and among novelties as to design or style may be noted clocks, china vases, well decorated; animal toys, photograph books, and several new things in cheap frames, besides a full range of staple fancy articles. For men's furnishers there is a job line in men's white handkerchiefs, various styles, and both in men's and boys' woollen underwear, fleece-lined, the range is extensive. So as to woollen and cashmere socks. This department are expecting the arrival from their European buyer of a job line of seconds in black cashmere hose to retail at 20c.

The stock of carpets is exceptionally large. On account of having anticipated the recent advance in prices, they are able to give a variety of the best selling designs at lower prices than it will be possible to quote in the Spring for the same goods. A fine line of 8-4 and 16-4 linoleums, bought previous to the last two advances, is also being sold much lower than it would be possible for Spring delivery. A shipment has just been received of the three newest designs in inlaid linoleums. They are also showing a well assorted stock of table covers, curtains, curtain nets, white and colored quilts, mats and rugs.

BOULTER & STEWART.

Messrs. Boulter & Stewart are making a special line of silk, satin and French flannel waists for the immediate and Christmas trade, comprising some 50 styles with all the latest in sleeves and collars. The bishop sleeve is showing and is very popular in flannel goods in the New York markets. Mr. Boulter has just returned from European markets where he has secured many new styles and all the latest in cloths for Spring, 1901.

Tailor-made suits have now become one of the most staple ready-to-wear garments and the demand is steadily increasing. This is largely owing to the perfect fitting garments now produced. The prices these garments can be sold at bring them within the reach of all classes, and they will be the leading feature of your mantle department this coming season. Messrs. Boulter & Stewart are showing a very large range, comprising all the latest Paris and New York designs—goods to retail from $6 to $35. The travelers are now in their respective territories and will call upon you shortly.

The trade mark is now becoming an important feature in the selling of ready-to-wear garments, and the demand for the "Crown" brand costumes and blouse waists manufactured by Boulter & Stewart indicates wonderful success, the repeat orders, in some cases, are larger than stock orders. The "Crown" brand is a guarantee for correct style and fit.

THE WYLD-DARLING CO., LIMITED.

The Wyld-Darling Co., Limited, have lately been making some special preparations for increasing trade, and show a complete and well-assorted stock of all lines of dry goods. They are finding large sales for the high turn-down ladies' collar for Fall and Winter wear. In the hosiery department some extra stock has been placed, and they are handling some special lines of ribbed and plain goods in cashmere and wool at 25 to 50c. per pair, which are meeting with a heavy demand. Their range of ladies' vests comprises many of the best values shown to the retail trade at 25, 50 and 75c. each.

Various styles and prices are shown in their stock of Ringwood gloves, cashmere gloves, infantees, bootees, wool mitts and fancy knitted clouds, toques, etc. Another large range is their flannelette embroideries, in pink, blue, cream, grey and scarlet. Visitors should ask to see the special line in these goods which are made to retail at 5c. a yard.

In yarns of all kinds they are now doing a large business. The best selling Saxony yarns are the Eclipse, Royal, Imperial, Crown and Andalusian. These are offered in black, white and colors. They also show a line of three and four-ply worsted fingerings in three grades. In Canadian yarns, the "Star" brand is their leading seller. This is in all colors, and guaranteed pure Canadian wool.

The latest novelties in fancy goods are in celluloid hairpins, hair braids, side combs, back combs, belt buckles and fancy hose supporters.

K. ISHIKAWA & CO.

The Fall season, which is the principal one for business in Japanese silks and silk goods, has this year opened up very satisfactorily. K. Ishikawa & Co. have finished filling their import orders, and the sorting business has already begun. The demand for 20-inch Japanese silks is now very heavy in almost all colors. Besides the ordinary colors this firm have brought in some attractive shades in grey, fawn, reseda, green, brown and myrtle. Their stock of initialed handkerchiefs is now complete. They range from $1.50 to $8.50 per dozen. A recent shipment of fancy blouse silks, in new plaids and stripes, has just arrived. This lot includes some high-class novelties in figured stripes which are very handsome. In silk mufflers they are doing a large business. Their stock consists of both fancy and plain mufflers and includes a large assortment of colors and designs. They are experiencing a good demand, too, for fancy handkerchiefs, ladies' embroidered handkerchiefs, and plaid ties for Winter wear, the last mentioned being a well-selected assortment and very pretty.

Their samples for Spring, 1901, are now ready. They have added to their Japanese silks an assortment of Lyons dyed habutai silk, 20, 23, 27 and 36 inches. Ishikawa & Co. are noticing that the Canadian trade are becoming much more particular about the shades and finish of silk, and their French dyed and finished goods are particularly sought for. They are showing a beautiful line of fancy blouse silks, in crepe de chine, lace effect silk and corded goods, in stripes, plaids and checks. Their ladies' ties should be noticed also. These are made in soft habutai silk, silk crepe and liberty silks, with drawn work and silk fringes at the ends. Polka dots in all the latest colors are also shown. Children's and youth's windsor ties are displayed in great variety.

Orders for matting for Spring delivery are now booked and Spring samples are in the travelers' hands. The outlook in this line for next season is decidedly bright.

TAILORS AND THE CASH SYSTEM.

MERCHANT TAILORS throughout the country are feeling in much better shape, owing to the excellent Spring trade which they had, and also to the good prospects for Fall, now opening up.

It has always been felt that there was room in the country both for the ready-to-wear clothing trade and the custom trade, and there was no reason why one should infringe to any great extent on the other. One difficulty which stood in the way of the merchant tailor doing as large a business as before was the prevalence of the credit system, which made returns slow and forced prices up. Many customers of moderate means were forced to take ready-made clothing when their preference was for a suit made to order, simply because they found the custom work too expensive.

There is no doubt these large apparent profits of the merchant tailor were due to the system of giving credit. Having to wait for his money, he naturally placed a good price on the clothes.

Tailors have often discussed ways and means of retaining their trade. One proposition which has been under consideration, was to have a buyer go to England for a number of tailors, who would pool the expenses of the trip. The objection to this is, that each merchant knows the peculiar taste of his own locality, and can do much better by selecting his own goods than by having even the most intelligent buyer select for him.

Probably the best remedy lies in adopting the cash system. We have heard of more than one tailor who has gone in for cash and was still able to retain his custom. It requires, doubtless, some tact and care to avoid offending good customers, but it can be done, say those who have tried it. In one case a tailor in rather a large town turned his old business into a cash system and did well. The best way to work it is for the tailors in one town to get together, drop trade jealousy and agree upon a cash system.

One city tailor informs THE DRY GOODS REVIEW that his customers know that cash means 30 days, and he quotes them a 30 day price, and, if they do not care to settle in 30 days, a certain sum is added to the original price. He often says in an off-hand manner: "You will be paying this within the month, so I will just quote you the cash price; of course, the ordinary price would be so and so." By putting the cash and credit terms on his billheads he finds that he loses no customers. This is, of course, not the cash system, but, where it seems impossible to get customers to pay cash promptly, it is a good half-way house on the way towards strict cash and one price.

THE QUALITY OF DOMESTIC WOOLENS.

There is usually a prejudice against Canadian woollen fabrics by city tailors. The majority love to order from London, but it is certain that few can distinguish native goods from imported. The late mayor of New York, Mr. Strong, once took to his tailor a nice checked lining, which he had had presented to him by one of the mills which he represented. The tailor told Mr. Strong that the goods were imported, as he had bought the identical goods himself from an importer, and showed him the goods on the shelf. It turned out that the parcel of tweeds and linings which the merchant tailor had bought as imported goods were all made at mills within 100 miles of New York.

It seems strange that woollen wholesale houses in Canada still adhere to the old fashioned notion of keeping separate the imported and Canadian woollen departments. Such a thing as a divided woollen department is not known in England, France, or Germany. There, a customer goes in and selects goods that suit him without knowing where they were made. It would be a great help to Canadian mills if there were no distinction made between imported and domestic goods in Canadian stores, and the profits on domestic goods would certainly be larger than they are at present.

FEATURES OF ENGLISH TAILORING TRADE.

The use of flannel for Summer suits will last at least another season. One feature of present trade is mentioned by Minister's Gazette of Fashion: "Grey flannels, plain or with fine white silk stripes, have been greatly in demand for the latter purpose, so much so that the woollen merchants' stock has practically run out. One of the effects of the rise in woollens shows clearly in these flannels; the trade being loth to pay more than the accustomed 2s. 9d., or 3s. at the utmost. A distinct lowering of quality had to be resorted to in order to enable merchants to maintain it, with the result that most of the flannel suits one sees about now show a very limp appearance—have, in fact, lost that 'hang' which is the criterion of quality.

"The loose weaving which results from a diminished quantity of yarn put into most makes of goods at present, so as to maintain previous prices, causes such goods to be liable to go on shrinking to an extent which is already eliciting a good many complaints, both from tailors and the public. The latter naturally hold the tailor responsible, and the tailor, in his turn, blames the woollen merchant. The merchant cannot do more than have his goods shrunk once, when they come in; and no London house sends out unshrunk goods, although second-rate provincial houses shirk this expense. London shrinking, too, is recognized to be the best in the world, and, if it does not take all the 'shrink' out, it must be put down precisely to this enforced cheapening of goods which has been forced upon the trade just now by causes beyond their control.

"To the tailor, who has to bear the brunt of the battle in this matter, this is but cold comfort, but there is really no alternative except to stick to a good article and pay the price for it. The one thing that can and should be done under these circumstances is to cut all loosely-woven goods, such as home-spuns, serges, cheviots, tweeds and worsteds, rather longer than measure, say one inch in the leg and half an inch in the sleeve, and flannels, which are subjected to washing, even a good deal more. Another point to consider is that it is the inherent nature of wool to go on shrinking in wear, so that what cannot be cured must be endured."

NEW WOOLLEN FIRM.

Mr. Hutchison, lately of the firm of Hutchison, Nisbet & Auld, has formed a new woollen house in Toronto, as R. B. Hutchison & Co. Mr. Hutchison is well known to the trade as having occupied a prominent place in the woollen trade of the country for the past 25 years. The firm occupy premises in the new Carlaw building, No. 30 Wellington street west, and will confine themselves to a wholesale jobbing woollen business, dealing chiefly, though not exclusively, in Canadian fabrics.

CLOTHING FOR THE SOLDIERS.

The Sanford Manufacturing Company have shipped away an order for 11,000 overcoats for the Indian troops now in China. The order was received through the India office on August 20, and it was stipulated that the last consignment must reach Vancouver on September 27, in order to be loaded on the C.P.R. boat leaving that port on October 9. The company had no material on hand, and soon the telegraph wires were kept humming with orders to the mills throughout Canada for Canadian frieze and linings. The company turned out 500 overcoats a day. It took 220 cases for the order. The cases are addressed to the transport officer at Wei Hai-Wei, via Shanghai. Of the order, 5,928 coats are ordered to be marked: "Warm clothing, for the third and fourth brigades." The Sanford Company have yet in hand the War Office order for 30,000 suits—tunics and trousers—for the South-African warriors. Of these, 20,000 suits have been shipped away.

CHANGE OF FIRM NAME.

Messrs. E. J. Dignum and J. Montypenny, of Toronto, who have been associated together as manufacturers' agents and importers of dry goods, woollens and tailors' trimmings for a number of years, under the firm name of E. J. Dignum and Co., have decided to change their name, and will meet their customers after this date under the style of Dignum & Montypenny. There has been no change in the personnel of the firm, the same members continuing together under the new name.

TRADE NOTES.

The Rogers Clothing Co., of Rat Portage, have purchased the bankrupt stock formerly owned by Max Rothchild.

Reid & O'Hara, clothiers, St. Catharines, have dissolved, and R. O. Reid will continue alone.

The creditors of J. E. Fleury, tailor, Toronto, have decided to wind up the estate. Liabilities total $4,500, with assets, consisting chiefly of stock and fixtures, valued at $3,110.10.

R. J. S. Grimshaw has started business as merchant tailor in Ottawa.

Campbell & Vincent, merchant tailors, of Sarnia, are now installed in their handsomely fitted-up and very convenient premises in the King Block. They are well known in and around Sarnia, and will doubtless be successful in securing a satisfactory share of the public patronage.

W. Farrer, for 28 years with the Sanford Co., for 22 of which he managed Oak Hall, is going into the clothing business for himself at Hamilton.

A. J. Graham, clothier, Lindsay, is enlarging and improving his place of business owing to expanding trade.

"Beaverhall" is the name of J. P. Chiswell's new clothing store in Stratford. It is, as he claims, an ideal clothing store. The two big mirrored windows are one of the advantages of the store, and Mr. Chiswell shows great skill in utilizing them to the best advantage. They are very handsomely dressed and show the various lines which are handled. Ready-made clothing, ordered clothing and mens' furnishings sum up the stock. A decided advantage of the store will be the facilities for showing goods, and the goods carried are such as may be shown in any light. The display tables are of solid oak, piano finish. From nickel-plated stands hang the men's furnishings.

A PHRASE EXPLAINED.

"Predestined Under Right Impulse To Achieve Success" is the effective way in which a Montreal manufacturer of a certain brand of comforters and quilts expresses the motto he has adopted. It will be noted that the first letters of the words put together consecutively form the name "Puritas," which was originally adopted by the manufacturer as a Latinization of the word "Purity," and referred to the filling of the quilt (white carded batting). As to the meaning of the phrase, especially the words "right impulse," no doubt it means advertising, pure and simple, so that it could be expressed "The Puritas Comforter is predestined to achieve success if rightly advertised," a statement no live merchant would dispute, since the benefits of advertising are so freely recognized. The motto is, therefore, an apt and effective one.

The well-known Canadian wool manufacturers, the Paton Manufacturing Company, of Sherbrooke, Que., have been awarded the gold medal for their exhibit of tweeds, etc., at the Paris Exposition.

Lindsay merchants are encouraged by the action of their local chief of police in insisting on a transient dealer in furs paying his license. The man had left town without paying, but the chief followed him to Toronto and insisted on the payment of the legal amount with costs.

Mr. A. F. Banfield, Winnipeg, Man., has purchased the Ryan block in that city and is making a large extension before placing in his stock of carpets and housefurnishings. When completed, the building will be 180 feet deep, fronting on two streets, five storeys on one street and four on the other. The new store will be fitted up in the most modern style, with a stock second to no store in Canada.

INCREASE IN CANADIAN COTTONS—STRENGTH OF THE ENGLISH MARKET—DEPRESSION IN WOOL—CARPETS AND OILCLOTHS GO HIGHER—NEW LISTS IN MAGOG AND COLONIAL CO'S. PRINTS—A GLOOMY REPORT FROM GERMANY.

Montreal and Toronto, Oct. 1, 1900.

WHAT we said in our last issue regarding the probability of an advance in colored cottons in this market, when the fear of American competition subsided, is already proving correct. On October 1, the Canadian Colored Cotton Co., which dropped their prices a few weeks ago on certain lines, are advancing a number of those lines to nearly the old figures. In denims, cotton dress goods, apron gingham, shirtings, Oxford shirtings and some lines of tickings the prices are almost on the old basis, while some lines have been withdrawn altogether for the Spring season. Cottonades, flannelettes, cotton blankets and some lines of tickings have not yet been advanced, although there is an expectation that they will be.

In grey and white cottons, ducks, cantons, bags, carpet warps, bleached and grey sheetings and pillow cottons the Dominion Cotton Co. announced an advance of about 1c. per yard on September 12.

The Montreal Cotton Co. advanced their prices on all lines, including silesias, jeans, cambrics, foulards, pocketings and cheesecloth, from 5 to 10 per cent. on Sept. 25.

The Merchants advanced prices on cheese and butter cloth $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. The same company have also advanced bleached cottons, cantons, grey cottons, ducks and other lines, about 5 per cent.

The strength, therefore, of the Canadian cotton market seems pretty well assured, and the reports that come from England and New York go to sustain the belief that we shall not see a break for a time.

THE COTTON SITUATION IN ENGLAND.

The situation in the English cotton market resembles the state of things during the American Civil War, for now, as then, many Lancashire mills have closed down owing to want of raw material. The new crop will come into the market at higher prices, so that high prices for made fabrics seem almost certain. The situation is a serious one, for the Lancashire operatives, who number about 500,000 and who earn a weekly wage of about £500,000, may lose several weeks' work. The present arrangement is for the mills to shut down from October 1 to October 15, but will supplies of cotton be available two weeks hence to allow of work resuming? That is a question which few authorities in Manchester seem able to answer, so that the bulk speculators in the raw cotton market have things all their own way. As to the effect on fabrics of all this panic in raw material, the latest reports are that buyers are holding off as long as possible to avoid paying the increased prices.

COTTON THREAD ADVANCES.

The British trade were notified September 17 of an advanced list for cotton threads by the Central Agency, and, as it applies to Canada, it may be well to note the change in English quotations. The higher prices charged for the various brands are as follows :

Knitting Cotton—3, 4, or 6 threads, 2-ounce balls, green, red, salmon, and pink tie, all numbers, 3d. per lb. additional. 3, 4, or 6 threads, $\frac{1}{2}$ -ounce skeins, etc., green, red, salmon, and pink tie, all numbers, 2s. 6d. per 10 lb. additional. Superior knitting cotton, in 1-lb. boxes, 3d. per lb., all numbers, additional.

Mending Cotton—2 threads, $\frac{1}{4}$ -ounce skeins, $\frac{1}{4}$ -lb. packets, red and pink tie, 2s. 6d. per 10 lb. additional. 3 threads, $\frac{1}{8}$ and $\frac{1}{4}$ -ounce skeins and small cards, 3d. per gross additional, and large cards, 6d. per gross additional.

Tambour Ball Cotton—3d. per packet additional in all numbers.

Tambour Sewing Cotton—2s. 6d. per 10 lb. additional in all numbers.

Second Quality 2 and 3-Cord Soft and Glace—

Yards.	Yards.	Yards.	Yards.

5,000 yards, rd. per reel or cop; 10,000 yards, 2d. per reel or cop. The prices of all lengths and qualities not referred to above remain unchanged.

It is, therefore, the cheaper qualities, and not the finer grades, that have been advanced. The Drapers' Record attributes the advance to the scarcity of American cotton and a certain amount of "cornering."

THE DEPRESSION IN WOOL.

The colonial wool sales begin in London on October 9, so that before the next issue of THE REVIEW is in the hands of its readers cabled reports will reach buyers on this side of the ocean. It may be that prices of wool may go lower, but, as far as fabrics are concerned, it is believed that they have gone as low as they will. The cancellation of the September sales in London, in an attempt to bolster up a falling market, is not supposed to have helped the wool situation appreciably.

The amount of wool to be offered at the sales is 366,000 bales. The Drapers' Record's Bradford report says: "The business doing is still considerably below an average, as far as pure merino sorts are concerned. Prices of both merino wool and tops are quite unchanged, and there are signs that the consumption of merino wool is increasing here, but the crisis in the wool trade, which has recently been so disastrously evident at all the chief continental centres, has so shaken the confidence of buyers of all classes of goods made from merino wool that only orders to supply absolute wants are being placed."

"The standard of values in fine wool dress goods has also been considerably depressed by the extremely low prices which French manufacturers have recently been taking in the British market, these prices being, no doubt, the result of forced realizations by French spinners who had been caught by the disastrous results of speculations in 'futures.'

"There is no doubt, however, that the commercial atmosphere of the continental wool market is gradually clearing." After the October sales there will be none until January 15, 1901.

The same report goes on to deal with the English demand for dress fabrics. For the present Autumn trade, sales of costume cloths of the fancy frieze class are good, but only of the better qualities. For next Spring everything points to bright plain materials being again fashionable, and the pastel shades promise to appear in many fabrics for Spring. Orders are beginning to be placed, and no novelty has yet made its appearance to displace bright mohair dress goods. Friezes,

A gloomy report comes from Germany regarding the state of the textile industries. Many factories are stopping work. In the Gera district but 5,807 looms out of a total of 11,829 are busy, and weavers' wages are only $1.94 to $2.34 per week. Shares of industrial companies are beginning to decline.

ENGLISH FLANNELETTES ADVANCED.

A leading Manchester firm writes as follows to a Canadian customer under date of September 13: "Owing to the exceptional state of the cotton market we are compelled to advance all flannellettes, viz., woollettes, plain dyes and printed, ½d. per yard in each case. Owing also to the scarcity of suitable cotton, we are compelled to practically close our mills until new crop cotton arrives. We beg, therefore, to ask your forbearance in the execution of orders we now have on hand. All contracts will be executed, but delay is, under the circumstances, unavoidable, at the same time we beg to assure you that we are making every effort to minimize delay."

CARPETS AND OILCLOTHS.

As noted elsewhere, the prices of English carpets and of English and American oilcloths have advanced, and wholesale buyers predict a further advance in Canadian oilcloths during the next fortnight, although, as we go to press (October 1), the list issued April 28 last was still in force.

PRICES OF WHALEBONE.

A sale of 12,000 pounds of prime Arctic whalebone has just been made by Captain Wm. Lewis, of New Bedford, Massachusetts, for export. This is the first large sale for some time. The price received was not far from $3 per pound, as it is known that small sales have recently been made at $2.75 per pound, and that holders are asking for prime Arctic as high as $3.25.

THE TRADE IN NECKWEAR.

A leading authority on men's and women's neckwear said to THE REVIEW, Oct. 1: "In men's neckties, flowing ends still hold first place, but the batwing bow is a close second. In color, it is undoubtedly blue and bluish purple, strongly marked with white, either in stripes or figures. Red is also good and will improve in demand as the season advances. Green is showing symptoms of a revival and may creep into popular demand as time advances. Stripes are as popular as ever, and for the novelty high-class trade large figures are greatly in demand.

Men's Made-up Mufflers—The demand is now entirely for the reversible muffler, the old style with a quilted lining being obsolete. The change in style has come from the consumer, who now demands a reversible wrap on the ground of economy and appearance, the price being very little more considering the advantage of being able to wear it four ways, each way appearing different from the other, and giving four times the amount of wear received from the old quilted lined article.

Ladies' Christmas Scarves—The coming Christmas promises an active trade in ladies' ties. The leading styles will be edged ruffs and chiffon windsors with fancy ends, to go twice around the neck, giving the soft stock idea. Stocks are also being shown in the new shapes in New York made from panne velvet, and some lovely things for the holiday trade in exquisite hand painting on the delicate shades in panne on the stock idea.

The Outlook in the Retail Dress Goods Trade

The Fabrics that are Selling and the Qualities in Demand—What Some Prominent Merchants say.

THE following opinions from leading members of the retail trade will prove interesting and instructive to DRY GOODS REVIEW readers generally :

A. Bristol & Son,
Picton, Ont. "Sale of dress goods, so far, this Autumn has been best in suitings and the materials most favored have been cheviots, camel's hair mixtures, and plain or small designs in tweeds with some demand for coverts in good qualities. The most salable prices in such goods are from 75c. to $1.50 per yard, but later in season there is certain to be a good sale for goods at 50c. In black goods we find less demand for crepons, or any kind of fancy goods and we believe that by the time next Spring's trade is to be done the greater portion of black goods wanted will be plain or nearly plain styles.

"As to the style of colored goods likely to be wanted for next Spring we do not think that fancy styles in woollen dress goods will be salable, as muslins and silks take their places, and plain goods are more suitable for tailor-made suits."

Peter McSweeney Company, Limited,
Moncton, N.B. "As to sales of dress fabrics for Fall and Winter, notwithstanding the mild and somewhat wet weather, the demand has been quite brisk and we certainly anticipate a very brisk season's business. Fancy tweed effects and plain homespuns in heavy weights are in great demand, and as regards qualities we find that each season our patrons are looking for a better class of goods. We think that the popularity of plain goods will hold good next season."

S. M. Sovereign,
Simcoe, Ont. "Our sales of dress fabrics are much earlier than last season. Canadian homespuns and heavy friezes in oxford greys are largely in demand. The demand is for much better goods. In better goods we are selling broadcloths, cheviots, crepons, cords, etc., largely in blacks of heavier makes, and mostly plain goods. We think plain materials will be just as good next season as this, especially in black."

White & May,
St. Marys, Ont. "Fall dress goods are selling freely, especially in homespuns. Smooth-finished suitings also sell well for skirts, with silk or French flannel for blouses. There is a good demand for better class of goods, the lower prices being slower than former seasons. Re style for Spring—think some fancy goods will likely be in demand, as coat and skirt have had a big run. The lady who had a plain cloth or homespun last Spring will likely be looking for something new in fancy weaves for her next Spring costume."

Geddes Bros.,
Sarnia, Ont. "Dress goods business here is active, considering the early date. Styles most in demand for suits are: Homespuns, camel's hair, cheviots, venetians and broadcloths.

"Plaid backs with plain reverse for rainy-day or walking skirts, are very active. Cheap dress goods are wisely considered 'dear at any price by our trade. Better times mean better goods, especially better dress goods.'

"Speaking for next season is risky. We venture the opinion that plain-faced materials of the satin finished order will be prime favorites, with cheviots and lightweight venetians a good second. Fancies will not be revived in 1901."

Carson & McKee,
Listowel, Ont. "Fall dress goods are moving quite freely, but we find the better goods are moving more freely than the low-priced fabrics, and the demand is greater for plain stuffs than fancy effects. We look for a continued demand for plain goods for the coming Spring."

Cameron & McTavish,
St. Stephen, N.B. "As to style of dress goods worn and sales for Autumn, we can hardly pass an opinion as yet, as the season is rather early, but, so far, the demand seems to be for homespun of camels' hair effects, all mixed goods; no plaids, checks or fancies. Plain cloths are moving rather slowly; low price goods with us are not salable. For next season, do not think fancies will be very strong."

Woods & Taylor,
Galt, Ont. "Trade is improving with the advent of cooler weather, but we are still open for an increase. In dress goods we find the demand steady for plain fabrics, cheviots, camel's hair, friezes being the popular and decidedly far better qualities. Cheap, or rather common, goods do not take at all. For Spring, so far as we have formed an opinion, plain goods will be to the front. Fancies nil."

The

Millinery Season

Mantles, Trimmings and Laces.

THE RETAIL MILLINERY TRADE.

THE wholesale Fall millinery openings being over, and each retailer having selected for the season's trade the shapes, shades and materials considered the most beautiful and best suited to each locality, it is now the turn of the retail stores to throw open their doors for the public inspection of their stock and give their customers the best choice possible. As we go to press the announcements of millinery openings all over the country reach us, though a number of places have not yet been heard from. In many cases the openings have been better attended and the business done has been larger than any previous year, owing, no doubt, not only to the prevailing good times but to the fact that this year's styles are exceedingly beautiful and varied. The "military" craze must also partly account for the sale of many hats, over and above the regular lines.

More and more every year the general dry goods stores, instead of confining their Spring and Fall openings altogether to the millinery portion of their stock, are making special displays of their other goods as well. Laidlaw & Ketcheson, of Belleville, for instance, made a splendid display of their dress goods and trimmings, and attracted a host of admiring visitors, although they had no millinery opening at all. Geo. Ritchie & Co. and D. V. Sinclair & Co., two other Belleville firms, also arranged their dress goods, mantles, smallwares, etc., in a tasteful manner, besides their millinery display. George Calbeck, Woodstock, in advertising his millinery opening, also advertised his stock of mantles, etc., as an "opening" as well.

Quite a number of stores had orchestras, either all day long or part of the day. These entertained the ladies with marches, waltzes, etc., besides several instrumental solos. In one of the large stores in Victoria, B.C., a novel and no doubt highly appreciated innovation was the lunch counter. Six tables were neatly arranged at one side of the millinery department, which was a large one, where ladies who were unable from the crush to get home for lunch need not miss their opportunity to buy what they wanted. At one end of the department on a raised platform the manager stood, where he could obtain a complete view of every counter, and also could see anyone who was not being attended to, thus preventing a good deal of confusion.

The decorations in all the stores were of a very high character. It must have cost a great deal of thought and labor, as well as some expense, to decorate some of the stores, though in each case the reports indicate that the care bestowed upon this part of the preparations for the opening was not spent in vain. A number of places trimmed the arch of the doors with different materials. In John E. Boles', Ingersoll, just inside the door was an arch of snowy whiteness, twined around with smilax, and capped on each side with large palms. The first thing to be seen on entering the store of John White & Co., Woodstock, was a beautiful display of laces, ribbons and handkerchiefs, placed close to the doors, where it attracted a great deal of attention. Besides other decorations, J. Mickleborough, St. Thomas, made a fine showing of furs and mantles in addition to their large millinery display. Another St. Thomas firm, Northway & Anderson, paid attention to the fur department as well as to the millinery. G. B. Ryan & Co., Guelph, made their store beautiful by draping the walls in taffeta silk and panne velvet in burnt orange, castor and old rose shades. A table near the entrance of the room was devoted altogether to children's wear. Many stores kept special counters for hats for children in the millinery departments. The showroom in the "White Front," J. A. Duggan's store, Stratford, was decorated with mirrors and drapings. One large main mirror was hung with gauzy drapery and decorated with chrysanthemums. The interior of Thomas Stone & Son's store, St. Thomas, was decorated with Moorish fretwork in net and gold on one side and with blankets and staples on the other, the centre being made up of furs and smallwares. The millinery department of a Woodstock place had the walls gracefully covered with green cheesecloth, edged on the top with white. Mantles and jackets were shown in this store along with the millinery.

A CHAT ON STYLES AND MATERIALS.

The firm of S. F. McKinnon & Co., Limited, were called upon by a representative of THE DRY GOODS REVIEW to get their views on the millinery, mantle and general trade situation, when one of the firm said: "If you remember when we last met, early in the month, we stated that we had been meeting with the trade leaders of the Dominion during our millinery opening season, and from our viewpoint believed that a good millinery and mantle season was before us. And to-day our ideas are unchanged. It is certain that a good beginning has been made in millinery, jackets, costumes and skirts. But don't let us forget that to-day, September 27, as we talk about goods for Fall and Winter wear the weather is far from calling for such goods. But all that is required is a little sharp weather which we may expect soon. Then you will see a bounce upwards in trade in all departments, as there is certainly a sound, healthy business ring from all parts of the country. But it is human nature to want a little forcing, either by cold or heat—even if the purse is full—before it is opened for the purchases necessary for the approaching season."

"Looking back over the month of September, ready-to-wear hats have been in great favor, more so than for any previous season, dress shapes having had to take a second place up to this date, and even now the ready-to wear goods have a good grip on popular taste and favor. But we believe that dress shapes and made hats will show up better in October, and further believe that we voice the feelings of the millinery trade when we express the hope that they may.

"In the manufacture of high-class millinery, velvets will be largely employed. Some say that panne effects are in greatest favor. Our experience is that, although panne velvets have been and are likely to be in fair demand, plain silk velvets bid fair to surpass them, and are likely to be in big demand. Taffeta silk and plain ribbons are being much used and growing in favor as the season advances. Black satins and velvet are also high up on the favored list.

"Such goods as we have mentioned go a long way towards making up stylish millinery, but adornments of different kinds are required before such hats as disturb the sleep can be produced. Of these, leading features are large birds, grey gulls, sea pigeons, white doves, pheasant breasts, grebe breasts, gull breasts, bird of paradise plumes, ostrich tips and buckles.

"As we have already said, we believe that it is going to be a big millinery season, and, in these days of sudden decided changes, heavy stocks are not carried, so that a large assorting trade has yet to be done. And that is what we are now looking after, and, with our resident European buyer at the other end of the cable, the trade can depend upon our stock to meet their requirements as the season advances. You ask if we have any information to impart to the cloak world. Well, by the time your valuable paper has been sent out, McKinnon-made jackets will be speaking for themselves, having found distributing centres in almost every city, town and village in the Dominion, and, even now, every mail brings repeat orders, showing that on their merits they have found a fame that is wide and still spreading. We were speaking about jackets, costumes and skirts for next Spring. For some weeks we have been giving much time and study to the selecting of materials and perfecting of styles for Spring, 1901, and you may add that, by October 15, we will be out with a range of McKinnon-made jackets, costumes and skirts, such as it has not previously been our pleasure to show, and feel confident they will merit and win favor with the trade."

THE D. McCALL CO.

There is a heavy demand at present for taffeta silks and satins and in velveteens in all the staple shades. Black velvet and satin ribbon, and velvets with cotton backs are still going well, being used for trimming dresses and for ties. In colors, velvet and satin ribbon is selling best in cardinal, castor, navy, grey and myrtle. The outlook for the sorting season appears to be entirely on plain goods, particularly in velvets, which will, no doubt, run through the season.

The consignments being received twice a week from the European markets show mostly large quill effects, fancy mounts and birds, for feather trimming. The latter are chiefly in black and greys. There is also a good demand for large gulls and gull wings for ready-to-wear hats, which make a very effective trimming. Steel buckles in 4 to 6-inch lengths continue popular. They are obliged to keep up their stock in black tips, demi-plumes and flats on account of the ready sale of these goods.

Ready-to-wear hats are selling better than ever before, polka dot trimming being the most popular. The wide-leaf effect has been called for principally, though the slight cold weather has brought an increased demand for smaller fedoras, which will sell even better later in the season. Turbans are also being brought forward by the cold weather, mostly in castors and pearl greys, though navies are going well also. The stitched turban is the most popular. A new hat on the market is a patent felt turban, made with reeds sewn around in a circle, so that it can be crushed in the hand but resume its proper shape. It is a very desirable hat for tourists, and will likely soon take a leading place. It is made in shades of brown, and is called the "Flamant."

Plain felting is being greatly used now in making up toques and for small effects, in fine French furs and wools.

AN INSIGHT INTO THE NEW STYLES.

The John D. Ivey Co., Limited, again have every department replete with materials and millinery requisites necessary for the manufacture of Winter millinery. The shapes, though different from those shown at the general opening, are on the lines established for this season. The flat toques still rest on a head band, which gives the height necessary to a becoming hat, while the outward appearance is flat. The picture, or large hats, have decidedly large crown, the brims of which roll a la Gainsborough, or have multipile brims, but, in every case, the brims are bent flat to the hair at the back, giving a very graceful droop.

The majority of the large hats have the brims raised on a crescent band placed nearer the front than in former seasons. Besides making a more becoming hat, it encourages the artist to design pretty underfacings for the brim. Turban and turban toques on the newer shapes are much in vogue. Many of them are shown with a dome crown, or medium low Beefeater crown, and the walking hat with the softly draped brim is very popular. The materials employed in the construction of the fine hats shown by this firm are very dainty and elegant. Ostrich velvet is the newest of velvets, its lightness in weight, brilliance in finish, and pliability in using account for its immense sale. Next in order are the miroir velvets, panne velvets, panne satins, and the delicate crimped tissue, known as fleur de velour, or plisse velour. In addition to these plain colored goods, there is the endless variety of embroidered velvets, satins, felts, laces, and chenille, which combine so effectively with the plain colored fabrics. One of the most chic combinations is plain velvet of the darkest shade and felt draped for the crown of the lightest shade of the same color. Embroidered felts in castor color, draped with chestnut brown velvet and mink fur, make an elegant creation.

Gold braid thread and spangles are freely used, while sequin and jet are as popular as ever. Furs are much in evidence, chinchilla, mink and sable being the favorites, and, instead of entire crowns of furs (as last season), a band of fur is intertwined with the drapery of velvet for brim trimming. Almost invariably where fur is used, there is the introduction of real lace, either renaissance, Battenburg or Cluny, this latter being the newest revival of the old-fashioned laces. Ribbons, though not used in large quantities, are still a necessity; in many instances they are the only thing to give a smart finish to a pretty hat, and velvet ribbons are simply indispensable, particularly in black.

In "untrimmed felt hats," the satin finished are the most popular. Perhaps the newest effects are felt crown and camel's hair brim. In ready-to-wear hats, "Camel's hair" goods are the vogue, though plain and satin finish are having splendid sales at present.

TRADE IN MANITOBA AND THE NORTHWEST.

General Report on the State of Trade and Returns From Crops in the West—
Our Special Correspondent's Personal Investigations.

WINNIPEG, October 20, 1900.

YOUR correspondent left Winnipeg on Wednesday, October 10, and returned Friday, October 19. The fine weather began with Sunday, October 7, and three days of crisp wind and bright sunshine had dried the grain, and stook threshing and stacking were going rapidly forward all over the country between Winnipeg and Brandon. Men getting on the train at the different stations showed samples of grain surprisingly good, considering the long wet spell through which it had passed.

STATE OF THE CROPS.

At Brandon, Wednesday afternoon was devoted to a visit to the Experimental Farm and surroundings. Mr. S. A. Bedford, the superintendent, who keeps in close touch with the farming of the entire district, reported that all crops were yielding more per acre and the sample was better than expected. In some few instances the farmers had made the mistake of attempting stacking where the grain was not thoroughly dry and in such cases the loss would be heavy. The majority, however, had waited patiently for the fine weather, and found that, though the outside of stooks was much discolored, the inside was in very good condition and had really been wonderfully preserved. This was amply verified by what your correspondent saw at threshing machines in operation on the farm where stook threshing was then in progress.

Thursday morning was spent in the city of Brandon, calling on the trade. Brandon received a full descriptive write-up in the pages of this journal some two years ago, and since that time there have not been many changes in the personnel of the business community. Only one new firm name was noted, that of Hunt & Nash—Mr. Hunt having formerly been in business alone.

REPRESENTATIVE MERCHANTS SPEAK.

Wilson & Rankin are doing business at the old stand, but increased facilities for handling the stock have been introduced. The Fall millinery opening was in full swing, and the handsome showrooms presented a charming appearance. By the way, this house are finding the fur-trimmed hats especially popular.

Asked as to business, Mr. Rankin said that business up to September 1 had been the best in the history of the firm. The wet weather after that had the effect of reducing it considerably, and trade, at the moment, was quiet, owing to the fact that farmers were threshing, but everything pointed to a fairly prosperous Fall trade, which, however, was delayed about four weeks. That is, the trade we usually do in October will be done in November this year. Collections will be slow, and no doubt there will be cases where accounts will have to be carried over, but the general tone of business is healthy, and though this is not a banner year for Manitoba, it is by no means a disastrous one.

Mr. Shewan, of Nation & Shewan, practically made the same statement, except that, in the case of this firm, their business is practically a cash one, and they are even more hopeful for the Fall trade.

Mr. Ross, of Fraser & Co., endorsed the sentiments of his neighbors, and in addition said that the scare as to a short crop coming early in the season the stocks of clothing and furs were not so heavy as usual.

Smith & Burton and T. A. Murray, representative grocery houses, gave testimony to the same effect, excepting that, owing to the class of goods carried, they had not felt the depression during September to the same extent.

Brandon has the neatest, most convenient and up-to-date lunch-room in the west. The building was erected for and owned by Bertrand & Co.

The Brandon creamery has had a most successful season. Up to October 10 they had manufactured and sold 126,000 lb. It is the intention to run all Winter with the exception of January, when they will shut down in order to overhaul their building and double the capacity.

HARDWARE.

Brown & Mitchell and Johnson & Co., general dealers in shelf and heavy hardware and stoves, reported business quiet. There had not been the amount of building in either city or country that had been anticipated in the earlier portion of the season. Still, on the whole, the outlook for Fall trade was fair.

In passing, it might be noted that among the new buildings of note erected in Brandon this season is the new Baptist College now approaching completion. It occupies a fine site on the western outskirts of the city, and, in order to give the required campus, the city council have closed two streets for two blocks. A further concession is the extending of sewer connection at the expense of the city to meet the requirements of the college. The college is a fine brick and stone structure, three storeys high, standing in the centre of a 15-acre campus. From its upper windows the city, the Government Asylum, the Indian Industrial School, the Dominion Experimental Farm, and miles and miles of open rolling prairie can be seen. It is an ideal situation for a college and makes a handsome addition to Brandon's fine public buildings.

INDIAN HEAD.

Between Brandon and Indian Head, a distance of 178 miles, 35 threshing gangs were counted at work and scores of teams and men engaged in stacking. As the nights at this time were beautifully moonlight most of the gangs of threshers worked all night.

Reached Indian Head at 9 30 p.m. and went out to the Government Experimental Farm which is a fine block of 700 acres of arable land, half a mile from the town of Indian Head. The morning of October 12 was spent on this farm. It is perhaps the finest illustration in the West of what can be done with open prairie country. Eleven years ago the first sod was turned on the prairie which was without so much as a scrub bush. Now there are 10 miles of avenues of trees and hedges on the farm, many of the trees large enough to arch over a wide roadway. The Experimental Farm is a good index of the state of the crops in this district, and Mr. McKay, like Mr. Bedford, is thoroughly posted on the state of the grain crops for the whole district. The extreme dryness of the early part of the season necessitated the resowing of a large proportion of the oats and barley, and in some instances these crops did not mature before the first frost caught them. On the other hand, the bulk of the second sowing showed an excellent quality and a good yield. Only a little over a third of the threshing had been done up to this date, but threshers were then busy in all directions. From the cupola of the barn on the Experimental Farm the country for a radius of over 20 miles could be overlooked, and in all directions the smoke of threshers showed in the clear air. The yield of wheat was nearly double what had been looked for and the sample very fair as to both size and color. The small amount of damage done by rain was very surprising. It should be remembered, however, that the rainfall in Assiniboia was by no means as heavy as it had been in Manitoba.

INDIAN HEAD MERCHANTS SPEAK.

The town of Indian Head is pleasantly situated in the centre of an excellent farming district, and contains a number of substantial brick buildings and is growing steadily. A handsome six-roomed school is approaching completion, and a number of other buildings have been erected this year.

Brooks & Co. have one of the largest departmental stores, and carry full lines of general dry goods, clothing, boots and shoes, millinery, housefurnishings, groceries, crockery, etc. Mr. Brooks, the head of the firm, has been in business in the West for many years, and understands the situation thoroughly.

He reported business fair and prospects encouraging for good Fall trade. As elsewhere, trade had been delayed, owing to unfavorable weather. All reports from customers, however, indicated larger yield and better sample than expected. Collections had been slow, and he did not look for much improvement until about November 1.

Mr. McKay, the head of the firm of McKay & Brooks, hardware, stoves and sewing machines, reported business in their line quiet, but expected an improvement as soon as the wheat was on the market. He had been through the country considerably, and felt sure there would be rather more than two-thirds of an average crop. The country was all right.

One or two other houses were called on, but the proprietors were in some instances attending sittings of court, and in others taking advantage of the quiet time in business, occasioned by the threshing, to secure a few days' shooting.

REGINA.

Regina, the capital of the Northwest Territories, is a progressive little town, as far as business is concerned, but a more unprepossessing situation it would be difficult to imagine. The site chosen is a bed of something closely resembling gumbo, and report hath it that, when it rains, the mud is worse than the justly-celebrated Winnipeg article. Your correspondent felt truly thankful that it had been fine and dry for a week prior to this visit.

Regina has some fine business houses, and readers of this journal will remember last year a cut of the Glasgow House, Regina, appearing. This departmental store is owned by R. H. Williams & Sons. The house is one of the oldest in Regina and carry a full stock of dry goods, clothing, boots and shoes, housefurnishings and groceries, all admirably arranged and displayed.

The firm report the country all right. Business was delayed, of course, but even in September trade had been very fair, and they considered the outlook for Fall trade good. Collections had been very slow, but were improving slowly. The farmers were many of them in better shape than formerly to stand a poor crop, and all threshing returns showed the crop much better than expected.

LEADING MEN INTERVIEWED.

E. McArthur & Co. claim to have 5,000 feet of floor space, and their premises are well filled with dry goods, clothing, housefurnishings, boots and shoes, groceries and flour and feed. In the last named department considerable jobbing is done. The dry goods department is presided over by Mr. Steene, who was at one time in business in Winnipeg, and the grocery and feed by Mr. J. Kenzie. This house report a satisfactory business and are evidently laying out for a large Fall trade.

John Dobbin is another large general or departmental store carrying a fine stock. This house has been in business in the West for years and their report that the country is all right, although trade for the nonce is quiet, carries much weight.

The Regina Trading Co., Mr. Young manager, make the proud boast that they are the only absolutely complete departmental store west of Winnipeg. This house carry general dry goods, clothing, boots and shoes, furs, millinery, carpets and housefurnishings generally, groceries, crockery, hardware, and a complete drug store. This is one of the newer business houses in Regina, and have found it necessary to double their floor space in the last 12 months. The manager reports the September turnover as 40 per cent. better than that of last year.

Hugh Armour is a house devoted entirely to groceries, of

HARDWARE.

Smith & Ferguson are wholesale and retail hardware merchants and dealers in agricultural implements. This firm act as agents for the McCormick Harvester Co., and Mr. Smith, senior partner, spends much of his time traveling through the country. Your correspondent was fortunate enough to find Mr. Smith in town. He reported the general outlook for trade very good. He had visited many of the threshings, and in every case had found the yield larger and the quality better than anticipated. Although generally considered an off year for implements, the sale of reapers had exceeded that of last year.

In regard to the general hardware business, it had been good, though not so large as the early opening of the season had led them to hope. Still, trade had been very satisfactory, and they found yearly an increasing sale of furnaces, particularly to farmers.

After calling upon the trade generally, a visit was paid to the Government Buildings, and your correspondent had a pleasant chat with Mr. Peterson, Deputy Minister of Agriculture. Mr. Peterson is extensively interested in farming operations, and expressed the utmost confidence in the country. His land lies within the irrigation belt of the Alberta District, and should dry seasons succeed this present wet one he will be in a position to defy them. From the Government Buildings we drove to the barracks of the N.W.M.P., and back to the Dominion Government creamery, where Mr. Ferguson showed his cold storage filled with thousands of pounds of choice butter in neat boxes, each box enclosed in a jute sack. The temperature of this room is not allowed to go over 34 degrees.

The system of Government-managed creameries has been of immense benefit to the Northwest Territories, and the cash paid for cream makes the farmers who send to the creamery sure of a steady income no matter what may be the state of the crops.

Your correspondent has to acknowledge much kindly courtesy on the part of Mr. J. W. Mitchell, Government Superintendent of Creameries for the District of Assiniboia, who spent the entire day in the capacity of cicerone.

(To be Continued.)

CHANGE IN AN ALMONTE FIRM.

The stock of the firm of Paterson & Thom, general merchants, Almonte, who lately dissolved partnership, has been purchased by Mr. Edward Duffy, who has taken possession. Mr. Thom will continue to assist Mr. Duffy for a time, while, Mr. Paterson, it is understood, intends going to the Southern States.

THE AUER GASOLINE LAMP.

The general use of incandescent gas and electric lighting has been brought about by the constant demand for increased and cheaper illumination, and consequently the inconvenient and in places of any size the dangerous oil lamp has been driven out of use. The smaller towns and country places, however, still continue to use this old system from force of circumstance. But The Auer Incandescent Light Manufacturing Co., Limited, Montreal, have lately placed a gasoline lamp on the market which, by reason of its strong light, extreme convenience and fine appearance, bids fair to make lighting even more brilliant and economical for out-of-town places than it is in the cities.

The Auer Gasoline Lamp is a nobby affair that gives 100 candle-power for each burner at half the cost of oil, acetylene or incandescent electric light. It is claimed to be the only lamp giving 100 candle-power for 50c. per month, used three hours a day, and this reckoned on a high cost of gasoline.

The strength of the light may be better imagined when it is remembered that the ordinary incandescent electric light is 16 candle-power, and the usual oil lamp is even less. It is convenient because it is the only lamp that does not have to be taken down to fill, the reservoir being removable. It is also self-cleaning.

The idea of a lamp burning gasoline is liable to frighten some people, but the absence of any attendant danger is proven by the approval it has secured of The Canadian Fire Underwriters' Association. The best of material and workmanship are employed, and the makers will give satisfaction or refund the money. It is made in four styles, one to set on the table ($7.50), one a bracket lamp ($7), one to hang from the ceiling ($8), and another with a double burner ($11).

The accompanying illustration shows the mechanism of the generator and the progress of the gasoline from the reservoir to the burner tip. After leaving the stop valve on the fixture arm, the gasoline passes into tube E., packed with sand to act as a filter, held in position by gauge cups M, then into casting A, through channel J, into vaporizing chamber H, where the gasoline is vaporized by heat supplied from subflame burning at S, a feature of the lamp. The gas or vapor now leaves chamber H and passes through channel K to channel L, where it passes through needle hole in nipple P into tube B. Here it is mixed with air to secure a blue heating flame at gauge G. The size of the flame can be regulated by the needle valve.

Altogether it is a complete and ingenious arrangement that ought to come into use both in the home and place of business, particularly where a lamp must be used.

James Coristine & Co., Limited, Montreal, are hustling for business and are getting it. Fifteen travelers, covering the road from Harbor Grace to Victoria, are sending in substantial orders.

PREPARATIONS FOR CHRISTMAS TRADE.

As it is now but a few weeks till Christmas the wise retailer will soon lay his plans to secure a share of the increase in business general at this season. To do this the store should be made in every way as attractive as possible. The merchant who has not yet installed a modern showcase is at such a disadvantage in this endeavor that it is not surprising that John Phillips & Co., Limited, Detroit, Mich., have found such an excellent demand for their "Silent Salesman" in Canada. This showcase has been secured by many dry goods houses in Canada, the most recent buyers being Playfair, Preston & Co., Midland, Ont.; R. S. Ford, Petrolea, Ont.; J. F. Hardison, Sydney, C.B., and L. A. Bayley, Sherbrooke, Que. Merchants using an up-to-date showcase like this should never allow it to lose its value by filling it with a poor display of ordinary goods, but should make it an attractive feature in the store by arranging in it goods which, because of their beauty or reasonableness, are sought for by shoppers. By thus properly making use of it, a showcase can be made to draw customers and to sell goods. And the Christmas season is the time to make the best use of such attractions.

THEIR REPUTATION THEIR GUARANTEE.

Frankenthal Bros., manufacturers of muslin underwear and "Geisha" waists, New York, make their guarantee of quality the reputation that they have made for themselves in their 34 years' experience as manufacturers by making reliable garments, of excellent make, attractive style and perfect fit. The fact that their goods have in the past been of the class that sells well and satisfies buyers has given them such a firm hold on the trade that their reputation makes it a comparatively easy matter for them to make sales. The demand for their "Geisha" waists continues so great that the firm are constantly adding to their force of workers and gladly employ all the skilled operators they can secure. This firm are offering special advantages in muslin underwear just now, as they bought their raw materials before the recent advances.

EXQUISITE ALL-OVERS.

For December 1 delivery, Brophy, Cains & Co. are showing some exquisite all-over embroideries, in the new open work Schiffli make, so much favored now. These are put up in 9 and 4½ yard lengths, to retail at from 60c. to $4 per yard and are exceedingly choice.

The recent heavy advance in Chinese straw plaits caught many dealers napping. James Coristine & Co., Limited, Montreal, report having placed heavy advance orders some months ago, and guarantee deliveries at regular prices, regardless of the advance.

The H. B. Claflin Co., of New York, have exceptional facilities for the manufacture of pillow cases and bed sheets, which they are placing on the market under the "Defender" brand. Several recent enlargements of the manufacturing plant testify to the popularity of these goods. Every advantage that the most modern equipment and sanitary arrangements give, as well as the benefit of the lowest prices for the raw material, combine to insure the purchaser of these goods that both quality and price are all that can be desired. A full line of muslin underwear is also included in the "Defender" productions.

S. GREENSHIELDS, SON & CO.

THE cotton department of S. Greenshields, Son & Co. is giving some startling bargains, considering the advancing market. The Spring samples of the goods carried by the A1 department, such as printed and plain flannelettes, dress and apron gingham, shirtings and fancy cotton dress goods are now on the road, and orders are now pouring in from the hosts of travelers. It is safe to say that a more handsome range of goods was never shown by the house than it is showing for next Spring. A particularly pretty feature is the bordered apron gingham.

Spring prints are also being shown on the road, and the success the travelers are meeting with is proof of their being able to stand the competition in this line. Besides the usual lines of Canadian prints, a nice assortment is shown in Crums' prints. Large patterns and large stripes bid fair to be popular. A big range of American muslins are being shown. The new blue, a little darker than the Kitchener blue, continues to be the best selling color this season. Some new light shades of linings are on the market; mercerized sateen is selling well again for skirts, while linnette and percaline are good stock.

In the fancy goods departments, some novelties are being shown. Prominent among these are new metal frames for making silk bags; they suffice also for small purse tops. One of the latest hits is ribbon tips made of metal in gold color used on the ends of velvet ribbons for both neck and dress. A large line is coming in. Gold brands are in great demand and bid fair to be very popular; tinsel webbing in variegated tints and gold for belts and collars will be the correct thing for Spring. This firm expect to show a large line of patent leather belts, trimmed with gold and tinsel. Patent leather with white and gold stitching is another new idea. These can be had with plain buckles, black or steel. Another feature of the department is chatelaine bags made of seal, alligator, and imitation seal. Ebony goods are in large stock and there is a handsome assortment of cushion tops in tinted, Turkish design and tapestry. They have a large line of gilt buttons and, as gilt is the rage, they ought to sell.

The ladies' department is replete with holiday specialties. There is a large variety of handkerchiefs still selling well for the Christmas trade in Irish and Swiss embroidery and in Japanese goods. The new "Excelda" handkerchief is a specialty. The "Excelda" is a new fabric which retains the lustre after washing. It is stronger than ordinary goods and is claimed to be more serviceable than silk. The most popular parasol handles are of gun metal and horns. A full range of imitation cluny laces is being carried. The English manufacturers have succeeded in making this imitation cluny in beautiful patterns which compare well with the real French cluny laces both in style and shade.

In gloves, tans, beavers, browns and greys will probably be popular for Spring, while white will reign supreme for opera wear. Suedes will be popular for Spring wear. The dome fasteners stand without a peer.

In the house-furnishing department they are showing some special lines in cretonnes, both single and double widths. Their stock of carpets, curtains, oilcloths, blankets, etc. is well assorted, and all orders for these goods can be executed on the shortest notice. In blankets especially they are offering some very special values. For Spring 1901 they are showing a full and complete range of carpets and curtains in latest patterns and styles.

KYLE, CHEESBROUGH & CO.

Kyle, Cheesbrough & Co. have had such satisfactory results from their newly-inaugurated ready-made department that they are encouraged to give this branch of their business special attention and they are bringing out, and, in fact, now showing, a larger and more attractive lot of costumes, bolero jackets and blouses than ever before. The indications throughout the trade are that ready-to-wear garments will grow in general favor.

This firm are showing as new additions to their silk department a full line of colors in peau de soie, tamaline, Japanese silks. These are new lines and, added to this firm's already heavily-stocked silk department, make up a display of silks such as cannot fail to interest every drygoodsman.

One of the unlooked for demands that often spring up for some special line has arisen, and at present "Draw Ribbon" lace insertions or beadings, and Battenburg lace braids are scarce articles in the trade. Kyle, Cheesbrough & Co. have a good shipment on the sea and should have them in stock very shortly. Tinsel or gold effects are the latest rage in trimmings, gimps or braids. Kyle, Cheesbrough & Co. report they have coming forward a shipment including a lot of the most attractive lace and tinsel mixtures in trimmings, insertions and all-overs that could be secured in Europe. These will be specially desirable for use in trimming and making up evening and party gowns. Ribbon and beaded pulley belts are among the latest novelties attracting attention in the London and Paris zones of fashion. These are being produced in new and very artistic designs and combinations of colors. A good line of them will be in this firm's stock in time for the holiday trade. For the holiday trade they are also providing an unusually tempting lot of novelties in the line of fancy bags, handkerchief sachets, etc.

One of the most popular and expensive garments for evening wear is the sequin robe. When made up the effect of the sequin worked upon the net is the production of perhaps the richest and most genteel evening gown obtainable. The immense popularity of this article in London and Paris on all dress occasions is readily understood when the article is seen. The sequin net and costume are now being produced at prices well within the reach of lovers of rich and stylish dress, and Kyle, Cheesbrough & Co. are now offering them in black and silver and in a fine variety of patterns.

F. F. KELLY.

Although he has decided to discontinue the regular furnishing business, Mr. Kelly has added numbers in this line, and will show full ranges for the Spring. He is constantly on the qui vive for specialties, such as manufacturers' clearing lots, wholesale bankrupt stocks and goods sold in transit for charges, and can always offer inducements to live buyers. His range of Plauen laces is immense.

With Mr. Kelly the blouse is a leader, not a side line; he realizes that no house can make a success of the blouse business running it as a side line; it requires too much attention. His line of blouses is very complete, and buyers who order from him may feel certain that they will get satisfaction in style, fit and delivery.

The Matter of Skirt Binding

(while an inexpensive article in itself) is by no means a trifling one, for, if you please your customers in this article, they return and bring their friends, who in turn bring their friends, and so commences the "endless chain" of constantly increasing sales.

But, in order to do this, you should carry the best lines. There is but one BEST in anything, and in Skirt Bindings it is the celebrated which are made from Velveteen manufactured especially for skirt bindings by a firm who are experts in the business and who manufacture nothing else.

There are more women to-day buying the S. H. & M. Bindings than there were yesterday; there will be more to-morrow than to-day, and the next day there will be yet more. The demand is constantly increasing, and to keep up with the times you should handle these lines.

✿ WINDOW AND STORE DECORATING. ✿

Conducted for THE REVIEW by H. Hollingsworth, an Expert Window Artist.

TO DRY GOODS REVIEW READERS.—We shall be glad to receive photographs and descriptions of window displays that have attracted special attention in their own localities, and which would be considered helpful to trimmers generally. Any inquiries or questions on the subject of window dressing will be answered cheerfully, and any information given that may be desired by readers. Queries should be addressed: "Window Dressing Department."

WINDOW DRESSING IN CHICAGO.

THAT window dressing has become the recognized secret of successful merchandising is evidenced by the fact that merchants all over the country are leaving no stones unturned to make their window trims attractive and paying. Especially is this so in the great American centres, such as New York, Chicago and other large business places.

Having just returned from a trip to Chicago in the interests of window dressing, I thought possibly readers of these columns, interested in the art, might find the following instructive and profitable as well as interesting to them.

I will endeavor to give our readers an idea of what an advance has been made and of what great value window dressing is considered in some of the large establishments I visited in New York and Chicago. My first idea, when I started out Monday morning, was to search out the head trimmers in the largest establishments, introduce myself, explain my mission, and throw myself on their generosity, and have them explain the different systems, etc., to me.

The first place I visited was the largest firm on State street. On inquiring from the floor-walker on main floor where I would be likely to find the head window-trimmer, I was told that it would be impossible to interview him as he was a busy man and did not hold interviews with anyone during business hours, except those relating to business. I told him that I was on business, and that it was necessary that I should see the head trimmer. The floor-manager then said I would have to see the superintendent of the store first. I went to the superintendent's office and asked him if I might see Mr. So-and-So, the chief window-trimmer. The superintendent very kindly called a cash girl and told her to take my card up and ask him if he desired to see me. I waited a while, and, on the cash girl's return, was told that Mr.— would see me on floor 10. I had, first of all, to get a pass from the superintendent, as all business in connection with the getting up of these window trims was private, and no persons but those engaged in the window-trimming department were admitted to that floor.

On entering the trimmers' department I could see on all sides evidences of beautiful trims that had been in the windows at some time or other. Piles and piles of framework, covered with expensive plushes, silks, satins, etc.; dozens of different kinds of novelties and fixtures, etc., that had cost hundreds of dollars to get up, where piled everywhere, most of them never to be used a second time.

Men and boys were tacking and carving and sawing out fancy designs in wood, papier-mache, etc. Some were covering framework with plushes, etc. Others were wiring fancy designs for electric lights. Some were painting.

Altogether I was surprised at the number of helpers and the amount of valuable material they were using up. Asking one of the boys where the head trimmer was, he told me to keep straight on and I would find him in his office at the end of the room.

At last I saw the office ahead of me. It looked more like a broker's or a lawyer's office than anything else. Over the door was a sign reading, "Chief Window-Trimmer's Office, Strictly Private." At a handsome large desk sat the gentleman I took to be the head trimmer, busily engaged with a large drawing of an interior decoration. Another gentleman was sitting there, and I immediately sized him up as one of the chief's lieutenants, and, judging from a few remarks that passed between the two before I said anything, I was not far out, as I learned afterwards he was second in charge of the interior and window trims.

After introducing myself the chief shook hands with me, and, on learning that I was a brother member of the National Association of Window Trimmers of America, he became quite interested in me, and started to question me about the way things were conducted in Canada. Gradually I started to "pump" him, as it were, and had no difficulty in getting him to answer my questions. Some of them were as follows:

"Do you trim all of the windows yourself?"

"How often do you change them?"

"Do you use your own judgment as to what to display and when to change same?"

"Do you get a cash appropriation each year to run window trims on?"

"Have you a free hand as to buying necessaries to trim the windows?"

"Are you at liberty to take stock from any department to complete your trims?"

These were just a few of the questions I asked. The answer to the first question was, "No, I do not trim the windows myself. I merely design them and see that they are carried out satisfactorily."

As to the second question, he informed me that most of the trims were changed every week but that special trims were often left in for 10 days or two weeks.

The answer to the third question was that he used his own judgment as to what to display in most cases, but in cases of special sales was generally notified by the superintendent.

As to expenses in connection with getting up window trims I was informed that some houses set aside a fund for that purpose, but that this firm did not, but purchased whatever was required almost regardless of cost of same.

The trimmer also told me he used his own judgment in selecting fixtures and the necessaries to complete his trims without any dictation from the firm. Of course, they expected him to keep the expense as low as possible but did not want him to "skimp" himself of anything that was going to attract and return the amount expended in it with interest, as a good attraction always does.

I was then asked to take a walk and he would show me the ins and outs of their system.

He showed me a room where all nickel fixtures are kept. Dust-proof cupboards with numbers of wax figures, different styles of wax arms and hands. A cupboard filled with plush and silk draperies. A room full of brass and nickel rods, hoops and wooden fixtures of all descriptions.

As we strolled along this immense room, here and there were fancy designs in backgrounds in sections all ready to go in the Christmas windows.

Everything was made and put up on this floor months beforehand. They were even working on trims for next Easter. Here is where time is saved. Everything is fitted up first of all in sections (marked), ready to be taken down and set up in the windows, thereby saving a lot of time that would otherwise mean dollars lost if the time was taken to make them up after the trimmers went to work in the windows.

On inquiring as to how many windows the house had I was told there were 59 altogether. He also said his staff numbered from 15 to 25 window-trimmers, who received from $12 to $25 per week.

After spending about half an hour in looking around and watching the other assistants doing their parts of the trims, untarily to inspect them. Artistic devices and attractions should be resorted to, for is it not the time when people crowd the thoroughfares, and eager men, women and children all bent upon one common object, to see whatever is to be seen that is reasonable, and to procure whatever their means will permit for their loved ones. Don't wait till a few days before Christmas to think what you are going to do but make preparations now.

Let us consider how Winter scenes, effects, etc., are made up and arranged for the Christmas displays.

The windows during the holiday season are full of illusions to the beholder, and a person not knowing the secrets of the art, would suppose that a great deal of ingenuity is necessary to accomplish what is really simple to those who know how to imitate nature. We do not propose to imitate that class, but we desire to give some hints to those who would like to present such scenes as are usually shown during the Christmas season.

"Mountain effects" are made by building up a series of boxes from floor to background in any irregular manner, then cover over with white cloth, over which lay white batting HOLIDAY IDEAS IN WINDOW TRIMS.

I told the trimmer that I would not take up any more of his valuable time, and, thanking him for the interesting information given me, I bade him good morning.

From here I went to the other big houses and met with similar incidents. They were all very nice and polite with the exception of one of the big "know-it-alls," who gave me anything but a pleasant reception. However, I gained all the information I desired and came away with lots of good pointers. I trust these few remarks will give our readers who have never had any idea of the point window dressing has reached an insight into part of the machinery of the great business enterprises that employ modern methods of advertising.

CHRISTMAS DECORATIONS.

Now is the time to be thinking out your Christmas trims.

Don't leave everything until the last moment. If you do you are going to have many an hour's worry that otherwise you would not have if you put all your spare moments during these next two weeks into working on your Christmas window trims.

The windows and the store should be made so attractive for the holiday season that the passers-by are detained involwhich should be split (the sheet is split apart) and the rough side pulled out, then throw on a little flour and sprinkle with frosting and you have a good imitation of a mountain of snow.

"A frozen pond" is best imitated by laying a mirror on the floor and covering it over lightly with frosting. If mirror cannot be got, then a large sheet of tin will answer the purpose.

"Moon scenes" are made by cutting out a circular hole in the cloth that represents the sky and white tissue paper pasted on the back of the opening. Behind this is placed a light for night effect. It's best to saturate the tissue paper with kerosene oil before placing it in position.

"Icicles" are made by cutting them to shape from wood. A quantity of alum is placed in a receptacle containing water, which should be heated until warm, and, when dissolved, place the sticks in receptacle and allow them to remain in it for a day. The sticks will then be found coated with the alum and to have an ice effect.

To give trees the appearance of being covered with ice and snow is best represented by making a paste of flour and water, and, with a brush, daub on here and there for snow effect. Bits of cotton may also be added. For ice, glue on flake. The flake is in small particles which resemble gelatine.

Bricks may be imitated by using red cloth and by marking

DECORATING MATERIALS.

THE MATERIALS NOW BEING USED FOR DECORATING SHOW WINDOWS.

In making a tour of the windows in Chicago and New York, I notice cheesecloth is being greatly discarded by trimmers, and in its place such material as velvet, canton flannel, figured crepons, silks and velours are being used. Fancy papers are also in evidence in the clothing, millinery and mens' furnishings houses.

The background draperies consist of plush hung on a curtain pole at a certain height and hung loosely to the floor.

Others have the padded backgrounds, using white and old gold canton flannel with the rough side shown.

Many shoe stores showing the padded backgrounds of velvet have a fancy or gilt moulding as a border. This is placed above the mirrors at the back and sides of window. Lattice work made of ribbons is prominent in the dry goods displays. The mirror lattice background is very pretty. This is done by forming a lattice over the mirrors with ribbons. Where no mirrors are used, plain cloth or netting is tacked to a frame and the ribbons formed over the frame as described. Another new decoration is with onyx paper.

This is mostly used for columns and arches. As the paper can be had in assorted shades it is very effective, especially if given a coat of varnish afterwards. This same paper is also splendid for floor covering for shoe displays.

The illustrations in this number convey a few good ideas for holiday displays.

Any information regarding holiday trims will be cheerfully given by THE REVIEW to any reader desirous of obtaining such. All communications should be addressed to THE CANADIAN DRY GOODS REVIEW, in care of window-dressing department. H. H.

NOVELTY AT NEW WESTMINSTER.

The ram in W. S. Collister & Co.'s millinery window is attracting the attention of the numerous spectators and guests from the different cities, as well as the local people. It is a pet from one of the stock yards of Messrs. Reichenbach Co., of this city. The ram is to be adopted as the mascot of the lacrosse champions of the world and wear their colors and the now famous salmon badge of the W.L.C. A wag has suggested that Messrs. Collister & Co. have added an item to their trade and are now dealing in a new line: "Good country butter."—Vancouver World.

AN INTERIOR DISPLAY.

We show in this issue a reproduction of a portion of one side of the store of Atkinson & Switzer, Richmond Hill, Ont. The decoration is a tastefully-arranged display in connection with the firm's millinery opening last month. The decoration was designed by Mr. F. Redditt, who has made a good disposition of the space at his disposal. It will be seen in the foreground that the front tables show a display of dress goods and silks, so arranged as to strike the eye of the incoming customer. The back table was devoted to carpets and curtains, and, to set off the store, the curtains were draped back to the side over the counter. The back of the store was draped with curtains also, and had wall blinds to set it off. On an easel, which may be noticed in the foreground, was a framed advertisement to the effect that this was millinery opening day. The store of Messrs. Atkinson & Switzer presents a number of features which are of value to country trade all over Canada. Richmond Hill is very close to the city of Toronto, and the electric cars go past the store every little while running between Newmarket and the city. Yet, the store holds its trade because of the adoption of up-to-date methods. Interior decorations are changed every week, and the windows, of which there are two large ones, are trimmed always once a week, and sometimes twice, according to the season. One window is devoted to dry goods, and others to men's furnishings, crockery, groceries, as the occasion suggests.

The photograph from which our picture is taken was done by Miss Elliston, of Richmond Hill, by means of a flashlight.

A TASTEFULLY DECORATED STORE.

Mr. A. O'Connor, of Halifax, N.S., has just moved into his new premises on Barrington street. The building is 40x60. In the centre of the store is a large circular window. It, in itself, being a new idea and well finished, attracts passers by; but when nicely draped, one cannot do else than stop to admire it.

The first floor is devoted to millinery and ladies' ready-to-wear garments. The second flat is a millinery, show and work rooms, with a ladies' waiting-room with writing-table and material. Also a ladies' toilet room off the waiting-room. This is a great convenience to shoppers, and in the short time Mr. O'Connor has been in his new place he has found it to take well and is quite a drawing card.

The store is lighted with hollow flame Auer lights. The ceiling is of metallic sheeting painted white, while the shelving and whole building is painted white, which helps to show off the bright-colored goods.

The Robinson Co., dry good merchants, Napanee, have purchased the large stock of the estate of the late W. Mowat, amounting to some $15,000, and have moved it to their own premises. They report business for the season good.

Up the Ladder of Prosperity

The first rung in the ladder that so many garment men want to climb is: to keep your customer's trade; please her the first time she buys.

This problem depends on the dealer, as a rule, but in the garment business it depends on the maker. It is the looks of the garment that sell it, and the skill of the maker determines whether your customer will have those looks in actual wear. A pleased customer means further sales.

The more prosperous you are, the more prosperous we will be. We want to make as much money as legitimate trade will bring us. We want every local garment man in Canada to share our prosperity. The whole secret lies in the permanent looks we give our garments.

We give as much thought to the fit and wear of a Northway garment as to its style. Every Northway jacket must wear effectively as well as look effectively. It is these permanent looks that build up the local trade of the dealer.

Many dealers are seeing this, and we are filling their repeat orders for winter. We are filling all these repeats, because each Northway garment you sell this Winter means that another garment will be sold in the Spring to the same wearer. Any repeat orders you send us will be filled promptly.

Do not be afraid to send these repeat orders. You can be sure of getting them. The more of these satisfactory garments you sell this Winter, the more Northway garments you will be able to sell in the Spring. That is what you and we want.

Salesmen are on the road with Spring garments. Northway garments are the best for Canadian dealers, because their permanent shapeliness holds local trade. The more Northway garments you sell, the better your start "up the ladder of prosperity."

Regulations for Store Management.

RULE 1.—Keep your eyes on the front door. Customers should be waited on promptly and pleasantly.

2. Wait on children as politely as you do on grown people. They are our future customers.

3. Salesmen, when disengaged, will take position near the front door, instead of the back. Customers do not come in at the rear.

4. Don't stand outside the front door when at leisure. It is an excellent notice to competitors and customers that trade is dull.

5. Salesmen are paid for waiting on customers, and are not expected to turn them over to the boys or new men who are learning the business, while they busy themselves arranging or putting away goods.

6. Don't take a customer away from another salesman until he is through with him.

7. Don't turn a customer over to another clerk, if possible to avoid it, except for the dinner hour.

8. Go for business in every direction ; in the store or out of it ; wherever you see a chance to make a sale, work for it with all your might. RUSTLE !

9. Salesmen will sell at marked prices. Do not go to office for a cut price. It always makes trouble.

10. At retail the dozen price is to be allowed only when the customer takes half a dozen of each kind, or more. Less than half dozen, in all cases, to be at price for each.

11. Sorting up a line of goods allowed to make the quantity, the highest dozen price of the lot to be charged, when half a dozen or more are bought.

12. Clerks or other dealers are to be charged regular retail prices. If the houses they work for buy the goods for them it is a different matter.

13. Don't send a customer up stairs or down by himself.

14. Salesmen will avoid the responsibility of trusting customers whose credit is unknown to them by referring all such cases to the manager. Extending credit without authority makes the salesmen responsible for the amount.

15. In opening a new account get the business and post office address of the customer correctly.

16. Never show a price-list to a customer ; it confuses him.

17. Salesmen are expected to sell the goods we have, not the goods we have not.

18. Salesmen are responsible for their mistakes and any expense attending their correction.

19. Always charge goods first in the day book. Make out the bill from the charge in the book. Make this an invariable rule.

20. If you have a charge to make, enter it before waiting on another customer ; your memory is apt to be defective and the sale forgotten before it is entered.

21. All cash bills over $5 enter in your sales book.

22. Make your charges accurate in detail or description by number, size, etc. By so doing, it facilitates correction, in case of a dispute with the customer.

23. Close your entry books after making entry. Valuable information may be gained by competitors.

24. Clerks receiving change from the desk will count the same and see if correct before handing to the customer. Always hand the cash memorandum with the money to the cashier.

25. If you know of an improvement of any kind, suggest it at once to the manager ; it will be impartially considered.

26. Keep retail stock full and complete on the shelves, so as to avoid detaining customer. Notify each man in charge of a division when you find anything short in it.

27. Always put the stock in order when through waiting on customers.

28. Each clerk is expected to see that his department is kept clean and in perfect order.

29. In arranging goods, put the smallest to the front ; when the same size, cheapest to the front.

30. Use the early part of the day and the last hour before closing in sorting and straightening up.

31. Prices are not to be cut. Report every cut price by other firms to the manager after the customer is gone, unless he is a well known and regular customer, in which case report at once.

32. Do not smoke during business hours, in or about the store.

33. Employes are requested to wear their coats in the store. It is not pleasant for a lady to have a gentleman waiting on her in his shirt sleeves, or with his hat on.

34. Employes are expected to be on hand promptly at the hour of opening.

35. Employes will remain until the hour of closing, unless excused by the manager.

36. The company will ask of you as little work after regular hours as possible. When demanded by the necessities of business, a willing and hearty response will be appreciated.

37. If an employe desires to buy anything from stock, he must buy it of the manager ; in no case take anything without doing so.

38. In purchasing for individual use around town, under no circumstances use the name of the company as a means to buy cheaper.

39. Employes pay for whatever they damage ; they are placed on their honor to report and pay for it.

40. Employes using bicycles will keep them in the cellar or in the back yard ; they must not be left where they will cause inconvenience.

41. Conversation with the bookkeeper or the cashier, except on business, interferes materially with the work. Do not forget this.

42. Watch the ends of stock, make as few as possible, and always work them off first, to keep the stock clean.

43. Keep mum about our business. Always have a good word to say for it, and never say it is dull. Keep your eyes and ears open about your competitors.

IT WILL PAY YOU TO LEARN THE FOLLOWING BY HEART.

Towards customers be more than reasonably obliging ; be invariably polite and attentive, whether they be courteous or exacting, without any regard to their looks or condition, unless, indeed, you be more obliging and serviceable to the humble and ignorant.

The more self-forgetting you are, and the more acceptable you are to whomsoever your customer may be, the better you are as a salesman. It is your highest duty to be acceptable to all.

Cultivate the habit of doing everything rapidly; do thoroughly what you undertake, and do not undertake more than you can do well.

Serve buyers in their turn. If you can serve two at once, very well; but do not let the first one wait for the second.

In your first minute with a customer you give him an impression, not of yourself, but of the house, which is likely to determine, not whether he buys of you, but whether he becomes a buyer of the house or a talker against it.

If you are indifferent, he will detect it before you sell him, and his impression is made before you have uttered a word. At the outset, you have to guess what grade of goods he wants, high-priced or low-priced. If you do not guess correctly, be quick to discover your error, and right yourself instantly; it is impertinent to insist upon showing goods not wanted. It is delicately polite to get what is wanted adroitly on the slightest hint.

Do not try to change a buyer's choice, except to this extent: Always use your knowledge of goods to his advantage, if he wavers or indicates a desire for advice. The worst blunder that you can make is to indicate in a supercilious manner that we keep better goods than he asks for.

Show goods freely to all customers; be as serviceable as you can to all, whether buyers or not.

Sell nothing on an understanding; make no promises that you have any doubt as to the fulfillment of, and, having made a promise, do more than your share towards its fulfillment, and see that the next after you does his share, if you can.

Never run down your competitors to customers. By so doing you advertise them. It won't pay you to get trade in that way. Competitors can talk back.

To sum up and put this whole matter in a few words: Attend strictly to business when on duty; be invariably polite and obliging to everyone, not only for the benefit of the company, but for your own good. Remember that civility, while it may be one of the scarcest articles in the market, is also one of the cheapest, and the net profit on it to you, in the end, will be greater—not only from a social and moral point of view, but in dollars and cents—than on anything else you may have to offer a customer.

A PUBLIC FAVORITE.

The sales of "Puritas" comforters for the Fall season of 1900 have been twice the number of 1899. The constant and extensive advertising of this brand to the general public in such mediums as The Canadian Magazine, The Delineator, The Standard Designer, etc., is bringing its results. Dealers who keep the "Puritas" brand of comforters (made by the Alaska Company) in stock, and also other brands, find that the "Puritas" are the first sold, because women ask for that particular brand, and when they see the name on the label of the quilt, it reminds them of the advertisement, and straightway they buy. On page 29 of this issue there is an advertisement regarding this brand, which is well worth reading.

QUEBEC MERCHANTS AND INSOLVENCY LAWS.

At the meeting of the Quebec Board of Trade, October 9, there were present: Messrs. M. Joseph (president), J. Geo. Garneau, Geo. Tanguay, Lachance, T. Verret, J. A. Chabot, E. F. Wurtele, Wm. Brodie, A. C. Champagne, L. E. Thompson, Jos. Archer, jr., J. B. Morissette, R. F. Crean, Ulric Barthe and T. Levasseur.

The report of the council referred as follows to the question of an insolvency law:

"At a recent meeting, your council, justly alarmed at the frequency of fraudulent insolvencies, felt it proper to take anew the matter in hand and to work in earnest, in order to obtain from the Federal authorities a strong and severe bankruptcy law, covering all cases possible, and whose dispositions and rules would be uniform for the entire Dominion.

"The following resolutions, which were proposed by Mr. P. B. Dumoulin, seconded by Mr. J. Geo. Garneau, and unanimously carried, speak for themselves:

"Whereas, commercial insolvencies are of an alarming frequency, and that, in many cases, the assets represent only an insignificant portion of the liabilities, and sometimes absolutely nothing;

"Whereas, in a great many cases these bankruptcies seem to have been systematically and purposely prepared, to the great detriment of the trade in general and the credit of everyone in particular.

"Whereas, it is more than ever the time to remedy such a condition of affairs and that the only possible remedy is the enactment of an equitable bankruptcy law to repress commercial frauds, which are now more glaring and frequent than ever.

"Resolved, that the council of the Quebec Board of Trade, which has already many times taken the initiative, of a movement favoring the adoption of a bankruptcy law, but hitherto without achieving its wish, as public opinion had not been awakened to its necessity, renew its representations to the Federal authorities to urge the adoption of a bankruptcy law aiming at the protection of both creditor and debtor.

"Resolved, that a committee composed of Messrs. Montefiore Joseph, President of the Quebec Board of Trade, Geo. Tanguay, J. Ritchie, J. E. Dupre, J. G. Amyot, E. Garneau, and of the mover and seconder of this resolution, be instructed to study the most practical means to be taken in order to obtain from the Federal authorities the adoption of an efficient bankruptcy law, as above mentioned, and that the committee have power to add to its number."

HOW TO CATER FOR THE MILLINERY TRADE.

Mr. G. H. Marr, Moncton, N. B., enterprising millinery dealer, has one of the finest millinery stores in the Maritime Provinces. The showcases are all made of glass, which, with nicely trimmed hats, give a good effect.

At the rear of the store Mr. Mair has a room where ladies can go and try on hats. In fact, it is fitted up as well as any showroom, and is nothing more or less than a private showroom.

The workrooms are all on the second flat. Mr. Marr said: "I keep nothing but the very latest styles, and I make a trip every season to Montreal, Toronto and New York; also I send three of the head milliners some time ahead of me to pick up ideas, so as to be able to give anything a customer may ask for." When the representative of THE REVIEW was in Moncton, Mr. Marr was just having his millinery opening.

WORTHY OF IMITATION.

A SOCIETY has just been formed in Ireland, says The Cork Constitution, for the purpose of pushing the sale of Irish goods, and of putting a stop to the sale of foreign goods under Irish "colors." This society is called the Irish Shop Assistants' Industrial League, and is the result of a resolve among young men patriotically disposed to serve Irish goods wherever possible. The members sign a pledge which runs as follows:

"I hereby promise to do my utmost to sell an Irish-made article on every occasion (when not detrimental to my employer's interests), and to do all in my power to promote the objects of the league for the sole purpose of upraising the industries of my country."

We venture to say that no country is in more need of an organization such as this than is Canada. That Canadians are troubled with the European-product-worshipping malady is an undoubted fact. And those who ought to be applying palliatives—our storekeepers—seem to be encouraging the national disease. Why do our large merchants have their imported shirts marked "made in Austria"? Is Austrian print better than Canadian? We venture to say not. Is the workmanship better? In this land of public education we claim to have the most skilled and intelligent working class under the sun. Why, then, are the imported goods considered better quality than the domestic manufactured article? Is it not simply prejudice? Familiarity with the Canadian workman seems to have bred contempt for him. It is not necessary to multiply illustrations. Which hat, the foreign or the domestic article, is recommended the more highly by the Canadian merchant? Take almost any article ordinarily sold in the stores, and consider whether it would not suffer in a comparison made by most Canadian merchants. And the consumer thinks about the same thoughts. The only products we take pride in as Canadians are the products of the farm. This should not be. Canadian industry has been tenderly nursed and fostered since 1879, and we have had time to rear a class of mechanics skilled in the different technicalities of their trades until our workshops can now turn out articles of first-class style and finish.

It is reasonably certain that our storekeepers would not take this view of the situation if such a league as has been formed in Ireland were established here, where a patriotic view of business would be cultivated and where the ideas of the Canadian business public would be opened to the superiority of domestic manufactures. This is, at least, something worthy of attainment. The Canadian merchant thrives upon the Canadian workman, and the assistance should be mutual.

That Canadian goods are worthy of patronage is evident from this year's success of the Montreal Cotton Co., who have secured a Grand Prize for their textile display at the Paris Exposition. Great Britain got three and the United States two Grand Prizes. So, for a "wooden country," as they would call us, we did not do so badly. It is only some 22 years since some of the prominent wholesale merchants refused to look at goods manufactured by this concern; it was not believed that salable goods could be made here. At the present time the pay roll of this firm is $60,000 per month, and the amount of money spent in this country for supplies, including starch, tallow, beeswax and a hundred other incidentals, is tremendous. If merchants realized to what extent we were dependent upon our industries for our national prosperity they would, at least, modify their views. We are now exporting woollens, yet there exists a profound prejudice against these goods among our own people. That Irish league is certainly worthy of imitation.

QUEBEC MERCHANTS FOR A FAIR LAW.

The resolutions, on another page of this issue, passed by the leading merchants of Quebec, regarding a new insolvency law, are satisfactory, and do credit to the gentlemen concerned.

They want an honest law, which is always in favor of the honest merchant, and the framing of which is no great task if people are only determined to have it.

This is an opportune time in which to agitate for new legislation, so that insolvency reform may be associated with the other issues of the general election campaign.

A POINTER FOR LIVE MERCHANTS.

THOSE readers interested in window trims will read with benefit the account of Mr. Hollinsworth's visit to Chicago, and the description he gives of the stores there.

Of course, most of our readers have visited the large cities in the States and have seen for themselves the elaborate interior decorations and window displays that prevail with all the big retail establishments. There is nothing startlingly new in that.

But where the editor of our Window Dressing Department strikes quite new ground is in revelation of the methods and system practised by big stores. He takes us behind the scenes in this respect, and we get a better idea of the high value placed on window and store decoration by the average big American store.

Every Canadian merchant cannot conveniently do these things on so large a scale, but, in each case, according to his volume of trade and the opportunities of enlarging it, the decoration department should be put on a better footing.

The Chicago or New York store does not go in for all this work from sentiment, love of display, or any empty reason. Dollars and cents determine the expenditure. If money was not made by it, money would not be spent on it. Remember that.

THE GLOVE TRADE.

THE mild weather of the past few weeks has affected the glove trade, and dealers are postponing the placing of import orders.

Careful buyers will not do this. Easter comes early next year, and many orders placed late cannot be delivered in time. This is not the fault of the importing agent, nor of the manufacturer, but of the retailer. Glove manufacturers are expected to do many impossible things, and retailers would be astonished if they were told the length of time taken to fill a special order for gloves. Ordinary stock lines are ordered about six or eight months before required, and an easy order to fill takes four months. We are speaking of French goods, as the gloves made in Germany and Austria do not get the careful attention in preparation of skins that is given by the best manufacturers of France.

There is not much likelihood of any radical changes in styles for some time to come. The trade seems easy to follow at present, and no retailer, with the present indications for colors next Spring, need hesitate about placing his order.

Suede gloves are to be fashionable, that is certain. The colors for the next season are indicated so strongly to any ordinary judge that it is unnecessary to mention them here. Cheap suede goods should be avoided. Nothing can be so unsatisfactory to trade.

Most retailers in Canada make of their glove department—if, indeed, they have anything worth calling one—a mere side-show. In the stores across the border the glove department is one of the leading departments—one of the brightest, and best advertised in the establishment. Here, anyone can sell gloves, and in any fashion, hence the many damaged gloves returned under the name of being guaranteed.

Let the same person handle the gloves all the time, not outsiders from some other part of the store. See that the correct sizes are sold. Get good wearing lines, and turn stock over by being satisfied with a moderate profit. And the rest is easy. Do not present a new pair of gloves to a customer to please her at the expense of the manufacturer or agent. This is done repeatedly—"I had to exchange them to please her"—and the gloves are passed on. Nothing could be more unjust.

It is to the interest of the retailer to try to sell the best goods. In by-gone days the guarantee of a glove was given only to first choice; now it extends to goods sold at $1 a pair, and people expect, because it is guaranteed, that the $1 glove is to wear like the $1.50 glove.

It must be remembered that skins, whether lamb, kid, or anything else, are imperfect; they are born, not made, so people should not expect the same wear and tear from gloves that they get out of some manufactured articles.

TO GROW BETTER HEMP.

The United States Department of Agriculture has been conducting experiments to see if hemp of a quality equal to that of Russian and Italian production cannot be grown in that country. Hemp-growing has been for some time one of the chief industries of Kentucky, but the article grown there has never attained to the excellence of the Russian or Italian hemp. The fact that Kentucky hemp has been inferior to that imported is attributed to the fact that the farmers have not used the proper methods in raising it, and that they have not had so good methods for treating it as have their foreign competitors.

A large portion of the flats of the Potomac region was devoted to the experiments made by the Department of Agriculture. These have been very successful so far, hemp having been grown to the height of 14 feet, which is fully up to the average height of the imported article, whereas the Kentucky hemp rarely grows over eight feet.

The success of these experiments, combined with the invention of a new decorticator (the machine for preparing the product) has given rise to the hope that United States textile manufacturers will be, in the near future, in a much better position to compete with European manufacturers, who use hemp grown in Russia or Italy. No attempt to grow hemp in Canada has ever been made by our Department of Agriculture.

NO MORE COTTON UNDER FOUR CENTS.

Contemporaneous with the recent advance in grey cottons, No. A, 27 and 34 in., was withdrawn. This takes every cotton below four cents out of the market. The advance in raw cotton and wages has rendered the manufacture of such cheap cotton unprofitable, and the attention that has been directed towards these cheap products will now be given to the better grades.

THE WHOLESALE PRICE OF COTTONS.

MERCHANTS should bear in mind that, although cottons have been very appreciably advanced at the mills within the past month, there are some lines still obtainable at old prices.

It is unfortunate for both wholesaler and retailer that, when cotton mills mark up goods, the other dealers, through whose hands they pass before they reach the consumer, do not advance values on a parity with the first cost. If a drop occurs, every wholesaler has his prices down in half an hour, but, on a rise, the most he can seemingly benefit is to encourage business before he has to buy at the increased quotations. He loses on a drop but yet he makes nothing on a rise. They say "It is a poor rule that doesn't work both ways"; this rule ought then to be changed. If the mill dictates what prices shall be in one case, its commands ought to be obeyed in the other, if justice is to be meted out. The trouble is that the jobbers are afraid of one another, and mutual confidence is entirely wanting.

If the wholesale houses would take as well as give, the retailer would also be able to profit by an advance. Neither would he need, in that case, to scurry around to ferret out the dealer who is the last to advance his prices. A uniformity of price is eminently desirable.

The unprofitable influence of overwrought competition is well illustrated by the fact that there are cottons going out of dry goods warehouses at the present moment at values below those set by the mills. Sheetings, both grey and white, which have been advanced, in the former case, $3\frac{1}{2}c.$ a yard, and in the latter, $3c.$ a yard, within the past year, are actually selling below makers' prices to-day. Warehousemen seem to be willing to sell their goods at old prices, so long as they last; they will worry their brains about the future of a market, and perhaps speculate by buying ahead, and then, when the tide turns their way, they will make no use of it, but throw all, or nearly all, its advantages to their customers. No wonder there is not the money in the dry goods business that there once was.

A BIG THREAD DIVIDEND.

IN the discussion caused by the organization of the great combines, trusts, etc., formed in recent years, a great diversity of opinion was shown. The one conviction which was most generally maintained, especially by defenders of the combines, was that the matter would right itself in the process of time, that any conditions not in accord with the principle of the most economical production and distribution could not exist, no matter how strong the combine, unless the sources of supply were controlled.

If this argument is sound, and it seems so on the face, there must soon be a revolution in the cotton thread industry. No one would assert that any thread combine could in any way control the supply of its raw material. Yet the Coates thread combination of Scotland and the United States announce a profit for the year of £2,427,000 (about $12,135,000). A dividend has just been recommended sufficient to make a total of 50 per cent. for the year on the ordinary shares. Last year the combine paid 40 per cent. When the company was organized, about two years ago, it issued £3,000,000 in ordinary shares. These shares have now risen in value to about £24,000,000, so the return this year nets about 6 per cent. on the present value of its stock.

The same day on which the despatch relating to this dividend was received, the mails brought advices that the central agency, which comprises the Coates, Clark, Brooks and Chadwick concerns had advanced prices of thread.

Here we have the four great thread-producing concerns raising their prices while one of their number is making 50 per cent. dividends on £3,000,000 or $15,000,000. There undoubtedly seems to be a good opening for an independent concern, but who, having a knowledge of the conditions, would have the temerity to start it?

DRYGOODSMEN IN PARLIAMENT.

THERE have just been elected to the British Parliament several prominent gentlemen connected with the textile and dry goods trades.

Among these may be mentioned Mr. S. F. Ridley, floor cloth manufacturer, Bethnal Green; W. A. McArthur, colonial merchant, St. Austell; A. Wylie, calico printer, Dumbartonshire; G. McCrae, hatter, East Edinburgh; James Reid, worsted and yarn spinner, Greenock; George Kemp, flannel manufacturer, Heywood, Lancashire; T. C. Taylor, woollen manufacturer, Radcliffe, Lancashire; N. W. Helme, baize and leather cloth manufacturer, North Lancashire; W. L. Jackson, worsted manufacturer, North Leeds; Maurice Levy, clothing and woollens, Loughborough; John Barker, draper, Maidstone; Sir William Thorburn, woollens, Peebles; Sir John Baker, woollen merchant, Portsmouth; C. B. Renshaw, carpet manufacturer, West Renfrewshire; John Brigg, worsted spinner, Keighley, Yorkshire; J. H. Duncan, worsted spinner, Otley, Yorkshire; G. Whiteley, cotton spinner, Pudsey, Yorkshire; Colonel Milward, needle manufacturer, Stratford-on-Avon.

In Canada, several prominent members of the dry goods and allied trades are candidates in the election about to take place, including Mr. William R. Brock, Centre Toronto; Mr. James D. Allan, West Toronto; Mr. John Flett, Centre Toronto; Mr. S. F. McKinnon, Halton; Mr. Bennett Rosamond, North Lanark; Mr. M. K. Richardson, South Grey; Mr. J. Kendry, West Peterborough; Mr. T. B. Caldwell, North Lanark, and others. The fact that worthy men of this kind are offering themselves for the House of Commons is one of the most salutary features of present political life. We have already in the Senate several gentlemen, like Senator McSweeney, who are a credit to that body. The more dry-goods men who get into Parliament the better it will be. There are enough lawyers and professional politicians there already.

 This department is conducted and prepared by Mr. Edmund Lister, a Canadian resident in New York, and one enjoying a high reputation as an expert and authority on all advertising matters.

Mr. Lister will be pleased to answer questions regarding advertising, to give the assistance and advice which an expert is so well qualified to give, and to criticize advertisements which may be submitted to him.

It is intended that the department shall be helpful, practical and well up-to-date.

Correspondents should address their letters to "Good Advertising Department," THE DRY GOODS REVIEW, Toronto.

OF advertising there are two distinct schools. One dates back to the very inception of the art, and is still in great vogue, best described as display type. The other, of more modern origin, employed by Wanamaker, Rogers, Peet and imitators ad infinitum, known as the powers or pica reading matter style. The former has many votaries; the latter many admirers. Indeed, so enamored of the new form are many theorists that they can no longer see any merit whatever in the old. Both, it appears to me, have their respective advantages and are capable of equal possibilities. Results, be it remembered, are dependent not so much upon the mold in which the advertisement is made as upon the constituents and make-up of the matter itself. Given a Wanamakerian writer, who would hesitate about choosing the pica reading matter? Yet, what could be worse than that style in the hands of the amateur ad.-maker? It is not so much a question of which style is best, but which is best adapted to the conditions. But, into a discussion of the conflicting claims of the two schools, I must not now digress. Suffice it to say that out of every five advertisers of the present day at least four favor display type, and my object at the present time is to draw the attention of merchants, who employ that style, to the importance of effective, artistic typography.

Many imagine that when the ad. is written they have completed their task. They have touched the button and the rest must be left to the tender mercies of the compositor. Yet, no greater mistake could be made. No one knows as well as the writer what he really wishes to convey; no one, therefore, can so intelligently determine the typographical dress essential to its clearness and effectiveness. Why, then, leave such a vital matter to the caprices of a compositor, who has not the same interest, and, if he had, cannot possibly divine the writer's conception. It is, indeed, wonderful how well compositors succeed with such little data to guide them. But they cannot do impossibilities, and their conception of proper display and effective setting may be diametrically opposed to the writer's plan and purpose. Typos are not mind readers. The subject matter should, of course, be the star attraction, but there is no printed matter so intensely interesting that the method of arranging the types, by which it is conveyed to the reader, can be passed over as of trivial importance.

In the first place, Mr. Merchant, supply yourself with specimen cards of display types used by the papers in which you advertise. A slight study of these will easily familiarize you with any technical terms hereinafter employed. Leave nothing to the judgment of the compositor. Be assured he has enough to worry him without acting architect of your advertisements. Decide yourself what types you want, how you want them set and spaced, and mark the same on copy, so that there can be no room for doubt or misconception.

Before the novice can reasonably hope to become expert in the arrangement of type, it is important that he should have a clear idea of the effect he wishes to produce. He must first know what good display is, and what are the points that make it read.

If he undertakes to study the matter, he will first perceive that, in most pieces of display, there are various sizes and styles of type. He will rightfully infer that contrast is one of the methods by which the desired effect is produced. He will notice contrast in the sizes, shapes and shades of type. He will see that a line of capitals is often followed by a line of lower case; that a long line is preceded by a short line; that the prominent lines are black while the catch-lines are small and light; that antique type appears all the blacker and bolder by reason of its juxtaposition with light-faced roman; that prominent lines are most prominent, when they are not followed or preceded by lines of the same length.

In a word, the inference would be that bold and effective display can be secured only by using the best method of making contrast; indeed, that display itself is nothing but contrast. To a great extent this is true, but not always correct. True it certainly is in regard to posters and all printing intended to be read at a distance, but not so in newspapers or bookwork, where violent contrasts are useless and in bad taste. Harmony in the grouping of type was essential in one case as contrast is in another.

And here we come to another rule—the finer, more artistic and elegant the class of work the less need of contrast and the more need of harmony. There may indeed be contrasts in the lines of the types, sometimes in the shapes, but there must be harmony in the general effect. All the lines must look as if they were in some way connected.

Methods of securing contrast may be thus classified :

I. Contrast of Size.—That is, types of various styles from agate up.

THIS IS AGATE.
THIS IS MINION.
THIS IS BREVIER.
THIS IS LONG PRIMER.

II. Contrast of Styles.—As roman, italic, antique, gothic, ornamental, scripts, etc.; also by the radical difference between capitals and lower case.

III. Contrast of Shade.—Roman type is light, while antique, gothic and titles are black in shade. By the skillful contrasting of these two distinct shades, the most violent contrasts are produced. Ornamental types occupy a middle position twixt the Tartarean blackness of antique and the "octoroonness" of roman.

IV. Contrast of Shape.—The plain form, condensed and expanded. The style of type used in one line must be in contrast to, yet in agreement with, the type in preceding and following lines.

* * *

Now please note, Mr. Ad maker, the following hints, and, if deemed worthy, apply the shears and file them for future reference.

Hint 1.—Two displayed lines of the same size and length should not be allowed together. Their proximity and uniformity prevent contrast and defeat display.

Hint 2.—Large display advertisements should have one leading line, superior to all others in size, clearness and effect. The words that give a key to all the other matter should have the greatest prominence; all else subordinate.

Hint 3.—Minor display lines should be of irregular length.

Hint 4.—When a number of display lines are grouped together, and all are intended to be set in the same style of type, the effect is heightened by giving them an irregular indenture, thus :

.....
.....
.....
.....

Hint 5.—There is no objection to many very large display types, provided there are not too many similarly prominent lines in same advertisement.

Hint 6.—Large display lines should never be close together; separate them by blank space or printed matter in smaller type.

Hint 7.—The value of large type is dependent on its contrast with the type preceding and following it. Frequently, the smallest type, by its very minuteness, if there be no large type in the same ad., makes nearly as conspicuous a line as one set in the largest type.

Hint 8.—Avoid a profuse peppering of italics or capitals.

Hint 9.—Display lines should be as nearly equidistant as possible. Nothing more disfigures display advertising than the huddling together of the leading lines.

Hint 10.—Seldom employ more than one style of display type in one advertisement. Vary the size as you may, but let the style be the same. This also applies to the reading matter.

Hint 11.—If dry goods be the theme, set introductions to items in, say, small pica lower case, and descriptions of goods in brevier.

Hint 12.—If these rules and cautions at first perusal appear needless and unprofitable, be pleased to take up any Canadian or American newspaper, scan advertising columns carefully and critically, and, honor bright, is'nt there another guess coming?

These columns, it is the intention of the writer to make very practical. From time to time he will present specimens of what he considers display masterpieces, and, by comments and annotations, endeavor to convey some hints or suggestions that may prove helpful and valuable.

BARGAIN SALES.

Poll the drygoodsmen from Maine to California, and ten to one will be the verdict in favor of "bargain sales."

While almost every merchant will concede that not another method is so effective in attracting new trade, a select few affect to be in doubt whether the benefit thus derivable be not bought too dearly, when purchased at the sacrifice of dignity and prestige and oftentimes at the expense of regular and legitimate business. By the latter, the 400 of trade, it is contended that bargain is a term to be tabooed—a business vulgarism suggestive of Bowery and buncombe—the mere mention of which would be fatal to a firm catering to a select and fastidious clientele.

* * *

But, were this objection invalid, another is at hand. A bargain, to be genuine, presupposes and implies a desirable article at an appreciable reduction in price. Now, the contention is, that in proportion as a bargain is under price, does it become difficult to sell regular lines at par. Hence, that the adoption of the "bargain sale" system is not only a negative detriment, but a positive injury to regular and legitimate trade. And, from many a standpoint, the argument is as sound as it appears plausible.

Very circumscribed, however, is the circle of a "smart set" and millionaires, alas, even in these days of trusts and monopolies, they are in a sad minority. As nine merchants out of ten are dependent for patronage upon the masses, not the classes, the objection to "bargains sales," as above cited, lose all their pertinence.

"Bargain sales" have been tried and tested in every form, and field, and the almost universal verdict is handed down that if of genuine merit and rightly conducted they cannot fail of satisfactory results.

So long, indeed, as economy is a consideration and money an object, the word "bargain" will prove a potent one to conjure with. Now, how should these sales be conducted?

* * *

In the first place, the bargain, so called, should, of course, be so in more than name. An attempt to palm off an everyday value as an extraordinary bargain may be temporarily successful, but, depend upon it, there will be a recoil as of a boomerang. Polished pewter may occasionally pass for solid silver, but, when returns are all in, the profits thus made will be difficult to distinguish from loss. Be positive that the bargain is a bargain.

In a small business, where the merchant is his own advertiser, no excuse can exist for misstatement. He not only writes the ad. but buys the goods, and knows whereof he affirms. In large establishments, however, where department buyers prepare their own list of "specials," misrepresentations are very common. This is a point calling for close scrutiny and ceaseless vigilance on the part of the proprietor. Heads of departments cannot always have real bargains on hand at advertiser's beck and call, and, in their anxiety to increase sales without sacrifice of profits, are prone to masquerade regular lines as extraordinary values.

* * *

The writer was once advertiser for a leading New York department store where this practice obtained. The junior partner undertook to stamp it out and succeeded. He called a meeting of his buying staff and said to them, in effect, thus: "Boys, there has been too much misrepresentation about advertised bargains. I am convinced of it. You may not think it a blunder. I deem it a crime. It must stop. Hereafter, every item before being admitted to advertising columns must be submitted for my inspection. You must tell me all about it. I don't expect you to be always buying bargains for special sales. You will make mistakes in forecasting fashions, or be too optimistic in gauging demands. That's natural. Don't be afraid to own it. Don't hide those blunders in stockrooms, or top shelves, only to be inventoried yearly at increasing depreciation. Bring them out, boys, and let's make bargains out of our mistakes."

* * *

That new policy almost revolutionized the returns from that firm's advertisements. They began to have a drawing power never before experienced. Yet the style and arrangement of the ads. were in no wise altered. But the magnets were stronger.

* * *

Secondly,—As the preachers say, the bargain should be an article both new and desirable—never a collection of shopkeepers or Rip Van Winkles. If, as in instance above cited, buyers make mistakes, as all will, they should be encouraged to clear them while still salable at whatever sacrifice.

Thirdly,—There should be a present demand for the goods. The sale of furs in Summer, or gauze underwear in Winter, though now somewhat the vogue, is not to be recommended. It is assuredly unsound in theory and very dubious in practice.

* * *

Fourthly,—The ad should describe the article—the fuller the better. For example :

Women's night-gowns, worth 50c., only 39c.

Now, belief in the genuineness of this bargain is purely a matter of faith in the veracity of the advertiser ; whereas a fuller description would corroborate and emphasize the value thus ascribed, as for instance the same article thus described :

Women's night-gowns, fine muslin, tucked yoke, and V shaped, cambric ruffile—regular value 50c—for this sale 39c.

By such a description any woman knows that the garment must be worth the value claimed, which at sale price is an undoubted bargain. This lessens the tax on credulity.

* * *

Fifthly,—The same "bargain sales" ad. should seldom appear twice in the same medium. There are, of course, exceptions to this rule—such for example, as in event of inclement weather. Otherwise, the inference is clear that the goods have not met with takers and are still endeavoring to awaken a drowsy public to an appreciation of their merits. If in daily mediums, change ads. every day. So in weeklies. Almanacs eschew.

MONTMORENCY COTTON MILL OWNERS.

At the annual meeting of the Montmorency Cotton Mills Co. the following shareholders were present: C. R. Whitehead, H. M. Price, John T. Ross, Alex. Pringle, Thos. Pringle, and L. G. Craig, also the following shareholders: John Dillon, Hon. P. Garneau, Robert Brodie, Wm. Brodie, Geo. W. Sadler, E. McDougall, G. Lemoine, E. Vadeboncoeur, W. D. Brown, N. Fortier, J. L. Hardy, F. Billingsley, S. H. Dunn, T. A. Piddington, E. W. Methot, L. C. Marcoux, F. G. Daniels. Mr. C. R. Whitehead, the president, was in the chair. A satisfactory report of the year's business was presented. The shareholders inspected the mill, as well as the new buildings, and appeared to be pleased at the size and capacity of the works. Samples of the product of the mills were shown in the room where the meeting was held, so that the shareholders were able to see exactly what sort of goods were being produced. The new cotton shed is an extensive building, being 245 ft. long, by 90 ft. wide. The upper storeys will also be used for manufacturing purposes.

VELVET RIBBONS.

An American exchange says: "Much to the surprise of the general trade, who predicted that the demand for velvet ribbons was spasmodic, the demand increases from narrow widths extending to the entire line." For our own market Brophy, Cains & Co. have just received a large shipment, in both cotton and satin backs, and are prepared to fill all orders promptly.

Lace of all kinds, says an English correspondent, but especially Honiton lace—hand-made—appears to be in high favor just now. The Queen's fondness for it is well known, and she has always preferred it for the wedding dresses of her daughters. Not so, however, with the generality of ladies. Brussels lace appealed rather to their taste, but with the new patriotic wave that has swept over the country the interest in British lace has been revived.

PROTEST OF THE SHIRT AND COLLAR MANUFACTURERS.

At a meeting of The Shirt and Collar Manufacturers' Association of Canada, held on October 12, 1900, in Montreal, the following statement was submitted to and approved by the meeting :

1. The shirt and collar industry in Canada was one of small compass previous to the introduction of the National Policy, but, having received a measure of protection thereby, it became one of great importance and prospered under that policy.

2. It has been conclusively proved that our industry has had to contend in a great measure against the pauper labor of Europe, and the slaughtering of goods by United States exporters.

3. Immediately before the last general election the then Mr. Laurier sent a request to this association not to oppose his party, and at the same time giving his assurance that in the event of the Liberals being returned to power no tariff legislation would be passed that would in any way injure our position.

4. The present Government, in readjusting the tariff, swept away all specific duties previously given, leaving the same duty on raw material as on finished products (manifestly unfair), thereby almost eliminating every vestige of protection which our industry had previously enjoyed.

5. After several petitions had been sent and deputations had called upon the Government in connection with our industry, the Cabinet recognized the justice of our complaint and inserted Clause 331-A in the revised tariff, but through influence, best known to the Cabinet, they withdrew this measure of protection, and by doing so left our industry liable to be seriously affected at any time, when business conditions were such that foreign exporters could seek our country as a market for the product of their underpaid labor or to slaughter goods.

6. The association has, on several occasions, waited upon the Government by deputations, and has pointed out the injustice inflicted on our industry by tariff legislation.

Private members have called personally on the Ministers regarding such injustice.

Members of Parliament on the floor of the House, and the press of Canada, irrespective of party, have pointed out the said injustice, but, notwithstanding this, the Government has refused to grant any measure of relief or to give our appeals a fair and businesslike consideration.

Wherefore, we, The Shirt and Collar Manufacturers' Association of Canada, in meeting assembled, hereby unanimously resolve: That the present Government having seen fit to take away from the shirt and collar manufacturers of Canada the protection they had in their several lines of manufacture, notwithstanding the protests of this association, of members of Parliament and of the press of Canada; and having since refused to grant any measure of relief from the injustice inflicted upon the shirt and collar industry, which injustice affects about 8,000 working people and a vast amount of capital, we, The Shirt and Collar Manufacturers' Association of Canada hereby put on record our unqualified condemnation of the action of the Government, in connection with our respective manufactures, and declare that the Government of the day is unworthy of the support of this association and of its members.

A DRY GOODS LETTER FROM NEW YORK.

Trade quiet pending the Elections—The Recent Silk Sales—Velvets having a Big Run—Gold Decorations Overdone—Fashions in Cloaks, Suits and Skirts—The Bishop Sleeve making way—Features in the Corset Trade—Latest Styles in Millinery.

FROM THE DRY GOODS REVIEW'S special correspondent.

New York, October 29, 1900.

THE general trend of business in the entire dry goods field for the past month has been along the same lines as from the beginning of the Fall season; viz: a great deal of activity but no volume to the individual transactions.

The season was slow in opening, and the evident inclination of buyers to hold back and be conservative, while not so pronounced, is still present. The questions of style that have been so long in coming to a head have been, to a large extent, eliminated, and there is nothing now in the way except a conservative policy and a lack of cold weather. On the whole, merchants have settled down to the firm conviction that there will be no change in the general run of light business, but that, in the end, the aggregate of sales will not be behind the record of previous years.

THE EFFECT OF THE ELECTIONS.

The outcome of the elections is a matter of great moment to the dry goods trade, and is the great topic of discussion at the present moment, for the time being even more important than style considerations. The entire business community has fixed its attention on this one event, and business has not that buoyancy and snap which should characterize it at this time of the year. Buyers are very cautious and will not commit themselves on any large deals till after the election—November 6.

The general uncertainty has apparently not extended to the public, as they have responded liberally, and after every period of cold weather a new batch of orders comes in, indicating that the people's wants are largely influenced by the thermometer.

STATE OF AFFAIRS IN SILKS.

The sensation of the silk trade was the auction of the surplus production of three large silk mills, consisting of over 7,000 pieces of black and colored taffetas, peau-de-soie, satin duchesse, foulards and chiffons, and about 1,000 pieces of imported novelties. Declining conditions in the silk trade have been responsible for overproduction, and a narrowing market has forced a good deal of the manufactured product on the market at prices lower than the actual cost of production. The auction sale was attended by some of the largest silk buyers in the country. The effect of the sale was more or less demoralizing on certain lines, as the silk market is none too firm. Black taffetas brought only fair prices, while the colored taffetas were sacrificed. The novelties also went very low. The purchases were well distributed between retail houses and manufacturers, and furnished the material for a series of special sales among metropolitan retailers, in which taffetas were offered as low as 37½c. per yard at retail.

VELVETS AT THEIR HEIGHT.

Velvets have had a very successful run this season and are still prime favorites in many directions. Plain blacks are the favorites for the medium trade, while panne and miroir effects have been singled out for the fine trade. There are many novelties in striped, dotted and figured pannes, as well as raised floral designs and embossed and corrugated effects, that have been taken up with enthusiasm. For costumes and cloaks, plain velvets are most in requisition, while for waists, panne has the call. Exclusive of black, the popular shades are brown, cardinal, tan and grey. Velvets are also extensively used for trimmings on waists, jackets, skirts and hats. The finer goods are being imitated in the cheap cotton pile, and this may eventually operate against the whole field.

THE FAD FOR GOLD EFFECTS.

The most noticeable development in women's lines has been the craze for gold effects. Everywhere and on everything gold is being placed indiscriminately, and seemingly without any other reason than that it is the prevailing fad. Belts and chatelaine bags, partially or entirely of gold, gold braids for trimming waists and suits, gold and tinsel effects on neckwear and feathers, and such a mass of gold that it becomes tiresome to the eye. Gold braids that have in some instances been held for seven years have been brought out and marketed at prices that were not dreamed of a short time ago. The large unusual demand has created a shortage in the supply which has raised prices and has indirectly contributed to the greater prominence of this latest popular fancy.

CLOAK STYLES.

In the cloak field there is a greater degree of confidence than has obtained for many a day. The marked earlier tendencies in favor of long garments have developed into an actual demand, and many re-orders on long garments show which way the wind blows. The transition is not yet complete, and there is a compromise on the medium lengths, but the extreme long garments already predominate in the fine grades. The lengths from 36 to 40 inches are those on which the main business is being done. The most popular models have a semi-tight fitting back and box front. The box coat, 24 to 26 inches long, retains its hold and is a formidable rival to the longer garments. Of course, short jackets have not been thrown over entirely, but it is very generally agreed that the bulk of the demand for the rest of the season will centre on the long cloaks. Fur trimmings are very popular, as well as fur collars and revers. Silk brocades combined with furs are popular in the extreme lines. The popular colors are tan, brown, pearl, mode, grey, red, black and Oxfords. Plush and velour jackets, mostly in the longer lengths, are also in fair demand, as well as combinations of furs and plushes.

TAILOR MADES HOLD THEIR OWN.

The demand for tailor-made suits holds on remarkably well, probably on account of the continuance of mild weather. The blouse front is unquestionably the leader, but bolero effects are also prominent. There is a marked preference for trimmings, embroideries and gold effects rather than the plainness which has characterized this class of garments for so long. Military effects with gold braid are the newest addition to the line.

THE WALKING SKIRT.

In separate skirts, the walking skirt is still "king of the walk." The persistence of the demand for these garments indicates a widespread popularity that is bound to affect the skirt business in general and has appreciably affected some other lines. Prices (wholesale) run all the way from $1.50 to $25, depending on the quality of the material and the class of workmanship. In dress skirts, taffeta and peau de soie are in moderate demand, especially in flounced models and variously trimmed with ruffles and worked in tucks, plaits and hem-stitched effects. Graduated flounces are also in evidence. Broadcloths, plain and corded, and zibelenes are also selling well. There is a noted tendency to exaggerate the flare of the skirt at the bottom, and to accentuate the bell forms.

WAIST FASHIONS.

In waists there is a more decided movement in favor of flannels, which are beyond question the leaders of the market and engross the attention of all classes. All grades have come in for their share of popularity, from the waist that retails for 69 cents to the one that retails for $15. In the medium grades, the more popular models are with vest and rever effects and Etons in contrasting colors.

Gold trimmings are very much used on the new styles—narrow and wide braids, bowknots, etc., are variously employed. The tendency to overdo is already apparent and will be the first thing to turn the tide of popular favor against this gaudy finery. Beyond this, there have been no radical changes since the beginning of the season and the earlier models with tucks, plaits, box plaits, fancy stitching and chenille are still in the foreground. Stripes of self material and color are much called for.

The "Bishop" sleeve is increasing in popularity and is regarded as the coming sleeve for the Spring season as well as for the balance of the Fall. A great variety of cuffs are shown, but, with the exception of fine dress waists in silk, the preference is for neat effects approaching the shirt cuff.

SILK PETTICOATS HEARD FROM.

A revival of interest in taffeta silk petticoats is apparent. For a long time the sale of silk petticoats has fallen off, but there is again a movement in their favor. Originally, mercerized cottons interfered with the cheaper grades and then white petticoats during the Summer. The unsettled price of silks was also another factor which operated against the taffeta underskirt, as neither manufacturers nor buyers could afford to load up on a declining market. The rainy-day skirt also exerted an adverse influence. However, the silk skirt is again popular, and is being bought very freely both for immediate needs and the holiday trade. Lace-trimmed effects are the most popular in the fine grades; the cheaper end still sticks to plain and novelty accordeon plaitings and ruffles. The favored shades are turquoise and old rose, but black is far and away the leader. The prices range from $3.25 to $75 wholesale. The most popular styles are those which retail from $5 to $10. The rainy day skirt is responsible for the demand for a rainy day petticoat which differs from the regular models only in length, being approximately 36 inches. Mercerized sateens, and various grades of domestic and imported mohairs are the popular fabrics in these models. In the general lines, mercerized sateens, and mercerized moreens are the favorites for the popular trade.

THE CORSET TRADE.

In the corset field the straight-front models have gradually worked their way into favor, and are now the most popular in the list. Of course, the regular shapes have not gone out of style, but, as is usual, every new departure is welcomed and boomed along with so much noise that the staples seem to be neglected. Straight-front corsets have been selling for some time in the fine grades, but it is only lately that they have been brought out in the popular-priced $1.50 and $1 corsets. The accepted models have an uncurved steel and a medium bust, but there are extremes either way, with a preference for the low bust. The era of the straight-front corset marks a revolution in the corset industry, as it necessitates new patterns and a more radical change of models than has appeared for years. Whether the straight-fronts are here to stay, or will be only a passing incident of the same character as the short corset, is the burning question of the corset trade. The public are taking very kindly to the straight-front models, and there is every reason to believe that, for a time at least, the demand for straight-fronts will be on the increase.

THE FASHIONS IN MILLINERY.

Business in the millinery field has been active, but not brisk. The new play, "L'Aiglon," is responsible for many things, including the popularity of the Continental-hat, three-cornered, in felt, variously trimmed with gold braid and a cockade of ribbon or fancy feathers.

For the popular trade felt hats hold their own.

For the medium and fine trade the short-back toque with uplifted brim twisted into various shapes with trimming under the left side of ostrich or fancy feathers, the latter preferred.

Amazon plumes are very much in evidence, especially on the Amazon hat, which is shown in variously modified forms with the front brim pointed down and plain or trimmed rolling sides and a bell crown.

Plume effects also are quite prominent in hackle and nageois, usually combined with ostrich plumes and set off with steel or gold buckles.

Mirroi, panne and embossed velvets are in the front rank of popularity.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.

A very inexpensive present for the Christmas time is a fancy box of handkerchiefs (and, too, a profitable line for the retailer). Brophy, Cains & Co. have just received a full range of childrens' and ladies' handkerchiefs, put up in fancy boxes in $\frac{1}{4}$ and $\frac{1}{2}$ dozens. All prices, from \$1.30 to \$7.50 per dozen boxes. These are all exclusive designs, very free sellers, all put up in cartons of half dozen boxes.

Mr. J. W. Elliott, of Windsor, N.S., has enlarged his store by taking in the one next door, and using it entirely for men's furnishings. There will be an archway connecting the two stores together in the rear. This gives Mr. Elliott a frontage of 75 feet.

Messrs. Hebert S. Cowan, V. E. Ashdown and H. B. Johnston, son of W. R. Johnston, of Toronto, were about starting a window shade factory in Toronto, under the name of The Merchants Shade Co., but before completing their arrangements they were successful in buying out The Menzie-Turner Co., Limited, manufacturers of window shades, etc. The new firm will run under the style of Menzie-Turner, Limited. Mr. V. E. Ashdown will represent them in Western Canada. Mr. Heber S. Cowan, who was formerly representing Geo. H. Hees, Son & Co. in the Maritime Provinces, will resume his old ground for the new company.

Phases and Incidents of Trade in the Stores of Progressive Merchants.

SPOT CASH & CO. is the very suggestive name of Robert Sterling's dry goods store in St. Thomas, Ont. The firm have lately been compelled to move to more commodious apartments on account of the increase in their business, and on September 15 held an opening in the new store which was a huge success. Hundreds of people took the opportunity to make selections from Spot Cash & Co.'s well-assorted stock. During the opening a phonograph rendered a programme of the latest selections in vocal and instrumental music. The firm are giving to their customers 1,000 souvenirs of the St. Thomas boys in South Africa. The new store presents a handsome appearance, both outside and inside, the windows being especially attractive.

HAS ADOPTED THE CASH SYSTEM.

James Buchanan, dry goods, Deseronto, who has adopted the cash system, is well pleased with the results.

BUSINESS IS GOOD.

Crumley Bros., Kingston, have moved their finely-assorted dry goods to new buildings. The new store is up-to-date in every detail, the size being 27x133. It is heated by hot water, and lighted by prisms. Their cash system is the Sampson's electric cable system, run by a motor of their own. They report business as far ahead of other years.

A FREDERICTON STORE'S SUCCESS.

Three years ago, Mr. M. Fickler came from Quebec city and opened a dry goods store in what is known as the John Macdonald Block, Fredericton, N.B. At that time he only had half of the block. But, with rapid-growing business, Mr. Fickler was forced to take in the whole block. Last Spring he bought the stock of T. G. O'Connor and took over his store, which adjoins his own.

Mr. Fickler said "I am running a dry goods departmental store, carrying everything in that line." When asked how he could account for such growth of trade in so short a time, he merely answered "advertising. I use the daily papers regularly, but I never allow one ad. to remain more than 24 hours without being changed."

"One thing I do, and which I find pays me, is to give my clerks two weeks' holidays every Summer. They come back fresh and with more vigor for work."

Mr. Fickler visits Quebec, Montreal and Toronto about four times a year for ideas and to pick up job lines that he might happen on. Between the stores is a door leading to the second storey. In this he has placed a mirror the full size of the door. On the top is "M. Fickler & Co.," and the bottom, "Dry Goods, Etc." It is so placed that one cannot pass without noticing it, and the ladies pass up and down to see if their dresses set right, which makes a good ad.

Tennant, Davis & Clarke, of Fredericton, have made improvements in their fine store, and the addition made not only gives them more room, but adds as well an exclusive department which their increasing business made necessary. A large and ornamental balcony has been built along one side at the rear of their main store, the balcony being supported by iron rods from the ceiling, is reached by an easy flight of steps. This balcony has a polished hardwood floor, and is finely fitted up in every way. It is used exclusively as a cloak department.

A. Sweet & Co., general merchants, Winchester, report business very prosperous, and wrote their receipt 1902 for the first time.

Fahey & Co., Napanee, show a pair of the best dressed windows we have seen. "Study and perseverance" is their artist's motto.

J. Thompson & Bro., general merchants, Havelock, report having a successful season's business and are now opening a general store at Cordova. The gold mines at this place are just now booming.

R. Miller, Deseronto, has enlarged his premises to make room for his ready-made clothing and men's furnishings, which now occupy a separate department, entered from the main store by an arched doorway, and is enjoying a prosperous season's trade.

Pettersen & Heckbert's store at Chatham, N.B., is being greatly improved. The high steps in front have been removed, and the floor lowered nearly to the sidewalk level. Workmen are changing the other half side of the building, formerly used as a residence, into a store.

Graff & Wepler, of Hanover, will remove their entire stock into E. S. Cressman's old stand, and the owner of the block is making extensive improvements. The store will be painted, new plate-glass windows will be put in, and the windows will also be deepened, in order that the firm may make a good display. The changes made will give easier access to the spacious millinery department on the second flat.

Frank Stevenson, Simcoe, has moved into handsome new premises in the Mather block. No expense has been spared in the renovating of the place. A fine plate-glass front, with expensive paper of artistic design and the best graining unite to make the new store one of the most commodious and handsome tailor shops in Western Ontario.

NEW BELTS.

For the Christmas trade, Brophy, Cains & Co. are showing some new patent leather belts, in novel shapes and finishes, such as the tapering belt which is still a hot favorite, the "shaped" belt, a novelty tending to lengthen the waist, the pointed belt and, of course, also staple lines, with snap and buckle fasteners; also some lines in the soft Swede finish, so much asked for now. Popular prices in all makes.

TWO GOLD MEDALS.

Messrs. G. D. Ross & Co., 648 Craig street, Montreal, Canadian agents for Henry Millward & Sons, Limited, Redditch, England, have just received information to the effect that the exhibit of needles and fish hooks that their firm made at the Paris Exposition won for them two gold medals. The list of awards that this firm have won for their celebrated products is growing quite lengthy, for they obtained the highest awards in needles, fish hooks and fishing tackle at Chicago in 1893; Antwerp, 1894, and Brussels, 1897. This is eminent proof of the superiority of workmanship of the Washford Mills.

Hat, Cap and

Fur Trade.

Present Retail Trade.

The retail hat trade has not been so good for a number of years as it is this Fall.

The American tourist trade has been exceptionally large in the cities during the past few months, the sales being principally on fedoras, in all shapes and styles. The grey shades are now disappearing and for cooler weather dark browns are being worn.

The trade in stiff hats is at present equal to, if not greater than, that in fedoras. The small shape is selling particularly well to young men, while a large crown and brim is worn by older buyers.

Sables In England.

Sable has become so prohibitive in price of late years, writes "Norah" in The Draper's Record, that the fortunate possessor of good sables is scarcely to be blamed for taking every opportunity of displaying the same. Fortunately, the soft beautiful hues of good sable render the fur equally suitable for evening or for day wear. Thus, nothing could have been more glorious than a long white cloth wrap, trimmed with the inevitable cloth applique—in this case stitched on with silver thread—and garnished with a high collar, and revers of the matchless fur. The sleeves were very smart, and might have been inspired by one or other of the altogether admirable "Stuart" sleeves in the "Nell Gwyn" pieces. They are very wide and open, and bordered with sable, but underneath were undersleeves gathered unto a wristband, and of very rich silk guipure of the fashionable Paris ecru shade. I have seen, with great admiration, several wired colors of this lace, and duly envied those who wore smart little boleros of it. There is a certain quiet chic about the tone, which will for ever preserve it from being the beloved of the "Arriettes," who providentially prefer a good, deep, effective, coffee-colored garniture.

Hat Trade Notes.

Rabbits, once a pest in Australia, are now a source of considerable wealth. The skins are exported for hat fur. For the year ending June 30, 1900, the colony of Victoria exported nearly $1,250,000 worth of rabbits.

W. A. Giguere & Frere have commenced the hat and fur business in Montreal.

F. C. Fraser & Co., London, Ont., have commenced the manufacture of hats and caps.

A. Gorn & Co., hatters and furriers, Montreal, have assigned to Bilodeau & Chalifoux.

James H. Rogers, hatter and furrier, Winnipeg, Man., has assigned to E. R. C. Clarkson, Toronto.

Hats for men are imported into Paraguay from England, France, Buenos Ayres and Montevideo. The selling prices are exorbitant, twice as high as in the United States for the same class of goods. A derby, which costs about $2 in the United States, sells there for $4 and sometimes $5. Soft hats are very much in demand and sell at even a greater profit. The hats which have the largest sale are of good, but not of the best, quality.

British hat makers supply most of the Egyptians with headgear. In men's hats they do the most trade; Italy, whose trade is increasing from year to year, coming second; in soft hats Britain is almost unrivalled. France practically monopolizes the trade in ladies' and tropical hats, and also does a good trade in caps, but in men's straw hats she has lost her trade in favor of the cheaper Greek article. English felt hats are the dearest, costing from $1.25 to $2 apiece, whereas the Italian article only costs from 5 to 7 francs.

Decline in Furs.

The October fur sale of C. M. Lampson & Co., London, Eng., which has recently taken place, showed a decline in the majority of goods offered, especially in the article of fox. The decline on this latter line amounts to from 25 to 50 per cent. on the different species, the red showing the heaviest reduction, of 50 per cent., from the values of last March. This was anticipated, as red fox has been considered by all the dealers to have gone considerably beyond its value during the past season. Beaver remains at the same value it maintained last Spring; wolf is 50 per cent. lower. A few of the Australian furs have held their own in price, one or two lines advancing slightly above last year's prices—about 5 to 7½ per cent.

The March sales will, no doubt, be governed to a certain extent by the prices obtained at the October sales, and a general decline in values is anticipated.

There have been newspaper reports to the effect that Persian lamb has advanced 20 per cent., but reliable sources of information could not confirm the statement. Persian lamb is firm, but any change in price is not noticeable.

The Boer and His Hat.

The Boer is not a stickler in the matter of dress. As long as he is more or less covered up and protected from the cold—for heat has no effect on him—he is all right. His clothing is, as a rule, a collection of odds and ends picked up at the trading store, and no two Boers are dressed quite alike, with the exception of their headgear, and in this respect they all exactly resemble each other. A few of the leaders of the nation, including the President, have adopted the silk hat, but these do not represent the country; they are but sands in the desert and have no bearing on the subject. The Boer hat is what is called in South-African parlance a "smasher." Like its wearer, it invariably presents every appearance of neglect. It is always in the last stage of decay. The man who has seen a Boer wearing a new "smasher" has not yet been discovered.

The Boer uses his hat for many purposes besides the one for which it was originally intended. When he is on the veldt he will use it to take the kettle off from the fire. If he wants a drink he will dip the hat in the stream and drink from the brim; in this case he will turn it inside out to let the damper part dry, and will wear it in this manner. When he does this he presents an even more bizarre appearance than is usually the case. When he feels the need of a handkerchief the hat again comes into use as a substitute, and when he goes to bed at night he uses it as a nightcap by pressing it well down over his ears. I lived on one occasion for several months on a farm in the Transvaal. During this period, the only occasion when I saw the "old man" without his hat was one night when, as we were driving back to the farm from the dorp, it blew away, and he was unable to find it. When we arrived at the house he went hastily into the back room, and presently returned wearing another head-covering, which was an exact duplicate of the one he had recently lost. It is this incident which leads me to hold the opinion that in some far gone age the Boers laid in a stock of hats, and that they keep them until they have, so to say, properly matured before using them. The Boer in question had lost over 20 head of cattle by the rinderpest, but the loss of his hat seemed to prey on his mind more than the loss of his cattle; and in his grief he finished the bottle of whiskey I had brought back with me before he retired.

On the farms the women also wear the Boer smasher. It is painful to have to speak ill of the weaker sex, but the Boer woman is the most unlovely specimen of femininity that the world has yet produced, and the smasher does not in any way detract from this appearance. To see a Boer woman, weighing about 15 stone, wobbling across the yard in ill-fitting "veldtschoen," and with a dirty smasher hat crushed down on her ill-kempt locks, is enough to turn a man into a woman-hater on the spot, until he returns to the colony and fairer objects drive the hideous spectacle from his mental vision. I have never yet penetrated into the inmost recesses of a Boer hat, and I do not know where they were originally manufactured, and whether the maker put his name inside them or not, but I would be willing to lay reasonable odds that he did not do so.—Sydney Storekeeper.

Military Headgear in Africa. Nearly all of us out here in South Africa on service keep two different kind of hats, writes a military correspondent of The London Times. One which we wear on parade and in which we do our work, and another which we keep for comfort, and change into as soon as we arrive in camp. The first is, of course, the helmet, and its qualities may be summed up as follows: It is uncomfortable, and is the cause of many a headache after a long day. It is heavy and hard for the head. It leaves nearly the whole of the side of the head exposed to the sun, by reason of its being cut away too much over the ears. It affords practically no protection to the eyes from glare. In fact, many of us out here wear it with the back part in front to obviate this as much as possible. You cannot see through your glasses properly unless you tilt it on to the back of your head, as the front part gets in the way. The other is the broad-brimmed soft felt hat, better known, perhaps, to people at home as the "Buffalo Bill" pattern. This is the most practical headgear for any country, except India, that has ever been invented.

A Canadian Hat Man Honored. Recently the employes of Robert Crean & Co., Toronto, which for a long time was known as Dunnet, Crean & Co., held a pleasant meeting in the sample-rooms of the factory on Balmuto street. The occasion was for the honoring of Mr.

Thomas Dunnet, the retired partner, who is going to take a well-earned rest. In order to assist him in his laudable intentions, the firm made him a present of an enticing easy chair, covered with leather. The presentation was made by Mr. Frederick E. Bailey. In doing so, he referred briefly to the admiration and respect which everybody who knew him had for Mr. Dunnet, who had taken such a considerate interest in all who worked under him. Short speeches in a similar vein were made by Mr. Williamson and Mr. Lunckerley. Mr. Dunnet was completely surprised by the gift, and expressed his appreciation of it and of the spirit which had prompted it in a feeling response. Before concluding, he expressed every possible hope for the success of the new firm, and was cordially thanked for these sentiments by Mr. Crean. The new firm are starting out with the good prestige obtained by the old, and, therefore, under good auspices.

THE CORSET TRADE.

The introduction this season of the straight-front corset marks a new era in the manufacture of this necessary addition to ladies' apparel. While many manufacturers have placed on the market a straight steel corset, they have not yet carried out the idea of the French model, which throws all the muscles of the chest forward, and gives a desirable effect and an erect form, a name that several manufacturers have adopted. When this was first introduced it was looked upon as a fad, but the actual wear of erect-forms proves that it is no fad, but will soon be the only shape that will be accepted by the ladies of Canada. This statement may seem bold, but examination of erect form corsets, as manufactured by Brush & Co., clearly demonstrates that such is the fact; and, when the views of the principal buyers and many manufacturers in the United States are taken, the prophecy will not seem to be exaggerated.

Brush & Co. are the first Canadian firm to take up the manufacture of the real French model straight-front corset, and they are of the opinion that this corset has come to stay and will revolutionize the manufacture of this garment.

MONTREAL BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

Messrs. John Lovell & Son have just published their thirteenth edition of Lovell's Business Directory, that book indispensable with Montreal business men. It contains an index to streets, tariff of Customs, and names, business and address of every firm or person doing business in Montreal. It is corrected up to July, 1900. A miscellaneous directory has been compiled with great care and adds to the book's worth. A guide to streets will serve as a handy reference. The binding is tasty and reliable. In board the Directory will sell for $1.50, 400 pages.

Trefousse & Co., manufacturers of kid gloves, Chaumont, France, having secured all highest awards at previous Expositions, were placed "hors concours" (beyond competition) at the Paris Exposition. Nothing could emphatically confirm the known merits of Trefousse gloves as this honor conferred by the French Government.

The pretty town of Omeme can certainly boast of its fine stores. The firm of T. Ivory & Sons, general merchants, of that town, have fine premises and one of the largest stocks of dry goods and groceries in that part of the country. The store is fitted up with all the modern fixtures, and lit by gas (their own plant). They intend to introduce plate-glass counters soon in which they will show their splendid assortment of smallwares.

Our Illustrated Catalogue of FUR GARMENTS, CAPES, NECKWEAR, etc., for season 1900 will be issued shortly. Send for one. You will find the styles are up-to-date and it will pay you to write us for prices.

CARPETS, CURTAINS AND WALL PAPERS.

TRADE OUTLOOK IN THE UNITED STATES.

THE disposition of many jobbers to make no arrangements for the coming season until after the election has been somewhat modified in a number of instances of late, as, for example, in the orders recently given to certain Philadelphia ingrain manufacturers to start on Spring goods, on their full capacity and time. This, says The New York Carpet Trade Review, may be fairly taken as the result of the growing confidence in the success of the sound-money candidates, and it now seems probable that a considerable number of other orders may be placed before the election.

It is not wise for buyers to figure very confidently upon any reduction in prices for the coming season, and it is certain that there can be no slump. It is indeed not at all probable that prices will be any lower.

The new lines of ingrains will be complete by November 1, but the new samples of 3 4 goods will not be shown earlier, as a rule, than November 10.

The advance on certain grades of straw mattings has been forced by these goods being now only procurable at a cost which makes them subject to a higher duty than was ever before imposed on them. The latest news from China is not reassuring to the matting trade, for it seems to show that the feeling against foreigners is growing stronger and bolder in the South, including the matting districts, where it has hitherto been held well in restraint.

Retail trade has been quite active during the past fortnight, and would doubtless have been much better if the unseasonable weather had not interfered with it.

Cotton carpet yarns keep advancing and the prices of all cotton carpets are stiffer than a few weeks ago. Smyrna rugs are selling at extremely low prices and seem to be a good purchase.

WALL PAPER AND ITS INCREASING USE.

A representative of a leading wall paper company dropped into our office the other day regarding his advertising, and we asked whether the limit of demand had been reached in his line. He appropriated our easiest chair, lit a cigar, and said: "I'll tell you how it is, Mr. Editor, I contracted for a 7-foot board fence between a lane and the end of my lot. It was to be painted on one side. When I went out to see it I found it painted on the lane side, leaving a rough wood landscape decoration viewed from my dining room. Now, about half the people in the country are still decorating the outside, which they don't see, and neglecting the interiors, which they not only see, but are greatly influenced by. A man need not own a pretentious dwelling to secure all that is good in decorative wall treatment within. If he uses ordinary taste he can give character to each room, and everything in it will borrow from the result. It is, in fact, the chief furnishing of an apartment, besides covering what was possibly an unsightly wall.

"In art, nothing is too high for its influence or too low for its attention. Yes, it's an artistic age. Why, I know a small house which quickly rented at $100 advance after it had been papered in an artistic, yet in an inexpensive way. I'll give you an idea of the scheme:

"The drawing-room was hung with a fine rococo combination in embossed cream, greens, gilt and silver; the dining-room with a rich red English velvet design; the library or smoking-room with upper thirds of a fine 12-color French floral on a buff ground, softened by tapestry treatment; the hall, an exquisite Empire filigree design in blues, browns and aluminum, which appears suspended before a steel-blue ground, producing a most original and beautiful effect, of which the eye never tires. Then the bedrooms. In each a different influence was obtained. In the largest, the 'white room,' a life-sized yellow rose and vine lost itself in a fine frieze above; in another, a colonial stripe in blue silk and minute pink florals; another, a dainty chintz in a pansy design, while an exquisite 22-inch French cretonne, in pale pink and yellow wildflowers, completed what proved to be 'unity in variety, which is the standard of beauty,' and that decorative art which nearest approaches this rule represents all that is best and worthy of aspiration, its highest idea being to make useful things beautiful. Nor need such a result as I have outlined be beyond the reach of anyone of very moderate means, nor imported material used, which many years ago there was some excuse for.

"In the case I have referred to, every pattern was produced by The Watson, Foster Co., Montreal, whose papers, owing to their progressive style and color effect, find increasing sale in the United States and other countries. For, while existing Canadian factories can more than supply home demand, they really require an export trade to fully employ their machines, yet the interest in better qualities and artistic effects is rapidly increasing. The younger generation is developing an artistic taste which is very noticeable—in bedroom papers to begin with. This is only natural, for there is something so cool and refreshing about a bright, pretty, wall-papered chamber, that one's sleeping reflections and waking thoughts are positively influenced by it."

THE ENGLISH CARPET TRADE.

Business in carpets at Kidderminster is awakening, after the slack season and the interruption of the elections. Orders begin to come to hand, and in an encouraging way, inasmuch that many are for prompt delivery. Stocks are evidently low, and buyers are inclined to restock themselves before the busy season, when they may not be able to get their goods as quickly as they could wish. New business in yarns is quiet locally, and fairly good for foreign markets. Spinners are getting to be well engaged, and the tendency certainly is not to press sales at present prices.—Textile Mercury.

FORTUNATE FOR THE TRADE.

Foreseeing the inevitable advance in cotton and all materials entering into the manufacture of upholstery goods, Messrs. Geo. H. Hees, Son & Co., early in the season, almost "plunged" in their purchase of materials for their own factory, and also placed immense orders for imported goods. They made no mistake, and the result is they are now offering to the trade these goods at prices far below the figure they otherwise could be sold at. Their line consists of furniture coverings, curtains, draperies; portieres, in silk, cotton, tapestry and chenille; table covers and a general stock of upholstery goods. Their new plant at Valleyfield is producing a splendid lot of new things, which the trade will find it profitable to handle. It must not be forgotten that Messrs. Hees, Son & Co. are the leading manufacturers of window shades, curtain poles and trimmings, stair plates, drapery pins and other popular goods belonging to this line. The trade will find it to their interest to deal with this progressive firm.

A LACE CURTAIN LEAFLET.

The merchant who pays proper attention to catalogues, booklets, etc., generally finds something of value to his business in the literature sent out by any of the reliable jobbing or manufacturing houses, but none too often does he receive a work that appeals to his sense of the beautiful or the artistic. A work that is calculated to appeal to him in this way, however, is a booklet illustrating the design and effect of some of the leaders in lace curtains which The H. B. Claffin Co., New York, are now offering. Some of the designs shown in this work are exquisitely beautiful and the illustrations show them to advantage. The work is well worth writing for, because of its artistic qualities as well as because of the great selling qualities of the goods described.

CHEAPER THAN COULD BE IMPORTED.

The enormous stock of lace curtains, purchased by Geo. H. Hees, Son & Co. last Spring before the advance in price, have arrived and are now in stock. A stock of over 100,000 pairs to select from should interest the closest buyer, especially so as Messrs. Hees, Son & Co. are offering these goods at much less prices than they could now be imported for. Not only is this firm headquarters for lace curtains, but never before have any firm in Canada manufactured and imported a full line of upholstery goods, portieres, draperies, curtains, furniture coverings, etc. These they are offering at prices that suit both jobbers and retailers.

A LIST OF BOOKS.

The general or departmental merchant who handles books will find such activity in his book department during the next six or eight weeks that he should use every means to make his profits in this line as large as possible. To do this it would be well to secure from such houses as The H. B. Claffin Co., New York, their list of books. This house, which is one of the largest jobbing houses in America, have lately issued their catalogue.

A feature of this company's business is that they have such intimate contact with various publishing houses that they guarantee prompt delivery of any book desired if in print. This list of books, together with the illustrations, fills 365 pages, making it a veritable authority on books. Each of these lists sent to the trade contains an index and discount sheet, from which the net price to the retailer can easily be figured. This can be detached when desired. This book is well worth having.

The Hudson Bay Knitting Company report the Fall sale of the "Kumfort Mitt" as almost phenomenal. Never before has there been such a call for it. Retailers are daily becoming more acquainted with the selling qualities of this great mitt. It embodies both strength and comfort, and to-day it has the largest sale of any mitt in Canada. It sells for $4.50 per dozen, net 30 days, and retails for 50c. per pair.

The New Department Store Law of Germany.

An Interesting and Drastic Measure.

NO country in the world is probably so noted for the character of its commercial laws as Germany. One of its most recent and striking laws in this respect was one passed by the Prussian Parliament a few months ago imposing a special tax on department stores, and which has been proclaimed by royal edict to take effect January 1, 1901.

The new law, which has naturally excited a great deal of interest, has been made the subject of a special report by the United States Consul General in Berlin.

THE PROVISIONS OF THE LAW

are substantially as follows, it being premised that it applies to the Kingdom of Prussia, except the Hohenzollern Crown lands and the Island of Helgoland, and that all taxes collected under it revert to the treasury of the commune or municipality in which the store is located :

Paragraph 6 of the statute divides the merchandise to be sold into four groups, as follows :

1. Groceries and colonial produce, food products and drinks, tobacco and manufactures thereof, smokers' articles, apothecaries' supplies, colors, drugs, and perfumery.
2. Yarn and twine, upholstery goods, mercery, drapery; woven, knit, and embroidered goods; underclothing of all kinds, bedding and furniture of all kinds, curtains, carpets, and all material used in interior household decoration.
3. Household, kitchen and garden utensils and implements; stoves, glassware, porcelain, earthen and stoneware, upholstered furniture and materials thereto pertaining.
4. Gold, silver, and other jewelry; objects of art or luxury, bric-a-brac, articles of paper or papier-mache, books and music, weapons, bicycles; articles of sport, riding, driving, and hunting; sewing machines, toys; optical, medical, scientific, or musical instruments and apparatus.

THE BASIS OF TAXATION.

Every store, bazaar, or warehouse which shall sell articles belonging to more than one of the above groups, and of which store the aggregate sales amount to more than 400,000 marks ($95,200) per annum, shall pay a special tax graduated according to the total amount of its annual sales, as follows :

Yearly Sales.	Annual Tax.
Marks.	Marks.
400,000 to 450,000 marks ($95,200 to $107,100)	4,000 $ 952
450,000 to 500,000 marks ($107,100 to $119,000)	5,500 1,309
500,000 to 550,000 marks ($119,000 to $130,900)	7,500 1,785
550,000 to 600,000 marks ($130,900 to $142,800)	8,500 2,023
600,000 to 650,000 marks ($142,800 to $154,700)	9,500 2,261
650,000 to 700,000 marks ($154,700 to $166,600)	10,500 2,499
700,000 to 750,000 marks ($166,600 to $178,500)	11,500 2,739
750,000 to 800,000 marks ($178,500 to $190,400)	12,500 2,975
800,000 to 850,000 marks ($190,400 to $202,300)	13,500 3,213
850,000 to 900,000 marks ($202,300 to $214,200)	15,000 3,570
900,000 to 950,000 marks ($214,200 to $226,100)	16,500 4,327
950,000 to 1,000,000 marks ($226,100 to $238,000)	18,000 4,284
1,000,000 to 1,100,000 marks ($238,000 to $261,800)	20,000 4,760
1,000,000 to 1,200,000 marks ($261,800 to $285,600)	22,000 5,236

and so on, for every additional 100,000 marks ($23,800) sold 2,000 marks ($476) additional tax.

This law has been enacted for the purpose of equalizing the advantages which large bazaars, department stores, and cooperative retail establishments enjoy over the minor and middle-class merchants whose business is restricted to a few articles and does not exceed a yearly turnover of 400,000 marks ($95,200). At one time during the debate, it was proposed by the House of Lords—the upper chamber of the Prussian Parliament—to exempt the stores which belong to and serve army and navy officers and civil officials; but this was denounced by the House of Deputies as an odious act of class legislation, in favor of a specially privileged caste, so that the Lords were forced to yield and the law was enacted in its present form. Finance Minister Miquel, the ablest and most adroit master of taxation in Germany, who has stood as sponsor for the new Act during its passage through the Diet, has issued the following declaration explaining its purpose and portraying its results when accepted in good faith and impartially enforced :

It will depend upon the mercantile and industrial classes themselves whether this law shall fulfill for them the benevolent purpose of the law-makers. It will be their task to promptly create and organize with self-helpful motives such associations and installations as are calculated to best increase their power of competition with the department stores. They will have to provide, especially through the organization of purchasing and selling societies, for cheap purchases and profitable sales. They will have to stand firmly on the principle of cash purchases and sales and neither accept goods nor sell them on credit.

In this respect also will the system of organized self-protection offer a wide field of usefulness. The State has already, through the creation of a central bank for the finances of organized guilds, done what it could properly do to promote the interests of the smaller merchants and industrial classes. It will be the task of the middle-class dealers, who have suffered from the competition of the great department stores, to improve the opportunity created by this new tax, to strengthen themselves by improved equipment and management for competition with the large establishments. The State has done its part, it now rests with the mercantile and industrial middle classes, through intelligent, energetic self-help, to secure themselves against the competition of large capital.

Mr. Frank H. Mason, the United States Consul-General, in commenting upon the new law, says : "These are brave words, and every friend of the German people will hope that the aspirations of the Finance Minister concerning the practical effects of the new law may be fulfilled by the event. But there are not wanting many intelligent observers who are extremely skeptical as to the result. The department stores and other large retail houses have six months in which to prepare for the new regulation. It is believed that many of them will confine their future trade to articles included in one of the foregoing categories, and thus evade the new tax. Should they do this, their stocks on hand belonging to other groups will be sold out at bargain counters before January 1 at whatever they will bring, and this, it is predicted, will supply the demand for certain articles and depress the market for some time to come.

"Moreover, a large number of the smaller merchants fail to see how the new law, which simply taxes the large concerns 1 to 2 per cent. additional on their sales and turns the proceeds of such taxation over to the communal and city treasuries, is to help the middle-class merchants and their customers to unite and pay cash for their goods, which they have heretofore bought and sold on credit. The big stores, say these critics, will either add the amount of their tax to the prices of their goods or strive by increased sales to make up the amount. The line between the taxed and untaxed stores will be drawn more sharply than before, and the old struggle will remain between organized capital, which can always buy cheaply for cash in large quantities, and the merchants of moderate means who must buy to a greater or less degree upon credit and must sell before they can pay. The weak point which causes most apprehension is that this enactment opens the way for special taxation of all kinds of large industries and landed possessions. At a time when every interest and class is clamoring for protection, it encourages the demand for special legislation affecting specialized branches of industry and trade. With all this in view, so conservative a journal as The Vossische Zeitung declares that the new statute is 'economically and politically the worst law that has been enacted since the memory of man,' and adds that 'when it shall have completely failed of its purpose, the fault will not be that of the smaller merchants and their customers, but of the Government which has enacted the law and hastens to wash its hands of the results.'

"This is, however, only an opinion and may be wholly premature and misleading. Justice to the classes who have asked for this enactment and to the Government which has granted it demands that the wisdom and effectiveness of such legislation shall be tested and judged by the results of actual experience."

MR. E. H. NORRIS IN CANADA.

Mr. Edward H. Norris, the European representative of John Macdonald & Co., Toronto, is at present paying a visit to Canada. Mr. Norris has not been here for nine years. In a chat with THE DRY GOODS REVIEW, Mr. Norris spoke in general terms of the state of trade, at present, in Manchester, which is his headquarters, and said that, while the present situation in the cotton trade was abnormal, the general opinion was that cotton would remain high for some time to come. The Manchester trade with the United States, like that of Bradford, has fallen off owing to the high tariffs, and there was no doubt that it had increased with Canada, partly owing to the preferential tariff. It would be difficult to state in figures the exact volume of this trade, but in certain lines those who did the business were conscious of the falling off in exports to the States and the increase of exports to Canada. Mr. Norris spoke favorably of the changes in Canada since he last visited it, and expressed himself somewhat impressed with the development of domestic industries which were now turning out goods that most English exporters were not fully aware of.

AN AUTHORITY ON DISPLAY FIXTURES.

Canadian retailers have in late years taken such a wide and intelligent interest in the most advantageous arrangement of their goods, that the Barlow Manufacturing Co., Holyoke, Mass., have made a wise move in offering to the trade here a compact but exceedingly comprehensive work describing the various styles of display fixtures now on the market to any readers of this paper writing for it. The age and standing of this firm make this work an authoritative one that will be appreciated by the trade.

SPECIAL IN GLOVES.

The McIntyre, Son & Co., Montreal, have in stock the newest styles in suede gloves to retail at $1, $1.25, $1.50, etc. Shades—tans, browns, modes, castors, greys, slates and black. These goods being all French, can be guaranteed, and the quality is not equalled in this market for the price. Suede gloves are usually so faulty in material that most houses will not guarantee them. This firm have also a line of real mocha in tans and browns, greys, and black.

THE "VICTOR" COSTUMES AND MANTLES.

It is well for a manufacturer appearing for the first time in a market to carry out faithfully all the promises made concerning his new goods, and this is a point which The Victor Manufacturing Co., of Quebec, are evidently determined to adhere to. The new models of this enterprising concern show this fact. One can judge of the successes of their manufacture by the illustrations which are published on another page of this issue, and also by those which accompany this article. It is not necessary to be an expert to appreciate the elegance of these various garments and costumes, their pretty appearance, their excellent cut and, above all, their novelty. The travelers of The Victor Manufacturing Co. have just gone out to see the trade with their Spring samples. They will, no doubt, receive from all dealers a very warm reception. The splendid value which they have to offer and the prices at which they can sell the goods are sure to establish for these excellent and artistic garments the favor of the trade. Every live dealer will wish them success.

AN ENGLISH FIRM'S OPINION.

A well-known English firm, in writing to THE DRY GOODS REVIEW, say:

"We have given up our agency in Canada, and, until your bankruptcy laws give better protection to traders, shall decline to do any direct trade with there. Our experience has been of a most disastrous nature, and we regret ever having attempted to establish a trade."

This is a bad advertisement for Canada in the Old Country. Can we merchants not insist on getting a fair law from Parliament?

THE DEPRESSION IN SCOTCH TWEEDS.

FOR three years the tweed industry in the district about Galashiels, Hawick and Selkirk has been seriously depressed. This depression has reached a critical stage. In Galashiels alone a number of firms, employing between 400 and 500 hands in all, have gone out of business, and their factories are standing idle. As a result of the bad trade since 1897, in that town there are nearly 500 workmen's dwellings empty, and the population has decreased fully 2,000. The firms that are still operating find it well-nigh impossible to do business at a profit.

The causes of the present bad condition of the trade are said by manufacturers to be (1) overproduction, (2) foreign tariffs, (3) the displacement of tweeds by flannel suitings, (4) the extreme fluctuations in the price of wool, and (5) foreign competition. The last named reason is one which the tweed manufacturers have been compelled to recognize only within the past year or two. Several countries that formerly were large consumers of Scottish goods have become considerable producers of the same kind of fabric. This is true as regards Canadian goods, which are admitted by some Scotch manufacturers to be quite equal to their own.

CHINESE IN TAILORING WORK.

The labor committee instructed to investigate into the conditions of Mongolian labor in Vancouver, and its effect upon the white labor market, have just reported that of 206 journeymen tailors employed in local shops 126 are Orientals. Oriental shops have no regular hours of work, but keep on often late into the night, and disregard the Sunday observance law altogether.

CANADIAN TWEEDS AT PARIS.

A Paris correspondent, who has been looking at the exhibits there of Canadian woollens, writes: "They do not show many fancy worsteds, but what there are are choice, and will stand alongside the best here. All the patterns have the selling price marked on them. The Rosamond Woollen Co., Almonte, Ont., have some good pantings at 70c., 27 in. I have no doubt they can make them cheaper to-day. As this firm employ English designers, and one member of the firm studied at the weaving classes in England, it is not to be wondered that they make such a good show. The tweeds from this firm are the best I have seen outside of the genuine Scotch. They are like what I should call the Galcar, or Yorkshire tweed of the better class, and are marked 50c. per yard for 27 in. This is a good price for them, but exhibition prices are notoriously high. The Paton Manufacturing Co. show a good line of tweeds, and some very fair pantings at $1.45, 16 oz. There is no doubt that the Canadians have learned the art of tweed-making, and I am not surprised to know that on certain lines of cheviots they can get into the New York markets ahead of the European makers."

SPRING CLOTHING.

The indications for Spring are that greys shall have an unusually large run in fine tweeds and worsteds for the custom tailoring trade. The up-to-date manufacturers have excelled themselves in producing a range of designs and effects never shown before, and The Lowndes Co., Limited, have now in the hands of their representatives an unequalled line of new and exclusive patterns, which it would be to the advantage of any up-to-date clothier to inspect.

A CLOTHING OPENING.

Grafton & Co., clothiers, Dundas street, London, Ont., held a grand Fall opening last month. A full orchestra was present from 7 to 10 p.m., and the firm had on exhibition one of the completest assortments of men's, boys' and children's clothing, for Fall wear, ever seen in London. Mr. J. M. Hickey, the manager of the London branch, was on hand to welcome visitors.

A WHOLESALE BUYER REPORTS.

The most interesting lines for Spring suitings, according to Mr. Begg, of John Macdonald & Co., who has just returned from a buying trip, are novelties in Scotch, English and Canadian tweeds and serges. He has secured a large range of the latest novelties in grey, brown and green mixtures in both plain and overchecked. In fancy worsted trouserings, of which they have secured a choice variety, the trend is towards large stripes, which will be used to a considerable extent for suitings as well as for trouserings. In addition to their regular lines this firm are showing a choice range of Belwarp materials which are suitable for either trouserings or suitings. The inquiry for Belwarp worsteds and serges has so grown that, being the sole agents for these goods in Toronto, they have been compelled to stock a much larger variety than heretofore.

In woollens for ladies' Spring wear homespun effects in twilled and Celtic weaves and in the latest shades of greys, browns, blacks, blues and bright colors are the popular goods.

There is also a strong feeling for boxcloths, broadcloths and venetian cloths.

In tailors' trimmings, Mr. Begg secured this year a larger variety of patterns in fancy silesias than usual. As he selected the patterns and had them printed to order, most of the designs will be confined to this house. He also secured some choice 54 in. black and colored Italian cloths.

While in Orillia THE DRY GOODS REVIEW'S representative met Mr. E. W. Kallmeyer, the hustling salesman of Saxe & Sons, Montreal. A visit was paid to his sample room at the hotel, and a half-hour was spent chatting on trade matters. He believes that every merchant should subscribe to some trade journal, and especially to THE DRY GOODS REVIEW. As a proof of his appreciation he always has three or four numbers shown along with his samples, by placing them on the shelving above the tables. He says that business has never been better.

THE LATE MR. ROBERTSON.

THE familiar figure of John Robertson, buyer for the staple department of John Macdonald & Co. will never more be seen or his kindly voice more be heard in the circle of dry-goodsmen on both continents, where he was well and favorably known. On Wednesday, October 3, at St. Denis Hotel, New York, Mr. Robertson died of heart failure. He had arrived the same day per ss. Teutonic, for Toronto, after spending several weeks in the foreign markets. The order came very suddenly for him to pass from the things of time and enter upon the realities of eternity; bereaving his family of a kind, affectionate and indulgent husband and father; the firm, of which he was an employe, a faithful, upright and trustworthy servant, and his intimate friends of a desirable companion. On December 6, 1882, he entered the employ of John Macdonald & Co. as a salesman. His ability was soon recognized by the firm appointing him as one of their special travelers. After a few years' close attention to business and establishing himself by faithfulness and loyalty he was appointed assistant buyer of the staple department. Upon the position of buyer becoming vacant he was chosen to fill the vacancy and filled it successfully until his demise. After the arrival of his body in Toronto, many friends visited his late residence. His funeral took place on Saturday, October 6, and was largely attended, both by friends and acquaintances.

The down comforter trade of The Toronto Feather & Down Co., Limited, is increasing with rapid strides, especially in the higher grades, of which they make a specialty. The goods they are turning out are simply elegant, and every dealer should see them and resolve to place some on sale.

JOHN MACDONALD & CO.

JOHN MACDONALD & CO. report that in their carpet department their stock of tapestries, brussels, velvets, wools and union carpets is now complete, and they have just received repeats of their best-selling patterns. These were bought before the advance in the market, and are selling at a less price than Spring goods are being offered at. A large range of 8-4 and 16-4 linoleums, also bought before the last advance, are being sold at from 2½ to 5c. per square yard less than Spring quotations.

An assorted stock of a complete kind is shown in felt, which is now in great demand, the colors most asked for being military red, military blue and khaki. The stock of lace curtains, quilts, table covers is well assorted. For the Christmas trade they are showing a special range of pillow shams, pillow covers, curtainettes.

In men's furnishings, the buyer, who has just returned from Europe, reports a lot of cashmere half-hose—1,000 dozen of seconds, which are being sold at 25 per cent. below the regular value. A similar lot of 1,000 dozen of handkerchiefs—ladies' fancies and white hemstitched, and men's hemstitched—is being sold at half price. A special line of rubber coats, with 24-in. capes, to retail at $2, is noted. A full line of fleece-lined underwear is carried, the price being $4.50, $6, $9 and $10.50 per dozen. A special line of seconds in boys' fleece-lined underwear is also noted.

The sorting season in woollens, in both men's and women's wear, manifests few new developments. In ladies' wear, homespun suitings in diamond checks, scarlet and grey mixtures, light blue mixtures, and in a variety of shades in grey, are proving strong goods. Broadcloths, venetians, whipcords and covert cloths in plain colors are also in popular demand. Women's mantle beavers, in blues, blacks and colors, are having a good run. Big ranges of these lines are carried by John Macdonald & Co. In men's wear, black and Oxford overcoatings in llama, vicuna and the new herringbone weave, are in strong favor. Stocks of staple lines of meltons and beavers, in blacks and blues, are being kept well assorted. This firm are also offering several job lines in 3 4 and 6 4 Canadian tweed suitings.

THE W. R. BROCK CO., LIMITED, TORONTO.

The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, Toronto, are clearing out odd lines in the various departments preparatory to stock-taking, December 1, and in order to make room for new Spring goods arriving next month. An inquiry after these in the warehouse, or from their travelers, is well worth while. Special mention is made of the following: French canvases, towelings, fancy linens (for Christmas trade), flannelettes, wrapperettes, fancy blouse silks, fancy dress goods, ladies' 54 inch tweed costume cloths, men's neckwear, fleeced underwear, overalls, flannelette and working shirts, broken ranges of hosiery and underwear, tapestry carpets.

In "Gold Medal" dress goods, The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, Toronto, having cleared out the entire stock of the Canadian agency of this celebrated make of goods, are offering them to the trade at 20 per cent. below regular prices. The line is so well and favorably known throughout Canada that comment is unnecessary. The lot consists almost entirely of plain materials in black with a few navy and fancy blacks. Samples can be forwarded by mail to anyone in the trade immediately on application. The quantities are not sufficient to place them in the hands of the travelers.

54-inch frieze for ladies unlined skirts is still in demand, and scarce. The Brock Co., Toronto, have a full range of their special cloth in stock, and hope to be able to fill all orders received during the month.

The advisability is emphasized of getting all orders for prints in as early as possible. Those houses that made extra early contracts cannot repeat any of their lines so as to sell them at old prices, and consequently most of the ranges will be thrown out as soon as sold. The Brock Co., Toronto, report the receipt of exceptionally large orders. Their special cloths to retail at old popular prices, such as 7, 8, 10 and 12½c., are meeting with such pronounced success that it would be wise to have a look at their samples before the ranges are broken.

This house are just about to take stock and have a number of clearing lines in the carpet and housefurnishing department that will be of interest to visitors this month. Among the lines of carpets and tapestries are many designs which cannot be found anywhere else.

In the woollen department there are also several clearing lines at very much below the regular values, including suitings of fancy worsteds in checks and stripes, and Scotch tweeds. Some special numbers of grey cheviot overcoatings are also clearing at low prices.

The firm are showing a line of spot wrapperettes in navy grounds, black grounds, cord grounds and military scarlet grounds with white and colored spots, small, medium and large sizes. The goods are in great demand, it being impossible to keep the full range of patterns in stock. It is well worth any merchant's time to take a look at the travelers' samples or see the goods in the warehouse.

Doublefold American cotton dress plaids—these goods are nice, bright, effective in style, absolutely fast colors and just the thing for little peoples' winter dresses and ladies' wrappers. Many repeats of this line are being received from customers who have bought. They are offering a special in a 36-in. domestic flannelette, good heavy weight, all light stripes. This line can be retailed at 10c. and is a great snap.

There has just been passed into stock the last part of an old purchase of a 32-in. colored sateen, in about 40 different shades, which will be offered at a price for 12½c. retailing, about 10 per cent. less than present mill prices. No. 70 is a 20 x 44 fine damask towel, knotted fringe, in blue, red, gold and white borders, to retail at 25c. each. This is about the regular wholesale price. No. 113 (hickory) is an 18-in. dark rack toweling. A small lot of these to sell retail at 10c. A 1, a 60-in. cream damask table linen, five different designs, good heavy weight, nice mellow cloth, can be retailed at 25c. and will be a leader to any merchant, as it was never offered lower.

On account of the stock-taking on November 30 the small-ware department shows many lines at low prices. In hosiery, they are offering "Goodenuff," in plain and "Doutelle," "AGD," M40 and M50 in ribbed, to retail at 25c. The 50c. lines include TCB and AE in plain, and AE, 150 and 260 in ribbed. Fancy handkerchiefs are shown in prices ranging from 5 to 75c. each. There has been an immense business done in sweaters, in both plain and fancy striped goods. Six lines of neckwear are being cleared out, three in knots, B, D and F, and three in derbys, A, C and E. Each line is assorted in the latest designs, and a retailer is enabled to make several prices out of each number. The knitted wool goods should be noticed. Honeycomb and fancy knit shawls, wool hoods, toques, caps, polka jackets, cardigan jackets, gaiters, infantees, bootees, clouds, fascinators, etc., are all quoted at staple margins of profits, not as fancy goods—as usually quoted. Flannelette embroideries and trimmings, in all patterns and colors, are also included in the clearing list.

WYLD-DARLING CO., LIMITED.

Among the specialties shown in this warehouse are some lines of ladies' ribbed underwear, in cream, white and natural colors, to be retailed at 25 to 50c. each. Two extra lines in heavy ribbed hosiery for boys have been added to the stock which may be retailed at from 15 to 25c. per pair, and also a quantity of worsted ribbed goods with double-fold knees. No. 206 of this line retails at 25 to 50c. per pair, and is selling rapidly. In cashmere hose, complete ranges are shown in Nos. 35, 37, 66 and 72, all of which have the extra spliced knee. Single and double knit wool mitts, for both women and children, are shown, to retail at 15 to 30c. per pair. In black cashmere and fancy colored Ringwood gloves all prices and sizes are shown.

K. ISHIKAWA & CO.

The outlook for November is a very bright one, and sales are already on the increase over October, which did not come up to expectations. The preparations for the holiday trade are now complete, and new lines of silk handkerchiefs, ladies' ties, Japan silks, and taffeta finished Habutai have been placed in stock. The assortment of handkerchiefs is particularly large and very beautiful. The initialed silk handkerchief prices range from $1.25 up to $8.50. There are also shown flag and fancy-colored handkerchiefs, which should be good sellers for the Christmas trade. A new stock of silk drapes, in gold embroidered work and heavy brocaded goods, is shown.

The import orders for Spring, 1901, are coming in very satisfactorily, and the trade in the Maritime Provinces and Quebec and Ontario is fully up to the standard.

The Spring business in mattings is especially good in the better lines. The Canadian trade are demanding a high class of goods for next season. The production of the straw in Japan has not been very good, so the price of raw material has gone up 25 per cent. in the last six weeks, and may be expected to go up still higher before Spring. It will be much to the advantage of dealers, therefore, to get their stocks at present prices, which are easier than those of last year.

NISBET & AULD.

Among the Canadian manufactures that are finding a ready sale in foreign countries must be mentioned the Oxford Manufacturing Co.'s goods. The demand for these has been so great in the British and United States markets that Nisbet & Auld, the agents, have, with great difficulty, kept up their stock in them. The Oxford homespuns are also very popular cloths, and are selling well this Fall. Friezes for ladies' wear are being bought very largely in both solids and mixtures, in blacks and red, grey, brown, blue and green shades. The demand for jacketings for ladies is now very brisk, and the lengths being bought are much longer than they have been. The Newmarket and Raglan are both quick sellers, as also is a looser garment called the Automobile. The prices on some linings for men's wear and the better class of ladies' garments are now 25 per cent. higher than 12 months ago, but contracts made with the makers some time ago enable this firm to offer to the trade the leading lines, in most cases, at the prices of 18 months ago, so that purchasers of the goods for Spring, 1901, will find a good bargain in them. They are the agents in Canada for Hamlyn Bros., Buckfastleigh, Devonshire, England, makers of the 'Devonia' serges. These serges are the goods used in the British Navy, and are sold to the trade with a guarantee of such a nature as will enable any merchant tailor to guarantee in his turn, without any risk whatever, the colors of the goods for two years. These serges are all stamped "Devonia," and when so stamped the makers make good not only the cost of the goods, but the cost of time in making up, etc., so that a retailer handling them cannot possibly lose anything.

BOULTER & STEWART.

Tailor made suits are now a staple in all mantle departments, and it is especially necessary to keep up with the latest styles. Messrs. Boulter & Stewart are now showing a large assortment with the new Russian front and latest puff sleeves, etc. These are worthy of attention.

Flannel waists, military styles, are having an enormous sale in New York, and are now much sought for in our cities. They are pretty and comfortable, and will be good sellers all Fall. These are specially popular trimmed with gilt braid in military style. Messrs. Boulter & Stewart are showing some 12 different designs for immediate trade.

Eiderdown coats and cloaks are becoming more popular every season, and can be had now properly shaped—tailor-made, in fact. They are specially good for Christmas trade made with fancy silk trimming and applique effects. The long cloaks are used nearly all the year around, as they are fine for the sick-room. Messrs. Boulter & Stewart are making all the newest designs for Christmas.

Tailor-Made Suit.

DOWN QUILTS.

The demand for down quilts continues quite brisk, notwithstanding the comparatively advanced season. One of the popular styles for this year is named "D.S.F.," and is made of figured sateen centre and back, with double border of mercerized moire sateen to match the centre. It is quilted with the famous "Star" pattern, and has a dozen or more silk eyelets for ventilation. It will have a great run for the holiday trade.

Another popular down quilt is named "D.J.J." It can be retailed for $4.25. It is 5 feet by 6 feet, reversible, and is made of the "Oriental" cashmere pattern that is so popular in England. Samples of these and other down quilts will be forwarded on application to The Alaska Feather & Down Company, Limited, Montreal.

The

Millinery Season

Mantles, Trimmings and Laces.

FALL RETAIL MILLINERY OPENINGS.

At the time of going to press for the October number of this journal, the retail millinery openings had not all taken place, and even as late as October 28 reports of Fall openings in different parts of the country have been received. Although this is rather late, there was nothing to show that these openings were not as successful as those held early in the season. The store decorations were just as well prepared, and the stocks as complete and up-to-date as in other places.

In Diebel & Bricker's, Essex, Ont., a pleasing feature of the opening was the piano recital, given by a well-known local musician, which characterized both the afternoon and evening of the event. The openings, like others in the first part of the month, were not all confined to millinery. Wherever a store had more than one department, each one was prepared for receiving visitors. Scougale Bros., Colborne, Ont., made a great success of their men's furnishing department, and attracted many visitors; and "The Ark," a Chatham, Ont. crockery and fancy goods store, received a good deal of attention for its display of lamps, glassware, stoves, etc.

The decorations included many new and bright ideas, and there was not a store that was not, in some way, made more than ordinarily attractive by draperies, flowers, or some other means. The B. Grennan Co.'s place, Waterloo, Ont., presented a very fine picture. The millinery department contained many large mirrors, all of which were draped in red, white and blue silks, and mounted on top by numbers of the birds that are so fashionable for this season's trimmings. Another store, Chas. K. Cameron & Co.'s, St. John, N.B., was beautifully decorated with large jars of sweet peas, asters, ferns and other plants in great abundance. Lace curtains were also used extensively for decorative purposes, and, when combined with all colors of flowers, gave a decidedly pretty effect. McFarland & Co.'s opening in Markdale, Ont., on October 11, was the most successful one in their history. During the afternoon and evening an orchestra was in attendance, which added greatly to the crowd of visitors.

At the back of the store were placed horizontally two large mirrors, tastily draped with satins, chiffons and laces, the color effect of one being pastel green and gold, and the other rose pink and pale blue. Between these was suspended a massive star in a setting of Autumn leaves of golden red, and beneath the mirrors were arranged steps on which were placed, on a background of satin, the various individual materials used in the making of a hat, all combining in producing an effect that had to be seen to be appreciated. The opposite side was occupied by the orchestra who were seated under a beautifully constructed canopy of cream and blue, the four supporting pillars being decorated from the top to the floor. At either ends were decorations and pretty arrangements of minor importance, but each contributing to the general pleasing appearance. At suitable places in the room were arranged flowers and foliage, a massive oleander being conspicuous among the rest, while the floor was covered with furs which served the double purpose of adding to the effect and deadening the noise which would otherwise have been annoying.

The windows were also given great care. At Drysdale's, in Vancouver, B.C., a large bell was placed in the window, surmounted by a dove and two cupids. Many other windows were filled with flowers.

A novelty shown at the Gardner, Rice, McLeod Co.'s millinery opening, at Rat Portage, Man., was the "$150 hat." This was an ordinary velvet bonnet trimmed with green, with here and there glittering gold ornaments. Most of the green trimming was made up of $10 bills and the ornaments were $5 and $10 gold pieces.

McKendry & Co., Toronto, held a second Fall millinery opening on September 13. Their first opening was too early to show all the latest Paris novelties, so when the last consignments were received they got out some more of their own designs and held an opening of all the very latest styles.

At the time of writing the millinery openings have not all taken place, as announcements are out regarding openings to take place in the first part of November. These are only a few exceptions, however, nearly all the annual openings being over, though the season has extended later into the Fall than is usual.

A CANADIAN HOUSE ON THE SITUATION.

THE DRY GOODS REVIEW is always anxious to have healthy business information to impart to its readers, which we can best gather from men who are from day to day looking abroad over the great business field. Our representative, on calling upon S. F. McKinnon & Co., Limited, had a lengthy and interesting chat with one of the company.

Although October 29, the weather was as fine as mid-summer, so that the conversation naturally started along that line, and he soon learned that no complaints about the weather were being raised there, as his informant went on to reason in a convincing manner that fine weather favored millinery. Although the remarkable and unusually fine weather experienced—at least in Ontario—throughout the month of October must have had a bad effect on trade, so far as goods of a heavy or Winter character were concerned, it did not seem to apply to millinery, the argument being that the finer the weather the more encouraging for ladies to go abroad, and usually the finer the weather the finer the millinery bought and worn. This representative of the beautiful felt sure that his claim would be endorsed by the millinery trade in general.

MILLINERY—Continued.

In speaking of millinery and millinery requisites, he said: "Our October trade, from first to last, has been most satisfactory," and he ventured to assert that throughout the country the millinery departments are ahead in results for the month.

"We have, however, a long season before us yet, and, therefore, no reason for being discouraged as to the results in any department, as woollens, furs and other heavy weights may yet have a successful inning, and claim the November run as theirs. So far we have had an exceptional hat season. The October trade, like that of September, favored ready-to-wear over outing hats, they having had a great run. We now believe that for the balance of the season dress shapes and mode hats will rule. Turban effects promise to be very good.

"When we had a chat on the millinery situation early in October, in speaking of the different articles to be used in the manufacture of stylish millinery, we gave the first place to silk velvets which place they have held easily. In fact, it has been and will be to the end a velvet season, at least so say we, and have backed up our belief by providing liberally of every popular color.

"Black and colored velveteens are also to the front and taking well. This is one of our specialties and one of our most popular lines. Our assortment and range of colors is in the same plane as our silk velvets, having in stock every color and shade on the popular list. The brilliancy of finish which our velveteens possess has given them a wide popularity with the best trade. Taffeta silk is another of the popular favorites and fully pronounced for the balance of the season. Here, also, our faith is strong enough to make large provision for the November and December trade.

"In fact, all our silks are doing well, and this, so far, has certainly been the best silk season we have had for some years. Of course, as you see, we have a large stock of the very newest weaves thoroughly assorted in colors. We are also doing a big trade in black and colored satins. This article is growing in popularity as the season advances.

"Ribbons were not quite so strong in the early season as we had hoped, but are now drawing to the front and promise well for November, particularly in the narrow and wider widths. Number five in black taffeta will have a big sale as a trimming.

"In hat adornments, large birds, breasts, gull wings and buckles have ruled and will still retain their popularity to the end of the season. Black, white and brown single tips are also running strong and promise to be very popular with the best trade in November and December.

"You ask if the jacket trade has suffered from the long spell of fine weather. Speaking for ourselves we have so far had all we could do, with full force on, in our factory. But we firmly believe that as far as jackets are concerned—unlike millinery—75 per cent. of the consumers are ruled by the weather. Therefore we do not hesitate to answer that the jacket trade as a whole must have suffered during the month of October, and if we do not have colder weather soon the season for selling jackets with a fair margin of profit will be very short. But, should the weather be favorable throughout November and December, a good trade in jackets is certain.

"In the jacket, costume and skirt department we have been turning our attention towards Spring, and at the present time have a most convincing Spring range of these goods in the hands of our special travelers. We do not hesitate to say that our Spring offering in McKinnon-made jackets, costumes and skirts is the best it has ever been our pleasure to bring before the trade; and should be seen by everyone handling such goods if only as an education."

THE D. McCALL CO., LIMITED.

Though the heavy trade on some of the wholesale milliners' lines is about over for the season, on others there is still a brisk demand. Trimmings, for instance, in this warehouse, are selling very well.

Plisse velours diament pleated satin is among the foremost in sales, and the demand for taffeta silks, in cardinals, browns, castors, greys and navys, is also heavy. Velvets continue to sell well, especially in cardinals, castors, coquelicots, and greys, though the call for blacks still keeps up. Panne and miroir velvets are shown in all colors. They are doing a big business in all colors of ribbons in all the staple widths, and also in the black velvet and satin ribbon, which has lost none of its popularity.

In the feather trimmings department black chenille and sequin are probably the best selling lines; though the sales in black and grey birds, gulls and black tips are very satisfactory. Jet and steel buckles, 6 and 8 inches, are shown in a splendid variety. The cold weather has brought with it a large demand for tourists' soft crown felt hats, the mohair felts being especially well bought. The most popular color is a dark or steel grey, with fawns and blacks next. The ready-to-wear effects have dropped out to give place to these hats.

The demand for turbans is greater than ever before, the stitched-brim variety being the leading seller.

J. P. A. Des Trois-Maisons & Co., wholesale milliners, Montreal, sold out October 30.

The stock of Mrs. J. Bishop, milliner, Toronto, was damaged by fire; insured.

Chas. Reid & Co., wholesale milliners, Toronto, have dissolved partnership.

Isabella Macauley, milliner, Carman, Man., has sold out to Hill & Mallory at 20c. on the dollar.

Mrs. W. S. Jeffrey, milliner, Yarmouth, N.S., has commenced business.

Mrs. Bertha Latourneau, milliner, Bedford, Que., has assigned.

In addition to their line of silk and satin waists, Floersheimer, Roman & Hahn, 73 Wooster street, New York, manufacture a large and varied assortment of the latest styles of waists in French flannels, cashmeres and henriettas. The firm's great forte is popular-priced waists, and their success in the waist field is largely attributable to their ability to furnish showy, attractive garments at low prices.

A handsome catalogue of the goods of K. Ishikawa & Co., importers of Japanese silks and matings, will appear in a few days. It is to be thoroughly illustrated, and descriptive of their silks, laces, handkerchiefs, ties, etc., which have been received with so much favor in Canada. A copy will be readily sent for the asking to any merchant in the business.

is still being shown for those who do not wear the heavy kinds, and brisk sales are reported on all goods for cold weather wear.

HEAVY UNDERWEAR is being shown more than any other goods. A number of stores have windows made up entirely of shirts and drawers, and a big trade has been done during the cold weather of October in all-wool underwear, though fleece-lined is also in good demand. A good quantity of colored goods is being taken, principally in khaki and blue. For medium weight garments, a number of places are showing cashmere goods in khaki and white, and find them fairly good sellers.

SWEATERS and football suits are in demand now, and though a large quantity of the former are to be seen in the windows of many men's furnishers, only a few have arranged the whole suit to be displayed together. Wherever shown, the suits make a good display. Red and black sweaters are shown more than other colors.

THE TIES showing are nearly all of the flowing end and derby order. String ties have been selling well lately. They are shown in the windows along with colored shirts, the patterns being mainly polka dots in blue and white. Puff ties are not being shown at all. Black, dark green and dark blue are the predominating ground colors. There are a good many more figured ties selling now than last month, and, although stripes are the more fashionable, a good number of

Men's Furnishings.

THE month of October usually finds men's furnishers fairly well prepared for the late Fall and Winter trade, and this one has been no exception. The cold week or so which was experienced in many parts of Canada brought out the heavy goods, and saw them placed in the windows with great rapidity. The light Fall goods have to a great extent disappeared, though a small quantity different figured designs are selling. Some men's furnishers are already putting mufflers in their windows, and, when well displayed and of an attractive pattern or color, these goods are quick sellers. All dark colors, and a large variety of designs, are being shown.

GLOVES are worn mainly in red or mocho, though grey is also a selling color. The red, grey or brown silk linings are very popular, and are worn almost altogether this Fall. For a more expensive and a heavier glove, the squirrel-fur lined article is showing signs of becoming a favorite.

City furnishers are finding SMOKING JACKETS a good selling article at present. These are made in a variety of styles and of different materials. A handsome line is the silk and wool brocaded jackets. These are elaborately designed and should make a valuable asset for the Christmas trade. Velvet jackets, with silk cord trimming and satin facings, and plain cloth in fawn colors, with satin lining and facings, are two other attractive lines that should become popular.

Though there is a considerable quantity of colored SOCKS being shown, the plain black is being bought much more than anything else. Woollen goods have not been shown to any extent as yet. A large number of golf stockings, in all colors and combinations, are now displayed, but their sale has not been remarkably large.

In the way of COLLARS, it is the same old thing—the high turndown. Other collars placed in the window show that the dealer's stock is complete, if they serve no other purpose, but the sales are almost wholly on the high turndown style.

Ladies' collars in this style are also being shown by a number of dealers.

Good sales are reported on corduroy and colored frieze VESTS. They are being exhibited in many handsome patterns. The corduroy are mainly in blue and grey, with spot designs. The frieze vests are all in large plaids, blue, black, dark green and brown being the principal body colors, with red as the most prominent color in the plaid.

(black and white), gloves and silk hats were all shown, and so neatly arranged that the window could not help but attract notice. The shirts were arranged on stands and at the sides of the window, with collars attached, and black and white ties alternately, while above each shirt was a silk hat and pair of gloves. Nothing else was displayed in this window, and the effect produced by the white and black alone was very fine.

Paper Collars in London.

Paper collars are not looked upon very favorably in this country, nor have they been until lately in Great Britain, but the recent raise in laundry prices, which was brought about by the proprietors of the laundries in London, has caused quite a boom in paper collars and cuffs. One firm are doing an immense business in a line of paper collars that have a thin linen covering on the outside, and that can hardly be distinguished from the ordinary linen article. These collars cost from 15 to 25c. a dozen, so that those who wear them may have new collars every day for less than the cost of laundering. Many of the British peerage have for a long time been wearers of paper collars in preference to linen ones, and with this leadership it is possible that the fashion may be here to stay.

Mens' Made Mufflers.

With the approach of Winter the sale of made mufflers increases. A new style brought out last month has a plain barathea on one side and a spot or other pattern silk on the reverse side, made in the new shape, allowing it to be worn in four different ways.

The barathea silk is especially adapted to the made muffler as it has a soft heavy feel, a rich appearance, and its wearing qualities are undoubted.

Mens' Neckties.

Flowing ends are still the leading sellers. An attempt has been made to curtail the size of the flowing end, making it shorter and narrower to take less silk, but the consumer will have none of it; it must be the full size flowing end or nothing.

Batwing bows are very good.

Blue is the leading color.

Black strongly marked with scarlet or white is very good.

Green has fallen a little flat, but may take a run later.

Stripes are still great sellers, but the feeling is that figures have come to stay.

The New York Men's Fashions.

Says a fashion writer in Vogue: "It is not until nearly the close of Autumn that fashions in overcoats for Winter are definitely established. The season so far has brought forth little distinctly new in this line, and it does not seem probable that there will be many very noticeable changes in style. Last year was rather unusual in this respect, and it is rarely the case, as I have said before, that fashions in overcoats last but through one season. Besides the kennel coat and the Thornydyke, both smart models of last Winter and Spring, there is another outer coat which deserves mention, although I am unable to give it an exact name, if, indeed, it has one. The front, which is single-breasted and with fly buttoning, falls straight from the lapels like that of the kennel coat, but the back and sides, though cut in somewhat at the waist, have not the spring of that garment, and there is no waist seam. The skirts hang well away from the legs with somewhat of a flare, and on each side inclined slightly toward the back are slit well up from the bottom. The seams and edges are double stitched a little over a quarter of an inch. The side pockets are set diagonally with flaps, and the breast pocket, set almost straight, also has a flap. A small change pocket is made inside the right side pocket. The coat has a velvet collar, and around the cuffs of the sleeves, which are about four inches in breadth, there is a narrow piping of velvet. Although the cuffs are somewhat wider than those of most coats, they are cut in the same way; that is, of the same breadth all the way around, and with rounded corners. This is an extremely good outer coat for afternoon or evening, and may be made of almost any medium or light weight cloth of smooth finish. A fine mixture of brown and olive green, with a soft, smooth finish, is a pretty material.

"A new and rather sporting-looking outer coat for shooting is made to combine the characteristic of the Raglan and the Thornydyke, though following neither the one nor the other in exact detail. It buttons close up to the neck and has five bone buttons down the front. The shoulder seams are of the Raglan type, double-stitched, and the sleeves around the cuffs have a double row of stitching. Just below the second button in front there is a yoke, and directly under this on each side there is a rather large breast pocket, patched and covered with a flap. Lengthwise down the middle of these pockets there is a box-plait, like that on the Norfolk jacket, and to this the flap buttons with a bone button to match those on the front of the coat. The side pockets are large, also patched and covered by flaps, but, although they button, there is no plait; the coat hangs loosely from the shoulders and falls to the knees. As a material, a Harris tweed would be good. The coat may be worn over an ordinary shooting jacket, and with knickerbockers and gaiters it makes a sportsmanlike costume.

"The mention of outing clothes reminds me that I have noticed at one of our haberdashers some rather smart-looking sweaters, made of a mixed grey and green wool, with broad ribs, these being so knitted that the ribs were much greyer in color than the space between. Evidently two different wools were used, one in which the green predominated, and the other composed mostly of grey, but the effect was fairly good and unusual. For Autumn wear, and even in Winter when the weather is not severe, I advise the sweater cut down at the neck to show the collar and waistcoat, as being the smartest and by all means the best looking; but for certain uses, and in very cold weather, the sweater with high roll collar is preferable. Either style may be used for walking, golf, skating, coasting or any general country wear. Now that the warm weather is past, knickerbockers will be more usually worn for golf than during the Summer. There is no change in their cut, and, as a material, Harris tweed is, I think, the best. Stockings should be of rather heavy mixed Scotch wool with broad ribs, and gaiters of box cloth.

"In the shapes of boots there is practically no change. The rounded toe and rather broad, heavy sole still continue to be in vogue, and buttons are smarter than laces except on tan boots. For morning wear, and afternoon also, with any clothes less formal than a frock coat, black calf boots with moderately thick extension soles, which lie flat on the ground throughout their entire length, that is which do not turn up at the toes, are the most fashionable; but with a frock, patent leathers are best. I am aware that some men wear well-polished calf boots with a frock coat in preference to patent leather, reserving that entirely for evening use, but personally

I am in favor of a moderately heavy and substantial-looking patent leather boot as being in better keeping with the formal, or at least full afternoon attire.

"With evening dress a somewhat lighter boot may be worn, and for dinners or dances patent leather low shoes are usual; the exceedingly light and thin-soled dancing pump has gone almost entirely out of use. Fancy capped boots are occasionally seen upon men who dress well, but are, I think, by no means the best style. Tan boots are little worn during the Winter season in town, but still for very rough weather, when the snow and slush are thick upon the streets, a pair of heavy laced tan boots with thick extension soles are as serviceable in town as they are in the country. Under hard treatment they look better than calf and do not require such constant polishing. It is, perhaps, hardly necessary to say that tan boots, no matter what the weather, may be worn only with a sack suit or some attire even less formal."

Men's Summer Wear.

Next Summer promises to see flannel suitings very much worn by well-dressed men, who will not tolerate the "shirt waist." Wreyford & Co., the Dominion agents of Young & Rochester, London, Eng., report unusually large import orders for these goods, the favorite shades being light grey with $\frac{1}{4}$ in. darker stripe, and navy blue with light stripe. Orders are principally for D. B. Coats. Young & Rochester show very extensive ranges in these Summer suits, and any merchant who can handle fine goods would do well to see their representatives, who are now taking the East and West journeys. An appointment can be booked through the Toronto office.

MONTREAL AND TORONTO, October 31, 1900.

THE CANADIAN COTTON MARKET.

THE Canadian manufacturers have been advancing prices all this month, until nearly every line is affected.

On October 6, The Dominion Cotton Co. issued a new list, advancing yarns and warps as follows:

Unbleached cotton warp	½c. per lb.
Colors	½c. "
Single yarn	same.
Demi cord	1c. "
Demi 2-ply 16	during the season 2c. "

The same concern also advanced sheetings. One line, bleached sheetings No. 10, is 3½c. a yard higher than this time last year. Pillow cottons are up ½c. or 1½c. since last year. Grey sheetings are up ¾c., or 3¼c. over last year. As to grey cottons, the following may be noted:

No. A—27 and 34 in.—is withdrawn, which takes every cotton out of the market that is less than 4c.

AAA. cloth increases ¼c. or ⅜c. in a year.

Medium cloth, No. B, increases ¼ to ½c. or 1¼c. in a year.

Higher grades (No. MR) increase ¼ to ½c. or 2c. in a year.

The new list of The Merchants Cotton Co., issued October 17, shows some advanced prices: In bleached cottons, the cheapest have gone up 1c. a yard in the year; (medium) CA, 1⅛ to 1¼c., and the best, 1⅝c. The other prices in the list are on the same scale as The Dominion Cotton Co.

On October 12, The Canadian Colored Cotton Co. advanced all their saxonys, domettes, shakers and apron gingham, and yarns about 5 per cent.

The Dominion Cotton Co. advanced prices on many lines of their white and grey cottons. Big advances in canton flannels—about 1¼c. per yard. Sheetings marked up high.

As to prints, it will be noticed below that both the Colonial Co. and the Magog Mills have advanced prices in a majority of lines.

The shutting down of the Valleyfield cotton mills, owing to the riots and strikes, may affect the market in linings, such as silesias, surahs, etc.

On October 27 the Montreal Cotton Co. advanced foulards, ten lines of turkey reds, five of ducks, muslins, apron muslins and several other of their products about ¼c. a yard. In the case of ducks the advance is about ½ to 1c.

THE WOOLLEN MARKET.

The London wool sales, which have been going on in London during October, are said to furnish some comfort to the woollen trade, although the wool-grower cannot say as much. Prices began with a decline of 15 per cent. from the previous sales. The sales come to an end next Saturday, that is, November 3, and it is expected that no further decline, but rather an advance, will take place.

Writing October 20, the Bradford correspondent of The Draper's Record says: "Up to the present time by far the greater proportion of the merino wool sold at the present sale series in London has been taken by buyers from Yorkshire, and should no system of withdrawing wools by the importers be practised, I believe that the West Riding is prepared to go on purchasing this same proportion of the merino wool offered up to the end of the sales. There are, however, evidences that continental buyers are gradually regaining some amount of confidence, and, as the Americans also seem to want some fine wools, there is every reason to expect that the prices of merino wool in London will be, at least, maintained at their present level. The tendency of fashion in dress goods is certainly more in the direction of the use of fine soft wool goods, and the present moderate price of raw material is sure to stimulate the trade in all classes of fabrics, both for men's and women's wear, made from merino wool.

"Some of the French manufacturers seem to have been selling soft wool dress goods at such low prices recently that they must have been expecting a still further fall in the prices of merino wool; but, even in their own market, the quotations for fine wools have already shown some advance, and the tendency is distinctly upward.

"Prices of the cheaper classes of cross bred colonial wools have, up to the present time, hardly shown the advance at the London sales which was expected here, but the selection of this class of wool, offered up to the present time, has been distinctly below an average, and that Bradford is cheaper than London is shown by the fact that, both makers of combed wool tops and spinners of yarns, made from these wools, are advising their customers of advances in price.

"There is no doubt that some very large orders for worsted yarns, made from these cheap colonial cross-bred wools, have recently been placed with spinners here by manufacturers of such fabrics as dress goods, serges, and that these makers have, in their turn, taken large contracts from the home trade merchants for the coming Spring. As Bradford all-wool dress serges seem to be becoming more popular every season, there is every prospect of the demand for these wools being well maintained.

"Most classes of home-grown wools, both of a lustrous and non-lustrous kind, are in better demand, and prices show a slightly upward tendency.

"The quotations for both mohair and alpaca yarns are stationary, but in the past few weeks the purchases of raw material have been so heavy, that now very little remains outside the control of the users."

NOTTINGHAM LACE REPORT.

In certain specialties of fancy millinery laces there is much activity, says the Nottingham report of The Draper's Record. Valenciennes are still in favor, and torchons are in good request, as also are all-over nets. The different millinery specialties are selling in laces, insertions and galoons. Limited inquiries are being made for silk laces and nets and articles of neckwear.

There is a good demand for spotted and other nets, and the bobbin net, light tulle, and mosquito net branches are well engaged. No stocks of current goods are on hand, and prices remain abnormally high, without any inclination to come lower. Corset nets meet with a fair inquiry. Stiff foundation nets are only in limited request, but there is no change in quotations.

The making-up departments continue in an active condition, and caps, aprons, blouses and other fancy articles are in good request. An average demand is experienced for veilings in all the latest designs and colors. Cotton embroidery trimmings are slow of sale. Irish crochet edgings are selling as formerly.

Good quantities of lace curtains, window blinds, furniture, lace, and toilets are selling for the home trade and for export. The American demand keeps up nearly to the average level, and manufacturers are hoping for an enhanced inquiry from this quarter shortly. Styles and qualities are more varied than ever in lace curtains, and they appear to have driven the Indian muslin ones quite into the background.

Couch, Johnston & Cryderman, of Bowmanville, have made another addition to their extensive premises. They have built a room adjoining the workshop expressly for the use of their cutter, Mr. James Saunders, and have taken the rooms formerly used by him for their ready-made clothing.

Mr. James Croil, past vice-president of the Dominion Commercial Travelers' Association, is a candidate for the presidency for 1901. Mr. Croil has long been prominently connected with the association, and has been a member of the association since its formation in 1874. He represents the wholesale dry goods house of Thibaudeau Bros. & Co., Montreal.

A. Sweet & Co., of Winchester, have just issued a handsome catalogue for the Fall and Winter trade, enumerating the articles and prices of the same contained in their mammoth store, which is conducted on the principle of the city departmental stores. The catalogue, which is profusely illustrated, fully demonstrates that there is no need of sending away from Winchester for anything in the mercantile line, as A. Sweet & Co. can supply it and as cheaply as anyone.

THE W. R. BROCK CO., LIMITED.

THE W. R. Brock Co., Limited, report a continued call on their print and staple department. Specialties are still being offered. At present a special imported line of wrapperettes are being cleared at job prices. In staples, some job lots of striped flannelettes are on sale.

The smallware and notion department has several interesting features to offer just now. A magnificent line of pompadour combs, full round and half round, has been stocked and ought to prove good sellers to the holiday trade. Celluloid hairpins and ornaments are shown in great variety. This firm shows itself to be up-to-date by having a big range of new gilt goods for blouse trimmings, including tinsel braids and cords, and a fine line of gilt buttons. Brock's dress shields are very popular. A new and catchy line of fancy garters ought to be takers for the Christmas trade. Their perfumes and fancy boxes are having a ready sale.

The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, are asserting their claim to be headquarters for ladies' and children's underwear; they are keeping an extensive range of all makes. They are showing some good values in plain and ribbed hosiery. Women's and children's flannellette underwear are proving to be ready sellers at the present moment.

In the trimming department is shown a full assortment of black velvet and satin and cotton back velvet ribbons. A nice line is also to be seen in black and white imitation fur, swansdown and wool. Blue braid, as well as pearl and gold trimmings, are to be found in a variety of patterns.

ROBERT C. WILKINS.

Mr. Robert C. Wilkins has a new line of "Wild West" overalls and jackets that are striking the public very favorably. His range of outing, golf, tennis and yachting suits for Spring are worthy of attention. Mr. Wilkins has so many orders booked ahead for the new plaid back "Rainy-day" skirts, that he cannot fill any new orders before November 15.

JOHN GORDON & SON,

John Gordon & Son, Montreal, have been appointed sole selling agents in Canada for the linen thread manufactured by Henry Campbell & Co., Limited, Belfast, and a complete stock of these goods has arrived in Montreal. This make of thread has of late years become one of the most favorably known brands, both in British and foreign markets, a proud position it has gained on its merits, for the makers turn out only superior goods of uniform strength and guarantee weight and length. The Canadian agents have already placed some goods, and customers report satisfaction.

THE AMERICAN SILK WAIST MANUFACTURING CO.

The American Silk Waist Manufacturing Co. are busy making extensive improvements and increasing the capacity of their factory at 323 St. James street. The firm have succeeded in securing the whole building in which they have been situated, and now the office and showrooms will be accommodated at the same address. Machines are being set up every day until there are now about 100 machine operators at work. While the changes have been going on, the work of the factory has been somewhat impeded and orders have had to be declined, but, by running the factory night and day, the firm ardently hope to have all orders booked for the holiday trade filled by November 15. The travelers will be ready to go on the road with Spring goods about the first week in December.

The managers are now congratulating themselves that they have refused to manufacture cheap goods, for a market has soon been found in Canada for reliable waists of first-class quality. One of their cheapest waists is No. 555, and dealers may obtain samples of this style on request. It is a waist made of a soft-finished silk, is tucked front and back, has tailor-stitched collar and cuffs, is lined throughout, and is of dressmaker finish. The price is $2.60 for black, with 15c. extra for colors. Samples of other styles will be forwarded on application and to each sample will be attached pieces of silk showing the variety of colors in which each waist is made.

M MARKUS.

Mr. M. Markus has some more new features to lay before the wholesale and retail trade. He has now on hand a complete range of small gilt buttons from 10 line to 18 line in the different styles; they are the latest novelty, and dealers may have orders filled on short notice. He is just placing a convenient article before the public under the name of the "Safety" buckle. It may be used on either pants or vest. The commendable feature of it is that it has no points, yet it is handy and sure. Mr. Markus has sole control of the agency for the United States and Canada. He is now showing a fine range of vestings of German manufacture. New taffeta silks, both plain and fancy, are in stock, and seem to show extra good value. An exceedingly good variety in laces is still before the public eye, and here his motto, "Vinci non potest" is particularly applicable. Ladies' scarves promise to be popular in next Spring's styles again; for this contingency Mr. Markus has prepared himself by procuring the latest novelties in silk with fringes and insertions, and in a variety of colors and styles. Dealers may depend on the "Lion and Eagle" brand.

GAULT BROTHERS CO., LIMITED.

The Gault Brothers Co., Limited, Montreal, are showing some good values in serges and worsted coatings for December delivery. This firm were fortunate in taking advantage of the drop in price of wool, and some rock-bottom contracts have been placed. Their "Victory," "Viking" and "Yale" serges, as well as "Bellwarps," are worth inspection. In pantings they claim to have a most superior 75c. line. Early delivery of Fitzsimmons & Landslide's goods cannot be guaranteed unless orders are placed at once, for they are largely booked-up already.

The smallware department is entering upon another season in embroideries. All-over embroideries are being used for waists, Fall costumes and skirts, with an exceedingly stylish effect. All styles seem to be demanding a certain amount of laces and embroideries in trimming this year. All-over insertions and galoons are also stylish. Guipure laces are still in heavy demand, and several cases, comprising some 200 patterns, in all-over nets, edgings and insertions, have been put into stock. Travelers are now getting samples of a splendid range of "Crescent" brand of skirts, wrappers and shirt waists, in all the latest designs.

A great array of holiday handkerchiefs are in stock. Ladies' hemstitched handkerchiefs with lace inserted corners; hemstitched, embroidered and lace-trimmed handkerchiefs are to be found in endless variety. Belfast and Swiss makes are coming in daily.

The Outlook in Spring Dress Goods

What Canadian Buyers have to Say of the Styles and Makers.

“FASHIONS for Spring,” says a prominent buyer, just back from Europe, “have been very slow in revealing themselves, but at last the decree has gone forth, and it is a pretty well-assured fact that homespuns and friezes will continue to be popular during, at least, the early part of the season, in the same shades as are at present so much in vogue, with the addition of lighter shades of grey, fawn and brown. Later on, smooth-faced materials, such as box-cloth, sedans, venetians, etc., will cut a prominent figure in much the same range of shades, with the addition of cardinal and grenat, in which may be included the new Indian red.

“Tweeds are already prominent for Spring, and, for them, early orders have been placed by the trade, but it is noticeable that they are almost entirely on plainer, smaller patterns, and that the taste for large checks is on the wane. Speaking of checks, there is an undoubted revival in tartan effects, which, for the last few months, have been slow, but the strong demand for them will be in lines to retail up to 50c. per yard only, and at that price a cloth composed altogether of wool and silk should be secured.

“Fancy blacks must not be overlooked, for, notwithstanding their phenomenally long reign, they are still to the fore, and likely to remain there for some time to come, though small bright patterns promise to supersede almost entirely the large blister effects which have had such a long term of office.

“Following next, as the season advances, will arrive printed wool delaines, which, even now, show signs of early popularity, and are likely to continue and increase, so I should advise orders being placed before the choice of novelties is spoiled, as repeats will be very slow in delivery. Printed muslins are sure of a successful run, and, in them, as in fine prints, mercerized sateens and pongees, foulard patterns, with the new wedgewood blue, will be a leading feature.”

R. L. Davidson, dress-goods buyer for John Macdonald & Co., who has just returned from his trip placing orders for Spring goods, reports that the run is chiefly on plain goods, voilles, taffetas, and other soft, clinging materials having the attention of all buyers. Open work goods, such as grenadines, lace-work, etc., are also proving popular. Venetians and other goods of that class are largely in evidence. French printed delaines are showing signs of being a big thing for Spring business. In black goods, a great variety of weaves, such as armures, pebbled effects, etc., are being sold. Mohair figures and silk and wool figures are in favor in blacks. For tailor-made costumes for early Spring there is a certain amount of demand for light tweed effects.

There have been no new developments in the demand for Winter goods. Cheviots and other similar materials in browns, castors, and greys are still in evidence. Plaids are still holding their own in New York, and are bound to have a fairly good sale here this Winter. Next Spring, plaids may not be as popular as was the case this year. They are not as well adapted for Spring and Summer wear in the country as for Autumn and Winter, so the popularity of the past season is hardly expected to continue through another Spring.

Mr. Leslie H. Gault, of Gault Brothers Co., Montreal, has just returned from Europe with a budget of interesting news. He confirms the report that during the month of September the cotton market in England was in a most unsettled state, owing to the scarcity of raw cotton. During the first two weeks of September, raw cotton advanced 2d. per lb., equal to ½d. per yard on cloth. But the advances were not confined alone to cotton; coal, chemicals, etc., used in the production, had also increased in value. This caused manufacturers to withdraw their quotations, and many were obliged to reduce their production several days per month, not having sufficient cotton to supply the demand.

In woollen goods, both English and French, there has been a reduction, but as these goods had advanced nearly 40 per cent., it was not unexpected. The Canadian merchants, however, had never paid anything like the market value, and present prices now rule about 15 to 20 per cent. over the lowest point of 18 months ago. The last wool sales opened with a reduction, but not as much as was expected and this had already been discounted on September prices.

In the dress-goods market no special features were pronounced for the coming season. The high-class trade were using cheviots, plain cloths and neat checks for costumes. For the early Spring trade, wedgewood, fawns, and greys, will be fashionable shades. Quite a demand has sprung up for colored cashmeres in these shades. Embroidered flannels will be much in demand for waists, two of the most popular designs being the fleur de lis and crescent.

In the print trade much greater taste seems to have been displayed than usual, and some of the English and French styles in sateens are taking the place of silks, some lovely new designs and colorings being shown. The print season on this account will be a large one. Cardinal velvets, velveteens and flannels are now very fashionable for blouses. White goods for the Summer trade will be much used in lawns, Swiss spots, checks and stripes.

Mr. Geo. B. Fraser, of S. Greenshields, Son & Co., has also returned within the last few days from the European markets. He also brings some new ideas.

In dress goods he reports a tendency towards plain goods, such as bengalines, poplins and voiles in new pastel shades; these will likely be fashionable for Spring. Blacks will again be popular. There is a most pronounced favor shown for printed opera flannels, in stripes, checks, etc., for ladies' shirt waists. Brides' goods, such as mohairs, are again in the running. Plain silks will likely be good for blouses and trimmings; fancy silks seem to be out of favor. Red is the predominating color.

Woollen goods are back to their old prices, and cashmeres and all goods made from merino wools are tending higher. It is generally conceded they have reached rock-bottom.

The craze for gold braid is evidenced by the statement made by one manufacturer in England, to the effect that gold braid had advanced 120 per cent. in value. Gold braids and buttons and trimmings of all sorts are having a decided run. Anything of a military character is popular, and this explains the general call for gold and red.

Linen goods are firm, particularly cotton-warp goods. Mr. Fraser says that if his firm had to buy their linen goods over again, they would have to pay about 15 to 20 per cent. more than what they cost them some time ago. All goods containing cotton, such as velveteens, sateens, etc., are very firm.

TRADE IN MANITOBA AND THE NORTH-WEST.

(Conclusion of our Special Correspondent's Investigations.)

MOOSEJAW.

AFTER leaving Regina the next stop was at Moosejaw, a divisional point on the C. P. R., and the terminus of the Soo road.

The town is very prettily situated in a shallow valley, through which flows Moosejaw Creek, a considerable stream, which has been dammed to form a lake for the town. As far as natural advantages are concerned, it would be infinitely more suitable for the capital than the site of the present capital, Regina. Moosejaw is in many respects a railway town, but as it is surrounded by a fine farming country it will no doubt in time assume the proportions of a small city. The Canadian Pacific Railway has done much to beautify it by the erection of a handsome station, dining hall and hotel, of red brick, and the laying out of most beautiful gardens and a small park along the banks of the stream. On the 15th of October the pansy beds in these gardens were a mass of bloom.

A great many of the buildings in the town, both business houses and private residences, are of red brick, and the effect against the wide sweep of cultivated prairie on one side, and the trees and lake on the other, is very good.

Owing to the laying off of the Imperial Limited a day earlier than was anticipated, your correspondent was obliged to leave Moosejaw at 5.30 Sunday evening, and in this way had no opportunity of calling on the trade generally, but from a few inquiries made Saturday evening it appeared that business was in a fairly prosperous condition, and crops were turning out very well indeed. Near Moosejaw is Buffalo Lake, the celebrated shooting ground for wild geese, and here, the very day after your correspondent left, Mr. Simington, one of the business men of the town, met with a fatal accident.

EDMONTON DISTRICT.

At Moosejaw your correspondent met with several grain men returning from inspection trips in the Edmonton country. They had gone up to Edmonton on the 2nd of October, and on the 3rd and 4th it had snowed all day, until the magnificent crops of the district lay in stook under fully seven inches of wet snow. Everyone concluded it was all up with the crops. When these men returned on the 13th, all along the line from Edmonton the threshing machines were in full hum, and the wheat was yielding 40, 45, 50, 55 and even 60 bushels to the acre, and showing remarkably little damage from the snow. Four days of bright sunshine and crisp wind had thoroughly dried the grain. The crop of the Edmonton district is the largest and heaviest they have ever had.

NAPINKA.

Reaching Brandon, on the return trip, on Monday, the 15th, your correspondent proceeded south-west to Napinka, a distance of some 75 or 80 miles. This branch of the C. P. R. runs through a good farming section, and the same scene of threshing and stacking, was again and again repeated. Inquiries at Souris and Hartney, where the train made short stops, elicited the same story of better yield and quality than had been hoped for. Napinka was reached at 6 p. m. This also is a railway divisional town, and is chiefly notable for its row of tall elevators. When the grain season is in full swing the air resounds with the shrieks of shunting engines and the rumbling of heavily laden grain cars.

Hamlin & Cameron are the chief general merchants of the town, and have branches at Lauder and Melita. They report business good and collections very fair at all their branches. They anticipate a heavy November trade.

Samuel Titus, general hardware and stoves, reported business in his line very quiet at present, but trade during the summer had been good. 6.45 seems an early hour in October, but it was worth getting up to see the shimmer of hoar frost on the stretches of open prairie, the elevators like tall, sheeted ghosts, and the first faint rays of the sun turning the horizon to deep violet. As the train gets under way it is delightful to watch the smoke from the engine. It rises first in great dun-colored puffs, twenty feet from the engine it has become pure white, and dips until it almost touches the ground, rises to a height of twenty feet, dips again, the sun comes up and catches it and it becomes a golden haze. As far as the eye can reach behind the rushing train is this long trail of smoke, rising and falling. It is one of the peculiarities of the prairie, that long before you can either hear or see a train you see, perhaps ten, twelve or fifteen miles away, against the sky line, this long, thin cloud rising and falling in a regular pattern, and know that if you but wait long enough you will see a train rush by with its load of passengers, or perhaps forty or fifty box cars full of wheat.

The strip of country from Deloraine to Minga has suffered more than any district seen by your correspondent from the rains, and the land was still too wet to plough. Yet, even here, people were not disheartened. From Minga east the appearance of everything improved.

CRYSTAL CITY.

This little town was for years chiefly noted because of the fact that Hon. Thomas Greenway's celebrated farm "Prairie Home," is situated near it.

When Mr. Greenway was Premier of Manitoba he frequently said he was more anxious to be known as the "premier farmer" than the "farmer Premier," and in this respect his wishes are likely to be gratified. Under the able management of Mr. James Yule, a graduate from Guelph, the farm is fast becoming a model of diversified agriculture. This year they have threshed the crop from 1,000 acres, there are 175 pedigreed cattle in the stable, 140 pure bred pigs in the piggery, and the day of your correspondent's visit a man all the way from the State of Kansas was negotiating the purchase of some of the fine Shropshire sheep.

The town of Crystal City shows more growth for the year than any point in Manitoba or the Territories touched by your correspondent. A low estimate of the building and improvements to buildings for the year is $50,000. Some of these improvements are of a most substantial character. One block erected jointly by Sparling & Lauder and Hon. Thomas Greenway is of brick on stone foundation, two storeys with basement; the size 62 x 65. This building will be finished in the most up-to-date manner, plate-glass windows, metal ceilings, and lighted throughout with acetylene gas. The south half will be occupied as a hardware store, with tin shop above, by Sparling & Lauder, and the north-half by Sharp & Mutch, general dry goods, etc. The Oddfellows have erected a handsome brick block, 26 x 50, two storeys and basement. There are stores below and a handsome fraternal hall above. Some 8 or 10 good private residences have also been erected, and many residences and business blocks have been improved. Last year Mr. Greenway erected the Royal Victoria Music Hall, which is a great acquisition to the little town. It has a seating capacity of about 450, is furnished with fine opera chairs, and good accoustics are insured by the walls and ceiling being lined with tongued and grooved basswood. The coloring is a delicate shade of green, brightened by handsome floral designs, and further enhanced by life-size portraits in oils, of the Queen and the Prince of Wales. The stage, dressing rooms and lobbies are all commodious. The building is lighted throughout with acetelyne gas. The possession of this hall insures the town a superior class of entertainments.

In calling on the trade everyone was in good spirits. Sparling & Lauder, general hardware and stoves, who, by the way, occupy the first store erected west of the Pembina, report business good indeed. This was partly due to the activity of building operations in the town, and also to the fact that farmers throughout the district were improving both their houses and stables. They had sold 14 furnaces during the past season.

P. A. Young & Co., general dry goods, groceries, clothing, boots and shoes, etc., reported business very fair and indications of a good fall trade. Business was, of course, delayed, but it would come. As compared with former years, the trade in mits, boots and shirts for threshers this year to date had been small, but was on the increase. J. G. Steacy, general store, carries a large stock of dry goods, clothing, groceries, etc., and his report corresponded very closely with that of Mr. Young. Lewis Treble, clothing, boots and shoes and general groceries, endorsed the statements of his fellow merchants.

The creamery at this point has had a fairly successful season.

Your correspondent is much indebted to Mr. Finn, editor of The Courier, and Mr. J. W. Greenway, for acting as cicerones, and to Mr. and Mrs. Yule, for their gracious hospitality.

PILOT MOUND.

The next stop was at Pilot Mound, only some eight miles east of Crystal City, but the centre of a different type of farming country. Crystal City is on the open level prairie; Pilot Mound district is rolling, with hills covered with trees and scrub. It is an especially good dairy country as well as having a fine soil for wheat.

The Fairplay Creamery is one of the best known in Manitoba, and this year it has made close on 90,000 lb. of butter, which will net the farmers very close on 15c. per lb. Mr. William Grassick, secretary of the Creamery Association, very kindly drove your correspondent some 18 miles through the district, and she enjoyed the hospitality of Mrs. Grassick for a night. This is a district of well-to-do, prosperous farmers and one bad season would not affect them seriously, as they are nearly all in receipt of a good monthly income from their cows; but the season with them is by no means a failure. Threshing had been finished on many farms and a very fair crop was the result. In addition to wheat-growing and dairying large numbers of cattle are raised. In the town of Pilot Mound, which is rather a sleepy little burg, calls were made on

THOS BROPHY,
FRED L CAINS
A W D HOWELL

23 St. Helen Street,

Montreal, November 28, 1900.

DEAR SIR,—

It is impossible for you to buy or for us to sell Spring and Summer 1901 Dress Goods in the month of November or early in December. We are speaking now of English, French and other Foreign Goods, etc., of New Goods, Fashionable Goods, of Novelties in Weave, Pattern and Cloth, of Exclusive Designs, such as the trade of Canada know we make a specialty of.

By earnest hard work, we have earned the title :

“The Dress Goods House of Canada.”

We mean to maintain it. We can only do so by leading in the lines referred to. You have never had reason to regret waiting to see our selection before placing your dress goods order.

We have no hesitation in saying that our selection for Spring 1901 will be the richest, handsomest and best we have ever had.

We will be with you after the holidays, when the rush is over, when your stock shows that you profited in buying from us last season.

There is no department so hard to buy for as that containing Dress Goods, Silks, Satins, Velvets, etc. The time to buy these is not when you are busy selling this Season's Goods, but after the season's rush is over, and you can sit quietly down in the sample room with our representative and go carefully through our samples, giving them the attention they merit, and taking time to make a selection that will do your own good taste and judgment credit.

Our selection has been made and the goods bought. Wait for our representative, place your order with him, and the best trade of the town is yours.

Yours very truly,

BROPHY, CAINS & CO.

TRADE IN MANITOBA—Continued.

Chalmers Bros. & Bethune and D. H. Graham, hardware and stoves, and Endicott & Preston, and MacLean & Co., general stores. These firms carry fair stocks in all lines. Their report of the state of things was hardly so cheerful as might have been looked for from the prosperous state of the surrounding country. There did not appear the energetic tone here, noted in other towns.

MANITOU.

From Pilot Mound the line winds down through the lovely Pembina Valley, one of the prettiest spots in Manitoba, to the brisk town of Manitou. It is 18 months since your correspondent's last visit, and a number of new buildings were noted, more particularly residences.

Like Crystal City, Manitou is situated on open prairie. The surrounding country is as fine farming land as could be wished.

Extensive stock-raising is done in the district, and the line of huge elevators testify to the grain-raising.

Calls were made on P. Winram & Co., C. R. Gordon and Herald & Arnold, general stores, and Chalmers Bros. & Bethune, hardware and stoves. The reports as to trade tallied very closely with those of other districts. Yields were larger and samples better than had been hoped for, and they anticipated a good trade, once the wheat began to move.

MORDEN.

It was the intention to visit Morden, but time would not permit. However, from the report of farmers from that district, things were turning out very well. This district makes the proud boast of marketing 30 bbls. of fine crabapples this season.

THE WHEAT CROP AND PRICES.

Careful observation and close inquiry from reliable sources go to show that there will be from 12,000,000 to 15,000,000 bushels of wheat to be sold, after making due allowance for loss in sprouted wheat, moving shocks, etc. The smaller quantity has cost less to harvest and put on the market. Prices are so much higher that "no grade" is bringing more to-day than No. 1 hard brought last year. There will, therefore, be nearly as much money in the country when the stock is disposed of as there was last year.

DRAWBACKS.

The continued rains, delaying threshing, have curtailed the amount of ploughing to date, and how far this will be remedied by fine weather now is mere guess work. Business has been delayed anywhere from a month to six weeks, and merchants have had to pay interest for that additional length of time. When fall buying is delayed from October to November there is never quite as much done. The extreme slowness of collections has made money tight and interest high. Though there is no general failure of crop, there are small sections where it is a total failure, and in these sections the local merchants will have to carry the farmers, and the jobbing houses and the banks the merchants. We may say, then, that while there is no sense of failure or disaster, taking Manitoba and the Territories as a whole, 1900 will not rank as a banner year—neither will it have caused any general setback.

THE GAINS.

There are "no gains without pains," and equally there are "no pains without gains." The dry seeding and wet harvest have sifted the good farmers from the bad as chaff is sifted from wheat. Crops that were planted by drill on well summer-fallowed land yielded good crops which matured and in many instances were garnered before the rain came, proving conclusively that it is more profitable to crop land once in two years rather than every year. Another lesson pressed home is the value of cows and dairying. In the districts where the farmers keep from 10 to 20 cows and send the product to the creamery and cheese factory they can largely afford to ignore the partial failure of a wheat crop. The wisdom of keeping more stock and more pigs has also been emphasized. In one word, that mixed farming is the only thing that will pay and pay well any and every year. And if this year has taught even 20 per cent. of our farmers that lesson it will be worth five times over any loss that may have been incurred.

In conclusion your correspondent is much indebted to the superintendents of the experimental farms at Brandon and Indian Head for valuable information, and to the local press for courteous notices of the magazines.

NOTES.

An increasing demand for women's ready-to-wear goods, especially in dresses, is a feature in Western trade.

Merchants in Manitoba and the Territories are more and more coming to depend on the Winnipeg jobbing houses for their supplies. E. C. H.

CLERKS ON DUTY AT NIGHT.

The Montreal grocery clerks have adopted a resolution which bears upon the cases of clerks in all stores who are on duty at night :

"That, in our opinion, there would be no financial loss by closing early, because as the movement becomes general, the same amount of business will be done in shorter hours.

"That employers will get brighter and more energetic clerks, and, we believe, the long hours are the means of driving the bright boys away from the grocery trade. A clerk can be courteous and obliging for 10 hours in the day, but certainly not for 15.

"That in almost every other line of business the persons engaged in it have the evening for themselves, and there are no good reasons why the grocery clerk should not enjoy the privileges of domestic and social life in the same manner.

"We believe the day should be divided into three equal parts—sleep, work, recreation. Without these it is impossible to have perfect health, which, in our opinion, is more desirable than riches."

AVOIDING KID GLOVE RETURNS.

An importing house had trouble with one of their customers through the constant return of gloves. An investigation on the part of the importer was a revelation and supplies something unique in glove selling. It was found that the saleswoman having charge of the stock had a way of testing gloves peculiar to herself, which was to stretch each glove crosswise at the base of the fingers. Each and every glove was given a good pull, so the strength of the gusset could be thoroughly tested. It is not much wonder that about half of the goods thus tested were returned as imperfect. It is safe to say each pair returned was imperfect after it had been submitted to a test no self respecting glove would stand.

It is the duty of every retail glove salesman to educate the store's customers up to the proper handling of kid gloves. If the person selling gloves is careless in handling the stock in the presence of customers it is but natural customers will take the same liberty with each new pair, resulting in a number of returned pairs sufficient to take the enthusiasm out of the glove buyer.

One thing is certain, at any rate ; a salesman behind the retail glove counter who cannot give some valuable information about wearing kid gloves is more of a detriment than a benefit. No sensible person is averse to receiving suggestions if decently given. To be able to impart information without offence is a knack the good salesperson possesses. One who can't do this has no business to try to sell kid gloves.—Chicago exchange.

LINEN THREAD AGENCY.

Lindsay, Thompson & Co., Limited, manufacturers of linen thread and flax spinners, Belfast, have recently decided to push business upon the Canadian market. This firm are the largest linen thread manufacturing concern outside of the combine just formed and were most resolute in the maintenance of their individual identity. Messrs. Geo. D. Ross & Co., of Montreal, have been appointed Canadian agents, and, no doubt, they will be as successful in doing business with Lindsay, Thompson & Co's threads in the future as they were with Knox's threads in the past.

ACCORDING TO SEASON.

THE dry goods and millinery trade needs a new calendar. A schedule differing from that of the "old school" must be drawn up. There must be a new apportioning of seasons, a regulation which shall stem this tide of advance showings and early clearings, and bring the season of selling within the period when conditions of temperature are more favorable. For some years past it has been a growing custom in all lines of trade to advance the season, with the result that to day the Spring season begins in midwinter and the Fall season in midsummer.

The calendar gives the months of September and October to the Fall season, the dry goods trade claims them for the Winter. February is scheduled as belonging to the Winter, and proves its claim right well by furnishing the most extreme, exasperating and disagreeable weather, together with the lowest temperature of the year. Yet, the retail dry goods stores are, during this month, full of the suggestions of Spring, with midsummer fabrics galore on display.

Because September and October fail to produce a temperature like that of December and January, and March refuses to give May bloom, the dry goods trade take it as a personal injury, doled out by the weather man. When temperature gives no suggestion to the consumer for need of Winter clothing the trade is in the slough of despond.

The weeks mapped out as belonging to certain seasons with corresponding sales in certain lines of goods, pass rapidly by with weather conditions unfavorable to trade. The demand is based on the needs of the consumer, who feels no necessity for Winter clothing on mild Autumn days, nor desire to purchase Summer wear with Boreas blowing a freezing blast.

The fact of the matter is that the American dry goods trade has heretofore adhered too closely to the two-season idea. The 12 months have been divided into two instead of four seasons. It has been Winter and Summer with Fall and Spring left out of the reckoning.

The two-season plan was borrowed from Europe. Some years ago it was necessary that the European method should in a measure be the American method of business. This, however, is no longer the situation. With increased facilities for rapid delivery of goods, and the vast development of American manufacturing interests, it is no longer necessary to blindly follow the lead of Europe. American mercantile interests should adopt a policy of their own in the preparation and distribution of goods.

The first step would be to sell goods according to the season. To trade not in futures but in the present. In this section of the United States the seasons have changed most radically. Winter comes later and stays later. The old dates for the beginning and end of the season are proven entirely wrong by the conditions of weather that prevail at these periods.

The January clearing sale is a relic of past ages. January really marks the commencement of Winter, the time when the people have greatest need for Winter clothing, and, therefore, the time when the merchant should do his best business in seasonable goods. As January is not Spring, neither is September Winter. But each have their proper places in the changing seasons, and their needs to be supplied by the trade. Slavish adherence to dates and precedents is a dangerous method. A much safer and more profitable plan is to conduct business on lines closely adapted to the needs of the day.

Production should be brought more closely to the period of distribution, and distribution should be conducted with closer regard to the actual needs and desires of the consumer. Let each present day take care of its need. Buy conservatively and often. Keep stocks fresh and up to the minute, but do not too greatly anticipate.—Chicago Dry Goods Reporter.

A SEASONABLE OFFER.

WE would draw the attention of the trade to a special offer being made by S. Greenshields, Son & Co., Montreal, in their handkerchief advertisement on page 59. They have laid in a stock of handkerchiefs for the Christmas trade which they claim has never been excelled in Canada for novelty, excellence and price. To bring these to the attention of the trade, they are making this offer which certainly ought to make business for them. It is no clearing sale of old goods, as they have all been recently imported to meet the trade of dealers who want up-to-date Christmas goods. There are many styles to choose from. Indeed, in the ranges is a large line of Swiss goods, to retail from 12½c. to $1.25, mourning Swiss goods, Japanese handkerchiefs, plain, hemstitched or with printed borders. Three lines of initialed goods are also shown in the same stock. A full range of lawns with printed borders is offered both in ladies' and men's sizes. Children's picture handkerchiefs are shown in 25 seasonable novelties, to retail from 2 to 5c. Ladies' and gentlemen's lawn handkerchiefs are to be had at all prices. Lawns with initialed corners are shown in six ranges, both ladies' and men's sizes. The lace handkerchiefs, a style now popular, are exquisite in design and display admirable taste. Moreover, they can be depended upon. There are also some good cambric handkerchiefs with lace borders to retail from 10 to 25c. Ladies' motto handkerchiefs, to retail at 10 and 15c., are another important line. Applique lace stuff is carried in about 40 lines to retail at 25c. A nice range of goods is some initialed pongonese, in two pieces, to retail at 25c.

Colored goods bid fair to furnish the handkerchief novelties of the Christmas season, particularly in the more fashionable circles. These come almost entirely in lawn, with printed borders and plain centres and also with colored centres and plain, colored or striped borders. They are all fast colors. Ladies have also caught the colored handkerchief idea and plain, hemstitched lawn with fancy centres are shown. Plain lawns, plain linens and hemstitched lawns are shown at all prices.

While the advertisement of S. Greenshields, Son & Co. offers a certain number of handkerchiefs at $50, any firm not feeling disposed to lay in such a large stock may obtain an assortment of half the number for $25.

We regret to report the death of Mr. William H. Hopgood, junior partner of the firm of Reuben Tuplin & Co., general merchants, Kensington, P.E.I., which occurred on the morning of November 3.

A RIP VAN WINKLE AWAKENETH!

THE LAST OPPONENT OF ADVERTISING LAYS DOWN HIS ARMS.

JUDICIOUS advertising is an investment. Some regard it as an expense. As viewed and treated, results are apt to confirm the estimate. But, happily, the need for the advocacy of advertising is over. It has been put in the balance and not found wanting.

In truth, a treatise on its merits and utility would, at this late day be somewhat akin to an argument in favor of "gravitation," or in support of the contention that the "earth do move." In the late American campaign, Bryan promised that, if elected President, he would neither seek nor accept a second term, to which a Republican paper wittily replied: "The sentiment is excellent, but superfluous." Equally superfluous, howsoever excellent, would prove an essay in advocacy of advertising on this, the eve of the 20th century.

Notwithstanding this, there are still here and there—much more frequently, in fact, than one might imagine—many merchants, otherwise progressive and up-to date, who, as yet, fail to realize the force or appreciate the influence of intelligent publicity. Of this, a most striking and shining example is furnished by the experience of a leading firm of American clothiers. Decriers of that art have long cited Brokaw Brothers—one of the oldest and most popular of metropolitan outfitters—as practical disproof of the value of advertising.

"There," said these croakers, "is a house which made their way to the forefront against most aggressive advertising rivals, and held their ground without the expenditure of a soumarkee in printers' ink. If," argued these tacticians of the ostrich school, "a firm like Brokaw's can get where they got, and keep there, without blaring of trumpets or beating of drums, of what avail is all that vast outlay for publicity?" Sounds plausible, doesn't it? Every time a newspaper canvasser would approach one of these anti-advertisers, the only answer to his argument or entreaty would be Brokaw. That word, in his eyes, seemed to settle the controversy and close the case.

Unhappily for them, however, even the "Brokaw" reed is broken. That firm have finally turned traitors to their ancient principles and practice. In other words, they have jumped on to the typographical band wagon and are now to be numbered among the believers in the policy of publicity. Why this thussness?

Brokaw Brothers, it seems, started in New York many years ago, when conditions were radically different from those now obtaining, and, by dint of hard work and sheer ability, soon attained the premier position in metropolitan clothing-dom. Their productions were excellent and uniform; their methods reliable; in fact, their name became a synonym for clothing perfection. New firms, however, sprang up around them—firms whose productions compared favorably with theirs—firms who labored under the halucination that if one had a good thing to sell, it might be well to noise it abroad among those who might want to buy. Of these ideas, Rogers, Peet & Co. were the leading exponents. They believed in advertising, and considered the best none too good for them. They hired the most expert talent available, and began building up a trade against that of the old and conservative Brokaws.

With what result? Within a few years Rogers, Peet reared a clothing business second to none in New York.—Fact No. 1. Now, after years of inflexible opposition thereto, the Brokaws become converts to advertising.—Fact No. 2.

Draw your own conclusions, Mr. Canadian Merchant. If Brokaw Bros. couldn't longer do without advertising, who could? Can you?

A NOVEL WAY TO BOOM SALES.

FORTUNE-TELLING FANS THE MOTOR POWER.

With a view to emphasizing the advantages resulting from the distribution of novelty articles as an advertisement, a recent experience of a department store in Massachusetts might be interesting, possibly instructive.

The concern in question found that a certain department (gloves) was afflicted with that "tired feeling" and needed a tonic. In this case, the "Hood's Sarsaparilla" took the form of what was called "Fortune" fans. This fan is an ingenious contrivance whereby certain questions printed on the fans are answered by a set of replies printed on a revolving card attached thereto. Five thousand of these fans were ordered. Attention was called to the plan by the distribution of coupons, reading :

"This coupon with payment of 2c. entitles the holder to a handsome fortune-telling fan. At the glove department."

The charge of 2c. was based on the theory that a person willing to pay for an article must be somewhat interested in it, and, in fact, the trifling outlay was frequently returned to the holder of a coupon who also made a purchase. As stated, the glove department was selected because it had been running behind in sales and needed a stimulant.

The coupons were thoroughly distributed. They were enclosed in every package that left the store and in every letter. The drivers of the delivery wagons scattered them broadcast, and batches of 25 were sent to the foremen of the various factories with the request that they be distributed among the employes. In fact, the name of that Bay State firm became a household word in their city and vicinage.

To impress people with the real value of the fans, they were artistically displayed in the glove department, and bore the price-mark, "10c.," the firm thus getting the credit of giving an article really worth 10c. for the paltry pittance of a penny.

Results were instantaneous and far surpassing most sanguine expectations. Coupons began to pour back into the store in a continuous stream. "Fortune" fans were to be seen everywhere throughout the city, and, as their advertising man put it, became the "talk of the town." The supply of 5,000 lasted only about 10 days, but before they were exhausted the previously unprofitable glove department took a new lease of life and became one of the most active sections of an otherwise busy store.

From this incident three distinct lessons are deducible :

First. The coupon bearing the announcement fulfilled its mission by arresting attention and arousing curiosity.—Advertisement No. 1.

Second. The 10c. price tag on the fan as displayed at the counter indicated that the article was really worth something and asked price was purely nominal.—Advertisement No. 2.

Third. The fan was of such a character as to interest both old and young.—Advertisement No. 3.

By the combination of these three features, results were secured and business notably boomed.

Had the fans been merely stacked up on the counters and given away indiscriminately such a success could not have been achieved. It was not the character of the novelty, nor its apparent cheapness that brought results, but its manipulation. This experience has a moral, which is too apparent to dilate upon. Study it ye scribes of the store quill.

A UNIQUE SCHEME.

One of the most original advertisers across the line is a Dayton, Ohio, clothier, by the name of Mose Cohen. His schemes are principally planned to interest the children, and among the boys and girls of that city the name Mose Cohen is one to conjure with, being in a class with Santa Claus.

First arrest the children's attention, seems to be Mr. Cohen's policy, and, through them, that of the parents. He recently came out with the following announcement, which illustrates a new phase of advertising well worthy of study :

I HAVE ENGAGED

PROF. WM. F. FRIER,

The World's Greatest Magician and Sleight of Hand Performer, to entertain you with his wonderful magic and London Punch and Judy, at the Armoury, Cor. Sixth street and Canal. I will give 11 entertainments, beginning Saturday morning at 10 o'clock. Tickets will be distributed to you all this week, so my good little friend, if you do not get your ticket to-day, you will to-morrow or a day or so after. Don't you lose your ticket—give it to papa or mama to keep for you, and, by all means, remember the date, day and exact time.

If you have a Blue Morning Ticket, it is good only for Saturday morning, September 15th.

(Ten other colors were mentioned, each color for a specified entertainment.)

Now get ready for lots of fun. Don't you run when you come. Hold your ticket real tight in your hand, and take your time. The show won't begin till you get there. No, it won't. You needn't put on your Sunday clothes to come, either. I promise you a real good time, and lots of fun. Don't stand up, unless the boys in front of you do; holler all you please, and when the show is over tell papa and mama what a good time you had, and how the tricks are done, and don't forget to tell them about the nice Clothes, Hats, Caps and Fixings I've got for you, when the time comes to get them.

Don't forget the color and date of your ticket, read it over and over, till you know it by heart. Please do.

Yours to always please,

MOSE COHEN.

NOTHING NEW UNDER THE SUN.

One of the latest and certainly most novel contrivances ever invented, much less patented, is a machine for printing advertisements on the asphalt pavements of streets. It is a species of bicycle, the tire of the front wheel having a series of raised letters on its periphery. These letters, as the wheel revolves, print the name of a soap, or what not, while an automatic blower at the bottom of the fork blows the dust away from the pavement in front. This is akin to the scheme of throwing ads on the clouds by means of huge magic lanterns. Next!

GOOD ADVERTISING—Continued.

all others, however, seems to be that kind of which illustrates the goods advertised. Take the Pillsbury advertisement herewith reproduced. Are not these barrels just as decorative, from a typographical standpoint, as a plain rule border? yet how infinitely more effective, as regards impression and illustration.

The idea is applicable to almost any article of merchandise. Such cuts can be produced quickly and cheaply, and the advertisement appreciably enhanced in appearance thereby. For a shoe sale, use border of Oxford ties. Is it a collar sale? Border it with collars. And when the cuts are once made you have them for all time, and can use them at any time when such goods are on special sale. Some of the most effective display advertisements recently appearing in New York papers owed much of their novelty and uniqueness to this innovation. Why not be the first to introduce it in your locality?

ANSWER TO A QUERY.

A large general, or departmental firm in a small town, midway between two cities, which draw considerable trade from their circle of territory, write saying that they think of issuing a small monthly advertising newspaper or pamphlet. They now advertise in the local newspaper, but its circulation does not extend to all the people they want to reach. They ask for suggestions as to means of extending their trade.

To answer such a query with satisfactory confidence entails a study of local conditions which is only possible in a degree to the critic. Yet, most of the circumstances can be understood. The town is in a rich agricultural section. Both of the cities mentioned are outside the county the town is in and both are about 45 miles distant. The town is about the same size as the county seat which is 19 miles distant. The population of the county is about 25,000. This much we can be sure of.

But, as our correspondents do not inform us, we cannot be sure what they consider their "own circle of territory," what turnover they have or what they are willing to expend on advertising. We will presume, however, that the weekly turnover is $1,000. A fair expenditure on advertising for such a return would be about 1 per cent., or, say, $10 per week. Thus we have an allowance of $500 per year for advertising—a moderate expense to obtain a big turnover in the face of strong competition.

As the local paper does not cover the field which our correspondents desire to reach, they should extend their advertising to the papers which do. A double-half column could, we presume, be secured in four of the most widely circulated papers in the district for about $200. An allowance of $50 a year for the cuts necessary for the most effective advertising would leave $250 for other methods. A small pamphlet is suggested. This proposal has undoubted merit in it, but it is questionable whether this scheme would prove advisable when the ground is well covered by regular newspaper advertising, which is the most economical offered to the merchants in the towns and smaller cities.

In many of the towns of the Northwest catalogue advertising has been resorted to with excellent results. The critic has before him a catalogue recently gotten up by A. Sweet & Co., of Winchester, Ont., a town of about 1,000, 32 miles from Ottawa. This was printed by the local printer, contains 32 pages, and is full of illustrations and prices, which go to prove that A. Sweet & Co. can compete with any competitor.

Two catalogues such as this might be issued; one in early Spring, the other in the Fall. If these were attractively illustrated and printed and if the prices were right they should do much good.

An alternative suggestion would be to follow the example of a Brandon merchant who made a contract with the publisher of the local paper for a page advertisement and sent the latter to every customer whose trade he sought. This is a more expensive method of advertising than where a sufficiently wide circulation can be made sure of without gratuitous distribution. But it proved a profitable one.

APPOINTED CANADIAN AGENT.

The Canadian mantle and clothing manufacturers will be interested to know that Messrs. Anton and Alfred Lehmann, of Berlin, the largest manufacturers in beavers and other cloths, specially suited to clothing manufacturing purposes, have granted Mr. M. Markus, Montreal, the sole agency of their goods for Canada. Samples are now out and Mr. Markus expects to do a large trade here in these celebrated fabrics.

SPRING STYLES OF WAISTS.

Mr. J. Cars, the designer for The American Silk Waist Manufacturing Co., Montreal, has made a trip to New York this month to gather in the latest ideas in waists and to complete his designs for Spring samples. The firm expect to have their samples on the road by December 15 and say they will show the greatest range of fancy waists ever put upon the Canadian market.

CHANGED THEIR ADDRESS.

The G. Weeton Manufacturing Co., manufacturers of silver-plated ware and specialties, Toronto, have moved their Toronto office from 326½ Spadina avenue to the Confederation Life Building.

The Valleyfield strike that inconvenienced The Montreal Cotton Company for some days is now almost a thing of the past. One of the men accused of intimidation during the trouble has been found guilty by Judge Sicott, of St. Hyacinthe, and sentenced to three months in jail at hard labor. Other cases are to come up in court. By the time the town pays the bill of expense incurred at the time, it will wish that the law had always kept the upper hand, as it is doing now.

Meeting the Popular Taste.

Dress Goods. A fair trade has been done in dress goods during the past month, the demand running principally on friezes and vicunas. It is one of the disadvantages of the trade that plain goods continue to be the only favorites. Plaids are in only moderate request, while mohairs have not come up to expectations.

Grey is the most popular color, with red running a close second. There has been a heavy run on opera flannels again this month, so heavy indeed that some houses have been cleared out of their stocks. One noticeable feature of this trade is the turn in favor toward a finer make of twill in spots and stripes. The newest thing is the hairline and other fine stripes. The popular colors are legion, including blues, pinks, cardinals, heliotropes and black and white in combination. For Spring the tendency is still toward plains and small checks in the new tans, fawns, browns and slates. There is a noticeable Spring movement toward cashmeres of fine henrietta finish in pastel shades. Some samples of bright new printed French delaines have been shown for Spring; they are very handsome and bid fair to be in the line of popular fancy.

Silks. It seems to be a good time to buy silks, for the market is low and the taste seems fairly well defined. Plain soft silks are selling well in tamalines, taffetas and such varieties. Old-fashioned peau de soie is being used by a great many people, as are black broche silks also. It is thought that the Spring will augment the sale of colored taffetas. We are to have a season of plain cotton and wool fabrics, and such goods call for silk foundations. As no substitute for taffeta has been brought forward, silk experts count on the continuance of the vogue of the present favorite. Many retail windows are being dressed with taffetas, which are being pushed for winter wear. Mousseline de soie will be much seen in waists this Winter and may be a favorite for Spring.

Velveteens. During the last two weeks dealers have sold more velveteen than for some time, showing an unprecedented demand for general wear dresses. It is used in all colorings. On account of its extreme durability, non-crushing and elastic properties, as well as its rich appearance, it has come to be used extensively for trimmings and waist garniture.

Linens. Although linens have advanced 15 to 20 per cent. within the last few months the movement has not reached its zenith. We hear that the crop of Russian flax is going to be shorter than at first thought, and one large Canadian importing house has recently been informed that the price of yarn has advanced again. It seems to be a good time to buy. A heavy trade will probably be done in linens during the first two weeks of December, when Spring dating can be secured.

Ladies' Belts. Fancy belts are good property at the present time and bid fair to improve during the coming months. Patent leather is still considered the correct thing, both in plain and trimmed. The latter is gaining in favor at the moment, taking on the craze for all sorts of bright "addenda." Combinations are being made with gold tinsel, gilt braid and gold and silver buckles. A patent leather belt now being shown by some houses with two or three rows of white or gold stitching gives a very good effect. Gold tinsel belting is so popular the fashionable world over that German manufacturers are not taking orders except for delivery three months hence. Gold braids have all advanced in price about 50 per cent. There are also on the market numerous combinations of gold braid, velvet and satin, while others are shown of the braid alone or edged with velvet. In some gilt belts strips of the material are used in place of a continuous band, being held together by two, three or four ornamental slides. A device just coming upon the Canadian market is the further ornamentation of belts by the addition of satin streamers finished with ferrets or ribbon ends. These ribbon ends are now being imported by the Canadian houses, and may be used on the back, front or sides of dresses with effect. Separate belt buckles are being shown in great variety, in gold, nickel, black and steel. The old style of clasp opening behind like a large hook and eye is displacing the late favorite which opens at the centre.

Christmas Handkerchiefs. A large range of handkerchiefs is being shown by the trade for Christmas, in a variety of styles and make-ups to suit all lines of trade. These include Swiss goods to retail from 12½c. to $1.25, mourning Swiss goods, Japanese, hemstitched or with printed borders, and initialed goods. Lawns with or without printed borders are shown in both ladies' and gentlemen's sizes, and as a staple will take the lead. Children's picture handkerchiefs seem to have lost none of their favor, for they have again been brought out in a multitude of patterns.

In ladies' handkerchiefs the novelties run almost entirely in lace goods; cambric handkerchiefs with lace borders will retail extensively from 10c. to 25c. Applique lace goods are all selling well and one house alone has 50 lines of assorted edges to retail at 25c. There will be quite a number of lace handkerchiefs of the higher class sold at Christmas.

For men the novelty is printed handkerchiefs with either the border printed and the centre plain or vice versa or both colored in different patterns. In the latter case many of the borders are striped. Nearly all gentlemen's handkerchiefs are lawn this season, linen not attracting the usual attention paid to it. Full ranges of lawns are shown in Turkey and white and indigo and white. It is likely that printed handkerchiefs will flourish about Christmas in fashionable centres and wholesalers are prepared for a big rush on them in the first few weeks of December.

Dress Trimmings. Trimmings are extensive enough just now to warrant their being placed on a broad basis in a department of their own, for the popularity for dress garniture is becoming more and more pronounced and mounting higher and higher. We have been gradually approaching an era of richness through the use of laces, embroideries and rich fabrics. Not only are fabrics to be trimmed with laces and embroideries and be braided and corded, but laces and embroideries and Honiton and Battenberg braids are to be made up into rich appliques in set pieces for collars, collarettes, revers, vests, shoulder straps, cuff pieces, bands in skirts, borders and edges. The tendency in this direction is unmistakable, and the highest fashion will demand the highest class of these goods. Whites and butter and deep creams will be the prevailing colors.

But the movement in trimmings has advanced farther than this. The craze for gold now so much talked about is only one fractional part of a broad movement towards richness in trimmings of all sorts in combinations of red, gold, steel, velvet, velveteen, satin and metal threads. There will be combinations of laces with braids, satin cords and other materials which give a wonderful effect at medium prices. Jet bead work continues to assert itself, and satin cord and chenille will move in black as well as other colors. The use of shaded metals is considered exquisite in very fashionable circles, but it is doubtful whether the popularity of irridescent will be pronounced in Canada. However, signs of the fever are already noticeable here, for the gold idea has been readily taken up and the trade is not turning away even at this early date from the latest designs in buttons.

Buttons. Buttons are certainly going to be a feature next season. At present pearl buttons are good stock for flannel waists. The new buttons are steel, gold, horn, pearl, cameo or glass. As a rule they come in combinations in striking styles. They are looked upon to furnish finishing touches to the braid, lace and cord trimmings of dresses; the one suggests the other. Mantle pearl buttons have been in good demand this month and stocks are run low; 40 line has been the best seller, while 50 line has been very good.

Notes. Stray-lock ornaments for the back of the hair are coming in extensively, made in the form of a gold buckle from 1½ to 3 in. long. The shapes vary.

There is quite a craze among the ladies for crocheting silk bags, trimmed with cut jet and cut steel beads. It has been difficult to find any house to carry these frames, but we see that one house are now showing an extensive line. The sizes are 3½ and 4½-in. frame tops. They sell at $6 to $12 a dozen, and are made of oxidized and French silver.

Small closing tops to make little silk purses, in gilt, grey and oxidized, are on sale at $2.50 to $4.50 a dozen.

Jean cushion tops are shown extensively in a variety of novel patterns.

There is some talk of blouse sets coming in again, and the manufacturers are preparing for the demand.

Chateleine bags are at present considered good in seal, alligator and fancy leathers. Finger purses are also enjoying a season of popularity.

There has been a heavy run on ribbons this last month, particularly in the varieties that go well with cluny and plain laces. Plain black and white taffetas in the narrow and medium widths have filled the bill.

In embroideries there has been an improved demand for gagoon insertions in black and white; fine muslins and nainsook embroideries and insertions have also been good sellers.

MR. CHAS. REID'S NEW POSITION.

Mr. Charles Reid, late of the firm of Charles Reid & Co., has accepted the position of secretary with S. F. McKinnon & Co., Limited. Mr. Reid is to be congratulated upon his appointment, and S. F. McKinnon & Co., Limited, are equally fortunate in securing a man of his ability. Mr. Reid will be pleased to meet his friends in the trade at his new address.

Mr. E. L. Rosenthal of The Beaver Rubber Clothing Co., Limited, Montreal, has left for Europe to make a three weeks' study of the latest waterproof cloak designs in the English, Scotch and Paris markets. He will be back in time to have his Spring samples ready for his travelers about the first week in January.

A NEW BUYER APPOINTED.

THE many friends and acquaintances of Mr. C. W. Dunning will be very much pleased to know of his appointment as foreign buyer for the staple department of Messrs. John Macdonald & Co., Toronto. Mr. Dunning is well and favorably known throughout the dry good trade as a thorough business man. He is conversant with every detail of linens, foreign and domestic staples, and there is no doubt that he will make the great department of which he is now head a greater success than ever. He is a keen buyer and close seller; believing firmly in the old maxim, "Small profits and quick returns." There is a big increase looked for in the sales of this department. Mr. Dunning was a most successful salesman in the warehouse and on the road; his affable address, truthfulness and attention to business gained for him many customers. What he has been as a salesman, THE DRY GOODS REVIEW earnestly hopes he will be as a buyer—successful.

MR. CALDECOTT'S IMPORTANT AGENCY.

The retail trade of the Dominion will be pleased to learn that Mr. Stapleton Caldecott has become the representative in this country of Messrs. Debenham & Freebody, of London, England, who are the largest silk dealers in the world, having houses and depots in all parts of the Empire. They have become so impressed with the value of the Canadian trade that they have decided to carry a stock in Canada, which they are selling at direct importation prices. Mr. Caldecott's agency is located in Toronto, where he is one of the best known of that city's business men.

TRAVELERS' HOTEL GUIDE.

The hotel is practically the commercial traveler's home, so one of the objects of the Dominion Commercial Travelers' Association is to secure all possible comforts and conveniences in hotels. To do this to a maximum degree the association has published a Guide containing the names of the best hotels throughout Canada. This list has been compiled from information secured by circulars sent out from the Montreal office, and only the names of those hotels are inserted which guarantee good wholesome food; clean, warm and well-ventilated sleeping rooms; satisfactory sanitary arrangements; large, clean, warm, well-lighted and well-ventilated sample rooms and safe arrangements for escape in case of fire. In the Guide, which is gotten up in the form of a pocket book like last year's, are the names of about 1,300 hotels whose rates for board and sample-rooms and transfer charges are shown. Altogether it is a handy little publication that will be appreciated by the members of the association, and the executive is to be congratulated upon its publication.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS IN DRY GOODS STORES.

NOTWITHSTANDING that the best and most acceptable kind of present is one that is useful rather than merely ornamental, there is a great trade done by the jewelry and fancy goods stores at Christmas time, which should, to a large extent, go to the dry goods places, as there is a greater choice of goods that would make suitable and useful Christmas presents here than can be found in any other business.

To encourage the public to make use of the drygoodsman's wares it is necessary to show what can be done for them in the way of supplying presents for Christmas. This can be accomplished only by advertising certain articles as Christmas presents; first, in the local newspapers, and then by displaying them in the windows with cards attached, giving the price and calling attention to the fact that they would be very acceptable presents.

It is often difficult to decide just what to select for a present, and it makes it much easier for the purchaser if a number of things are thought out by the dealer and then put on exhibition, so that a choice may be had.

Probably one of the reasons that books or jewelry are so often given as presents is that the donor cannot think of anything else suitable, and merely chooses them to relieve him of further bother, when, as a matter of fact, he would prefer to give something of a different nature, and which he could get in a dry goods store if he cared to go to the trouble of looking all over the stock to decide what to buy.

Among the goods that may be found in almost every jeweler's establishment at Christmas time are ladies' umbrellas, and these, nicely mounted, are a valuable line to carry, as they are very often given as presents. There is not much chance of the dry goods merchant selling them if he allows the jeweler to place them in his window as special Christmas goods while he, himself, shows them only as a regular part of the stock.

One of the most prominent city dry goods dealers says that among the goods they sell largely at Christmas, and which they suggest to customers as presents, are ladies' and gentlemen's gloves, fancy silk shawls, fancy sofa pillows or pillow covers, all kinds of handkerchiefs—laced trimmed, silk, initaled and linen—and ladies' ties and scarves.

These are not goods that were placed in especially for the holiday trade, but they make good presents, and the dealer says so, with the result that they are bought for the purpose.

GOLD AND PAPER MONEY.

THE Canadian banking interest is opposed to the establishment of a mint in Canada where Canadian gold could be coined into money. At the recent meeting of the Bankers' Association, an expression of their views to this effect was made.

Although our money is based on a gold standard we have no gold coinage. By law the British sovereign and the American eagle are made legal tender, and when gold is demanded these coins are used. As this system gives Canadian money the requisite stability without any expense, it would appear that the bankers are not wrong when they oppose the establishment of a mint, especially as it would entail considerable cost on the country, probably from $50,000 to $100,000 per year.

But that is not the reason the banks are opposed to it. A great deal of the money in circulation is in the bills of chartered banks. These bills are as safe and good as gold. Their circulation is a source of profit to the banks. As a matter of convenience most people in Canada prefer paper money to gold coins. It is more easily handled.

But, if having a mint and a coinage of our own leads to the use of gold instead of bills, the banks will be partly responsible since they allow their bills to get so filthy. The Dominion of Canada is equally responsible for the dirty condition of its one and two dollar notes. Besides the distaste which people have for carrying dirty bills, there is the danger that these bills spread disease.

Our Pacific Coast cities are naturally in favor of a mint, because they believe that a gold coinage will keep trade there instead of diverting it to the United States cities. For this reason the establishment of a mint is to be desired. On any other grounds we could do without it.

The possibility that our richer classes would do their retail trading in gold rather than in bills is not so very remote. Once establish a gold coinage and it would to some, though perhaps only a limited, extent displace the bank bills. It would, quite conceivably, displace the $5 and $10 bills employed, especially among city people.

Our advice to the banks, as it was long before this mint agitation arose, is to keep their bills clean and make them attractive.

TAXES ON BUSINESS.

JUDGING by the evidence already presented to the Ontario Assessment Commission the balance of testimony is against the personalty tax, and it would not be surprising if the commission reported in favor of other methods of taxation.

The evidence which is being laid before the commission is valuable to merchants outside of Ontario, because the system of assessment generally is liable to change by the Provincial Legislatures and the testimony of Ontario merchants will enlighten people elsewhere.

The prominent business men who have appeared before the commission in Toronto have not wasted their time. They have done good service to the cause of business generally. They are entitled to the gratitude of the trade for speaking out plainly and for giving their own experience so intelligently. In fact, no better opportunity has been afforded in recent years for business men to voice the reasonable complaints they have regarding their treatment by Legislatures and Parliaments.

It is notorious that most of our legislative bodies are controlled by lawyers and professional politicians. Perhaps, through ignorance, they allow measures to go through which are distinctly bad for business and omit to pass measures which would do business good.

An instance of this is the Act passed last year by the Ontario Legislature taxing the selling agents of outside incorporated companies doing business in Ontario. It is all very well to say that direct taxation is necessary and that someone must be taxed to raise a Provincial revenue. But, in this case, it looks as if the measure was hurried through at the last moment and is really going to act as a deterrent to trade.

It is supposed that under our constitution the Provinces have no power to enact laws "in restraint of trade," but, if we are going to tax business men who have agencies for companies from outside, we are really restricting trade. Not being lawyers we give no legal opinion on this point. But the principle underlying the Ontario Act referred to is vicious and injurious.

The only way to call attention to these matters is for business men to come boldly out and draw the attention of the general public to what is going on.

TO BRING VISITORS TO MONTREAL.

THE retail drygoodsmen of Montreal and their invited guests gathered to enjoy an oyster supper at the Monument National on Wednesday evening, November 20. A very pleasant social evening was spent, but it was not all fun, for an idea was thrown out in one of the speeches made after the feast which, if acted upon, and it likely will be, will mean a great deal to the retail business men of the Canadian metropolis.

Mr. Tetrault, of La Patrie, threw out the suggestion. He spoke of "Merchants' week," as it is known in large American cities, like New York, Boston, Chicago, etc. For five consecutive days great popular fairs are held, during which merchants give special bargains. It is special week also in connection with the theatres, places of amusement, hotels, elevated railroads and street cars. Reduced prices and fares are in force all through the cities. The consequence is that immense crowds flock into the cities whose business men adopt this method of increasing their business.

The idea immediately found favor in the meeting, and it is probable that it shall be acted upon in Montreal. Approbation was shown in speeches of Messrs. Marsolais, Charbonneau, W. A. Grenier, A. Germain, Couture and others. The association will likely request the railways to give reduced fares to Montreal from neighboring towns and villages; the merchants will advertise special bargains for the same days for which the railway tickets are good, and various other attractions to visitors to come to the city will be found. How often these "bargain days" will be held is an undecided matter, but, no matter how often the association find it advisable to bring visitors to town, the members will find that the scheme will increase their business.

RETURNING GOODS.

THE dry goods section of the Toronto Board of Trade intends to deal with the question of returning goods, their attention having been directed to it by the following letter from Mr. Chas. Reid, secretary of S. F. McKinnon & Co., Limited:

"I am directed by the president and directors of this company to draw your attention to the steadily-growing evil of customers returning goods that have been sent them in accordance with their orders, and to request that you will bring the matter before the council of the board of trade, in order that some concerted action may be taken and an attempt made to mitigate this unbusinesslike habit. It is practised by nearly all classes of traders, and has grown to such an extent that the damage to goods and the annual cost of express and freight charges on these returns has now become a very serious tax on business.

"A few years ago action was taken by the board of trade in this same matter, and a circular issued by you drawing the attention of merchants, etc., to the evils of this practice. The circular had an excellent effect, and the practice was to a great extent stopped, but, after a few years, it would appear the matter has escaped notice, until now the habit is far worse than before. In many cases we have this month goods that were sent out in August, September and October last are being returned in November, without asking permission, and, we believe, for the sole reason that this season has not been quite favorable to these retailers, and they want to unload by returning the goods. I therefore hope the board of trade will take action and endeavor to stamp out this growing evil."

On many occasions THE DRY GOODS REVIEW has dealt with this question and proposes to do so again. It has consulted both wholesale and retail merchants on the subject, and believes that by the exercise of ordinary care and good business methods most of the trouble can be avoided.

In fact, we are quite convinced that the cases which give ground of complaint are exceptional, and that the vast majority of merchants have no trouble whatsoever. The experience of most good merchants is that where returns are really necessary no objections are raised, and that where goods are sent back promptly, in good order, and with a letter of explanation, the trade express no dissatisfaction.

But, where returned goods are damaged by careless packing—and we have seen some grievous instances of this; where they are kept so long as to give rise to the suspicion that they were put on sale and, not being sold, were sent back to be got rid of; or where no letter of any kind accompanies them—what can be said of such cases? Surely it is poor business to do this kind of thing! No other explanation is possible than that the proprietor is unaware of what is going on, and some careless employe is responsible.

One wholesale firm state that some goods come back without a mark of any kind to indicate who sent them, and that this is, in some instances, never discovered! This we take to be proof that the retailer does not, in such cases, know of the return, since no credit note is demanded and he is loser.

We hope to hear from our readers on this question so that the whole matter may be thoroughly ventilated.

PRINTS AT POPULAR PRICES.

There is an opening for our Canadian print mills to make some high-class novelties to retail at 15c. per yard and over. The staple lines shown this year have been highly praised, both by wholesale and retail buyers. No fault can be found with the designs and finishing of Canadian prints shown of late, and the products of the new print works at Montreal have been especially a mark for complimentary references.

But the prices of prints are high this year in Canada, as elsewhere, and it is not easy to get popular lines for 10c. and 12½c. retailing. Prints to sell at these prices the retail trade are bound to have, and, if they cannot get them of Canadian make, they will get them of some other.

Some importers, to meet this popular demand, have had to bring in lines that can be offered at the prices mentioned. There will doubtless be a large sale for them.

In order to command the highest prices for prints the Canadian mills may be expected to go in for more novelties, and from the class of stuff already shown there is no reason to doubt their ability to produce something especially good.

OTTAWA BUSINESS MEN DISCUSS.

IN the city of Ottawa the Board of Trade has been discussing the question of taxation, and we are pleased to note that great interest is taken by the local business men in the evidence to be laid before the Assessment Commission. We notice that Mr. Crawford Ross has made some sensible remarks on the subject, and is thus reported in one of the local papers:

Mr. C. Ross said that the capital stock of joint stock companies was exempt from taxation, but the dividends or revenue was taxable. The clauses in reference to joint stock companies were contradictory. In unincorporated companies it was the unknown quantity which was taxed. The personal property was taxable, but the question was, what did this mean? He maintained that it was not rightly interpreted by the city assessment department. The personalty tax had driven out of business in Ottawa a hundred concerns. It matters not whether they were earning anything or otherwise. It was an inquisition tax. There was a clause in the Act whereby the business tax could be substituted for the personalty, and based on the rental value of the building at 7½ per cent. The law provided for this, and it could be adopted in Ottawa. Seven and one-half per cent, was the extreme limit, but it could be made less. Go along Sparks street to-day and take the personalty tax, and it would be found that it was more like 15 per cent. on the rental value of the buildings. He could give an instance where the personalty tax was 37 mills on the dollar. This was worse than in Broadway, New York, and the personalty assessment on Ottawa's main business thoroughfare was much higher than in other cities. He maintained that the assessment commissioner did not properly interpret the Act. He said Mr. Pratt assessed personal property no matter whether the money expended for it had been borrowed from the bank or not. The fact that the money was borrowed from the bank should be regarded the same as a debt owing to the wholesale houses. In conclusion, Mr. Ross remarked: "There are not half a dozen men in the city council we would put up with in our own businesses, and yet they are put there to run the affairs of the city, and the assessment commissioner is supposed to provide them with money. We should send some one there among the conglomeration of anomalies. There are certain things that should be straightened up. We should make provision for the substitution of the business tax for the personal tax."

The remarks of Mr. Ross are so much to the point that they are quoted here in full for the benefit of other cities.

ORGANIZATION OF MERCHANTS.

There is, we are glad to note, a movement in different quarters to form business organizations for the purpose of promoting good government.

One such body has just been formed in Vancouver, and is called the Vancouver Citizens' Association. One of its aims is to see that the municipal council is filled with good men, and announcement is made of the intention to bring out a business man for mayor next year and to secure the nomination and election of as many business men to the city council as possible. This is a wise move and we wish it success.

In some of the leading towns and cities in Canada the municipal councils are not representative of the business interests at all. People find their way there whom one would never think of choosing to act for one in any business matter. In many cases, doubtless, they are "good fellows," popular and well-meaning but not really fitted for managing municipal affairs.

Good men can always be had to devote part of their time to the public business if they really think they are wanted. But, naturally, they don't desire to fight for positions in municipal life which are more bother than pleasure and which they would only fill from a sense of public duty.

Wherever boards of trade do not consider it convenient or desirable to take part in municipal politics, then the formation of citizens' or taxpayers' associations should be resorted to.

A DRY GOODS LETTER FROM NEW YORK.

Improvement in Silks—What about January Muslin Sales?—Underwear and Dress Styles—
The Flannel Waist Trade—Fashions in Cloaks—Men's Neckwear and Hosiery—The Holiday Goods.

FROM THE DRY GOODS REVIEW'S CORRESPONDENT.

New York, November 23, 1900.

TO what extent politics and dry goods are connected was forcibly illustrated by the great revival of business which immediately followed the election. Numerous large contracts which were placed contingent upon the results of the election have been confirmed and furnish the basis of a renewed period of activity, which was all the more welcome that it succeeded to a partial stagnation which had set in at a period which should have been marked by unusual activity. These remarks apply more to the wholesale than to the retail trade, as the latter was more influenced by the lack of seasonable weather than political considerations. But the conjunction of the two—favorable elections and widespread cold weather—was sufficient to start a boom whose effects have been far-reaching and of immediate benefit to the entire dry goods trade. With the great disturbing elements removed, the balance of the Fall season promises to be a record-breaker and the outlook for Spring is certainly encouraging.

THE STRONG FIRM.

Trade circles were stirred to their depths by a notable failure, that of W. L. Strong & Co., the senior member of which was prominent in New York City's politics. The crash was precipitated by the death of Col. Strong, and while the liabilities are heavy they are spread over a large number of creditors, and outside of the Stott Woollen Mills, which were closely allied with the commission house, no other houses have been carried down with it.

THE SILK MARKET.

Coincident with the revival of business the silk market has taken on a firmer tone than it has known for several months. Gradually the position of the market has been strengthened, the odds and ends that were thrown on the market have been absorbed and a healthy condition exists, which argues well for the Spring business. The elements that are largely responsible for this are principally a marked increase in the demand for silks in retail channels, the larger use of silk linings in long cloaks and jackets, the revival of business in silk petticoats and greater confidence in silks in general.

Contrary to the general run of Spring tendencies, the demand for Spring silks is running toward the plain weaves with soft finish. Of course fancies are not neglected and will doubtless show more strength as the season progresses, but the orders that have been placed by early buyers all favor plain weaves. Despite their long run taffetas are holding their own to a remarkable extent, and, although louisines are in some favor for waists and petticoats, taffeta is still the unquestioned leader.

For the Spring demand surahs promise to be in the front rank. There is a pronounced movement in favor of printed foulards, but to what extent the demand will develop is an open question. The ribbon market, so far as silks are concerned, is not particularly active, as velvet ribbons still hold the strongest position. Tinsel effects harmonize with velvets, and both narrow and wide velvet ribbons, edged with gold of one kind and another, are particularly favorites.

TRADE IN COTTONS.

The cotton market did not respond so readily to the general upward movement of prices. This is probably accounted for by the fact that cottons had already been marked up to an abnormal extent, and the demand for actual consumption has not developed into proportions that warrant further advances. The print market has not had enough activity to give any significance to the slight price changes which have taken place. It is true that the prices were advanced a trifle, but, in the face of a quiet market, the rise is more or less nominal. The Spring demand for many cotton fabrics is late, and this will largely influence the trend of the immediate market and hold back buyers in general.

JANUARY MUSLIN SALES IN LESS FAVOR.

Muslin underwear sales in January, which have been so generally popular for many years with American retailers, are being looked upon with less favor, and will be dispensed with by a number of prominent concerns who have been foremost in pushing these sales. Probably the reason for this is found in the lack of enthusiasm that was shown in these sales last season, and their absolute failure in many instances. The forcing of sales of Summer goods in January is an anomaly in itself, but so long as success attended these efforts, the unusual features were lost sight of. The demand for muslin underwear has thus been turned from its ordinary channels, and, whereas, in former years, late December and early January deliveries were called for, the deliveries have been extended to March.

In the Spring styles, hemstitched effects predominate in various forms of which the picked up hemstitch made on a special machine is the most popular. Straight drawers are in better demand than for several seasons past; umbrella drawers are cut much narrower and enable the manufacturer to turn out a more showy garment for the same money. Lace trimmings predominate on the medium and popular-priced goods. Cheap corset covers, which are the usual bone of contention on January sales, are less called for than ever, which is in itself a very good indication that a better class of goods is coming in. The most popular style of corset covers has V or circle necks, with blouse or French fronts and are intended to retail from 25c. to $1. each for the medium class of trade.

In gowns there is a great diversity of styles which include the time-worn Empire, straight, high and square necks. Gowns in nainsook, trimmed with embroidery, and intended to retail from $1 to $1.50 are popular among the later offerings. Chemises are in favor in lengths ranging from 36 to 42 inches.

White petticoats are in high favor. They are not as wide as formerly, though the bottoms have a decided bell flare. Trains have been quite discarded. Among the newer models that have been well received are white skirts with scalloped flounced bottoms, trimmed with either lace or embroidery. It is expected that white petticoats will be the leaders in the Spring demand. Spring lines of silk petticoats show a general preference for lace trimmed effects. The mercerized cottons cannot follow the silks in this respect, but the new styles run more and more into plaitings of various kinds.

FLANNEL AND OTHER WAISTS.

In the waist field flannels are still the leaders. The demand has extended over a wide range of colors, which includes all the pastel shades, red, hunter's green, lavender, helio, various blues, castor and grey. What may be termed hybrids, made of flannel with the exception of the front which is made of taffeta, have been moderately popular. The Bishop sleeve, with a slight gather at the cuff, is the leader—the cuffs narrow, finished straight and with diamond point, usually trimmed with a gilt button. Spring lines are well under way, and, from present indications, it would seem as though light flannels and albatross cloth will be well represented, but, in the wash fabrics, lawns and shear materials will have the call.

The Spring season is already looked upon as a "white season"; while colored goods will be well represented in the sample lines, there is no confidence in them at present, and such orders as have been booked for medium and better goods are on the white goods. The much mooted question is one of collars and cuffs. The consensus of opinion favors soft collars and soft cuffs; there is little question about the latter, but there is quite a difference of opinion as to the former. On the very cheap goods it is impracticable to use anything but laundered collars. On the popular and medium garments it is argued that a woman can purchase a stiff collar if she wishes to, and that a soft collar should accompany the waist.

THE CLOAK FASHIONS.

This is horse show week, and such questions of style as have not yet been definitely settled, will find a solution in what is worn by the elite on this occasion. The long cloak has evidently come to stay, and has more admirers than ever. The extremely long garment has been adopted by the classes, but the 26 in. jacket has the call with the medium. The jaunty short jacket is not yet out of the race. Long capes are in better favor than the short, especially in velours and plushes. The season has been retarded by warm weather, but a sharp cold spell has put new life into the business, and moved retail stock sufficiently to make room for new goods.

MEN'S NECKWEAR.

The trade in men's neckwear is centred on holiday business. The butterfly and the batwing are giving way to the imperial and the four-in-hand, though the diversity of tastes distributes the demand over the whole field. The derby has made a place for itself, and is increasing in favor. They are made both straight and graduated, and in the usual run of baratheas, twills, etc., in solid colors and neat figured and striped effects. Puffs and tecks are in limited demand, principally outside of the large cities.

Mufflers are in good demand, both in plain and fancy figured striped silks. The very light shades are favored and plain white. Among the novelties may be mentioned plaited shapes, which are favorites for evening wear.

THE SHIRT WAIST IDEA.

The agitation in favor of men's shirt waists has cooled down considerably, as manufacturers have accepted only absolute orders. A great variety of styles are included in the Spring lines, but the demand has not settled down to definite designs. Plaits back and front are favored; also a full back, a la raglan, and full sleeves.

FANCIES IN HOSIERY.

The early Spring demand in hosiery shows a distinct inclination to favor fancies. Lace effects have taken the market by storm, and are easily the leaders. There is almost an endless variety of stripes, vertical and ring, and various embroidered effects and combinations of these. In colors, the pastel shades are prominent; also royal, cardinal, helio and tan. Present indications all point to a big Spring season for fancy hosiery.

THE SMALLWARES TRADE.

In the notion and smallware trade, holiday business has absorbed attention, and such novelties as were brought out during the season have already had their run. The gold craze is still unabated. The shortage of the supply was responsible for the continued advances in price. There has been a big demand for belts in gold, and in patent leather and velvet with gold trimming. The straight belt is conspicuous by its absence; bodice belts have the call. Everything is "L'Aiglon" nowadays—even belts. The accepted model is a pronounced bodice shape, which gives a long-waisted and straight-front effect. Another favorite model is made with three strands of gold braid, converging to the front. The ribbon fastening is favored. Pulley belts are still in vogue, but not to the same extent as formerly. L'Aiglon belts come in prices (wholesale) from $3 to $12 per dozen.

A novelty belt is made of fine kid, gilded. Chate-laine bags have sold freely, made with cut steel and black jet beads. The beads are woven so closely as to resemble cloth in texture. In manicure and toilet sets, hand mirrors, etc., which usually sell best in sterling silver, the most popular are made of ebony, either real or imitation, silver trimmed. The genuine ebony is very expensive, but the imitation is, in many instances, scarcely to be distinguished from the other, and brings the prices in direct competition with the sterling silver articles.

Dipped goods in sterling silver have also been very popular. The usual demand for holiday toys has kept that market in good shape. Mechanical effects predominate.

The trend of the designer's fancy has followed in military lines—soldiers, cannon, armoured trains, etc., are conspicuous in the holiday exhibits of the great toy bazaars.

WM. J. BRANDT.

A SIGN OF THE TIMES.

In Canada, the surest index to the general prosperity of the business community is the increase or decrease in the consumption of articles of wearing apparel that are not necessities.

Neckties are not actual necessities of life, but rather come under the head of luxuries. This being so, there is no doubt Canada is enjoying a period of great prosperity.

After enlarging and adding to their premises every year since 1891, when E. & C. Currie bought the block of warehouses on Wellington street west, Toronto, and occupied the largest a year ago, it was thought they would now have enough room to supply the wants of the Canadian market. To our surprise, on calling the other day, we found men busy making connecting archways into the warehouse to the west. In answer to inquiries, we were told that they were so crowded, owing to the unexpected increase in business, that more room was absolutely necessary. Fortunately, the warehouse next door west belonged to them, and, after having let their tenants go from the upper flats, they were tearing down part of the connecting walls in hope of getting sufficient room.

Hat, Cap and

Fur Trade.

The State of Trade.

The retail hat trade may be said to be done for the season. Although there are a number being sold, it is only the trade that continues all the year around. The rush for the fashionable shapes, however, is now over.

The fur trade this season is better than it has been for a number of years. Ever since September furriers have been very busy, and one house, The W. & D. Dineen Co., Limited, of Toronto, even with their greatly-increased capacity, have been forced by the rush to refuse many orders. A week or so of mild weather, though, will enable furriers to get the trade in hand. With the increased demand for furs, the price has gone up, and the best qualities of Alaska sealskins are this year 50 per cent. higher than last, and indications point to a still further advance next season. This is only in the skins, though, as the jackets this season, being smaller and requiring less goods in making, are only 25 per cent. higher. The better grades of Persian lamb jackets are 10 per cent. higher. On the cheaper grades of furs there has been no advance.

For ladies' jackets, sealskin is the popular fur, with Persian lamb a good second. The better grades of electric seal are also in great demand, as the price places it within reach of the masses, a good jacket being obtainable for $35. Grey Persian lamb is not in much demand, except for children's garments, collarettes, caps, etc.

Caperines or Persian lamb collarettes are now fashionable for wearing over tailor-made costumes. An immense variety of these is shown, ranging from $5 up to $125, in all combinations of furs. A caperine having a Persian lamb yoke and Alaska sable border, with a cluster of tails, is a very fashionable garment this season. Caperines are also worn in royal ermine, chinchilla, Alaska sealskin, and all shades of foxes—blue, red, brown and pointed. For Fall and Spring, and mild Winter weather, scarves are a popular article for wear. They are made in almost all furs, Alaska sable, mink, Russian sable, Hudson Bay sable, ermine and stone marten being the favorites.

Ladies' cloth driving coats in various shades, trimmed with mink and lined with warm Russian furs, are now in great demand. Box coats and long coats reaching to the bottoms of the skirts are also going remarkably well. They can be had for $35 to $75. In the colder parts of Canada racoon is worn considerably in ladies' coats and jackets.

In men's furs, for city wear, fur-lined coats, with otter or Persian lamb collar, are now worn more than anything else. They are sold for $50 to $100. Outside of the city racoon and other heavy furs go well, running from $25 to $45. Black astrachan is another popular fur for men; nothing seems to be able to replace it. They sell for $25 to $50.

In men's caps and gauntlets the city trade runs wholly on Persian lamb and otter, while beaver, astrachan and other heavy furs sell best in outside places, or in colder districts.

Coachmen's furs, in the city, are this year a good portion of the fur trade.

A Fashion Authority on Men's Styles.

One of the best authorities on men's fashions in New York said the other day that it is rarely the case that a man of advanced age can look well in the shapes and styles of hats worn by young men.

In the silk hat, for example, there are usually two styles kept in stock, one for young and the other for older men, the difference being in many instances readily noticeable. The young man's shape is lighter in weight, but has a somewhat more tightly curling brim and a slightly less belled crown, which give it a smaller and more dainty look, more in keeping with the features and coloring of youth than a heavy, broader brimmed and more substantial hat would be. For the man of 60, especially if his hair is grey, or he wears a beard, the heavier and less dainty-looking hat is the better, and if the older man also is inclined to stoutness, this is more than ever true. Of course, it is sometimes the case that a young man, if he is large and heavy, looks better in a hat not too light and dainty, while an older man of light weight and small stature will find a smaller and lighter-looking hat the most becoming, and when such is the case each should wear the shape which suits him best.

One often hears an older man remark that he does not like to wear such and such a thing because it is too young and "giddy" looking. If it is as a matter of fact so "giddy" in looks as to be noticeably out of place as a part of his apparel, he is right in not wearing it, but the point to be considered is, not whether the article is in itself young-looking, but whether it looks too young for him. An apparent attempt to ape youth in dress, as well as in manners, is apt to be ridiculous in a man of past middle age; but it is almost equally absurd for a man to think that because he has seen the snows of 50 Winters he must cease to have his cloths well cut; that he must no longer tie his cravats according to the fashion of the times; or that he must wear Wellington boots and suits of sombre black.

As with the silk hat so it is with the opera, the derby, the alpine, felt hats, caps and straws. Their style, and whether or not they should be worn, depend almost entirely upon the individual physical characteristics of the man. Generally speaking—and I can deal only in generalities—the man of past 60, or at most 65, should not wear an opera hat, especially, as it likely to be the case, if his hair and beard are white. If he has a smooth face and is comparatively young in looks, well and good, but by imagining a venerable-looking old man with white hair and long white beard in an opera hat, sitting opposite to one in the cars, my meaning will be understood. It is not that there is anything distinctly wrong or in any way bad style about this, but simply that it is out of keeping, and therefore strikingly noticeable to the ordinarily observant person.

The derby, like the silk hat, for an older man and one inclined to stoutness, should be of fair proportions rather than of small crown and tightly curling brim. It should be becoming, and that a hat which resembles a thimble on the top of a haystack cannot possibly be. This applies, however, equally well to young men as to men of advanced age; and I have always contended that it is better to wear a hat which looks well in preference to an exaggerated style which does not, simply because the latter may happen to be the strict fashion or fad of the moment.

I have known many men to sacrifice looks entirely to the name on the inside of a hat, preferring to have a shape associated with and easily recognized as the shape of a fashionable hatter rather than one which is becoming to them personally. I do not mean to imply that the fashionable hatters have only one distinct shape, or that it is not always the best plan to buy from them when one can find there a style which is becoming. There is always a certain satisfaction in knowing and in feeling that others know one's clothes have been made by a maker of smart reputation, especially if he has the reputation of being rather expensive. It is one of the weaknesses of human nature, and the result of the unassailable fact that society and the world at large is given to judging according to the value of money.

In respect to other styles of hats there is less danger of a man making mistakes. The felt sombrero with twisted band in color is now much less in fashion than it was a year or two ago, and even then it was so distinctly a young man's hat that I doubt if it ever occurred to a man of middle age or beyond to wear one. The golf or traveling cap of tweed is not usually worn by men of more than 50 years old, but is permissible for a man of any age in the country or on shipboard. The grey alpine of proper shape may be worn by a man of any age, and the flat-brimmed straw hat is also proper for him who is still on the sunny side of 80. The shape and style should not, of course, be extreme; that is to say, a man of more than 60 years should not wear precisely the same kind of a straw worn by his son at college, and the colored band should be omitted be men some 20 years younger, except perhaps a band of plain dark blue. But a hat of straw in Summer, preferably of not too coarse a weave and with medium crown and brim is entirely proper.

The Price of Persians.

Some comment has taken place in the fur trade over the report in our last issue that the price of Persian lamb had not recently advanced. The report turns out to be an error, as the prices of these furs have been advancing. Being asked by THE DRY GOODS REVIEW, Mr. James D. Allan said emphatically that there had been an advance in the prices paid for recent purchases in Europe of fully 25 per cent. over last year's market. There can be no doubt that, as far as values are concerned, the situation in regard to these skins is strained. Large importers are asking an advance of $1 per skin for Persian lambs.

WINDOW AND STORE DECORATING.

Conducted for THE REVIEW by H. Hollingsworth, an Expert Window Artist.

TO DRY GOODS REVIEW READERS.—We shall be glad to receive photographs and descriptions of window displays that have attracted special attention in their own localities, and which would be considered helpful to trimmers generally. Any inquiries or questions on the subject of window dressing will be answered cheerfully, and any information given that may be desired by readers. Queries should be addressed: "Window Dressing Department."

THE HOLIDAY TRIMS.

HOLIDAY window trims yield better returns than work done at any other season. This is because people look at the goods displayed more carefully at this time.

The way to make a good holiday window is to call attention to some of the desirable features of your stock, but so arranged that there is a feature in some manner connected with the display.

Have some special attraction, either for a centrepiece or in the whole display, mechanical or otherwise.

A FEW SUGGESTIONS FOR CHRISTMAS WINDOWS.

Don't put your best windows in first. Save them for the last ten days before Christmas. Let them grow more beautiful at the approach of Christmas.

Don't put the best selling goods on display first, either. If you do, you will carry over some "stickers." The good sellers will sell anyway and it is best to use just enough of these in your displays to render the whole attractive to the observer.

Don't crowd the Christmas windows. Create a "stocky" effect without overcrowding. If you confuse the eye, half the selling effect will be ruined.

There is more scope for the fancy in Christmas trims than in those of any other character, and many pleasing themes are worked out by the thoughtful and enterprising trimmer. These may be carried too far, for, when the "picture" or "tableaux" effects are so absorbing that the people fail to see the goods, then the object to be accomplished is lost.

Don't forget that the primary aim is to attract attention to the goods and from that gain custom.

Have the windows bright. Use as many lights as possible. You can't have too much illumination. Have every trim tending on the suggestiveness of the joyous season.

MECHANICAL CONTRIVANCES.

Nothing draws a crowd as well as some mechanical effect; something moving. Especially is this so at Christmas time.

In the following drawings and explanations I will try to convey as minutely as possible the workings of a few simple and practical mechanical devices.

Before explaining these drawings, I must not forget to say that all the following devices are worked by a small fan motor. Every house where window trimming is recognized should have one of these little motors. Nearly every store nowadays is lighted by incandescent lamps, from which almost any inexperienced trimmer can connect a length of electric cord from the light to the motor.

The motor can be used to run hundreds of mechanical devices. All that is necessary to put it in readiness for attaching to the machinery is to unscrew the fan from the shaft and in its place put a 2-inch pulley, which can be made for a trifle.

Fasten this securely so that it won't slip on the shaft, attach the wires or electric cord to motor, connect it with the main circuit that runs the lights and then it is ready to attach to the works of the device.

As the speed of these motors is about 10,000 revolutions per minute, and as the general speed required to run most of these mechanical devices is about 10 or 15 revolutions per minute, a set of gear wheels has to be made. (See the drawing—No. 1.)

No. 1.

The above sketch may convey the idea (to one who has never tried anything of the kind) that this is a lot of trouble and would take a lot of time and expense to build. Such is not the case.

You will be surprised how simple it is to make. If the firm will not pay a dollar or two to have the pulleys made at a factory, then go to the grocery department and get four lids of candy pails, about 18 or 20 inches in diameter, and nail them together in two's.

This gives you the two large pulleys. There will also be a groove for the belt to lay in, as the tops of the candy pails are always beveled, and when two are nailed together it forms a splendid groove for the belt to play on. The same can be done for the little pulleys with small lids off pails of lard, etc.

Get any old boards lying around and these will do for supports when nailed together as in drawing. The shafts can be made from pieces of round sticks. A curtain pole sawed into two pieces, each 1 ft. long, makes a good shaft.

For sockets for these pulleys to turn on, get shade curtain ends. They only cost a few cents and make the finest and easiest bearings.

To make my meaning plainer: Go to the shade blind department and ask them to give you four roller blind ends and sockets, same size as the curtain pole shafts (about one inch is the right thing).

When this is put together you have a speed reducer that you can keep and which has cost you very little, and from which you can work hundreds of mechanical contrivances with the aid of the motor. If at any time you want to run anything a little faster or slower all that is necessary is to change one of the pulleys for one smaller or larger.

Drawing No. 2 suggests a device that can be put to different uses and run by the little motor and the reduction gear (as just described).

No. 2.

The above sketch is easily understood. The supports for each stand are made about 1 ft. high by 8 in. wide. The pulleys are secured to pieces of curtain poles. The bearings are roller blind sockets, same as those mentioned. The pulleys are made about 6 in. in diameter. Holes are bored through top of supports, large enough to allow the shaft to work freely. These should be well greased, so as to have as little friction as possible.

The number of these revolving stands to be used in the display must be determined according to size of window. The reduction gear and motor must be hidden, also the stands.

On the stands almost any line of goods can be shown. This is a great scheme for a millinery window. At the opening of the "Emporium" in Chicago, their immense window was trimmed on this principle. A pretty pedestal stood on each of these stands and on top of each was a ladies' wax head, on which was shown a pretty hat.

There were, I suppose, 50 of these revolving heads, showing all sides and views of each bonnet or hat. As the background, sides and top were mirrors, there appeared to be hundreds of heads and hats. The sight was magnificent and the display was admired by thousands.

If any trimmer undertakes to try this idea in the way of a mechanical device, he will be surprised how simple a scheme it is and how easily it will run.

From this same idea dozens of others can be constructed.

Sketch No. 3 shows another idea in a revolving stand. It is made about 10 feet in height. Four circles are placed one above the other on a curtain pole. Same bearings are used as in the other stands. On this can be shown confectionery in boxes or dishes, fancy chinaware, dolls, toys, shoes; in fact, anything that is small and not too heavy.

It should be evenly balanced all around, so as to make it run smoothly.

Each stand can be covered over with colored crepe paper, etc.

With the motor and the reduction gear, all sorts of arrangements can be run.

In future numbers of THE REVIEW I will explain and illustrate some good practical mechanical and electrical devices that can be run by the reduction gear and motor.

If any of our readers interested in window trimming have never tried any mechanical ideas in their windows they should be able with these few suggestions and drawings to carry out some clever ideas that will do themselves credit and bring in dollars for every minute expended in getting up such a trim.

THE REVIEW will be pleased to furnish all information that it can give to any trimmers requiring same about mechanical attractions or any other line.

We present a photo of a neat little Christmas handkerchief display that will convey ideas for a holiday handkerchief trim.

No. 3.

TO AVOID FROSTED WINDOW PANES.

A number of merchants are again struggling with the difficulty of frosted windows and are viewing with envious eyes and unhappy feeling the clear transparent panes of some of their competitors in business who seem to have solved the problem.

It is soul harrowing and mind disturbing to see one window as opaque as a sheet of felt, and another loom up as transparent as a crystal, when both are apparently under the same conditions.

One sees a window free from frost when it is entirely enclosed, and that seems to explain the reason.

But a few doors further on another window, similarly enclosed, is covered with ice. Some windows that have a half length enclosure inside are clear and others are frosty, and some that are entirely open to receive the heat of the store are clear while others are not.

A great deal of money has been expended by merchants in the large cities to determine the remedy for frosted windows. The whole secret of keeping windows free from frost when the thermometer is below zero, is in having plenty of ventilation.

If the inside of the window is as cold as the outside the moisture will not condense and there will be no frost. Some merchants bore a number of small holes in the casing, others use fluids, such as glycerine, ammonia, etc., on the glass. However, it has been fully demonstrated that if the window is kept cold it will not frost over.

However, I don't see why the works of a clock would not answer your purpose. I have made a sketch and think it quite practical.

Fig 1. shows ship, evenly balanced in centre with a small lead weight on bottom. Through centre of the ship's hull runs a pivot on which ship works. This pivot is nailed on the wall or on an upright support, and must be strong enough to support the whole weight of the ship. This should be made of wood or a round piece of metal and a pin put in the end of it so that the ship will not slip off.

Having done this you will find that the least little touch at either end of the ship will set it in motion, showing what little strain there will be on the clockwork. Nail the clockwork to the floor, or on an upright, take a strip of tin about a quarter inch wide and, say, 1 ft. long, at both ends cut a hole large enough to admit a small screw nail, but not enough to let the head of the nail through. Then cut another screw nail in two and solder the end with the head on it to the outside edge of one of the wheels of the clockwork, after attaching the tin strip. Attach the other end of the tin strip to the bow of the ship, wind your spring and you will find a nice movement and a good representation of a ship on the waves.

Figs. 2 and 3 show how when the shaft is fastened to the outside edge of the wheel of clockwork, that, as the wheel revolves, it must necessarily push the ship up and pull it down. The speed of the wheel can be easily regulated by any clock repairer or watchmaker, by the taking off or putting on of one of the wheels. I think this is easily understood. It is a very simple problem.

A good idea for water and waves is to tack a piece of green cambric, as nearly water color as possible, along the bottom side of ship and then daub on glue here and there and lay on a patch of white batting on the glue to represent the foam, a daub of light grey paint here and there will give it a better appearance.

This scene is heightened by placing a sky line at back of ship. This is easily done by painting a large square of cotton over with sky blue paint and then streaking it over here and there with white to imitate clouds. I would remind you to look up the back numbers of THE REVIEW. You will find a similar idea of mine in the October number (I think it is) of REVIEW, which may be of help to you in arranging such a display.

MATERIAL FOR FROSTING—"TRURO, N.S."—You desire to know what is used for frosting. I have used mica ground up in small particles, but the better frosting is a chemical made in the form of a powder and can be procured at any drug store for about 25c. an ounce.

You would also like to know what would make a nice trim for a window 9x13 and 3½ ft. deep. As I was not informed what class of goods you desire to trim with and not knowing what kind of goods you deal in I have to draw my own conclusion. I might infer that you desire to show Christmas novelties in dry goods. As your windows are only 3½ feet deep they are difficult to do much with in the way of mechanical trims, but I think if you made a pretty background, similar to the one in the accompanying furniture trim, and used as many electric lights on the arches as your resources will allow and fill in the bottom with bright goods, Christmas novelties, etc., I think it would make a pretty window.

The arches are made from cheap lumber and are covered over with puffing. The lattice work is made from white tape and does not cost much and is very effective. The scroll work is easily made, being only long tubes of white cheese cloth gathered together on stovepipe wire and twisted into the shape of a scroll design, being kept together by pins. If you can get a similar design set it out about one foot from your wall. Run a rod across the wall about six feet high and hang colored China silks all the way along it to the floor, taking care to have the colors blending. This will make a pretty, bright background for a Christmas trim and you can show almost any line of goods in this window. Use white cheesecloth shirred on the floor and put a border of pale blue cheesecloth or other material all around the edge. You could make up some nice designs in arches, circles, etc., and cover the whole thing over with white and then cover the whole design over with holly with the red berries—$5.00 worth would cover the whole window nicely. This makes a lovely background and will keep nice and green until New Years. Holly can be had from any seedsman in Toronto or elsewhere.

SUGGESTIONS FOR TRIMS.

HANDKERCHIEFS.—Here is a suggestion that will work out an effective display of handkerchiefs. First, take a half circle and fasten it to the top and in the centre of the background so that it bows straight out in the window. Cover the background with yellow lemon bunting, arranging a double pleat about every 15 inches. Next, get some $\frac{3}{4}$ -in. hemp rope, new and clean. Cut this in pieces to reach from the half circle to the base of the window. Measure a lady's fancy handkerchief across opposite corners, and arrange these pieces of rope around the half circle at intervals to equal the result. Select a number of nicely embroidered handkerchiefs and pin them to light yellow glazed paper, such as samples come pinned on, or cardboard. Then pin these, corner to corner, and arrange them between the ropes, pinning opposite corners to the ropes. Cover the background with fancy handkerchiefs, pinned flat between the double pleats. Arrange a border along the top of the background and cover the half circle with handkerchiefs by pinning in the centre. Puff the entire base of the window with yellow bunting and arrange handkerchiefs in boxes, loose and on display stands. Letter one large show card, reading "Advance show of holiday handkerchiefs," and place it in the centre of the window near the glass.

GLOVES AND UMBRELLAS.—Two lines that figure prominently as Christmas gifts are gloves and umbrellas. Many stocks are limited and do not give the trimmer much chance to construct a window of one line, especially gloves. A neat and striking display can be arranged by using both lines. Clear out a window and clean it. Then puff the entire background with orange yellow bunting, trimming the edges and top with a heavy roll. Down the centre of the background, and about two feet either side, run wide ribbon, fastening it in loops about every nine inches. In these arrange umbrellas, handles out and tips crossed in the centre loops. Arrange two arches in the centre of the window. The front and larger one about a foot or 18 inches from the glass, as the depth of the window suggests. The other arch should be proportionately smaller and arranged about two feet back of the larger arch. Puff these arches with yellow bunting and arrange ribbon on the inner edge, fasten it every six inches. In these loops arrange umbrellas, handles toward the glass. On every other handle arrange a pair of gloves.

Then puff the entire base with yellow bunting. Arrange about the base umbrellas and kid gloves. The umbrellas can be nicely displayed with umbrella rings, holding three umbrellas, or tying them with a bow of yellow ribbon.

In the centre of the arches place an upright display stand, on which arrange gloves. Letter a large show card, reading "Christmas suggestions," and place it in the centre of the window near the glass.

YARNS.—A very pretty and attractive window can be arranged with yarn. Some stores cannot spare yarn enough from stock to put in a very large display. But all have material enough to put in a good window by taking yarns and what is made of yarns. With your window cleared, start by covering the entire background with yellow, putting it on plain and double. Then puff a narrow border along the top with blue, green or purple bunting, or, if you desire a strong contrast, use black. Then, with black yarns arrange a draped border along the top. With black yarn work out the words, "best yarns." Now, with flat boxes, build a base in the centre of the window. Now, cut out of a piece of pasteboard a lyre harp. To get this true, take a piece of paper, fold it once, then cut out a half shape of the harp; lay this on the pasteboard and mark it out, then cut it out with a sharp knife. Wind the harp with green clouded or yellow yarn; finish the upper ends and the base, which cannot be wound very handy, by puffing a bit of yellow silk or bunting. If you prefer, puff the whole harp with yellow bunting. Make strings of yarn. Fasten the base to the edge of a piece of board so that it will stand up straight. Then set it on top of prepared base. The balance of the window can be arranged with nickel display stands, on which you can arrange knit goods. Fill in the base with yarns. Price and appropriate show cards will help the display in its mission of selling. One large show card, reading "We Harp on ——— Yarns, Because They're Best," would fit the idea well.

After you are through with the harp in the window, it will help to make things pleasant about the store if arranged in a neat display on top of the centre shelf, or spool case, or ribbon case.

BLANKETS AND QUILTS.—With your window cleared and cleaned, start by covering the background with fancy blankets. Then arrange at intervals of, say, a foot apart, across the top of the background, brackets with a round shelf about the size of a candy pail cover. On these arrange comfortables and blankets. Select some pretty patterns in the better grades, double one corner and hang the comfortable on the bracket shelf so that both sides show, and place a pair of nice blankets rolled and tied with two bands of ribbon on the shelf. A description or price card on each comfortable and pair of blankets shown completes your background.

On swinging arm brackets, at the sides of your window, arrange blankets, rolling each pair and tying them with two bands of ribbon.

Cover the base of the window with dark colored blankets; grey and black plaids would do best. For a centrepiece, take an ordinary shoe box about three feet high and fasten five strips three feet long to the top of the box, arranging them fan shape.

Drape a pair of blankets around the box to cover it. Then roll five pairs of fancy-bordered blankets lengthwise with the stripes as they come folded, and tie them with ribbons. Arrange these on the five strips. Around this centrepiece about the base arrange five comfortables and blankets. Each comfortable and pair of blankets should have a descriptive or price card.

BLACK DRESS GOODS.—There is never a time when black dress goods are not in line. Their rich and elegant appearance make them particularly strong for window displays. The hardest feature about a black goods trim is the background. To get the color combination and arrangement to produce a good effect and bring the goods within easy seeing is not easy. With most black goods windows it is necessary to get close to the window and shade the eyes to get a good idea of the goods.

Try this arrangement and we think you will feel pleased with your effort. With your window cleared and cleaned, start and puff the entire background and sides of the window with red bunting. This red must not be a bit dull. A cerise red would be best. At the top of the background fasten short sticks, so they stick straight out in the window, and arrange them about two feet apart, all around the back and sides of the window. Next take ivory white cloth, something with a nice finish like sateen or nicely-finished henrietta, and drape it from stick to stick, by gathering a puff at each stick so as to stretch the cloth straight at the top, leaving it drop in graceful folds. This should be done on sticks as described, so that the drape will hang out from the background. Don't drape flat against the background. The effect is quite different in bringing out your black goods. With this done, the arrangement of the goods had best be done in the most simple manner. Arrange your drape stands in about three rows, each row a bit higher than the one in front of it, and each stand to show between the two in front of it. Drape your black novelties on these stands in the simplest manner. On each piece have a neat style card such as "Latest," "Imported," "Very Stylish," and so on. A neatly-lettered show card with simply the words "Black Beauties" and a wide red border around the edge of the card will be sufficient to arrest attention and start the reader's mind on an investigation tour. With your window completed you will find that you have a rich and decided color combination.

MILLINERY.—A window in rich, soft red makes one of the handsomest and most attractive settings for nicely-trimmed hats. If hats and trimmings run to red and black, all the better. With your window cleared and cleaned, start by covering the entire background with red material, preferably silk-finished henrietta. Allow it to hang straight in heavy folds. Next take one large and two smaller half circles and puff them with red material. Fasten the large one to the top and in the centre of the background so that it stands out a bit. The two smaller ones fasten across the two corners. Next arrange a drape of sheer red material, beginning at the outer end of one corner arch, to the centre of that arch, and then to the opposite end and then to the centre arch, repeating the arrangement, finishing with the other corner arch. Arrange feathers and trimming ornaments about the background. With your background arranged, puff the entire base with red material and arrange your hat stands, displaying nicely-trimmed hats.—St. Louis Drygoodsman.

POINTS OF PHOTOGRAPHING.

The following points are well to remember if you wish to obtain good photographs: If there is a broad street before your window or an open space, it will be almost impossible to make a picture by day, for, plant your camera where you will, it is always darker in your window than it is outside, and the opposite conditions should prevail. But you can get at it at night. See that your electric lights, while flooding the window, are themselves hidden from the street. If you have a good lens, from 20 to 30 seconds' exposure will be enough; a lens not specially rapid will require more time. The size of the diaphragm also counts. The smaller the diaphragm the more time is required; but the smaller diaphragm also gives more sharpness to the picture. The time required is also influenced by the rapidity and make of the plate. Therefore, you have three things to consider in timing your picture—lens, plate and diaphragm. A good time to photograph a window by daylight is early morning on a clear day, just before sunrise. The light is clear and penetrating and a good picture usually results. Remember, the interior of your window must be light. If the window is darker than the street the glass acts as a mirror, reflecting everything on the opposite side of the street.

By keeping these points in mind, any photographer can get a good picture of a show window. If the photographer doesn't know them, it should be well to call his attention to these facts.—Chicago Dry Goods Reporter.

THE PROFESSIONAL WINDOW TRIMMER.

Who is he? And did he become a professional, asks F. C. Mitchell in The Show Window? First, he is the gentleman having charge of all the decorations in the store. How did he become an expert? By hard work, great patience, many experiments, and some failures. He is ambitious to succeed, with a proper and just pride in his work; a man of quick perceptions, good judgment, an accurate colorist and an excellent judge of effects. That is why he is a professional. He is a man who draws his designs either in his mind, or with pencil, before he begins his work. He knows, for he has learned by experience, how to build the framework. He knows how to cover it and what to cover it with. He is ever aggressive and often original, because he gets away from that which is common and ordinary. He is always learning, he never "knows it all," or does it all. Coming into contact with other minds and seeing other men's work, he absorbs the practical and good. He keeps out of a rut. He reads all he can of things in his line and is up to-date. It's the fellow who never reads, never sees another man's work intelligently, never comes in contact with his fellow workman who is not an expert. Nor even a good trimmer. I often meet trimmers who tell me, "I never pay any attention to any other trimmers' work or methods. All I do is original." I walked half a mile the other day to see one of these brand new original trims and I saw it; I believe there are to-day 2,000 duplicates of it, and it was a trim hoary with age 10 years ago. The firm who pay money for that kind of work have "money to burn," or are imposed upon by the "artist." He is a long way from being an artist who will not avail himself of every opportunity to study and improve his work.

DISPLAY OF CHILDREN'S MILLINERY.

A pretty novelty in window dressing, and one which greatly interested ladies and children, was exhibited in Frederick Couse's window on Main street, Winnipeg. A large handsome doll was tastefully dressed in a red box coat, with a kilted skirt of the same color and material and a pretty red hat. The doll itself was very pretty and had long, golden curls of real hair. Another smaller doll dressed in white reposed in a baby carriage. The window also contained some beautiful examples of children's millinery, one of which was a white Napoleon hat. The drapings and blendings of color were artistic, and enhanced the general appearance of the window.

The creditors of Frank Dowler, department store, Guelph, decided to sell the assets to Mrs. Dowler at sufficient to pay the creditors 50c. on the dollar, at three, six, and nine months, secured. The assets are placed at $62,203.37, with liabilities of $45,018, leaving a surplus of $17,185.37. There are about 90 creditors.

CARPETS, CURTAINS AND WALL PAPERS.

UNITED STATES OILCLOTHS ADVANCED.

At a meeting of manufacturers of floor oilcloth and linoleum, held at Philadelphia, November 8, it was decided to advance the price of linoleum $2\frac{1}{2}$ c. a yard and to put into effect the price list on floor oilcloth which was agreed to June 15 last, but was not generally adopted. This means an advance of 1c. a yard. These changes take effect December 1 next.

The advance is no surprise to the trade, for all who are familiar with the goods know what great quantities of linseed oil are used in making them and that the price of this oil has risen over 100 per cent. Last year it could be bought for 30c. a gallon. Two weeks ago it cost 70c. and the price quoted now is 75c. a gallon. This advance has added so very greatly to the cost of producing linoleum that the advance of $2\frac{1}{2}$ c. a yard is really inadequate to meet the situation. Compared with last year, the prices have advanced from $2\frac{1}{2}$ to 5c. per yard.—New York Carpet Trade Review.

THE ENGLISH CARPET TRADE.

Carpet manufacturers, say Kidderminster advices to The Textile Mercury up to November 15, are fairly busy on the orders they are now receiving, but the encouraging point in the trade is the continued demand for deliveries. Much of this is for special carpets, and for odds and ends of various sorts, but there is no doubt that it all points to low stocks, and a healthy demand. The yarn trade is disappointing, for buyer and seller are far apart in the matter of price. Spinners will not saddle themselves with contracts at the prices offered, and, on the other hand, buyers can generally wait. Here and there prices are irregular, but those of the standard carpet yarns have been well tested, with the result that there is less inclination to press for business at present prices than there was a fortnight ago.

PROFITABLE GOODS TO HANDLE.

Tapestry and chenille curtains, portieres and table covers. They make a handsome display, are always popular and always salable. Geo. H. Hees, Son & Co. have just placed on the market some new and very handsome patterns in these popular goods, and are selling them at a price that affords the retailer large profits. Hees, Son & Co. are also manufacturers of window shades, curtain poles and fixtures, stair plates, drapery pins, and many other goods that meet with a ready and popular demand.

THE PREVALENCE OF GREEN.

In no recent season has green been more dominant in upholstery and carpets than in the present one. Of course, some critics will say that red is the leading color, but when one comes to study the work of the best decorators in the large cities, it is found that green is the color de resistance.

In portieres and curtains, green velvets and green moreens are obtruded before the shopper in nearly all the finer stores.

Burlap continues very popular as a wall covering for certain dining-rooms and libraries. Green applies well to burlap, as it does to other fabrics.

A year or so ago it might have been Pompeian red, but now it is a carl sage green. A good effect is produced by covering the walls with burlap and then making a pattern by stencilling a fleur-de-lis or some such conventionalized design in gilt at intervals upon the surface.—Carpet and Upholstery Journl.

WHAT MATTRESSES ARE MADE OF.

The day of the corn-husk filled mattress with its top layer of cotton has passed. Hair mattresses are, of course, the best, but they are too expensive. Cotton mattresses topped with hair are not satisfactory, as the cotton filling soon packs tight and is only a shade better than a board for sleeping on. Next to cotton, excelsior is most largely used. Fine excelsior topped with a thin layer of hair or wool is cheaper than cotton, though heavier and not quite as yielding.

Shoddy and waste wool clippings and similar products of the sheep's back are utilized in various ways by mattress makers. There are also some pure wool mattresses made, but they are hardly cheap enough to be popular.

Many experiments with the fibres of certain plants have been made of late years with a view of using them for mattresses and pillows. Florida moss is used considerably as a bedding material, and it is said there are some 50 or 60 buildings in Florida where moss is fermented and ginned for use.

The latest innovation in bedding is, of course, the pneumatic mattress and pillows. They have never become very popular, however, as they are not altogether the most agreeable things to sleep on.—Exchange.

LACE CURTAINS.

It is a great convenience to the trade to have right here in Canada over 100,000 pairs of lace curtains to select from, and then obtain immediate deliveries of the goods. Such is the stock of Geo. H. Hees, Son & Co., and they are reaping their just reward for affording such opportunities to the trade. Before Hees, Son & Co. began carrying these goods in stock, the trade had to place import orders and then wait a long time for deliveries, but now, by buying of this firm, they can find which patterns sell the best, and then duplicate right here at home and get quick deliveries. In many ways it will pay the trade to deal with Hees, Son & Co.

U. S. INGRAINS ADVANCED.

It was announced at the opening of the carpet season, November 15, that makers of ingrain, while not advancing open prices, were selling at a reduction of $2\frac{1}{2}$ c. from the opening price of last season. The New York Journal of Commerce learns that later on it was decided by the Lowell and Hartford companies to put back the prices on a level with those of last season. In other words, the 50c. price was changed to $52\frac{1}{2}$ c. This change, however, is somewhat vitiated by the fact that the majority of the large jobbers of the country are so well supplied that they can be jobbed at 50c., so that future demand on these grades can be satisfied by jobbers at lower prices than those established by the manufacturers themselves.

It is a matter of interest to the trade what is to be done by the Philadelphian manufacturers of ingrain who have not as yet made their next season's announcements. A prominent distributor, speaking of the situation, said: "Last season, when the New England manufacturers were selling at 52½c., the Philadelphian makers made a 50 cent price, and, although nothing has been done as yet, it is very probable that, with jobbers quoting 50c., the Philadelphian mills will ask from 45 to 47½c. for extra supers.

The Philadelphian mills making ingrain have been idle for some time, the demand not having been sufficient to keep the looms in operation steadily.

GOODS THAT HAVE BECOME STANDARD

It would be difficult to find an enterprising dry goods and furnishing establishment that does not carry more or less stock of upholstery goods, such as curtains, portieres, furniture coverings, draperies, table spreads, lace curtains, etc. These goods are made of materials all the way from silk to chenille, and are a class of goods that affords the retailer large profits. There have been many wholesalers of these goods in Canada, but always of a limited extent until Geo. H. Hees, Son & Co. established a plant at Valleyfield and began their manufacture. They are not only extensive manufacturers of these goods, but also large importers of such lines as would not pay to manufacture for so limited a country as ours. Hees, Son & Co. have 12 travelers on the road, who cover all points of Canada, and we are doing the trade a favor by recommending this firm for their patronage.

The Kidderminster Shuttle says that in axminsters drawing-room patterns in light grounds are the favorites, although there is demand for both smaller set patterns and large scroll patterns for dining-rooms.

Brophy, Cains & Co. have just opened up a new range of Swiss embroidered goods, including mats, 12 to 24 inch, put up singly and in sets, to retail at from 5 to 75c; table covers, to sell at from 50c. to $2.; shams, bureau and washstand covers, singly and in sets, at all prices. All suitable for Christmas trade. These goods have not been shown by the travelers, except in one or two instances, as no samples were obtainable, but are all exclusive designs and the best value yet shown. Montreal Wholesale Trade.

THE advent of the cold weather has done much to brighten trade during the latter half of the month. Pressed by actual need of goods, dealers throughout the country have not been able to defer all purchases until the first few weeks in December, when Spring dating can be secured, but have been compelled to come upon the market to make many good-sized sorting orders. A good trade in Christmas goods is anticipated for the first few days in December, and then comes stock-taking. Travelers have been busy during the last month taking orders for Spring, and they report the tone of the trade to be healthy and the outlook bright. No one is now looking for a decline in prices in any line. Cottons and linens are more likely to advance.

THE GAULT BROTHERS CO., LIMITED.

The print department of The Gault Brothers Co., Limited, is as usual to the front. Their stock comprises one of the choicest selections of the latest novelties in English, Scotch and American manufacture, with a full line of Canadian goods. Harvest and foulard blues are two of the leading shades and are already largely in demand. Some particularly good lines in printed spots and figured muslins are also shown. For immediate delivery this firm have some special numbers in art muslins and cretonnes. A few drives are being made at the moment.

In dress goods they have some particularly attractive lines in "Tiger Brand" black goods. The Ziska cloth is a big seller for the skirt trade. Some extra values are being given in wool Henley serges, 45 and 48 in. wide, from 30c. up. There is a great run on embroidered flannels for blouses. For the best dress trade chevots are among the most fashionable. Plain estamene cloths are also in demand. Colored and black cashmere are also shown in special lines.

In the silk department the popular taste is being met with ranges of black satins, taffetas and black peau de soie. One special line of black broches at 85c., is a "clipper." New shades in colored taffetas and tamalines make up a lovely assortment. Added to these are some specially attractive lines in fancy evening silks.

The linen department is replete with extra values in napkins, bleached and loom tablings, towels and towelings. A job line of Turkey red tablings is now offering. A nice assortment of fancy Austrian linens, suitable for the Christmas trade, is being shown.

The woollen department of this firm cabled a large repeat low twill coating order the other day and the reply was: "Advance 1½c. per yard." Consequently, they warn the trade to buy while they can at present prices, as the market is stiffening again. They are receiving enormous orders for their black and blue 56-inch serge, selling in full pieces at 55c., a point worthy of note. The travelers are showing a book of beautiful samples of black costume broadcloth of the right finish.

Considering the late deliveries of carpets Spring 1900, it is worth mentioning that the Gault Brothers Co., Limited, have already received their new stock of Brussels, velvet, tapestry and hemp carpets, no pattern being shown by the travelers that is not now in stock. They are giving their friends the benefit of close buying. The travelers have some samples of a late delivery of linoleums bought at old prices; they are going fast.

W. R. BROCK CO., LIMITED.

In silks, the W. R. Brock Co., Limited, are showing a very special line of Japanese goods, 18 and 27 inches wide, in a variety of colors. Black and colored silk velvets and satins and glaze are also in stock.

White swansdown are finding a ready sale in the trimming department. Jet gimps, pearl, steel, black and colored braids are shown in a variety of patterns. This firm have just received a full range of Ax velveteens, as well as blacks, to sell at good prices.

In cloaks, nigger-heads, beavers and Irish friezes are selling well.

The handkerchief department is now replete with Christmas novelties. These include Japanese silk-embroidered handkerchiefs, at all prices from 50c. a dozen upward. Ladies' and gentlemen's neckwear, perfumed handkerchief satchets, lace collars, embroidered handkerchiefs, gentlemen's cozy mufflers, umbrellas, antimacassars and many other holiday goods are on sale in special lines. Pillow shams, bureau and washstand covers, doilies and table covers, etc., are to be had in all the newest makes. An immense shipment of these goods has come to hand for the Christmas trade. Swiss embroidered curtain nets have just been imported from the manufacturers. The knitted woollen department has a large assortment of Winter goods.

The smallwares department is showing a nice line of purses suitable for the holiday trade. A line of perfume is also good value. Pompadour combs have been good sellers, but are yet to be had in a very large range. They are making a specialty of hose supporters and garters, while new lines of belt clasps, in steel enameled and jets, are in stock.

Underwear is a feature with the Brock Company just now. Particular attention might be directed to the wonderful values shown in women's and children's wool hosiery; all sizes and qualities are kept up throughout the season.

M. MARKUS.

M. Markus, Montreal, is showing a full range of the novelties that fashion is demanding. His lines of embroideries, laces, lace collars and lace collarettes are exquisite, and ought to be great sellers for next season's trade.

A fine range of buttons in all the fashionable styles is being shown by M. Markus, Montreal; they display up to date taste. Gilt buttons are, of course, the leaders; the demand for these is so great that only orders for future delivery can be accepted. An extensive range of the season's novelties is shown in conjunction with the staple samples.

M. Markus has received a new range of dress goods of Franz Schmieder's manufacture, and he is now showing fine samples of mohair and wool plaid effects in all the latest colors. Astrachans in curls and cap novelties for the fur and cap manufacturers are also in stock. He has a good line of gold braid for the coming season.

S. GREENSHIELDS, SON & CO.

S. Greenshields, Son & Co. are making a specialty of handkerchiefs for this month; mention of a special offer will be found on another page. This will likely create quite a stir among the retail trade. In ribbons a larger demand than ever is reported for velvets which go well with clunys and plain laces. Plain black and white taffetas, in narrow and medium widths, are kept in stock in anticipation of a good demand. Embroideries are shown in a full assortment, particularly galloon insertions in black and white and fine muslin.

The smallwares department is replete with up to-date goods. Patent leather belts with two or three rows of white or gold stitching are being carried. What bids fair to make a very fashionable appearance is a new grooved belt to be worn with the new corset. Honiton and Bittenburg braids are made up into trimming and are to be had at $5 to $12 per dozen. Ribbon ends are now in stock. Stray lock ornaments that are coming in extensively are shown in different shaped buckles from 1½ to 3 inches long. The craze for crocheting silk bags combined with cut jet beads and cut steel beads is being well met by the house. It is also carrying the frames for these bags in oxidized and French silver.

A complete assortment of holiday goods is shown in their men's furnishings department. The manager of this department has given Christmas trade special attention, and customers will find everything in the line of goods for men's wear complete here.

S. Greenshields, Son & Co. will be pleased to answer any inquiries received by mail from their many friends as to what goods they have in stock, and will send an assortment if desired.

We announce with regret the death of Mr. Geo. E. Fraser, of G. E. Fraser & Son, Picton, Ont. Deceased had for many years carried on a general dry goods and boot and shoe business and was one of Picton's most prominent business men.

TRAVELERS WITH SPRING SAMPLES.

McIntyre, Son & Co. are showing through their travelers on the road new dress goods for the Spring trade, and an immense range of fancy and printed muslins, organdies and cotton goods of every description—novelties in design and exclusive styles.

CANADIAN BLANKETS.

Canadian blankets are considered by many merchants to be better than any imported goods, and the "Saxony" brand is among the foremost in the trade. They are perfect in manufacture and handsomely finished with new border effects. Nisbet & Auld are showing a stock in all weights from 5 to 10 pounds in fine and superfine. Their superior quality places them in the rank of novelties and has led to many orders for the Christmas trade.

KNITTING MILL TO RESUME OPERATIONS.

The machinery, plant and stock of the Wentworth Knitting Company, Hamilton, have been purchased by Mr. G. B. Perry, who has been well and favorably known in business circles for a number of years. He will at once proceed to put in new machinery with a view to increasing the capacity of the mill, and has engaged an experienced man from the knitting mill centre of the United States to look after the practical end of the business. Mr. Perry has abundant capital, and his honorable and successful business reputation bespeak for him a success in this new venture, which he certainly deserves. The mill has been closed for a year, but will resume operations at once.

Giving Value to Your Stocks.

It may count as an item on paper, but that's about all the worth there is in stock that is faded, off color, or out of fashion. It means no money to you.

But it is our place to transform such goods into good salable stock.

We come to the rescue of the merchant who is burdened with unsalable dress goods, tweeds, braids, hosiery, ribbons, silks, etc. Let him send these goods here and we will dye them some fashionable or staple color—sending them back to him with all the appearance of new goods and just as salable.

We are saving thousands of dollars for the dry goods men of Canada.

Men's Furnishings.

THE trade during the month of November has been fairly brisk, not only on the regular lines, but on many Christmas goods. The heaviest garments are now showing and some of the goods, which, until the very cold weather arrived, were experiencing a good sale, have dropped off greatly.

Some of the largest men's furnishers are looking forward to the Christmas trade as one of the largest for years, and are making preparations accordingly.

THE TIES showing now are, with few exceptions, red and green, in plain or stripes. The batwing, which has enjoyed such popularity, has now disappeared, and the four-in-hands and flowing ends are likely to be the principal sellers for the Christmas trade. The stripes generally run diagonally. The green backgrounds with red or white stripes or figures are very popular.

Another seller is the bright red tie. It cannot be too bright or flashy. A number of light plaids are shown, which will probably go well for the holiday trade.

COLORED SHIRTS are still being bought more than white. All kinds of stripes are shown, including a new thin stripe, in black or dark blue, which promises to be a leading article for the Spring. Open-front white shirts are worn a good deal more than those opening at the back. There has been a large run on dress shirts during November. These are shown to good advantage in many windows in combination with black satin shirt-front shields.

Although the HIGH TURN-DOWN COLLAR is still in the lead, there has been a noticeable increase in the sale of the ordinary stand-up collar, which is a thoroughly up-to-date article, and preferred by many good dressers to the other. One of its advantages is that any kind of tie may be worn with it, and, with the disappearance of the batwing, the wearing of the high turn-down collar has been somewhat diminished. There is very little sale, however, in the cities at least, for the stand-up collar with turn-down points.

IN UNDERWEAR, owing to the sudden change in the weather, there has been an exceedingly large trade done. The natural colors sell the best, in fleece-lined and all-wool garments. Fancy colored goods are not going as well as last month, and some dealers say that indications are that for the Winter trade they will not be much in demand.

The trade in UNLINED GLOVES during the Fall has not been a very heavy one. The change from warm to very cold weather came so quickly that the first gloves bought were for Winter wear. Lined gloves of all kinds are going well. The reindeer variety with squirrel fur lining is looked upon with favor for the Christmas trade.

MUFFLERS are showing and selling in all colors and patterns. Dark colors, of course, prevail, and of these the polka dot patterns are selling best.

A good deal of COLORED HOSIERY is being shown in city windows, but reports say that the only color that is selling at all well, in comparison with black, is heather. Woollen and heavy cashmere make up the bulk of the sales. All ribbed goods sell well.

Among the articles that will take well for the Christmas trade are FANCY BRACES. These are all in light-colored patterns, with a silk thread finish, and strongly made.

Umbrellas, according to prominent men's furnishers, are also a valuable line for this season. They are often given as Christmas presents, and, when an attractive line is selected, no difficulty is experienced in getting rid of them.

Another is fancy vests in cloth, with a silk mixture. These are now worn a good deal more than the corduroy vests, and the patterns are very pretty. Woollen dressing gowns, and smoking jackets, in brocade, wool, and velvet, all colors, are thought well of for the Christmas trade. White silk handkerchiefs are also in demand.

IN LEATHER GOODS, purses are by far the best sellers. There is a good sale for manicure sets. A number of fancy articles in leather are also being bought well.

Collar Styles and Tie Trade.

American dealers are suggesting that the manufacturers of neckwear should have a friendly meeting with the collar manufacturers in order to induce them to introduce styles of collars that will allow larger scarves to be worn. At present there is no sale for anything but ties, as these go with the high turn-down collar, which is being so much worn, better than the large carves, on which, however, there is more profit for the retailers. It is to be hoped this spreads to Canada, where the sale of high turn-down collars has prevented dealers from getting rid of their stock of other shapes, as well as making the sale of large scarf ties much smaller.

A New Muffler.

A novelty in mufflers is being placed on the market this Winter under the name, "Way's Muffler." It is a complete break away from other styles. Most mufflers are put on over the head and open at the front; this one is open at the back so that it is put on from the front and fastens at the back with clasps. When on it gives the appearance of a sweater. It is simply a 3 in. collar band with chest protector attached. It is all knitted wool. It comes in two prices, $4.50 and $6. The cheaper grade is to be had in two colors, navy and maroon; and the higher, in green, black and navy. The W. R. Brock Company, Limited, are handling them.

Buying an Attractive Stock.

The men's furnisher who wishes to catch the trade of the natty young men about town must stock lines that are exclusive to a degree, to the class of goods that are to be found in the men's furnishing department of the average dry goods store. The window display forms no small part of the success of this particular business and care should be taken to secure a few striking and up-to-date lines in nobby neckwear, fancy striped or silk embroidered half-hose, fancy underwear, etc., to be displayed on the window fixtures. Tooke Bros., Limited, are one of the few wholesale dealers that make a specialty of men's furnishings. The range of samples their travelers are now out with for Spring comprises many novelties in striped, mercerized, and silk underwear, fancy striped and embroidered Lisle thread and cashmere half-hose, leather belts, golf hose, etc. Tooke Bros., Limited, control many of the lines for Canada that they offer to the trade. Tooke Bros., Limited, send their buyers to the markets in Europe and the United States twice yearly, and have the advantage of being right on the spot to pick up novelties which they submit to the trade very often months before their competitors.

A Mere Living.

Quite a number of theories have been, and are often advanced as to the number of times a retailer should turn over his stock during the year to make satisfactory results. One theory much in favor is that stocks should be turned over five times in a year; but this is a dream that is only realized by a very few English furnishers at the present time, if, indeed, by any. Here, for instance, are the figures given by a retailer doing quite an average trade. His stock is worth £700. Takings, £30 weekly. This means that the stock is only turned over a little more than twice. This same retailer stated that he found it impossible to make more than about 20 per cent. gross profit on his turnover. This sort of thing does not represent the retail furnishing business as the very profitable investment many imagine it to be. It worked out like this: The rent of the shop was £40; add to this assistants' wages, £75; rates and taxes, £13; shop expenses—lighting, paper, depreciation, and other incidentals—estimated at £75; and there is only £109 left for the retailer to pay himself. Just a mere living, and no more than he would get to act as manager for anyone else.—English Paper.

The Outlook In Shirts.

The outlook for colored shirts for the coming season of 1901 promises to be larger and more successful than any in the history of shirt manufacturing in this country. Already some of the factories are being pushed to their utmost to keep pace with the orders which are being sent in by travelers who have been submitting samples for the past few weeks. Tooke Brothers, Limited, report a most successful season to date and they are preparing to meet the usual heavy demand for goods for immediate delivery which always springs up after January 1. Patterns are running on somewhat similar lines to those of last season, combinations of blues being in most demand.

The experience of the trade generally in the past has been that patterns not too extreme and not too light in colorings are the best sellers, and, consequently, are the most satisfactory to carry in stock. The high colored and extreme patterns, which have been shown by American manufacturers for the past two seasons, are not desirable for this market, and should be handled with extreme care. Ox-bloods are coming in for their share of comment, and a window dressed with shirts of this shade would always be a trade-maker, provided there is a enough outlet for a novelty of this kind to enable a merchant to purchase enough to make a display of this kind. Pinks are in very little demand and helio and green are being taken up after the needs of blues and ox-bloods are supplied.

Short bosom colored shirts have taken a strong hold on the trade, and have almost completely shut out the large bosom, which, a short time ago, was looked upon as being right. Tooke Brothers, Limited, introduced the short bosom, open back and front shirt to the trade last season, and it at once became a success, and since that time the demand has increased until to-day it is the popular everyday business shirt. It is a commonsense bosom, and once worn the large bosom becomes a thing of the past.

Cuff-attached shirts are having a larger demand than in former seasons. They set more naturally on the wrist than separate cuffs, and have other advantages which are appreciated by men who wear them.

The soft front negligee shirt will, no doubt, be the most suitable for Summer wear during the coming season, as it has been in the past. The cloths which give the best satisfaction and are most serviceable are, no doubt, the Scotch madras and the new "Vigoral" Oxfords. The latter material is a new fabric which is being manufactured specially for Tooke Brothers, Limited, and has proved the most valuable addition to their range of materials that they have ever had. For values, designs and sightliness it is certainly the best that has been placed on this market, and is sure to prove a valuable addition to the leading shirt stocks.

Buying white shirts ahead has, to a certain extent, become a thing of the past and stocks are now usually sorted from week to week. But, for the coming season, all merchants who are looking to their own welfare, and who desire to give their customers as good value next season as they are giving at the present time, would do well to place their orders in advance, as it is almost certain that either prices will have to be advanced or values reduced before the season is over. Manufacturers are filling orders from cottons that were purchased when prices were lower than they are to-day, and some of the manufacturers at least are getting to the end of their purchases, and, as cottons will no doubt remain as high, and may possibly go higher within the next few weeks, it is certain that the above changes will be necessary. The merchant who places his orders for white shirts now has all the advantage over the manufacturer, as he will be able to give his customers this season's values, whereas his neighbor who will buy only when he must will be paying considerably more for the same goods.

A New York furnisher's paper says: "Two features that were for a long period confined to the white shirt—short-length bosom and coat-model cut—are now successful forms of construction in the fancies."

We are informed by Tooke Brothers, Limited, that their stock of white shirts in all prices is now complete, in all sizes, in cuffs or bands, and they are prepared to fill orders on their receipt.

Answer Inquiries Promptly.

In the window of one of the prominent stores of a Canadian city were recently displayed some shoes. There was a sign in the window saying that the shoes were comfortable and not high-priced. A gentleman walked into the store and a youth near the door referred him to the shoe department about half a block back. As the inquirer simply desired to know the price, he walked out of the store. It would have been best to have given the price on the ticket or else to have instructed the clerks about the prices.

The Canadian manufacturers of men's furnishings are phenomenally busy just now. A representative of THE DRY GOODS REVIEW called upon the head of Gault Brothers' factory, Montreal, and was asked "not to say anything about our goods, for we are sold months ahead."

A Chat on Neckwear.

The neckwear business in Canada has been brisk this Autumn and retail dealers are looking forward to a large holiday trade.

One very noticeable feature is the decreasing demand for 25c. ties and the large proportion of 50 and 75c. ties which are being handed over the counter. The manufacturers are busy and are now showing what are strictly their Christmas silks.

Chatting with a well-informed man on this subject THE REVIEW learned that striped silks are shown largely and are easily the favorites, but buyers are ordering freely from "all-over" and "set" figures. Some of the most effective and taking styles are the following:

Neat grey grounds, with stripes of bright colors, raised up with black and white and spaced from three to six inches apart.

Surah and barathea grounds with large stripes well spaced.

Surah grounds, in black, navy, royal, garnet and hunter green—with "set" figures in another tone of the same color.

This effect also, with a large check over it, of white, sky, scarlet or green.

Oriental effects, in large stripes; in "set" figures, well spaced on self grounds; and also in "all-over" figures.

Black and white checked grounds, of a loose matte weave, with figures spaced at about two inches, in white, yale, cardinal, purple and light green.

Shapes.

The flowing-end shape is selling most freely over the counter to-day, and there is no indication of it becoming any less popular.

The narrow derby also has had a good run, but, along with the batwing strings, has now fallen off largely, while graduates, a little narrower than those shown this time last year, are selling steadily.

Puffs have been edging into prominence for the last three months, and, while the demand for them has not been great, they are asked for more each day and will undoubtedly be large sellers during the Christmas and Winter seasons. The style, which has been most favorably handled this Autumn, has a liberal apron, with wide shoulders, but tapering off to a narrower head, suitable to be worn with the high turndown collar.

Bows are selling well, exact imitations of the batwing string being the most popular.

Faced mufflers are as much in demand as ever, but the orders placed with the manufacturers are confined largely to the bias shapes, which are very effective in the large striped silks which predominate this Autumn.

Knots have not had as large a sale as was expected, but there has been a moderate sale for "smart" shapes. These, however, on account of the large striped silks, are wanted on the bias. One of the most effective shapes shown this season is on the bias, with diagonal pointed aprons and an exact imitation of a neatly tied graduate. Flowing-end knots have also sold well.

As to Men's Collars.

There is nothing new to mention just now, says The Clothier and Furnisher, as to collars, but they do say that a radical departure from current styles is in preparation, something that is being concealed from the brethren of the craft lest they yield unto temptation and snatch a surreptitious bite from the apple before its owner shall have partaken of its ripened sweetness.

So we must wait. Meanwhile, the new cut deepbander with straight points is pushing along most prosperously. The boys have taken to it kindly, though few of them reflect that a straight-pointer and a round corner—of the turndown persuasion—present similar appearances to the eye of the beholder when worn in association with a bat-wing tie. Bent points and pokes are all right in the stander division; and, of course, straightstanders and overlappers are in demand for dress wear—and for day wear if a man so elects.

What of Men's Shirt Waists?

Even in New York there is doubt whether men's shirts waists can develop into a trade. The Haberdasher says: "That a garment can be made in the nature of a shirt, which will have less the appearance of one by finishing the back, for instance, with two or four plaits, running from the shoulder down, and which can be worn in places and surroundings where at present a gentleman would not appear in shirt sleeves, is likely, but it is doubtful that they can ever become as popular with men as they are with women for many reasons."

The

On Pleasing The Customer.

The keynote in the Northway Garment success is that it pleases the retailer's customer—brings her back—brings in her friends—makes the retailer's sales bigger each season.

The more Northway Garments the retailer stocks, the better his future sale outlook. Every Northway Garment makes a strong foundation stone for future business, because it holds its good looks when the customer is wearing it.

The garment that will look shabby the moment it is off the hands of the retailer is a dangerous element in that retailer's business. We avoid that class of goods—the result shows in the return of the customer next season.

Northway shape-keeping lies entirely in the making. Every garment is "well made, well-stayed." There is an honest putting-together, and a careful inspection. These three things interest you vitally. Your profits and your success hinge on them.

Our travellers are on the road now with Spring Garments. You may be shown other lines before ours. Better order Northway lines and take no chances with future profits.

Travellers do not reach you, write. We can do business nearly as well. We send samples on request. All that will be necessary is to write, and indicate the needs of your business. We will meet them with garments that "please the customer."

Clothier and Furnisher, also dealing with this question, says: "The man's shirt waist. Samples of this new particular in man's Summer dress are in the hands of nearly every shirt salesman on the road. Orders are coming along in a limited sort of way, and chiefly for the reason that furnishing-goods buyers are puzzled over the many different styles of model, each newly-arrived traveler having something tantalizing to show as 'the approved style in New York.' The man's waist will have to break way for itself, and next Summer will determine its success or failure. While waiting for the returns, it will be safe to claim that the popular negligee shirt will quite fill the measure of hot-weather abandon, as it shall be manifested in public by the average coatless man in the year 1901."

Notes of Men's Trade. High banders in collars still hold their prominence, the demand latterly being for the close fitting top. Tooke Brothers, Limited, are pushing this style in both square and round corners in their "Anchor" and "Iron Frame" brands.

Straight, high-band standing collars are now in strong demand for Fall and Winter wear. The slight poke with square corners is again coming into prominence, it dividing the honors with the round corner shapes which have been so popular during the past few months.

One of the most marked novelties in neckwear silks for the Christmas trade is shown by Tooke Bros., Limited, in a range of highly colored butterflies, on self colored grounds, figured in Persian effects. They also show, on similar grounds, a range with feathers in bright colors, well spaced.

Tooke Bros., Limited, are showing a pretty little bias graduate with diagonal pointed ends. At the large end it measures 2½ in. in width and is graduated nicely so as to form a neat little knot when tied. No. 244 at $4 per doz.

In their No. 259, Tooke Bros., Limited, have an attractive puff. It has the appearance of a flowing end Ascot, tied, with one end brought well over, so as to give it a bias effect. It is slightly narrower in the shoulders than the shapes which have been shown during the early Fall trade.

NISBET & AULD.

A successful Christmas trade can only be secured by the introduction of novelties in every department. Dress goods and cloakings are invariably one of the leading lines with every dry goods merchant, and, by proper attention and the addition of attractive cloths, a profit-paying holiday trade is assured.

The great demand for 54 inch pure wool fabrics necessitates the showing of a good assortment of these goods in the various cloths, manufactured specially for women's wear. They are showing an exceptionally large stock of friezes, homespuns, Oxford tweeds and reversible cloths. They have a large range of shades in grey at all prices. A recent addition to the stock is a line of reversible homespuns, in good weight, with handsome check back. It will make stylish costumes and ulsters, and very serviceable skirts for wet and stormy weather. Although new on the market, it is already a good seller.

Blanket cloakings are being handled this season by more merchants than ever before, and fully 60 per cent. of them have already booked repeat orders. They are shown in cardinal, scarlet, light royal, royal, navy, silver grey, myrtle, old gold and black, in plain and checks.

SPECIALS FOR DECEMBER.

Early in this month, The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, Toronto, expect deliveries of some very important lines in their dress goods department, amongst which are included the following ranges: L505, L506, L507, L508, L509, L510, 42 in., all-wool costume tweeds to retail at 50c. A M 2, 36 38 in., all-wool and silk tartans, to retail at 50c. W D 82, 27 in. French opera flannels, to retail at 50c. These are all very special value, and large orders have already been placed for them, so that it would be advisable to give early attention to them before the choicest designs and most fashionable colorings are sold out. Genuine camels' hair costume cloths in plain black are much in demand and scarce. The Brock Company have a limited supply in an extra good quality, which is meeting with great approbation in the trade. Their range also of fancy black dress goods in the newest designs is most complete and attractive, and worthy of attention from prospective buyers.

In plain materials, such as serges, box-cloths, venetians, sedans, poplins, etc., they have in stock all makes and shades in vogue to day. These sold under their trade mark, "Victorian," which is a guarantee of value, make, finish and durability, have become greatly celebrated for their popularity.

Mr. A. Chisholm of Mahone Bay, N.S., is building a fine new store 40 x 60, which will be completed about the first of the year.

A large woollen and dress goods manufacturing firm in Leeds, England, want an agent in this country. Any active man who is acquainted with the trade in Canada would do well to look up this firm, who advertise in this issue.

A new dry goods and clothing store has been opened up in Campbellton, N.B., by Scheffer Bros. They are carrying in addition to the regular dry goods stock a line of men's furnishings and boots and shoes.

Owing to the ever-increasing volume of business of The Merchants Counter Check Book Co., Limited, Toronto, we notice by their advertisement that they have moved to larger premises at 34 Colborne street. This firm does a large counter check book business, no doubt on account of the superiority of their books. When wanting books we would advise seeing their samples.

Mr. H. B. Dawson has purchased from W. J. Clark, the dry goods business of Shera & Co., Port Arthur, and it will be continued under his management. Mr. Dawson is well-known in the town and district, having been a resident for a number of years, during which time he has held a responsible position with Matthews & Co. This has given him a large insight into the dry goods business which will stand him in good stead in his venture.

With the approach of the holiday season, every enterprising merchant will be thinking out a plan for making his store more attractive to the public. To this end probably one of the best means is to have attractive counters or showcases. The "Silent Salesman" is one of the most modern of all showcases and deserves a place in every live store. Its sale in Canada is on the increase, among the recent purchasers being such well-known drygoodsmen as L. A. Bayley, Sherbrooke, Que.; R. S. Ford, Petrolia, Ont.; J. F. Hardison, Sydney, C.B., and Playfair, Preston Co., Midland, Ont. The "Silent Salesman" is made by John Phillips & Co., Limited, Detroit, Mich.

CLEARING SALE.

Dolls, Toys, Toilet Cases, Albums, China, Games, etc.

We will clear all the above lines at great reductions during the month of December. This is our usual plan. Everything goes, and it's the price that does it. If you are looking for a snap in a Doll, a Cup and Saucer, a Toilet Case, an Album, or anything else in Christmas goods at a cut price you should come and see us. All the above lines will be cleared.

CLOTHING IN THE CHINESE ARMY.

It may be of interest to know something about the uniforms of the Chinese regular army. They will be easily distinguished from anything worn by European troops. Celestial blue is quite appropriately, the principal color worn in the Chinese regular forces, but the Korean soldier is clad in jacket and long trousers of a purplish shade, faced with pale yellow. He wears white boots and a brownish hat with a moderate brim. The regular artillery, who are probably destined to surprise the armies of the powers, much as the Free State artillery has surprised our own gunners, wear pale blue trousers, almost like very loose football or rowing "shorts," falling to just below the knee. Dark blue stockings meet these and disappear into white shoes. The jacket is rather like a yachtman's jersey in shape, and blue in color. Over it the artilleryman wears a sleeveless tunic of pale yellow, with a device resembling a Greek cross in scarlet on his chest. His accoutrements are put on over this, and for headdress an emerald green turban serves excellently.

The infantry differ considerably from the scientific corps. Instead of hanging loose, like those of the gunners, their trousers are tucked into their stockings, which have a crimson seam up the centre in front, and are worn with a tan-colored shoe. The tunic is blue, and easy fitting, edged and cuffed with crimson silk, and having a species of crimson silk pleat across the shoulders. The headdress is the ordinary dark slate-colored Chinese hat.

Officers wear very large plaited hats, falling around head and shoulders like a lady's sun-bonnet, with narrow strings of white silk, worn untied. Trousers, stockings and shoes, as in the artillery. The tunic is of celestial blue, with wide sleeves, and a curious sleeveless garment of a red-brown color is worn over it, and terminates at the waist. An oval patch of white silk, embroidered, like the excelsior banner, with a strange device, is borne in front just above the waistband. These are the chief uniforms of the Chinese regular army. I do not imagine that the Boxers possess a uniform in the strict sense of the word, but presumably they all wear gloves.—
Fashion.

THE OXFORD MAKES.

Canadian tweeds, homespuns and yarns bearing the name "Oxford" have but little need of introduction or eulogy to Canadian merchants, among whom they have been standard goods for some years, or to a large number of foreign merchants, who have recognized their superior qualities and are sending orders in very freely. The Oxford Manufacturing Co., Limited, Oxford N. S., who produce these goods, have been compelled to instal extra machinery in order to keep up with the increased demand and to possess the latest and most improved machines for making the "Oxford" goods. The outlook for the Spring trade is very bright with this firm, customers stating that an especially heavy business will be done in their lightweight fabrics for ladies and gentlemen.

REMOVED TO LARGER QUARTERS.

The great increase in the business of the G. A. Thorpe Manufacturing Co., Toronto, has necessitated their having more commodious premises. Accordingly, they have moved to new and larger buildings where, in future, all their clothing will be manufactured under the supervision of a competent foreman. The G. A. Thorpe Co. make fine ready-made clothing for men, youths, boys and children, and the success which they have achieved in the business is due to the quality of the goods they sell, and the consequent liberal patronage of the merchants of Canada.

CANADIAN TWEEDS.

The Trent Valley Woollen Mills, under the new management of Mr. Burroughs, from Yorkshire, have developed a great deal of energy, showing some nice goods for next Fall's trade. Their line of 25-cent 11 oz. Fall tweeds, made in Yorkshire style, are declared by those who have seen them to be the finest goods for the price which have ever been shown in Canada.

MR. BRODIE HAS RETIRED.

Mr. A. W. Brodie has resigned the management of the Hespeler woollen mills, and will, in future, reside in Toronto. Mr. Brodie was long connected with the woollen business of Canada. He retains his interest in the Canada Woollen Mills, Limited, and remains a director of that company. Mr. John Morley, Waterloo, assumes charge at Hespeler.

CLOTHING MANUFACTURING.

Another indication that Toronto is making giant strides towards capturing the entire trade of the better class of clothing in Canada is found in the fact that almost every concern doing business here has removed to larger premises. The latest to move is that of The Lowndes Co., Limited, who have found their present premises inadequate to supply the demand for "20th Century" brand clothing, and have equipped an additional factory on Front street west.

COMMENCING A WHOLESALE BUSINESS.

Mr. William Jackson, of Jackson Bros., Clinton, Ont., was noticed going the round of the wholesale houses in Montreal during the month. This gentleman is at the head of one of the most progressive clothing firms in Western Ontario, having its patrons all over Ontario and through Western Canada, and Mr. T. Jackson, jr., is kept busy all the year round with his samples and tapeline. But, although they are doing a large volume of business, they are not satisfied, and now they intend to branch out into a wholesale trade. Situated as they are in the centre of one of the best agricultural districts of Ontario, they ought to find ample scope to do a wholesale business in the surrounding section. THE DRY GOODS REVIEW wishes them every success in their new venture.

Louis Lazarovitz and David Goodman, both of Quebec, merchants, have formed a partnership under the name of the Canadian Clothing Co.

The firm of Stewart & Hyndman, Winnipeg, clothiers, has undergone some changes. Geo. Stewart is retiring, and his son, G. C. Stewart, and Frank Hyndman, brother of the present partner, has been taken in. In future the firm will be known as G. J. Hyndman & Co.

The Taxation of Merchants.

Evidence Before the Ontario Commission on the Effects of Personally Tax and the Competition of Departmental Stores.

Condensed for DRY GOODS REVIEW Readers.

THE Ontario Assessment Commission has been hearing evidence in Toronto on the question of taxing merchants' stocks. Leading wholesale and retail dry goods merchants were in attendance, and their views are of interest to merchants all over Canada.

UNFAIR TO WHOLESALE DRY GOODS TRADE.

Complaints were made of the system of taxation in Toronto, which, compared with the methods in vogue in Montreal and Winnipeg, was unjust. It was pointed out that a merchant in Montreal, carrying $1,000,000 worth of stock, if he occupied a building subject to a rental of $4,000, would pay a tax of $300 a year, based on this rental. If the same man located in Toronto, under the law as it exists to-day, with the municipal right to tax 20 mills on the dollar, his taxes would be $20,000 a year. In Winnipeg they levied a tax on warehouses of 3c. per square foot of warehouse occupied, of 10 per cent. on manufacturers' rentals and 8½ on the rental of stores. The result was that dozens of mercantile warehouses had been established there that could not have been started but for that law. In Montreal there was a 7½ per cent. tax on the rental value of stores.

Mr. Stapleton Caldecott said that the idea of municipal taxation of personalty was unknown in Great Britain; it came entirely from the United States. He pointed out how unfair it was, that, say, three men with equal frontage of 50 feet on Yonge street, with $20,000, $10,000 and $5,000 respectively invested, should be taxed $400, $200 and $100 for exactly the same protection and the same opportunity for doing business.

Mr. W. R. Brock, M.P., said that the decline in the number of wholesale dry goods houses in Toronto was due to the competition of Montreal, and his firm had found it desirable to have a wholesale house there.

WOULD FAVOR HONEST TRADERS.

Mr. Cockshutt, Brantford, pointed out that in small cities and towns the assessment returns were sometimes loaded up the other way, and, sometimes, merchants, to keep up their credit, paid taxes on $10,000 or $12,000 when they had less than nothing. A tax on rental values would be putting a premium not on dishonesty but on honesty.

COMPLAINTS AGAINST DEPARTMENTAL STORES.

The president and secretary of the Retail Merchants' Association presented the views of retailers with special reference to city departmentals. The personalty tax was pronounced unfair. They favored a business tax on rental values not higher than 5 per cent. With this should go a graded license for departmental stores, according to the number of lines carried. The new Prussian law, given in the November issue of THE DRY GOODS REVIEW, was pointed to as an example of this. Complaints were made of low wages and misleading advertisements as contributing to the success of departmental stores.

DEFENCE OF BIG STORES.

The president of The Robert Simpson Co., H. H. Fudger, defended the departmentals. They opposed special legislation. Most retailers carried a number of lines. Departmental stores were not trusts or monopolies. They gave the consumers cheap goods, from 3 to 6 per cent. over the cost of production plus the transportation charges. They shortened the hours of labor, and, by having one price, contributed to honest methods in trade.

THE RETAILERS' DEMAND.

The president of the Retailers' Association said: "We ask the commission to recommend to the Government an optional law. We are not here simply as retailers of Toronto. We are here representing the retail merchants of Ontario. We are here asking for an optional law in order to protect outside merchants as well as our own. If we get that law, and the citizens of Toronto think it is not wise to put it into force, well and good, but we want that, because we think the interests of the Province would be protected thereby. The optional law I spoke of is the law of Prussia."

A COMBINED TAX PROPOSED.

Mr. Hugh Blain suggested a combined tax on rental values and income, which seemed to meet with general approval. He agreed that the present system was unfair, as one merchant was taxed out of all proportion to the tax on other and less honest merchants. A tax should be adopted combining the principles of a tax on rentals and a tax on income. The present law imposed on business men a condition of things that they could hardly live up to.

A TAX ON BRAINS.

Mr. James D. Allan said that it would be interesting to know what hand the municipality had in making a man's income. The income was in no sense a return for services rendered; it was a matter of the man's ability, and was out of the province of the municipality to tax. The only correct principle of civic taxation was upon the basis of services rendered. It was forgotten apparently that there was nothing antagonistic between the wholesale and retail trades. The wholesale and manufacturing trade of a city was what created the city. That trade had the whole world as competitors, and the success of that trade outside was a measure of the business success of the city. Mr. Allan referred to the introduction of the rental value tax in New Zealand, in succession to the personalty tax. In New Zealand they had the same fears that had been expressed here, that there would not be sufficient revenue from the new tax, but in three years these fears had been entirely allayed by the practical working of the system. He took it that it was not the business of the assessment department of any city to make itself the arbiter of what the people, who were its virtual employers, should pay. Merchants, wholesale or retail, would not object to any system of municipal taxation that was equitable, and the stand they had taken was that something must be arrived at that was more fair, more equitable than the present inquisitorial system, which did not in the first place live up to the terms of the law. Mr. Allan said that the establishment of the rental value tax in New Zealand had led to a return of business.

A LAWYER DEFENDS BIG STORES.

Mr. J. J. Maclaren, Q.C., spoke up for departmental stores. His argument, summarized, was to this effect: That the graded tax was objectionable, and that the Prussian laws, which were paternal in their nature, should not be imitated in Canada; that the principle of taxing the turnover was bad; that a large part of the business of these stores was in mail orders; that, while they had injured to some extent the Toronto and outside country retail trade, the Toronto merchants had suffered more from the boom; the number of vacant retail stores in Toronto had declined from 758 in 1895 to 316 in 1900. The departmental stores were satisfied with the present system, but they were not wedded to it. All they asked was that there should be a fair principle. They knew of no reason why they should be discriminated against. One of these stores was to day assessed on $435,000 realty and $450,000 personalty, so that, at this year's tax rate, it would have to pay $17,000 tax, so it did not look as if they now escaped taxation, when Mr. Brock's tax was only $3,600. Personally, he thought the Montreal system the most equitable.

The bulk of the evidence submitted to the commission condemns the personalty tax on merchants, and Mr. James D. Allan pointed out that the verdict of taxation commissions in the United States was to the same effect.

THE W. R. BROCK CO., LIMITED, TORONTO.

Some very exceptional values are to be seen in the carpet and housefurnishing department of The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, Toronto, in the way of Nottingham and Swiss lace curtains, chenille and tapestry curtains and table covers, and tapestry, brussels and axminster carpets. These are always in good demand during the month of December and prospective buyers will do well to have a look.

There is always a demand about Christmas time for fancy linens. The W. R. Brock Co., Limited, Toronto, are showing a very extensive range of new and desirable goods for this trade, contracted for previous to the heavy advance in price. A notable feature is their large assortment of handsome damask towels, with art borders, and a great variety of doylies, napkins, tray cloths, 5 o'clock tea cloths, and side-board cloths, all to match, and in the newest designs and makes. A table of fancy linens is always an attraction during the holiday season, productive of safe, profitable business.

This firm are offering special attractions in their silk department, both in the way of plain and fancy goods, but draw particular attention to some exclusive goods for evening gowns and blouses. They have in stock a full range of their M 4, 24-in. Victorian velveteen, which they claim is the best value in the trade to retail at 50c.

For Christmas gifts, fancy handkerchiefs, ladies' and gentlemen's neckwear, fancy knitted goods, umbrellas, warm hosiery and gloves are among the articles shown. This year their range of lace-trimmed, embroidered, colored-bordered, picture, hemstitched, brocaded and Japanese silk handkerchiefs is more attractive than usual. In neckwear they opened out December 1 a fine assortment of the latest novelties at popular prices, which, with the stock on hand (which they are jobbing to provide popular lines for the bargain counters) makes the show of neckwear worth inspection.

As to fancy-knitted wool goods, the house has the reputation of keeping a large assortment in fancy and honeycomb wool shawls, toques, fascinators, bootees, infantees, gaiters, cardigan jackets, tams, caps and polka jackets—the production of English, Canadian and German factories. In ladies' and men's umbrellas, novelties will also be in stock after December 1, the principal points being durability of cloth and style of handle.

In the glove department, Brock's assortment of ladies' and misses' ringwood gloves, in fancy, white and black, also cashmere gloves, was never larger or more in touch with public demand. This also applies to men's and boys' lined kid and wool gloves; two special lines in lined kid to retail at 50c. are "Govey" and "Kiddy," for men and boys.

"Hockey requirements" are always looked after by the department and this season they are carrying a large range of men's sweaters, cardigan jackets, fancy hosiery, etc., which merchants should post themselves on so as to supply the demand of local clubs.

The most severe part of the Winter is before us, so this firm have reinforced their stock of men's heavy wool socks, fleeced underwear for men and boys, heavy gloves and mitts for all kinds of people, ladies' and misses' plain and ribbed underwear, and in fact everything that people want to keep out Jack Frost and save the doctors' bills. Write to the Brock Co. for samples and prices of their goods.

In the wrapperette room they show a striking novelty in French flannel spot wrapperettes, navy grounds, garnet grounds, black and military red grounds with white and colored spots—four sizes of plain spots, from small to large, and two sizes of cluster spots, which are very effective. This line has been a big seller, just what is wanted for new-style ladies' waists, and can be retailed at 12½c.

They are also showing a striking novelty in American checks, 32-in. double-fold fabrics, for children's dresses and ladies' wrappers. The colorings are bright and attractive and absolutely "washing fast." They are retailed at 15c. and are proving trade-winners.

In the linen room are shown two special numbers in heavy French canvas, good stiff makes, both in black and natural, to retail at 12½ and 15c. These lines are part of a special purchase and fully 25 per cent. below market values.

Two special lines in cream damask table linens: A. I., a 60 in. good heavy cloth, nice mellow finish, five designs, to retail at 25c.; M 61, a 68 in. beautiful fine cloth, can be retailed at 45c. Both lines are away below regular price.

A job in huck towels: B 61, 20x40, fringed, nice and fine, good weight, can be retailed at 25c. for a leader. An 18-in. hickory towelling, heavy dark huck, has just been passed into stock, part of an old purchase, which is offered at a price to retail at 10c. This is a well-known line and it is not expected the quantity will last long at this figure. D 1 is a 40-in. linenette dress lining, all staple colorings, a good firm cloth, heavyweight, a regular dressmakers' favorite. The department can give special quotations for case lots, to retail at 12½c.

Millinery Season

•———Mantles, Trimmings and Laces.

PRESENT AND SPRING STYLES.

WHEN a representative of THE DRY GOODS REVIEW called upon S. F. McKinnon & Co., Limited, with a view to having a chat about trade in general, one of the company said that, generally speaking, they believed the November millinery trade had been satisfactory, and, as a result of careful buying, thought that millinery stocks would be low at the end of the season.

"With regard to goods of a heavy Winter character, the conditions are different, the continued mild weather having militated very much against the selling of goods of this class; and, unless we get good sharp weather soon, heavy goods departments are sure to suffer, as, after the first of the year, it is hard to realize a fair profit on Winter weights. But, with the advent of colder weather, much can be done in December towards reducing stocks. You ask what about the millinery for December? Well, as far as the wholesales are concerned, a heavy trade is not usually done after this date, particularly in hats. For the balance of the season we think the big demand will be for mode hats, which, in turn, create a heavy demand for silk velvets, at least, that is what we see from our viewpoint, and have provided liberally in silk velvets and velveteens, taffeta silks; and good plain satins, particularly black, will be in demand, Plain black ribbons and black, white and cream single tips will also be in favor for the December trade.

"You ask if many buyers visit the city in December. Yes, there are a great many. Some want to provide for Christmas trade; also, it is a month when we offer special inducements to clear odd lines or broken lots throughout the house, previous to taking stock. Many buyers embrace the opportunity, and are well paid for their trip."

Having found the representative of this company marking the samples of their foreign purchases for Spring, which had just arrived, THE REVIEW asked what he had to communicate regarding Spring millinery.

"It is just a little too early to speak out even all that we know at this early date, as those who are most deeply interested in this important question are yet busy with the present season. But you can say as coming from us, viewed from our high vantage ground, that it looks as if all the world's centres of millinery fashion had combined in effort to make the first season of the new century a memorable one in millinery circles. From what we have seen of styles and materials, they promise to produce a dash and style in millinery which has not previously been reached. We believe all our Canadian millinery artists require is the proper materials to work with to produce millinery in style and effect equal to any in the world, and they certainly will have their opportunity."

THE D. McCALL CO.

The velvet trade has been exceedingly good during the past season, and, in consequence, the stock is being fully kept up in velvets and velveteens, in both black and colors. The latter are a very wide range, including the most popular colorings in cardinals, browns, navys and castors, and the stock in these will be kept up throughout the season. They are having heavy sales on black and colored taffetas at all prices, and on satins in plain, oriental and duchess makes.

A handsome range of staple ribbons in satin and failles, in colors to suit the Christmas trade, is shown. They are now passing into stock, besides the velvets and velveteens, some special values in black bunch tips and demi and  $\frac{3}{4}$  flats. Their travelers, now on the road, are showing the most complete range of goods that they have ever been able to put before the Canadian trade, and, to judge by the orders already received, the prospects for a large Spring trade are very bright.

THE JOHN D. IVEY CO., LIMITED.

This firm are now very busy in Spring work. Their travelers are on the road with a large variety of samples, and, as there are ten travelers showing nothing but millinery, it means a good deal of work in looking after them.

The past season, although up to expectations, was interfered with by the warm weather to a certain extent. This, however, is likely to be beneficial, as customers have been buying lightly and their stocks are now low.

They have their Spring samples out now, and a big trade is being done in letter orders and repeat orders in velvets, velveteens, black ostrich feathers and gold and steel ornaments, these goods being now used for trimming velvet hats. In colder weather there will probably be a greater demand, and a heavy Winter trade is expected.

THE VICTOR GARMENTS.

The Victor Manufacturing Co., notice of whose commencement in business was published but a few months ago in this journal, are apparently already on a firm footing and have secured a larger number of regular customers than usually falls to the lot of so young a business house. In their notice to the trade they announce an unusually large assortment of ladies' cloaks and suits and misses' and children's garments in the season's latest styles. Among the offerings are Spring tailored suits for ladies and misses; children's reefers; separate skirts in woollens, crashes, piques, mohairs and lustres, and Summer and crash suits. These goods have already made a name for themselves among the trade, due, no doubt, to the employment of experience and skill in choosing the cloth and in designing and making up the styles. In anticipation of a Spring season of exceptional activity, the Victor Company have made special preparations and rightly expect a share of every dealer's trade.

THE WYLD-DARLING CO.

During the cold weather there has been an immense trade done in boys' ribbed wool and worsted hose. Some extra values are shown here in the well-known numbers 190, 199, 206 and "Jumbo," to retail from 25 to 50c. per pair. A large range of children's knitted toques are shown, in scarlet, cardinal, navy and black, with striped borders, to retail at 25 to 50c. each, also a line of German toques in fancy mixed patterns.

For the Christmas trade are shown some choice designs in ladies' and children's fancy colored ringwood gloves, black wool mitts, both single and double knit, silk mitts, infantees, bootees, wool clouds, hoods and ladies' sleeveless cardigan jackets.

They are in a specially good position to supply merchants who wish to sort up their stock in ladies' ribbed and natural wool underwear, as their stock is assorted in all the popular makes, to retail at from 25c. each upwards.

Fred Bryant, for many years with Robert Wright & Co. and Geo. Hutcheson, of Brockville, has accepted a position in the Simpson departmental store, Toronto. He will have charge of the black dress goods department.

Geo. Steele, a well-known Toronto drygoodsman, died at his home on Huron street last month. He was first connected with the old firm of John Robertson & Son, afterwards with the wholesale firm of Robert Simpson, and, in later years, with Wyld, Grasett & Darling.

H. A. Beattie, of Montreal, has arranged for the opening in Quebec of a branch of the Semi-Ready Clothing Company. A. R. Roy, of Quebec, has been appointed local manager, and the new store will be located in Delage & Gauvreau's old premises, St. John street.

Ald. W. D. Morris with ex-Ald. Lang and other associates has just purchased the Bishop block on the southeast corner of Sussex and St. Patrick streets, Ottawa, and will start in to form a company to manufacture men's, ladies' and children's underwear, shirts, collars, cuffs, overalls and other cotton goods for the wholesale trade.

The Canadian Express Co. is liable for $10 00, the value of a parcel given one of its drivers by Asher & Leeson, wholesale dry goods dealers, so Judge Morson has decided. The parcel was lost and the express company refused to pay for it because the regulation receipt had not been given by the driver. Judge Morson holds that acceptance by the driver means acceptance by the company.

M. J. McLeod & Co.'s new 40 ft. addition to their store in Moosejaw makes the establishment 25 ft. wide by 110 ft. long, and all the space on the ground floor and basement is required to accommodate Mr. McLeod's constantly increasing business. The new store is the dry goods department, Mr. McLeod having decided to add this line to his stock of men's furnishings, etc. The basement of the annex is a department for carpets, oilcloths, linoleums, etc., which will also be a new line.

Jacob Erlich & Co., manufacturers of ladies' wrappers, New York, are looking for an agent in this country, with headquarters at either Toronto or Montreal. The business of this firm has been so increased of late that every department in their factory has had to be enlarged, and now they are the largest house which is devoted exclusively to the manufacture of wrappers. But quality, not quantity, is the motto of the firm, which, of course, accounts for this enlargement of their plant.
