OUT of the NORTH

HOWARD V. SUTHERLAND

BY THE SAME AUTHOR

_

_____

 Idylls of Greece
 Series One

 Idylls of Greece
 Series Two

 The Woman Who Could

 The Legend of Love
 Idas and Marpessa

_____

JOAQUIN MILLER

CONTENTS

Page

								-6-
Frontispiece, Joaquin 1	Mil	ler	, L	)au	son	, 1	r, T	•
Foreword by Joaquin I	Mil	ler		•		•
The Northern Light	•							I
In Winter		•				•		2
Lyric .	•		•		•			3
Dark Days .		•						4
The Unanswerable	•		•		•			5
Vain Dreams .				•				6
December	•		•		•		•	7
The Unassuageable.		•						8
Father Judge S. J.			•					9
The Light-o'-Love .		•		•		•	10-	·II
Two Quests .	•		•		•			12
The Return of the Su	n					٠		13
Klondyke Roses			•		•		•	14
A Song for the Return	of	Bi	rds	•		•		15
The Forest Cotillion							•	16
The Spruces of the For	·est	•		•		•		17
The Wild Lover	•				•			18
Homeward Bound .		•				•		19
Approaching Night								20

FOREWORD

Yet one is also reminded that, even in the Klondyke, in due season the brooding spruces are awakened from slumber by the songs of happythroated songsters, that the melancholy of the forest is brightened by gay flowers. The weight is then lifted from men's hearts; singing is heard in the cabin, and the sound of laughter on the trail. When the mighty Yukon is open to the Behring Sea, the far North is in touch with the world and men are glad.

But the Arctic summer is short-lived. The days of the bird and the flower and the rippling creeks are numbered. Soon the sky turns grey, the wind chants the sun's requiem, the snow falls; and then returns the cold, the gloom, the feeling of isolation, the indescribable terror.

I heard these songs sung in the Arctic, the singer at my side—these songs of nature, songs of hope, home, heart. They seem a part of my life. I heard them as the cry of a lone bird in the vast silence of eternal snows.

JOAQUIN MILLER

THE HEIGHTS, CAL. Nov. 15tb '99

The Northern Light

- Who drapes that mystic veil across that everbrooding sky? Who hues it with a soul of pearl? Who draws it to and fro?
- Who breathes upon it with the breath that makes it glow and die,

Lighting that crystal river, those mountains cowl'd with snow?

[1]

In Winter

BENEATH the snow the mosses sleep Amid the forest's silence; Above, the stately birches keep Unbroken vigils.

The spruce trees dream of summer hours And birds that carrolled sweetly, Of gentle winds and smiling flowers That died too quickly.

[2]

Lyric

TELL me, tell me, gentle stars, Ever watchful, ever bright, From your stations in the sky Do you see my love to-night?

White the snow beneath my feet, Whiter far her holy breast; Peaceful are the mighty woods, But her eyes are soft with rest.

Sweet the scent of spruce and pine, Sweeter, though, her fragrant breath; Tell her, tell her, gentle stars, I am hers alone till death.

[3]

Dark Days

THE sun has left his throne, The sky is leaden-hued; The hopeless winds bemoan, In icy aisles, their fate.

All day the shadows press About the forest's nuns, That dream in loneliness Their dreams of birds and spring.

[4]

The Unanswerable

O SOMBRE skies that ever mourn, O silent skies so grey and stern, Are ye the curtains of that bourne Where we at last our fate must learn?

Is it behind your gloomy veil The Judge with Book of Judgment stands? Where we must pass, with faces pale, Awaiting judgment at His hands?

O sombre skies that frown all day Upon us hopeless, hapless men, When Death shall beckon us away What happens then? What happens then?

[5]

Vain Dreams

THE trees, my sisters, robed in white, Now dream of spring; Of sun-lit day and fragrant night, Of birds that sing.

They little think that I can tell About their pain; They do not know I dream as well A dream most vain.

[6]

December

B<sup>ENEATH</sup> a shroud of unpolluted white, The frozen hills lie silent and asleep;

- And moveless spruce and ghostly birches keep
- Their silent vigils through the endless night.
- The frozen creeks, long voiceless, partly veiled
  - 'Neath drifting snow, dream fondly of the trees;
  - Within the woods no bird's song and no breeze
- Make wondrous music when the skies have paled.
- The kingly sun ne'er sends his laughing rays To wake the hills and warm the trees and streams;

His face is hid, and hid are now the beams

- That woke the world on long-dead summer days.
- The patient moon with all her silent train Of maiden stars patrols the roads on high, And watches well all things that sleeping lie
- Till Spring's first song shall waken them again.
- The white world sleeps, and all is very still, Except when rises on the frosted air

From out its chilly and forbidding lair A lone wolf's howl, long-drawn and terrible.

[7]

The Unassuageable

I SOMETIMES hear among the snowclad trees

The lone wind chanting solemn symphonies.

- I sometimes smell, while yet the woods are bare,
- The breath of unborn blossoms in the air.
- I am at times aware of gentle sighs There where the creek, ice-fettered, dreaming lies.

I sometimes witness when the air is still Unearthly splendors on the white-robed hill.

I sometimes read in flashing stars at night Mysterious promises of future light.

But what can make a spirit's anguish less, Or ease a heart's eternal loneliness?

[8]

Father Judge, S. J.

HERE was a man, a humble minister Beloved of all in northern latitudes Who knew the value of the kingly heart That beat beneath his worn and priestly coat.

A soldier he, who ne'er forsook his post;

Whose actions were more numerous than words;

His soul was God's; his heart and body man's—

Nothing his own except our gratitude.

Worn e'er his time by hardship none may know

Who shirked the bitter schooling of the North,

He passed away, and now forever stands As close to God as gentle Damien.

[9]

The Light-o'-Love

THE dogs were whining; they sensed too well The load upon the sled; The rough-hewn box with the light-o'-love-A girl, 'twas said. A week ago, at the Palace Bar, She sang the songs of France; But many a heart is lead the while The feet must dance. Kisses she gave and kisses she took, Sinned for her daily bread; But all we knew as we eyed the box Was: she was dead. We placed upon it (How much it hurt Only the good God knows!) A gaud she had worn in her dusky hair-A paper rose. A crumpled thing that seemed beautiful To lonely, broken men, Hinting of fairer flowers and things Beyond our ken. We thought of her as we closed her door As somebody's little child; As somebody's darling, lost, long lost,

But undefiled.

[10]

The grey above us, the white beneath; Chill silence everywhere; Yet deep in our hearts we knew that God Was also there. We knew, far better than others know Whose ways are bright and glad, His judgments are very merciful On good and bad. Our little sister was now at peace. The snow began to fall. The flakes soon hid that gift of ours Beneath their pall. Under the white, white flakes the rose, Crumpled, tawdry and red; Hinting the pity which all men need When they are dead. The dogs still whined as they dragged the sled To where the spruces dream; And there we left her, a wayward child,

At rest in Him.

[11]

Two Quests

E VERY day I watch men go Up the trail Seeking gold. It is a show Worth the watching; much I know About the game.

In the dead of night they creep Past my door; But I hear them in my sleep, And I pity. Very steep The road to Fame.

[12]

The Return of the Sun

7INTER is passing. The inconstant Neglectful lover, therefore doubly dear-Kisses the stern, white faces of the hills, Melting their hearts to tenderness again; Kisses the earth, still shiv'ring 'neath its shroud. And whispers it of blossoms to be born. Kisses the boughs and lures the fresh young leaves, Spring's verdant heralds, from their hiding place; Kisses the trees and tells them of bright birds Seeking new homes for merry families. Winter is passing. The inconstant sun-Neglectful lover, therefore doubly dear-Enters the hearts of long despondent men, Bidding them smile and be consoled again; Enters their souls and whispers them of God, Of distant homes and friends that pray for them; Enters our cabins and dispels the gloom Of soundless days and never-ending nights; Enters our eyes and bids us rise and see Winter's interment, mourn'd by laughing Spring.

[13]

Klondyke Roses

7HEN melts at last the lingering snow In sunny days of May or June, Amid the velvet mosses grow Shy roses, fragrant-smelling. A fated sisterhood is theirs, They sigh their souls out wistfully; No bee makes love to them or hears Their tender love a-telling. They dream, perhaps, of distant lands, (O lands, that seem as far-off spheres;) Of love-lit eyes and tender hands That pluck far happier roses. But while they dream the days pass by And August comes with ebon nights, And sombre is September's sky-And then their sad life closes.

[14]

A Song for the Return of Birds

HASTE, little songsters, and return To your nests in the silent wood; The birches are lonely and they yearn For your twittering brotherhood. The leaves are green on the wakened trees And the snow has left the moss: The sighing breeze With its symphonies Suggests our greatest loss-Haste, little birds, haste home ! Haste little songsters, for the Spring Has come with her laughing train Of radiant blossoms; and now the King Is here, and the pattering rain. The nights are warm and the days are long, There is no more ice or frost; And oh! we long For a songbird's song, For a music the woods have lost-Haste, little birds, haste home!

[15]

The Forest Cotillion

- WHEN the wind is joyous-hearted it stirs the graceful spruces,
- And they nod at one another and toss their arms in abandon;
- Then they sway their supple bodies in wonderful undulations,
- Keeping a perfect time with the wind's mysterious music.
- Then the watchmen of the forest, the solemn and silent birches,
- Bend stifly their stately heads, saluting their laughing sisters;
- And the alders wake from slumber, and the willows grieve no longer
- When the wild wind woos the stream and sets the trees a-dancing.

[16]

The Spruces of the Forest

 $U_{ m ful\ branches}^{
m NHAPPY\ trees,\ beneath\ whose\ grace-}$

No lovers walk, no children ever play; Who never hear the sound of girlish laughter,

But pass in gloom your silent lives away; I wonder if ye heed me as I press My heart to yours in utter loneliness.

I wonder if ye see me as I wander

Along the trail no feet but mine e'er tread; I wonder if ye hear me when I murmur

The name of one who might as well be dead So far away, so very far is she— I wonder if ye heed and pity me?

[17]

The Wild Lover

S WAY your lithe arms, ye graceful trees, The wind is out a-wooing! Ye may be many, yet he sees A way to your undoing.

> Ye need not fear, Though birds may hear Your whispers or your sighs; Or tell the night Of your delight---Nay, Nay, the birds are wise.

Your vestiture of maiden green Doth very well adorn ye; The wind will deem each one a queen, And woo. He dare not scorn ye!

[18]

Homeward Bound

I HAVE ventured on many a journey, By land and sea; And whether success or failure Was granted me, It mattered but very little— It is good to be Homeward Bound. When thou bravest the final voyage, And thou must steer Across the mysterious ocean, Friend, have no fear; There is only one port for the sailors When once they are Homeward Bound!

[19]

Approaching Night

- THE lower'd skies are grey; the trees are bare.
  - A week ago they gleam'd in splendid rows
- Of gold and crimson; now in gaunt despair They stand like ghosts above new-fallen snows.
- The world seems even greyer than the skies. 'Twas yesterday the homeward-honking geese
- Fled as from death. They know too well what lies

Behind this sinister, foreboding peace!

[20]