Part of Sharon Cadieux's family tree: Kingston is a treasure-trove of information for the genealogist

Gravestones are key to the past

Years ago Marjorie Simmins was given a collection of papers written by her grandmother's sister, Aunt Mammie. "She fancied herself a poet, and I spent hours trying to make sense of the script," says Marjorie. "I typed them all up and many contained reminiscences of her childhood, which helped me pinpoint the proper place where the family lived in England."

"She mentions a ford they had to cross to get to the farm. When I found the farm, there was the ford. "I knew that my great-great-grandfather had two wives and 24 children, but I didn't know who they were. Well, Aunt Mammie wrote about the oldest child Elizabeth, who was my great-great-grandmother. She mentioned that Elizabeth had the second piano in the village, after the squire."

Marjorie Simmins got Aunt Mammie's poems just as she was getting interested in genealogy. But her biggest treasure she affectionately calls: "The Great Find."

"Generations of our family — the Comptons — had lived on this farm in England, and one day the tenant living there went into the attic because the roof was leaking," says Marjorie. "Under the edge of the eaves he found an old school copybook belonging to great-grandfather's older brother, H. G. Compton, which was dated Dec. 2, 1834."

She has another memento that she thinks is connected to his brother John "In one of the windows, 'John Compton' was scribbled, and the last John Compton was born in that house in 1808. The pane of glass was cut out and given to a cousin of mine, who went over to France and Germany to work as an au pair girl. She looked after it carefully all the time she was in Europe, intending to give it to me."

"She got it safely back, but she laid it on a chair and unfortunately her father sat on it."

"The name 'Eliza' was written just next to where John's name was written. I can just imagine their mother coming along and catching them in the act."

Sharon Cadieux complains that she doesn't have anything interesting to tell about her genealogical research. "It's been too easy for me," she says, almost quibbly. "Both sides of the family have been in this area for a long time. The last one to come over was in 1820. And most of them settled in Camden and Kingston Townships, so I've been able to do all my research without leaving town."

Sharon says Kingston is a treasure-trove of records for genealogists. "At Queen's, they have Canadian census records from 1871, 1881, and 1891. I've also used the registers at the Anglican Synod Office, and the records at Catarqui Cemetery."

The Kingston branch of the Ontario Genealogical Society has also helped preserve history by copying the faded records at St. Mary's Cathedral and recording gravestones in several outlying cemeteries, before they became illegible. Sharon has been out on a few gravestone-copying expeditions.

Her biggest thrill has been discovering where her great-grandmother died. "I knew her name was Stewart, and that she had lived in Camden Township, but I didn't know if she had died there."

"I sent away for her death certificate from the government and found she had died in Dundas County. Then I asked a relative if she had a family Bible. In the Bible I found the obituary, which said she died in Matilda Township. Looking up the census records I discovered she had been a twin."

Digging up family roots

By GREG BURLIUK

Researching your family's past requires the patience of Job, the tenacity of a bulldog and the sleuthing skills of Sherlock Holmes.

But increasing numbers of Canadians are discovering that genealogy can be a satisfying and fascinating hobby.

Booksellers report a steady sale of genealogical material. In two weeks, the Book Merchant sold 47 of its 50 copies of a kit selling for $7.99, called Tracing your Family Tree. The kit offers a series of charts and instructions which helps the beginner organize his genealogical research.

"I've noticed an increase in sales, especially in the last six months," said Book Merchant owner Doug Sutcliffe. "A book called In Search of Your Roots came out, and when the public saw that, they got interested because it was by a Canadian."

At Printed Passage Book Store co-owner Barbara Allen reported sales of family history books were brisk, and at the Book Shop, owner Gwen Cook said: "Once Roots, these kinds of books have all sold out quickly."

Roots, one of the most widely-watched dramatic series in television history, has been responsible for most of the recent interest in genealogy.

The Ontario Genealogical Society reports that membership has risen by 1,000 in the last 12 months. "Roots is a lot of the reason, but I think it's also part of the nostalgia and antique kick," says society member Mary Garrett.

"I helped man an information booth recently for the Clans and Scottish Societies of Canada at the Canadian National Exhibition. The bulk of the questions we got were genealogical. Everyone wants to know if they're Scottish."

Everyone would also like to know if they are descended from royal blood. More often than not, they discover their ancestors were illegitimate, criminals or in some way "sullied." But even if your ancestors led normal lives, digging into your family past can be the most fascinating history lesson you have ever had.

And occasionally on this treasure hunt, you will strike it rich.

JAMES RICHARDSON

October 8, 1819 - November 15, 1892.

The only contemporary account of James Richardson's life is his obituary published in the Kingston British Whig on November 16, 1892. It is headed:
A CITY FULL OF REGRETS OVER THE DEATH OF A STERLING OLD CITIZEN.

The obituary follows:

James Richardson died last night at his residence on Stuart street. The late James Richardson was born in county Tyrone, Ireland, in the year 1819. His father came to Canada when James was three years old and settled in Adolphustown, where he died four years afterwards, leaving his son an orphan, his mother having died soon after his birth.

Mr. Richardson has been a resident of Kingston since he was ten years old. He first entered the employment of the late Mr. Dawson and subsequently established himself in business independently. He engaged in various commercial enterprises in which he was remarkably successful and accumulated considerable property. He finally concentrated his business in the grain trade. He was the first man who exported grain from Kingston, and for more than thirty years he has successfully carried that business and has been the leading grain merchant in central Ontario. During that period he has enjoyed the confidence and esteem of the business and farming community by the integrity and uprightness which have characterized his dealings.

He was always loyal to Kingston and its interests. No citizen has been more prominently identified with the growth of the city, and the development of its business enterprises. When the present custom house was in process of erection the contractor was unable to complete his work, and Mr. Richardson, who was the contractor's surety, carried out the contract giving it his personal supervision for two years and sustaining a loss in connection with it of several thousand dollars.

Among the enterprises which he has financially promoted are the Kingston and Pembroke railway, the cotton mill, the knitting mill, and the locomotive works.

He has also been one of the most liberal benefactors of Queen's University. Mr. Richardson was a life-long Conservative and voted for the late Sir John A. Macdonald at his first election in the city of Kingston and was his faithful adherent throughout his political career, whilst never obtrusive in the expression of his political opinions. It is well known to many members of the Conservative party that it was Sir John Macdonald's wish on more than one occasion that Mr. Richardson should stand as the Conservative candidate for Kingston.

Until five weeks ago he retained to all appearance the full mental and physical vigor of manhood. Although over seventy years of age there was little in his appearance to suggest the old man. He was then taken suddenly ill at his office and the vitality, which had hitherto seemed unabated, was suddenly attacked, and it was evident that a serious collapse had taken place. Until the last week his friends hoped for his restoration to health, but during the past few days it became apparent that he was sinking, and last evening at nine o'clock he quietly and peacefully passed away.

The late Mr. Richardson was a member of Sydenham Street Methodist church congregation and most regular and punctual in his attendance. His pew was occupied every Sunday. He had high regard for the church and was one of the most generous of its supporters. He was always willing to aid in the undertakings of its most aggressive workers. He never held office, but by sympathy and liberality backed up those who were the burden-bearers. He was quiet, devout and faithful.

He was in early days, one of the scholars in the first Sunday school in this city, conducted by the Methodist in the old Bay street church. He was afterwards a teacher in the same school. He was one of three of the old scholars at the late picnic of the Sydenham street Sabbath school. He was greatly interested in the first building on the present site of his church home, and a very liberal contributor to the remodelled and beautified church of today. He regarded the transformation with pride.

Mr. Richardson leaves surviving him his widow, his daughter, Mrs. (Rev) E. A. Chown, and his two sons, who have been long associated with him in business and who faithfully maintain the honorable record which their father made. He also leaves two sisters. Mrs. Kerr, of Australia, and Mrs. Allen, Kingston, both several years his senior.

Expression of Citizens.

Judge Price said that the late James Richardson was one of the best citizens Kingston ever had. He was a member of the city council for many years and worked faithfully for the city, guarding her interests as carefully as he did his own business. He was level-headed and used good judgment in civic affairs. From early years he was a dealer and watched the markets carefully. Buying and selling was a hobby with him.

- W. MCROSSIE SAID Mr. Richardson was kind and obliging. He would inconvenience himself to help a friend and would take great risks in lending money. He was a worthy citizen and his life was a pattern which young men could follow without fear of dishonor.
- G. NEWLANDS. knew Mr. Richardson when he was a young man. He learned the trade of a tailor with Mr. Dawson and afterwards kept a clothing store on Brock street. When he was an apprentice he was economical and was never known to spend money foolishly. He speculated in nearly everything out of which a dollar could be made. He exercised good judgment in his dealings and was engaged for years in the potash business. When he was a tailor a gentleman frequently told him that he had too much ability to be working at the trade. He was one of the sureties in the building of the custom house and backed a contractor named Pigeon. Had it not been for Mr. Richardson's money the contractor could not have completed the work. Near the finish Mr. Richardson worked about the building himself. He told the speaker that he dropped £1,700 on the deal. He was a very fine man. He was quiet, but had a great deal of business ability.
- I. H. BRECK said he had done business representing a quarter of a million of dollars with Mr. Richardson and he was always found strict and honest in his transactions. He had never been known to do anything that was unfair or taken advantage of anyone in business dealings. The speaker knew Mr. Richardson since 1845, and he was never known to press a man who owed him money. His means and money were at the service of those who needed assistance to tide them over dull seasons in business. He was liberal in his nature and his name was always found on subscription lists for charitable purposes.
- MR. FLANAGAN clerk, knew Mr. Richardson well. He was a councilman in 1860 and an alderman the former year. At a later period he represented Victoria ward four years, and was always a painstaking alderman. He was a straightforward and sympathetic man. The speaker was acquainted with him from the time he was a young man. Their friendship existed unbroken from 1841.
- E. CHOWN stated he was an apprentice at the time Mr. Richardson was serving his time at the tailoring business. He had known Mr. Richardson since 1836, and could speak of him as an upright and straightforward man. He was a member of a clothing firm popularly known as Little and Richardson. While in this business he dealt in potash. This was about 1835. By degrees he got into the grain business. He was in the council with Mr. Chown, made an excellent alderman and was always cautious. From youth up there existed a bond of friendship between that was never broken.

H. CUNNINGHAM SAID he sat with James Richardson at the council board when he represented Victoria ward. He was an able alderman and served on the most important committees, including that of finance, and could have had the position of mayor if he desired. He was diligent and persevering and was always shrewd and always successful in dealings. He was a good-hearted man and the farmers of the county of Frontenac can praise him for his liberality at times when they were in need of monetary assistance. He used to advance them money on their crops on conditions that were in no way stringent. His death will be regretted throughout agricultural districts.

COLONEL DUFF said he had known Mr. Richardson between forty and fifty years and always admired his sterling character and was indebted to him for many acts of kindness which he will never cease to acknowledge. He was of a retiring disposition and did not push himself forward. He was straightforward, liberal-hearted and ready to help persons in distress. He never hesitated to assist people in whom he had confidence and was not exacting in securities.

REV. DR. GRIFFITH He was a generous host, a man who made all welcome by his geniality and heartiness. He was liberal both to educational and missionary institutions. When the blow came that was to carry him away he accepted it calmly and with fortitude, expressing strong faith in the love and care of his Heavenly Father. He conversed freely with his family and myself upon religious questions, always expressing the utmost confidence in God, and indeed as the end drew nearer and the conviction deepened that he could not recover he was the first to intimate it. He then calmly commended his family to God, urging upon them fidelity to duty in every department in life. His expressions of loving regard for his family and grandchildren were as touching as they were beautiful, showing the tender and strong devotion of a father's heart for those he was about to leave behind. In my last conversation with him he was remarkably clear in his expressions of confidence in God and hope for the life to come.

Allowing for the haste of daily journalism and the conservative caution of Kingston business men, it is a good report of a man who had made his way to the top and at the same time kept a willing hand outstretched to aid others. Reticent, and with distaste for personal prominence, he had solidly rewarded his adopted city and country, had developed an uncommonly deep and practical sense of citizenship, and founded a living tradition to be handed down to his descendants.

The obituary writer naturally concerned himself most with the later years of James Richardson's life. Noone in 1892 looked back to the two young orphans alone in a pioneer community from which the forest had not yet been wholly pushed back. The lad who was to make the name of Richardson inseparable from that of Kingston, who had earned his first money selling papers and gone on to make a name for himself in a variety of enterprises, was swallowed up in the prominent citizen of the latter half of the century. Ontario was full of people who saved their bastings with no very remarkable result, and many a newsboy failed to realize his young ambition. The supreme tribute to James Richardson was embodied in the editor's heading: A Sterling Citizen. Sterling in those days meant only one thing - pure gold.

How was his boyhood spent? Whether in Kingston or Adolphustown he would have attended one of the elementary schools, the first and best in Upper Canada, although the curriculum covered only reading, writing, arithmetic and grammar. There he learned to write a fine, neat script, and sufficient arithmetic to meet the stiff requirements of grain trading. Years afterward when the city had progressed towards higher education, he contributed support and encouragement to the struggling founders of Queen's University.

His apprenticeship to Mr. Dawson probably occurred in the early 1830's. The Dawson business was one of the oldest in Upper Canada. In 1800 when the county militia was getting itself organized and girded up for the sporadic war of 1812, they wanted smart uniforms for the coming struggle against the country that had exiled them. Colonel Ferguson of Frontenac wrote to Major Bell recommending James Dawson for the tailoring of officers' scarlet coats with blue facings, white lining, shoulder straps, and "long yellow" buttons. The Dawson of James Richardson's apprenticeship was either John or one of his sons. John Dawson's wife Jerusha, who died in 1821, had been a Wartman, a grand-daughter of Abram and a daughter of Barnabas and his wife, Hannah Dry, and so one of a closely knit group of United Empire Loyalists. It was into this family circle that James Richardson married. They were also the source of his Methodism for his own family had been Anglican.

Either the young apprentice lived with the Dawson's, or, when the day's work was over, he crossed Cataraqui bridge to the Hart cottage where in the first nine years there were no babies. He probably learned a great deal there about ships and shipping, knowledge he could use later when the Richardson grain boats dotted lake Ontario from spring break-up to the close of navigation. Life in either Barriefield or Kingston offered every recreation a boy could want, indeed the variety of amusement was such that the sober-minded frowned upon it.

The apprenticeship over, a new sign appeared on Kingston's Brock street: Little & Richardson. The Dawson family fortook tailoring for large farm operations on near-by Wolfe Island. What became of Mr. Little is unknown, but in a short time his name disappeared from the masthead and Mr. Richardson was sole proprietor of a business which had two sidelines; potash and grain. Probably this was about 1841.

The Kingston Argus of July 27, 1847 contained one of Mr. Richardson's few advertisements; "J. Richardson, Merchant Tailor, Anglen's Building, No. 1 Brock Street, Kingston." The Argus was then the town's newest and most outspoken paper, so independent that its Scottish editor, Mr. John Stewart, regularly battled in the courts. He was a founder of the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons but disagreed with his fellow founders and had to resign from the secretaryship. He wore the bonnet and tartan daily and nailed to his masthead the motto: "Be Just and Fear Not". Presumably James Richardson approved of him.

About the time Mr. Richardson became sole proprietor of his own business, he married Roxanna Day, whose genealogy may be traced with that of the Wartmans. The year of the marriage was probably 1842. Their daughter, Mary Martitia, was born May 10, 1845. A grand/daughter, Mrs. Douglas Thom, had her wedding dress of changeable taffeta in golden brown shot with blue. The young bride was tall and slender and wore frivolous side-laced shoes of cloth to match the gown. The dress itself had the full skirt and pointed bodice of the period. There was also a slim brown silk parasol to complete the costume. The trousseau she brought to the Brock street house was packed in a mammoth chest of walnut, too large to go up the staircase when the family later moved out Stuzrt street, a circumstance which saved the chest when the house burned.

The tailoring business prospered,^{as} did also the growing trade in potash and grain, but just as the promise of the future was beginning to outweigh the struggles of the past, tragedy came. Roxanna died, leaving her husband alone with a small daughter.

In either 1849 or 1850. Mr. Richardson married Roxanna's niece, Susannah Wartman, who may be found in the Wartman/Grass genealogies.

The preceding two pages of Wartman genealogy are from the papers of J. W. Purdy, who had some information from Senator Richardson. Mr. Purdy, born in Sydenham, 1828, was a son of Mary, daughter of Barnabas Wartman. Also, his paternal grandfather, Gilbert Purdy, was a brother of the Rhoda Purdy, born May 15, 1768, who married first John Wartman and afterwards Barnabas Dry.

It is not possible in Canada to check the accuracy of the roots of the tree as given by Mr. Purdy, but from Abraham Wartman down it has been checked and corrected by reference to a number of sound historical and family papers.

Mr. Purdy's reference to the origin of the family follows:

Through a romantic page in the history of the Wartman family, Mr. Purdy was the descendant of two German Princes: the Prince of the house of Rosenberg, and the Prince of the House of Wessenberg (both later grand ducal houses). Bartholdt Wessenberg, of the House of Wessenberg, born January 5th, 1698, married Louise of Rosenberg, August 23rd or 28th, 1737, was a notable student, held the astronomy chair in a German university, also a classic scholar and conversed in five languages. Louise was the second daughter of the prince of the House of Rosenberg, born in Rosenberg Castle, 1720, died 1746. Christianna Wessenberg, only child of Bartholdt Wessenberg, born September 17th, 1738; not having a son, her father educated her highly. In 1758 she married Abraham Wartman, born in Amsterdam, Holland, 1735, came of a respectable Dutch family, and was a cooper by trade. He met Christianna Wessenberg when he went to her father's house, to make tubs and buckets; it was love on sight. They eloped and were married. Tradition allows him much more than the usual share of manly beauty, and she was very fair. Her father disinherited her. They fled from his wrath to America, arriving in New York in 1758. They finally settled at Tunkhannock, in the Wyoming Valley on the Susquehanna river, Pa. Five sons and three daughters were born to them, and they prospered until the revolutionary war broke out. Siding with England they suffered much persecution. Finally being obliged to leave their home, they came to Canada by way of Cleveland, then to Niagara, where they stayed some time and two eldest daughters were married. They proceeded to Montreal afterward to Kingston, where they took U.E.L. farms on the Front Road. A faithful soul, worthy of mention, was Christianna's maid, Jerusha, who fled with her mistress and spent her life in her service.

"The children of Abraham and Christianna Wartman were: Susannah, born May 16th, 1759, married John Secord, 1785; died September 3rd, 1830; (sister-in-law of the famous Laura Secord.) NOTE; This is not correct. Laura was her niece by marriage. A. Mackay. Jerusha, born 1762, married John Comet 1781, died 1830; Bartholdt, born July 1st, 1762, killed June 29th by a company of American soldiers - Result, Massacre of Wyoming; Peter born 1765 married Eva Grass, 1786, died 1824. of Capt. Grass' family.

Information received from H. W. Richardson;

John Wartman, born 1767, married Rhoda Purdy, 1788. Christianna, born 1769 married John Courtland, 1796. Horace, born 1779, died 1784. Barnabas, born August 10, 1772, married Hannah Day March 15th, 1791 died August 30th, 1853. (Barnabas Wartman spoke five languages, was a Methodist local preacher.) His family were; Louis (married Jance Herchimer); Mary (Hoses Purdy); Elizabeth (Mrs Lane); Jerusha (Mrs. John Dawson); David; Christianna (Mrs. Joseph Ferris Jr); Melissa (Mrs John Herchimer).

The descendants of these families are numerous."

NOTE - Mary, daughter of Barnabas Wartman and wife of Hosea Purdy, in Mr. Purdy's mother. She is also the sister-in-law of John Dawson, the Brock street tailor to whom James Richardson was apprenticed.

Although nowhere in the Purdy papers is the source of the genealogies revealed, it is fair to assume that data from 1784 came from the neighborhood of Kingston. The earlier material was either handed down in the family, or Mr. Purdy may have retained a professional genealogist. Copies of Mr. Purdy's findings were left with Ernest Day, Kingston lawyer, for distribution to any members of the families interested, but Mr. Day himself said he did not know the background of the family research.

Inquiries by mail to a number of American historical societies disclosed the following material;

In "Pennsylvania German Pioneers," compiled by R. B. Strassburger, volume one, pages 39-40, (quoted by the librarian of Wyoming Historical and Genealogical Society, Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania), there is a list of passengers from Rotterdam, arriving in Philadelphia on August 16, 1731 on the ship "Smanuel". Under "names of women sixteen years of age and upwards" is ELIZABETH WARTMAN. Under the corresponding names of men sixteen years or more is HANS ADAM WARTMAN. Under "names of children" and ABRAHAM Wartman and Mary Wartmen, who would both be under sixteen.

University Loses
Four of its Best Friends
This Summer

The summer cost Queen's four of its best friends, men of integrity, faithfulness, and dedication in their service to this university. It is with deep regret that the Review reports the deaths of T. A. McGinnis, Dr. W. M. Conacher, Dr. J. K. Robertson, and Dr. Manley B. Baker. Though their respective contributions were in different spheres, each gave generously of his services, bringing distinction to himself and honour to Queen's.

Thomas Alexander McGinnis, B.Sc., LL.D., M.E.I.C., and P.Eng, died suddenly at Kingston General Hospital on June 18 after a brief illness. At the age of seventy-one he was still active in the firm of McGinnis and O'Connor, Engineering Contractors, of which he was founder and president.

Though he was born in Belleville, Ontario, Mr. McGinnis spent most of his life in Kingston. In addition to his contracting business, he contributed much to civic and university life culturally and athletically.

His association with Queen's was a long and active one. Mr. McGinnis held two degrees from this university—a B.Sc. in Civil Engineering (1909) and an honorary LL.D. awarded in 1955. He was a member of the Board of Trustees and the Queen's University Council, Chairman of the Building Committee, and a leading promoter of Queen's post-war expansion.

A well-known figure in engineering and contracting fields, he held membership in the Engineering Institute of Canada and the Association of Professional Engineers of the Province of Ontario.

In many eyes, though, he was primarily a promoter of better sports. He had been very active in sports himself and was proud that during his term as chairman of the Athletic Board of Control in the 1920's Queen's won three Dominion and four Interecollegiate football championships. Having been chairman of the A.B. of C., T. A. McGinnis became chairman of the Ontario Athletic Commission of which he had been one of the earliest members. He was instrumental in establishing the athletic camp at Lake Couchiching, encouraged track and field in local high schools, and was a staunch supporter of the Kingston Church Athletic League.

At the time of his death Mr. McGinnis was a member of the Kingston General Hospital board of governors and chairman of the advisory committee to the Kingston Salvation Army Corps.

In paying tribute to the late Mr. McGinnis, Principal W. A. Mackintosh said: "The death of T. A. McGinnis has shocked and saddened his many friends at Queen's University and has left a gap very difficult to fill in the Board of Trustees.

"He was an ardent and unflagging supporter of many university interests. He gave ungrudgingly of his time and skill to successive building projects. To a marked degree this was a labour of love and he was his own building inspector. Every building erected at the university in the past twenty years bears the mark of his care and professional skill."

Married first to Elizabeth Alice Richardson, Arts '09, who predeceased him in 1948, Mr. McGinnis is survived by his second wife, Harriette Gardiner Folger, and five children: David, Se. '38, Thomas A. Jr., Mrs. W. Glen (Norah), Arts '34, Mrs. W. S. Simpson (Elizabeth), Arts '46, and Janet, Arts '46.

Dr. William Morison Conacher, professor of French at Queen's until his retirement in 1947, died on June 20 in Ongwanada Sanatorium in Kingston after a lingering illness. He was eighty-one years of age.

Born in Ashwell, Hertfordshire, in 1877, Professor Conacher studied French and German at the University of Lausanne, Switzerland, and at the University of London. For eight years after receiving his M.A. he taught in Edinburgh as head of Moderns.

It was in 1911 that he emigrated to Canada to become head of Moderns of Upper Canada College. Four years later Professor Conacher came to Queen's as lecturer in French.

He was a contributor to numerous periodicals, and on the recommendation of Dean Skelton was appointed editor of the Queen's Quarterly, a position he held with distinction for many years. His pen drew as well as it wrote, and many students will remember Professor Conacher's clever blackboard illustrations of his lecture material, sometimes sketched with both hands simultaneously.

For a number of years Dr. Conacher was secretary of "The Saturday Club" and was one of the original members of the Faculty Players, which in those days played even before the Governor-General in Ottawa.

He taught more than 2,000 pupils under four principals during his thirty-five years in the service of Queen's as professor to both winter and summer sessions. His passing will be mourned by hundreds of teachers from coast to coast and by his many students in all walks of life, several of whom are now on the staff of Queen's.

Though Professor Conacher attended overseas universities and was awarded his Ph.D. by the University of Montreal, both his sons attended Queen's. Dr. James B. Conacher graduated in 1938 and Dr. Desmond J. Conacher in 1941. He is also survived by his wife, the former Madeline Cashel whom he married in Ireland in 1912.

He is remembered as an excellent teacher, a good friend, and a pleasant companion — a man filled with that Queen's spirit which, as Dr. Conacher put it, "gave a great zest and joy to all those who were striving to do their bit for the Old Lady."

On June 25, the Times in London carried the announcement that John Kellock Robertson, Professor Emeritus of Physics at Queen's University, had died suddenly at Guy's Hospital of a heart attack. His death is mourned by many friends on both sides of the Atlantic, for since his retirement from Queen's in 1951 he had divided his years between England and Canada, renewing old friendships and always making new ones.

A fourth-generation Canadian of old Scottish stock, "J.K." was born in Perth, Ontario (or "Tayville" as he called it in a collection of sketches). He graduated from the University of Toronto with distinction in 1907, specializing in physics, and after spending two years there as a demonstrator, he turned down a fellowship to Columbia to accept a post at Queen's as junior lecturer. He considered this step the best he ever made. Queen's as well was to have good reason to be glad that he chose her rather than Columbia.

Professor Robertson spent forty years on the faculty here, with time away on only two occasions — the time spent in research at the Cavendish Laboratory, Cambridge, and the year when he was visiting professor at the Imperial College of Science and Technology, London (1933-34).

Sir Geoffrey Shakespeare, a friend of forty-five years standing, said in a letter of tribute printed in the Times: "Jack Robertson as a physicist in his own field

George A. Henry Wartman

RICHARDSON

RICHARDSON, HENRY WARTMAN (1855-1918) grain merchant and philanthropist, was born in Kingston, Ontario, on 21 July, 1855, the second son of James A. Richardson and his wife, Susan Wartman. His father had both Scottish and Irish ancestors and his mother was of United Empire Loyalist descent. He was educated first privately and later at the old Kingston Grammar School. From school he went directly into the grain business of the late Henry Mooers into which he was subsequently admitted as a partner. Invited to join his father he entered the firm of James Richardson & Sons, grain merchants, of which his elder brother George was already a member. Richardson succeeded to the presidency in 1906 on the death of his brother, the father having died in 1892.

The growing importance of the grain business to Canada was reflected in the rapid and wide expansion of this firm which soon became one of the largest dealers and exporters in the Dominion. It had established terminals or offices in every important grain centre. Richardson was endowed with considerable commercial prescience, and foresaw Canada's opportunity as one of the chief granaries of the world. It is largely due to his efforts and the subsequent continuation of his policies by his successors, that Canada (1933) 'though she stands third among the wheat-producing countries of the world, normally is first among wheat exporting countries'. (Canada 1933, p. 66.)

Richardson, in spite of the work entailed in running his large and growing business, found time to take a very active interest in the municipal affairs of his native town. Twice he served as alderman of Kingston. He was president of the Kingston Conservative Association in 1902 and was always a diligent worker in the Conservative cause. In 1910 he became the first president of the Canadian Club of Kingston, and did much to make the club a success. He was trustee and president of the local board of education, and in 1911 served as liquor license commissioner. After declining, more than once, a nomination as Member of Parliament, in 1917 he was called to the Senate.

Long before this time, however, he had become deeply interested in Dominion affairs. He was one of the prime movers in influencing public opinion in favour of the deepening of the old Welland Canal. With this object in view, in 1910, he led a deputation which appeared before Sir Wilfrid Laurier. This not having the desired effect he again laid his views before the Borden Government in 1911; and yet again, at the meeting of the Dominion Marine Association (of which he was the vice-president) at Ottawa (1913), he reiterated his faith in the project. As a result of this unceasing endeavour on his part the new Welland Canal was commenced in 1914 and finished in 1932.

Richardson urged the adoption of an immigration policy that would provide the country with a selective citizenry. Appointed a governor of the School of Mining, Kingston, at a time when Canadian geological and petrographical experts had succeeded in stimulating a world interest in the potentialities of northern and eastern Ontario, Richardson's zeal and unshakable belief in the economic future of the mineral industry lent support and confidence to many wavering minds and vitally assisted in sustaining enthusiasm.

Among the many other businesses in which Richardson took an active part may be mentioned the following: director of the Canadian Locomotive Company, the Canadian Northern Railway and the Travellers' Life Assurance Company, president of the Kingston and Portsmouth Street Railway Company, of the Dominion Cannery, the Missisquoi Marble Company and the Phillipsburg Railway Company, president and managing director of the Kingston Hosiery Company, vice-president of the Canadian Lake Protective Association. He also had large interests in the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, the Midland Steamship Lines, the Wormwith Piano Company and the Valley Camp Coal Company of Pennsylvania.

In a private way Richardson did much for the city he loved by freely giving his services and money. Among his many benefactions may be mentioned his gift of $5,000 towards the Queen's University endowment fund. During the Great War he was one of the first to offer a 'home' at Kingston, to be used by the Military Hospitals' Commission. This 'home' accommodated some sixty soldiers who had been recently discharged from Canadian military hospitals and who needed care and housing during the winter. At this time also he became one of the chief movers in the campaign for increased production and in the campaign for popularizing the Victory Loan. He was also largely instrumental, in 1915 and later, at the suggestion of the government, in obtaining and sending a large supply of wheat to Greece, a country which at that time was in a precarious condition for lack of food. In 1914 the export of wheat to Greece was zero; in 1917 it was over a million bushels.

Always a great sportsman Richardson was president of the Kingston Yacht Club Association and commodore of the Club. He was an ardent hunter, fisherman, canoeist, golfer and billiard-player, nor must his great love for walking be forgotten. Unless absolutely necessary he disdained to use a vehicle. His roses and rose garden were noted. He was a member of a number of clubs and a freemason.

In 1885 he married Alice, a daughter of Robert Ford, of Kingston, by whom he had three sons and three daughters, four of whom, still survive: Mrs. T. A. McGinnis, Kingston; Mrs. T. Ashmore Kidd, Kingston; Mrs. H. G. Bertram, Dundas, and John B. Richardson, of Winnipeg. His two other sons, George and Henry, died in the years 1920 and 1930 respectively, and his widow in 1931.

Richardson died on 27 October, 1918, at Kingston, of heart trouble, though apparently in perfect health the day before. He was buried in Cataract Cemetery, Kingston.

W.R.P.B.

RICHTER, JOHN GEORGE (1854-1932) pioneer leader in the field of insurance, was born in Waterloo county, Ontario, 18 September, 1854, the son of Charles Richter and his wife, Sarah Mosser. The elder Richter came to Canada from Bavaria, Germany, in 1846. Mrs. Richter was of sturdy Pennsylvania Dutch stock, her father settling in Canada more than a hundred years ago. From both his parents John Richter inherited the tireless industry, inexhaustible patience, capacity for taking infinite pains and strong love of a reasonable human freedom, based on respect for law, which have for centuries distinguished his Germanic ancestors.

Educated in the schools of Waterloo county, Richter early displayed a marked talent for mathematics that had much to do with determining his life work. Entering business in 1872, he identified himself for the next ten years with a manufacturing enterprise in Oxford county. He soon became interested in life insurance and made a close study of insurance risks, probability and other features of the business, being led thereto partly through a certain representation made to him by an agent, the soundness of which he wished to verify. This led him to write a series of letters to the public press which attracted the attention of Mr. Joseph Jeffery, first president of the London Life Insurance Company, founded in 1874. Mr. Jeffery offered Richter the post of general manager, which he accepted, entering on his new duties early in 1883. The company was small and its capital at that time impaired by heavy losses in the accident division. The attitude of the public towards insurance in those days was apathetic when not definitely hostile. Richter set to work with great patience to right these unfavourable conditions. As a first step towards stability he called on the shareholders to make good the losses in capital and eventually succeeded in placing the company in a sound financial condition. Richter displayed both courage and originality when in 1886 he organized the industrial branch of the company to sell industrial insurance, i.e., policies issued to working people on the basis of small weekly premiums. This form of insurance, which has been a Godsend to thousands of poor people, is not the most remunerative from a purely business point of view, and Richter deserves credit for placing it on a footing which makes it satisfactory both to the company and the policyholder.

In 1906 a Royal Commission was appointed to make a careful investigation of the insurance business, owing to certain charges brought against those who were conducting it, particularly in the United States. The commission found the London Life free from such abuses as exaggerated dividend estimates and all others which had seriously threatened the business elsewhere. This favourable condition of the company was due entirely to Richter's insistence that the trustee relationship between policyholder and company must never be forgotten, and that to safeguard the policyholder's interests was the first consideration.

Naturally cautious and painstaking and realizing that the life of the company depended upon the soundness of its investments, Richter paid special attention to this department, applying scientific principles to the development of standards for determining property values. His achievement in this field was to realize at an early date in the history of the company that land values and cost of production must bear a proper relationship to their revenue producing power. It was largely through his efforts that his company curtailed and practically withdrew from the west prior to the serious slump in western farm land values, thus helping to strengthen the company's financial position.

Few men with so little training in mathematics have had so firm a grasp of the principles of actuarial science as Richter. When he found
